And, expectations such as "waiting for mokshaa to 'happen'" and "looking for the 'grace' from the kind aachaaryaa for mokshaa to 'come'" etc. are also because of ignorance only - anavabodha maathra upaadhaanathvaath |

'Upaadhanam' means 'kaaranam / cause'; 'anavabodha maathra upaadhaanathvaath' means 'only because of the cause of ignorance'.

Ignorance of what?

- Aathma vasthu yaathaathmyam – 'my' real nature.
- 'Aathma' means 'I'; 'vasthu' means 'reality'; 'yaathaathmyam' means 'nature'.

"Because of the sheer ignorance of 'my' real nature, I am still successfully continuing in 'triangular' format, looking upon myself as the persecuted jeeva, looking upon the world as the persecutor and waiting for the grand 'escape' from this world, never to come back again". All these are only misconceptions and are caused only by solidified / crystallized ignorance.

An example is given for such misconceptions.

- नभसि रजोधूमतुषारनीहारनीलत्व अध्यास :इव – similar to dust, smoke, dew, mist and blue colour getting superimposed in the sky,

'raja:' means dirt / dust'; 'dhooma:' means 'smoke'; 'thushaara:' means 'dew'; 'neehaara:' means 'mist' and 'neelathvam' means 'blue colour'. Nabhasi – in the sky.

Dirt, smoke, dew, mist or blue colour etc. do not belong to the sky at all. Aakaasaa is asangha: and the asangha aakaasaa cannot have blueness, dirt, smoke etc. But, we do use the expressions, 'blue sky', 'dirty sky', 'smoky sky', 'cloudy sky' etc., wrongly associating blueness, dirt, smoke, cloud etc. with aakaasaa, even though aakaasaa is uncontaminated by any one of them.

- यथोक्त - in the same manner,

Upon 'me', the Consciousness, what do I do?

- अयं सर्वं क्रियाकारकपलात्मकसंसार – all this relative world of action, factors of action and the results thereof,
In 'me', the space-like Consciousness, the mithyaa thriputi is 'superimposed'.

How does this express itself?

- अहं ममत्व यत्र इच्छादि – in the forms of 'ego', sense of 'mine', will, desire etc.,

In the first level of 'expression', I am the pramaatha, kartha, and bokthaa; in the next level, I am wife / husband / father / grandfather etc. Once these levels of adhyasaa are done, many problems associated with them also will arise. The many problems are to be solved. Therefore, 'desires and efforts' (yathna icchaadhyaa:) result. Yathna means 'effort' or 'struggle'; iccha means 'desire'.

'Ego' gives rise to selfish desires. As one grows older, desires centered on oneself may go away; i.e., 'I-centric' desires may wane; but 'family-centric' / 'son/daughter – centric' desires increase. Because of these desires, yathna (efforts and struggles) etc. result.

All these struggles are:

- मिथ्या अध्यासः एव - are all merely false superimpositions
- आत्मनि – in 'me' (the space-like Consciousness)"

All these are because of 'ignorance' of the fact: "aham thriputi vilakshana , thriputi aasraya bhootha aakaasa kalpa chaithanya roopa aathmaa asmi". This claim, which is the rightful claim, is not made, because of ignorance.

- इति सिद्धम् - This fact has been established (in the second chapter);
- इमं अर्थं आह - and, that (fact) is condensed (in the following sloka).

"Aham mamathva yathna icchaadh'" is a big compound term. The Aachaaryaa has used this term in the 22nd verse in the upakrama (Page no. 54). In those verses (22nd etc.) the Aachaaryaa pointed out that 'ahamkaara-mamakaara' is samsaara kaaranam; that,

'Ahamkaara-mamakaara' alone brings the 'triangular' format. The Aachaaryaa started with this warning and concludes here: "remove the ahamkaara - mamakaara. Reduce 'CLASP'. The 'triangular' format will disappear; the 'binary' format will automatically result".

"In 'binary' format, you need not seek liberation; you are liberated. In 'triangular' format, liberation is not possible; in 'binary' format bondage is not possible. Moksha is, thus, changing the format". That is said here.

Chapter II: Verse 116 –

अहमिथ्याभिशापेन दुःख्यात्मा तद्बुत्सया ।

इतः श्रुतिं तया नेतीत्युक्तः कैवयमास्थितः ॥ ११६ ॥

The Self, cursed by the ego, which is false, becomes miserable. Desiring to understand the truth, it approaches the sruthi. Being told by sruthi, 'not this, not this', it realizes freedom.

- आत्मा दुःखी (भवति) – Jeevathmaa is now sorrowful / disturbed / in samsaraa, Because of what?

- अहं मिथ्या अभिशापेन – because of the curse of false identification with ahamkaaraa.

'abhisaapa.' means 'curse' ; 'mithyaa' (in this context) should be understood to mean 'mithyaa abhimaanam'.

'False identification' is the curse. False identification with what? With 'aham'. 'Aham' means 'ahamkaaraa, the karthaa - pramaatha'.

Because of the curse in the form of false identification with the karthaa-bokthaa-ahamkaaraa, the jeevathmaa is now dhu:khee or samsaari.

He is now in 'triangular' format, persecuted by the world and by praarabhd.

The word 'dhukyaathmaa' should be split as 'dhu:khee + aathmaa'. Aathmaa is the subject and dhu:khee is the subjective complement. The verb 'bhavath' is to be supplied, to complete the sentence.

This is the state of the jeevathmaa, when he is a karmi; even when he is a karmayogi, that is the state. He is in 'triangular' format during karmi stage and karma yogi stage.

But, when the jeevaathmaa goes to Vedhaanthaa, the jnaana yoga format, what happens?

- तद् बुभुत्सया – With the desire to know the real nature of the jeevaathmaa, `Thadh' means `aathmasvaroopam'; `Bubhuthsaa' means `desire to know' / Boddhum icchaa.

With the desire to know the real nature of jeevaathmaa :

- श्रुतिं इत :- the jeevaathmaa goes to the vedhaantha pramaanaa / the jnaana yoga saadhana.

Here, the word `sruthi:' means `veda antha pramaanaa' and `itha:' means `gatha:' or 'is approached'. Vedha antha pramaanaa is approached by the jeevaathmaa, who is now in triangular format.

The veda antha pramaanam negates the entire thriputi prapancha , by the statement `nethi, nethi'.

- तया युक्तः - Being told by sruthi pramaanam,
- नेति) नेति (इति - 'not this', 'not this',

By nethi nethi vaakyam of the sruthi, all the three thriputis are negated; and when all of them go away, what is left behind?

- कैवल्यं आस्थितः - (the jeevaathmaa) realizes freedom / the non-dual aathmaa alone remains as the only Reality.

Kaivalyam means non-duality / Advaitam alone; aasthitha: - remains as the nature.

What happens to the world? It should be carefully understood, that, world does not 'experientially' disappear. The world will not disappear; but should be understood as 'as good as non-existent'.

It is mithyaa; therefore, it becomes suddenly an entertainment, as in a movie or as in fiction; the worst problems also can become 'entertainment', when one reduces the world itself to fiction or a movie. Otherwise, one will never, never get mokshaa.

Sruthi pramaanam alone changes 'triangular' format to 'binary' format, because of which, 'I', the aathmaa / sathyam alone remain.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 117:

तस्यास्य मुमुक्षोः श्रोताद्वचसः स्वप्ननिमित्तोत्सारितनिद्रस्येवेयं निश्चितार्था प्रमा जायते।

In this aspirant after freedom, there arises from the words of the sruthi, true knowledge of settled import, as a man is awakened from sleep by what he sees in his dream:

- श्रोताद्वचसः - By the sruthi vaakyam / vedhaantic teaching,
- इयं निश्चितार्था प्रमा जायते – this clear understanding / knowledge arises,

'Pramad' mean 'knowledge'; 'nischithaarthaad' means 'clear' / 'free from all doubts'.

A knowledge is a doubtless knowledge, only when the content of the knowledge is a fact for me.

"I am free" is a knowledge for me, when this freedom is a fact; and the freedom is a fact for me, when I stop 'expecting mokshaa'. In other words, "dropping the expectation of mokshaa", indicates the clarity of knowledge.

The word 'iyam' (in iyam pramaa) refers to the pramaa or 'knowledge' mentioned in the previous sloka, viz., kaivalyam / "I am the non-dual aathmaa". Such a 'knowledge' is born.

To whom is such a 'knowledge' born? In whom does such a 'knowledge' arise?

- तस्य अस्य मुमुक्षोः - for this mumukshu, who approached vedhaantha.

Then the next question would arise. "If the entire world is mithyaa, what about the vedhaantha pramaanam and the guru? Are they sathyam or mithyaa?"

If such a question is raised, it has to be accepted, that, "if everything else, apart from aathmaa is mithyaa, the saasthra pramaanam also must be mithyaa". But, that will give rise to a further question: "how can a mithyaa pramaanam reveal the sathya aathmaa?"

In answer to this question, Sureswaraacharya gives an example: "when a dreamer gets a nightmarish dream, the very same nightmarish dream wakes him up; and, on waking up, the dreamer realizes that he only had a dream; he clearly knows that the dream is only mithyaa, while he, the 'waker' is (comparatively) sathyam. The 'sathyam-waker' is 'revealed' because of the nightmarish dream. This would show, that, a mithyaa nightmarish dream is capable of waking up a person to the (comparative) reality of the 'waker'. In the same way, mithyaa saasthram can 'wake up' a pramaathaa and reveal the fact that , 'I' am not a pramaathaa."

The Aachaaryaa says:

- स्वप्न निमित्त उत्सारित निद्रस्य इव - similar to a sleeping person renouncing sleep, because of a bad mithyaa dream.

Just as a person 'renounces' the sleep because of a mithyaa bad dream, in a similar fashion, a student (seeker) 'renounces' ignorance, because of (i.e.with the help of) mithyaa saasthram.

'Svapna nimittham uthsaarithaa nidhraa yasya sa:' – 'svapna nimittha uthsaaritha nidhra:' – meaning 'one who has woken up because of a (false) dream'.

नाहं न च ममात्मत्वात्सर्वदानात्मवर्जितः।

भानाविव तमोध्यासोऽपह्लवश्च तथा मयि ॥ ११७ ॥

I am not the ego, nothing is mine and I am bereft of all non-Self always. Like darkness ascribed to the sun, they are all superimposed on me. Even their negation is a superimposition on me.

After waking up from a nightmarish dream, a person initially says, with relief: "the dream problems are gone; the dream world is gone"; but, later, when he understands that the dream world did not really exist, he corrects his statement. He says : "I cannot say that 'the dream world is gone'; because, to say that 'the dream world is gone', is to 'accept' the existence of the dream world. But, since I know that there is, in fact, no dream world at all, I am now correcting my statement to 'there was no dream world at all for it to go away'".

To repeat: First, the person who has woken up from the dream says "dream world is gone"; later, he says, "there is no question of the 'going away' of the dream world, because it never really existed". In a similar manner, the jnaani first says "I am liberated, because the samsaaraa is gone"; and, later, he revises his conclusion: "I am not even liberated, because I never had the samsaara, for it to go away".

Thus, first, the jnaani negates samsaaraa; later, he negates mokshaa also.

- सर्वदा अनात्म वर्जितः - I am always free from anaathmaa,

And therefore,

- (मयि) (the word is supplied) - in me,
- अहं नास्ति – there is neither ahamkaaraa ;
- न च मम –there is no mamakaaraa also;

I am always free; therefore, I cannot say: 'now I am muktha:' |

Why (cannot I say 'I am now free')?

- मम आत्मत्वात् - because, I am always the aathmaa, the absolutely free one.

Like what? An example is given:

The following example:

- भानौ तम अध्यासः इव - (This is) like superimposing the cover of darkness on the sun,

If and when we do not see the sun because of cloudy weather, we use the expression "the sun is covered by the cloud"; and later, when the cloud moves away, blown away by the wind, we say "now the covering has gone from the sun".

Thus, initially, we superimpose a cover upon the sun / we talk of 'covering' of the sun; later, we talk about 'dis-covering' of the sun. But, in reality, the sun was never covered by the cloud, because the sun is much larger than the cloud.

The apparent 'covering' belongs to the onlooker's eyes only; the 'covering' belonging to the onlooker's eye is 'superimposed' on the sun. In the same manner, the 'dis-covering' of the on-looker's eyes is also wrongly superimposed on the sun, and the claim 'the sun's cover is gone' is made.

- अपह्वयः च - and (super-imposing) the 'dis-covering' also (on the sun).

The 'covering' and 'non-covering' really belong only to the on-looker's eyes.

The beautiful verse "Ghanachchanaa dhruṣhti: ganachchannamartham yathaa manyathe nishthabham jaathi mooda: thathaa baddhavath baathi yo moodabuddhe: tha nithyopalabhdhisvropaham aathmaa" from Hasthaamalakeeyam, is relevant, in this context.

In 'me' there is no 'covering' also; no 'discovering' also.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 118 & Verse 118 – Chapter II:

सोऽयमेवंप्रतिपन्नस्वभावमात्मानं प्रतिपन्नोऽनुक्रोशति ।

यत्र त्वस्येति साटोपं कृत्स्नद्वैतनिषेधिनीम् ।

Realizing the nature of the Self thus, the aspirant laments about his previous ignorance : Why did I not listen to the sruthi before, which, with a flourish, as it were, proclaims 'Where the Self is all, what can one see and by what means?' (B.U.IV.v.15) and negates all duality and destroys bondage?

After claiming this mokshaa, the jnaani student, who has been studying Vedhaantha for a long time, is very, very happy; but, at the same time, he feels a regret also; and what is that regret?

He regrets: "I have been studying Vedhaantha for a long time and I have been repeatedly listening to the samsaara nisheda sruthi. But, how come I did not receive the 'teaching' as a fact until now? How come I postponed this liberation for so long? Why did I not receive the message in the first lesson itself – while studying the fundamental treatise Thathva Bodha itself?"

This is what the Aachaaryaa conveys in this verse and the preceding introductory portion:

- एवं प्रतिपन्नस्वभावं आत्मानं प्रतिपन्नः - The aspirant who has realized the nature of the Self thus,

The noun 'Prathipanna.' means 'the student who has understood'; aathmaanam – the aathmaa.

What type of aathmaa?

Evam prathipanna svabhaavam - which has been understood in this manner,

What does 'in this manner' (evam) mean?

'As the sathya, advaita aathma'.

"Evam prathipanna svabhaavam aathmaanam prathipanna:" - "The seeker who has understood the aathmaa, which aathmaa has to be understood in this manner (i.e. as sathya, advaita aathmaa)"

- सः अयं अनुक्रोशति –such an aspirant regrets / laments :

What is the liberated aspirant's regret? "Why did I postpone this liberation for this much time, when I could have claimed it long ago and could have enjoyed the 'binary' format?" This is expressed in the verse.

- न अश्रौषं किं – "Why did I not listen to
- 'यत्र तु अस्य' इति श्रुतिम् - the well known sruthi vaakyam starting with 'yathra thu asya' (which),

This sruthi vaakyam (in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – IV.v.15) runs: "yathra thu asya sarvam aathma eva abhooth thath kena kam pasyathi thath kena kam jigreth etc. etc." meaning: "But, when to the knower of Brahman, everything has become the Self, then what should one see and through what, what should one smell and through what etc.etc."

This is a vaakyam, which negates the thriputi samsaaraa.

- साटोषं - loudly / grandly,
- क्रुत्स्नद्वैतनिषेधिनीम् – negates the entire thriputi or duality,
- संसारं प्रोत्सारयन्ती – and also destroys samsaara (bondage)?"

Swamiji points out that this analysis of the Aachaaryaa is true even about the students of current times. The current Vedhaanthic student also, very often, regrets: "I have been listening to this and similar exhortations, negating the thriputi, any number of times during my vedhaanthic studies – the period of sravanam. I have vigorously nodded my head also, in agreement with these statements. Did I not mean my concurrence from my innermost heart? Then, why have I not truly implemented the binary format? How come I do not claim 'liberation' at the time of my sravanam itself?"

Quite a number of students claim that they have 'understood' vedhaantha; but, tend to postpone 'liberation'.

'Samsaaram prothsaarayantheem' and 'krutsna dvaitha nishedhineem' are adjectives to 'sruthim'.

Sruthim mean sruthi vaakyam. What is that sruthi vaakyam referred to? The vaakyam "yathra thu asya etc. etc.", from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.V.15).

The Aachaaryaa says: "How did I miss such a sruthi vaakyam, even though I have listened carefully?' is the regret of the student".

The Aaachaaryaa concludes:

इत्योमित्यवबुद्धात्मा निष्कलोऽकारकोऽक्रियः ।

विरक्त इव बुद्यादेरेकाकित्वमुपेयिवान् ॥ ११९ ॥

Thus affirming with the sacred syllable Om and comprehending the Self, the man of realization discards the mind etc., just as an ascetic renounces sense-pleasures, and abides without parts, factors of action and change, and attains absolute singleness of being.

- इति – Regretting the postponement of liberation in this manner, as said in the previous sloka, 'Ithi' here refers to 'purvaslokoktha prakaarene'
- अवबुद्धात्मा - this jnaani, who has clearly grasped 'I am the aathmaa'
- ॐ इति)उच्छार्य(- uttering the word 'omkhaaraa', (indicating the internalization of binary format , renouncing the triangular format for good)

The word 'ucchaarya' is to be supplied. The uttering of 'Omkaaraa' indicates the displacement of the triangular format by the binary format, for the rest of the life.

- निष्कलः अकारकः अक्रियः (तिष्ठति) - abides as the aathmaa which is free from (karma vyavahaaara) thriputi.

'Nishkala.' means 'thriputi rahitha.'; 'akaaraka.' means 'kaaraka rahitha.'; therefore only 'nishkala.' - 'free from division' and therefore only 'akriya.' - 'free from kriyaa also'.

Where kaarakam is, there kriyaa is; when kaarakaa goes away, kriyaa also goes away.

`Thishtathl or `avathistathe' is understood.

Such a jnaani abides in the form of non-dual aathmaa.

- सः) एककित्त्वं उपेयिवान् - This person attains non – duality, `Ekaakithvam' means `advaita bhaavam'; `upeyivaan' mean `attains'.

- बुद्ध्यादेः विरक्तः इव) विरक्तः - having detached from buddhi etc. Similar to an ascetic who has renounced sense- pleasures.

Having detached from all of them, he becomes a vidvath sanyaasi. |

Viraktha: should be a read a second time as `viraktha: iva viraktha:' |

Earlier, he was a vividhishaa sanyaasi; now, he has become a vidvath sanyaasi. As a vividhishaa sanyaasi he gave up the external family and as a vidvath sanyaasi, he gives up the internal `family' also.

Vividhishaa sanyaasam indicates `renunciation of external family'. Vidvath sanyaasa means `renunciation of internal family', where mind is the spouse, sense organs are the children, praanaas are the servants and body is the house.

The word `renunciation' need not scare the seeker; the word only indicates `mamakaara thyaagham' – `giving up the sense of ownership and controllership' (CLASP reduction).

As vidvath sanyaasi, the jnaani attains advaita bhaavam.

110. Summary of Chapter II (13-09-2008)

A Summary of the 2nd Chapter.

This is a big chapter, consisting of 119 verses.

The following summary does not follow the sequence of the verses or subject matter in the Text; instead, consists of brief discussions on each of the five topics that are covered by the Aachaaryaa in the chapter, since the five topics are found strewn all over the chapter.

The five topics are first enumerated below:

- I. Aathma anaathma viveka: | (Discriminating between aathmaa and anaathmaa)
- II. Anaathma mithyaathvam | (The 'unreal' nature of anaathmaa)
- III. Ajaanam samsaara kaaranam | (Ignorance is the cause of samsaara)
- IV. Jnaanam eva moksha kaaranam | ('Knowledge' alone leads to 'liberation')
- V. Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyaath eva jnaanam | ('Knowledge' arises only from the mahaa vaakyaas of the Vedas)

Topic I: Aathma anaathma viveka:

In this chapter, Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts that the body-mind complex or the sthoala sookshma sareeram also falls within anaathmaa, the objective universe.

The Aachaaryaa establishes his statement, by showing several similarities between the body and the world and also between the mind and the world. And, because of the similarities in their nature with those of anaathmaa, body and mind also belong to anaathmaa, the objective universe.

What are these similar features / saadharmyaani (as they are referred to, in Sanskrit) that we see between the body and the world? 'Saadharmyam' means 'similarity of features' and 'saadharmyaan' means 'similar / common features'.

Five similar features, between the body and the world, are pointed out by Sureswaraachaarya.

The first common feature is 'dhrusyathvam', which means 'being an object of experience'. The world is an 'object of experience'; the body is also an 'object of experience'. Therefore, both are similar in this respect.

The second common feature is 'boudhikathvam' or materiality. Both the body and the world are products of matter / panchabhoothaani. The world is material, born out of pancha boothaas; body is also material, born out of pancha boothaas, (as explained in the fundamental Vedhaanthic treatise 'Thathva Bodhaa').

The third common feature is 'sagunathvam' meaning 'being endowed with qualities'. Both body and world are endowed with attributes or individualistic characteristics. The body has got pancha gunaas – sabda, sparsa, roopa, rasa and gandhaa. World also has got the same pancha gunaas. Therefore, sagunathvam is the third common feature.

The fourth common feature is 'savikaarathvam', meaning, 'being subject to change' ; world is subject to change; and , as is well known, body is also subject to several changes, as it gets older and older. Savikaarathvam is, thus, the fourth common feature.

Fifth common feature is 'aagamaapaayithvam', or 'being subject to arrival and departure'. During jaagrath avasthaa, the world is experienced; in other words, the world 'arrives' or 'comes'; but, during svapna and sushupthi, the jaagrath prapancha disappears. During dream, this world is not available and the dreamer is in a different world altogether i.e. during svapna, this world is 'apaayee', meaning 'disappearing'; and, of course, during sushupthi also, it is apaayee. The world is, thus, subject to 'appearance' and 'disappearance' / 'arrival and departure' or 'aagama apaayee'. Similarly the physical body is also available only in jaagrath avasthaa ; in dream, the dreamer does not have his jaagrath body, but, transacts with a different body. During sushupthi, neither the jaagrath body nor the dream body is available. Thus, prapancha: api aagamaapaayee and sareeram api aagamaapaayee. Aagamaapaayithvam is the fifth common feature.

Thus, there are five common features between jagath and sareeram; and, because of this – viz. dhrusyathvaath, boudhikathvaath, sagunathvaath, savikaarathvaath and aaagamaapaayithvaath - Sureswaraachaaryaa concludes, that, sareeram is also anaathmaa - prapanchavath or ghatavath.

This can be extended to the mind also, because, the mind also fulfills all these five conditions.

Mind also has got dhrusyathvam; it is an object of experience, albeit an intimate object of experience; we are very, very closely watching all the violent eruptions of emotions, which belong to our minds; others may not know or read our emotions but, we are always aware of our own emotions, which we suffer or enjoy, depending on the type of emotions. The mind, thus, being an 'object of experience', it has to be considered as subject to 'dhrusyathvam', as the objective universe is.

The second feature is boudhikathvam. Mind is also a material entity, born out of the pancha sookshma boothas, again, as established in the treatise, Thathva Bodha.

The third feature, sagunathvam, is there for the mind also. Mind has got very many attributes ; happy / unhappy / disturbed etc. Not only such conditions , but, even jaagrath, svapna and sushupthi, are attributes of the mind. In Viveka Choodamani, jaagrath, svapna and sushupthi are equated to sathvaguna dominance, rajoguna dominance and thamoguna dominance respectively.

The mind is also savikaaram; it is subject to violent changes, some deliberately brought about and some happening in spite of the individual.

Finally the mind is also aagamaapaayee ; during jaagrath and svapna, mind is available ; and, during sushupthi, mind is resolved.

Therefore, i.e., because of these five common features – dhrusyathvaath, baudhikathvaath, sagunathvaath, savikaarathvaath and aagamaapaayithvaath – Sureswaraacharya concludes "mana: api anaathmaa, ghatavath / prapanchavath" - "mind is also anaathmaa like an external object or the external universe".

Sureswaraacharya does not stop with these conclusions that sthoola sareeram and sookshma sareeram, body, mind and thoughts, are all anaathmaa; he points out, that, even ahamkaaraa is also anaathmaa.

Ahamkaaraa, the individuality, is also anaathmaa, because of the same reasons - dhrusyathvaath / boudhikathvaath / sagunathvaath / savikaarathvaath and aaagamaapaayithvaath. During sushupthi, ahamkaara is not at all there; only in jaagrath and svapna, ahamkaaraa 'comes'. Therefore sthoola sareeram, sookshma sareeram, antha: karanam, ahamkaara:, ahamkaara dharma etc. - all, come under anaathmaa.

This, naturally, gives rise to a question: "what, then, is aathmaa?"

The Achaaryaa answers:

"We have concluded, that, based on the five features detailed, all things, including mind, body and ahamkaara are anaathmaa. And, we also know, that, anaathmaa being material or boudikam – born out of pancha bhoothas – anaathmaa has to be jadam in nature, since, logically, any material product has to be jadam. Body, mind and ahamkaaraa also, therefore, being material, should logically be jadam. But, what is our experience? Body and mind seem to be sentient.

- Body and mind are 'experienced' as sentient, while, logically, they should be jadam.
- Sareeram jadam boudhikathvaath ghatavath ; mana: jadam boudhikathvaath gadavath; ahamkaara: jada: boudhikathvaath ghatavath. All of them should be jadam / inert. But, we 'experience' them to be sentient.

It follows, therefore, that, they must be borrowing sentiency from some 'lender'. There must be somebody, to lend chaithanyam to the body-mind complex, making them sentient. That 'lender' of chaithanyam, which converts the material, inert body-mind complex into a sentient entity, is called aathmaa.

That Aathmaa is chaithanya svaroopam, which blesses body and mind with sentiency".

And, what should be the nature of this aathmaa? Aathmaa should certainly be different from anaathmaa; because, if aathmaa is similar to anaathmaa, aathma also will become jadam, requiring somebody else to lend it chaithanyam.

Therefore, aathma is anaathma vilakshanam. 'Vilakshanam' means 'distinct / different in nature'.

If aathma is thus anaathma vilakshanam, its features, other than chaithanyam (as against jadathvam of anaathmaa), should also be different from the features of anaathmaa.

It was just seen that anaathmaa essentially has five features: dhrusyathvam, boudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam.

Aathmaa being anaathma vilakshanam, aathmaa should have the opposite features; if anaathmaa is dhrusyam, aathmaa should be adhruyam – aathmaa is never an 'object of experience'; it is ever a non- experienced 'subject', never that can be objectified .

The second feature is 'aboudhikathvam'. "'I' am non-material Consciousness".

The third feature of aathmaa : the third feature of anaathmaa being sagunathvam, aathmaa is agunaa or nirgunaa - 'free from all attributes'. Attributes belong to material anaathmaa, while non-material aathmaa must be and is nirgunam.

Fourth feature of aathmaa is 'nirvikaarathvam'- 'not subject to any change / changeless'. The 'Consciousness' is 'kootastha chaithanyam', as described by Sureswaraachaaryaa. Swami Vidyaaranya also uses the word 'kootastha:' in his Panchadasi – Chapter VIII. Aathmaa is avikaara: - kootastha: |

Finally, aathmaa is anaagamaapaayi. It is the 'witness' of 'arrivals and departures' but, is, itself, not subject to 'arrival and departure'.

Thus, 'I' am the aathma chaithanyam, different from anaathmaa world , different from anaathmaa body , different from anaathmaa mind , different from anaathmaa ahamkaara: and different from anaathmaa emotions also.

This is the first topic of aathma – anaathma - viveka: /

Topic II: Anaathma mithyaathvam:

This is a very important topic.

After differentiating 'Consciousness' and 'Matter', which is the first lesson of Vedhaantha, the second powerful lesson is "matter is mithyaa".

'Matter' has a lower order of reality; it does not have an existence of its own ; it has got an existence 'borrowed' from 'Me', the aathmaa . 'I' alone lend existence to the world and 'I' alone empower the world to exist in front of 'Me'. And, this dependent nature of the world is called anaathma mithyaathvam.

"Aham sathyam jagan mithyaa" is the second lesson of Vedhaantha.

On this aspect, Sureswaraachaaryaa gives three main arguments. What are they?

Argument 1: Sureswaraachaaryaa says that the entire anaathma prapanchaa can be divided into a thriputi, consisting of pramaathaa , pramaanam and prameyam; in other words, anaathmaa exists in the form of the thriputi - pramaatha , pramaanam and prameyam.

How does one prove this? Because in sushupthi, when thriputi is resolved, the entire anaathmaa is also resolved. That's why sushupthi is called nirvikalpa avasthaa, in Thathva Bodha, by defining sushupthi as 'nirvikalpaka roopam'.

Anaathmaa exists in the form of thriputi – pramaathaa , the knower, pramaanam, the instruments / sense organs and prameyam , the object of experience.

And, Sureswaraachaarya asserts that, none of these three members of the thriputi can ever prove its existence without the support of the other two; i.e., they are all mutually dependent for their existence.

The following examples are given for the mutual dependence of pramaanam and prameyam:

- It is common knowledge, that forms and colours cannot be proved without the eyes. This fact will not be disputed by any one. But, what is generally overlooked is that, the reverse is also true. Eyes also can never be proved, if forms and colours are not there. That is why, in total darkness, one, sometimes, wonders whether one's eyes are functioning at all.
- In the same manner, the sabda prameyam can be proved only by the pramaanam 'ears'; and, conversely, getting up very early in the morning, sometimes, during extreme cold weathers, one doubts whether one's ears are functioning at all and gets one's doubts cleared, only after hearing an external noise.

Goudapaadhaachaaryaa points out to this fact in his Maandookya Kaarika – “ubhe anyonya dhrusyaa:” | Pramaanam's existence is dependent on prameyam ; prameyam's existence is dependent on pramaanam. And, the existence of both of them depends on pramaathaa.

In the same manner, Pramaathaa can also never prove his existence, without pramaanam and prameyam. When the world is resolved in sushupthi, pramaathaa is also resolved. In meditation also, when all thoughts are removed, one tends to doze off; because, if there are no thoughts at all, when there is neither the object nor the thoughts, how can one be awake? If one eliminates all the thoughts, one ends up in artificial sushupthi called blankness. This shows that pramaathaa's existence depends on pramaanam and prameyam.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya concludes that the three members of the anaathma thriputi are mutually dependent. From that, it is clear, that, they – the thriputi - do not have an existence of their own.

This fact, that, since the thriputi does not have an existence of its own, leads to a further conclusion, that, it 'borrows' its existence from aathmaa which is outside the thriputi.

“Naantha: prajnyam na bahishprajnyam na ubhayatha:prajnyam na pragjnaanaghanam na prajnyam na aprajnyam” – “ (Thuriyaa) is not the outward Consciousness, not the inward Consciousness, not the Consciousness turned both sides, not a mass of Consciousness, not the all-knowing Consciousness and not unconscious" runs manthraa 7, of the Maandookya Upanishad.

The Thuriyaa / the aathmaa, is neither viswa pramaathaa nor thyjasa pramaathaa nor praangnya pramaathaa . "Pramaathru - pramaana - prameya - thripaadha vilakshana: - chathushpaadh aathmaa thureeya:" |

"Anaathmaa, the thriputi, does not have an existence of its own because of mutual dependence and 'borrows' its existence from aathmaa" is, thus, the first argument.

Sureswaraachaaryaa makes an incidental note also. All the transactions, whether they are jnaanam (knowledge) transactions / jnaanendriya vyavahaaras or action transactions / karmendriya vyavahaaraas, depend on thriputi. 'Subject - object - instrument' thriputi is required for all the jnaana and karma vyavahaaraas; and, therefore, all the vyavahaaraas take place only in thriputi anathmaa. "Aathmaa thriputi vilakshanathvaath adhrushtam – avyavahaaryam". Aaathmaa is beyond all transactions. It is the medium of Consciousness, in which all transactions take place ; but, is itself not a participant in any transaction.

In this aspect, it is similar to 'space' in which all transactions take place, but, which itself does not participate in any transaction. So also 'light'. All transactions take place in the medium of 'light'; but, light itself is not a participant in any transaction. Consciousness is a medium, in which all material transactions take place. But, Consciousness itself is not a participant in any transaction. Vedhaantha uses two words to convey this – asangham and avyavahaaryam.

The first argument to prove the mithyaathvam of anaathmaa is, thus, 'mutual dependence'. This argument is very much relied upon in the Madhu Brahmanam of Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (II. v). In the Bhrigu Valli of Thaithreeya Upanishad also, this 'mutual dependence' argument is given, as 'sareera-sareeri- sambhandhaa' and 'anna-annaadha-sambhandha' etc.

The second argument of Sureswaraachaarya (to prove the mithyaathvam of anaathmaa): The Aachaaryaa says "matter / anaathmaa / thriputi cannot exist as identical with chaithanyam or as separate from chaithanyam." - "Bhinna roopena vaa abhinna roopena anaathmana: satthaam saadhayithum naiva sakhyathe".

Matter cannot be identical with Consciousness, because of their totally different natures, dhrusyathvam, boudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam being features of matter / anaathmaa and adhrusyathvam, aboudhikathvam, nirgunathvam, nirvikaarathvam and anagamaapaayithvam being features of Consciousness / aathmaa.

"Yushmadh asmath prathyaya gocharayo: thama: prakaasavath viruddhas svabhaavayo:" (from Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa's Adhyaasa Bhaashyam to Brahma Soothraas) - "the natures of 'asmat (aathmaa)' and 'yushmath (anaathmaa)' being totally different like 'darkness' and 'light'", Consciousness and Matter cannot be identical.

And, matter cannot exist as separate from Consciousness, because, once you separate matter from Consciousness, its very existence cannot be proved; obviously, because, matter being jadam, it cannot claim "I am matter, and I do not have Consciousness". Once matter goes outside the bounds of Consciousness, it can never prove its own existence.

Therefore, "bhinna roopena vaa, abhinna roopena vaa" anaathmaa cannot prove its existence. Therefore, its existence is only 'seeming' existence, which is 'lent' by aathmaa. The second argument is, thus, "bhinna roopena vaa abhinna roopena vaa saththam saadhayithum na sakhyathe"

The third argument is 'support of Sruthi pramaanaas'. If anaathmaa / matter, really has an existence of its own, the Upanishad pramaanam would never have negated this universe. Whereas, in all the Upanishads, consistently and systematically, the Upanishads say "plurality is not there; duality is not there ; aakaasa: naasthi; vaayu: naasthi ; na bhoomirapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo me asthi na chaambaram cha; sareeram naasthi ; mana: naasthi ; punyam naasthi; paapam naasthi" etc. They further say "the world is not at all born ; ajaayamaana: / without really being born, it 'seems' to be born". If the world is negated thus, it has got only 'seeming' existence, which is called mithyaa.

Therefore, because of sruthi pramaana bhaadhyathvam also 'anaathmaa is mithyaa'.

It should be remembered, that, what is 'existent' cannot be negated, because, it is existent ; what is 'non-existent' need not be negated, because it is not existent; and, therefore, what can be negated is, what is 'seemingly existing' alone.

Thasmaath jagath sath na bhavathi ; asath na bhavathi ; sadasath vilakshanam bhavathi.

In Jaayantheya Githa is the eloquent statement "dvaya: avidhyamana: api avabhaath" – "Even though the dualistic world is really non-existent, it seems to be existent". It should be noted that, these are the words of Bhaagavatha Puraanaa , (Skandhaa XI – Chapter II – Verse 38), not of Sankara, the Advaitin.

'Anaathmaa is mithyaa' is the second topic, established by the Achaaryaa, using the above three arguments.

Topic III: Ajaanam samsaara kaaranam :

Ignorance of the facts " 'I' am the higher order of reality, the Sathyam, and whatever I experience, viz., body, mind, thoughts, ahamkaaraa, the world - sarvam dhruyam - are all of the lower order of reality. I can use them all, as sources of entertainment and I can happily enjoy their 'experience', if I remember that 'I am not a participant in the vyavahaaraas and therefore, I am not affected by any event that happens in anaathmaa " is the cause of all problems in life / samsaaraa.

In Swamiji's 'five capsules of Vedhaantha', the 4th capsule of Vedhaantha is to be recollected in this context, which is " 'I' am not affected by any event that happens in the material world or in the material body-mind complex, because 'I' am asangha aathmaa – the non-participant and the unaffected".

If one diligently remembers this fact, one does not have problems. If, on the other hand, one forgets this fact, one gives 'reality' to anaathmaa ; and, when anaathmaa is raised to a level equal to 'me', inevitably, anaathmaa is 'empowered' to disturb 'me'.

This is very similar to the common phenomenon of a dream - an individual 'creating' a dream , 'entering' the dream and after entering the dream, 'lending reality' to the dream; the moment the dream is 'lent reality', it is capable of disturbing the 'dreamer', not only during the dream , but, for a brief period even after waking up, at times even suffering the physical symptoms such as palpitation , perspiring etc. , because of the mental disturbance caused by the 'false' dream.

Ironically, " / create the dream, / lend existence to the dream, / 'empower' the dream and then / get disturbed".

Sureswaraacharya says "ignorance' is the cause for lending 'reality' to anaathmaa ".

This 'lending reality' is called adhyaasa: | 'Ajnaana janya adhyaasa.' is 'empowering the world' (to disturb me).

The fifth capsule in the 'five capsules of Vedhaantha', viz., "When I forget my real nature, life is converted into struggle; when I remember my asangha non-participant nature, life becomes an entertainment" is also very relevant here.

"Ignorance / adhyaasaa is the cause of samsaara" is the third topic of this chapter.

Topic IV: Jnaanam eva moksha kaaranam:

Sureswaraacharya points out, that, only Jnaanam and adhyaasa nivrutthi: are the permanent solutions for samsaaraa. Parihaaraas (even those prescribed in the Karma Kaandaa of the Vedas) are only temporary solutions to the problems faced in samsaaraa.

The permanent solutions are only 'aathma jnaanam' and 'adhyaasa nivrutthi:'.

What does 'adhyaasa nivrutthi:' signify? By 'adhyaasa nivrutthi:', the world does not disappear. The Vedhaanthic seeker does not aim for 'disappearance' of the universe. By giving 'reality' to the world, he had wrongly 'empowered' it to cause disturbances; and by ajnaana nivrutthi:, this wrong 'empowerment' is sought to be removed, by withdrawing 'reality' from the universe. This is similar to continuing in a dream, with the knowledge that it is a dream, though, of course, it is not possible. But, 'continuation of the dream, with the knowledge that it is a dream created by the waker- me' is the nearest example that can be given for jeevan mukthi.

"This Jnaanam and jagan mithyaathva nischaya: are the only permanent solutions to samsaaraa" is the fourth topic.

"Ajnaana adhyaasau samsaara kaaranam" is the third topic and "ajnaana adhyaasa nivrutthi: or jnaana jaganmithyaathva nischaya praapthi: moksha kaaranam " is the fourth topic.

Topic V: Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyaath eva jnaanam :

The Aachaaryaa contends, that, this jnaanam can be obtained only by Vedhaanta maahaavaakya pramaanam, coming from the mouth of a competent Aachaaryaa.

Verse 13, Sec. 2, Chapter I, of Kathopanishad runs: "Ethathsruthvaa samparigrahya marthya: pravruhya dharmyam anum etham aapya, sa modhathe modhaneeyagum hi labdhvaa vivruthagum sadhma nachikethasam manye" – " Having listened to this, the mortal human being clearly grasps this subtle aathmaa, separates it from the body and claims it. Having obtained the source of joy, he rejoices indeed. I consider the abode of Brahman to be open to Nachikthas". In the context of this verse, Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa, in his Bhashyam, beautifully adds "aachaarya prasaadhaath sruthvaa".

What is this sravanam? The sravanam is that of the Mahaavaakyaas of the Vedaas.

'Pancha kosa vilakshana aathmaa aham brahma asmi' ithi mahaavaakya sravanaath jnaana praapthi: |

Why do the Advaita Acharyaas insist on mahaavaakya sravanam? Sureswaraacharya answers: "All the other instruments of knowledge / prathyakshaadhi pramaanani are baahya vishayaani / anaathma vishyaani."

All pramaanams/ instruments of knowledge other than sruthipraamanam are dealing only with anaathmaa. Even the most advanced science is capable of studying only 'Matter', the anaathmaa. They do not have the resources to study or throw light on Aathmaa. There are recent reports that latest experiments are being conducted to study proton, which proton is also only matter or anaathmaa. Science can study only Matter and, at best, cosmology. No pramaanam, other than sruthi, can study or throw light on Consciousness. In fact, even the veda poorva bhaaghaa is dealing only with anaathmaa. Rituals are anaathmaa ; svarga is anaathmaa ; even Vaikunta is anaathmaa ; Kailaasa is also anaathmaa.

All pramaanams are studying only anaathmaa; veda antha bhaaghaa (mahaavaakyam especially) alone deals with aathmaa. "Ithadhaathmyam idhagum sarvam thathsathyam sa aathmaa thathvamasi svethaketho" – "That which is the subtle essence, all this has got That as the Self. That is Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That, Svetaketu" – declares the Chandhogya Upanishad (VI. 16. 3).

"I' am the non-participating medium for all the play / drama to go on".

"Viswam dharpana dhruyamaana nagareethulyam nijaanthargatham" – "(The Self alone plays as) the universe of names and forms, like a city seen in a mirror" declares Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram (verse 1).

This mahaavaakya vichaara has to take place in a systematic manner.

'Systematic study' means that, the seeker has to spend a lot of time dealing with 'thvam' (the jeevaathmaa), 'thadh' (the Pramaathmaa) and 'asl' (the jeevaathma-paramaathma-aiykyam).

Several portions of Vedhaanthic study - Sareerathraya viveka, avasthaa thraya viveka, pancha kosa viveka, dhruk dhruya viveka etc. – are there, dealing with thvam padha jeevathmaa.

The seeker also requires an elaborate study on thadh padha - an analysis of paramaathmaa – especially cosmology, or srushti vichaaraa.

But, if we stop with these studies, the result will be only svami dhaasa bhaavaa.

If the seeker stops with the study of 'thath' and 'thvam' only, he will say "I am eternal dhaasaa and Paramaathmaa is eternal swami." He will end up with visidhtaadvaitam or dvaitham.

Therefore, an Advaita Vedhaanthic student should not stop with the study of thath and thvam alone. He will have to go to the 'as/' portion, of the mahaavaakyam`thathvamas/`.

Dvaitam is the first step and is important. The second step, Visidhtaadvaitam is also important. But, 'as/' is the most important component of mahaavaakyam.

What does the word 'as/' convey? That, "You, the jeevaathmaa, are not the dhaasaa of Paramaathmaa; but you, the jeevaathmaa, are Paramaathmaa".

The differences are only in superficial anaathamaa. In aathamaa, there is no difference at all. Thus, 'jeevaathma – paramaathma - aiykya jnaanam/`, conveyed by the word 'as/' is most important. For that also, we require a diligent enquiry. The Vedhaanthic technical terms – vaachyaartha / lakshyaartha/ jahathi lakshanaa / ajahathi lakshanaa etc. - require elaborate analysis.

And through that study, the seeker has to get 'aham sathyam jagan mithyaad` knowledge.

The mithyaathva darsanam`jagan mithyaad` of the universe is also a very, very important knowledge. 'Aham Brahma asmi' knowledge, by itself, is insufficient. Jagan mithyaathva nischayam is very, very important, because, in jagath-sathyathva-vaadhaa, liberation is never possible. If the jagath is sathyam, liberation is never possible, because, once the world is real, 'Law of Karma' becomes the most powerful chain that will shackle everyone. Nobody can escape that. Anirmokshaprasanghaa will be the problem.

In fact, an advanced Vedhaanthic student should know that, in Jagathsathyathvavaadhaa, 'Law of Karma' binds not only the jeeva; it will bind Isvara also.

Even Isvara will be bound by the 'Law of Karma'. How?

To explain: Isvara also has got some tasks; He is srushtikartha, sthithi kartha, laya kartha and karma pala dhathaa. These are the four roles of Bhagavaan, from which roles, Bhagavaan can never escape. He has to do these four tasks eternally. While Bhagavaan has to do these four tasks, if the questions "has He got freedom in His actions? Can He create the world as He likes?" are raised, the answer will be "No, even Bhagavaan cannot create or run the world as He likes. He has to create and administer the world only as dictated by the 'Law of Karma'". Therefore, against the wish of the Lord – even though He does not like it –

He is forced to create sufferings in the world. Even though Bhagavaan is compassionate, Bhagavaan is forced to create sufferings in the world. At any given time, sufferings are there, all over, created by Bhagavaan Himself, forced by the 'Law of Karma'. Against His own wishes, Bhagavaan has also to distribute sufferings to the jeevaraasis, again dictated by the 'Law of Karma'. If only Bhagavaan had the choice, He would have avoided creation and distribution of sufferings, because all jeevas are His children; but, He is Himself bound by the 'Law of Karma', which tells Him "You are karmapaladhaatha; distribute sufferings".

Bhagavaan has to do this eternally ; and, above all, being sarvagnya;, He has to know all the sufferings . He cannot close His eyes to the sufferings; being sarvagnya;, He has to 'watch' all the sufferings, all the time. The alpagnya mortals are, comparatively more fortunate - being blissfully ignorant of all the sufferings; they are exposed only to limited sufferings. But, Bhagavaan has to watch all the sufferings, all the time, without rest or respite. Bhagavaan has to create sufferings, distribute sufferings and watch the sufferings.

But, in spite of all these, if Bhagavaan is free, it is only because, Bhagavaan knows 'Creation' is mithyaa and sufferings are mithyaa. If creation is sathyam, Bhagavaan will never have peace of mind.

Therefore, Bhagavaan says: "I am happy, because, for Me, the Creation is mithyaa and entertainment" and exhorts mankind "therefore, you should also, like Me, see the Creation as mithyaa".

"Thasya karthaaram api maam viddhi akarthaaram avyayam"- "Though its (division in society) author, know Me to be a non-doer and changeless" (BG. Ch. IV. Verse 13).

"Only mithyaathva jnaanam liberates Me" Bhagavaan says "and it is the mithyaathva jnaanam that can liberate you also".

111. Chapter III- Verses 1 (20-09-2008)

The 2nd chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi was completed in the earlier session (on 13th September 2008).

In the 2nd chapter, Sureswaraachaarya had comprehensively discussed aathma anaathma viveka and also anaathma mithyaathvam.

Anaathma mithyaathvam means that the entire anaathma prapanchaa is of a lower order of reality and therefore, is not as real as aathmaa. To express it in a slightly different manner, this anaathma prapanchaa is false or unreal, in comparison to aathmaa, the Absolute Reality.

This unreality of the universe is established by the Advathin, citing different reasons. Three reasons were discussed in the 2nd chapter. And, the most important reason given, was, that, the Upanishads negate this universe. Whatever is negated by the Saasthraas cannot be real, because what is real can never be negated.

Saasthraas stress another important point, though it was not discussed in the Summary of the 2nd chapter, which important point is, that, the saasthraas say "In the wake of knowledge, there will be no anaathmaa at all; there is only aathmaa".

"Yasmin sarvaani boothani aathmaiva abooth vijaanatha: thathra ko moha: ka: soha: ekathvam anupasyatha:" – "When all beings are realized as one's aathman, to that seer of oneness, there is no delusion or sorrow; he, verily, lives transcending delusion and sorrow" – declares Isvaasya Upanishad (verse 7).

The wise person looks at everything as aathmaa and in the vision of the wise person, there is no anaathmaa at all. "Idham sarvam yadayam aathmaa" – "All these are the Self "asserts Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (II.iv.6) also.

And, the student has to derive important corollaries from these Upanishadic statements, which corollaries are extremely important for the Advaitin.

When the Upanishads thus say "in the vision of wise person, everything is aathmaa; there is no anaathmaa at all", they indirectly mean "knowledge negates anaathmad".

If knowledge has to negate anaathmaa, i.e. if, in the 'wake of knowledge', anaathmaa is negated, it is possible only under one condition: "anaathmaa must be born out of ignorance". To repeat in other words: "Only if anaathmaa is a product of ignorance, knowledge will destroy ignorance as well as the product of ignorance".

From the sruthi, we come to know that anaathmaa is unreal, it is a product of ignorance and it is negatable by knowledge. And, therefore, if the entire anaathmaa is to be negated and 'ignorance', the cause of anaathmaa, also has to be negated, then one has to gain knowledge.

In short, 'knowledge removes ignorance and the ignorance-produced anaathmaad'. This is the basic thesis of Advaitam.

Knowledge negates ignorance directly and by way of negating ignorance, it also negates whatever is born of ignorance; and, anaathmaa being a product of ignorance, anaathmaa is also negated.

Whatever is a product of ignorance is called unreal or adhyasa: | Therefore, "adhyasaa and ajnaanaad", we should note, "are negated by jnaanam". This is the essence of Vedhaanthaa.

Towards this alone, the well-known example of 'the rope-ignorance producing the unreal snake' is given. The 'rope-ignorance' is ajnaana and the 'unreal snake' is adhyasa: | Both 'rope-ignorance' (ajnaanaa) and the 'unreal snake' (adhyasaa), are negated simultaneously by one knowledge viz., 'rope-knowledge'.

This fact, that, 'jnaanam removes ajnaanam and ajnaana-janya adhyasaa' is the thesis of Vedhaanthaa.

In the above example, the 'unreal snake' is created by 'rope-ignorance'. In the same manner, the entire anaathma prapanchaa is also caused by 'ignorance'.

This gives rise to the question "what ignorance creates the entire anaathma adhyasa?" | Vedhaanthaa answers: "moolaavidhyaa is the special ignorance, which is the producer of the entire false universe".

Mithyaa adhyasaa is created by a special ignorance, to which Vedhaanthaa gives the name 'moolaa avidhyaa'.

And, what is the uniqueness of this moolaa avidhyaa? Answer: It is not a 'small' ignorance located in the mind. But, it is a 'bigger' ignorance, which is the producer of the mind itself.

Moolaa avidhyaa is not a small ignorance located in the individual mind, but is a mahaa ignorance, which is the creator of the mind and not only the mind, but, along with the mind, the entire cosmos also. Both the mind and the cosmos are projections caused by moolaa avidhyaa.

To repeat : It should be carefully understood, that, the world is not the projection of the mind ; but, the entire world, including the mind is a projection caused by moolaavidhyaa - which is otherwise called maaya, prakruthi:, avyaktham, avyaakrutham, yoga nidhrraa, mahaa sushupthi: etc.

These different words are used in Vedhaantha, to denote this 'ignorance' ; but, in this context (in Chapter III of Naishkarmya Siddhi) the word 'moolaavidhyaa' - 'basic or fundamental ignorance' is to be used.

And, Sureswaraachaaryaa will be pointing out in this chapter, that, this moolaavidhyaa is destroyed by a special knowledge.

Ordinary or commonplace knowledge destroys ordinary or commonplace ignorance. The special ignorance, 'moolaavidhyaa', can be destroyed only by a special knowledge; and that knowledge can be given only by Vedhaantha maahaa vaakya vichaara: |

The third chapter deals with the subject of maha vaakyartha vichaara ; and Sureswaraachaarya points out, in this chapter, that, the knowledge generated by maha vaakya artha vichaaraa alone will be the destroyer of moolaavidhyaa.

Through the destruction of moolaavidhyaa, maha vaakya artha vichaaraa will falsify the entire anaathma prapanchaa, consisting of three types of thriputi (already discussed in the earlier chapter) listed below:

- (1) kaaraka-kriyaa-palaroopa thriputi, which is responsible for the entire karma vyavahaaraa
- (2) pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi, which is responsible for all jnaana vyavahaara and
- (3) buddhi-deha-ghataadhaya thriputi - the body, the mind and the world (indicated by the word 'ghataadhaya:') - which is responsible for samsaara vyavahaara.

All these are falsified; even body and mind are falsified.

Vedhaantha is not aimed at improving the mind; but, aimed at falsification of the mind itself, establishing, that, whatever that happens in the mind anaathmaa, cannot touch the 'real' aathmaa. This extraordinary wisdom, which destroys moolaavidhyaa and falsifies the anaathmaa is to be gained thorough mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. This is the subject matter of the thrutheeya adhyaayaa (Chapter III) – the biggest chapter in Naishkarmya Siddhi, consisting of 126 verses.

And, since this important fact, viz., "mahaavaakya vichaaraa destroys this moolaavidhyaa and consequently negates the samsaaraa itself ", is to be established, Sureswaraachaaryaa first discusses moolaavidhyaa elaborately in the introductory portion (of the chapter) .

The introduction is moolaavidhyaa vichaaraa, while the chapter is mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, which produces the knowledge that destroys moolaavidhyaa.

When the subject of moolaavidhyaa vichaara: is discussed, the question is "what type of enquiry is required with regard to moolaavidhyaa?"

Four aspects are to be highlighted, during this enquiry into moolaavidhyaa.

But, even before entering that topic of moolaavidhyaa vichaara:, even in general, the student has to note a few important principles, about any type of ignorance – not only moolaavidhyaa.

Principle (1):

Ignorance is always associated with a sentient entity; i.e. 'ignorance' can never exist by itself; it must always be located in a sentient being; in other words, only a sentient being can be said to be ignorant. That 'ignorant' sentient being is called 'locus' of ignorance.

To express this in another manner: if and when one talks about ignorance, the immediate question raised is "who is ignorant?", because, without an 'ignorant' sentient entity, there cannot be any talk of ignorance at all. Ignorance always requires a locus. In Sanskrit, this 'locus' of ignorance is called 'aasraya.' |

Avidhyaa requires an aasraya: |

Principle (2):

One can never talk about ignorance, without talking about the 'object of ignorance' also.

"Ignorance of what?" will be the question along with " 'who' is ignorant?"

If a seeker of knowledge approaches a teacher and says "I am ignorant; I want knowledge; please teach me", the teacher can start teaching, only if he knows "what the student is ignorant of / i.e., on what topic does the student want knowledge", of course, only if the teacher himself is versed on the subject of ignorance / the topic on which the knowledge is sought.

Before starting any 'teaching', the subject matter should be clear. This shows, that, ignorance must always be of a specified object or subject ; that object/ subject of ignorance is called vishaya: | Thus, 'ajnaanam requires a vishaya:' is the 2nd principle./

It was concluded above, that, one cannot talk about 'ignorance', without talking about the locus (aasraya:) and the object of ignorance (vishaya:); that, in short, Ajnaanam must have an aasraya: and a vishaya:|

This is true about 'knowledge' also; jnaanam also must have a locus and an object. The 'locus of knowledge' also is called aasraya: and the 'object of knowledge' also is called vishaya: |

And, Principle (3):

Jnaanam can destroy ajnaanam only if the locus and the object of jnaanam and ajnaanam are identical / are the same.

This statement may appear complicated; but, actually, is a very simple fact.

To give an example: "Assume that Rama is ignorant of Physics; naturally, his ignorance of Physics will go away with the knowledge of Physics. But, only 'Physics knowledge' can destroy 'Physics Ignorance' – not 'Chemistry knowledge' or knowledge of any subject other than Physics. Therefore, condition no. 1 is, 'knowledge' will destroy 'ignorance' only when the 'object of knowledge' and the 'object of ignorance' are one and the same. This can be expressed as 'Samaana vishayathvam is the condition for jnaana ajnaana virodha:' | Jnaanam and ajnaanam are inimical, which means jnaanam will destroy ajnaanam. But, this will happen only when the vishayaas are identical.

"In the same manner, the 'locus' also should be the same. To continue the above example, if Rama's 'ignorance of Physics' should go away, it is only Rama who should acquire the 'knowledge of Physics' to have his 'ignorance of Physics' destroyed. Anybody else studying Physics for any length of time, on behalf of Rama, will not help Rama to destroy his ignorance of Physics." This shows that the locus of 'ignorance' and corresponding 'knowledge' should be the same.

Jnaanam and ajnaanam are bhaadhya-bhaadhakam, only when they have got samaana aasraya and samaana vishaya.

Having noted these three principles, the text is entered into.

In the Introductory portion of the 3rd Chapter, Sureswaraachaarya first asks: "what is the aasraya: (locus) of moolaavidhyaa?" and, later, the second question "what is the vishaya: (object) of moolaavidhyaa?"

And, he himself answers the questions; i.e. the Aacharyaa does a vikalpa (the word 'vikalpa' meaning "raising questions and answering the same").

In the second chapter, the Aachaaryaa had elaborately categorized the entire cosmos into aathmaa and anaathmaa. There are two only two things – aathmaa, the Consciousness principle and anaathmaa, the Matter principle. Body is included in anaathmaa / mind is included in anaathmaa / world is included in anaathmaa / even God is included in anaathmaa.

Interestingly, if somebody raises this question "in what category does God fall?", it cannot be answered straightaway; there has to be a return question : "how do you look upon God?" As long as God is looked upon as an object, different from 'me', as an object of worship / as an object of meditation / as an object of Puja, then God also will come under anaathmaa. If, on the other hand, the answer is "mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham etc.," then there is the option of including God in aathmaa, 'I', the subject.

In a lighter vein, Swamiji goes on: "Which is better? Including God in aathmaa, the subject or in anaathmaa, the object?"

"If you ask God Himself, 'in what category would you like to come under?' , God will plead 'kindly do not put me in anaathmaa category'. Why? Because the entire anaathmaa is unreal, that can be falsified through knowledge. Bhagavaan would not want to get negated in the wake of knowledge. Hence, Bhagavaan Himself will say 'Temporarily you can keep me in anaathmaa category (for the sake of worship or Puja) ; but, sooner than later, please put me in aathmaa category, so that I can be real' . Bhagavaan would like to be real, rather than be anaathmaa that can be dismissed / negated".

Kenopanishad says "Na idham yadh idham upaasathe" - "This deity which people meditate upon is not Brahman (I. 5), clearly conveying "an object of Upaasanaa is not Reality." What a powerful statement? This is Upanishadic statement – not of Sankaraachaaryaa, the Advaithin. Therefore, the objectified Gad also will come under anaathmaa.

To revert to the text: The 2nd chapter has categorized everything into these two - aathmaa and anaathmaa- only.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa is raising the question to himself: "Is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa, aathmaa or anaathmaa?" His first question is "Is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa, anaathmaa? Then, his second question is "Is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa aathmaa?"

As earlier pointed out, Moolaavidhyaa should have a vishaya, an object also.

So the third question is "Is the vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa anaathmaa?" The 4th question can be guessed: "Is the vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa aathmaa?"

"Moolaavidhyaa aasraya: anaathmaa? Moolavidhyaa aasraya: aathmaa? Moolaavidhyaavishaya: aanaathmaa ? Moolaavidhyaavishaya: aathmaa?" are the four topics which the Aachaaryaa is going to enquire into.

(At this juncture, Swamiji quotes an anecdote in a lighter vein: "Swami Chinmayananda used to tell a humorous story of an experience that can be had in a village : 'A man and wife, engaged in trade , vending some items required by the villagers, would move around together carrying the items. The husband would walk a few steps ahead, with the wife following him, conversing with each other. The tired wife would suddenly stop for chewing betel, and seat herself under a tree, for a brief rest, chewing betel. Her husband, walking ahead, without realizing that his wife had stopped, would continue talking and because of the load on his head would not turn around also. Only after some time, he would realize that his wife had stopped for a rest and he had been talking to no one in particular'. After telling this story, Swami Chinmayaananda would jokingly remark 'A similar situation may happen in the case of a guru and his sishyaa also. The guru may continue his teaching on and on, while the sishyaa might have 'dropped' the guru somewhere on the way' ".)

Swamiji, in the same light vein, wonders whether his students are following the trend of his teaching, in the immediate context.)

What is going to be the siddhaantha? The siddhaantha is very important in advaitam. What is that important siddhaantha?

Ans : "Aathmaa alone is the aasrayaa and vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa . Aathmaa eva moolaavidhyaayaa: aasraya: | Aathmaa eva mollaavidhyaayaa: vishaya: api | Aasrayathva vishayathvam – both belong to aathmaa only".

There is a very, very famous verse in Samkshepa saareerakam, a profound text written by Sarvajnaathma Muni:, who was a very scholarly disciple of Sureswaraachaaryaa, in which, he says "aasrayathva vishayathva baaghinee nirvibhaaga chithireva kevalaa poorva siddhathamaso paschima naasayo bhavathi naapi gochara:" | This sloka is based on this introduction (that is being discussed) of Sureswaraachaaryaa.

In this Introductory passage, Sureswaraachaaryaa is going to say "anaathmaa cannot be aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa nor vishayaa of moolaavidhya. Aathmaa alone is assrayaa and vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa". Sureswaraachaaryaa is going to establish this doctrine, by giving several arguments.

And, after having established this, Sureswaraachaaryaa is going to say, at the end of the Introductory portion, "this moolaavidhyaa, for which aathmaa is both aasrayaa and vishayaa – aathma aasrayaka aathma vishayaka moolaavidhyaa - can be destroyed by only that knowledge for which aathmaa is both the aasrayaa and vishayaa. That knowledge alone will destroy moolaavidhyaa; and that knowledge can be gained only from mahaa vaaya vichaaraa |" and exhort "Therefore, let us all enter into mahaa vaakya vichaaraa". Thus, the Aachaaryaa uses moolaavidhyaa vichaara: as the 'appetizer' for mahaavaakya vichaara: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 1 – Chapter III (Part):

सर्वोऽयं प्रमितिप्रमाणप्रमेयप्रमात्रुलक्षण आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तो मिथ्याध्यास एवेति बहुश उपपत्तिभिरतिष्ठपम् ।

It has been established through elaborate reasoning, that all this empirical world, from Brahman down to the lowest species, consisting of knowledge, means of knowledge, objects of knowledge and the subjects thereof, is merely a false superimposition.

To begin with, the Aachaaryaa summarizes what he had discussed in the 2nd chapter, pointing out, that, it was established that there are two only two things in the entire cosmos – aathmaa, the Consciousness principle and anaathmaa, the Matter principle; he refers to this, so that, he can raise the question "is moolaavidhyaa located in aathmaa or anaathmaa?" For raising this question alone, Sureswaraachaaryaa reminds "The whole thing (cosmos) has been classified into two, in the earlier chapter".

Therefore, if a question "what are all the things in the world?" is raised, the answer need not be a detailed list of all the objects in creation ; the answer could and should simply be "there is aathmaa and there is anaathmaa".

The Aaachaaryaa says:

- इति अतिष्ठपम् - It has been established, that,

Athishtipam is a rare usage, with the following interesting sidelines:

In Sanskrit, the past tense itself is of three varieties –

- (1) to-day's past - from sunrise till the moment – called, adhyathana bhootha kaalam
- (2) the past from one's date of birth to yesterday – called, anadhyathana bhootha kaalam, and
- (3) the remote past – before one's birth to anaadhi kaalam - called paroksha bhootha kaalam.

And, in the adhyathana bhootha kaalam itself, there are seven varieties. Athishtipam is the third variety - it is called 'duplicative lung', and means, 'I established or 'it has been established'.

What has been established?

- आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तो सर्वः अयं - "the entire universe beginning from Brahma, the Creator, to the smallest insect / insignificant living being – (which universe is the object of Consciousness), Sarva: – the entire anaathma prapancha: / universe; ayam – (in this context) implies 'which is the object of Consciousness'.

- प्रमिति प्रमाण प्रमेय प्रमात्रु लक्षण :- which can be classified into 'knower', 'known', 'knowing instrument' and 'knowledge',

All these put together, anaathma prapancha:, can be translated as 'Matter', in English.

- मिथ्या अध्यासः एव - is merely a false projection",

What a powerful statement! Advaita dismisses the entire 'Matter' as unreal.

Using puns, Swamiji conveys in a lighter vein: "'Matter does not matter' is a very important doctrine, which doctrine does matter, in Advaita".

The 'false projection' is caused by moolaavidhya. The 'projection' is not a mental projection, because, mind also is one of the projected materials.

- उपपत्तिभिः बहुशः - using varieties of reasonings.

Bahusa: - in manifold ways; upapatthibhi: - by reasonings.

In the summary of the 2nd chapter (in the earlier class), three reasonings were given. The most powerful argument given, is "Veda itself negates matter and declares 'Chaithanyam alone is. Matter does not exist at all. The seeming vibration of Consciousness is appearing as illusory matter' ". A typical example of Veda negating matter is the 'Alaatha saanthi prakaranam' of Maandookya Kaarikaa (4th Chapter).

The seeming vibrations of Consciousness alone appear as the tangible matter; if a thorough probe is undertaken, it can be concluded, that 'Matter is not there at all'.

Thus, anaathmaa is one 'thing'. What is the second 'thing'?

(Sambhandha gadhyam) further to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

आत्मा च जन्मादिषड्भावविकारवर्जितः कूटस्थबोध एवेति स्फुटीकृतम्।

The Self, it has been clarified, is eternal Consciousness devoid of changes of being, like origin.

And, what is the second entity? "If everything experienced is unreal, then what is real? "will be the question.

If everything is considered unreal, it will become soonyavaadhaa, which Advaita Vedhaanthaa does not accept.

Then, what is the answer, according to Advaita? It is: "There is only one thing other than all the experienced entities, which is that non-experienced / non-experiencable object, the chaithanyam entity, in which medium alone all experiences are taking place. And, that chaithanyam, which is never an object of experience, is 'myself'".

And, when the word 'myself' is used, it should not be imagined to mean a localized entity. 'Myself' means a non-localized Consciousness medium, in which all the transactions are taking place; just as light is the medium, in which all transactions take place. And, also, just as 'light' is not a participant in any transaction i.e. 'light' is a non-participant medium, in a similar manner, 'I' am the non-participant medium of Consciousness, in which all transactions are taking place.

The Aachaaryaa continues:

- आत्मा च - "Whereas, the Self
- कूटस्थबोधः - is the Changeless Consciousness, kootastha – nirvikhaara; bhodha: - (in this context) means chaithanyam.

What type of Chaithanyam?

- जन्मादि षड्भाव विकारवर्जितः एव – free from the six types of modifications like janma etc.,"

The six modifications are well known – "asthi, jaayathe, vardhathe, viparinamathe, apaksheeyathe, vinasayathi", as listed in Thathva Bodha.

That chaithanyam is aathmaa.

That is why, earlier (while making a reference to the Vedic statements) care was taken to say "the seeming vibrations of aathmaa"; the use of the adjective 'seeming' is significant, because, aathmaa being changeless, it can never have any motion also. Therefore, one should never simply say 'vibrations' of Consciousness, i.e. without using the adjective 'seeming' for the vibrations, because Consciousness is never subject to vibrations, being all-pervading and changeless. Just as space cannot have any vibration, Consciousness also, cannot have any vibrations. The 'seeming vibrations' of Consciousness is creating the delusion called this world, exactly like dream.

- इति स्फुटीकृतम् – This (fact) was also clearly established (in the 2nd Chapter).

In the 2nd chapter, anaathmaa was discussed as unreal and aathmaa was discussed as the only Reality. Then why the 3rd chapter at all, if the teaching is over?

Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

तयोश्च मिथ्याध्यासकूटस्थात्मनोर्नान्तरेणाजान् संबन्धोऽन्यत्र चोदनापरिप्रापितात् यथा" इयमेवर्गग्निः साम " इति।

Except in cases where a scriptural injunction identifies one thing for another for a special purpose, the relation between two items like the false superimposition and eternal consciousness is impossible without a basic ignorance.

'I', the aathmaa, the Conscious principle and anaathmaa, the Matter principle belong to two orders of reality. One (anaathmaa) is mithyaa adhyaasa: | The word 'mithyaa' is crucial and means 'lower order of reality', also generally called vyaavahaarika sathyam – 'empirical functioning reality'. The other (aathmaa) is paaramaarthikam or absolute Reality. Thus, the orders of reality, between the two, are different. Since the orders of reality are different, no relationship is possible between aathmaa and anaathmaa. Sathyam cannot have any relationship with mithyaa, just as the 'waker', who is of a higher order of reality, can never strike a relationship with any member in his dream.

Swamiji, in a lighter vein, gives the example of how an anxious mother looking for a spouse for her son / daughter, comes across in her dream a suitable daughter-in-law/ son-in-law and even if it be the most ideal match, how could a relationship be struck with the 'dream person'?

Relationship is possible only between two members of the same order of reality. Body and mind can and do have relationship, because they belong to the same order of reality - vyaavahaarika sathyam; that's why, when body is affected, the mind is affected. In fact, nobody can stop the mind getting affected when the body gets affected, with any amount of effort, because of this fact, that, they belong to the same order of reality. Mind can never be made to be 'un-connected' with the body; whatever happens to the body, will influence the mind. Probably, one can marginally decrease the influence; but, can never be totally rid of the influence. In the same manner, the body also is influenced by the mind, psychosomatic disorders proving this fact. Relationship between mind and body cannot be avoided.

What Vedhaanthaa wants to say is: "'I', (not the mind – but, 'I', the aathmaa, the chaitanyam) and the body-mind complex, which belongs to anaathmaa, cannot have any sambhandaa at all. 'I' am asangha: - asanghoham. 'I' am non-participant in any of the transactions of anaathmaa. Therefore, 'I' am not going to be influenced by the events of anaathmaa. 'Non-participant' means akarthaa and 'non-influenced' means abokthaa."

This is the corollary the seeker gets, when the seeker firmly knows that aathmaa is sathyam and anaathmaa is mithyaa. One should realize that 'I' am ever free and relationless. I do not participate in anything and I am not influenced by anything.

And, when? Ans: Ever. "Naiva kinchith karomi ithi yuktho manyathe thathvavith pasyan srunvan sprusan jighran asnan gacchan svapan svasan pralapan visrjan gruhnana unmishan nimishaanapi" – "The disciplined knower of the Truth understands 'I do not do anything at all', even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing, talking, evacuating, receiving, opening the eye and closing the eye" declares Lord Krishna, in the Bhagavadh Githa (Verses 8 & 9 - Chapter V.)

The body-mind complex has a relationship with the world and nobody can stop their relationship. But 'I' am 'out of bounds'. This is the truth.

But, unfortunately, most people do not seem to claim this truth even after several years of Vedhaanthic study. If the guru asks "are you muktha: now?", the sishtyaa will hesitate to accept his state of liberation and may even blame praarabhdhaa for preventing him from being a muktha: | This is because of the unfortunate fact that he relates to anaathmaa and judges himself based on the conditions of miserable anaathmaa.

This tendency to base one's judgment on anaathmaa indicates that one relates oneself to anaathmaa – the first relationship, being with the mind and the body. And when one's mind is turbulent, one says "I am not liberated, because my mind is turbulent". This statement only shows that one has committed the fundamental mistake of connecting oneself with one's mind. This is called moolaavidhyaa.

112. Chapter III- Verses 1 (27-09-2008)

In this introduction (to chapter 3), Sureswaraacharya is discussing moolaavidhya, which is the cause of the entire universe, which universe consists of karmavyavahaara thriputi and jnaanavyavahaara thriputi.

The Advaita aacharyaas assert, that, moolaavidhya is the cause for / Creator of the entire universe, because of two reasons.

The first reason is that the Upanishads negate the entire universe as 'not factually existent , but only seemingly existent'; whatever is negated as a non-fact has to be only mithyaa vasthu ; and, whatever is mithyaa, should be caused by avidhya only. This is the logical reasoning.

To express the same in other words: "Sruthi negates the world; therefore, world is mithyaa; what is mithyaa, can be created only by ajnaanam; therefore, moolaavidhya is the cause of the dvaithaprapancha." This is one argument.

The second argument: The Upanishads assert that, when a person attains aathma jnaanam, then, in his vision, there is no anaathmaa at all, other than aathmaa.

As an example, the Upanishadic vaakyam "sarvaani boothaani aathmaa eva abooth vijaanatha." is considered. In this vaakyam, every word is extremely important. The word 'vijaanatha.' means 'for a wise person' and 'sarvaani boothaani aathmaa eva abooth' means 'everything is aathma'. The vaakyam, therefore, means, 'For a wise person, there is no anaathmaa at all'.

When this statement, viz., 'A wise person does not have anaathma', is made, what does one derive from the statement? The statement indirectly means that 'anaathmaa is a product of ignorance'.

In further clarification: a wise person is one who has 'destroyed' ignorance; the above statement, therefore, in effect, conveys, that 'when ignorance is destroyed, anaathmaa is negated'; which, in turn, implies 'anaathmaa is a product of ignorance'. Therefore also (i.e., because of such statements also) we come to know that moolaavidhya is the cause of the entire anaathma prapancha.

Now, Sureswaraacharya wants to discuss, as to what is the locus of this moolaavidhya and also what is the object of moolaavidhya, because (as discussed already) ignorance requires a sentient locus and ignorance always requires an object also. That is going to be the discussion, for which the Aachaaryaa is preparing the ground.

Reverting to the text, the third line of the 'Introductory' gadyam to the 3rd chapter:

- तयोः - Between those two things, (which were discussed in the 2nd chapter),

What were those two things? One was mithyaa adhyaasa:, the false superimposition, otherwise called jada anaathmaa. The second component was kootastha aathmaa, the changeless, sentient aathmaa.

- मिथ्या अध्यास कूटस्थ अत्मनोः - viz. the jada anaathmaa and the chethana aathmaa,
- संबन्धः न एव भवति(- a relationship is never possible,
- अज्ञानं अन्तरेण – without moolaavidhya, the basic ignorance ,

In the normal course, aathmaa and anaathmaa cannot have any relationship. What is the reason? Not one, but, several reasons can be given, out of which two are important.

The first reason: aathmaa is of the higher order of reality and anaathmaa is of the lower order. Two things belonging to different orders of reality cannot have any relationship / sambhandhaa.

The second reason: The Upanishad itself clearly says 'aathmaa asanghasvaroopa:'| In its svayamjyothi brahmanam, Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad repeatedly asserts 'asangho hi ayam purusha:' | 'asangha:' means 'without relationship'. How can the asangha aathmaa have relationship with anaathmaa? Therefore, relationship is not possible between aathmaa and anaathma.

But, even though relationship is, thus, logically and also according to scriptures, not possible, we do experience a relationship between aathmaa and anaathmaa. How do we experience it? i.e., how is the 'relationship' expressed? An instance : when one claims "I am a male (or a female)", 'I', the aathmaa, has associated 'myself' with the body anaathmaa, because it is only the body which has a gender, whereas aathmaa does not have any gender. Without 'body association', one can never talk about purushathvam or sthreethvam. Therefore, when one claims "I am purusha: / sthree etc.", it shows the deha/anaathma sambhandhaa with 'myself' / the aathmaa.

One more instance of the false relationship: Even after a long and thorough study of Vedhaantha, many students have got vipareetha bhaavanaa problems, which is height of ignorance; the vipareetha bhaavanaa belongs to antha:karanam, the mind; but, the student is wrongly associating himself with the antha: karanam and manages to successfully postpone liberation, saying " I am an ordinary student; I have got several viparaatha bhaavanaas to cross over". This is another instance of aathma-anaathma sambhandha: |

Thus, logically, aathma-anaathma sambhandha is not possible; but, experientially aathma-anaathma sambhandha is available. How is that incongruity explained?

Sureswaraachaarya answers: "Where something is logically impossible, but, when experientially it is available, in all such cases, the culprit is 'ignorance'. Wherever something is logically impossible and it is experientially made possible - the 'impossible' is made 'possible', only by avidhya".

Therefore, the aachaaryaa says 'ajnaanam antharena' meaning 'without moolaavidhya, the basic ignorance'.

'Antharena' means 'without'; 'ajnaanam' means 'moolaavidhya'; na means 'this relationship is never possible'.

No relationship is possible between 'me' and the body, without ajnaanam.

Adhyaasa Bhashyam of Brahma soothraas starts with this impossible relationship between 'me' and anything in creation. The ajnaani samsaari has created a deep relationship with a number of people and objects and, then, also has a problem in withdrawing the relationship. Direct relationship is with sareeram and more powerful relationship is with family – sareera sambhandhaa and family sambhandhaa.

Both these illogical relationships are now so strong, that, in spite of the guru repeatedly drilling the student, "you are the asangha aathmaa / nithya muktha aathmaa" and the student nodding his head vigorously as though in complete understanding and total agreement, in actual practice, when a family problem arises, he forgets the guru's teachings and 'suffers' the problem, failing to claim his Mokshaa state.

Vedhaantha asks: "Where is 'family' possible for you? aathmaa is natural sanyaasi ; therefore, you are all sanyastha aathmaas. Where do you have the problem?"

But, if the seeker still has the problem, to whom does this glory of creating the problem belong?

The Aachaaryaa answers: Antharena ajnaanam sambhandha: na - Without ignorance, relationship is not possible.

- अन्यत्र - except in another situation,

Now, Sureswaraachaarya says there is an exception to the general rule, 'illogical connections can be brought about only by ignorance'.

"Illogical connections can be brought about only by ignorance" was his earlier statement. Now, he makes an exception. He says "other than ignorance, there is another situation also, where illogical relationships can be brought about".

What is that situation / occasion? The Aachaaryaa answers, that, all the upaasanaas are also illogical relationships, but, with an important difference; they are deliberately brought about by the upaasakaa, at the time of the practice of upaasanaa.

How does he say so? Because, in every upaasanaa, the Upaasakaa takes an inert (achethanam) object as aalambanam, and superimposes a deity (which is chethanam or live) on the aalambanam. For instance, he makes a conical image, using turmeric powder and commences his Pooja with the well known incantation 'asmin haridhraa bhimbe sumukam aavaahayaam!'. Whether turmeric powder, or saaligraamaa or siva linghaa – all the aalambanams for upaasanaa are jada roopam. On the achethanam, chethana is never possible. But, what does the Upaasakaa do, at the time of Pooja? He is bringing in, an impossible relationship; he deliberately superimposes a chethana deity - Vinaayaka / Vishnu / Siva etc. – on the jada / achethana aalambanam of turmeric or saaligraamaa or siva linghaa.

Not only that – later, the Upaasakaa offers food also to the aalambanam; claiming that the deity has got hunger, he offers food to the inert stone or metal. During this action also, achethanam and chethanam are connected.

But, here, i.e., during Upaasanaa, when, admittedly an illogical relationship is created, the cause for this illogical relationship is not 'ignorance'. Then, what is the cause? Saasthra vidhi is the cause.

Thus, illogical relationships can be brought about by two causes; one cause is 'ignorance' and the second is 'saasthric injunction'. 'Ignorance-created illogical relationship' is called 'adhyasa:' | The other type of relationship – vidhi janitha sambhandhaa - results during upaasanaa.

In the case of aathma-anaathma sambhandhaa, which one is the cause? Is it Vidhi or ajnaanam? (In this context, the word 'vidhi' does not mean 'fate', but, means 'saasthric injunction'). Sureswaraacharya's answer: In the case of aathma-anaathma sambhandhaa, vidhi is not the cause; ajnaanam alone is the cause.

How does one know? How can one assert that the cause is only ajnaanam and not saasthravidhi? Obviously because, even before studying saasthraas, the individual has associated oneself (aathmaa) with the body (anaathmaa).

In the case of aathma-anaathma association, it is not a deliberate association, caused by saasthric injunction, but one caused by ajnaanam only.

Incidentally, all these are very elaborately discussed by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Githa Bhaashyam, in the context of the popular verse 'sarvadharmaan parithyajya maamekam saranam vraja'; and, also, in his Brahma soothra bhaashyam, when he comments on the thaththu samanvaya soothram. Sankaracharya revels in this topic.

Sureswaraacharya also says, "in the case of aathma-anaathmaa- sambhandhaa, ajnaanam alone is the cause of the sambhandhaa, though there is an exception".

anyathra - except on a different occasion, (viz., Upaasanaas where an illogical relationship is brought about by vedic injunctions),

And, Sureswaraacharya gives examples of the occasion, where Vedic injunction is the cause for 'mixing' the impossible. What are those examples?

- यथा - when (the visualizations),
- "इयं एव र्ग् अग्निः साम इति - "this (earth) surely is Rk; fire is saama" etc., (are brought about),

This quotation is taken from Chaandhoghya Upanishad (I.vi. 1); in this manthraa, the Upanishad is prescribing an Upaasanaa; the Upaasanaa enjoins the Upaasakaa to 'visualize upon a rik manthra the prithvi thathvam or the earth principle'. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa writes in his relevant commentary "richi prithivi dhrushti: kaaryaa" – "upon a rik manthraa, one has to visualize the entire prithvi thathvam".

Here, the Upaasakaa is to 'connect' a manthraa and prithvi. Prithvi is 'huge'; and, in comparison, a manthraa is small. The 'visualization of the huge prithvi on a small manthraa' is, therefore, illogical. But, still the Upaasakaa makes the 'connection' or 'association' between the two, by upaasanaa. On what authority?

- चोदनापरिप्रापितात् - because of the instruction of Vedic injunctions.

Chodhanaa – Vedic injunction; paripraapithaath – because of instructions.

Because of the instruction of the veda, the impossible pair – rik and bhoomi – are 'connected', by the upaasakaa.

What is the second example?

'Agni: saama' - Upon a saama manthraa, one has to visualize the agni thathvam - the agni element. A manthraa and fire can never be associated or be equal; manthraa is not 'hot'; agni is hot; but, even though they do not have any relationship, this upaasakaa brings them together and sees a saama manthraa as agni. Why does he do that? Not because of ignorance, but, because of Vedic injunction / chodhanaa paripraapithaath.

Anyathra sambhandha: bhavathi chodhanaa paripraapithaath – in other cases, (illogical) relationships are caused, because of the instruction of Vedic injunctions.

Anyathra - in other cases.

But, in the case of aathma-anaathma-sambhandhaa, the 'connection' or 'relationship' is not because of veda vidhi. Then, how does this 'relationship' result? Moolaavidhyaa is the culprit.

And, what are the consequences? As long as moolaavidhyaa continues, the anaathma sambhandhaa will also continue; as long as anaathma sambhandhaa continues, one will be a jeeva; as long as one is a jeeva, the 'real' world will continue; and as long as the 'real' world is there, samsaaraa cannot be solved.

(As mentioned in an earlier context, if the world is deemed 'real', even Bhagavaan will become a samsaari. How? Explained thus: No doubt, it is Bhagavaan Who creates the sufferings and also distributes the sufferings according to the law of Karma; but, not stopping with creating and distributing the sufferings, while a jeeva is exposed only to a portion of the sufferings created by Bhagavaan, Bhagavaan, being omniscient, will have to be aware of all the sufferings of all the beings in all the fourteen lokaas. And, because of this, if world and sufferings are 'real', Bhagavaan Himself, being also compassionate, can never have peace of mind.)

As long as one is a jeeva, world will be 'real' and sufferings will be 'real'; therefore, jeevathvam should go away; triangular (jeeva – Isvara – jagath) format has to be discarded. The seeker has to come to aathmathvam; that is possible only when the seeker dissociates from family / from his own body / from his mind/ from all the turbulences of the mind. This dissociation or asangathvam alone is the solution. That (asangathvam) will come only when ajnaanam is removed.

The Advaita Vedhaanthin challenges: "Try to get mokshaa by any other method. Let me see". In fact, his challenge is even to Bhagavaan: "Oh Lord, even You can be free, only if You falsify the universe; otherwise, You also will never have peace of mind, because You are ever aware of Your devotees undergoing sufferings".

"Therefore, the only solution is Naishkarmya Siddhi" declares Sureswaraacharya.

Further sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 1:

तच्चाज्ञानम् स्वात्माननिमित्तं न संभवतीति कस्यचित्कस्मिंश्चित्विषये भवतीत्यभ्युपगन्तव्यम् ।

That ignorance cannot be a self-existent principle and therefore, it must be admitted that it belongs to some subject of knowledge and is concerning some object of knowledge.

Here alone, Sureswaraacharya introduces the aasrayaa and vishayaa. He says "ajnaanam can never exist independently - any type of ignorance, including moolaavidhyaa".

This introduction is, of course, the discussion of moolaavidhyaa – not any other worldly ignorance. The Aachaaryaa is talking about moolaavidhyaa, the creator of the mind itself.

But, whether it is moolaavidhyaa or kaaryaavidhya - (other types of ignorance , viz., ignorance of worldly matters are called kaaryaavidhyaa) - any ignorance depends on two factors to survive. This was discussed in the previous sessions also.

The two factors are: (1) 'Ignorance of what?' and (2) 'Ignorance in which person'? A sentient being alone can be ignorant; i.e., a sentient 'locus' is required; and also an 'object' is required. The locus is called aasrayaa and the object is called vishaya:. Without these two, one can never talk about ignorance.

A simple example from mundane experiences: When an individual seeks to join a college for further studies, the basic questions asked of the individual, are (i) 'the name and details of the applicant' ("who wants ignorance removed?") and (2) 'which course does the applicant want to study?' ("which particular ignorance, do you want to be removed?"). The name of the applicant indicates the aasrayaa and the course of study opted for, indicates the vishaayaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, making a threadbare, thorough and systematic analysis, says moolaavidhyaa also must have an aasrayaa and a vishayaa.

- तत् च अत्रानं - That moolaavidhyaa
- न सम्भवति - is never possible / can never exist
- स्वात्ममात्रनिमित्तं - depending on itself ;

In this context, the word svaathmaa does not indicate the sacchidhaananda aathma; it is used, in this context, as a reflective pronoun.

Aathmaa is self dependent or independent, whereas ajnaanam is never self-dependent and therefore cannot exist depending on itself and therefore :

- कस्यचित् कस्मिंश्चित् विषये) एव (भवति - (moolaavidhyaa) is possible (only) for a particular individual and should be of some particular object;

'Kasyachith' means that 'ignorance should belong to someone / some sentient entity', who becomes the locus or aasrayaa of the moolaavidhyaa i.e., 'kasyachith' refers to aasrayaa .

'Kasmimschith vishaye' means 'about some object or other' / 'with regard to some object or other'.

- इति अभ्युपगन्तव्यं - everyone will have to accept this fact (that moolaavidhyaa requires aasrayaa and vishayaa).

The next step is to find out as to what is the aasrayaa and what is the vishayaa of the moolaavidhyaa.

Further sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 1:

इह च पदार्थद्वयं निर्दारितमात्मानात्मा च ।

We have determined that there are two categories, the Self and the non-Self.

- Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Our job is made simpler, based on the 2nd chapter; because, in the 2nd chapter, we have divided the entire cosmos into two basic principles. Instead of enumerating all the various objects and individuals – which are both infinite in number - we have reduced the entire cosmos into two basic things, Consciousness and Matter – aathmaa and anaathmaa; this means that our search need be confined to only the two of them. Moolaavidhyaa assrayaa will have to be chosen out of these two only; and so also moolaavidhyaa vishayaa".

In other words, "Is aathmaa the moolaavidhyaa aasraya-vishayaa? Or is anaathmaa the moolaavidhyaa aasraya- vishayaa?" are the only two questions to be answered.

- ईह च - In this Vedantic field
- पदार्थद्वयं निर्धारितम् - we have arrived at two basic entities,

'Nirdhaaritham' means 'have been arrived at'.

Where? Ans: In the 2nd chapter. The subject of the entire 2nd chapter was aathma-anaathma-vivekaa .

And, what are those two entities?

- आत्मा अनात्मा च - the Self and the non-Self.

In the following portions, the Aachaaryaa discusses anaathmaa first and rules out the possibility of anaathmaa being aasrayaa or vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa. He first asks the question "is anaathmaa moolaavidhyaa aasrayaa? " and then the second question "is anaathmaa the moolaavidhyaa vishayaa?". He negates both possibilities and establishes that anaathmaa is neither aasrayaa nor vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa.

Thereafter, he takes up the discussion on aathmaa and proves that aathmaa is the moolaavidhyaa aasrayaa and aathmaa is the moolaavidhyaa vishayaa also. In short, "Aathmaasrithaa aathmavishayakaa moolaavidhyaa".

The first topic (of the four topics enumerated in the last paragraph):

Further sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 1:

तत्र अनात्मनस्तावत् न अजानेन अभिसंबन्धः।

Of the two, it is evident that the non-Self cannot be the locus of ignorance.

- तत्र - Among those two padhaarthaas,
- तावत् - firstly / basically / evidently,
- अनात्मनः अज्ञानेन न अभिसंबन्धः - anaathmaa cannot be related to moolaavidhyaa, as its aasrayaa.

The language used by the Aaachaaryaa, to drive home his message, is rather devious. Instead of directly stating "anaathmaa is not the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa", he says: "anaathmaa cannot be / is not related to moolaavidhyaa, as its aasrayaa", which, in effect, means "anaathmaa is not the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa". In Tharka saasthraa language, the same simple message will be stated as: "anaathmaa and moolaavidhya cannot have aasraya-aasrayee-sambhandha:"

- अनात्मनः - For anaathma,
- न अभिसंबन्धः - there is no relationship
- अज्ञानेन - with moolaavidhyaa.

And, why? Sureswaraachaaryaa gives four arguments to support this statement.

Argument 1:

Further (sambhandha gadhyam) to Verse 1:

तस्य हि स्वरूपमेवाज्ञानं न हि स्वतोऽज्ञानस्याज्ञानं घटते ।

Its very nature is ignorance and surely there could be no additional ignorance in a locus which is itself of the nature of ignorance.

What is the first argument?

The Aachaaryaa says "the entire anaathmaa (i.e. 'matter') itself, is a product of moolaavidhyaa. Moolaavidhyaa is kaaranam; anaathmaa is kaaryam. And, we know the general rule that any product will have its essential nature as its cause only. Cause alone is the svaroopam of the effect – just as gold is the essential nature of all ornaments and wood is the essential nature of all furniture. Since, moolaavidhyaa is kaaranam and anaathmaa is kaaryam, moolaavidhyaa alone must be the essential nature of anaathmaa. Therefore, anaathmaa is essentially moolaavidhyaa only, just as the 'snake' (in the rajju sarpa example) is nothing but 'condensed ignorance' alone, since it is ignorance alone which is projecting the snake on the rope. Therefore, any projection has its nature as ignorance. That's why when the ignorance is negated, projection also goes away. All projections have ignorance as their essential nature. And, therefore" the Aachaaryaa argues "anaathmaa being ajnaana janyam, is ajnaana svaroopam / essentially ajnaanam. Since anaathmaa itself is, thus, essentially ajnaanam, how can it be said that anaathmaa is the locus of ajnaanam, which is equivalent to saying ajnaanam itself is the locus of ajnaanam?"

Obviously, ajnaanam cannot be 'located' in ajnaanam itself, just as 'clay' is not located in the 'pot' and 'gold' is not located in the 'ornament', whereas it is the other way about – 'pot' is nothing but essentially 'clay' only and in the same manner, there is no 'ornament' other than 'gold' (clay is the aasrayaa for pot and gold is the aasrayaa for ornaments.)

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa argues "anaathmaa being ajnaanam itself, how can ajnaanam be located in ajnaanam?".

- तस्य हि - Evidently, for the anaathmaa,
- स्वरूपं एव - the very nature is
- अज्ञानं - ajnaanam / moolaavidhyaa;

Why do we say so? Sureswaraachaaryaa does not give the logic here. He only says "ajnaanam is the svaroopam of anaathmaa". He does not explain why. The student has to supply the reason: "because anaathmaa is a product of ajnaanam and a product will always have its cause as its nature ".

The Aachaaryaa proceeds with the argument:

- स्वतः अज्ञानस्य अज्ञानं न हि घटते - and 'ajnaanam itself having Ajnaanam' is not possible .

"Ajnaanam cannot have ajnaanam" means "ajnaanam cannot be located in ajnaaam" / In this statement, one 'ajnaanam' refers to anaathmaa and the other 'ajnaanam' means moolaavidhyaa. In other words, anaathma roopa ajnaanam cannot be the locus of moolaavidhyaa roopa ajnaanam. They, being cause and effect, are essentially one and therefore, cannot have aasraya-aasrayee- sambhandha.

Na ghatathe – na sambhavathi / not possible; Svatha: - by itself.

This is the first argument. What is the second argument?

Further (sambhandha gadhyam) to Verse 1:

संभवदप्यजानस्वभावेऽजानं किं अतिशयं जनयेत्।

Even if this were possible, what new feature could this further ignorance add to the original ignorance?

The second argument is abhyupethya vaadha: - which means a 'hypothetical argument', temporarily accepting the poorva pakshin's contention, that, moolaavidhyaa is located in anaathmaa . 'Moolaavidhyaa cannot be located in anaathmaad is the fact. But, hypothetically, for the sake of argument, let us assume that moolaavidhyaa is located in anaathmaa . Sureswaraacharya says that even if it is accepted, that acceptance will not be of any consequence. Acceptance of 'ignorance for / of anaathmaad' is of no consequence ; no positive or negative benefit will result, which, means, that, by that discussion nobody will get any benefit.

Why is it so? Sureswaraacharya argues that the entire anaathmaa is jadam – it is insentient entity. Making a statement that an insentient entity has got ignorance (for instance, saying 'the clip on the table is ignorant of the presence of people around it') is not going to make any difference at all, based on the following reasoning.

Ignorance has got threefold functions and it cannot perform any one of them, by locating in insentient matter.

What are the three functions?

First function of ignorance is 'obstructing knowledge', which is called aavaranam / obstruction / covering / concealing / thwarting etc. (jnaana nivaarakathvam)

The second function of ignorance is 'creation / generation / production of doubts' – samsaya janakathvam.

The third function is viparyaya janakathvam – 'creating errors'.

What is the difference between 'doubt' and 'error'?

In 'doubt', there is no conclusion. 'Doubtful' means 'being non-conclusive'. In the well-known rajju-sarpaa example, the rope is seen by the individual in 'doubt', who asks, "Is it a snake or is it a garland or is it a crack on the floor? etc." Such vacillation is called 'doubt'.

Whereas, in 'error', there is no vacillation; the individual is definite (certain) – but, is erroneously definite (certain). The individual, when in 'error', swears that 'this (the rope) is snake and snake alone'. Such 'error' is also produced by ajnaanam.

But, ignorance cannot perform any of these three functions.(jnaana nivaarakathvam or samsaya janakathvam or viparyaya janakathvam) on insentient matter. For example, if you say 'this clip has got ignorance', ignorance cannot 'obstruct' knowledge, because the clip can never attain knowledge. Only if the clip is capable of attaining knowledge, there is the possibility of ignorance 'obstructing' the knowledge. In the same manner, the clip cannot have 'doubts' or 'errors' also. Therefore, 'ajnaanam being located in achethana vasthu' is of no consequence.

Thus, the argument is: Ajnaanam being located in an insentient locus is of no consequence, because, its presence or its absence will not make any difference.

Therefore Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- संभवत् अपि - Even if ajnaanam is located / possible (in anaathma),

'In anaathmaa' is to be supplied. And, there can, of course, be no doubt that anaathmaa is achethanam.

- किं अतिशयं जनयेत् - what difference will it make (to the anaathmaa) ?

Athisayam – difference / consequence / addition.

If ignorance is deemed to be located in anaathmaa, which anaathmaa is of the nature of moolaavidhyaa and which anaathmaa is also of jadasvaroopam, it is not even worth discussing and therefore, you cannot accept that ajnaanam is located in anaathmaa. This is the second argument.

113. Chapter III- Verses 1 (04-10-2008)

In this introduction to the 3rd chapter, Sureswaraacharya is discussing moolaa avidhyaa, otherwise known as 'primal ignorance', which is the same as maayaa or prakruthi.

Religions talk of 'Creations' and a 'Creator-God'. Sanaathana Dharmaa also does. And, in Sanaathana Dharmaa, when we talk about 'Creations from / by God', at that time, the Advaithin defines the Creator / Isvara, as 'Brahman + maayaad'. Brahman being chaithanyam, 'chiathanyam + maayaad' is the Creator, Isvara. And, at this stage, we talk about srushti as starting from someone else called Isvara.

But, later, in Advaita Vedhaanthaa, we should gradually change that mindset. Instead of looking at the Creation as a product from someone else, we have to shift the mindset gradually to see that ultimately Creation is not from someone else, but, it is from 'me' only.

'Creation-from-Isvara' concept should gradually change to 'creation-from-myself' concept. Then alone mahaavaakyam will be effective. The Upanishadic manthraas, such as, 'Mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathistitham' etc., must become absolute facts for the serious student of Vedhaanthaa; this is important, because, during the early stages of a religious life, when Creation is talked about, the tendency is to conceive of a Creator, sitting beyond the clouds, in Vaikunta or Kailasa and 'throwing down the fourteen lokaas ; and, understandably it is difficult to change the concept, all of a sudden. But, the concept must be gradually changed by effort. Instead of seeing the Creation as generated by someone outside, I should learn to look at the Creation as 'my' own product.

When in the initial stages of teaching, we say "world is born out of Isvara", the Creator, Isvara, is 'chaithanyam + maayaad', as already mentioned. And , now, in the advanced texts of Vedhaanthaa, we say "the world is born out of myself", which is 'chaithanyam + moolaa avidhyaad' ; instead of maayaa, we change the word to moolaa avidhyaa . We start with 'chaithanyam + mayaad' and later move to 'chaithanyam + moolaa avidhyaad', as the cause of this Creation.

And the only difference is: When we use the word maayaa associated with Isvara, we talk about only the vikshepa sakthi; aavarana sakthi is not talked about, because, in the context of Isvara, aavarana sakthi should not be brought in.

But, when we start saying that Creation is from ourselves or the Self, the word maayaa should be changed to moolaa avidhyaa, because, here, not only vikshepa sakthi, but, the aavarana sakthi is also operational. Therefore, we change the word to moolaa avidhyaa, to denote the inclusion of aavarana sakthi also.

But, for all practical purposes, maayaa = prakruthi = moolaa avidhyaa, which is the cause of the whole creation. And, maayaa and Creation are both mithyaa only – negatable by knowledge. Similarly, moolaa avidhyaa and Creation are also both negatable by knowledge. As far as the mithyaa status is concerned, there is no difference between maayaa and moolaa avidhyaa. Maayaa is also negatable by chaithanya jnaanam. Moolaa avidhyaa is also negatable by the jnaanam of chaithanyam.

When the seeker thus shifts from maayaa to moolaa avidhyaa, he learns to see that “‘I’, the Self, am the projector of the entire universe”. Just as sleep is responsible for the projection / creation of the svapna–thriputi, moolaa avidhyaa (the philosophical sleep) is responsible / cause for the projection of the jaagrath thriputi.

‘I’, myself, through moolaavidhyaa project this universe. (The term, ‘I’, means the chaithanyam.) With the help of moolaavidhyaa, ‘I’ project this universe, become an individual and as an individual, through sleep, I project the dream-thriputi and become a dream individual. Through moolaavidhyaa, I have become a waker / jaagrath individual and through dream or nidhraa, I become a dream individual. Thus, both jaagrath prapanchaa and svapna prapanchaa are ‘my’ own projections, ‘I’, being the chaithanya adhishtaanam.

This is the message that Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to present. He does not want to say that Isvara created the world. He wants to say “‘you’ have created the world”.

Once you talk about moolaavidhyaa, the primal ignorance, the questions “what is the object of ignorance?” and, “what is the locus of ignorance?” will arise. These topics of ‘object’ and ‘locus’ do not arise, in the context of the use of the word maayaa; i.e. there is no need or scope for discussing the ‘object’ of maayaa or the ‘locus’ of maayaa.

But, when ‘avidhyaa’ is talked about, naturally the questions “what is the object and what is the locus (of avidhyaa)?” will arise

To answer these, Sureswaraachaaryaa employs what is called the vikalpa method, (the term ‘vikalpa’ meaning ‘option’ or ‘alternative’); in this method, first you do the vikalpa (i.e. look at the various options) and then discuss the various possibilities one by one and also rule them out one by one; and, whatever is left behind, without getting ruled out, will be, paarishesha nyaayena, the ‘culprit’.

And, the Aachaaryaa had said "our search (for the 'object' and the 'locus' of avidhyaa) is within only two entities – aathmaa and anaathmaa".

Of these two possibilities, the Aachaarya is taking anaathmaa first, for enquiry. His first question is : "Is anaathmaa the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa?" and later, his second question will be : "Is anaathmaa the vishayaa of the moolaavidhyaa?" After dismissing both possibilities, he moves on to the questions: "Is aathmaa the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa?" and "Is aathmaa the vishayaa of moolaavidhyaa?"

Of these four questions, we are now discussing the first question: "Is anaathmaa the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa?"

And, Sureswaraachaaryaa answers "anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa" and gives four reasons in support of his averment.

Of these four reasons, two have already been discussed (in the earlier class).

Reasoning (1) was as follows :

Step (1): Anaathmaa is a product of moolaavidhyaa. Why does one say so?

Because, Anaathmaa is negatable by knowledge. But, again, how does one know this? Because of Sruthi, which says "for the wise person aathmaa alone is; anaathmaa does not exist 'factually', though 'experienced', for a wise person". This is Upanishadic statement ; from this statement, that, 'a wise person does not have anaathmaa' , it follows, that, 'wisdom' should have negated anaathmaa; and, if, thus, 'wisdom' negates anaathmaa, obviously, anaathmaa must be a product of ignorance (the opposite of wisdom) or avidhyaa.

Having recognized this fact, that, 'Anaathmaa is a product of moolaavidhyaa', the student should go to step (2) below. \

Step (2): If the entire anathmaa is, thus, a product of ignorance, then anaathmaa must be of the nature of ignorance. This is based on the law, 'a product born out of a cause will have the nature of the cause'. This law "any product should have the essential nature of the cause", is exemplified by 'clay pots', which have the nature of the clay, which is their cause. In the same manner, the entire anaathmaa being ajnaana kaaranam, must be ajnaana svaroopam. To express it logically, in Sanskrit: "Anaathmaa ajnaasvaroopam: ajnaana kaaryathvaath; yathaa mrudhkaarya bootha: ghata: mrudhroopa: bhavathi, thathaa ajnaanakaarya bootha: anaathmaa, ajnaanaroopam: bhavathi."

Step 3: And, therefore, since anaathmaa is essentially ajnaanam itself, anaathmaa cannot be the locus of ajnaanam. If it is claimed that anaathmaa is the locus of ajnaanam, it will amount to saying "ajnaanam is the locus of ajnaanam", which is called aathmaaasraya doshaa, in tharka sasthan language.

Thus, the first argument is "anathamana: ajnaana svaroopathvaath ajnaam eva ajnaasya aasraya: bhavithum na arhathi". (As indicated earlier, this was covered in the last class).

Reasoning (2): "sambhavadhapi ajnaanasvabhaave ajnaanam kimathisayam janayeth". What does this statement mean? (It means:) "Even if, for argument's sake, hypothetically, we say 'anaathmaa is the locus of ajnaanam', then, that conclusion will have no consequence".

Therefore, entertaining such a concept, viz., 'anaathmaa is the locus of ajnaanam' does not have any philosophical significance at all.

But, why is it, that, this concept, that, "anaathmaa is the locus of ajnaanam" (even if true) will not have any consequence / does not make any difference ?

(Explanation:) The job of ignorance is threefold:

- (1) obstructing knowledge (jnaana prathibhandha);
- (2) generating doubt (samsaya uthpaathi:) and
- (3) generating error (viparyaya uthpatthi:).

These are the three functions of ignorance; but, ignorance can do these three functions, only if it is located in a sentient being. In an insentient anaathmaa, there is no scope for knowledge itself; when there is not even scope for knowledge, why should or how could ignorance 'obstruct' knowledge?

(A simple example is given to make this clear:) If an individual is moving on the road, there is scope for somebody stopping the individual's movement ; but, if the individual is not moving at all, where is the scope of anybody 'stopping' his movement ?

In the same manner, in an insentient entity, in which, there is no scope for knowledge at all, ajnaanam cannot obstruct knowledge; and consequently, it cannot generate doubt or error also. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa asks "sambhavadhapi ajnaanasvabhaave ajnaanam kim athisayam janayeth"

- संभवदपि - Even if this happens i.e. even if ajnaanam is present in anaathmaa,

The term 'Sambhavath' qualifies 'ajnaanam'; i.e. it is 'viseshanam' to ajnaanam ; and 'api' means 'even if', indicating 'purely hypothetical'.

- अज्ञानं किं अतिशयं जनयेत् - what consequence would that (further) ajnaanam generate,
- अज्ञानस्वभावे - to the original ajnaanam (viz., anaathmaa).

Athisaya: - (in this context) means 'consequential effect'.

The second argument continues i.e., the above statement is further explained.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 :

न च तत्र ज्ञानप्राप्तिरस्ति येन तत्प्रतिषेधात्मकमज्ञानं स्यात् ।

The non-Self could never acquire knowledge and only if the possibility of knowledge is there, could there be ignorance of the nature of the privation of knowledge.

This is the explanation of 'kim athisayam janayeth'. The word 'kim' is not prasnaarthe but aaksehpaarthe - i.e., it is not a question, but, only a statement of objection. Though the literal meaning of 'kim athisayam janayeth', is "what consequence will ignorance generate in inert matter?", it is not a question. It is an averment "no consequence can it generate".

- तत्र - In that inert / insentient anaathmaa,
- ज्ञानप्राप्तिः न अस्ति - there is no scope for the acquisition of knowledge,
- येन - only because of which viz., 'scope for acquisition of knowledge',
- तत्प्रतिषेधात्मकम् अज्ञानं स्यात् - there can be meaning for the presence of ignorance.

Only if there is scope for 'acquisition of knowledge', there is scope also for 'ignorance stopping acquisition of knowledge'. Since there is no scope for 'acquisition of knowledge', in the matter of anaathma, there is no scope for 'ignorance stopping acquisition of knowledge' also.

'Syaath' means 'there would have been'. Thath prathishedhaathmakam ajnaanam syaath means 'there would have been the function of ignorance, in the form of obstructing the possible arrival of knowledge'.

When there is no possibility of 'knowledge' itself, there can be no scope for its 'obstruction'.

Thus, the second argument says "ajnaanam, even if present in 'matter', is not worth talking about, because its presence or absence in 'matter', does not make any difference at all". By having a debate as to whether a table (or any other inert entity) has ignorance or not and someone winning the debate, no benefit is to be gained.

The third argument follows.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1:

अनात्मनश्च अज्ञानप्रसूतत्वात् । न हि पूर्वसिद्धं सत् ततः लब्ध आत्मलाभस्य सेत्स्यत आश्रयस्य आश्रयी संभवति।

Further the non-Self is itself a product of ignorance. What exists already cannot be dependent on what is brought into being by itself.

This is the third argument. To establish what? The statement that "Ajnaanam cannot be located in anaathmaa." In this context, the term 'ajnaanam' does not mean 'rope ignorance' or any such other ignorance. It denotes 'moolaavidhyaa', which means 'primal ignorance'.

"Moolaavidhyaa cannot be located in anaathmaa" is the averment made by Sureswaraachaaryaa.

This third argument, in support of that averment, is the main and most important argument; the other three arguments (1,2 and 4) are supportive arguments. This third argument is easy to understand also.

The third argument runs on the following lines: "It has been shown that anaathmaa is a product of moolaavidhyaa; conversely, moolaavidhyaa (ajnaanam) is the cause of anaathmaa. Naturally, 'cause' must always precede the birth of 'effect'. Therefore, in this case also, the cause - 'moolaavidhyaa' must necessarily exist even before the birth of the effect - anaathmaa. When moolaavidhyaa is, thus, present as the cause, before the production of anaathmaa and anaathmaa is not even existent, how can that non-existent anaathmaa be the support (aasrayaa) of the already existent moolaavidhyaa?"

'Claiming Anaathmaa as the aasrayaa of moolaa vidhyaa' is similar to a person declaring immediately after his / her marriage "from to-day, I shall be regularly getting money from my son, for my livelihood". Would not such a statement be absurd, since, the 'son' is yet to be born and obviously the not-yet born son cannot be the supporter of the parent, who is already existent?

In the same manner, moolaavidhyaa, the parent of anaathmaa, but, which has not yet produced the anaathmaa, would require an aasrayaa, even before the production of anaathmaa, and how can the not-yet born anaathmaa take the role of aasrayaa of the already existent moolaavidhyaa?

Mind has not come into existence ; and, when mind itself is not there, obviously, there is no question of existence of chidhaabhaasaa . World is not there; mind is not there, chidhaabhaasa is not there . But, even before their emergence, moolaavidhyaa exists. What can be the aasraya, for that moolaavidhyaa? Certainly not the mind / nor the world/ nor even chidhaabhaasa – the constituents of anaathmaa. Then the aasrayaa must be something other than anaathmaa.

And, what is there, other than anaathmaa? Only aathmaa is there.

It should be remembered, that, even Isvara, as an 'object of worship' should be included in the world / the totality of creation. What is being discussed now, is that moolaavidhyaa existing even before the plurality of jeeva-jagath-Isvara arose. Even before the emergence of jeeva-jagath-Isvara plurality, moolaavidhyaa exists and is, in fact, the cause of the plurality. So, moolaavidhya cannot be located even in Isvara, because Isvara Himself is to arrive only when plurality arrives.

Therefore, moolaavidhyaa has to be located in something other than jeeva-jagath-Isvara; and, other than these three, there is only aathmaa, the chaithanyam. That aathmachaitanyam alone, after the generation of the mind, becomes jeeva; that aathmachaitanyam alone, after the generation of the world, becomes jagath. Jeeva-jagath-Isvara will arrive later; and, as their cause, moolaavidhyaa is already there. Therefore, it cannot be located in any anaathmaa.

If it is recognized that, Isvara is aathmaa / that, Isvara is nirguna chaithanyam, then, there is no problem. Under that condition, it can be claimed that 'moolaavidhyaa is located in Isvara'. But, as long as Isvara is something / somebody else, He also will become anaathmaa.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

[anaathmana: ajnaanena na abhisambhandha: - ajnaanam cannot have (aasraya-aasrayee) relationship with anaathmaa,]

- प्रसूतत्वात् च - also, because the very birth

- अनात्मनः - of the anaathmaa
- अज्ञान(स्य) - (is from) moolaavidhyaa.

Prasootham- born out of Anaathmaa is born out of moolaavidhyaa. Moolaavidhyaa existed even before the birth of anaathmaa, because it is moolaavidhyaa, which is actually the cause / Creator of anaathmaa itself. Therefore, even before the birth of anaathmaa, how can moolaavidhyaa be located in anaathmaa? And, therefore, it has to be located only in aathmaa.

'Anaathmana: cha ajnaana janyathvaath' is the samkshepa hethu: (reason given in brief).

This is being explained in the following sentence, which is a tough sentence, the construction of which is complex. The subject is itself subtle and complex. The Aachaaryaa uses a sentence which is also complex; mischievously, he has also left out the 'subject', in the sentence.

- (अज्ञानं) पूर्वसिद्धम् सत् - Ajnaanam / moolaavidhyaa, being existent even before the birth / arrival of anaathmaa, Ajnaanam / moolaavidhyaa is the 'subject' (left out by the Aachaaryaa), to be supplied.
- आश्रयी न सम्भवति - cannot become the 'supported', Moolaavidhyaa being existent even before the arrival of anaathmaa, cannot be the 'supported'. Of what?
- आश्रयसय) अनात्मनः (- of an anaathmaa aasrayaaa,
'Aasrayasya' is an adjective to 'anaathmana:', which word also has been left out by Sureswaraachaaryaa and has to be supplied.
- सेत्स्यतः - which anaathmaa is 'going' to be born later,

'Sethsyatha:' is derived from the root 'sidh' and means 'of the to-be born'. This is also an adjective to 'anaathmana:'.

Being existent even before the birth of anaathmaa, the moolaavidhyaa cannot be 'supported' by an anaathmaa to be born later.

- ततः लब्धः आत्मलाभस्य - and which (anaathmaa) itself is going to attain its existence from moolaavidhya.

The compound term 'Thatholabhdhaathmalabhasya' is another adjective to 'anaathmana'.

In this sentence, there are, thus, three adjectives to the term 'anaathmana', which term itself is not in the sentence and has to be supplied. The three adjectives are

- (1) 'thatholabhdhaathmalabhasya' - 'which borrows existence from avidhya'
- (2) 'sethsyatha' - 'which is going to come later' and
- (3) 'aasrayasya' - 'which is (wrongly presumed to be) the support of ajnaanam'.

In effect, the sentence means "that anaathmaa which is going to be born later and which is going to get its very existence from avidhya later - that 'future' anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa for the already 'present' moolaavidhya".

This is the third and most important argument: " Anaathmaa is not yet born. How can that anaathmaa be the aasrayaa of the ajnaanam?"

For the word 'ajnaanam', the adjective is 'poorva siddham'.

'Poorva siddham ajnaanam' means 'ajnaanam which is existing even before the birth (of anaathmaa)'. For that ajnaanam, how can the anaathmaa be the aasrayaa?

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1:

तदनपेक्षस्य च तस्य निस्स्वभावत्वात् ।

The non-Self has no nature of its own, independent of ignorance.

This is the fourth and final argument.

It was said earlier, that, " 'Anaathmaa', the 'matter', which includes the mind also (it should be remembered, that, mind is also matter) and 'moolaavidhya', the 'primal ignorance', cannot have 'supporter-supported relationship'. The statement only means that "anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa of ajnaanam", which axiom only is expressed in the technical language "anaathmaa and ajnaanam cannot have 'aasraya-aasrayee-sambhandha' - 'supporter-supported relationship' ".

But, why?

The explanation implicit in the sentence, viz., तदनपेक्षस्य च तस्य निस्स्वभावत्वात्, is. “To talk about any relationship, there should be two or more things. But, ajnaanam and anaathmaa cannot be counted as two separate things, because, ajnaanam alone is ‘appearing’ as anaathmaa. Anaathmaa is nothing but ajnaanam itself. Therefore, there is no anaathmaa, separate from ajnaanam, to be the supporter of ajnaanam”.

In fact, this fourth argument is almost the same as the first argument.

Based on a similar reasoning only, it can never be said that ‘pot’ is the supporter of ‘clay’ ; pot and clay can never have ‘supporter-supported’ relationship, because ‘pot’ does not have a status separate from clay . ‘Pot’ and ‘clay’ are two names for one and the same substance. When there is, thus, no second entity, where is the question of ‘supporter-supported’ relationship? A ‘relationship’ cannot exist when there is only one substance .

In the same manner as ‘pot’ and ‘clay’, ajnaanam and anaathmaa are two names, for one and the same substance, viz., ‘matter’. Ajnaanam is one name of ‘matter’, though the concept is mind boggling. ‘Ignorance’ is one name of ‘matter’ and anaathmaa is another name of ‘matter’. Both the words, ajnaanam and anaathmaa, refer to one and the same substance. Then, where is the question of ‘aasrayee-aasraya- sambhandha:’?

- तस्य - For the anaathmaa , (‘thasya’, here, means ‘anaathmana:’)

- तदनपेक्षस्य - when separated from ajnaanam,

The pronoun ‘Thadh’ refers to ‘ajnaanam’; thadh anapekshasya – ajnaanam anapekshasya. (The pronouns used by the Aachaaryaa have to be carefully understood).

- निस्स्वभावत्वात् - (soonyathvaath) there is no existence..

Anaathmaa, the ‘product’, if and when separated from ajnaanam, which is its cause and essential nature, does not exist at all. It is not an entity separate from ajnaanam. Only if it is countable as a separate and second entity, one can say, that, the two entities have got an aasraya-aasrayee-sambhandha: | Once ajnaanam is removed, anaathmaa is ‘zero’, just as when clay is removed, pot is ‘zero’. Thus, when essentially, there is only one substance, where is the question of ‘two entities being related’?

This leads us to the mind-boggling concept of Vedhaantha, that, “the entire matter is nothing but ‘condensed ignorance’”. The pancha bhoothaas, such as, aakaasaa, vaayu etc., all the galaxies, anything that you name / samastha dhrusya prapancha: - all the 'matter' is nothing, but 'condensed ignorance'; and, in the wake of knowledge, they are as good as 'non-existent'. Matter is 'experienced but non-existent'.

Then, if all these do not exist, what is there? Vedhaantha says "You, the Observer of the 'matter' alone exist"; and what is that 'you'? Not the body; nor the mind; body is also non-existent matter, mind is also non-existent matter.

Then, "who are 'you'? Or who am 'I'?" 'I' am the chaithanyam, which is not 'matter', which is the only non-material entity, and which was, which is and which ever will be.

Is this ignorance good or bad? The vikshepa sakthi of ignorance is, in fact, very good, because, because of that sakthi only, the 'drama' of the world goes on.

If one really analyses what is videha mukthi, one will find that, in videha mukthi, there is no creation, no jeeva, no mind; only Brahman will be there, which also cannot claim "'I' am Brahman"; there will be no variety / no entertainment. So, from one perspective, vikshepa sakthi is a 'blessing' and is not to be cursed.

Only aavarana sakthi is deadly, which aavarana sakthi has to be removed by a systematic Vedhaanthic study and a thorough understanding of Vedhaantha; and after removal of aavarana sakthi, vikshepa sakthi maathra sahitha ajnaanam is a blessing ; because, the seeker will look at the universe as a product of vikshepa sakthi maathra sahitha ignorance and therefore as mithyaa ; and also learn to let the mithyaa world continue, without 'negating' it.

The fifth capsule of Vedhaantha (as enunciated by Swamiji), viz., "For a person who remembers 'my' real nature, life is an entertainment. The moment 'my' real nature is forgotten, life becomes a struggle" is relevant in this context.

For such a person, who forgets 'my' true nature, body becomes real, mind becomes real, the family becomes real and 'liberation' gets postponed.

'Ignorance' is partially good and partially bad ; once aavarana sakthi is removed, that moolaavidhya (aavarana sakthi rahitha moolaavidhyaa) is called maayaa; the only difference is, that, we (the jeevaas) have to convert moolaavidhyaa into maayaa, by removing aavarana sakthi; whereas, in the case of Isvara, moolaavidhyaa is always maayaa.

The jeevaa is also chaithanyam plus moolaavidhyaa; Bhagavaan is also chaithanyam plus moolaavidhyaa. But, in the jeevaa's case, aavarana sakthi is part of the moolaavidhyaa and the jeevaa has to get it removed by saasthra vicharaa, while, in the case of Bhagavaan, aavarana sakthi is ever absent.

Lord Krishna says in the Baghavadh Githa (Verse 6 – Ch. IV) : “Ajopi san avyayaathmaa (api san) bhoothaanaam isvaraopi san prakruthim svaam adhishtaaya sambhavaami aathmaa maayayaa” – “ Even though I have neither birth nor death, and even though I am the Lord of all beings, I come into being through My own Maayaa, by resorting to My Prakruthi”.

He also makes a statement (verse 13 – Ch. IV): “karthaaram api maam viddhi akarthaaram” – “Though I am the Creator, know Me as a ‘non-doer’ ”, meaning, “I am seemingly a karthaa; but, in reality, not a karthaa”.

A true ‘jnaani’ also can make this claim.

When Rama cried because of the loss of Seetha, Rama knew that his crying was also a drama. When Rama, an avtar of Bhagavaan, could cry, we, the lesser mortals need not stop ‘crying’; but, like Rama, even in the most trying circumstances, we should undergo the ordeals with the additional wisdom “ all these (sufferings) are of a lower order, but ‘I’ am of a higher order”.]

Thus, four arguments to establish that, “anaathmaa is not the aasrayaa of moolaavidhya” were given by Sureswraachaaryaa. With this, the first topic is over.

The next topic will be the enquiry “Can anaathmaa be the ‘object’ of ignorance?” The Aaachaaryaa deals with this topic in one sentence; he says “because of the same four reasons given to establish that, ‘anaathma cannot be the aasrayaa of moolaavidhya’, anaathmaa cannot also be the ‘object’ of moolaavidhya”.

114. Chapter III- Verses 1 (11-10-2008)

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

एतेभ्यः एव हेतुभ्यः नानान्त्वविषयमज्ञानं संभवतीति ग्राह्यम् ।

These very same reasons go to show that the ignorance is not about the non-Self.

Sureswaraachaarya is discussing the nature of moolaavidhyaa, which alone is the cause of the entire Creation, including the individual minds also.

When the subject of 'ignorance' (moolaavidhyaa) is dealt with, the discussion has to necessarily include the topics –

- (i) the 'locus' of ignorance and
- (ii) the 'object' of ignorance.

Based on that, Sureswaraachaaryaa discusses four questions:

1. Is anaathmaa the locus of moolaavidhyaa?
2. Is anaathmaa the object of moolaavidhyaa?
3. Is aathmaa the locus of moolaavidhyaa? and finally,
4. Is aathmaa the object of moolaavidhyaa?

Of these four vikaplaas or divisions, discussion on the first question, viz., "Is anaathmaa the locus of moolaavidhyaa?" has been completed. And, Sureswaraachaaryaa has established that anaathmaa cannot be the locus of moolaavidhyaa. In support, he gave four reasons, which have also been discussed.

Out of these four reasons or arguments, the third argument is the most powerful and also relatively easier than the other arguments. It is proposed, therefore, to recollect the third argument, so that it can be used for the discussion on the next topic also.

What is that third argument? Sureswaraachaaryaa had presented it as follows: "anaathmaa itself is a product of moolaavidhyaa. And, since anaathmaa is the product (kaaryam) and moolaavidhyaa is the cause (kaaranam), moolaavidhyaa must have existed even before the production of anaathmaa. (By the word 'production', what is meant, is 'manifestation'). And, if moolaavidhyaa existed even before the manifestation of anaathmaa, then moolaavidhyaa must have had some other locus before the manifestation of anaathmaa. And, it cannot also be said 'moolaavidhyaa does not at all have a locus', because moolaavidhyaa is also one form of avidhyaa (ignorance) and any type of avidhyaa should have a locus. Therefore, before the production of anaathmaa, moolaavidhyaa should have had an aasrayam, which aasrayam should have been something other than anaathmaa. Since there are only two entities in the entire Creation (aathmaa and anaathmaa), and anaathmaa is not yet produced or manifested, moolaavidhyaa should have been located in the only other available entity, viz., aathmaa. Therefore, we say, "anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayam of moolaavidhyaa and the aasryam of moolaavidhyaa should be aathmaa only".

Now, the Aachaaryaa is entering the second topic.

- एतेभ्यः एव हेतुभ्यः - Because of the above mentioned four reasons only,
- न अनान्तमविषयम् अज्ञानं संभवति इति ग्राह्यम् - it is understood that anaathmaa cannot be the 'object' of ignorance.

With 'nisvaabhaavathvaath', the first topic, viz., 'anaathmaa is not the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa' is over and from 'ethebhya: eva hethubhya:', Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering the second topic.

What is the second topic? Ans: "anaathmaa cannot be the 'object' of ignorance also".

The compound word 'naanaathmavishayam' has to be split very carefully. It should not be split as 'naanaa aathma vishayam'; but, as 'na anaathma vishayam |

Further, the emphasis is on the word 'vishayam |

"anaathmaa vishaya: yasya moola ajnaasya" is 'na anaathma vishayam ajnaanam |

"na anaathma vishayam ajnaanam sambhavathi " means "There cannot be a moolaavidhyaa for which anaathmaa is an object" or in Tamil "அனாத்மாவை விஷயமாகக் கொண்ட மூல அவித்யை இருக்க முடியாது".

This is the second topic.

And, what are the supporting arguments for this statement? Sureswaraachaaryaa says "whatever reasons I gave for the first topic, can be extended for this also."

It is not necessary to detail, once again, all the four reasons; but, the third argument, which, is the most powerful argument in this case also, has to be studied, of course, slightly modified in the context of 'object', instead of 'locus'.

The argument (in this context of 'object') will run as follows: "anaathmaa is a product of moolaavidhyaa; therefore, even before the production of anaathmaa, moolaavidhyaa must be there. And, that means, there must be a time, when the anaathmaa was not there, there must have been only two things, viz., (1) moolaavidhyaa, which is anaadhi and also (2) aathmaa, which is also anaadhi. Moolaavidhyaa means 'ignorance'. During that time, before the creation of anaathmaa, the ignorance must be about something. That 'object' of ignorance cannot be anaathmaa, because anaathmaa is not yet born. Therefore, the ignorance should be about the only thing existent at that time, which existent thing is aathmaa only. Therefore, before the creation of anaathmaa, if ignorance existed, that ignorance must be of aathmaa alone. In a nutshell, aathmaa alone must be the 'object' of ignorance also, apart from being the 'locus' of ignorance".

The Aachaaryaa covers the second topic with the terse and brief statement "ethebhya: eva hethubhya: anaathmavishyam ajnaanam na sambhavathi ithi graahyam" - "These very same reasons go to show that the ignorance is not about the non-Self".

With this, the second topic is also over.

'Anaathmaa is not the 'locus' of ignorance' is topic 1; 'nor is it the 'object' of ignorance' is topic 2.

Sambhanda gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

एवं तावन्नानात्मनोऽजानित्वं नापि तद्विषयमजानम् ।

Therefore, the subject of ignorance is not the non-Self; nor is ignorance about the non-Self.

This is the consolidation of the first two topics, before entering the third topic. Sureswaraachaaryaa first says: "evam thaavath ajnaaithvam na anaathmana:", meaning "therefore, ignorance does not belong to anaathmaa", in other words, "anaathmaa cannot be an ajnaan", which, in effect, would mean "anaathmaa cannot be the assrayaa of ajnaanam".

This is similar to the statement "Raama is ajnaani / Raama is ignorant" meaning "Raama is the aasrayaa (locus) of ajnaanam (ignorance)", Locus of ignorance is 'the ignorant entity'. "Anathmaa cannot be ignorant entity" means "anaathmaa cannot be the 'locus' of ignorance".

The Aachaaryaa says:

- एवं तावत् - Thus, in this manner,
- अनात्मनः न अज्ञानित्वं - ignorance does not belong to anaathmaa / anaathmaa cannot be 'the ignorant' / anaathmaa cannot be the locus of ignorance;

This can be extended to say that 'mind can never be 'the ignorant''. Why? Because, mind is also anaathmaa and since anaathmaa cannot be 'the ignorant', mind being anaathmaa, mind can never be called 'ignorant', according to Vedhaanthaa. Still, it is mistakenly believed that "'ignorance' belongs to the mind".

A nice example is usually given by Vedhaanthic aachaaryaas for this wrong perception; when somebody says "pot is holding water", Vedhaanthaa questions the statement and points out "It is a wrong statement. It is only 'space' which can hold things; space alone can accommodate things; therefore, when you say 'pot is holding water', you only mean 'pot-enclosed space is holding water'. Similarly, when you say 'mind is ignorant', it is not the mind that is ignorant; it is the 'mind-enclosed Consciousness' alone, which is the locus of ignorance".

Though, thus, it is not the mind that is ignorant, but, the 'mind-enclosed Consciousness' which is ignorant, without thinking deeply, we say 'mind is ignorant'; i.e., it appears to us, that mind is the locus of ignorance and mind being anaathmaa, we tend to believe that 'anaathmaa is aasrayaa of ajnaanam'. This is an absolute misconception, as the above example of 'pot / space / water' would show.

"Mind is ignorant" means "mind-enclosed chaithanyam is the locus of ignorance". Mind cannot be ignorant. Why? Because it is jadam.

Anaathmana: na ajnaaithvam – ignorance does not belong to anaathmaa /anaathmaa cannot be ajnaani / anaathmaa cannot be the locus of ignorance.

Similarly, न अपि तद्विषयं अज्ञानं - and also ajnaanam cannot be about anaathmaa.

In this sentence, 'ajnaanam' is the subject; 'Thath' refers to anaathmaa, 'thadhvishayam' is the subjective compliment. Thadhvishayam – anaathma vishayam.

The sentence "Ajnaanam thadvishayam na (bhavathi)" means "ajnaanam cannot be 'object' of ignorance".

This statement "na anaathmana: ajnaanithvam naapi thadvishayam ajnaanam", can be expressed in Tamil as, "அனாத்மாவை ஆஸ்ரயமாகக் கொண்ட அஞ்ஞானமும் இருக்க முடியாது; விஷயமாகக் கொண்ட அஞ்ஞானமும் இருக்க முடியாது (அல்லது) அனாத்மா அஞ்ஞானத்திற்கு ஆஸ்ரயமாகவும் இருக்க முடியாது; விஷயமாகவும் இருக்க முடியாது".

Thus, anaathmaa is neither the 'locus' nor an 'object' of ignorance.

With this, the consolidation of the first two topics is over.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering the third and fourth topics.

What are the third and fourth topics?

Is aathmaa the aasryaa of ignorance? And, is aathmaa the vishayaa of ignorance?

What is to be the conclusion? Ans: "Yes, it is; aathmaa alone is the aasryaa and aathmaa alone is the vishayaa also of ajnaanam".

What is the argument (in support of these conclusions)?

The argument is very simple. Sureswaraachaaryaa says "if anaathmaa cannot be the aasryaa or vishayaa of ajnaanam, the only other entity left out, viz., 'aathmaa' alone has to be both aasryaa and vishayaa by paarishesha nyaaya: |"

'Paarishesha nyaaya.' means 'theory of elimination'; and, in this context, will be applied as follows: "If, out of the only two existing entities, aathmaa and anaathmaa, anaathmaa is excluded from being the aasryaa and vishayaa of ajnaanam, aathmaa alone (being the only other entity) has to be both".

This is going to be said in the following portion.

(Sambhandha gadhyam) further to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

पारिशेष्यादात्मन एवास्त्वजानं तस्याजोस्मित्यनुभवदर्शनात् ।

By the principle of elimination, (it can be concluded, that) ignorance takes place in the Self and in it, occurs experience in the form, 'I am ignorant'.

- पारिशेष्यात् - By the law of elimination,

'Paarisheshya nyaayaad' is a type of argument, translated as 'argument of elimination'.

Having excluded/ eliminated the anaathmaa,

- आत्मनः एव - only for the aathmaa,
- अज्ञानं अस्तु - ajnaanam is possible,

'Aathmana: eva ajnaanam asthu' means 'Aathmaa alone can be the locus of ignorance'.

The compound word 'astvajnaanam' has to be split and understood as 'ajnaanam asthu'.

And, this is proved by our own experience also. Whenever a person says "I am ignorant of the Self / I have got self-ignorance; therefore, I want to know the aathmaad", what is the meaning of the word 'I'? It can be only the "aathmaa, which is enclosed within the body-mind complex". That 'I' alone is being referred to, when it is said "I am ignorant". In this statement, the word 'I' cannot mean the mind, because, mind being jadam, it cannot be ignorant nor knowledgeable. The example given earlier, viz., "the statement 'pot is holding water' actually means 'the pot enclosed space is holding water'", should be recollected. When the statement "I am ignorant" is made, the word 'I' cannot and does not refer to the sthoola sareeram or sookshma sareeram or kaarana sareeraram, but only to the chaithanyam, which is enclosed in the sareerathrayam. That chaithanyam alone is the locus of ignorance.

During jaagrath avasthaa, ignorance is located in the Consciousness enclosed in three sareerams – sthoola, sookshma and kaarana sareerams; in svapna avasthaa, ignorance is located in Consciousness enclosed in two sareerams, viz., sookshma and kaarana sareerams ; in sushupthi avasthaa, ignorance is located in Consciousness enclosed by kaarana sareeram. This ignorance alone is called moolaavidhyaa also.

Not only in all the three avasthaas, ignorance is located in Consciousness (enclosed in either three sareerams or in two sareerams or in one sareeram) , during pralayam also, ignorance is located in Consciousness enclosed by kaarana sareeram; this is because, even during pralayam, while sthoola sareeram and sookshma sareeram are absent, kaarana sareeram is there. Kaarana sareeram is there in all the avasthaas and in pralayam also.

Therefore, it can be said, that, moolaavidhyaa is located in the Consciousness enclosed in the kaarana sareeram. In fact, kaarana sareeram itself is called moolaavidhyaa.

How does one prove this? That presence of moolaavidhyaa, located in 'Me', the Consciousness, which is enclosed in the sareeram, that alone is experienced by me, as "I am ignorant". That "I am ignorant" experience, reveals the moolaavidhyaa which is located in the Consciousness enclosed in sareerathrayam.

Ignorance continues in sushupthi also. What is the proof? After waking up from sleep, one says "sukham aham asvaapsam na kinchith avedisham" - "during the blissful sleep I had, I did not know anything". That means 'ignorance' continues in sushupthi also. That ignorance is moolaa avidhyaa only.

And, that's why, while defining sushupthi in the treatise Thathva Bodha, it was said "anaadhi avidhyaa roopam sathsvaroopa ajnaanam", in which definition, sathsvaroopa ajnaanam means moolaa avidhyaa alone. Thus, in fact, moolaa avidhyaa, has been already defined in Thathva Bodha. But, Thathva Bodha did not go into details, as it is a primary text of Vedhaanthaa, and, if it goes into details of moolaa avidhyaa at that stage, a beginner of Vedhaanthic study may get confused as to whether the subject of his study is Brahman or moolaa avidhyaa.

Even in sushupthi, moolaavidhyaa is experienced. There is only one difference. In jaagarth avathaa, in addition to moolaavidhyaa, there is awareness of other forms of ignorance, such as ignorance of material sciences like Physics, Chemistry etc., called sthoola avidhyaa or aparaa avidhya; while, in sushupthi avasthaa the other forms of ignorance are not relevant.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya adds:

- तस्य अनुभव दर्शनात् - (also) because of the clear experience of moolaa avidhyaa
- अत्र: (अहं) अस्मि इति - in the form, "I am ignorant" .

In this sentence, the word 'thasya' means 'moola ajnaasya'.

And, the word 'aham' refers to the 'sentient Conscious being'; the aathmaa alone is the meaning of the word 'I'. Therefore, whenever you say "I am ignorant", you are proving, that, "I, the chaitanyam, am the locus of 'ignorance'".

The experience of moolaa avidhyaa is evident for every human being. And how is it experienced? Ans: In the form "Aham ajna: asm", / "I am ignorant".

Expressed in the language of arithmetic,

'I am ignorant' = 'I am the locus of ignorance'.

'I' = 'aathmaa' .

Therefore, aathmaa is the 'locus' of ignorance.

The Aachaaryaa gives more arguments in support of this contention.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 –Chapter III:

"सोऽहं भगवो मन्त्रविदेवास्मि । नात्मवित् । "इति श्रुते :।

Sruthi has the passage "Blessed one, I know the hymns; but, I do not know the Self."
(Chaandoghya Upanishad VII.i.3)

This is proved by surthi pramaanam also. The previous sentence was on prathyaksha pramaanam as proof for the contention "moolaavidhya is in 'me', the aathmaa".

And, what type of prathyaksha ? Ans: Not 'Indriya prathyaksham'. It is what is called the 'saakshi prathyaksha pramanaam', asserting "I am the direct witness of the fact, that 'I' am ignorant of my real nature".

The Aachaaryaa now gives sruthi pramanaam, from the Chaandoghya Upanishad (Bhooma Vidhyaa - 7th Chapter), a statement of Sage Naarada.

What does Naarada say?

Naarada approaches and addresses Sanathkumara, who is supposed to be an avatara of Lord Subrahmanya. In the Chaandoghya Upanishad itself, there is a statement at the end, "tham skandha ithyaachakshathe", conveying the message, "Sanathkumara is skanda: / Lord Subrahmanya."

Naarada approaches Sanath Kumara and says "O Venerable Sir! I have learnt a number of sciences, including the Vedas". Then, he gives a long list of the sciences he had studied and mastered; and continues: "But, I do not know that one thing, which alone can make a difference in my life. I have aparaa vidhyaa, which is as good as avidhyaa. But, I do not have paraa vidhyaa".

- इति श्रुते: - Sruthi has the passage:

- भगवः - "O Venerable Sir!
- सोऽहं मन्त्रविदेवास्मि - I (such as I am) merely know the subjects textually;

Naarada uses the word `soham` instead of `aham`, since he is universally well known, being a thriloka sanchaari, which itself is a rare capability.

- न आत्मवित् – but, I am not the knower of aathmaa.”

In this statement, "aham na aathmavith" means "I am ignorant of aathmaa".

Again expressing this in arithmetical language:

"I am ignorant of aathmaa" = "I am the locus of self-ignorance."

"I" = the aathmaa.

Therefore, it follows, that, aathma is the locus of ignorance.

Thus, Chaandoghya Upanishad is quoted as a pramaanam, by Sureswaraachaaryaa.

(An aside: There are two popular commentaries for Naishkarmya Siddhi. One is `Chandrikā` by Jnaanothamaachaarya, a terse and beautiful commentary. The other is `Klesa apahaarinī`, the name literally meaning 'the reliever of pain', since `klesam` means pain and `apahaarinī` means 'reliever'. This is a lucid commentary by one Sachchidhaanendra Saraswathi Swamighal, written with the intention (as the name of the commentary implies) of making the study of Naishkarmya Siddhi, (which study is admittedly an intellectual strain) easier and less stressful.

One of these commentators adds an important note in this context: "That 'I' am the locus of 'self ignorance' is accepted not only by the Advaithin; all the other systems of philosophy also accept the 'self ignorance' located in one's Self. Saankhyaa, Nyaayaa, Poorva Mimaamsaa and even Visishtaadvaithaa – all these philosophies accept "I am ignorant of myself".

What is the proof for this statement?

The explanation is as follows:

All humans make the claim "I am a human being". The very claim "I am a human being" reveals self-ignorance.

Why? When you claim that you are a human being, it means that you are mistaking your body as yourself; but, 'that you are not the body, but, someone other than the body' is accepted by all the six darsanaas and by Visishtaa Advaita, another school of Vedhaantha darsanaa. All these philosophers agree that your present physical body will be 'dropped' later and your sookshma sareeram will have to 'travel' and acquire a fresh body. All six philosophies talk about the 'travel' of the sookshma sareeram – the punar janma of the jeevaathmaa, which itself makes it clear that all six philosophies accept that 'I' am different from 'my' body. There may be differences between the philosophies on whether the aathmaa is nithya:, sarvagatha:, eka: etc. But, uniformly, all these six darsanaas agree that 'I' am different from 'my' body and therefore, as a corollary should also agree, that the claim 'I am a human being' is a misconception. But, this misconception is common. If this misconception should come, there must be the ignorance of the fact, "I am someone different from the body"; that means I am ignorant of the Self; and, that means, 'I', the aathmaa, is the locus of ignorance.

Also, all the philosophies must be in agreement on this, as, otherwise they should not be teaching about aathmaa; the very fact that they are teaching about aathmaa, indicates that 'Self-ignorance' is accepted by other philosophers also.

"Therefore, 'aathmaa is the locus of ignorance' is accepted by all philosophies" is the conclusion of the commentator.)

Reverting to the text:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

न चात्मनोऽजानस्वरूपता तस्य चैतन्यमात्रस्वाभाव्यात् । अतिशयश्च संभवति । जानविपरिलोपो जानप्राप्तेश्च संभवति अस्य जानकारित्वात् ।

The Self is not of the nature of ignorance, for its essence is pure consciousness. Ignorance can make a difference to it. There is a possibility of attaining knowledge in the Self, for it is ultimately the source of knowledge.

While negating anaathmaa as locus of ignorance, Sureswaraachaaryaa gave four reasons, because of which reasons, he asserted, that, anaathmaa cannot be the locus of ignorance. He established that, if anaathmaa is considered as the locus of ignorance, four logical problems or fallacies will result. And, concluded that, because of the possibility of the four logical fallacies, anaathmaa cannot be the locus of ignorance.

Now, in this portion, the Aachaaryaa recounts all those four logical fallacies discussed earlier in the context of mistaking anaathmaa as the locus of ignorance; and says that those four logical fallacies will not result, if, on the other hand, aathmaa is understood to be the locus of ignorance.

To establish this contention viz., that the four problems which were mentioned in the context of anaathmaa being considered the locus of ignorance will not be there in the case of aathmaa being the locus of ignorance, the Aachaaryaa is bringing in the four problems one by one and points out that each particular problem is not there, if aathmaa is understood to be the locus of ignorance.

What was the first problem i.e., his first argument?

The Aachaaryaa had said that anaathmaa itself is of the nature of ignorance and therefore anaathmaa cannot be the locus of ignorance. Now, he points out that, this problem is not there, in the context of aathmaa, because aathmaa is not of the nature of ignorance.

- आत्मनः अज्ञानस्वरूपता न अस्ति - Aathmaa is not of the nature of ignorance,
- तस्य चैतन्यमात्रं स्वाभाव्यात् - because, its very essence is pure consciousness.

Thasya – aathmana:; svaabhaavyam – svaroopam.

Unlike anaathmaa, which is of the nature of ignorance, aathmaa is not of the nature of ignorance. On the other hand, Aathmaa is of the very nature of jnaanam – jnaanasvaroopam – as declared by Thaithriya Upanishad (Brahma Valli) - "sathyam jnaanam anantham brahma".

If Aathmaa had been ajnaanasvaroopam, similar to anaathmaa, it could also not have been the locus of moolaa avidhyaa; but, the fact that it is itself jnaanasvaroopam, the first logical fallacy referred to in the context of anaathmaa, will not result.

The Aachaaryaa moves on to the second fallacy discussed earlier. What was the second logical fallacy discussed?

Ans: Since anaathmaa is jadam, even if ignorance is located in anaathmaa, a jadavasthu, ignorance cannot do any of its functions in a jadavasthu.

What are the functions of ignorance? Ignorance can obstruct knowledge; ignorance can create doubt; ignorance can create error. In other words, (i) obstruction of knowledge (ii) creation of doubt and (iii) creation of error are the functions of ignorance.

If ignorance is located in the jada anaathmaa, obviously, it cannot do any of the above functions. Therefore, there is no meaning in ignorance being located in jada anaathmaa.

This was Sureswaraachaaryaa's second argument.

Now, Sureswaraachaarya points out, that, ignorance, in contrast, can be located in aathmaa, a sentient entity, because ignorance can do the three-fold functions being located in 'Me', the sentient aathmaa.

Expressing the same in other words, ignorance is possible in aathmaa, the sentient entity, since being located in a sentient entity, 'ignorance' can do all the three functions, which, in fact, it does.

'Obstruction of the knowledge' is 'obstruction of the fact that "'I' am aathmaa"; 'doubt' is created, in the form of the question, "Who am 'I'?" The very fact that such an enquiry is made, indicates that there is 'doubt'. Otherwise, why an enquiry at all? Also 'errors' galore have been created – such as 'I' am kartha / 'I' am boktha / 'I' am pramaathaa etc., none of which, in reality, 'I' am.

Thus, ignorance can be located in aathmaa and it can do all the three functions. Therefore, the second problem is also averted.

- अतिशयश्च संभवति - Ignorance can make a difference to aathmaa / Ignorance can bring about consequences by doing its functions.

Athisaya: can be translated as கை வரிசை in Tamil; and the statement 'Athisayas cha sambhavathi' indicates 'bringing about the three-fold consequences'.

அஞ்ஞானம் தன்னுடைய கை வரிசையை நன்றாகக் காட்டுகிறது, by being located in aathmaa.

Ignorance located in the aathmaa can show its கை வரிசை ('power'), by its three-fold functions.

What are the three-fold functions? Sureswaraachaaryaa gives only one, as a sample.

- ज्ञानविपरिलोपः (संभवति (- Obstruction of self-knowledge takes place in aathmaa;

If ajnaanam had not been there, as even as we are born, like Vamadeva, all of us will be declaring "aham nithya suddha, muktha, buddha aathmaa asmī" | Since this does not happen, it is obvious that, there is obstruction of jnaanam.

Viparilopa: means prathibhandha: |

'Obstruction of jnaanam' is the first consequence of ignorance.

The sentence can be read in two ways: one, as a single sentence, as, "athisaya: jnaana viparilopa: cha (sambhavathy)" - meaning "consequence and obstruction of knowledge are possible"; or also as two sentences, as, "athisaya: (sambhavathy)" and "jnaana viparilopa: cha (sambhavathy)" - meaning "Consequence is possible ; obstruction of self-knowledge is also possible".

Not only that; because of the obstruction of self-knowledge alone, later, by removing the obstruction, the 'acquisition' of knowledge is also possible. The 'obstruction' of self-knowledge is possible because of self-ignorance being located in 'me', and because of this reason only, by removal of 'obstruction', later, the 'acquisition' of self-knowledge is also possible for 'me', the aathmaa (alone).

If ignorance were located in a jada vasthu, acquisition of knowledge would not be possible; it will be possible only in the chethana aathmaa.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says

- ज्ञानप्राप्तेश्च संभवः - and (future) 'acquisition' of knowledge is also possible, in aathmaa,

If anaathmaa were 'ignorant', anaathmaa can never claim 'aham brahma asmī'. Assuming that anaathmaa becomes 'wiser' (this is not possible, because anaathmaa is jadam – but, if, for argument's sake, it is assumed so) , what will be its 'wisdom'? It can still never claim "aham brahma asmī"; it can only claim "aham miserable anaathmaa asmī" | "Aham Brahma asmī" wisdom can be gained only by aathmaa.

A note should be added here. Exactly like the statement "pot is holding the water" meaning "pot-enclosed space is holding water", in the same manner, when it is said "the mind gets wisdom by the study of Vedhaanthaa", Vedhaanthaa points out "it is not the mind that has acquired wisdom; it is the mind-enclosed Consciousness alone which has acquired the wisdom 'aham brahma asmī". In short, 'ignorance' is also located in the mind-enclosed Consciousness and 'wisdom' also is located in mind-enclosed Consciousness only.

And, therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- तस्य ज्ञानकारित्वात् - because of its capacity to produce / receive knowledge.

'Thasya' means 'aathmanasya'.

Aathmaa alone is the receiver of the knowledge, even though it appears that the mind is the receiver of the knowledge. Mind cannot receive knowledge, because it is jadam – jadathvaath. Whenever it is said 'mind receives knowledge', it means 'mind-enclosed 'I' (aathmaa) am receiving the knowledge'. Therefore, aathmaa is called jnaanakaari – receiver or producer of jnaana.

And, therefore, aathmaa can be the aasrayaa of ajnaanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1- Chapter III:

न चाज्ञानकार्यत्वं कूटस्थात्मस्वाभाव्यात् । अज्ञानानपेक्षस्य चात्मनः स्वत एव स्वरूपसिद्धेर्युक्तमात्मन एवाजत्वम् ।

The Self, being of the nature of unchanging awareness, is no product of ignorance. Independent of ignorance, the Self has an intrinsic nature of its own. For all these reasons, it is tenable to hold that the Self is the locus of ignorance.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa moves on to the next argument.

He says that the third logical fallacy, which was pointed out in the case of anaathmaa being aasraya, will also not be there, in the case of aathmaa being the aasrayaa of ignorance.

What was the third argument? Ans: Anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa, because anaathmaa itself was produced later.

Now, the Aachaaryaa points out that this problem is not there for aathmaa, because, aathmaa is eternal and the eternal aathmaa can be the aasraya for the beginningless moolaa avidhyaa.

Care should be taken to say 'beginningless' moolaa avidhyaa and not eternal moolaa avidhyaa; because if the word 'eternal' is used as an adjective of moolaa avidhyaa, moksha can never be achieved.

Anaadhi aathmaa can be the locus of the anaadhi moolaavidhyaa, whereas, anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa, because anaathmaa is to be born later.

Avidhyaa is also anaadhi; aathmaa is also anaadhi; both being anaadhi, anaadhi avidhyaa is located in anaadhi aathmaa from anaadhi time. There is no problem with this.

115. Chapter III- Verses 1 (01-11-2008)

In his important introduction to the 3rd chapter, Sureswaraacharya discusses four topics associated with moolaavidhyaa, which moolaavidhyaa is the cause of the entire creation.

(It should be carefully noted, that, the word moolaavidhyaa is to be split as 'moola + avidhyaad' and not as moolaa + vidhyaa.)

And, of these four topics regarding moolaavidhyaa, two topics have been already covered, in which the Aacharya had said that anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa (as the first topic) and that anaathmaa cannot be the vishayaa or object of moolaavidhyaa also (as the second topic); "anaathmaa is not the locus of moolaavidhyaa, nor is anaathmaa the object of moolaavidhyaa" was elaborately established by the Aacharya.

Now, Sureswaraacharya has come to the third topic, from the sentence beginning with 'Paarisheshyaath' (Paarisheshyaath aathmana: eva asthu ajnaanam thasya "ajnyosmi" ithi anubhavadharsanaath | "Soham bhagava: manthraavidhevassmi | naathmavith" ithi sruthe: |), the third topic being "aathmaa alone is the aasrayaa or locus of moolaavidhyaa".

When it is said that aathmaa is the locus, it should be understood that, it is the chith or chaithanyam, which is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa. The word 'aathmaad' should not be understood to mean chidhaabhaasa: | Chidhaabhaasaa can never be said to be the locus; chith alone is to be understood to be the locus of moolaavidhyaa. Why is it so? Ans: Because, chidhaabhassa is only a 'reflection' of chith, the Consciousness, and a mere 'reflection' cannot support anything.

'Reflection' itself requires the support of a 'reflecting medium'. In other words, any reflection is only a supported entity and not a supportive entity. Therefore, 'Reflected Consciousness' cannot be the support of anything.

Chidhaabhaasa can never be the support or aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa; only chith is the support or aasrayaa of everything; chith is the support of moolaavidhyaa also; chith is the support of the products of moolaavidhyaa, the entire anaathma prapanchaa also. Both moolaavidhyaa and anaathma prapanchaa are located in – are supported by - chith, the aathmaa.

Moolaavidhyaa is also mithyaa; the moolaavidhyaa product, anaathma prapanchaa also is mithyaa. The entire mithyaa moolaavidhyaa and the entire mithyaa anaathma prapanchaa - both of them - are located in the sathyam chith, the aathmaa.

This may give rise to a question. Sureswaraacharya does not discuss the question in this portion, presumably because he assumes that, the student will know the answer.

The question is "how can chith be the support of everything, when chith is defined to be devoid of all divisions? Chith is a sajaatheeya – vijaatheeya – svagatha – bedha - rahitha vasthu, because of which reason nothing can be there in the chith vasthu. Then, how can it be said that moolaavidhyaa and anaathmaa are in the chith?"

Suppose such a question is raised, how is it answered?

The explanation will be in the following lines: In Vedhaantha, one should be very, very careful and alert in making any statement. "Karanam thaapiyaal maranam" is a Malayalam saying, an apt quotation, in this context. If the statement "nothing is there in the chith" is made, it is granted, that the statement is not correct. The sentence has to be modified and stated as "nothing is really there in the chith". The adverb 'really' is very important ; "nothing is there in the chith" should be corrected as "nothing is really there in the chith ; however, everything is apparently / seemingly / vyaavahaarically / empirically is there in the chith and in the chith only".

Making the statement "nothing is there; everything is there", without the adverbs 'really' and 'apparently', is, of course, a contradiction in terms; but, obviously, there is no contradiction in the statement "nothing is there really; but, everything is there apparently". The famous sloka in the 9th Chapter of the Bhagavadh Githa, "mathsthaani sarva boothaani; na cha mathsthaani boothaani" – actually meaning "Everything is apparently in Me alone; but, nothing is really there in Me" is relevant in this context.

'Everything' means 'moolaavidhyaa and its product anaathma prapancha'.

"Therefore, i.e. by the logic of 'elimination' / paarishesha nyaayaath" Sureswaraacharya concludes "moolaavidhyaa is located in aathmaa only (in the Original Consciousness – chith and not in the Reflected Consciousness – Chidhaabhaasaa)."

In support of this (that, moolaavidhyaa is located in aathmaa alone), Sureswaraacharya gave two arguments – one is saakshi prathyaksha anubhava pramaanam and another is sruthi pramaanam.

What is the saakshi prathyaksha anubhava pramaanam? Sureswaraacharya said "aham ajnya: asmi ithi anubhav darsanaath". All of us have the anubhava / common experience: "I am ignorant". This 'ignorance anubhava' is there, even when the mind is active and even after the resolution of the mind, viz., in sushupthi avastha, when, in fact, one has the experience of total ignorance.

This "I am ignorant" is proof that ignorance is located in the sentient 'me' – the sentient aathmaa. Obviously, anaathmaa cannot ever say "I am ignorant"; only aathmaa, the sentient entity, is the 'holder' of the ignorance. Whenever one says "I am ignorant", it is 'I', the Consciousness, which is the holder of ignorance.

But, at the same time, it should be remembered, that, to say "I am ignorant", one requires the mind. It is the mind that facilitates the expression. Mind facilitates the expression, but, the mind is not the locus of ignorance.

To assimilate this, one should remember the example cited earlier, viz. : If a statement "pot is holding water" is made, in reality, it is not the pot which is the 'holder' of water; pot is only a 'facilitator', in enclosing the space, which space alone is the holder of water.

In other words, if an analysis is made of the two statements, "pot holds water" and "pot enclosed space is holding water", superficially the pot is the holder, while, really the 'pot enclosed space' is the holder.

In the same manner, from a superficial perspective, mind is the holder of ignorance; but, from a real or true perspective, it is the mind-enclosed chith (not mind reflected chidhaabhaasaa), which is called upahitha chaithanyam, avachchinna chaithanyam and saakshi chaithanyam - the Original Consciousness - which alone is the holder of moolaavidhyaa. This fact alone is conveyed by the statement "I am ignorant".

The Aaachaaryaa proceeds to point out, that, not only do we thus have saakshi prathyaksha anubhava for this fact, that, moolaavidhyaa is located in the sentient 'I', but, the fact is also supported by the Chaandhoghya Upanishad Vaakyam, given out by Naarada, in Bhooma Vidhyaa, "soham bhagava: manthravith eva asmi na aathmavith" – "I am not the knower of aathmaa".

When Naarada makes this statement, it indicates aathma avidhyaa is in Naarada, who is a sentient entity. Not Naarada, the anaathmaa, but Naarada, the aathmaa, is the locus of aathma avidhyaa.

Thus, by two pramaanams, Sureswaraachaaryaa established that moolaavidhyaa is located in aathmaa. And, thereafter, he is defending this statement, by a series of statements beginning with 'na cha aathmana:' (introduced in the previous session).

The portion reads: "na cha aathmanojnaanasvaroopathaa thasya chaithanyamaathrasvaabhaavyaath | athisayas cha sambhavathi | jnaanaviparilopa: jnaanapraptescha sambhava: | thasya jnaanakaarithvaath | na cha ajnaanakaaryathvam kootastha aathmasvaabhaavyaath ajnaana anapekshasya cha aathmana: svatha eva svaroopasiddhe: yuktham aathmana eva ajnathvam |"

This is the portion defending the view that "aathmaa can be the locus of moolaavidhyaa". What exactly is the Aachaaryaa doing here? Previously, from "thasya hi svaroopam eva ajnaanam" (in the 7th line of the introduction) up to "thadanapakeshasya cha thasya nissvabhaavathvaath", (in the 11th line), Sureswaraachaaryaa had mentioned that there are several logical problems, if anaathmaa is taken as the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa. He had given a series of logical problems / fallacies resulting from taking / assuming anaathmaa as the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa. Now, in this portion, what the Aachaaryaa does, is to point out, that, those logical problems are not there, if aathmaa is taken / understood as the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa.

Those illogical problems mentioned there (i.e. if anaathmaa is assumed as the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa) will not arise, if aathmaa is taken as moolaavidhyaa aasrayaa.

The Aachaaryaa could have shortened the text, by merely saying "those logical problems, mentioned in the earlier context, are not there now" and closed the topic; instead, he chooses to enumerate each one of the logical problems mentioned earlier; and in the same order, goes through each logical problem and says that, that problem is not there, when aathmaa is taken as the aasrayaa.

The first argument: "na cha aathmana: ajnaanasvaroopathaa thasya chaithanya maathra svaabhaavyaath" / By this statement, Sureswaraachaaryaa is referring to the first logical problem he had talked of, if anaathmaa were to be the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa. He had said that, anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa, because it is jadam. "In contrast" the Aachaaryaa points out now: "aathmaa can be the aasrayaa, because it is the chethana thathvam".

Then follows the second argument: "athisayascha sambhavathi | jnaanaviparilopa: jnanaprapthescha sambhava: thasya jnaanakaarithvaath" / Earlier, Sureswaraachaaryaa had said, that, when ajnaanam is located in anaathmaa, the ajnaanam cannot bring about any consequence in anaathmaa, since anaathmaa is jadam and ignorance can be of no consequence when located in a jada vasthu; now, he points out, that, ignorance can be of some consequence, when it is located in the chethana vasthu – aathmaa; he says "athisayascha sambhava:" – "there can be consequences".

And, what are the consequences? "jnaanaviparilopa:" – which means " 'Covering' of the knowledge", which 'covering' or 'concealing', moola avidhyaa can do, when located in the sentient aathmaa. This is one consequence.

Then the next sentence is "jnaanapraapthe:scha sambhava: thasya jnaanakaarithvaath". When ignorance is located in anaathmaa, anaathmaa cannot also negate that ignorance, by gaining knowledge. Why? Again, because anaathmaa is jadam - insentient. Whereas, when ignorance is located in aathmaa, a sentient entity, then, it can gain knowledge and can negate ignorance. Discussion of ignorance is possible, only when it is negatable by knowledge. In other words, only where knowledge is possible, there alone we can discuss the problem of ignorance. In anaathmaa locus, the discussion of ignorance also is useless; the discussion of knowledge also is useless. In aathmaa alone, both are possible, aathmaa being a sentient entity. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says jnaanapraapthi: also is possible only in a sentient entity i.e. aathmaa. This is the second consequence.

And, of course, in this context, an important fact should be noted: When it is said that aathmaa alone can gain knowledge, of course, it can do so, only with the support of the 'mind' instrument. Just as 'space' can hold water only with the help of the enclosure 'pot', similarly, aathmaa alone holds the knowledge with the support of the enclosure called the 'mind'.

"Aathmaa' alone can have the possibilities of 'covering' of knowledge and of 'gaining' knowledge" is, thus, the second discussion / the second statement negating the second logical problem.

The third argument follows. The Aachaaryaa says "na cha ajnaana kaaryathvam kootastha aathma svaabhaavyaath|"

This is the most important argument. Even if the other three arguments are not remembered, the student cannot afford to forget this important argument.

Earlier, Sureswaraachaaryaa had pointed out that, moolaavidhyaa cannot be located in anaathmaa, because anaathmaa itself is to be produced only later, by moolaavidhyaa and obviously, a 'later-arriving' anaathmaa cannot be the supporter of a 'formerly existing' moolaavidhyaa.

"On the other hand, the 'formerly existing' moolaavidhyaa can be supported by aathmaa, since aathmaa is existing all the time. 'Formerly existing anaadhi moolaavidhyaa can be supported by 'anaadhi aathmaa alone. Anaadhi moolaavidhyaa cannot be supported by saadhi aathmaa' is this very eloquent argument of the Aachaaryaa.

- न च अज्ञान कार्यत्वं - Aathmaa is not a product of moolaavidhyaa,
- कूटस्थ आत्म स्वाभाव्यात् - because of the ever existing nature of aathmaa.

Here, kootastha aathmaa refers to nithya aathma.

Aathmaa is anaadhi; anaadhi chith can support anaadhi moolaavidhyaa, whereas, saadhi anaathmaa cannot support anaadhi moolavidhya.

Then comes the final discussion / argument: "Ajnaana anapekshasya cha aathmana: svatha: eva svaroopo siddhe: yuktham aathmana eva ajnathvam|"

This is also a very beautiful and important argument.

The argument is this: Moolaavidhyaa and anaathmaa cannot have 'supporter-supported' relationship. What is the reason? Anaathmaa being a product of moolaavidhyaa, anaathmaa is essentially moolaavidhyaa only – just as a 'pot' being a product of 'clay', the pot is essentially nothing but clay only, in another name and form.

Moolaavidhyaa is the kaaranam; anaathmaa is the kaaryam; the kaaranam and kaaryam are essentially one and the same substance only. When both of them are one and the same substance, how can there be 'supporter-supported' relationship between them? In the example of 'clay' and 'pot', it can never be said, that, 'clay' is the supporter of 'pot'; because, clay and pot are not two entities, to have 'supporter-supported' relationship. In the same manner, moolaavidhyaa and anaathmaa are not two separate substances, to have 'supporter-supported' relationship.

Something different from moolaavidhyaa alone should be the supporter of moolaavidhyaa and that 'something different' can only be aathmaa.

Aathmaa alone is the support of both moolaavidhyaa and anaathmaa.

- अज्ञान अनपेक्षस्य च आत्मनः - Since, aathmaa is not dependent on ajnaanam / is not a product of ajnaanam,

Ajnaana anapeksham – not dependent on ajnaanam (adjective to aathmaa)

- स्वतः एव स्वरूपसिद्धेः - but, has a separate existence of its own,

That aathmaa exists separately to serve as the locus of moolaavidhya. Therefore,

- युक्तं - it is logically plausible and possible,
- आत्मनः एव अज्ञत्वम् - that, ignorance belongs to aathmaa alone / aathmaa alone is ignorant / aathmaa alone is the locus of ignorance.

Therefore, 'I', the aathmaa alone am seemingly a samsaari, because of 'ignorance' located in 'me', the aathmaa; and 'I', the aathmaa alone am ever free, because of the 'knowledge', which is also located in 'me', the aathmaa.

The ignorance is also vyaavahaarika sathyam; the later-arriving knowledge also is vyaavahaarika sathyam. Thus, 'I', the paaramaarthika sathya aathmaa, because of the vyaavahaarika sathya ignorance, appear as though bonded and 'I', the paaramaarthika sathya aathmaa, because of the vyaavahaarika sathya knowledge, become liberated - that also is vyavahaaricam. This is the essence of Vedhaanthic teaching.

In his Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad Bhashyam, while commenting on the well-known manthra "Brahma vaa idham agra asseeth thadhaathmaanam eva aveth aham brahmaasmi ithi; thasmaath thath sarvam abhavath" (I.iv.10), Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa, has done all these discussions. The entire discussion of Sureswaraachaarya, in this portion, is borrowed from this Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad Bhashyam on I.iv.10.

Aathmaa alone is ignorant. Aathmaa alone 'becomes' wise also. But, it should be noted, that, 'ignorance' is also vyavahaarikam and 'wisdom' is also vyavahaarikam - Bandhaa is also vyaavahaarikam; mokshaa is also vyaavahaarikam. "Na mukthir na bandha: chidhaandaroopa: sivoham sivoham" from the popular verse of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa (verse 6 – Nirvaana Shadkam) should be ever remembered.

Sambhandha Gadhyaam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

किंविषयं पुनस्तदात्मनोऽजानम् । आत्मविषयमिति ब्रूमः। नन्वात्मनोऽपि जानस्वरूपत्वादनन्यत्वाच्च जानप्रकृतित्वादिभ्यश्च हेतुभ्यो नैवाजानं घटते।

What object does that ignorance located in the Self concern? We answer that it concerns the Self itself. 'But', it may be argued 'the Self is in the nature of knowledge, it is undivided and one and is the source of knowledge. For these reasons, it is impossible that it can support ignorance'.

In this portion, a small re-arrangement of the study is necessitated.

The two sentences (i) kimvishayam puna: thadhaathmanoajnaanam and (ii) aathmavishyamithi bhrooma:, relate to the 4th topic., viz. "the object of ignorance also belongs to aathma only"; whereas, the next sentence following these two sentences in the text, viz., "Nanu aathmanopi jnaanasvaroopathvaath anyathvaathcha jnaanaprakruthithvaadhibhya:scha hethubhyo naiva ajnaanam ghatathe" is an additional point in the third topic. For whatever reason, the two topics are slightly mixed up in the portion. Therefore, for the sake of continuity and clarity, the sentence "Nanu aathmanopi jnaanasvaroopathvaath anyathvaathcha jnaanaprakruthithvaadhibhya:scha hethubhyo naiva ajnaanam ghatathe" is taken up for study first, skipping the earlier two sentences, for the present.

With regard to the third topic, some more objections are possible. Sureswaraachaarya is raising those additional objections that could possibly raised by a poorva pakshin, in this sentence "Nanu aathmanopi jnaanasvaroopathvaath anyathvaathcha jnaanaprakruthithvaadhibhya:scha hethubhyo naiva ajnaanam ghatathe" and gives his answer to the objections in the subsequent sentences.

The first objection to the third statement, viz., "aathmaa is the locus of moolaavidhya", runs on the following lines: "Aathmaa is chaithanya svaroopam/ svayamprakaasa svaroopam. Moolaavidhya is thamas svaroopam/ aprakaasa svaroopam / andhakaara svaroopam. Aathmaa / chaithanyam is of the nature of brightness; on the other hand, moolaavidhya is of the nature of darkness. One is of the nature of 'light' and the other is of the nature of 'darkness'. Therefore, the question is: how can 'light' become the locus of 'darkness'?"

In fact, wherever light comes, darkness cannot even exist, because they are of diametrically opposite natures ; how can 'light' which is the 'destroyer' of 'darkness', become the 'supporter' of 'darkness'?

"Aathma must be the destroyer of ignorance, because, it is of the nature of light and ignorance is of the nature of darkness. But, you are saying that aathmaa is the supporter of ignorance. How can a destroyer ever become a supporter?" is one of the main objections raised by Visishtaadvaitam also, which gives seven arguments against the Advaitin's contention, that ignorance is located in aathmaa.

The seven arguments are given by Sri Ramanujaacharyaa in his introduction to Brahma Sootra Bhashyam known as Sree Bhashyam. This group of objections is famously known as "saptha vidha anubhapatthaya:" – "seven logical fallacies".

One of these seven fallacies, which Sri Ramanujacharya mentions, is: "How can ignorance ever exist in aathmaa, aathmaa being light and ignorance being darkness. When they cannot even exist together, how can one be the 'supporter' of another?"

This poorva pakshaa objection is referred to, by Sureswaraacharya here:

- ननु - I have an objection (the poorva pakshin says).
- ज्ञानस्वरूपत्वात् - Since (aathmaa) is of the nature of jnaanam,

"Aathmaa is of the nature of jnaanam. Jnaanam means 'light'. And, you say, that, that luminous aathmaa is the locus of 'dark' ignorance. How is that possible?" is one argument of the poorva pakshin.

- अनन्यत्वात् च - advaitathvaath cha / also, since aathmaa is without a second,

This is the poorva pakshin's next argument: "You say aathmaa is advaitam – non-dual. Your philosophy itself is called advaitam and it claims that there is nothing other than aathmaa. Then how do you say, that, on the aathmaa there is ignorance and that, the ignorance is projecting the universe? It would mean that you admit that, there are two entities, one being aathmaa and the other being ignorance. How do you, then, claim to be an advaitin? Aathmaa being without a second, how can there be ignorance in aathmaa?"

The poorva pakshin's third argument:

- ज्ञानप्रकृतित्वात् - and, since aathmaa is the source of knowledge,

'Prakruthi' is a technical word meaning 'upaadhaana kaaranam'. 'Jnaana prakruthi' means 'Jnaanasya kaaranam'.

The poorva pakshin asks the Advaitin: "You yourself say that aathmaa is the sentient entity, which is the source of knowledge. If aathmaa is the 'producer' of knowledge, how can ignorance ever exist in that aathmaa, which being the 'producer' of knowledge, would have produced knowledge and consequently destroyed / removed ignorance? How can that aathmaa, the 'producer' of knowledge, be the locus of ignorance?"

(jnaanasvaroopathvaath ananyathvaath cha jnaanaprakruthithvaadhibhya:cha)

- हेतुभ्यः - because of these three reasons,

“There are three reasons:

- (i) aathmaa is of the nature of knowledge or light
- (ii) aathmaa is without a second thing, and
- (iii) aathmaa is the producer of knowledge.

Because of these three reasons, aathmaa can never even tolerate ignorance and how can that ignorance remain in the aathmaa, from time immemorial (anaadhi)?” is the poorva pakshin's question.

(An interesting aside: The sankalpa for every Vaidhika Karma, includes the term: “anaadhi avidhyaa avaasanayaa”. This is similar to the performer of the Karma proclaiming / declaring “I possess anaadhi avidhyaa”.)

- न एव अज्ञानं घटते - ignorance is never possible,

Ghatathe means ‘possible’; na ghatathe means ‘not possible’. It is logically never possible. Where?

- आत्मनः अपि - in aathmaa also.

Why does the poorva pakshin say in aathmaa also? Because, previously it was said that ajnaanam cannot be in anaathmaa, the poorva pakshin emphasizes that it cannot be in aathmaa also (api).

Sureswaraachaarya answers this briefly but succinctly, though, in the normal course, one would expect a lengthy explanation.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

घटत एव । कथम् । अज्ञानमात्रनिमित्तत्वात्तद्विभागस्य सर्पात्मतेव रज्जुवाः ।

We reply that it can support ignorance. How? The divisions within the Self are brought about by mere ignorance as in the rope which appears as snake.

The answer, in brief, is this:

It is true, that, opposite things cannot co-exist. It is also very, very correct to say, that, light and darkness cannot co-exist because of their opposite natures. But, we have to add a condition also. That condition is that, two opposite things cannot co-exist only if they belong to the same order of reality. If they belong to different orders of reality, they can and do co-exist. We have several examples for this fact:

Example (1): 'Dry' sand and 'wet' mirage water do co-exist. In fact, it is because of the 'dryness' of the sand only, that, we experience water. This 'co-existence' is possible, because dry sand is vyavahaarika sathyam, whereas, mirage water is praathibhaasika sathyam. Because they belong two different orders of reality, they can co-exist.

Example (2): In a movie you can have a dirty object, say, a polluted river, projected on the clear screen. 'Purity' and 'dirt' can thus co-exist during a movie, because the screen is vyavahaarika sathyam and the polluted river that is shown in the picture is praathibhaasika sathyam. Praathibhaasika impurity and vyavahaarika purity can co-exist.

Example (3): "An example can be given using 'light' and 'darkness' themselves. Imagine yourself sleeping in a dark room; the room is dark; and, if it has to be 'dark', light cannot exist in that 'dark' room; that is the truth. Still, under one condition, light can exist, viz., when you dream and there is a projection of daylight in the dream. In this situation, there is 'brightness' in the dream, while there is 'darkness' in the room. 'Light' and 'darkness' co-exist in one and the same place. How is it possible? Because 'light' is praathibhaasikam and darkness is vyavahaarikam". Thus light and darkness can also happily co-exist, if they belong to different orders of reality.

In the same manner, as shown in the above examples, aathmaa and moolaavidhya can co-exist, but, under one condition, viz. that moolaavidhya should not be of the same order of reality as aathmaa and it is not. Vedhaantha clearly affirms that, ignorance (avidhya) is mithyaa, which means that it is of the lower order of reality - vyavahaarika sathyam, while aaathmaa is paaramaarthika sathyam. Therefore, Consciousness and ignorance can co-exist.

The Advaitin, in fact, goes one step further.

He says: "If Consciousness and ignorance do not co-exist, ignorance cannot be even proved; this is because you are able to talk about your 'ignorance', only because you are 'conscious' of 'ignorance'. If you say I have ignorance of Chinese, how do you know that you have ignorance of Chinese? Your will answer 'I am 'conscious' of my 'ignorance'. Thus, the very existence of ignorance, has to be proved by 'consciousness' alone. If consciousness and ignorance cannot go exist, you cannot talk about any ignorance, including self ignorance. Therefore, we say that, aathmaa not only supports ignorance, but aathmaa also proves ignorance, by being the saakshi of ignorance. Therefore, there is no problem for aathmaa and ajnaanam to coexist, with aasraya-assritha- sambhandha:"

116. Chapter III- Verses 1 (08-11-2008)

In this introduction to Chapter III, Sureswaraachaarya is dealing with four topics, centered on moolaavidhyaa or fundamental ignorance.

Of those four topics, the first two topics are over and now we are in the third topic.

As the first topic, Sureswaraachaarya established that 'anaathmaa cannot be the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa'; and, as the second topic, he established that 'anaathmaa cannot be the vishayaa also of moolaavidhyaa'.

In the third topic, that we are now on, Sureswaraachaaryaa is proceeding to establish that, 'aathmaa alone is the aasrayaa or the locus of moolaavidhyaa'. After first making this statement, he gave several arguments in support of his statement.

In the current portion, the Aacharyaa is answering to an objection raised by a poorva pakshin. What is that objection?

The poorva pakshin says that, if aathmaa is considered as the locus of moolaavidhyaa, there will be several logical problems or fallacies. He lists three.

One logical fallacy, according to him, is that by accepting aathmaa and moolaavidhyaa, the Aacharyaa is renouncing his fundamental stand of advaita. He says: "You claim yourself to be advaitin; you have negated the world in order to negate duality. But even as you are dismissing the world, you are accepting moolaavidhyaa or maayaa as the anaadhi cause of the world. According to you, moolaavidhyaa is also anaadhi – without a beginning and aathma is also anaadhi – without a beginning. By thus accepting a beginningless aathmaa and a beginningless moolaavidhya, you are accepting duality and thus discarding your advaita position". This is one logical fallacy, viz. 'dvaita dosha:', mentioned by the poorva pakshin.

The second argument of the poorva pakshin: "You claim aathmaa is aasrayaa and moolaavidhyaa is aasritham. That means there is a sambhandham – a relationship between aathmaa and moolaavidhyaa - the relationship being a 'supporter-supported' relationship / an aasraya-assritha-sambhandhaa. But, we cannot accept this, because, according to your own teaching, aathmaa is asanghasvaroopa: ; aathmaa does not have any relationship with anything at all; 'asanghohi ayam purusha:'(B.U.IV.iii.15)] Therefore, when aathmaa is asangha:, how can you talk about aathmasangha or aathmasambhandha ? How can asangha aathmaa have aasraya-aasritha-sambhandhaa with moolaavidhyaa?" Thus, according to the poorva pakshin, sambhandha dosha: is another fallacy.

The poorva pakshin then points out yet another logical fallacy in his opinion. He says: "You claim aathmaa, as prakaasa svarooopa: / chaithanya prakaasa roopa: / jyothi svarooopa: etc. You loudly proclaim 'jyothishaam api thath jyothi:' | You also say that moolavidhyaa is ajnaanam; ajnaanam means aprakaasa roopa:/ anthakaara roopa: / thamo roopa: / thimira roopa: | Ignorance is of the nature of darkness. Thus aathmaa is prakaasa svarooopa:; moolaavidhya is aprakaasa roopa:/ How can aprakaasaa and svaprakaasaa – light and darkness coexist in the form of aasraya-aasritha-roopaa?" This dosha, according to the poorva pakshin, is, thus, 'co-existence of two entities with opposite attributes', termed in Sanskrit, 'viruddha dharmino: sahavaasa:' or 'viruddha dharmino: sahasthithi:' |

"Because of these three fallacies, 'aathmaa as aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa' is not possible" is the argument of the poorva pakshin, presented by the Aacharyaa in the sentence, 'nanu aathamana: api jnaanasvaroopathvaath anyathvaath cha jnaanaprakruthithvaadhibhyascha hethubhya: naiva ajnaanam ghatathé'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa promptly replies:

- घटत एव - It is very, very possible.

This brief response implies: "We, the Advaitins, do not have any intellectual discomfort, in accepting aathmaa as the aasrayaa of moolaavidhya, because it is possible".

The poorva pakshin questions:

- कथम् - How is this possible ? / How do you avoid these three fallacies?

All these fallacies are not real / logical fallacies. They are all anomalies / abnormalities caused by moolaavidhyaa itself. This is because moolaavidhyaa, or, for that matter, any form of ignorance, is capable of causing logical anomalies. In fact, for moolaavidhyaa, all these abnormalities are natural results; but, with proper understanding, this fact that 'these are anomalies', will be realized.

Therefore, the Aacharyaa explains:

- अज्ञान मात्र निमित्तत्वात् - All these abnormalities are caused by ajnaanam / moolavidhyaa only.

What all does moolaavidhyaa cause?

- तद्विभागस्य - Duality / plurality is caused (by moolaavidhyaa),

Vibhaaga: - dvaitham / duality / divisions.

But, this duality caused by moolaavidhyaa does not disturb advaitam, because moolaavidhyaa is mithyaa and the duality caused by it is also mithyaa. Mithyaa duality cannot disturb sathyam non-duality, just as plurality of reflections cannot disturb the non-duality of the original object that is reflected. To clarify this example further: "Imagine that I am standing in a room with ten mirrors around. I am non-dual and in the ten mirrors there are ten images (people); but, those ten people are of a lower order of reality. Therefore, the plurality of reflected people will not disturb my non-duality. Even though I experience plurality, it does not intellectually disturb me". In the same manner, mithyaa moolaavidhyaa is creating mithyaa duality / plurality which will not disturb sathyam non-duality. Thus, the first objection of the poorva pakshin, viz., 'the acceptance of the existence of moolaavidhyaa, in addition to aathmaa, causes dvaitham' is answered by pointing out that aathmaa is sathyam, while moolaavidhyaa and the duality / plurality created by moolaavidhyaa are both mithyaa, and, because of this fact, 'dvaitha dosham' is not there.

The second objection, viz. 'the aathmaa having 'relationship' with moolaavidhyaa – the aasraya aasritha sambhandha: - is untenable, because aathmaa is asangha:' is also explained in a similar manner, as follows: "This sambhandhaa also is mithyaa because relationship with a mithyaa vasthu is also mithyaa. When I am observing a mithyaa image, my observer status is also mithyaa. When the observed is (mithyaa) unreal, my observer-status is also (mithyaa) unreal. Thus, aathmaasraya aasritha sambhandhaa is not sathyam. It is caused by ajnaanam. Sambhandhasya mithyaathvaath, aathma continues to be asangha:, in spite of its mithyaa sambhandha: | A typical example is the mirage, where the dry sand continues to be dry in spite of the presence of mirage water. Mirage water is located in dry sand; but, dry sand has no real sambhandhaa with mirage water, because the mirage water is mithyaa. Therefore, dry sand continues to be dry sand". Thus, the second fallacy also should be understood to be an anomaly, which, in fact, is natural to ignorance. All anomalies are natural to ignorance. The job of ignorance is creating anomalies, as expressed by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Maayaa Panchakam (verse 1) - agathiha ghatana pateeyasi maayaa. Thus, the second objection is also ruled out.

In the same manner, the third objection, viz. "if svayamprakaasa aathmaa is the aasrayaa of aprakaasa ajnaanam, it amounts to two opposite attributes co-existing, which is impossible", is answered, by pointing out, that, in this instance of aathmaa being aasrayaa of ajnaanam, this view of the poorva pakshin is also a misperception / an anomaly naturally caused by moolaavidhya ; the 'co-existence' is possible, since aathmaa and ajnaanam belong to two different orders of reality. An example already cited earlier, was that of a dreamer sleeping in a dark room dreaming of bright sunlight, in which instance, the praathibhasika sunlight exists in the vyavahaarika dark room, co-existence of light and darkness being possible, because the two are of different orders of reality.

Thus, all the three objections of the poorva pakshin stand refuted.

This portion is very important and therefore, though covered in the previous session, it is being repeated, especially since Visishtaadvaiatham constantly presents objections to Advaiatham. A book, known as 'satha dhooshani' - 'a hundred fallacies in advaiatham' - , was written by a Visishtaadvaiathin, (out of which we have discussed only three in this portion). An Advaiathin responded to the Visishtaadvaiathin, also by writing a book, which he called 'satha bhushani' - 'a hundred decorations'.

The Advaiathin's answer to the Visishtaadvaiathin's objections: "Whatever you see as logical fallacy in our philosophy, is nothing but a natural anomaly, caused by ignorance. Once you understand it that way, you would not see it as a fallacy. For instance, contrary to what you find illogical, viz., "the co-existence of two 'opposites'" , two 'opposites' can and do co-exist under the condition, that, one is sathyam and the other mithyaa, as in the case of (i) a dreamer dreaming of sunlight in a dark room and (ii) the mirage water. In the first example, light and darkness do co-exist, because the jaagrath darkness is vyavahaarika sathyam, while the dreamt sunlight is praathibhasika sathyam. In the second example, 'dryness' and 'wetness' do co-exist, because the dryness of the sand is vyavahaarika sathyam, while the wetness of the mirage water is praathibhasika sathyam. In both examples, opposite attributes do co-exist, by misperception caused by adhyasam or ajnaanam. If you call this 'co-existence' a logical fallacy, it is called dhooshanam; and, if you properly understand it as natural anomaly caused by ignorance, the very same thing is called bhushanam. Learn to see the dhooshanams as bhushanams. In fact, ultimately samsaara itself is dhooshanam, when you see it as a burden; but, when you see it as entertainment, the very same samsaara becomes leela or bhushanam. Rama losing Sitha is not samsaara but a leela, because Rama knew his aathma svaroopam. For a person who remembers the real nature, life is entertainment; for a person who forgets the real nature, life becomes a struggle."

Reverting to the text: Sureswaraacharya gives an example to the vibhaagha: (dvaiatham), which dvaiatham includes the other two fallacies also (referred to above), which are all caused by moolaavidhya only, which itself is mithyaa, as indicated by the use of the term 'ajnaanamaathranimitthaathvaath'.

- सर्प आत्मता इव रज्जुवाः - just as one and the same rope has two opposite statuses .

In the well-known rajju-sarpaa example, you can say rope is the support of 'snake' (sarpa aasraya: rajju:) and you can also say rope is not a support of the 'snake' (sarpa anaasaraya: rajju:). You can say both simultaneously. How?

When you are accepting sarpa, you say rajju is the aasrayaa; once you have understood, that, really speaking sarpa is not there, that, it is only an appearance, the apparent sarpa is as good as non-existent. When the sarpa is not existent, how can you call the rope as an aasraya of a non-existent sarpaa? Therefore, really speaking, rope is not aasrayaa of sarpaa.

Thus, rope is aasrayaa also and not aasraya also. This is similar to Lord Krishna saying, in the Srimadh Bhagavadh Githa "in Me, the world is there" and in the very next sentence "in Me, the world is not there". Krishna is comfortably saying "mathsthaani sarvaboothaan!" and "na cha mathsthaani boothaan!" (verses 4 & 5 – Chapter IX). If the question "Is this not a logical fallacy?" is raised, the answer will be "No; it is not a logical fallacy; it is only an anomaly caused by maayaa or moolaavidhyaa".

'Sarpa aathmathaa' means 'sarpa aasrayathvam' | Sarpasya aathmaa (aathmaa means, aasraya:, in this context) - sarpaathmaa | Thasysa bhaava: sarpa aathmathaa | Rope is the 'support' of snake when the sarpaa is 'perceived' in it; but, it is really not the support of snake, because, the snake itself is really not there.

With this, the third topic is over. What is the third topic? 'Aathmaa is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa.' Of course, we have to add appropriate adjectives. Paaramaarthika sathya aathmaa is the aasrayaa of the vyaavahaarika sathya moolaavidhyaa.

One more topic is there – the 4th topic. This is contained in the earlier sentences, preceding the portions just covered, viz., "Kimvishayam puna: thadhaathmana: ajnaanam" and "Aathmavishayam ithi bhrooma:" |

Kimvishayam puna: thadhaathmana: ajnaanam - What is the object of moolaavidhyaa?

Whenever ignorance is discussed, the question "ignorance of what?" automatically arises.

- तदात्मनः अज्ञानम् - That aathma aasritham ajnaanam / that ajnaanam which is located in the aathmaa,
- किं विषयं - is about what object?

"What is the object of the basic ignorance?" is the question.

Sureswaraachaarya deals with the question in one brief sentence. He answers:

- आत्मविषयं इति ब्रूमः - We answer that the object of ignorance is Aathmaa / the ajnaanam concerns the Self itself.

Not only is the locus of ignorance aathmaa; the object of ignorance is also aathmaa.

In 'me', there is ignorance and I am ignorant about / of 'myself'.

'Self-ignorance' is the cause of all our problems and the only medicine for this disorder is 'self-knowledge'.

With this the fourth topic, viz. 'aathmaa is the object of moolaavidhyaa', is also completed. Having covered all these four topics, Sureswaraachaaryaa proceeds further:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

तस्मात्तदपनुत्तौ द्वैतानर्थाभावः ।

Therefore, all evil of the nature of duality ceases, when ignorance is dispelled.

Thus, we have seen that 'I', the aathmaa, am there and in 'me', the aathmaa, the moolaavidhyaa is there and this moolaavidhyaa has created dvaitha prapancha: |

Moolaavidhyaa is also mithyaa; the dvaitha prapanchaa is also mithyaa .

Moolaavidhyaa has got two powers. One power is called vikshepa sakthi; the other power is called aavarana sakthi: | And, because of the vikshepa sakthi, the moolaavidhyaa has created dvaitha prapanchaa, but, the moolaavidhyaa-created dvaitha prapanchaa can never affect 'me' at all, because 'I' am sathyam.

(Na hi adhyasthasya gunena doshena vaa anumaathrenaapi tha sambhandhyathe |)

In fact, we can enjoy the drama generated by the mithyaa dvaitha prapanchaa. But, it is generally seen, that we are not able to enjoy this dvaitha prapanchaa as 'entertainment'; on the other hand, it has become a serious 'struggle'; this is because, we are not able to see the mithyaa dvaitham as mithyaa dvaitham; but are seeing the mithyaa dvaitham as sathyaa dvaitham. The mithyaaathvam of dvaitha prapanchaa is 'concealed' for us, because of the second power of moolaavidhyaa, viz., aavarana sakthi.

Thus, the first power of moolaavidhyaa does not cause any problem ; and, is, in fact, a blessing, since, because of the vikshepa sakthi alone, we are able to have this wonderful drama of the dvaitha prapanchaa. If vikshepa sakthi of moolaavidhyaa is not there, 'I', the Brahman, will be continually existing without even the knowledge that 'I' am Brahman. Such a situation (purely academic) is bound to be monotonous.

Therefore, 'that, moolaavidhya is there', is a blessing ; 'that, it has vikshepa sakthi' is a greater blessing; 'that the vikshepa sakthi of moolaavidhya can create plurality, novelty, variety and changes' is also a most welcome blessing. Thus, vikshepa sakthi is not a serious problem; the problem is the aavarana sakthi which is 'covering' facts, because of which dvaitham appears as sathyam and I do not understand myself as the asangha aathmaa, but, mistake the body-mind complex as myself. It is aavarana sakthi which has created the triangular format. Instead of taking to the binary format – understanding that, I am the asangha aathmaa, and enjoying this wonderful creation with my power called moolaavidhyaa and its vikshepa sakthi - I mistake myself to be the body-mind complex and a miserable and helpless jeeva, because of the aavarana sakthi.

And, once I become the jeeva, the jagath is 'too much' for me. As aathmaa, I can challenge the world; but, as body-mind complex, I can never do so; the world appears to be a permanent persecutor. I get a persecution complex, constantly having my jaathakam read, wary of the planetary movements, constantly tracking their courses, and constantly trying to foresee the arrival of the different dasaas etc. Often, astrological knowledge becomes a curse, because, all the time, I am overwhelmed by jagath and rush to do parihaarams. All this is because of the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhyaa. Therefore, we have to tackle this problem of aavarana sakthi.

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- तदपनुत्तौ - when moolaavidhyaa is eliminated,

Apanutthi: – elimination / destruction; thath – refers to moolaavidhyaa ; thasyaa: (moolaavidhyaayaa:) apanutthi: - thadhapanutthi : |

- द्वैत अनर्थ अभावः - all the problems, caused by the dvaitha prapanchaa are also eliminated.

Elimination of moolaavidhyaa is 'removal' of aavrana sakthi and 'falsification' of vikshepa sakthi; aavarana sakthi must be removed; vikshepa sakthi is not removed, but, falsified as mithyaa.

Once vikshepa sakthi is falsified, the dvaita prapanchaa is also falsified; and, once dvaita prapanchaa is falsified, the dvaita prapanchaa becomes an entertainment.

Tragedy becomes much sought-after entertainment, only in one place - a movie or a play. Life also will become an entertainment, but, only under one condition; it should be reduced to a movie / play; and it will become a movie / play, only if one watches it, remaining as aathmaa, the sathya thathvam.

This elimination of moolaavidhyaa alone will make life a leela; and, with this wisdom / knowledge, one verily becomes an avatar. For this to happen, moolaavidhyaa apanutthi: is essential.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse – Chapter III:

तदपनोदश्च वाक्यादेव तत्पदपदार्थाभिज्ञस्य ।

The removal of ignorance is possible only through the proposition of Vedhaantha.

Now, the question is "how do you accomplish elimination of moolaavidhyaa?"

It should be remembered, that, whenever this term 'elimination of moolaavidhyaa' is used, it means 'removal' of aavarana sakthi and 'falsification' of vikshepa sakthi. These two-fold processes together are called apanodha: or nivritthi: | And, apanodha: is accomplished, only by study of Vedhaantha Mahaa Vaakyaani, indicated by the Aachaaryaa here, by the word 'vaakyaadeva'. Vedhaantha Mahaa Vaakyaani are the essence of Vedhaantha / Upanishads. In fact, one meaning of the word 'upanishad' is 'mahaavaakyam'.

- वाक्यादेव- Only from the mahaavaakyam,
- तदपनोद(भवति) : - the elimination of that ignorance results,

This statement of the Aachaaryaa may lead to a doubt in the seeker's mind: " But, though I have read mahaavaakyam so many times, nothing has happened to me. In fact, I appear to have become immune to mahaavaakyam."

So Sureswaraachaaryaa clarifies:

- तत्पद पदार्थ अभिज्ञस्य - for a person who has clearly understood the words of the mahaavaakyam and also the meanings of those words clearly. .

Thadh padham – the words of the mahaa vaakyam ; padha artha – the meaning / significance of the words; abhignya: - one who has clearly grasped / comprehended.

The clear grasping of the fact “‘I’ am of a higher order of reality; everything else is of a lower order” is more than enough to attain moksha. No extraordinary or mystic experience is required.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

अतो वाक्यव्याख्यायाध्याय आरभ्यते |

Therefore, this chapter is started with a view to interpret the proposition.

“So,” the Aachaaryaa says “that means a ‘project’ has come”. What is the ‘project’?

Clear understanding of:

- (1) thvam padha and thvam padhaartha,
- (2) thath padha and thath padhaartha and
- (3) asi padha and asi padhaartha.

- अतः - Therefore,
- अध्याय - the thrutheeya adhyaaya:/ the third chapter
- आरभ्यते - is begun,
- वाक्य व्याख्यानाय - for the analysis / commentary of mahaa vaakyam.

What is the purpose of the third chapter? Ans: Extracting the meaning of the mahaa vaakyam / acquiring the knowledge of the mahaa vaakyam, for the elimination of ignorance.

Vyaakyaanam means commentary or analysis.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Chapter III:

तत्र यथोक्तेन प्रकारेण तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्योपनिविष्टपदपदार्थयोः। :कृतान्वयव्यतिरेकः :

One who has understood through reasoning, according to the procedure stated, the terms in the proposition ‘That thou art’ and their meanings,(fulfils himself as follows):

To arrive at the significance of the words occurring in mahaa vaakya, a methodology is used and that methodology is called anvaya vyathireka nyaaya: |

By using anvaya vyathirka nyaaya, the significance of thvam padhaa viz., the jeevaathmaa and the significance of thath padhaa viz., the paramaathmaa, are arrived at. And, after knowing the significance of both, the seeker should study the mahaa vaakyam, when the impact will be tremendous.

An example will make this clear : The Laboratory Report of a patient does not signify or convey anything to the lay patient, either the nature of his malady or the treatment thereof ; but, to the Doctor, it conveys a lot of information on the nature of the patient's disorder, based on which he decides the course of the treatment. The same piece of paper, the Report, produces two reactions – 'utter blankness' in the patient but 'instant knowledge' in the Doctor. This is because, the Doctor had prepared himself by the Medical Education that he had received, to understand the significance of the Laboratory Report. With regard to Medical knowledge, the mind of the patient is asamskritha antha:karanam, while the Doctor's mind is samskritha antha:karanam. The report is capable of providing the knowledge; but, whether the report provides the knowledge or not, does not depend on the report itself but depends upon the type of intellect of the perceiver of the report. In the same manner, mahaavaakyam can be powerful or be just a bunch of words, depending on the capacity of the seeker. The difference is not in the vaakyam. The vaakyam has the potency for the prepared mind; but is impotent on the unprepared intellect.

Therefore, a big title is given by the Aachaaryaa to the prepared student, for whom mahaavaakya is not a bunch of words, but is the most powerful statement in the entire cosmos, eternally, because that is the only saving grace for all our struggles. Repeat: The only saving grace is the innocent looking statement 'thath thvam asI'.

'Krutha anvaya vyathireka.' is that title given to the prepared student. How has such a student prepared? He has done ('krutha' means 'done') or employed the 'anvaya vyathireka' reasoning.

Krutha: anvaya sahitha vyathirekha: yena sa: - Krutha anvaya vyathireka: |

- कृत अन्वय व्यतिरेकः - The one who has done the anvaya vyathirekha reasoning,

What is the subject of the 'anvaya vyathirekha' reasoning?

- पद पदार्थयोः - on the significance / meanings of the words

Padha – word; padhaartha – meaning / significance.

Why does the Aachaaryaa use the word 'significance'? Ans: Because one and the same padham can have several meanings. For every word, there is vaachyaartha (immediate meaning) and lakshyaartha (target meaning).

The lakshyaartha also has jahathi lakshyaartha / ajahathi lakshyaartha / jaha-ajahathi lakshyaartha .

So many varieties of meanings are possible. The student should, therefore, clearly know and understand the appropriate meaning of thvam and the appropriate meaning of thath.

The appropriate meaning of 'thvam' is 'the Consciousness' and not the 'sthoala sookshma kaarana sareeran'.

The appropriate meaning of 'thath' is not 'sarvagnya Isvara', but 'the pure Existence'.

The equation is between 'the Consciousness', which is 'You' and 'the Existence', which is Brahman. It is 'Consciousness-Existence-equation'.

'You' are 'chith'; Brahman is 'sath'| And, 'chideva sath ; sadeva chith'|

The Chaandhogya Upanishad declaration "Eithaadhaathmyam idagm sarvam thath sathyam sa aathmaa thathvamas" – "All this (the whole universe) has got That as the Self. That is Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That" (VI. 8.7) is relevant in this context.

Where are those 'words' ('padha' in the text) to be found?

- वाक्य उपनिविष्ट - present in the mahaa vaakyani,

'Upanivishta' means 'present in'.

The 'sath-chith equation' should be discovered in 'thathvamas' mahaa vaakyaa, by applying anvaya-vyathirekha method.

Any mahaa vaakyam can be taken up for study - 'Aham brahma asmi' , 'pragyaanam brahma' etc. But, the very common vaakyam taken up is 'thath thvam asi'. So, the Aachaaryaa says:

- तत्त्वमस्यादि - such as 'thath thvam asi' etc.,

In what manner should be the anvaya vyathirekha method employed?

The Aachaaryaa will later emphasize: "After employing anvaya vyathirkha, the mahaa vaakyam should be read; and, after reading the mahaa vakyam, the anvaya vyathirekha should be done again; the process should be continued a number of times. This repeated 'reading of the mahaa vaakyam' and 'anvaya vyathirekha analysis' would gradually increase the impact of the mahaa vaakya and in course of time, the mahaavakyam will become very, very clear.

"The message 'I am free' will be clear – not 'I have become free', but 'I was free; I am free and I will ever be free'. Until this stage is reached, the anvaya vyathirekha method should be repeatedly employed."

Now, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- यथोक्तेन प्रकारेण - according to the procedure stated (that is to be laid down in the third chapter),

The sentence is not complete. The positive results of such a study are indicated in the verse (no. 1) that follows.

117. Chapter III- Verses 1 and 2 (15-11-2008)

In this elaborate Introduction to Chapter III, Sureswaraachaaryaa established that, there exists an illusive power termed moolaavidhyaa, which moolaavidhyaa is located in 'me', the aathmaa; and also, that, that moolaavidhyaa is the ignorance about aathmaa. In other words: "I' have an ignorance which is located in 'me' and that ignorance is about 'me'".

This moolaavidhyaa or self ignorance is endowed with aavarana sakthi and vikshepa sakthi.

And, of these two powers of self-ignorance, vikshepa sakthi is a great blessing; it is a wonderful and welcome power that 'I' am endowed with ; because of the vikshepa sakthi of moolaavidhyaa alone, 'I', the aathmaa, am able to create the entire universe , an universe, which can only entertain me, but which cannot 'touch' me. What a glorious power? 'I' have a power, which can create an universe, which universe will have the capacity to entertain 'me', but, which will not have the capacity to disturb me; such a vyaavahaarika universe / a mithyaa universe, 'I' can create with the moolaavidhyaa vikshepa sakthi. Therefore, I need not complain about this vikshepa sakthi; I need not work to stop this vikshepa sakthi. 'I' can allow it to do the srushti- sthithi-laya of the entire cosmos, eternally, on and on.

But, the disturbing factor is, that, the very same moolaavidhyaa has the aavarana sakthi also, which aavarana sakthi alone is responsible for all problems; because, this aavarana sakthi raises the mithyaa world to sathyam world. This aavarana sakthi is the culprit in creating all the problems. Because of the aavarana sakthi alone, the world which is mithyaa, which cannot disturb me, is raised to a higher level, a level which is on par with 'me'. And, once the world is thus raised to higher level / once 'I' and the world have the same order of reality, then arise all the problems. This world gets the capacity to threaten me / worry me / create all anxiety in me.

The problem is not because of the presence of the world; but, only because of giving more power to the world than it deserves. I, because of aavarana sakthi, empower the world to disturb me. It follows, that, once I remove that aavarana sakthi, this world would get disempowered; like a defanged cobra, it will be present as a naaga – aabharanam for me. A defanged cobra cannot be a threat. Thus, aavarana sakthi rahitha moolaavidhyaa becomes an aabharanam; aavarana sakthi sahitha moolaavidhyaa is a problem.

Therefore, the aim of the Vedhaanthic student is to remove the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhyaa ; and, this is done by gaining 'knowledge'; the 'knowledge' will not destroy moolaavidhyaa ; it will remove aavarana sakthi and will falsify the vikshepa sakthi and the universe. The universe will be there; but, it will be of a lower order of reality. Whatever is of a lower order of reality is as good as not existing; it is sufficiently there to entertain me, but not sufficiently there to disturb me.

Therefore, our project is: "Through 'knowledge', remove the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhya, but allow the moolaavidhya, with its vikshepa sakthi and the world to continue eternally".

And, what should this knowledge be about? It was said that, 'to remove aavarana sakthi, 'I' should gain knowledge. What should that knowledge be about? Ans: Obviously, if the ignorance is about the Self, the knowledge also will have to be about the Self. Self ignorance will be eliminated only by Self knowledge, not by any of the other types of knowledge – knowledge of either material sciences or knowledge of saasthraas, such as tharkaa, meemaamsaa etc. Therefore, 'acquisition of Self-knowledge' is the Project for a seeker, a mumukshu.

The next question: How do you acquire Self Knowledge? Ans: Self-knowledge cannot be gained through any other means of knowledge other than Vedhaanthaa, because all other sources of knowledge deal only with anaathmaa. The other pramaanams, viz., Prathyaksha, Anumaanaa, Upamaanaa, Arthaapaththi and Anupalabdhi deal only with anaathmaa. None of them deals with aathmaa.

What about 'meditation', as a means of eliminating Self ignorance? 'Meditation' is not even included as one of the sources of knowledge, in the list of the six pramaanaas, whether material knowledge or spiritual knowledge. Tradition does not include 'meditation' as a source of knowledge. In the shadpramaanam, dhyaanam is not even included. They (the five pramaanams mentioned above and dhyaanam) are all useless for acquisition of Self knowledge.

There is only one saving grace - the Vedaas. And, in the Vedaas also, the Veda Poorva deals with anaathmaa; the Veda anthaa alone deals with aathmaa. And, even in the Veda antha pramaanam, there are topics like annamaya kosa, praana maya kosaa etc. If, therefore, the seeker filters away all such topics, the only portion that deals with aathmaa is the mahaa vaakyam. Thus, the study of the mahaavaakyam becomes crucial for the seeker / mumukshu.

The following example will show the importance of the mahaa vaakyam in acquiring jnaanam: When the doctor finds it impossible to diagnose the disorder of a chronically sick person, by mere physical examination, he subjects him to specified Laboratory tests, sometimes unique in character. The tests having been done and the reports received, the reports become very crucial to the patient, since the information given by the reports alone would throw light on the current status of the patient's health and would decide his future - life or death. The patient, naturally, does not treat the Laboratory Reports as just pieces of paper with some unintelligible codes; but, as valuable documents with messages that are extremely relevant to him.

In the same manner, Vedhaantha is not just a book with some printed words; but, it contains an important message, which is going to determine whether the student is going to continue as a samsaari, facing eternal struggles, doing praayaschittha after praayaschittha or will realize his 'free' nature, which is not affected by the entire prapancha, including his sareera thrayam. To remember the 4th capsule of Vedhaantha (as enunciated by Swamiji): " 'I' am never affected by any event that happens in the material world or that happens in the material three-fold body; because, 'I' am the 'spirit', not disturbed or influenced by matter and material events". The student should receive this revelation from the mahaa vaakyam, which gives the message of jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eikyam through the expression "thath thvam asI" – 'thathI' referring to Paramaathma, 'thvamI' referring to jeevaathma and the word 'asI' to eikyam.

But, Sureswaraachaarya also warns : "While on this subject of 'eikyamI', when we talk about jeevaathma and Paramaathma, we have to first note that the Paramaathma has got an essential nature, a svaabhaavika dharma;, as well as, several non-essential features, aaganthuka dharma: | Paramaathma is a mixture endowed with one essential and several non-essential features. Similarly, the jeevaathma also is a mixture, having one essential and several non essential features. The eikyam is not in the non-essential / incidental / superficial / vyaavahaarika features. If the student keeps in mind only the non-essential vyaavahaarika features of the Paramaathma and jeevaathma , the message of eikyam will sound ridiculous or as a joke. Therefore, the student before studying the maahaavakyaa / before absorbing the main message, has to remove the non-essential features / attributes".

And, how do you remove them? By applying the principle, that, "whatever feature / attribute is variable, is nonessential; and, whatever feature / attribute is invariable, is essential". The invariableness is called anvaya and the variability / variableness is called vyathirekha. By studying the vyathirekha, whatever is variable, the student has to remove the non-essential features of Paramaathma, such as sarvagnyathvam, sarva Isvarathvam, sarva kalyaana gunaika nilayathvam etc. They must all be dismissed as variable and non-essential; because, they are there only during srushti kaalam; pralaya kaale, they are all resolved.

Therefore, the serious seeker has to scrap all incidental features of Paramaathma . This 'scrapping' of all the incidental features in Paramaathma is indicated by the word vyathireka.

The seeker has to retain only the non-variable feature and the only non-variable feature in Paramaathmaa is sath - 'Existence'.

"Sadeva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam" - "O good looking one! In the beginning, this was Existence alone, One only without a second", declares Uddhaalaka Aaruni to his son Svetakethu, in the Chaandoghya Upanishad (VI.2.1).

Other than 'Existence', all attributes of the Paramaathmaa should be relentlessly removed. Sentiments such as "I like the beautiful form / nose of the Lord" will not make Vedhaantha work in the seeker. Without any weakness or emotion, the sabda-sparsa-roopa-rasa-gandha attributes of the Paramaathmaa should be knocked off intellectually and pure 'Existence' alone should be retained. And, pure 'Existence' is all-pervading (Yasyaiva spuranam sadhaathmakam).

It should also be known and remembered, that (i) 'Existence' is not a part, product or property of the world (ii) 'Existence' is an independent entity which pervades the world (iii) 'Existence' is not limited by the boundaries of the world and (iv) 'Existence' continues even after the resolution of the world.

When the seeker hears the word thath, only 'Existence', as its meaning, must come to his mind. His intellect must filter off all attributes. Sath alone is anvayam ; all attributes are vyathirekam. This is the first project to be completed, before listening to the mahaa vaakyam. On completion of this Project 1, sath should mean, to the seeker, 'Pure Existence'. All others are variables.

Similarly, when jeevaathmaa is considered (in the jeevaathma-paramaathma-eikyam equation), all the incidental features of jeevaathmaa,

- (i) emotions such as raaghaa, dveshaa, kaamaa, krodhaa, lobhaa etc.
- (ii) varnaas such as Brahmana, Kshathriyaa, Vaiysya, Sudhraa etc.
- (iii) gender – male or female
- (iv) relationships such as father, mother, husband, wife etc. should be dismissed as vyathirekha.

It should be recognized that 'Consciousness' is the only constant invariable factor (anvayaa) of jeevaathmaa. Either when subject to emotions or when free of emotions such as sorrow, jealousy etc., 'Consciousness' is. Thus, all incidental features (vyathirekha) should be removed and only Pure Consciousness, the only non-variable (anvayam) of jeevaathmaa, should be retained. This is Project 2, after successful completion of which, the word thvam should mean only the Pure Consciousness to the seeker.

Thus, when the enlightened seeker hears the word `thath`, he should remember `sath`; and when he hears the word `thvam`, he should understand it as `chith`. And, then, when the word `asI` is mentioned, `sath` and `chith` must get `married` in his intellect. This is the holiest `marriage` or probably the only true `marriage`, because, any other marriage brings, in its wake, problems also. This is the only `marriage`, i.e. the eiyyam between the mahaavaakya sath and chith, which `marriage` will not create any problem; but, instead solve all problems. This eiyyam means, "I, the `Conscious` being, am only the `Existence` principle", which is Reality. All the others are only `dramas` going on – `naama roopa dances` going on. The seeker should not get carried away by them, but, should use them purely for `entertainment` – kreedaartham.

"Kreedaaartham srujasi prapancham akilam kreedamrugaa: the janaa: yath karmaacharitham mayaa cha bhavatha: preethyaai bhavatheva thath | sambho svasya kuthoohalasya karanam maccheshtitham nischitham" – "Hey Sambho! You create the entire universe for Your play. The people are Your playthings. Whatever actions I do, are also at Your behest. And, it is certain that they are tools for your pleasure" says Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in Sivanadalahari, addressing Lord Siva (verse 66). The whole creation is a drama / an entertainment.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "mahaavaakyam will work, only if you apply anvaya vyathirkha and remove the superficial attributes".

Otherwise, when the declaration "you are aananda svarooa:", is made, the student, remembering all the problems – at the global, national and personal levels - will view the statement only as a cruel joke.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa underlines the term "krutha anvaya vyathirekha:", meaning "one, who has done the anvaya vyathirekha reasoning". Only after anvaya vyathirekha, the mahaavaakya will work.

In what manner is the anvaya vyathirkha done?

- Yathoktha prakaarena – As was shown in the previous chapter, by pointing out that
- 'I' am the saakshi and the sareerathrayam is only
- Anaathmaa and as to be elaborated in the ensuing chapter.

Before anvaya vyathirekha is done, the `eiyyam` will not be realized. Only after completion of the anvaya vyathirkha successfully, the eiyyam between sath and chith will be realized.

And, out of this sath-chith 'marriage', are born, the offspring, saanthi, thrupthi, poornathvam etc.

After this long Introduction, Sureswaraachaarya proceeds:

Chapter III: Verse 1 –

यदा ना तत्त्वमस्यादेर्ब्रह्मास्मीत्यवगच्छति।

प्रध्वस्ताहंममो नैति तदा गीर्मनसो :सृतिम् ॥ २ ॥

When a person understands 'I am Brahma' through the propositions like 'That thou art', his sense of 'I' and 'mine' are destroyed and he goes beyond the realm of words and mind.

- यदा - Suppose,

This word 'yadha' ('suppose') means 'supposing the message of the guru and saasthraas has been successfully conveyed to the student'.

- तत्त्वमस्यादेः - from the pramaana vaakyams 'thatthvamasī' etc.,

The use of the word 'aadh' (etc.) is significant, since, it conveys the fact that there are thousands of mahaavaakyams occurring in the Upanishads, though it is commonly believed, that, the mahaavaakyams are four in number. But, the commonly known four mahaavaakyams are only samples, one from each Veda.

- ना - a person,

The literal meaning of the word 'naa' is 'manushya.' | In this context, it refers to the saadhana chathushtaya sampanna;, who has already done anvaya and vyathirekha and is retaining the essential of nature 'chith' in himself and the essential nature of 'sath' in Paramaathmaa.

When such an adhikaari,

- अवगच्छति - understands / discerns / grasps

Discerns what? That, "I am the sathya chaithanyam, which is identical with sathya chith or Existence".

And, how (in what form) does he gather that wisdom?

-)अहम्) ब्रमास्मि इति - that 'I' am Brahman,

The word 'aham' should be 'supplied'. What is meant by 'aham', in this statement? It is not the body, which always has problems; nor is it the mind, which also always has problems. The FIR (Frequency, Intensity and Recovery Period) of emotions like anger, fear etc. can, at best, be reduced, but, can never be brought down to zero. Even for the greatest jnaani, absolute perfection is impossible in the body or in the mind. Only that, in his case, the imperfections will be minimum, to such an extent, that they will be almost invisible.

Therefore, the student, while understanding the word 'aham', should discard the body, the mind (along with its raagha-dveshaa etc.) and the kaarana sareeram also and understand 'aham' as "sthoola sookshma kaarana sareeraath vyathiriktha:; avasthaa thraya saakshi, pancha kosa vilakshana:; sachhidhaananda svaroopo:" (as defined in the treatise Thathva Bodham).

And, what is that Brahman? It is not somebody sitting in Vaikuntaa ; nor somebody sitting in Kailaasa. One need not go and join that Brahman. That Brahman is the 'Existence' which is all-pervading, and the 'Existence' which is in the body-mind complex also.

That 'Existence' is Consciousness and that 'Consciousness' is 'Existence'.

When should this understanding take place? It cannot take place in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, when buddhi itself is resolved. In nirvikalpaka samaadhi, neither the source of knowledge is there in the form of pramaanam , nor is the mind there, because the mind is resolved during nirvikalpaka samaadhi .

The clear 'understanding' can and should take place only in the jaagrath avasthaa, when the seeker is very, very alert. When he listens to the 'teaching'- sravana kaale - the message has to be received by him. If at all he practices meditation, the meditation is only meant to recollect the teaching that he had gathered during sravanam. During sravanam, the seeker 'collects' the knowledge and during nidhidhyaasanam, he 'recollects' the knowledge.

In nidhidhyaasanam, there is no possibility of collecting any new or fresh knowledge. 'Nidhidhyaasanam' is only 'dwelling upon the already-collected wisdom'.

That's why Sureswaraachaarya says "sravana kale, a person gathers the knowledge, from the mahaavaakyam".

And as even as the seeker is gathering the knowledge, simultaneously, as a corollary, another thing should happen. That corollary also is very, very important. What is that corollary? Ans: The student should note "this sareerathrayam is neither 'me' nor 'mine'". This corollary is extremely important.

Getting the conviction "sareerathrayam is not 'me' " is called ahamkaaranivritthi: ; getting the conviction "sareerathrayam is not 'mine' " is mamakaara nivritthi: | The sareerathrayam should be distanced from 'Me'.

But, how to dispose of the sareerathrayam? Ans: By 'handing over' the sareerathrayam to the viswaroopa Isvara, Who is the only Possessor and Controller of the sareerathrayam. The seeker should deliberately / consciously hand over the sareerathrayam to viswaroopa Isvara. 'Handing over sareerathrayam' means 'refusing to worry about sareerathrayam any more'. The seeker should deliberately 'refuse' to worry about sareerathrayam, by handing it over to viswaroopa Isvara, the total Anaathmaa.

Viswa roopa Isvara is also anaathmaa – macro anaathmaa. Not only should the seeker hand over sareerathrayam to macro anaathmaa, but, he should also deliberately see sareerathrayam as of a lower order of reality.

To repeat: Not only should sareerathrayam be handed over to Total Matter , the seeker should see sareerathrayam as mithyaa also; which means, that, whatever happens there (in the sareerathrayam), the seeker should not get affected or disturbed.

An interesting analogy can be given. When a gift to someone is made, it is seen, that, quite often, the person who makes the gift, tends to worry, as to what happens to his gift, whether it is being utilized properly etc. But, this type of worry would mean that the 'gifting' is only lip-service. Once the gift is made, the person who has made the gift should not worry at all, about what happens to the gift.

In the same manner, in the matter of saranaagathy to the Viswaroopa Isvara, the attitude of worrying about the sareerathrayam, after surrendering it to Isvara, is not right, since it means that the saranaagathy is not total. If the saranaagathy is total and genuine, there should be no fear or worry at all.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "corollary of mahaavakyam is sareerathraya sanyaasa:"|

The advice should also be extended further ; the advice is not limited to non-attachment to one's own sareerathrayam alone, while permitting the keeping alive of the relationship and attachment to one's wife, family etc. It should be understood and remembered that relationship and attachment to wife / family are, after all, only through one's sareeram ; when the mumukshu is expected to renounce sareera sambhandha itself, where is the question of relationships like bhartha, bhaaryaa, pithaa, maathaa etc.? All these sanghaas (attachments) should also be handed over to the Viswaroopa Isvara. Sarvasangha parithyaghaa has to take place. There is no choice. No mokshaa is possible, without sarva sangha parithyaaghaa. And, after handing over the relationships also to Viswaroopa Isvara, the seeker should not entertain even a little bit of worry or concern about relations. That is also a corollary.

That's why, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa warns "jnaanam alone can never give moksha, without sanyaasa". The sanyaasa referred to here, is not "mere wearing of kaashaaya vasthram and quitting one's household". One may take to wearing kaashaaya vasthram and move to Badrinath, but still continue to worry about one's family one has left behind.

"Kaashaaya vasthra dhaaranam and Badrinath vaasam", by themselves, will not solve samsaaraa; 'mental renunciation' is real sanyaasa, which is more important than Kaashaaya vasthram and external renunciation of one's family and duties. This real sanyaasa-sahitha-jnaana gives mokshaa. This is the message that is being conveyed by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in the second line of the verse 1 (under study).

- प्रध्वस्त अहंममः - and eliminates the ahamkaara and mamakaaraa from his / her mind,

What is the definition of ahamkaaraa? Ans: Looking at sareerathrayam as 'me'.

What is mamakaraa? Ans: Looking at sareerathrayam, the family and the property as 'mine'.

Both of them must be eliminated (meaning of the word pradhvastham) from the seeker's thinking.

The term 'avagachchathl' denotes 'acquisition of jnaanam' and the word 'pradhvastha aham mama:' indicates the mental renunciation.

The term 'pradhvastha aham mama:' is actually a noun and literally means 'one in whom ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa have been eliminated' / 'one who has taken to aanthara sanyaasaa.' The term is derived as "Pradhvasthau ahamkaara mamakaarau yasya sa:" = "pradhvastha aham mama:" /

If both of them viz., jnaanam and sanyaasaa happen,

- तदा - then / in such circumstances,
- न येति - (the person) does not fall within
- सृतिम् - the field of any transaction,
- गीः - verbal
- मनसोः - or of thought .

'Sruthi:' means 'field' or 'scope'. 'Ghee:' indicates 'verbal / language transactions' and 'manaso:' indicates 'transactions of mind / thought'. All worries / future plans are thought transactions.

Such a person becomes the thureeya aathmaa, as defined in the Maandookya Upanishad (7th manthraa). There are a number of descriptions of thureeya aathmaa in the Maandookya Upanishad, one of which, viz., 'Avyavahaaryam', is highlighted here.

'Avyavahaaryam' means 'going beyond 'know'ing vyavahaaraas and 'do'ing vyavahaaraas' i.e., 'neither available for knowledge nor for action'.

Knowledge takes place in the 'pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi' and actions take place in the 'karthru-karma-karana -thriputi'.

The jnaani is beyond jnaana vyavahaara thriputi and karma vyavahaara thriputi; and, therefore, is beyond all transactions.

'I' am the medium in which all transactions take place; but, 'I' am not a participant in any of the transactions.

What is the best example of a medium in which all transactions take place, but, which, by itself is a non-participant in any transaction? Ans: We have two examples in the saasthraas.

One is aakasa: - 'space'. Space is the medium in which all transactions take place; but, space itself does not participate in the transactions nor is it affected by any of the transactions.

What is the second example? Prakaasa: / Soorya Prakaasa:, in which all our activities are going on; but, the prakaasaa itself is not a participant nor is it affected.

In the same manner, 'I' am the 'Existence-Consciousness Medium', in which all transactions – tragic or good - take place, influenced by the powerful praarabhdhaa. Praarabhdhaa is unstoppable. Either tragic or welcome events cannot be stopped ; they will all take place, because of the praarabhdhaa. But, 'I' am a non-participant in the events.

In effect, Sureswaraachaaryaa declares (in this verse): "The seeker, immediately on 'acquisition of jnaanam and deliberate mental renunciation', discovers, that 'I' transcend all transactions ; that, 'I' am the transcendental 'Self', who is free from mental problems".

The human tendency is to venture into transactions, with the fond hope "after this transaction, my life will be better". And, when one wants to improve the quality of one's life, by various worldly transactions, one is said to 'fall within the field of transactions'. And, people do try to improve the quality of their lives, by various worldly transactions. Vedhaantha warns: "you can never improve yourself with worldly transactions; even if you do manage to achieve an improvement, it will be short-lived; sooner than later, the same problem or a different type of problem will surface".

"Therefore, never try to improve yourself by any transactions ; understand that 'I' am not 'improvable'" is the advice of Vedhaantha. The advice should be understood properly; it does not reflect a 'negative' attitude as if there are no hopes of ever improving. On the other hand, it is a positive assurance "'I' do not need to be improved. Nothing can ever 'touch' me; they are meant only for my 'entertainment' ". This is the repeated teaching of Vedhaantha.

"Gheer manaso sruthim thadhaa na yethi" is a translation of the Thaitreeya Upanishad statement "yatho vaachaa nivarthanthe apraapya manasaa saha" (Manthraa 9 of Brahmavalli) – "Words along with the mind return without reaching that (Brahman)".

Therefore, who am 'I'? Ans: After assimilation of mahaavaakyam, 'I' am the transcendental screen , on which the movie called 'life' is going on. This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to dwell upon, in this chapter 3. This first verse is a samkshepa sloka: | Just as research scholars venturing for a 'doctorate', are expected to first submit the synopsis of their subject of research, the Aachaaryaa is presenting the synopsis of his 'thesis' in this first verse; the third chapter is the 'thesis' and this sloka is the synopsis of the thesis.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 2 – Chapter III:

यदेव तदर्थं त्वमर्थेऽवैति तदेवावाक्यार्थतां प्रतिपद्यते गीर्मनसो :सृतिं न प्रतिपद्यत इति । कुत एतदध्यवसीयते । यस्मात् ।

The significance is that when he discerns the import of 'That' in the import of 'Thou', then itself he attains what is behind the import of the proposition and transcends accessibility to words and mind. How is this known?

The same idea is further clarified by the Aachaaryaa, in a different language.

What happens in the prepared, non-preoccupied intellect of a discerning, carefully-listening student, when he is receiving the crucial message `thath thvam asf`?

The Aachaaryaa says:

- यदा - At the time of successful sravanam ,
- तदर्थ - the meaning / import of the word `thath` ,

When the word `thath` is listened to, by the student, that `thath` is understood as the all-pervading `Existence`, because this mahaavaakyam occurs in the 6th Chapter of the Chaandoghya Upanishad and in that 6th Chapter, the Upanishad defines Paramaathmaa as the pure `Existence` of the five features.

(As studied in earlier contexts, the five features are: (i) `Existence` is not a part, product or property of the world (ii) `Existence` is an independent entity which pervades the world (iii) `Existence` is not limited by the boundaries of the world (iv) `Existence` continues even after the resolution of the world and (v) the surviving `Existence` is not accessible because of the absence of the world.)

That definition of the Chandhoghya Upanishad must be remembered by the seeker, not later, but, at the very time of listening to the word `thath` . The pure `filtered` `Existence` , filtered / free from all the naama roopas – the pancha bhoothaas such as aakaasa, vaayu etc., and the different lokaas such as bhoo: , bhuva: etc., - that all-pervading `Existence` alone should be understood as the meaning of the word, when listening to the word `thath`. In the intellect of the student, the word `thath` is retained as pure `Existence`.

The next word that the teacher uses is `thvam`. When the student listens to this word `thvam`, which word literally means `you`, and naturally, when addressed to the student by the teacher, understood as `I`, the Conscious being, that the student is. But, the conscious being is not pure; it is mixed with a lot of incidental attributes, which are thrown into `me` – some attributes from the sthoola sareeram, some attributes from the sookshma sareeram etc. In the normal course, `I` is associated with several attributes, borrowed from the sareerathrayam. So, what does / should the prepared intellect of the discerning student do, when he hears the word `thvam` from the Guru? It `gives off` / should `give off` , all the attributes to the respective sareeram and `I` should remain as the `sareerI`, the Witness Consciousness – the saakshi chaithanyam.

At this stage, in the intellect of the student, two 'things' are present – 'that' (meaning 'Pure Existence') and 'thvam' (meaning 'Pure Consciousness') and the stage is set for a 'marriage' between the two.

It is common knowledge, that, in a Vaidhika wedding, before the actual wedding ceremony, certain rituals are gone through separately for the bridegroom and separately for the bride. In a similar manner, in understanding the true import of the mahaavaakyam, the above two processes – viz., proper understanding of the word 'that' and proper understanding of the word 'thvam' – have been completed.

At this stage, in the student's intellect, 'Sath' is existing separately and 'chith' is existing separately. Then comes the link between the two, the word 'as' - (to continue with the wedding analogy) - the priest solemnizing the 'marriage'.

The word 'as' establishes "you' are 'that'" – that, there is no difference between 'Pure Existence – Brahman' and 'Pure Consciousness – Jeeva'.

As a consequence of this equation, 'I', the 'chith' am not located in the body; 'I', the 'chith am the 'sath' principle, which is not localized anywhere but is all-pervading.

I, the 'chith, am 'sath'. Therefore, my sense of localization has to be dropped. When I merely say "I' am 'chith", there is a sense of localization, because Consciousness is experienced only in the body and not experienced outside the body. But, the moment the 'sath-chith' equation takes place / when chith is equated to sath, the sense of 'localization' goes away, because 'Existence' is everywhere.

'I' am there, everywhere in the form of 'IS'. 'I' am the sath-chith- aathmaa, who is all-pervading.

118. Chapter III- Verses 1 and 2 (22-11-2008)

Sureswaraachaarya is analyzing how the mahhavaakyam works in the intellect of a prepared student; in other words, the intellectual process, at the time of receiving the message, through the maahaavaakyaa, is being described by him.

The mahaavaakyam that the Aachaaryaa has taken up for the study, is 'thath thvam asi'. When the word 'thath', is heard by the student, he understands, that, it is a pronoun, which means 'that'.

As is known, a pronoun stands for / refers to a noun which has been mentioned earlier. In Sanskrit, it is termed 'poorvoktha paraamarshi sarva naamā'.

This 'thaththvamas' mahaavakyam occurs in the 6th chapter of the Chaandoghya Upanishad. Therefore, to understand the import of the pronoun 'thath' in this mahaavaakyam, the student has to refer to that portion of the Chaandhoghya Upanishad, where the mahaavaakyam and the pronoun 'thath' occur. And, in that portion, we find that Uddhaalaka Aaruni, the teacher of the mahaavaakyam, first introduces Brahman as pure 'Existence', which alone had existed, before the arrival of all the naamaroopas.

The exact text of his declaration is "sadheva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam" (VI.2.1 – C.U.) - "O! Good looking one! In the beginning this was 'Existence' alone, One only, without a second".

What is the definition of 'Pure Existence'? Ans: As had been discussed in the earlier class and in other contexts also,

- (1) 'Pure Existence' is not a part, product or property of any product which is to be created later; not even a property of space, because space itself is to arrive later.
- (2) It is an independent entity which pervades and lends existence to all the other later created naamaroopaprapanchaa
- (3) The 'Pure Existence' is not bound by the boundaries of any object - both space wise and time wise boundaries.
- (4) The 'Pure Existence' continues to survive, even after the disintegration of the entire universe, including time and space
- (5) But, the 'Pure Existence' that survives, is not available for any transaction, because, transactions require naamaroopaa medium.

That pure Existence is first introduced in the 6th chapter of the Chaandhoghya Upanishad; and, thereafter the guru, Uddhaalaka, teaching his son and disciple, Svetaketu, points out

“the entire creation is nothing but naamaroopaa addition on that pure Existence. Upon the adhishtaanam`sath, all the namaropaas have been superimposed; and they enjoy a lower order of reality”.

And, later, in that same chapter (shashtodhyaayaa) of the Chaandhoghya Upanishad, the Creation is elaborated as boothathraya srushti / thribootha srushti, instead of the usual panchabootha srushti; and, instead of pancheekaranam, the Upanishad talks of thrivrithkaranam.

All of them have been talked about, inclusive of the arrival of body-mind complex – “Annamayagum hi soumya mana: aapomaya: praana: thejomayee vaak” (VI. 5. 4) – “O! Good looking one! Mind is surely made of food, vital force is made of water, speech is made of fire”.

Uddhaalaka Aaruni then tells Svethakethu: “Your praana, your mind etc. are also only naamaroopaaas, which are objects of experience and superimposed on pure Existence. Because of this, i.e. since all the naamaroopaaas are superimposed on Existence, Existence must be there behind all the naamaroopaaas, just as water must be there behind all oceans, waves, bubbles, froth etc. Existence cannot be elsewhere but is the very adhishtaanam behind all the naamaroopaaas. All naamaroopaaas are objects of experience and conversely, all experienced objects are superimposed naamaroopaaas. Even desa and kaalaa are created objects, superimposed on pure Existence. And, therefore, you have to negate all the experienced objects/ naamaroopaaas”.

As advised, Svethakethu negates the world as superimposed naamaroopaa; negates the body; negates the mind; negates everything as superimposed. And, he wants to experience the Pure Existence.

That is his desire: viz. (i) To negate all the naamaroopaaas, which are experienced (whatever is experienced is only naamaroopaa) and (ii) after negating everything including thoughts, which also are only created naamaroopaaas, to experience the ‘Pure Existence’.

With that intense desire (the Tamil word ஆவல் is more apt in conveying the intensity of his desire), he is sitting in nirvikalpakasamaadhi, to experience that Pure Existence. At that time, Uddhaalakaa warns him: “Never try to experience the Pure Existence, because it is not an object which can be experienced”.

Then, what is it? Uddhaalakaa answers: “It is ‘you’ ” (Thath thvam asi)?

What is that 'you'? It is not the body 'you', which has been negated; not the 'mind' you, also negated; not the thoughts 'you', also negated; not even the blankness 'you', which is also negated. After negating all of them, what is left behind is the Pure Consciousness principle.

'I' am the chith thathvam, who am wanting to experience the sath thatvam - the Pure namaroopa-rahitha-sath.

At that crucial juncture, Uddhaalakaa says: "*eithaadhmiam idhaagum sarvam thathsathyam sa aathmaa thath thvam asi Svethaketho" - "That which is this subtle essence, all this has got That as the Self. That is the Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That, O! Svethaketu!" (C.U. VI. 9.4).

And, thus, it can be seen, that, the pronoun 'thath' means / refers to 'Pure Existence'. Sath is not an 'experiencable' object. It happens to be the very Experiencer/ Subject itself.

This is what is called sath- chith equation.

Thereafter, i.e., after listening to this equation properly, if the student has a prepared, observant and absorbing mind, he will claim "I am the sath". And, whatever definitions were given to sath, he will apply to 'I' also, viz., as: "'I' am not a part, product or property of the universe; 'I' pervade the universe, lending it existence; 'I' am not limited by the boundaries of the universe; I continue to survive even after the entire naamaroopa prapanchaa resolves; 'I', that Sath, is free from all types of limitations".

This knowledge is not something to be postponed; but to be absorbed, as efficiently as a sponge does, at the time of sravanam itself. Sravanam positively works for an observant listener.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says: "mahaavaakyam is an instantaneously- liberating primary teaching of the Upanishads."

- यदा एव - (The student), at the very time of listening itself (sravana kaale eva),

Then, what is the purpose of mananam and nidhidhyaasanam? Mananam and nidhidhyaasanam are not for 'becoming' sath, because 'I' am always (am / was/ will ever be) sath; nor for 'experiencing' sath, because sath is never an object of experience. They (mananam and nidhidhyaasanam) are meant to break our habitual orientation. One may call them 'orientation-dismantling exercises'.

And, what does this 'dismantling of orientation' mean? "Moksha is something that is to happen in future" is the orientation, even after long periods of sravanam. The Vedhaanthic student, even after 25 years of sravanam, only 'hopes', that, sometime in the future, he will be able to claim "I am also liberated".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "this hope for a future moksha is a false orientation. Moksha is my svarooopa; Moksha is to be claimed 'here and now'".

Nidhidhyaasanam is prescribed only to break this wrong orientation, viz., "mokshaa is something that will happen to me, sometime in the future".

The claim of mokshaa has to happen at the time of sravanam. This is the significance of the use of the word 'yadhaa' by the Aachaaryaa, meaning 'sravana kaale eva'.

- अवैति - grasps / jaanaathi
- तदर्थ - the meaning of the word thath (occurring in the maaha vaakayam),

And, what is the meaning of thath? Ans: 'Pure Existence'

This is aparoksha jnaanam not paroksha jnaanam. Paroksha jnaanam is not possible, because , paroksha jnaanam is only of an object which is far away. One can get only the paroksha jnaanam of Gangodhri / Kailaasaa etc., because they are 'located' far away. One will get only 'indirect' knowledge of distant objects.

But, 'knowledge of Brahmar' can never be indirect knowledge, because Brahman is not far away, in terms of place also and in terms of time also.

The belief that "Brahman is available only in nirvikalapa samaadh" is also a result of wrong understanding. What the Upanishads aver is that Advaitam Brahman is available in all the avasthaas; therefore, sravana kaale eva (at the time of sravanam itself) , Brahman is available directly - aparkoshathayaa.

'Yadhaa' - 'sravana kaale'; 'Avaithee' means 'aparokashthayaa jaanaathi'.

Every word in this portion is significant.

How (in what form) does the student know Brahmar? Not as something remote; but-

- त्वमर्थव - as identical with 'I', the Self,

'I', the Self, is the ever-experienced Consciousness. One does not have to work for the experience of Consciousness; one has to work for the experience of everything else other than Consciousness; but, Consciousness is an entity for whose experience one need not work, because Consciousness is ever / all the time experienced, just as one experiences the light all the time, which (experience of light) is proved by one experiencing the objects around him. If 'light' is not being experienced, the objects around also will not be experienced.

Experience of every object presupposes the experience of light. Similarly, every knowledge presupposes the experience of Consciousness; therefore Consciousness is the ever experienced Self.

And what is Brahman? Brahman also happens to be that 'I', the Self, which is the ever-experienced Consciousness. This means that Brahman is ever experienced as aham or in the form of 'I'. All the people are experiencing Brahman all the time.

This may give rise to a question: "In that case i.e., if everyone is experiencing Brahman, all the time, as the Self ever-experienced Consciousness, where is the need for the study of Vedhaanthaa?"

Ans : Vedhaanthaa is not for the experience of Brahman or Aathmaa. The purpose of / need for studying Vedhaanthaa is explained as follows: "Along with the experience of 'I', the Brahman, experience of the body (sthoola and sookshma sareeraani) is also there. Thus, we have got experience of a mixture – the Sathyam Brahman and the mithyaa body. And, we commit the mistake of taking the attributes of the body, as the attributes of 'my' self. The aim of Vedhaanthaa is not to give us the experience of Brahman but correcting this mistake - transferring every experienced attribute to the body, so that, once this transference is done, an individual, after saying 'I am', will not add 'a male' (or such similar descriptions) , because descriptions such as 'male' have been transferred to the body".

"I' am not a male (or a female). 'I' am the genderless Consciousness principle".

Vedhaanthaa is required to make the seeker realize this fact and make him stop with the claim " 'I' am", instead of saying "I am fat"; "I am happy" etc. , the fatness, happiness etc., being attributes of the body only (sthoola or sookshma) .

Vedhaanthaa is not required for experiencing Brahman, because, Brahman is ever experienced as 'thvamarthaiva' i.e. 'in the meaning of the word thvam'.

And what is the meaning of thvam? Ans: Saakshi chaithanyam.

- तदा एव - (and) at that very moment,
- अवाक्यार्थतां प्रतिपद्यते - gets the knowledge of the aathmaa, which is not a prameyam.

'Avaakyarthathaa' means 'aprameyathvam'. How does one get this meaning ?

It is explained thus: vaakyam is a pramaanam; one of the six pramaanams is sabda pramaanam; vaakyam is a sabda pramaanam; 'vaakya arthaa' means the 'prameyam of the sabda pramaanamvaakyam'. Therefore, 'Vaakyarthathaa' means 'prameyathvam' and 'avaakyarthathaa' means 'aprameyathvam'.

'Aprameyathvam' means 'thriputi atheethathvam'.

So, then itself, the student understands "'I' am the Pure Existence which is beyond the thriputi of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam". Therefore, 'avaakyarthathaa' is a technical word for 'thriputi-atheetha-thureeyathvam'.

Prathibhadhyathe – 'I' 'become' thureeyam. ('Become' is, strictly speaking, not the right word, since the fact is "'I' am always thureeyam", and, therefore, used here, within inverted commas.)

That means, 'I' am neither viswa nor thyjasaa nor praagnyaa. The student has to instantaneously remember the famous seventh manthraa of Maandookya Upanishadh – "Naantha: pragnyam na bahi: pragnyam nobhayatha: pragnyam na pragnyaanaganam na pragnyam na apragnyam | Adhrishtam avyavahaaryam agrahyam alakshanam achinthyam avyapadesyam ekaathmaprathyayasaaram prapanchosamam saantham sivam advaitham chathurtham manyanthe sa aathmaa sa vignyeya: |" – "They consider the Thureeya to be that which is not the outward Consciousness, not the inward Consciousness, not the Consciousness turned both sides, not a mass of Consciousness, not the all-knowing Consciousness, not unconscious; beyond perception, beyond transaction, beyond grasp, beyond inference, beyond thoughts, beyond description ; traceable through the unbroken self-awareness ; free from the world, tranquil, auspicious and non-dual. It is the Self. It is to be known".

'I' am the thureeyam; 'I' am not the known object; not even the 'knower'; 'I' am the 'Existence', pervading the thriputi but transcending the thriputi.

What happens if I am one of the thriputi?

If I am a pramaatha or a pramaanam or a prameyam, I will become a limited entity; and, therefore, through the mahaavaakyaa, I understand myself not to be a limited entity, but the limitless thureeyam.

And, which thureeyam is:

- गीर्मनसोः सृतिं न प्रतिपद्यते - And, which (aathmaa or thureeyam) does not fall within the range of words and thoughts.

'sruthi' means 'range' / 'field' / scope; 'ghee.' means 'words', which is a pramaanam; 'mana.' (in this context) means 'thought', which is also a pramaanam.

'I' transcend the range of any pramaanam, in the form of thought, word, sense organs etc.

This is because whatever falls within any pramaana is a prameyam (an object) and 'Pure Existence' is not available for any pramaanam.

In short, "thureeyam prathibhadyathe; gheer manaso: sruthim na prathibhadhyate" –" 'I' 'become' thureeyam and 'I' transcend the range of any pramaanam, in the form of thought, word, sense organs etc." | And, when does this happen? Ans: At the time of sravanam itself, if sravanam is done properly.

And, of course, for doing proper sravanam also, one has to practice sravanam for a number of years. Then alone, it gradually becomes proper sravanam; and, even as the sravanam becomes proper, the student receives the teaching. (In a lighter vein: at that time only, the student gives credit to the teacher, saying 'now the teacher has started teaching properly'. Really speaking, what is happening, is that repeated sravanam makes the sravanam proper).

- इति - This is the message.
- कुतः एतद् अध्यवसीयते - How is such a conclusion made?

Adhyavaseeyathe – nischeeyathe / concluded / ascertained.

Sureswaraacharya says:

- यस्मात् - Because of the following reason.

In fact, the teaching of the entire third chapter is "(i) sravanam itself can give aparoksha jnaanam and (ii) jnaanam and moksham are simultaneous".

"You need not postpone jnaanam and mokshaa, if you are listening to your Aachaaryaa properly" is the message that Sureswaraachaaryaa is struggling to convey, throughout the third chapter. But, maayaa is so powerful, that the student will still say "Yes, Swamiji ! Everything is very clear. But, how can I claim / am liberated, of all the people? I need your special blessing to achieve liberation."

What is the reason? Ans: There is some prathibhandhaa, sometimes dhrishta prathibhandhaa and sometimes adhrishta prathibhandhaa. Therefore, all the saadhanaas are required not for the 'understanding', which every student has; but for removal of the various obstacles (prathibhandhaas), removal of which alone, take time.

Chapter III: Verse 2 –

तत्पदं प्रकृतार्थं स्यात्त्वंपदं प्रत्यगात्मनि ।

नीलोत्पलवदेताभ्यां दुःख्यनात्मत्ववारणे ॥ २ ॥

The term 'That' signifies the subject-matter under consideration. The term 'Thou' signifies the inner Self of experience. As in the expression 'Blue Lotus', subjection to misery and the character of being non-Self are negated by these two terms.

So, what happens when the student listens to the words 'thatH' and 'thvam'', in the statement 'thatH thvam asi?' (The word 'thvam'' means 'you'; but, when the teacher says 'thvam'', meaning 'you', the student has, naturally, to convert it to 'aham'', meaning 'I'. Also, he has to convert the word 'thatH' as 'Brahman'').

What does this proximity of these two words – 'thatH' meaning 'Brahman'' and 'thvam'' meaning 'aham'' – do?

Sureswaraachaarya conveys the idea through an example – 'neelam uthpalam''. 'neelam'' means 'blue' and 'uthpalam'' means a 'lotus' or a 'lily'. Suppose a person listens to a statement 'there is a blue lily flower'. Because of the proximity of the word 'blue' to the word 'lily', what happens? The word 'lily' conveys the meaning of the lily group of flowers. If the listener hears only the word 'lily', his mind thinks of the lily group of flowers, which flowers, he knows, come in different colours. But, when he hears the word 'blue lily'', all other colours are excluded from the substance 'lily' and in his mind only a particular flower, 'blue lily', comes. So, what is the function of the word 'blue', in this statement? Ans: 'Exclusion of all other colours'. This exclusion is called 'vyavrutthi:'' The word 'blue' excludes all other colours. 'Anyavarna vyavrutthi:'' is the function of the word 'blue'.

In the same manner, when the listener hears only the word 'blue', his mind thinks of several blue objects – a blue chair / a blue cloth / a wall painted blue / a pillar painted blue etc. But, when the term 'blue lily' is mentioned, what is the function of the word 'lily', in the term? It excludes all the other objects except the lily. "Exclusion of all objects other than lily" - "uthpala bhinna dravya vyaavrutthi" - is the function of the word 'lily'.

The word 'blue' removes all other attributes and the word 'lily' excludes all other substances. Thus, respectively excluding all other attributes and substances, 'blue' and 'lily' come together to specify one particular entity, having 'lily' status and 'blue colour' status. This is what happens in the mind of the listener.

Sureswaraacharya says that this should happen at the time of hearing the teaching 'thath thvam asI' also. When I listen to the word 'thathI', the word means sath Brahman, whose nature is aanandhaa, as the Upanishads declare, as, for example, in Thaithreeya Upanishad, Bhrugu valli (6): "Aanandho brahmethi vyajaanaath | Aanandhaath eva kalu imaani boothaani jaayanthe | Aanandhena jaathaani jeevanthi | Aanandham prayanthi abhisamvisantheethi" – "Aanandhaa is Brahman, because from Aanandhaa alone all these beings are born, the born beings exist by means of Aanandhaa and they go back to Aanandhaa, while resolving" |

Thus, aanandhaa is the nature of Brahman. When that Brahman is placed in the proximity of aham, what does this do? The aanandhaa excludes all other non-aanandhaa attributes from 'me'. Just as the word 'blue' removes / excludes all the other colours from the lily (in the example cited), the word Brahman, Aanandhaa, excludes all other attributes from 'aham', the chaithanya aathmaa.

The mahaavaakyam instantaneously knocks off the most commonly experienced attribute, 'dhu:kham' or 'worry', from 'me' and hands over the attribute to anything other than aathmaa, which means that the attribute belongs to anaathmaa. Thus, after mahaavaakyam, if the vaakyam is understood properly, the seeker should never say, for the rest of his life "'I' am worried". Of course, "'I' am the illuminator of the worrying mind" is an acceptable statement. But, the statement "'I' am worried" should/ would never be made by the jignyaasu, who has successfully assimilated the mahaavaakyam.

Thus, the proximity of the word Brahman to 'me', takes away the dhu:kham attribute from 'me'. This is the first consequence of the proximity of the two words Brahman and 'I'.

In the same manner, because of the proximity of 'I' with Brahman, in Brahman also, a very important attribute gets excluded. Earlier, as explained, the 'worry' attribute was removed from 'me', because of the proximity of the word Brahman to 'I'. Now, a powerful attribute, which creates several problems, is going to be removed from Brahman.

What is that? Because the word 'I' is the subject and that subjective word is used along with Brahman, Brahman, after sravanam of the mahaavaakyam, should not be taken to be an object either to be experienced or to be 'merged with' after death.

In general, most seekers have the hope "somehow I should exhaust praarabhdhaa, and after death 'merge' with Brahman, so that I will never come back".

"Escaping' from the world and 'joining' the Lord" is the hope that a Vedhaanthic student has, even after long years of study. But, in an intelligent and discriminating seeker, such a thought should never arise, since how can 'I' 'escape' from this world or how can 'I' 'join' the Lord, when that Brahman or the Lord happens to be 'I'?

In fact, during Vedhaanthic study, whenever the word 'Brahman' is mentioned by the guru, the thought pattern of a diligent student, should be, that the teacher is talking about 'me'.

The student should not also think of entering into nirvikalpa samaadhi, looking for a mystic experience, assuming that Brahman will be experienced in a flash. This is also a wrong expectation, since, if this is the case, once the seeker comes back from nirvikalpa samaadhi, he will again lose sight of Brahman.

So, Sureswaraacharya says: "Never entertain such thoughts or expectations; on the other hand, firmly maintain the conviction 'Brahman is myself'. Then alone the simultaneousness of sravanam and mokshaa can be appreciated".

This attitude is (what Swamiji refers to, using the term) the 'binary format'.

- तत्पदं प्रकृतार्थं स्यात् - The word 'that' has a contextual meaning.

Prakruthartham means 'a contextual meaning'.

This was explained earlier. The context where the word 'that' occurs is the 6th chapter of the Chaandoghya Upanishad, where it means 'Sath' or 'Pure Existence'. Therefore, 'prakruthartham' means 'sathroopartham'.

- त्वंपदं प्रत्यगात्मनि - The term 'thvam' signifies the inner Self of experience.

When the word `thvam` is mentioned, the seeker should not look outside for something such as a mystic experience. That 'looking out' tendency should go away, since it is the biggest obstacle. On the other hand, the mind should fall back into 'myself', who is 'looking out'. That 'looker-out' is Brahman and not the 'looked-out'.

As explained, because of the proximity of the words `that` and `thvam`, two misconceptions are eliminated. They are mentioned by the Aachaaryaa, in the second line of the verse.

- दुःखी अनात्मत्व वारणे एताभ्यां - 'Worry' and the 'character of being non-Self' are negated, by these two terms coming together,

The word `Dhu:khee` indicates 'misery' or 'worry'. "I am worried" is a constant sruthi, for most people. 'What I am worried about' (i.e. the object of worry) changes. But, 'that I am worried' is (in a lighter vein) more permanent than Brahman itself. That 'worry' attribute which is added to me is knocked off, by the proximity of the word Brahman to 'I'. In other words, the proximity of the word 'Brahman' to 'I', is the eliminator of the 'worry' from 'I'. The words `dhu:khee` and `vaarane` indicate the process of `dhu:khithva vaaranam` – 'elimination of worry or misery'.

Similarly, the proximity of the word 'I' to Brahman, (in aham Brahma asmi or that thvam asi) knocks off 'anaathmathvam' from Brahman, the word 'anaathmathvam', meaning 'objective status' of Brahman.

What do you mean by objective status? Most seekers 'look for' Brahma anubhavaa. This very attempt for Brahma anubhava reveals the misconceived, but, quite common orientation "there is something called Brahman; I have to practice intense meditation; and, during the meditation, at a particular moment, that Brahman will be experienced in a flash and after that, Brahman will not be available".

This 'experience-orientation' indicates, that, the seeker has classified Brahman as an object ; But, what is the fact? Brahman is the chaithanyam experienced all the time, in all the avasthaas, as Sankara Bhagavad Paadhaa declares in his Maneesha Panchakam: "jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa yaa samvith vijrumbhathe".

Under such circumstances, why should I work for Brahma Anubhavaa, which Brahman is all the time experienced? Brahman is not an object of experience. Brahman is 'me'; 'I' do not need to become Brahman. Neither do 'I' need the experience of Brahman.

The 'objective status' is negated by the proximity of the word `aham` to `Brahmam`.

Thus, dhu:kithvam and anaathmathvam are vaarane – eliminated.

'Vaarane' is a noun (dvi vachanam), meaning the '(two) eliminated'.

Eliminations of these two attributes, dhu:kithvam and anaathmathvam, take place because of the proximity of the words thath and thvam to each other. The Aachaaryaa gives the example of the 'blue lily' (as explained earlier):

- नीलोत्पलवत् - like the 'blue lily' statement eliminating colours other than blue and flowers other than lily, by the proximity of the word 'blue' and 'lily' to each other.

And, suppose a person asks "I have understood the message of mahaavaakyam; and I have realized that I should never say 'I am worried' ; and, as a consequence, I may promise to myself that I will never say 'I am worried' and always try to claim 'I am not worried'. But, even as I try to say 'I am not worried', I am experiencing the worry; when I am intimately experiencing the worry, how can I say 'I am not worried?' "

This is where mananam helps. Mananam is meant for such questions as 'when I am experiencing worry, how can I say I am not worried?', that may arise in the intellect.

The student's argument is 'I have worry, because I experience worry'. The guru has the responsibility to correct the student, based on Vedhaanthaa, which says 'you have no worry, because you experience worry'. This is to be understood very clearly.

So, to repeat, Vedhaanthaa exhorts "You have no worry, because you experience worry; experienced attributes belong to experienced objects and never to the 'experiencer' subject. May you understand this through repeated mananam".

An important principle of Vedhaanthaa: "Experienced attributes do not belong to the 'experiencer' subject but only to the experienced objects".

Vedhaanthaa does not deny the experience of worry. It only denies the wrong conclusion arrived at, based on the experience of worry.

An example can make this clearer: A scientist does not negate the experience of the sunrise; no scientist can; science only negates the conclusion based on the experience, viz., "the sun is moving around the earth". This wrong conclusion alone is negated; the experience of sunrise and sunset is not negated.

In the same manner, Vedhaanthaa will never negate the experience of worry, because Vedhaanthaa knows that human minds are very creative with regard to worries.

Vedhaanthaa does not negate worry; but, negates the conclusion "since I am experiencing the worry, I am worried".

Instead, Vedhaanthaa points out: "The worry does not belong to you; the worry belongs only to your anaathmaa mind".

And, one does not have total control over the anaathmaa mind, because, one is only a contributor never a controller with regard to anaathmaa.

Important lessons to be drawn are, therefore: "You may try to improve the anaathmaa; but, do not mistake that anaathmaa as yourself.

"Never conclude 'I have worry'. If you do, you will have two worries

- (1) the original worry and then
- (2) worrying 'I have got worry'.

"Worry is an attribute of anaathmaa, which is never under your total control. You can try to improve anaathmaa; but, you can never make it perfect. Perfect body / perfect mind / perfect intellect etc. do not exist. They will all have jvaram; you avoid anujvaram (Swami Vidhyaaranyaa's Panchadasa – Chapter 7).

"Do not identify with anaathmaa".

The interesting thing is that when one stops worrying about worry, worry goes away.

More technical aspects are to be discussed in the following verses.

119. Chapter III, Verses 2 and 3 (29-11-2008)

Analyzing the function of the mahaavaakyam, 'thath thvam asI', Sureswaraachaaryaa points out, that, primarily, the mahaavaakyam removes two misconceptions, one centered on jeevaathmaa, 'I', the Subject and the other centered on Paramaathmaa, i.e. the thath padhaartha: |

According to Vedhaanthat, whatever idea we have about ourselves, has to be a misconception only; this is because, by ourselves, we do not have any way of knowing our true nature, except the fact, that, I am a Conscious being. Other than knowing this much, we can never have the resources to know who exactly 'I' am.

This is again because of two reasons. One reason is, that, 'I', the Subject, is never available as an object; since Subject is never available for objectification, I have no way of seeing me – objectifying me. Therefore, I cannot know myself, just as the eyes have no way of seeing themselves. This is one reason.

The second reason is, that, all the experienced attributes can belong to the experienced objects only; experienced attributes can never belong to the 'Experiencer'- Subject. Physical attributes belong to the physical body, which is an object of experience; emotional attributes belong to the mind, which is also an object of experience; and intellectual attributes belong to the intellect, which is also an object of experience. Thus, since all experienced attributes belong only to the objective world and not to the Subject 'I', in the absence of any attribute, "what exactly is 'my' nature", we have no way of knowing at all .

And, thus, no one knows who he or she really is; and, without knowing who 'I' really am, whatever conclusion I make about myself, will be a misconception only. Thus, every individual has got misconceptions regarding oneself, the basic misconception being "'I' am a finite individual".

In the same manner, when the scriptures describe Paramaathma as 'Pure Existence', we have no way of identifying how the 'Pure Existence' will be, because, Pure Existence is also not available for perception. Whatever object that can be described in terms of at least one of the five attributes – sabda, sparsa, roopa, rasa and gandha - will alone be available for perception. Since 'Pure Existence' cannot be described by any one of these attributes, 'Pure Existence' is also not available for perception. This fact results in the second misconception: "Pure Existence is a mysterious Object existing somewhere".

So, one misconception is: "'I' am a finite entity"; this is a misconception centered on 'I', the Subject. The second misconception is centered on Paramaathmaa, the Pure Existence, that, "'Pure Existence' is some kind of a mysterious Object, which we have to experience or we have to attain or we have to reach".

The job or function of the mahaavaakyams is to knock off both these misconceptions. When the word thath is used in proximity to the word 'me' (i.e., 'I'), the first misconception removed is that "'I' am a finite entity". By bringing 'sath' along with 'me', sath being 'Existence', 'I' am no more a finite entity; the finitude centered on 'me' is removed.

Expressing the same idea in a different manner: When 'Existence' is associated with 'me', my notion regarding 'my' finitude is knocked off; I am the 'Existence', not localized in one place; but, all-pervading.

Thus, because of the proximity of sath, I remove the misconception of localization centered on 'my'self'.

Similarly, because of the proximity of the word 'I', with thath, i.e. 'Pure Existence', the misconception regarding 'Pure Existence' viz., that, "'Pure Existence' is a mysterious remote object" also goes away. Both the 'mystery' and the 'remoteness' regarding Existence are removed; that mysterious and remote 'Existence' becomes 'I', the Conscious being – not any more a mysterious and remote object.

Thus, Param Brahma becomes 'my'self; and 'I' become limitless.

This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa conveys by the term "dhu:khyanaathma vaarane". Mahaavaakyam removes the 'finitude' (which is called 'dhu:kithvam', in this context), centered on 'my'self; and it removes the 'remoteness' (which is called anaathmathvam, in this context) with regard to Paramaathma. Both of them are 'knocked off' simultaneously by the mahaavaakyam.

Both coalescing together, there is One all-pervading 'Existence- Consciousness' alone, left behind. And, it is not an entity which can be objectified; it is 'myself' the sath- chith- aathmaa.

This idea is being presented by the Aachaaryaa, through a technical analysis, in the following portion.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 3 – Chapter III:

एवं कृतान्वयव्यतिरेको वाक्यादेवावाक्यार्थं प्रतिपद्यत इत्युक्तमतस्तद्व्याख्यानाय सूत्रोपन्यासः।

Thus, one who has reasoned in this manner, grasps through the proposition itself, an import beyond the import of the proposition. In interpretation of this assertion, the principle is formulated in an aphoristic form:

- एवं - In this manner,
- कृत अन्वय व्यतिरेकः - the one who has done the analysis of the variables and non-variables, both at subjective and objective levels,

What is the non-variable principle, at the objective level? Ans: 'Existence' alone is the non-variable at the objective level. In the external world, everything else is subject to change all the time. The only non-changing factor is "'is'ness'" or 'Existence'. Thus, the diligent seeker has filtered out the non-variable 'Existence' from the objective world and has set aside all the variable factors of sabdha-sparsa-roopa-rasa-gandha attributes.

And, at the Subjective level, the seeker similarly has filtered out the non-variable principle. What is that non-variable principle at the Subjective level? Ans: 'Pure Consciousness' is the only non-variable, at the Subjective level.

In jaagrath avasthaa, Consciousness is there; 'what I am Conscious of' varies; but, 'that 'I' am Conscious' is non-variable. Therefore, the Consciousness principle is the non-variable, filtered out at the Subjective level.

Thus, 'Existence' is outside; 'Consciousness' is inside. 'Tying them up' is the job of the mahaa vaakyam.

'Krutha anvaya vyathirkha:' is the name of the student who has removed all the naama roopaas, at the Subjective level also and at the objective level also. In his mind, only two things are there - 'Pure Existence' outside and 'Pure Consciousness' inside, both rid of all the naama roopaa attributes. (In a lighter vein: One is the bride and the other is the bridegroom.)

And, when the student is ready with this mindset, the mahaa vaakyam comes and says:

वाक्यादेव - through the mahaa vaakyam itself,

The mahaa vaakyam talks about the 'Pure Existence', by the word 'that' and 'Pure Consciousness' with the word 'thvam' and equates these two by the word 'as' – meaning 'is equal to'. From this mahaa vaakyam,

- अवाख्यार्थं प्रतिपद्यते - receives the knowledge of this equation.

What is that equation? Ans: "I", the 'Pure Consciousness', am the 'Pure Existence'.

What is the meaning of the word 'Avaakyartham'? It is a technical word, already explained in the earlier session. The word means 'beyond the thriputi / 'beyond the division of knower-known-knowing instrument'.

'I' am the 'Pure Existence' and the 'Pure Consciousness', which is the medium in which the thriputi is functioning, but, 'I' am not a participant in the thriputi vyavahaaraa.

If I take 'my'self as one of the thriputi, what will be the consequence ? Ans: I will become a finite entity. (This was also discussed earlier).

By knowing that 'I' am the 'Existence - Consciousness', which is beyond the thriputi, 'I' become a non-participant in jnaana vyavahaaraa and a non-participant in karma vyavahaaraas also. This is the message that the diligent student is supposed to receive. 'Prathipadhyathe' means 'understands' / 'grasps'.

- इति उक्तं अतः - This is the message; thereafter, (implying 'since this is the message, that is to be grasped by sravanam')
- तद् व्याख्यानाय - to dwell upon this message itself, by elaboration,

'Vyaakyaanam' means 'elaboration'.

- सूत्र उपन्यासः - I am starting with the soothra vaakyam in this sloka.

In this soothraa slokaa, the Aachaaryaa is going to point out that this message is received intellectually, through three stages. He says: "This message has to be received by the trained intellect not in one shot, but, in three stages; and I want to present in this slokaa those three stages, in a capsule form, which will later be elaborated in this entire chapter".

- 'Upanyaasa:' means 'presentation'.
- 'Soothra upanyaasa:' means 'presentation of the synopsis / capsule (of the absorption process)'.

The following sloka is a very, very famous one, which has been quoted in Vedhaantha Saaraa, and whose import is studied elaborately by Vedhaanthic students. Sureswaraachaarya himself explains the verse in detail, later.

Chapter III: Verse 3 –

सामानाधिकरण्यं च विशेषणविशेष्यता ।

लक्ष्यलक्षणसंबन्धः पदार्थप्रत्यगात्मनाम् ॥ ३ ॥

Co-ordination, subject-predicate relation and indirect indication are the three ways governing terms, their meanings and the inner Self.

The three stages are only enumerated here. Sureswaraachaarya does not elaborate on them here, because this is a soothra vaakyam.

What are these three stages?

The first is:

- सामानाधिकरण्य सम्बन्ध(ग्रहणम्) : - (The understanding of) the sambhandhaa called saamaanaadhikaranyam.

The word 'grahanam' is supplied and means 'understanding' or 'grasping'. 'Sambhandhaa' means relationship. The first sambhandhaa is called 'saamaanaadhikaranyam'. Details will be explained later. At this stage, only enumeration is being done.

'Samaanaadhikaranyam sambhandha grahanam / darsanam' is the first stage.

The second stage is viseshana viseshya sambhandha: |

- विशेषण विशेष्यता संबन्ध(ग्रहणम्) : - (The understanding of) the relationship between viseshana and viseshya .

Relationship no. 1 has to be noticed first and relationship no. 2 is to be noticed next.

The third stage is:

- लक्ष्य लक्षण संबन्ध(ग्रहणम्) : - (Observation or understanding of) the (third) sambhandhaa , which is called lakshya lakshana sambhandhaa.

The term 'Sambhandha grahanam' has to be added to all three, viz., saamaanaadhikaranyam, viseshana-viseshyathaa and lakshya-lakshana.

The mahavaakyam, 'thathvamas' is quite popularly known and is often quoted very casually. But, it is important to note, that this single vaakyam has been analyzed at length, by all Aachaaryaas , because when a serious spiritual seeker assimilates the message of the vaakyam thoroughly, he/ she fulfills the purpose of not only his/ her present janma, but his / her innumerable earlier janmaas also. The huge project, anaadhi kaala pravruttha:, which all jeevaas carry out, by being born as a plant , an insect, an animal , a bird or a human, will be completed once the significance of the vaakyam is grasped thoroughly, during the human birth. If this opportunity in the human janma is missed, the jeeva has to go through the entire process again. The cycle will go on as a huge endless project, which will be completed only if this thathvamas' message is grasped and the message becomes a fact for the seeker.

Knowledge is knowledge only when the content of the knowledge is a fact for the seeker.

And, what should be that fact for the spiritual seeker? Ans: "I' am the Existence-Consciousness medium, in which the whole life's drama is eternally going on ; but, in 'me', nothing is happening. I was free / I am free/ I ever will be free. But, this drama is unstoppable and uncontrollable. I may be able to stop or change a few of them; but, many of them, I will not be able to stop. The eternal, unstoppable drama was / is going on and will go on; But, I have to only observe it, without passing any judgment – positive or negative. That alone is liberation. This life-drama eternally goes on in the medium called 'Existence - Consciousness'. 'I' can only be aware of the drama - but 'I' am a non-participant and therefore not a victim also."

This one important message, if it can become a fact / if I can see this as a fact, it is called 'knowledge'. 'Knowledge' is defined as 'that whose content is a fact for me'. If it is not a fact for me, it will be called only an 'information'. 'Information' does not liberate me; 'knowledge' alone liberates.

The difference between 'knowledge' and 'information' is that, content of an 'information' may not be a fact for me; but, content of 'knowledge' is a fact for me.

If this message "I' am the ever free nonparticipant observer of the things happening" is driven home to the seeker, mahaavaakya has successfully delivered the goods.

And, since it is a life-transforming message, it is worth putting in any amount of effort to convert the 'information' into 'knowledge', which (to repeat) means, the content of this, should be a fact for me, even when crisis situations come closer to me.

Even when tragic events happen in places remote and far away, we tend to be affected emotionally. Such situations can come closer - to our own city and to our own family also. But, it should be realized that events happening in remote places are anaathmaa events happening in anaathmaa places and close-by events are also only anaathmaa events happening in closer anaathmaa places.

Events will happen, quite often unstopably, in remote anaathma and in proximate anaathmaa also. We cannot control most of the events; we can only 'contribute' a little bit, at the body-mind levels; but, cannot totally control events and situations. For a person who remembers this fact, and the fifth capsule of Vedhaanthaa (as enunciated by Swamiji), viz., "By forgetting my nature, I convert life into a struggle and by remembering my nature, I convert life into a sport / entertainment", all events – even the worst tragic events - are entertainment. Conversely, if this message is forgotten, life becomes a burden and a problem.

Therefore, this message changes one's attitude towards every event in life, whether the event is a remote event or a very, very proximate event. It may be happening to one's very physical body, which is very, very close to one. As one grows older, the doctor may diagnose serious disorders in one's body; but, those disorders also are only events happening in anaathmaa. Even when such situations arrive, this message "anaathmaa events will happen; they cannot be stopped" must be ringing in a mature person's ears and mind. If one can have that 'internal space' (as Pujyasri Swami Dayananda calls it), one can stand aloof and watch, without any disturbance, events happening in one's own body and events happening in one's mind also, though the mind is even more proximate anaathmaa than the body.

We may not be able to stop certain emotions in the mind also. But, if I am able to 'watch' those emotions as a by-stander, remembering 'I' am the 'Existence – Consciousness' medium, and mind is one of the infinitesimal part of the total anaathmaa, I will not attach too much importance to the emotion or to the event leading to the emotion, because, I will know that, that both are only insignificant events, in the total anathmaa. If I can remember this fact even on the death-bed, then the message has been successfully driven home.

Since it is, thus, a life-altering message, all the Aachaaryaas attach a lot of importance to it and try to intellectually convince us with regard to this fact.

The problem is, that, of the entire humanity, only one percent may accept and assimilate this fact. 33% of the humanity may say "I am not convinced of this teaching, viz., 'I am the ever free Pure Existence-Consciousness'". Another 33% may say "I am convinced of the teaching as a fact; but, it is not a practical teaching. When problems come, I want parihaarams". A third group of another 33%, may say "It is convincing and, we concede, practical also. But, / am not ready for it yet".

Thus, a majority of the humanity sets aside this message and wants some other solutions for the problems in life. It is admittedly not easy

- (i) to be convinced of the message
- (ii) to conclude that the message is also practical, and
- (iii) having been convinced of the message and its practicability, to diligently try the 'binary format'.

Those people who receive the message properly and move to the 'binary format' are indeed very rare.

The Aachaaryaas are fully aware of this fact and therefore, in their infinite compassion for humanity, take enormous pains to convince people of this message.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is also struggling to convey the message. He says: " First, I am presenting the message as a soothram and later, I will dwell on the vyaakyaanam, so that, you will come to the binary format. Even when events jolt, shock and shatter you, you should maintain the objectivity 'this is also only an insignificant event on the infinite anaathmaad ".

As a first step, 'saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa', 'viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa' and 'lakshana lakshya sambhandhaa', in the mahaa vaakyam, 'thath thvam asi', are being presented by the Aachaaryaa for study.

Before entering the 'study', these three terms are briefly explained as below:

'Saamaanaadhikaranyam' is the relationship obtaining among two or more words – not between objects or people. In other words, it is an attribute existing among the words of a sentence. And, since it is a 'relationship', there must be two or more words, since, obviously, in a single word, we cannot talk of a 'relationship'.

And, what is that relationship? It is a relationship which comes when two or more words, used in apposition (side by side), reveal only one object. When, though the words are many, but, they are all descriptions relating to one object only, then such words are said to have 'Saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandham'.

'Samaanam' means 'common'; 'adhikaranam' means 'object'; 'samaanam adhikaranam' means 'common object described by many words'. For example, in Vishnu Sahasranamaam, which has a thousand words, though the words are many, they are all revealing only one object, viz., Bhagavaan Vishnu.

Needless to mention, all the thousand words in Vishnu Sahasranamaam are not the same word; words are different and they have different meanings also; the first word 'visvam' has a particular meaning; the next word, 'Vishnu.' has a different meaning; and the word 'vashatkaara.' has yet another meaning; and so on. Descriptions are different; but all of them 'converge' into one object – Bhagavaan Vishnu. Such a 'converging' group of words is said to have 'saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha.'

Another example can be quoted from the 'Geetha Dhyaana slokaa:' | In a particular verse of the 'Geetha Dhyaana slokaa:', there are five terms 'prapanna paarijaathaaya', 'thothra vethraika paanaye', 'jnaana mudhraaya', 'Krishnaaya' and 'Geethamruthaduhe'| But, the verse does not mean, that, namaskaarams are being offered to five different gods; all the five words have different meanings; but, all of them refer to one and the same Krishna ; namaskaaram is offered to that one Krishna, who is 'prapanna paarijaatha:', who is 'thothra vethraika paani' , who is 'jnaana mudhra:', who is 'geethamrutha duh' and who is 'Krishna'. Five words are there; but the object is one. That is called saamaandhikaranya sambhandhaa.

In contrast, another prayer verse runs: "namas sooryaaya, somaaya, mangalaaya, bhudhaaya cha guru sukra sanibhyascha raahave kethave nama:" | This verse also offers namaskaarams and there are many words in this verse also - 'sooryaaya', 'somaaya', 'mangalaaya', 'bhudhaaya' etc. Are these words referring to one object or many objects? Ans: No, In this verse, namaskaarams are not to one devathaa, but nine different devathaas – 'sooryaad', 'chandraad', 'mangalaad', 'bhudhaad' etc. In this verse, words are many and the objects they refer to, are also many.

In Sanskrit grammar, we have special names for the two types of verses quoted. In the earlier verse, from the Geetha Dhyaana Slokaas, words are many; but, object is one. Such an usage is called 'saamaanaadhikaranyam'.

When words are many and objects are also many, as in the second verse (namas sooryaaya, somaaya, mangalaaya, bhudhaaya cha guru sukra sanibhyascha raahave kethave nama:), it is called 'vaiadhikaranyam'.

In Sanskrit language, every word has got a 'case' (nominative etc.). There are seven 'cases' or vibhakthis in Sanskrit grammar. And, 'saamaanaadhikaranyam' is indicated, by use of the words in the same 'case'; in other words, in 'saamaanaadhikaranyam', the vibkathis will be the same. In a sentence, even if descriptions are different, if the vibakthis are the same, the object of the sentence also will be the same.

"Bhinna pravrutthi nimitthaanaam samaana vibhakthikaanaam padhaanaam eka vishayathvam saamaanaadhikaranyam".

In understanding the mahaa vaakyam, the student should first observe whether there is 'saamaanaadhikaranyam' or 'vaiadhikaranyam' in the vaakyam. Sureswaraachaarya answers this. He says "the first thing we observe in the sentence, is that, there is saamaanaadhikaranyam obtaining between the two words thath and thvam. They are two different words; but, revealing only one entity".

This is a very, very important message viz., that, "the mahaa vaakyam does not talk about a jeevaathmaa and a Paramaathmaa". From the saamaanaadhikaranyam, the important conclusion to be arrived at is: "we are not talking about a jeevaathmaa and a Paramaathmaa". If the student does not arrive at this conclusion, he/ she is committing a blunder, viz., that he/ she has taken the vaakyam, as referring to two objects.

Visishtaadvaitam takes jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa as two different entities and say that jeevaathmaa is a part of Paramaathmaa. Visishtaadvaitins do differentiate the two, by which action they are flouting the saamaadhikaranyam sambhandhaa; violating the saamaanaadhikaranyam message of the mahaa vaakyam.

Dvaita philosophy also ignores the saamaanaadhikaranyam sambhandhaa. The Dvaitins consider the jeevaathmaa to be 'here', on the earth and the Paramaathmaa to be 'there', in Vaikunthaa. Any vaidhika system of philosophy, which talks about jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa as different, overlooks the saamaanaadhikaranyam in the mahaa vaakyam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out here: "Once you note the saamaanaadhikaranyam in the mahaavaakyam, the conclusion is that, sruthi is talking about jeevaathmaa that is Paramaathmaa / Paramaathmaa that is jeevaathmaa / jeevaathmaa alias Paramaathmaa. As even as the student notices this, the student's mind will / should undergo a change.

'When will I attain Paramaathmaa?', 'During videha mukthi, escaping from this world, I will attain Bhagavaan', 'I want to escape this world and attain the Lord' etc., are all wrong notions / expectations, unfortunately continuing even after a number of years of mahaavaakya vicharaa.

In the prayer 'I want to escape this world and attain the Lord', which 'Lord' would the seeker like to attain? When the mahaavaakyam describes that Lord, as 'you' yourself, how can an informed Vedhaanthin resort to this prayer at all?

Videha mukthi is a promise given, before the study of Vedhaanthaa. But, after a study of Vedhaanthaa, the word 'Videha Mukthi' is irrelevant to a Vedhaantic student. To attract the student to the study of Vedhaanthaa, initially, a compromised idea of mokshaa is given. But, as even as the study of Vedhaanthaa becomes more and more / intensifies, the idea of 'Videha Mukthi' should go away.

Instead, the convictions "'I' am the ever free 'Existence - Consciousness', in which all these bodies are 'floating'. And, why should I care 'whether the bodies continue or not' or 'whether this sookshma sareeram is going to take up another sthoola sareeram or not'? Why should this be a worry, when, for me, the entire anaathmaa has been reduced to an insignificant speck? Why should I be bothered about as to whether my sookshma sareeram is going to travel or to where; or, whether my children will do sraardham for me? As an informed Vedhaanthin, all these doubts/ fears / questions have become irrelevant to me, since whatever happens at the anaathma level, I do not care" should take roots in the mind of the advanced seeker.

The diligent student should get all these messages, by the 'penetration' (assimilation) of the saamaanaadhikaranyam in the mahaa vaakyam. This (saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa) is the first relationship, talked about, by the Aachaaryaa.

What is the second 'relationship' in the mahaa vaakyam? Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to this as 'viseshana viseshyathaa'. To explain this sambhandhaa, the Geetha Dhyaana Slokam quoted earlier, viz., 'Prapanna paarijaathaaya, thothra vetraika paanaye etc.' may again be taken as an example. As already seen, the verse contains different words, which are different attributes; but revealing only one object, viz., Bhagavaan Krishna. Therefore, all these attributes should belong to that only Krishna. 'Prapanna paarijaatha:' is one description of Krishna; 'Thothra vetraika paani', 'Jnaana mudhraa' and 'Geethamrutha duh' are the others. All these are different 'virtues' or 'glories' of Krishna and each one is called 'viseshanam', in Sanskrit; and Krishna is the 'viseshyam'. The relationship between the 'viseshanaas' and 'viseshyam' / the 'descriptions' and the 'described' / the 'attributes' and the 'substance' - the 'attributes-attributed-relationship' is called 'viseshana viseshyathaa'.

Where does this relationship obtain? Ans: Not among the words. Relationship among the words is called saamaanaadhikaranyam. The relationship 'Viseshana viseshyathaa' is not the relationship among the words; but, among the meanings of the words. Padha arthayo:

viseshana viseshya sambhandha: / The different attributes, indicated by different words, qualify one Krishna, the substance.

In the same manner, 'Existence' and 'Consciousness' are both essential features, qualifying one aathmaa. One aathmaa alone is qualified as jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa. Jeevaathmathvam and Paramaathmathvam are attributes or features of one and the same Reality only. In other words, Paramaathmaa status and Jeevaathmaa status, which are the meanings of thath and thvam respectively, are two statuses belonging to the one and the same Reality, called aathmaa. This is called viseshana viseshya sambhandha: /

Then comes the last relationship, the 'lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha:' |

This is a step required only in rare cases like the mahaa vaakyam. We are entering a highly technical topic, which cannot be skipped. Normally, whenever saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyams come, the padhaarthaas will have viseshana-viseshya-sambhandha ; and, with that, normally, the job (of the sentence) will be over. But, in certain rare cases, we have to go to the third stage also.

In the Bhagavadh Githa Dhyaana Slokaa quoted above, we have saamaanaadhikaranyam, followed by viseshana viseshyathaa. In this verse, 'Prapanna paarijaatha:', 'Thothra vetraika paani', 'Jnaana mudhraa' and 'Geethamrutha duh' are descriptions of / adjectives to Krishna and 'Krishna' is the noun. The words have saamaanadhikaranya sambhandhaa and the meanings of the words, the 'different attributes' and the 'substance referred to, by the attributes', have viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa. With that, the slokam has been understood. And, what is the understanding? "Salutations to Krishna, who has got the attributes / descriptions 'Prapanna paarijaatha:', 'Thothra vetraika paani', 'Jnaana mudhraa' and 'Geethamrutha duh'". The two relationships – saamaanaadhikaranyam and viseshana viseshyathaa - are sufficient to understand this slokaa; we do not have to go to lakshana lakshya sambhandhaa.

There are no problems, because, the four virtues / attributes with which Lord Krishna is described, in the verse, can all co-exist in Krishna. The first description - Prapanna paarijaatha: - 'a great giver of blessings', the second 'Thothra vetraika paani - 'Holder of a whip in one hand', the third description, 'Jnaana mudhra' - 'Who is with Jnaanamudhraa' and the fourth, 'Geethamrutha duh' – 'Who has milked the nectar of Githa' are all descriptions, which comfortably fit one viseshyam – noun-, Lord Krishna.

But, in certain cases, there will be problems. When some of the virtues are mutually contradictory, those virtues cannot co-exist in one and the same substance, obviously because of the logical rule, that mutually contradicting attributes cannot co-exist in one and the same locus.

And, therefore, under such circumstances, when some of the viseshanams, being contradictory to one another, cannot co-exist, the students are at a loss; they have to find out as to how they can explain the viseshana- viseshya- sambhaandhaa.

The solution to this situation is to remove some of the contradictory attributes, so that there will be no logical problem. That 'removal of the contradictory attributes' is the third stage that the students will have to go through.

In this mahaavaakyam, 'thath thvam asi', both jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa are given as two statuses of one and the same ultimate Reality. In other words, one ultimate Reality is revealed, as both jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, by the mahaavaakyam, 'thath thvam asi'. Hence, the attributes of jeevaathmaa and the attributes of Paramaathmaa have to co-exist in the one ultimate Reality that is revealed.

But, the problem is, that, at least some of the attributes are mutually contradictory. The main contradictory attributes (such as the limited knowledge, limited power, localization and ephemeral nature of the jeevaathmaa, in contrast to the omniscience, omnipotence, sarvagathathvam and nithyathvam of the Paramaathmaa) are well known and need not be elaborated on.

What is to be done is to remove those contradictory features which all belong to the Anaathmaa.

Once all the contradictory features are removed from the jeevathmaa, the 'jeevathvam' belonging to the sthoala-sookshma-kaarana-sareeraani-anaathmaa goes away. The 'jeeva' adjective goes away; and, when jeeva adjective goes away, the 'dhu:kham' adjective also goes away. (If dhu:kham remains, one will never be able to claim aham aananda:) When, thus, the jeevathvam goes away, the 'Consciousness' principle alone remains.

In the same manner, in the Paramaathmaa also, the contradictory attributes, such as 'remoteness' - either space-wise or time-wise - are removed.

Why is Paramaathmaa considered 'remote' in terms of time? Ans: Because it is believed that Paramaathmaa is the cause of the universe, and whenever one talks about a cause, the cause is always in the past, and therefore, 'remote in time'. In other words, 'causality', as an attribute of a substance, makes the substance 'remote in time'. Therefore, the 'causality' of Paramaathmaa is to be removed. Paramaathmaa is not a kaaranam and jeevaathmaa a is not a kaaryam, since both 'kaaranam' and 'kaaryam' attributes belong to anaathmaa. Once the 'kaaryathvam' of the Paramaathmaa and the 'kaaranathvam' of the jeevaathmaa are knocked off, what will remain are 'Pure Existence' and 'Pure Consciousness' only. And, they can be together, without any logical contradictions.

The Existence (sath in the Paramaathmaa) and Consciousness (chith in the jeevathmaa) are not thrown away; only the kaarana kaarya sambhandhaa , desa kaalaa etc., are removed. And, hence, it is only a 'partial' removal, the consequence of which, is that, the misconception " 'I' am a jeevaathmaa here and there is a Paramaathmaa elsewhere, both having attributes" gives way to the conviction " 'I' am the aathmaa, which is sath also and which is chith also".

120. Chapter III, Verses 3 and 4 (06-12-2008)

This verse (verse no. 3 of Chapter III) is a very important verse, which is very often quoted by several aachaaryaas. It has also been elaborately analyzed in the Vedhaantha Saaraa of Sadhaanandaa. In this verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks of how the intellect grasps the message of mahaa vaakyam, by understanding three types of relationships, the first relationship being saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha:, the second being viseshana viseshya sambhandha: and the third being lakshya lakshana sambhandha:

In the first three quarters of this verse, Sureswaraachaarya just names the three relationships. Detailed explanations will be given later.

Obviously, at least two objects are required for any 'relationship' to exist; one cannot talk of a 'relationship', when there is only one object. Therefore, after naming the three relationships in the first three quarters, Sureswaraachaarya indicates the names of the three pairs of objects – the three pairs of 'related members' - between which, each of the above three relationships obtains, in the 4th quarter of the verse. But, the Aachaaryaa does not directly mention the three pairs; the student has to discern the three pairs from the fourth quarter, 'padhaarthaprathyagaathmanaam'.

- पदार्थप्रत्यगात्मनाम् - (the three relationships) of the terms, their meanings and the inner Self.

From this compound term 'padhaarthaprathyagaathmanaam', the student has to first take the word 'padha', then, the word 'arthaa' and then 'prathyagaathmaa' and has to find the three pairs from these.

The word 'padha' indicates the two words 'thath' and 'thvam', in the mahaa vaakyam. i.e., the word (Padha) should be read in dual number as 'thath padham' and 'thvam padham'. Through this word 'padha', the Aachaaryaa implies: 'Thath padha thvam padhaya: saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha: asthi| To repeat: The word 'padhaa' actually refers to two words and the two words referred to, are 'thath padhaa' and 'thvam padhaa'. Between the 'thath padhaa' and 'thvam padhaa', the relationship is saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha: |

The next word in the sloka is 'arthaa'. This word 'arthaa' also reveals two 'arthaas' – one is 'thath padha arthaa' and the second is 'thvam padha arthaa'. Between the two arthaas - the meanings of the two words `thath' and `thvam' - there is viseshana viseshya sambhandha: / Thath padhaartha thvam padhaarthayo: viseshana viseshya sambhandha: asthi

Then the third part is `prathyagaathmanaam' | Here, the student has to take

- (i) the `thath thvam padhaartha' together and
- (ii) the aathmaa, the lakshyaartha, as the pair of the two entities having the relationship.

Between (i) the padhaarthaas (viz. the meanings of the two words `thath' and `thvam') and (ii) the lakshyaartha, which is the aathmaa, the relationship is `lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha.' | Padhaartha prathyagaathamano: lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha: asthi | Padhaartha lakshyaarthayo: lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha: asthi

Thus:

- (i) Padhayo: saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha: |
- (ii) Padhaarthayo: viseshana viseshya sambhandha: |
- (iii) Padhaartha laskhyaarthayo: lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha: |

To a student, these statements may sound too technical and difficult to comprehend. But, the fact is, that, we are operating these `relationships' all the time in our mundane lives also. These technical names, viz., `saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha.', `viseshana – viseshya-sambhandha.' and `lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha.' are given to only what our intellects are doing regularly. It is similar to the doctor giving some technical names for common ailments such as stomach pain or head ache. Quite often, what a layman experiences and calls as `ache' or `pain', is called by a medical term by the doctor. Similarly, though unaware of the technical names for the sambhandhaas or relationships, we are operating / making use of all these.

An example will make this clear. When a statement `there is a red rose' is made, and the listener understands the meaning of the term `red rose', the understanding of the word `red rose' happens very casually; but, on a careful analysis, it would be found, that, in the understanding / grasping of the meaning of the word `red rose', the listener's intellect has actually discerned two types of relationships.

What are those two relationships?:

- (i) The first relationship is between the words - `red' and `rose'.
- (ii) The second relationship is between the meanings of these two words. Every word is uttered, to reveal a particular meaning ; in this example also, the word `red' has a meaning and the word `rose' has a meaning; and, between the two `meanings' there is a relationship.

Thus, there is a 'word-pair' relationship (padha sambhandhaa) and there is a 'meaning-pair' relationship (padha artha sambhandhaa). When the term 'red rose' is mentioned, though its meaning is seemingly understood in a very casual manner, actually, the listener's intellect has grasped the two sambhandhaas - padha sambhandhaa and padha artha sambhandhaa.

Now, what are the names of the two sambhandhaas?

Ans:

- (i) Between the two words: the relationship is 'noun-adjective' relationship, 'rose' being the noun and 'red' being the adjective. The word 'noun-adjective relationship' can be applied only to the words i.e. the 'noun-adjective relationship' can exist only between the two words.
- (ii) Between the meanings of the two words: The word 'red' conveys a colour and the word 'rose' conveys a substance – a particular flower. Between the colour and the substance, the relationship is 'attribute – substance relationship'. Just as the 'noun-adjective' relationship can exist only between the words 'red' and 'rose', the 'substance-attribute' relationship can exist only between the meanings of the two words.

To repeat: Between the two words, one can never say there is 'substance-attribute' relationship; it can only be 'noun-adjective relationship'. In the same manner, between the two meanings, one can never say there is 'noun-adjective relationship'. It can only be 'substance-attribute' relationship.

Thus 'noun-adjective relationship' is distinct; 'substance-attribute relationship' is distinct. These two relationships cannot be interchanged.

Another example that can be considered is the term 'tall man'. In this term also, the two relationships can be differentiated. Between the two words 'tall' and 'man', it is 'noun-adjective' relationship. And, between the meanings of the two words there is 'subject-attribute' relationship.

In the same manner as in the above two examples, in the mahaa vaakyam, between 'thath padhaa' and 'thvam padhaa', the relationship is 'noun-adjective' relationship; and between 'thath padha arthaa' and 'thvam padha arthaa', there is 'substance- attribute' relationship.

'Jeevaathmaa' is the substance. 'Paramaathmaa' status is the attribute. And, 'Paramaathmaa' is the substance and 'Jeevaathmaa' status is an attribute.

Thus, through the mahaavaakyam, we get a jeevaathma-paramaathma substance, which has got the statuses of jeevaathmathvam and paramaathmathvam. When Jeevaathmaa is taken as the substance, Paramaathmaa characteristics will become attributes and when Paramaathmaa is taken as the substance, Jeevaathmaa characteristics will be the attributes. Joined together, one aathmaa is revealed, endowed with both Jeevaathmaa characteristics and Paramaathmaa characteristics. One aathmaa is revealed, because of mutual 'substance-attribute' relationships.

But, there is an important difference between the mahaa vaakyam and the terms given above as examples viz., 'red rose' and 'tall man'. In the case of the examples, to comprehend the meanings of the statements, the two relationships, 'noun-adjective relationship' and 'substance-attribute relationship' will suffice. But, in the case of mahaa vaakyam, we have to do one more step.

What is that? Ans: By using the two relationships, the student has arrived at an aathmaa, which has both Jeevaathmaa attributes and Paramaathmaa attributes. But, between the Jeevaathmaa attributes and the Paramaathmaa attributes, there are certain contradictory portions. And, therefore, the student has to filter away the contradictory portions. The final step is where the student removes the contradictory features and retains only the non-contradictory features. Then, he / she arrives at one aathmaa, which has got non-contradictory features only.

What are the non-contradictory features? Ans: 'Sath' is the feature of Paramaathmaa and 'chith' is the feature of Jeevaathmaa, between the two of which, there is no contradiction. Removing all the contradictory attributes like (i) the omniscience, omnipotence of Paramaathmaa as against the limited intellect and powers of Jeevaathmaa and (ii) the sathgunaas of Paramaathmaa as against the dhurgunaas of Jeevaathmaa, and also the various naama-roopaas, and retaining the only two non-contradictory features 'sath' and 'chith', the student arrives at one sath-chith-aathmaa.

The relationship between the vaachyaarthaa and the lakshyaarthaa of the words 'thath' and 'thvam', is termed 'lakshyalakshanasambhandha.' |

To consolidate again:

- (i) padhayo: saamanaadhikaranya sambhandha: - 'noun-adjective' relationship.
- (ii) padhaarthayo: viseshana viseshya bhaava: - 'attribute-substance' relationship.
- (iii) padhaartha prathyagaathmano: lakshyalakshanasambhandha: |

The jeevathma-paramaathma pair (the vaachyaarthaa) is lakshanam; the ekaathma – the non-dual aathmaa - is lakshyam. The relationship between the jeevaathma-paramaathmaa pair and the ekaathma is lakshyalakshanasambhandha: |

When the operation - the proper assimilation of the mahaa vaakyam - is over, the jeevathma-paramaathma pair disappears; the 'jeeva' adjective is gone; the 'parama' adjective is also gone. 'Ekaathmaa' alone remains; what remains is, only one sachchidhaathmaa, where sajaatheeya, svajaatheeya, svagatha bedhaas are not there.

The Mandookya Upanishad (Manthraa 7) defines this aathmaa as: "Naantha: pragnyam na bahi: pragnyam nobhayatha: pragnyam na pragnyaanaganam na pragnyam naapragnyam| Adrishtam avyavahaaryam agraahyam alakshanam achinthyam avyapadesyam ekaathmaprathyayasaaram prapanchopasamam saantham sivam advaitham chathurtham manyanthe sa aathmaa sa vignyeya: |" – "They consider the Thureeya to be that, which is not the outward consciousness, not the inward consciousness, not the consciousness turned both sides, not a mass of consciousness, not the all-knowing consciousness, not unconscious, beyond perception, beyond transaction, beyond grasp, beyond inference, beyond thoughts, beyond description, traceable through the unbroken self-awareness, free from the world, tranquil, auspicious and non-dual. It is the Self. It is to be known".

In this advaitam, 'viswa-viraat' division is not there; 'thyjasa-hiranyagarbha' division is not there; 'praagnyaa-Isvara' division is also gone. There is One pure, attributeless 'Existence' – One pure attributeless 'Consciousness' alone, which is called 'thureeyam'. And, I do not know the thureeyam; I am the thureeyam.

And, if the question 'how to experience that thureeyam?' is raised, the reply can be only, that, the question is meaningless and invalid. Thureeyam is never experienced, because the 'experiencer-experienced-experience thriputi, is itself gone.

I do not experience thureeyam. The Kena Upanishad manthraa (II. 2), where the Upanishad student admits "Naaham manye suvedhethi no navedhethi veda cha yo nasthadvedha no na vedehethi vedha cha"- "I do not think that I know Brahman well. Not that I do not know Brahman. I know and I do not know. Among us, the one who knows the statement 'not that I do not know; I know and I do not know' knows that Brahman" is relevant here.

What does this statement "I do not know the thureeyam; not that I do not know; I know I do not know" mean? It means: "I am thureeyam, which need not be known, because it is the ever-evident Consciousness principle".

This is the essence of the third sloka (a very elaborate analysis of which has been done in Swamiji's earlier classes of Vedhaantha Saraa).

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 4:

अस्मिन् सूत्र उपन्यस्ते कश्चिच्चोदयति योऽयं वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तौ पुर्वाध्ययेनान्वयव्यतिरेकलक्षणो न्यायः :
सर्वकर्मसन्त्यासपूर्वकोऽभिहितः किमयं विधिपरिप्रापितः किं वा स्वरसत एवात्र पुमान्प्रवर्तत इति।

On hearing this aphorism someone questions this way : Is the procedure of rational discrimination laid down in the previous chapter, for comprehending the import of the proposition, preceded by the renunciation of all actions, enjoined by scriptural imperatives or is it undertaken by natural propensity?

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa takes a small diversion and enters into another highly technical topic, widely debated among the advaitins.

The topic is this: When a person practices jnaana yoga, there are several disciplines prescribed as parts of the jnaana yoga. When the sruthi prescribes these several disciplines, will they come under veda vidhi or not? Will all these instructions come under vedic injunctions / commandments or not? If they come under a Vedic commandment, certain principles will become very relevant. If they do not come under a commandment, certain other principles will have to be applied. Therefore, the issue, as to whether these instructions have got commandment status or not, is very, very important.

Therefore, a poorva pakshi asks whether saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasana etc. are vidhi or not.

In short, "jnaana yoge vidhi: asthi vaa na vaa?" – "In jnaana yoga, is there a vidhi or not?" is the debate.

The answers will be two-fold; i.e. the answer will have two components. The jnaana yoga itself will be divided into two; and two different answers will be given.

The first component: "As far as knowledge is concerned, knowledge cannot have any commandment at all, because knowledge is not an action".

This is also a technical topic, which has been discussed now and then, in different contexts.

"Whether knowledge comes under action or not" is the question / doubt raised; and, the answer is, that, according to Vedhaantha, 'knowing' is not an action.

'Doing' is an action; but, 'knowing' is never an action, because of several differences between 'doing' process and 'knowing' process.

(Some differences have been discussed earlier during Brahma Sootra classes and some during Sarva Vedhaantha Siddhantha Saara Sangraha classes.)

Among them is the following important difference: With regard to 'doing', when karmendriyaas are to be operated, at the time of using the karmendriyaas, the individual has got a choice. But, during the course of 'knowing', when jnaanaendriyaas are brought into use, the individual has no choice at all.

The Vedhaantha class itself can be used as an example for this axiom. In the class, when a particular student holds his pen and takes down notes, he is a 'writer'; 'writing' is an action done by the karmendriya, the hand. And, as a writer, the student has choices. He may choose to write (take down notes) or not ; he may choose to write what he wants to and leave out what he does not want to etc.

But, when the student uses his jnaanedriyaa, the ears, as a listener, he has no choice with regard to what he listens to. If a particular listener has come for the first time to a Naishkarmya Siddhi class, he has to listen to the class and the subject of Naishkarmya Siddhi for one full hour, whether he likes it or not. He has no choice at all. When the Sanskrit text is read, he is the listener of Sanskrit words; and, when the meanings of the text are rendered in English, he is the listener of English ; when the teacher observes silence he listens to 'nothing'. As a listener, for one full hour, the student or the casual visitor has to helplessly listen to whatever prameyam is made available. This shows, that, in 'knowing', or as a 'knower', the individual is helpless.

Similarly, as a 'seer', when the eyes of an individual are open, he has no choice as to 'what is seen'; as a 'smeller', again, he has no choice as to 'what is smelt', whether pleasant or foul.

The individual may have a choice as to whether to approach or avoid a foul-smelling body of water, since 'going' is an 'action'. As a 'walker' he has a choice; but, once he is in the vicinity of the foul smelling body of water, as a 'smeller', he has no choice – he has to undergo the unpleasant experience of the foul smell.

Similarly, as a 'talker', the individual has a choice; 'talking' is an action; but, as a 'listener' he has no choice.

All the above examples show, that, Jnaanam is not will-based; karma is will-based. In Sanskrit, this is expressed as "Karma is karthruthanthram ; Jnaanam is vasthuthanthram", vasthuthanthram meaning "dependent on 'whatever is available'".

This is one difference between jnaanam and karma. The second difference is, that, Karma produces four types of results, whereas, Jnaanam does not produce any one of these four.

The four consequences of Karma are as below:

- (1) uthpatthi: - production ./ manufacture of an object.
- (2) aapthi: - reaching a place or acquisition of an object
- (3) vikhaara: - transformation /modification / conversion of an object and
- (4) samskhaara: - purification.

(Viewed from another perspective, production, reaching / acquisition, transformation and purification are the only possible results of action. Even sandhyaavandanam is only an action for purification - purification of the mind. So also 'going to or reaching svarga' is also the result of action – the prescribed karma.)

In contrast, when one acquires knowledge, none of the above four consequences will result. If, for instance, when an individual opens his eyes and merely observes the clothes worn by somebody in his proximity, what results can he / she produce, by the mere perception of the clothes? Obviously, he / she does not 'produce' the clothes; they were already there. He / she cannot 'acquire' the clothes. Nor do the clothes get 'transformed' into something else – even as any other type of dress - by mere perception. And, by merely 'looking at' a set of dirty clothes, he / she cannot have the clothes 'purified'.

In essence, 'seeing' or 'knowing' is a phenomenon, in which the object 'looked at' or 'observed / known' does not undergo any change ; there is no production / acquisition / transformation / purification. Only the ignorance about the object is shed; nothing else happens.

And, this 'removal of ignorance' cannot also be considered as 'purification', since, it is not as though 'ignorance' was 'sitting upon' the object and has now been removed, since, in that case, the object should have lost weight on 'removal of the ignorance'. One cannot say that, "Ignorance removal' is a purification process, in which some dirt has been removed".

'Knowing' does not produce any one of the karmapalans. Therefore, 'knowing' does not come under karma. 'Jnaanam' is not a 'karmad'.

So what? After noting this first lesson, we have to move to the next lesson or the corollary of this first lesson, which first lesson, to repeat, is that, jnaanam – 'knowing' - is different from karma – 'doing'. And it must be carefully noted, that, the word 'jnaanam', in this statement, means both aathma jnaanam as well as anaathma jnaanam; in other words, saasthreeya as well as loukika jnaanam . 'Knowing' is different from 'doing'.

The next lesson / corollary is, that, "Commandment' is possible only where karma is involved". This is because, as discussed earlier, there is 'will' or 'choice' in karma alone, and, obviously, there is a scope for 'commandment', only where there is 'will' or 'choice'. Of course, one can choose to 'obey' or 'ignore' a commandment.

To make this second lesson clearer : Going back to the earlier example of a foul-smelling body of water, the individual has a choice in going near that body of water or avoiding it. And, therefore, another individual can 'command' him to approach the water body. Assuming that the first individual obeys the command and approaches the foul smelling water body, there cannot or need not be a command with regard to the 'smelling', since there is no 'will' or 'choice' with regard to 'smelling', which happens automatically or helplessly. A commandment 'do not smell' cannot also be made, since 'smelling' or 'not smelling' does not come under one's choice. Of course, one can choose to avoid smelling by covering one's nose, but even that 'avoiding' is only a result of 'doing' – 'physically covering one's nose'.

Therefore, it is clear, that "Do's' and 'Don'ts' are not possible in the field of jnaanam, while they are possible in the field of karma". This can be expressed as: "jnaane vidhi: naasthi; karmane vidhaya: santhi."

Therefore, if the question "is there vidhi in jnaana yoga or not ?" is raised , the answer will be "with regard to actual 'knowing', there is no question of any vidhi".

"However, "Vedhaantha says : " while, with regard to actual 'knowing', there is no question of any vidhi, with regard to all the disciplines allied / associated with jnaanam, there are vidhis. Developing viveka and vairaagya, by practicing karma yoga and upaasanayoga etc., and approaching a guru for sravanam and Vedhaantha vichaaram (as in the Bhagavadh Githa, verse 34, Chapter IV, the popular sloka – "thadh vitthi pranipaathena pariprsnena sevayaa upadekshyanthi the jnaanam jnaanina: thathvadarsina:" – " May you gain that knowledge by prostration, and service to and by proper enquiry with wise sages, who will impart the knowledge") - with regard to all the sahakaari disciplines, there are vidhis. With regard to actual 'knowing', there cannot be any vidhi."

Then, the next question is "what is the view of Vedhaantha, on the actual process / methodology of bringing the allied disciplines - the sahakaari saadhananaani - under a vidhi or commandment?"

This factor has also to be analyzed by the student – again a highly technical subject.

Wherever there is a series of disciplines, saasthra gives a series of commandments. Thus, we have packaged sets of disciplines, coming from different sets of commandments and any whole package of disciplines is directed towards one particular goal. Taking the path of jnaana yoga itself as an example, all the allied disciplines associated with jnaana yoga, viz. "going through karma yoga and upaasana yoga, acquiring saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, going through sravana-manana-nidhishyaasanani etc." are a package / set of disciplines. But, the only goal / objective of all the disciplines in that particular set of disciplines, is the nishtaa`aham brahma asmi.

In the Vedas, different sets of commandments have been given, with different sets of disciplines, for different goals. In the four aasramaas prescribed by the Vedas, each aasramaa has got a certain type of disciplines, as a 'package', to be followed for a length of time. Brahmacharya aasramaa is the name for a package of a number of disciplines, containing both worldly and saasthric disciplines. Similarly, grahastha aasrama also has a set of disciplines, both loukika and saasthreeya. So also the vaanaprasthaa and sanyaasa aasramaas.

Vedha adhyayanam is a discipline, associated with brahmacharya aasramaa; karma yoga is a bunch of disciplines, associated with grahastha aasrama; upaasana yoga is a bunch of disciplines, associated with vaanaprastha aasramaa and jnaana yoga is also a set of disciplines, associated with sanyaasa aasrama. Thus, every aasramaa refers to a set of disciplines.

Whenever a package of disciplines for any particular goal is prescribed as to be followed for a length of time, the practice of such disciplines, naturally, requires 'commitment'. The 'commitment' of the aspirant is very, very important, since the result is directly proportional to the commitment that the aspirant has.

A serious aspirant has, therefore, to enter into any package of disciplines in a formal manner, by which he /she takes a 'commitment' or a 'vow'. Somewhat similar to legal contracts, Veda also has got saasthric`contracts`, with regard to Vedic disciplines.

A person can formally commit himself to the study of the Vedas, for a specified time of five years / seven years / twelve years. The formal commitment to study Vedas – Veda Adhyayanam - is the upanayanam ceremony, a formal entry into the brahmacharya aasramaa. This is the 'registration'- as it were- , showing the sraddha of the student, for the group of veda adhyayana disciplines.

The Vaidika wedding with agni as saakshi, is the formalization of the commitment for the grahastha aasramaa, with its mandatory karma anushtanaas, to be performed as karma yoga and later, for the Vaana prastha Aasramaa, with emphasis on the Upaasana Yoga. The Vaidika wedding is a 'contract' between a consenting couple, but, considered irreversible in Hindu tradition.

For the pursuit of jnaana yoga alone, there is a choice. The seeker may choose to enter into a package of disciplines in a formal manner, with a formal 'vow' or may enter that package of disciplines in an informal / casual manner, without the 'vow'.

The formal manner for entering jnaana yoga practice, prescribed by the Vedas is called the sanyaasa vidhi, by which, the seeker assumes the sanyaasa aasramaa and thereafter, devote his / her entire time to the pursuit of jnaana.

Alternately, he / she can choose to practice jnaana yoga, without the sanyaasa aasramaa, but diligently observing all the other disciplines of the mind.

'Commitment' to any discipline consists of three factors - nischaya, sankalpa and abhyaasa. If a seeker decides to follow the 'binary format', he / she should first decide to start on the binary format; this is 'nischaya'. Then follows the sankalpa: "hereafter, I shall look upon myself as aathmaa", which sankalpa is taken, as a firm commitment. And, thereafter, the student should renounce special prayers; for him/ her, even during the worst crisis, there is no question of praying "O, Lord! save me", because he / she has decided " 'I' am the ever-saved aathmaa, which does not require a savior". This is abhyaasaa.

According to the saasthraas, this 'nischaya-sankalpa-abhyaasaa' commitment can be made in the formal manner, the sanyaasa vidhi, which is a ritualistic process, by which, the aspirant takes a vow: "hereafter, I shall not follow the 'triangular' format, however tempting or attractive it may be".

One can cultivate these convictions through an informal entry also, with a firm decision (sankalpa) in the mind and with only a symbolic rudraakasha / thulasi maala, and approaching a guru for the necessary sravana-mananam.

In the Bhagavadh Geetha, the Lord promises "Maschittha: sarvadhurgaani mathprasaadhaath tharishyas" – "With your mind fixed on Me, you shall cross over all obstacles, by my grace" (verse 58 – Ch. XVIII).

Such passages in the scriptures, where the Lord says "Come to me . I will save you", are, no doubt, attractive; and, also reassuring, that 'there is Somebody to 'save'. But, entry into jnaana yoga, with or without the sanyaasa aasramaa, calls for the firm resolutions: "However attractive may be the 'triangular' format, I will resist the temptation to enter that format. Even in the face of the worst adversities, I shall not look for any saadhana – loukika or vaidhika - to get over the adversities. For me, saadhanaas do not exist. Hereafter, I will never go to the Lord with the prayer to 'save me'. I no more have the 'Saviour-saved' concept. My visits to the Lord or thoughts of the Lord, shall be only for expressing my thanks to Him; or for the prayer 'sarve bhavanthu sukhina:' | Come what may, with regard to myself, I shall never look upon myself as a mumukshu, but as mukthaa. I do not, therefore, have to ever look upon mokshaa as a goal, hereafter".

The essence of all these discussions, is that, "with regard to the actual 'knowing' component, vidhis are not there; but, as for the allied disciplines, vidhis are there".

There is one more important point. Formal entry into jnaana yoga i.e. the sanyaasa aasramaa has its advantages and disadvantages.

This is similar to a legal contract, which is subject to a court of law. One cannot afford to violate the provisions in a legal contract; violations are subject to punishment. When there is no formal / written / legal contract, but, only an oral understanding, violations of the oral understanding, may result in unpleasantness, but not in litigation.

Sureswaraachaaryaa will be pointing out: "When a person formally enters jnaana yoga, he / she will have an advantage. What is that? Every discipline that he/she follows, will have an additional positive adhrishta palan. This advantage is not there for the individual who does not enter the jnaana yoga formally. By the same token, there is a disadvantage also. If any commitment is violated, it will give a negative adhrishta palan also – a paapam or a spiritual fall. The person who makes a formal commitment to jnaana yoga and violates a discipline, will have a stronger / a more intense fall".

The Aachaaryaa calls such a person 'aarooda pathitha:' – 'one who climbs and falls'. Obviously, a fall from higher levels than from the lower levels, is more injurious and serious.

This is the topic in this paragraph: "sahaakaari kaarane vidhaya: asthi | vidhi sathvaath punyam asthi; paapam api asthi" |

121. Chapter III, Verse 4 (13-12-2008)

In this portion (sambhandha gadhyam to verse 4), Sureswaraachaarya is taking a diversion topic, on the question of whether there is any Vedic injunction, with regard to the pursuit of jnaana yoga: | And, he explains, that, there is a Vedic injunction.

By establishing that it is a Vedic commandment, the student gets some important corollaries also (as discussed in the earlier session).

It is important to remember the basic Vedic approach to its teaching; namely, that, it has divided the human life into four aashramaas – brahmacharya, grahastha, vaana prasthaa and sanyaasaa. In each aasramaa, a person pursues his materialistic interests also. Veda perfectly allows the pursuit of the worldly desires viz., security, entertainment, comfort etc. But, while pursuing these worldly goals, Veda envisages a parallel pursuit of the ultimate spiritual goal also, which pursuit should start not in the final sanyaasa aasramaa; but, right from the brahmacharya aasrama itself. Therefore, in each aasrama, Veda prescribes certain religious disciplines in the form of 'Dos' and 'Don'ts', known as vidhi and nisheda.

And, in each bunch of 'Dos' and 'Don'ts', Veda visualizes a particular level of spiritual growth to be accomplished. The growth is not a sudden jump, but a gradual one. Just as our physical body gradually builds up, cell by cell, the spiritual 'body' should / can also be gradually built up. And, just as growth of the physical body starts right from the womb of the mother, the spiritual growth also should start right from the beginning.

Till the beginning of the brahmacharya aasrama, marked by the Upanayanam ceremony, it is the parents of the individual, who have to contribute for the spiritual growth of the child – right from garbhaadhaanaa, followed by pumsavanaa, naamakaranaa, annaprasanaa, chowlaa etc. All these are spiritual contributions to be made by the parents towards the children.

The children will take over the responsibility for spiritual growth - 'receive the baton', as it were – at the Upanayanam ceremony, marking the beginning of the brahmacharya aasrama. In each aasramaa thereafter, there is a prescribed a set of 'Dos' and 'Don'ts'.

Adhyayanaa is the main aim of brahmacharya aasrama; karma yoga that of grahastha aasrama ; upaasana yoga is the main aim of vaana prastha aasramaa and jnaana yoga, the main aim of sanyaasa aasramaa.

And, to pursue these aims, the individual has to have the appropriate infrastructure , the appropriate P.O.R.T. (possessions, obligations, relationships and transactions), the appropriate dietary disciplines and the appropriate 'Dos' and 'Don'ts'. It is a package together. Each aasramaa is a bunch of disciplines.

The entry into each aasramaa is to be done in a formal manner, which is similar to taking an oath in a court of law; after taking the oath in a court of law, whatever statements are made, will have to be true; and, if untruthful or misleading statements are made, the court can take appropriate punitive action against the perjurer.

In the same manner, in the Vedic tradition also, once a formal / ritualistic entry is made into any aasramaa, the 'Dos' and 'Don'ts' of that aasramaa become compulsory and binding. That is conveyed by the word vidhiparipraapitha:, in this sambhandha gadhyam.

A vidhiparipraapitha: rule, becomes a vow / an oath. Once it becomes an oath, there are both advantages and disadvantages. The palan of each of the aasramaas is supposed to be two fold. One is called dhrishta palan and the other is called adhrishta palan.

If and when the disciplines of any aasrama is followed by someone, even without a formal entry into the aasramaa, the dhrishta palan is acquired by that individual. But the adhrishta palan - the invisible gain - can be acquired only by the formal entry into the aasramaa. This is the difference between formal entry and informal entry.

An example is 'studying Veda after Upanayanam and without Upanayanam'. If somebody studies Veda without Upanayanam, there will be dhrishta palan, viz., the pleasure of chanting the manthraas and enjoyment of the beautiful sound of the manthraas etc. Also, if a student of an Upanishadh Bhaashyam had already learnt the chanting of that Upanishad, he will have an advantage - the ease in assimilating the Bhaashyam. All these come under dhrishta palan of Vedic chanting. But, when one undergoes the Upanayanam ceremony and then chants the same Veda and the same Gaayathri manthraa, Veda holds, that, there is an adhrishta palan also.

Another example is the agni hothram, prescribed by the Vedaas as mandatory for a grahasthaa ceremony. The ceremony is getting popular now, even in the Western countries. In South America, there is a special society for advocating and popularizing agni hothraa. The Vedic svaras are given in Western notes by the society to its members, for easy performance of the ceremony. What the Veda says is, that, even if agni hothraa is done in such a fashion, without a formal entry into grahastha dharma, the dhrishta palan - in the form of purifying of the atmosphere etc. - will certainly result. But, if adhrishta palan of the agni hothraa is aspired for, the aspirant should be a grahasthaa with his 'marriage' necessarily formalized through the Vaidhika wedding ceremony, with its constituent rituals such as sapthapathy etc. When such a grahastha performs agnihotra, it will give dhrishta palan as well as adhrishta palan.

Similarly upasana and jnaana yogaas also can give dhrishtam and adrishtam.

Jnaana yoga can be resorted to, in two ways – one through a formal entry and the other informal. Informal entry is when one just takes a decision to follow jnaana yoga, wears a symbolic maalaa or rudhraakashaa, goes to a guru and studies saasthraas, taking efforts towards a gradual reduction of P.O.R.T. (possessions, obligations, relationship and transactions) . 'Formal entry' or 'ritualistic entry' into jnaana yoga , is 'taking to the sanyaasa aasrama' - 'formal and total renunciation of family ties , possessions, obligations and transactions of a grahastha'. Dhrishta palan will be there, in both cases. But, in the case of sanyaasa aasrama there is adhrishta palan also. That is one corollary, of understanding that there are Vedic commandments – vidhi and nishedha

But, there is also a warning: "While the adhrishta palan is there in undergoing jnaana yoga in the sanyaasa aasrama, there is a disadvantage also."

What is that disadvantage? Ans: Once one formally enters any particular aasrama, then 'following' / implementation of the rules and regulations of that aasrama will give extra punyam alright; but, if, on the other hand, those rules and regulations are violated, then such violations will result in adhrishta paapam.

For instance, if a grahastha does not study the bhaashyams properly, for want of time, consequent on his duties as a householder, he does not incur any paapam; but, once a person takes to the sanyaasa aasrama, Upanishad paraayanam, Bhaashya paraayanam, sravanam, mananam etc. become compulsory vidhis for him. And, if a sanyaasi does not do sravanam, mananam and nidhidhyaasnam every single day without exception, then he is subject to prathyavaaya paapam. Therefore, once one accepts jnaana yoga vidhi, there is adhrishta punyam and adhrishta paapam – punyam in implementation and paapam in non-implementation. To establish these corollaries, Sureswaraacharya is asking this question : "Is there a vidhi in jnaana yoga or not?"; and answers : "in jnaanam itself, there is no vidhi. But, in all the allied disciplines such as saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi , brahmacharyaa, sravana-mananam etc., there are vidhis, which have to be followed compulsorily and diligently".

That is what is the topic here.

Reverting to the text:

- अस्मिन् सूत्रे उपन्यस्ते - When this soothram is declared,

The 3rd sloka is the soothra sloka. And, what is that soothram? Ans: "Understanding of mahaavaakyam needs application of (i) saamaanaadhikarana sambhandhaa between the padhaas, (ii) viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa between the padhaarthaas and (iii) lakshana-lakshya-sambhandhaa between padhaarthaas and lakshyaarthaas". A sanyaasi, in the pursuit of jnaana yoga, has to apply these all the time. Every day, his job is sravanam of these three or mananam of these three or nidhidhyaasanam of these three – in other words, sambhandha thraya abhyaasaa, otherwise called the 'binary' format. The 'binary format abhyaasaa' will become a compulsory rule for a sanyaasi. He cannot afford, even in a weak moment, to enter into 'triangular' format, because, that will produce prathyavaaya paapam for a sanyaasi, though, such lapses may be excused in a grahastha in pursuit of jnaana yoga. The 'binary format abhyaasaa' is the soothram referred to.

- कश्चित् चोदयति - a person is raising a question:

The question follows: "ayam vaakyarthaprathipatthau poorvaadhyayena anvaya vyathirelalakshano nyaaya: sarvakarmasanyaasapoorvaka: abhihitha: kimayam vidhiparipraapitha: kim vaa svarasatha eva athra pumaan pravarthathe?"

The implication of the question asked, is: "Is this 'binary' format compulsory? Or can one switch over to 'triangular' format, now and then?"

- अयं न्यायः अभिहितः - This teaching has been given / this principle has been taught.

Nyaaya: - Application of this principle. Abhihitha: - has been taught.

What is that principle?

- अन्वय व्यतिरेक लक्षणः - The principle of binary format, in which one learns to remain as aathmaa and to look upon everything else as anaathmaa.

One's property must be consistently seen as anaathmaa; family must be seen as anaathmaa; one's own body must be seen as anaathmaa; even mental problems should be seen as anaathmaa. This practice of perceiving property, family, body and mind consistently as anaathmaa, is anvaya vythireka nyaaya:/ In other words, 'binary' format abhyaasa: is anvaya vythireka nyaaya: |

This has been taught. Where?

- पूर्व अध्यायेन - In / through the second chapter.

This 'binary' format abhyasa: can be practiced in two ways – (i) formally, with a vow and (ii) informally, without taking a vow.

What is taking a vow? That is called:

- सर्व कर्म सन्यास पूर्वकः - Taking to the fourth aasramaa called sanyaasa aasramaa.

The aspirant takes to the sanyaasa aasramaa, so that he / she will have two-fold advantage. The dhrishta palan is P.O.R.T reduction; there is no family, property etc., to worry about. Adhrishta palan also results when the aspirant takes the oath formally, as "Hereafter, I have no family; I have no property; I am asangha aathmaa; in and through all my experiences, I will practice the dictum 'aham sathyam jagan mithya'. Any event brought about by praarabhdhaa, I will view as an event happening in anaathmaa. I will religiously shed ahamkaaraa; and, also remove mamakaaraa in family, in property, in the body and in the mind also. Even if there are inevitable raagha dveshaas in the mind, I do not claim them as 'my' raagha dveshaas. I am free from all of them".

When the aspirant takes such an oath in sanyaasa aasramaa, it is called 'formal entry' into 'binary' format, which, Sureswaraachaaryaa calls 'Sarva karma sanyaasa poorvaka:|

"Ayam sarva karma sanyaasa poorvaka: anvaya vyathireka lakshana nyaaya: poorva adhyaayanena abhihitha: - "This teaching of the principle of the practice of 'binary' format, by taking to formal sanyaasa, has been taught in the previous chapter". This is the statement, the poorva pakshi makes, before he raises the question, that follows.

- किं अयं विधिपरिप्रापितः - Is this binary format practice prescribed by saasthraas as a compulsory injunction / rule?

Ayam – This binary format practice; vidhi paripraapitha: - prescribed as a compulsory injunction / rule for a jnaana yogi; kim – indicates it is a question.

The questioner continues:

- किं वा स्वरसत एव अत्र पुमान् प्रवर्तते - Or, does a human being practice this rule voluntarily, without any compulsion by saasthraas?

"Is it a voluntarily practiced 'binary' format or is it compulsorily practiced 'binary' format?" is the question. In short, "Is the practice of 'binary' format, voluntary or compulsory?"

'Svarasatha:' implies 'voluntary'. 'Rasa:' means 'icchaa / desire'. 'Svarasatha:' means 'one who acts, because of one's own desire'. 'Pumaan' means 'a person', in this context, meaning 'the seeker'. 'Pravarthathe' means 'ventures into / practices'.

- इति - Thus.

'Ithi' should be connected with 'chodhayathi', as 'Ithi chodhayathi', meaning, 'is asking such a question'.

Then, Sureswaraacharya, in turn, questions the poorva pakshi: "Why are you so particular about this question? How does it matter, whether it is voluntarily practiced or compulsorily practiced? Or, whether it is practiced in grahastha aasrama itself or whether it is practiced by entering into sanyaasa aasrama? What difference does it make? What is the difference between jnaana yoga practiced in sanyaasa aasrama and the very same jnaana yoga practiced in other aasrama? Does it make any technical difference at all?"

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 4:

किंचात् :

What is the significance of the question?

अतकिं : - What is the benefit you get from your question,?

The term 'kinchaatha:' should be rearranged as 'atha: kim?'. 'kinchaatha:' is an expression, that is found very often, in the writings of both Sankaraacharya and Sureswaraacharya. In this context, this is a question asked by Sureswaraacharya, to the questioner / the poorva pakshin, who asked whether 'sanyaasa aasrama for the pursuit of jnaana yoga' is a vidhi or not .

To that poorva pakshin, Sureswaraacharya is addressing the return question "Why is this factor so important to you? Is your question a worthy question at all? By asking this question and getting the answer, what is the advantage you get? In short, why should I or you or any one, know the difference, if any, between the jnaana yoga practiced in grahastha aasramaa and the jnaana yoagaa practiced in sanyaasa assramaa? Why are you asking this question at all?"

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 4:

श्रुणु । यद्यात्मवस्तु-साक्षात्करणाय विधिपरिप्रापितोऽयं न्यायः तदा अवश्यम् आत्मवस्तुसाक्षात्करणाय व्यावृत्तशुभाशुभकर्मराशिः एकाग्रमनाः अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां यथोक्ताभ्याम् आत्मदर्शनं करोति ।

Listen. If it is undertaken in obedience to an imperative, for the purpose of realizing the Self, then it is inevitable that, one, having renounced good and bad actions, and with a concentrated mind, should proceed to discover the Self in the manner of discrimination, for gaining a direct vision of the Self.

The poorva pakshin starts replying:

- श्रुणु - Listen.

The poorva pakshin starts his reply with this 'srunu', meaning "Hey! Sureswaraa! May you listen".

Then follows the answer given by the poorva pakshin, justifying his question/ explaining the reasons why he was asking the question.

- यदि - Suppose,
- अयं न्यायः - this binary format practice / abhyaasaa,
- विधिपरिप्रापितः - is compulsorily prescribed by the Vedas,

For what purpose?

- आत्मवस्तुसाक्षात्करणाय - for the purpose of realizing the Self,

What is the translation of 'saakshaathkaaraa'? It should be carefully remembered, that, 'Saakshaathkaaraa' means 'the binary format becoming natural and effortless'. It is not a mystic experience.

In the binary format, the seeker, when subjected to the experience of diverse events, remaining as asangha - aathmaa, refrains from looking upon any event, as an event affecting him / her as an individual or as an event affecting his/ her family. In binary format practice, ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa are naturally absent. For such a person, anything happening anywhere, is just an event in the mithyaa anaathmaa, an event which is organized by Viswaroopa Isvara, but, which does not call for a judgment and a reaction. When this attitude of 'no judgment or no reaction with regard to any event' becomes natural and effortless, it is called 'binary format saakshaathkaara' or 'aathma saakshaathkaara'. It is not a mystical event; nor is it a sudden event; but, is something that grows on the seeker, by deliberate practice. Whatever one 'deliberately' practices, will become 'natural', in due course.

Initially, the aspirant should diligently practice the 'binary' format, during simpler problems, so that, gradually, even in the worst crisis, he / she will maintain equanimity. Even in the worst crisis, he / she can state "In the anaathma prapanchaa, the praarabhdtaa is active ; global meltdown is active ; but, these do not affect me". This attitude cannot be achieved in one day. It is the result of sustained abhyaasaa. Saakshaathkaranam is that jnaana nishtaa alone.

Suppose (yadh), for this saakshaathkaranam, this binary format practice (ayam nyaaya:) is compulsorily prescribed (vidhiparipraapitha:),

- तदा - then / in that case,
- आत्मवस्तुसाक्षात्करणाय - for the purpose of realizing the Self,
- अवश्यं - it is essential, that,
- एकाग्रमनाः - (the seeker should) with singular commitment, take to sanyaasa aasramaa, considering saakshaathkaranam as the only goal in life;
- यथोक्ताभ्यां अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां - constantly remembering that everything else is anaathmaa, using the prescribed anvayavyathirekha logic / process of discrimination,
- व्यावृत्त सुभासुभकर्मराशिः - and renouncing all the bundles of punya and papa karma,

Vyaavruttha – becomes free from; karma raasi: - bundles of karma; subha and asubha – in the form of punya and papa karma.

How does the person become free from punya and paapa karma? Ans: Not by doing praayaschitthaa. On the other hand, in binary format, he claims 'I do not have any punyam nor any paapam requiring a praayaschitthaa. It is anaathmaa that has punyam and paapam and anaathmaa exhausts them. At the anaathmaa level, duties are performed; but, there is no question of any neutralization. Parihaaraa etc. does not become relevant for 'me', the asangha aathmaa.'

"Na punyam na paapam na saukyam na dhu:kham na manthro na theertham na vedhaa: na yagnyaa: aham bhojanam na naiva bhojyam na bokthaa chidhaanandarooapa: sivoham sivoham" is a relevant verse from Nirvana Shadgham of Sankara Bhavadh Paadhaa.

'Vyaavruttha subha asubha karma raasi:' is a description of the sanyaasi, who is practicing 'binary' format as a compulsory duty.

- आत्मदर्शनं करोति - (he) will discover the Self / attain aathma saakshaathkaaraa .

The words should be carefully understood. The statement 'aathma darsanam karothi' (அவன் ஆத்மாவைப் பார்ப்பான்) should not be understood in the literal sense, as "the seeker should sit in nirvikalpaka samadhi, aathmaa will reveal its dharsanam and then go away". It only means, that, the conviction "I' am the aathmaa' will become natural to such a seeker; that, for him, the 'binary' format will become effortless.

But, then, there is a disadvantage also. What is that disadvantage? That is said in the next sentence.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 4:

अपरिसमाप्यात्मदर्शनं ततः प्रच्यवमानः आरूढपतितः भवति |

If it happens that the discovery of the Self is not completed and he relapses from the endeavor, he falls from the height gained.

After formally entering into sanyaasa, till binary format practice becomes natural / the jnaana nishtaa is achieved, the sanyaasi should limit himself to (i) stabilization of saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi and (ii) sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani. He cannot even engage in any service to the society.

For carrying out service to the society and to the world, the appropriate aasramaa is the grahastha aasramaa.

Sanyaasa aasramaa, especially in the initial stages, is meant only for binary format abhaayassa. After binary format becomes natural, i.e. when, as defined in the Bhagavadh Githa "even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing, talking, evacuating, receiving, opening and closing the eye, he understands 'I do not do anything at all' " – "naiva kinchith karomeethi manyetha pasyan, sravan, sparasan, jigran, asnan, gacchan, svapan, svasan, pralapn, visrujan, gruhnan, unmishan nimishaanap" (Verses 8 and 9 – Chapter V), the sanyaasi can go back to the world and involve himself in any activity for loka sangraha. But, till the nishtaa is achieved, the sanyaasi has to diligently practice only sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani. If he does not do that, but does something else, then he will get prathyavaaya paapam. That is what is conveyed in this sentence.

For a sanyaasi, who has formally taken a vow to follow the binary format, sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasnam is a compulsory discipline. Obviously, once a person becomes a formal sanyaasi, the family duties will not be there, since there is no family at all for him. He need not even observe or celebrate Rama Navami, Krishna ashtami etc. Veda tells him "You are absolved of / free from all those duties".

There are no Pujas also to be performed by a sanyaasi; Pujas are, in fact, banned for a sanyaasi, since, if Puja is a duty for a sanyaasi, he will have to possess the necessary Puja implements, acquire necessary Puja dravyaas and therefore, find monetary resources also for these. Obviously, therefore, performance of Pujas, will make the renouncement of P.O.R.T., which renouncement is mandatory for a sanyaasi, impossible.

It is true, that, in the Sankara mataas, the Aachaaryaas perform daily Pujas; from this, lay people get the wrong impression, that Puja is a compulsory duty of a sanyaasi. It is not so. A regular aasrama sanyaasi has to do only sravanam / mananam / nidhidhyaasanam all the time. With regard to Pujaas, a mataathipathi may be considered exempt from this general rule for the sanyaasi.

There is also one more exception to this rule. There is another type of sanyaasaa called thridhandhi sanyaasa, in which sanyaasaa, the sacred thread is not discarded, but maintained. Such a thridhandi sanyaasi is allowed to perform Pujas; but, the paramahansa sanyaasi is not allowed to do Pujas, because, he is expected to utilize that time also for binary format abhyaasaa alone. And, if a person does not do that, what will happen? Answer follows:

- अपरिसमाप्यात्मदर्शनं - Without accomplishing nishtaa or saakshaathkaaraa / without completing the 'project' of making 'binary' format natural,
- ततःप्रच्यवमानः - a sanyaasi who slips from the endeavor,
- आरूढपतितभवति : - becomes aarooda pathitha: |

Aarooda pathanam is called a special type of sin. There are several types of sins. This is a special sin. What is that sin? Ans: A sanyaasi, who is yet to attain aathma saakshaathkaaraa, doing worldly activities, dropping spiritual saadhanas. This is called spiritual fall – aarooda pathanam. The world may glorify him for doing a number of social services – establishing schools, hospitals etc.; but, saasthraa considers this a spiritual fall.

At the same time, the following fact also should be very, very carefully noted and remembered: a sanyaasi, after achieving the goal of making 'binary' format natural, can enter into social / worldly activities, such as building schools, hospitals etc. Only when and if, without making 'binary' format natural, a sanyaasi undertakes worldly activities, even if those activities are meant for the good of the society, his action is considered 'aarooda pathanam', literally meaning 'climbing and falling'.

'Entering sanyaasa aasrama' is considered 'climbing' and 'taking up worldly activities, without achieving the purpose of the sanyaasa aasrama' is considered 'falling'. Saasthraas consider it a very serious paapam.

(During the course of study of soothraas III. iv. 42 and III. iv. 43, of the Brahma Soothras also, this subject is discussed).

Such persons are supposed to be ostracized, even by the society, as in the case of Jnaanadeva and his siblings (in the 12th century) in Maharaashtra, whose father, after taking to sanyaasa aasrama, gave up the aasrama and reverted to grahastha aasrama. Jnaanadeva's father was, therefore, considered an aarooda pathitha: and his children were also ex-communicated from society, as was the then-prevalent practice, to discourage such actions.

Such problems are not there for a grahastha. He is even permitted to skip his Vedhaanthic studies, for fulfilling his social and family obligations. He does not get prathyavaaya paapam by doing so.

Grahastha aasrama is meant for Karma Yoga; therefore, Karma becomes primary, for a grahastha; giving up karma will produce prathyavaaya paapam for him. But, skipping Vedhaanthic study will not produce paapam for him; the optional Vedhaanthic study, though, will add to his punyam.

If a sanyaasi attends social functions also, before accomplishing nishtaa, he will get prathyavaaya paapam. Similar to social activities, after jnaana nishtaa, a sanyaasi is free to attend social functions also; but, before achieving aathma nishtaa or saakshaathkaaraa, sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani are his constant and only duties.

Thus, the aasrama decides what will produce prathyavaaya paapam and what will not. This clarity must be there, for a seeker.

A sanyaasi will have a serious problem, if he takes a commitment according to vidhi and then fails to keep his commitment. On the other hand:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 4:

यदि पुनर्यदृच्छातः प्रवर्तते तदा न कश्चिदोष इति ।

If the undertaking is by natural propensity, then there is no such blemish.

All these are explanations given by the poorva pakshin, to find out whether there is sanyaasa vidhi or not.

- यदि पुनः - Again, suppose
- यदृच्छा अतः प्रवर्तते :- (there is no sanyaasa vidhi and a grahastha) because of his own interest decides to take up Vedhaanthic study / voluntarily practices Vedhaantha,

A grahastha can take to Vedhaanthic study in any manner according to his convenience, availability of time and co-operation of his family. There are no hard and fast rules for him.

- तदा - then,
- कश्चित् न दोषः - there is no question of prathayavaayaa paapam / 'aarooda pathana paapam', for him, (by the omission of sravana- mananam.)

This is an advantage for a grahastha. What is the disadvantage? Ans: In sanyaasa aasrama, when sravana-mananam are practiced by the seeker, there is an adhrishta punyam resulting. That extra invisible punyam will not be available for a grihastha, because, he does not have that ritualistic commitment to jnaana yoga.

The advantage of grahastha aasrama alone is talked about in this portion, viz., that, the grahastha will not get prathyavaaya paapam, if he skips sravana-mananam at times, because of other compulsions. The disadvantage of his 'not acquiring adhrishta palar' is not talked of, here.

इति - Up to this is the Poorva Pakshin's question.

Now, Sureswaraacharya is answering:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 4:

विधिपरिप्रापित इति ब्रूमो यत आह ।

In this matter, we say that this process is initiated by the imperatives of scriptures to that effect:

- विधिपरिप्रापित :इति ब्रूमः - We answer that 'jnaana yoga' / 'the practice of 'binary' format' exists as a compulsory duty, for a person who takes the commitment.

'Vidhiparipraapitha:' means 'it exist as a compulsory duty'. For whom? Ans: For the seeker who formally takes to the 'binary' format by taking sanyaasa aasrama oath.

The entry into sanyaasa assrama is indeed an oath; the would-be sanyaasi should enter a sacred tank or river, discard all his clothes under water to symbolize not having abhimaana even in his body, and, thus totally naked, discarding even the koubeenam, take a few steps towards North and take the oath: "Hereafter I am not a competitor in society; I will not compete / stake a claim even for food. Whatever food comes from anywhere, I will take and survive. I have got only one duty – the practice of the 'binary' format". He should, in a loud voice, address all the humans / devathaas / trees / animals and declare "I have renounced everything; I look upon everything as Viswaroopa Isvara. I have no wife, no children, no grandchildren. Not even this body, I look upon as mine".

This alone is symbolically indicated, in the Bhaagavatha Mahaa Puraana, through the episode of Krishna's Gopi vasthra apaharanam. The episode – the Gopis' surrender to Krishna, the Paramaathmaa - is only symbolic of the seekers taking to sanyaasa aasrama.

Thus, sanyaasa aasrama is a sacred oath taken by a serious aspirant; and, thereafter if the sanyaasi acquires any possession or looks upon even an aasrama (hermitage) as his hermitage and starts worrying about the hermitage, he is subject to prathyavaaya paapam.

(Striking a personal note, Swamiji says, in a lighter vein: "Even if I start worrying about the preservation of the tapes or discs containing my speeches, then, that also becomes a prathyavaaya paapam. As a sanyaasi, my attitude should be: 'If the tapes are preserved, well and good; if not, it does not matter'")

A sanyaasi takes an oath "Nothing is mine". By taking this oath, there is an advantage to him and there is a disadvantage also, as explained above.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says 'Vidhiparipraapitha: ithi bhrooma:' - 'we answer, that, it is a compulsory duty, for a sanyaasf.

But, if sanyaasa aasrama and the consequent duties are prescribed as 'compulsory', where is it prescribed? Ans: They are prescribed in various Upanishads.

The Aachaaryaa says:

- यत् आह :- I will tell you where they are prescribed.

Chapter III: Verse 4

शमादिसाधन : पश्येदात्मन्यात्मानमजसा ।

अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां त्यक्त्वा युष्मदशेषतः ॥ ४ ॥

Let one equipped with qualities like the control of the senses, see the Self in the self, through the method of discrimination, having abandoned the non-Self in its entirety.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa is referring to the sanyaasa aasrama vidhi and the compulsory duties to be followed by a sanyaasi; the manthraa that is kept in the mind, is Brahadhaarnyaka Upanishad Manthraa IV – iv – 23, which talks about formal, committed entry into 'binary' format.

122. Chapter III, Verses 4 to 6(20-12-2008)

In this portion (the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 4), Sureswaraachaaryaa is taking a small diversion from the main topic.

A possible poorva pakshaa question is raised and answered. The poorva pakshin's question is "Yoyam vaakyaarthaprathipatthau poorva adhyaayena anvyavythitrekalakshano nyaaya: sarvakarmasanyaasapoorvaka: abhihitha: kim ayam vidhiparipraapitha: kim vaa svarasatha eva athra pumaan pravarthate?" The poorva pakshin's stand was being discussed in the earlier session also.

Jnaana yoga disciplines consist of (i) nourishing saadhana chathushtaya sampaaathi (ii) sravana – manana - nidhidhyaasanaani and (iii) diligently remaining in the 'binary' format'.

The poorva pakshin's question is: "Suppose a person takes to a sanyaasi's lifestyle and follows all the jnaana yoga disciplines, in the form of nourishing saadhana chathushtaya sampaaathi, in the form of sravanam-mananam-nidhidhyaasnam, in the form of struggling to follow the 'binary format' etc., will these two – viz., the sanyaasi lifestyle and the jnaana yoga disciplines - come under Veda Vidhi / injunction, or are they voluntary disciplines chosen and followed by the seeker?"

In response, Sureswaraachaaryaa raised a counter question: "Kimchaathaa:?", implying "Why are you particular about the question? What is the consequence or benefit of knowing an answer to this question?"

The poorva pakshin replies: "Based on the answer, we get two types of corollaries. If sanyaasa aasramaa and jnaanayoga disciplines are followed only voluntarily, out of one's own will, such voluntary pursuit will have only dhrishta palan (the visible benefit) when they are followed efficiently; and, if and when they are not followed efficiently, the consequent negative results also will come under dhrishtaa category only. There will be no adhrishtaa consequences of punyam or paapam, when Veda vidhi is not involved. But, the moment the word vidhi comes, it falls within the range of punyam and paapam. Proper performance will produce punyam and improper performance will produce paapam. To repeat: if sanyaasa aasramaa lifestyle and jnaana yoga disciplines are only voluntary pursuits, there is no scope for punyam or paapam. On the other hand, if they come under Vedic injunction, then there are different consequences. What are they? Proper performance, in addition to practical utility, will give an additional booster benefit of adhrishtam also, pushing the seeker closer to the goal. At the same time, if there are lapses in sanyaasa aasrama lifestyle or in the observance of jnaana yoga disciplines, there will be serious consequences, in the adhrishtaa plane, in the form of prathyavaaya paapam. Therefore, my question is meant to know whether adhrishtaa influences are there in jnaana yoga saadhanaa or not, and is a very, very relevant question."

Thus, the poorva pakshi justifies his question, by saying "aparisamaapya aathma darsanam thatha: prachyavamaana: aaroodapathitha: bhavathi | Yadi puna: yadruchaa atha: pravarthathe thadhaa na kaschith dosham" - "if there is a Vedic injunction and the sanyaasa aasrama and jnaana yoga disciplines come under Vedic injunction, then he should not permit himself any lapses in those disciplines; and, suppose there are lapses – viz., a person half way through the pursuit, after taking to sanyaasa aasrama, drops sravanam and mananam and enters into social service or any other activity, for the sake of name / fame / glorification by others etc., without completing the project for which he took to sanyaasaa and jnaana yoga – if he slips from jnaana maargaa / if he strays from jnaana yoga, there can be no worse blunder. Such a person will get a special prathyavaaya paapam called aarooda pathanam and the person will be called aarooda pathitha: | This is the condition when it is veda vidhi based. On the other hand, suppose there is no Vedic injunction and a person follows sanyaasa aasramaa and jnaana yoga of his own volition, without there being a Vedic injunction in this regard, the advantage is, that, even if that person violates the sanyaasa aasramaa disciplines, he will not have the aarooda pathana prathyavaaya paapam".

The poorva pakshin, based on the above arguments, seeks to know from Sureswaraachaaryaa, as to whether the sanyaasa aasramaa and practice of jnaana yoga disciplines are subject to Vedic injunctions or not.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives his answer in the last line of the sambhandha gadhyam "vidhi paripraapitha: eva" - "You have to note that both sanyaasa aasrama and jnaanayoga disciplines are based on Vedic injunctions only".

Therefore, an aasrama sanyaasi cannot afford to 'play around' with jnaana yoga disciplines. For him, it is not a casual approach or a hobby; he should be committed and be serious about following it.

The Bhaagavatha Mahaa Puraanaa, in a particular portion, talks about the great paapam involved, when a person takes to sanyaasa aasramaa and later gives up the sanyaasa aasramaa and reverts to grahastha aasramaa. The Puraanaa condemns such an action in very strong terms, in five or six verses. The Puraanaa also gives a very nauseating example to such an action. It says: "After renouncing grahastha aasrama and therefore, the dharma - artha - kaama pursuit and taking to sanyaasa aasramaa or the mokshaa pursuit, if a person drops the moksha pursuit and again goes back to grahastha aasramaa and the dharma – artha – kaama pursuit, his action is similar to his vomiting the undigested food from his stomach and afterwards deciding to consume the same vomit”.

“After throwing out the dharma-artha- kaama- parichinna- palam and taking to sanyaasa and again coming back to the very same grahasthra aasramaa, is as nauseating and as terrible” declares the Bhaagavatha Puraanaa. The exact words used are “thavai vaanthaa aasi apathrapa:”, ‘vaanthaa’ means ‘vomit’, ‘aas/’ means ‘consumer’ and ‘apathrapa:’ means ‘shameless person’.

And, then, the Bhaagavatha Puraanaa further says that this person will be born as a worm, repeatedly, for several janmaas, wallowing in filth. Such a repulsive janma is the palam for taking to sanyaasa aasramaa and later, forgetting its value, returning back to worldly pursuits.

Sureswaraachaaryaa also says “jnaana yoga is a serious pursuit and is not just a ‘time-pass’”. He further gives the source of the vidhi, in the following sloka (verse 4), introduced in the earlier class.

This vidhi topic has been discussed in Brahma soothraas also, in soothraa no. 3.4.47. In this soothra, this vidhi had been discussed as niyama vidhi.

And, what is the source (both for the Brahma soothraas and for Sureswaraachaaryaa’s contention)? The Aachaaryaa indicates, that, it is found in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, manthraa IV.iv.23.

And, what does the manthraa say? Ans: One has to diligently cultivate samaadhi shadga sampatthi: |

“Saantho dhaantha: uparatha: thithikshu: sraddhaavitho bhoothvaa aathmanyeva aathmaanam pasyathi, sarvam aathmaanam pasyathi” is the relevant Brahadhaaranyaka Vaakyam, in the manthraa IV.iv.23., the meaning of which, is briefly given below :

- saantha: - The aspirant should develop samaa, mind control;
- dhaantha: - The aspirant should develop dhamaa, sense control ;
- uparatha: - The aspirant should reduce the P.O.R.T. heavily;

one should withdraw from or reduce possessions and activities, as much as possible, because the more the P.O.R.T. is, the more the mental preoccupation. Possessions, duties, relations, and transactions will increase mental preoccupation. A preoccupied mind is a shallow mind and a shallow mind is not available for deeper study of Vedhaanthaa.

The saasthraas, in fact, translate the word uparama:, as sanyaasa:; but, in the context of a grahasthaa studying Vedhaanthaa, the word can be interpreted as P.O.R.T. reduction , or as withdrawal from extrovert activities.

- thithikshu: - The aspirant should develop thithikshaa, forbearance or tolerance
- sraddhaavitha: – The aspirant should develop sraddhaa in saasthra pramaanam.

Thus, if all these disciplines are practiced seriously and diligently, the Brahadhaaranyaka manthraa declares "aathmanyeva aathmaanam pasyathi, sarvam aathmaanam pasyathi" - "(such an aspirant) sees the Self in his own self (body) and he sees all as Self".

The Aachaaryaa paraphrases this Brahadhaaranyaka manthraa, in this verse 4:

- शमादिसाधनः - One, equipped with samaadhi shadgha sampatthi,
- पश्येत् आत्मानं - should / will recognize the aathmaa,
- अञ्जसा - directly / aparokshathayaa / as the very Subject,
- आत्मनि - in one's own antha: karanam,

Here, the word 'Aathmaanam' refers to aathmaa; and, the word, 'aathmani' refers to the mind. In one's own mind, one should recognize the aathmaa as the saakshi chaithanyam.

But, before recognizing the aathmaa, the aspirant must have taken a very, very important step, as a preparation. What is that important step?

Ans: 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam, is now mixed up with anaathmaa; and, as long as the anaathmaa 'mixture' is there, poornathvam can never be claimed. The aspirant, therefore, should carefully 'push aside' the anaathmaa part.

Only after 'pushing aside' or separating the anaathmaa component, the saakshi can be recognized as Brahman.

And, therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- युष्मत् अशेषतत्यक्त्वा : - abandoning the non-Self in its entirety,

'Yushmath' means the anaathmaa component; 'yushmath asmath prathyaya gocharayo:' is a common technical Vedhaanthic usage.

'Yushmath' is the anaathmaa component, which is fourfold - family, property, body and mind.

At the time of Vedhantha sravanam, the anaathma component in the form of 'family' must be pushed aside, far away; otherwise, the dictum 'aham brahma asmi' will not work. Only thoughts about the family and relationships will be dominating. Therefore, family anaathmaa component should be pushed far aside.

'Property' anaathmaa component also should be pushed aside; otherwise, saasthraas warn that Vedhaantha will not be understood / will not work.

Coming closer, 'body' anaathmaa component should also be pushed far away; and fourthly, but most importantly, the mind anaathmaa component also must be pushed aside. The mind will always have several unsolved issues. There is no question of a perfect mind for any one at any time; therefore, if mind is included in 'me', 'aham Brahma asmi' equation will never tally. Therefore, the mind also should be pushed aside.

This fourfold anaathmaa has to be 'falsified'. There is no need to 'improve' them. This is the biggest difference between the agenda which Vedhaantha sets for serious aspirants and the agenda that a normal human being has. The agenda of a normal human being consists of projects, undertaken repeatedly in the form of 'improvement of anaathma'. If the actions of any normal individual is analyzed, it will be found, that, they are all in the form of 'anaathmaa improvement' only. 'Property' anaathmaa improvement, 'family' anaathmaa improvement, 'body' anaathmaa improvement and 'mind' anaathmaa improvement are the projects of the entire humanity. Vedhaantha warns, that, as long as an individual considers these as his / her only projects, samsaara will not cease to exist for him / her.

Of course, if an individual has not understood this message of Vedhantha, then, as the Mundakopanishad (Ch. I. - Sec ii. - manthra 12) suggests " Pareekshya lokaan karma chithaan brahmana: nirvedam aayaath" – " Having examined the worlds which are achieved through Karma, a Brahmin should come to dispassion", the individual can take some more time, go around, take a few more janmaas, go through a few more grahastha aasramaas and then understand that 'anaathma improvement as a project' is only a perpetuation of samsaara.

The project of Vedhaanthaa is, therefore, totally different. Instead of 'improvement of anaathmaa', 'falsification of anaathmaa' is the agenda of Vedhaanthaa. The assimilation of the dictum 'Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa' is the most important project of Vedhaanthaa. Unless this dictum is clearly understood, Vedhaanthaa will not work for the seeker.

After falsifying the anaathmaa / after assimilating anaathma mithyaathvam / after achieving this nishtaa, one can come back to anaathmaa and may work for its improvement, but, not as an important project. 'Improvement of anaathmaa' should never become a serious goal; if it does, it will become samsaaraa. Converting 'anaathmaa improvement' into a casual hobby after 'its (anaathmaa) falsification' is the project of Vedhaanthaa. If this approach is not understood, one may even commit the blunder of trying to use Vedhaanthaa for improving anaathmaa. One of the greatest blunders is the attempt to improve anaathmaa, with the help of Vedhaanthaa.

'That anaathmaa can be improved by Vedhaanthaa' is never the promise given by Vedhaanthaa, whose advice is 'falsify anaathmaa'.

How is this known? Ans: Because of the well known Vedhaanthic manthraas such as " 'Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa', 'Neha naanaasthi kinchana', 'Na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi', 'Na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha' " etc., which manthraas firmly falsify anaathmaa.

These are manthraas to which a Vedhaanthic student is repeatedly exposed; but, unfortunately, in spite of the repeated exposure, many students, in their deep subconscious minds, want to use Vedhaanthaa to improve anaathmaa; and when the 'improvement' does not happen, wonder where they have gone wrong. Their mistake is that they have not understood the real message of Vedhaanthaa, even after study over a long period. The message of Vedhaanthaa is not 'improvement of anaathmaa' but 'falsification of anaathmaa'.

This is what the Aachaaryaa also stresses here, by this statement 'Yushmath aseshatha: thyakthvaa' – 'having pushed aside / separated the anaathmaa totally.'

How is this 'separation / pushing aside' to be done?

- अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां - by applying the anvaya vyathirekhaa logic (as explained in the previous charter).

Thereafter (i.e. after falsifying anaathmaa), the seeker should understand "'I' am the aathmaa, which does not require improvement".

This fact (that, aathmaa does not need improvement) needs to be stressed, because, a student, having falsified anaathmaa, may concede "from now on, I shall not work for improvement of anaathmaa"; but, may come back with the question "Shall I, then, work for improvement of aathmaa?" This again shows that the student has not understood the message of Vedhaantha properly, since Vedhaantha, by its declaration 'thath thvam asI' meaning 'nithya suddha muktha svabhaava: thvam asI', points out: "'you' do not need improvement / 'you' do not require to become poorna: | 'You' are already the fine poorna aathmaa".

This ("anvaya vyathirkhaabhyaam yushmath aseshatha: thyakthvaa samaadhisaadhana: aathmani aathmaanam anjasaa pasyeth") is the injunction of the Brahadahaaranyaka Upanishad. Therefore, it is a vidhi.

Chapter III: Verse 5 –

युष्मदर्थे परित्यक्ते पूर्वोक्तैर्हेतुभिः श्रुतिः ।

वीक्षापन्नस्य कोऽस्मीति तत्त्वमित्याह सौहृदात् ॥ ५ ॥

When what is signified by 'Thou' (i.e. objective factors like the body, mind and ego) is abandoned on the grounds stated previously, and then there arises in the enquirer the question "Who, then, am I?", the sruthi answers in compassion "You are 'that' ".

- युष्मदर्थे परित्यक्ते (सति) - When what is signified by 'thou' (i.e. objective factors like property, family, body, mind and ego) is abandoned,

Yushmadharthaa (as already discussed) means the anaathmaa component in me, consisting of the four factors – possessions, family, body and mind. These are the most powerful anaathmaa components, subjects of ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa, i.e. falling within the scope of 'me' and 'mine'.

All of them should be 'pushed aside;' they should not be part of 'I', the Subject; but, should be part of the world, the object.

Sureswaraacharya says "for this 'pushing aside' the anaathmaa, I have given several logical supports before".

- पूर्वोक्तैर्हेतुभिः : - by employing the different reasonings given earlier (in the previous chapter),

Five reasonings were given in the earlier chapter, to 'push aside' the 'family' as the objective world, the 'property' as the objective world, the 'body' as the objective world and the 'mind' as the objective world.

They are enumerated below (For details, the 'summary' of the 2nd chapter – Class no. 110 - may be referred to):

- (1) Dhrusyathvam – all of them are objects of experience.
- (2) Boudhikathvam – all of them are material products.
- (3) Sagunathvam – all of them are endowed with attributes.
- (4) Savikaarathvam – all of them are subject to modification / change and
- (5) Agamaapaayithvam - all of them are subject to arrival and departure.

(To explain the term 'aagamaapaayithvam': During jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaas, all these four, viz., the family, possessions, body and mind, will be present ; but, in sushupthi avasthaa, all these will disappear. In sushupthi, 'body' is resolved / 'mind' is resolved / 'family' is resolved / 'property' is resolved. This alternate 'availability and resolution' is, what is meant by 'aagamaapaayithvam'.)

Thus, 'dhrusyathva, boudhikathva, sagunathva, savikaarathva, aagamaapaayithva pancha hethubhi:', one has to 'push away' all anaathmaa.

When all of them / all the objects of experience are removed, what remains? Ans: Only the saakshi / the non-observable Observer / the unobjectifiable Subject alone, is left behind. 'I', the saakshi alone remain. Saakshi roopena, 'I' alone remain.

And, once the seeker comes to this stage i.e. when he / she is left behind with saakshi as the only 'remainder', he / she has a problem. What is that problem? He / she has no way of knowing what is the nature of the saakshi. He / she only knows: "'I' am a Conscious being"; but, has no way of knowing what is the nature of the saakshi, because saakshi cannot be objectified.

Just as one's eyes cannot see the colour of the eyes themselves, 'I', the saakshi, can never 'know' the saakshi, as brought out by Yaagnyavalkyaa asking his wife and student Maithreyi (in verse II.iv.14 of Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad): "Vijnaathaaram arey kena vijaaneeyaath' - "Who can know the Knower?".

Thus, 'I', the Saakshi, am curious to know what 'my' nature is. But 'I' do not have any means of knowing; therefore, 'I' have to resort to the saasthram to help 'me' know what 'I' am, since saasthram alone is the pramaanam to reveal the saakshi svaroopam.

This is the crucial juncture where the seeker finds himself / herself: "I am remaining as saakshi and 'I' have got the curiosity to know what 'I' am ; 'I' have asked the question to saasthraa and I am looking forward to the answer from saasthra".

(A mundane example for this intense eagerness may be compared to the eagerness and anxiety with which one looks forward to the report coming in after a biopsy examination, though the example may sound negative).

The saasthra, in reply, says: "Eithadhaathmyam idagm sarvam thath sathyam sa aathmaa thath thvam asi" – " that jagathkaaranam, the 'Pure Existence' alone is You, the 'Pure Consciousness' "(Chaandoghya Upanishad – Ch. VI.8.6 etc.). And, therefore 'you' are the all-pervading adhishtaanam of the entire naama roopa prapanchaa.

What a mind boggling revelation?

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- को अस्मि इति वीक्षापन्नस्य - to the seeker who asks "Who am 'I'?",

'veekshaapannasya' means 'to the seeker who wants to know'; 'veekshaa' means 'jnaanam / knowledge ; 'aapanna:' means 'one who has come near'; 'Veekshaapanna:', therefore, means 'a seeker who has come to the doorstep of jnaanam / self-knowledge'.

Such a seeker has knocked at the door of the sruthi pramaanam and is asking: "Who am 'I'?" In this question, what type of 'I', does the seeker refer to? When he / she uses the word 'I', the reference is to 'I', the saakshi, which has already been separated from property, family, body and mind.

After separating / pushing aside / abandoning all anaathmaa components, 'I' remain as a saakshi and ask 'Ko asmi?' - 'Who am 'I'?

When, thus, the seeker has to come to the doorstep of knowledge, with the question "Who am 'I'?", in mind:

- श्रुति :आह - sruthi reveals

Sruthi reveals the most relevant wisdom in the life of an individual. And, what is that teaching?

- तत् त्वं इति - that "You are 'that'",
- सौहृदात् - out of compassion.

'Sauhrudham' literally means 'friendship' and is to be interpreted here as 'compassion' of a 'well-wisher'.

The anavayaa of this verse will be: "poorvokthai: hethubhi: yushmadharthe parithyakthe (sathi), "ka: asmi?" ithi veeekshaapannasya, sruthi: sauhrudhaath 'thath thvam' ithi aaha| This is a very beautiful sloka.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 6 (Chapter III):

अत्रापि चोदयन्ति सांख्या :। शरीरेन्द्रियमनोबुद्धिषु अनात्मसु आत्मेति निस्संधिबन्धनं मिथ्याज्ञानमज्ञानं | तन्निबन्धनो ह्यात्मनोऽनेकानर्थसंबन्ध | :तस्य चान्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यामेव निरस्तत्वान्निर्विषयं तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्यं प्राप्तम् । तस्माद्वाक्यस्य चैष महिमा योऽयमात्मानात्मनोर्विभाग इति । तन्निराकरणायेदमुच्यते ।

In this connection, the Saamkhyaa philosophers raise the following objection: Ignorance is the false knowledge, attaching itself fast that the body, senses, mind and the intellect, which are not the Self, are the Self. From that arises the association of the Self with manifold evils. When this ignorance is got rid of, through rational discrimination itself, there is no matter to be communicated by the scriptural proposition "That thou art". Therefore, the glory of that proposition would lie merely in this discrimination between the Self and non-Self. In refutation of this objection, the following is stated:

The previous diversion topic is over. What was that diversion topic? "Whether sanyaasa aasrama and jnaana yoga disciplines fall under vaidhika vidhi or not". The answer is: "They fall under vaidhika vidhi".

And, this particular vidhi is called niyama vidhi. Meemaamsa saasthraa talks about various types of vidhis - niyama vidhi, apoorva vidhi, parisankyaa vidhi etc. Vedhaanthaa holds that sanyaasa aasrama and jnaana yoga disciplines fall under vaidhika vidhi . But, it should be clearly known and understood, that the vidhi is not in the actual 'knowing' process.

As already discussed, in 'knowing' no vidhi is possible. Only in 'doing' there can be vidhi. 'Knowing' is not a form of 'doing' and, therefore, in 'knowing', there can be no vidhi. Therefore, the niyama vidhi is not in the 'knowing' process; the 'niyama vidhi' is in all the allied disciplines other than 'knowing'. 'Allied disciplines' mean the sanyaasa aasrama discipline, saadhana chathushtaya disciplines and sravana- manana-nidhidhyaasanaani .

In Brahma soothras, there is a soothra on this topic, which soothra itself is called sahakaari anthara vidhi: | In sahakaari saadhanams, i.e. in allied disciplines, niyama vidhi operates. This is a technical poorva meemamsa topic applied here.

Now, Sureswaraacharya is entering into another diversion topic, based on the views of a saamkhyaa philosopher.

The Aachaaryaa will have to do these diversion topics ; only then this treatise can be called a siddhi grantha: | When an author writes a siddhi granthaa, he has to present the views of several other systems of philosophy and refute them . If he avoids all other systems of philosophy and presents only the Vedhaanthin's view, his book or treatise will not be called a siddhi granthaa; it will be called a prakarana grantha: / An example is the Viveka Choodaamani.

In a prakarana granthaa, the author can avoid all other views of philosophy ; but, a siddhi grantha is expected to present the views of other schools of philosophy and also to refute them. The more the views that are presented and refuted in a siddhi granthaa, the greater it is, as a siddhi granthaa.

A student choosing a siddhi granthaa, has to, therefore, tolerate the intrusions of the poorva pakshins. In this portion of Naishkarmya Siddhi, a poorva meemaamsakaa philosopher first intruded and raised a question as to whether the sanyaasa aasramaa and allied disciplines come under vaidhika vidhi or not.

Now, a saamkyaa philosopher is intruding and raising another question. His question is given in this sambhandha gadhyam.

- अत्र अपि - Here also,
- सांख्या :चोदयन्ति - the saamkhyaa philosophers raise a question.

What is their question? It is explained as below:

In the previous verse, it was said that the seeker should first 'push aside' the anaathmaa and thereafter, remaining a saakshi has to listen to mahaa vaakyam. And, from the mahaa vaakyam, should know that the saakshi is identical with Brahman, the all-pervading Existence.

'Aathma anaathma viveka' is the first step and the next step is 'aathma brahma eikyam'. For the first step, viz., 'aathma anaathma viveka.', the seeker should use anvaya vyathirekha logic and for the second step, viz. 'aathma brahma eikyam', the seeker should make use of mahaavaakya sravanam. This is the Vedhaanthic procedure.

The Saamkhyaa philosopher finds fault with this scheme. He tells the Vedhaanthin: "You are unnecessarily introducing two steps. The first step need be the only step; it is more than sufficient for liberation. Why should we unnecessarily take the second step at all? Why should we unnecessarily use maha vaakya saravanam? Aathma brahma eikyam is redundant; maha vaakya sravanam is redundant; therefore , maha vaakyam itself is redundant. The only saadhanaa that is needed and is also sufficient, is, 'aathma anaathma viveka:'; to achieve this aathma anaathma viveka:, the method to be used, is anvaya vyathirekhaa. And, when, because of this viveka:, I realize that I am the asangha saakshi chaithanyam, who is not affected by anaathmaa, I am, at once, free from all the samsaara. I want only freedom from samsaaraa. I have got that freedom, from separating myself from the body-mind complex, which were giving me problems. Why, then, should I unnecessarily go to the second step? Why should I unnecessarily go to Brahma Eikyam?"

123. Chapter III, Verses 6 and 7 (27-12-2008)

Till now, Sureswaraachaaryaa had been establishing that Self-knowledge has to be acquired in two stages. The first stage is thvam padhaartha viveka: and the second stage is thath padhaartha eiykyam.

The thvam padhaartha viveka: alone is called aathma-anaathma-viveka:, through which vivekaa, the seeker should arrive at himself / herself as the saakshi chaithanyam and everything else experienced by him / her, the mind, the body and the world as anaathmaa.

And, having separated oneself as saakshi, the seeker has completed the first stage of thvam padhaartha viveka: or aathma-anaathma-viveka: | Sureswaraachaarya says there is a major second stage. In that second stage alone, 'I', the Saakshi, is equating 'myself' with Sathbrahman and only then, there is Advaita siddhi.

When Jeevaathma-paramaathma-eiykam is claimed, in the process, anaathma should get falsified also. The 'falsification' of anaathmaa is an important step in mahaa vaakya vichaara.

In aathma-anaathma-viveka:, we have only separated aathmaa and anaathmaa ; anaathmaa has not been falsified. The 'falsification' is a very, very major step and that step is accomplished along with the claim of Jeevaathma-paramaathma-eiykyam. Then alone 'aham brahma sathyam asmi' |

The anaathmaa being the kaarya prapanchaa, a product, it is mithyaa. Thus, of the three things, anaathmaa, jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa, jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa should be merged together to become ekaathmaa and anaathmaa should be falsified. Only then there is advaita siddhi. This is also what Sureswaraachaaryaa established, viz., "only after jeevaathma-paramaathma merger and anaathma falsification, the binary format 'aham sathyam and jagan mithyaa'".

Without falsification of the world, binary format will be of no use. Binary format will be working only when, in the binary format, one (aathmaa) is sathyam and the other (anaathmaa) is mithyaa. This conviction, that, "I, the Observer is sathyam and the observed anaathmaa, consisting of the mind, the body, the family and property (all the four constituting anaathmaa) is mithyaa", must be well entrenched. This is the Advaitic approach.

On the other hand, the saamkhyaa philosopher claims "We can make it a simpler procedure; aathma-anaathma-viveka is more than sufficient for enjoying liberation". He wants to stop with thvam padhaartha vivekaa only; he cuts off 'thath padhaartha eikyam' from the Project and he wants to delete 'anaathma mithyaathva nischayathvam' also from the programme.

According to the saamkhyaa philosopher: "'anaathmaa mithyaathva nischayathvam' and 'thath padhaartha eikyam' and therefore, 'mahaavaakya vicharaa' etc. are not required at all ; what is required is only aathma anaathma viveka: | 'I' am Purusha: and whatever is experienced by 'me' is prakruthi: | This Purusha prakruthi viveka:, will, by itself, give liberation."

Asked to explain as to how mere Purusha prakruthi viveka: alone can give liberation, the saamkhyaa philosopher responds: "Purusha:, the aathmaa is asangha: and this asangha aathmaa cannot and will not be affected by prakruthi:/ anaathmaa, even though anaathmaa is sathyam. Asangha aathmaa cannot be tainted by anything. Purusha: is sathya: ; let prakruthi also be sathyam; 'I' am sathya purusha: ; world is sathya prakruthi:| What is required is only 'discrimination'. You should not identify with prakruthi, the sareeram. The identification alone is the problem. 'Dis-identify' from prakruthi. Mokshaa is accomplished. Advaitam is not at all required."

The saamkhyaa philosopher goes further and says that moolaavidhyaa (a very important concept of Advaita philosophy) itself is not there.

Then, what is his view on 'ignorance'? The saamkhyaa philosopher replies: "'Ignorance' is there; but, 'ignorance' is not your moolaavidhyaa".

In other words, the saamkhyaa philosopher accepts the concept of 'ignorance'. But his 'ignorance' is different from the moolaavidhyaa of Advaitam.

Then, what is his definition of ignorance? According to him, 'anaathma abhimaanaa' alone is 'ignorance', which he calls 'mithyaa jnaanam'. Ajnaanam is not moolaa avidhyaa; but, ajnaanam is mithyaa jnaanam, meaning 'false identification'.

And, what type of false identification? He answers: A 'firmly rooted' false identification.

Reverting to the text, the statement of the saamkhyaa philosopher is:

- अज्ञानं - Ignorance (is)
- निस्संधिबन्धनं - the firmly rooted
- मिथ्याज्ञानं - false identification

- शरीर इन्द्रिय मनो बुद्धिषु अनात्मसु - of the body, sense organs, the mind and the intellect, which are all anaathmaa / jada prakruthi,
- आत्मा इति - as the Self , claiming that 'I' am them.

The term 'Nissandhi bhandhanam' is adjective to 'mithyaa jnaanam' and means 'well reinforced / firmly rooted / that which cannot be easily negated'. A commentator to Naishkarmya Siddhi translates 'nissandhi bhandhanam' as 'bhaadaka prathyaya rahitham', which means 'that, which cannot be easily negated or routed'.

This 'nissandhi bhandhanam' nature is responsible for the triangular format; that we are not able to drop the triangular format is because of 'nissandhi bhandhanam' – 'firm entrenchment'.

According to the saamkhyaa philosopher, such mithyaa jnaanam alone is ajnaanam.

The difference between Saamkhyaa and Vedhaanthaa, on this aspect, should be thoroughly understood. Saamkhyaa says "Because of ajnaanam, 'I' identify with the body, which body is also real", whereas Vedhaanthaa says "Ajnaanam is the producer of the false body itself"

Expressing this in other words: "Vedhaanthic ajnaanam is the creator of the false body. Saamkyaa ajnaanam is the 'cause of the false identification of the Self with the real body' or 'that ajnaanam which makes 'me' identify with the real body' ".

"Mithya jnaanam eva ajnaanam" is the stand of the Saamkhyaa philosopher. In this sentence, Mithya jnaanam is the subject ; ajnaanam is the subjective complement.

The Saamkhyaa philosopher thus holds: "This mithya jnaanam alone is 'ignorance'. There is no such thing called moolaaavidhyaa as the creator of anaathmaa".

- तन्निबन्धनः - Caused by the false identification,

'nibhandhana:' means 'caused by'; 'that' means 'the false identification', which is 'ignorance', according to the saamkhyaa philosopher.

Caused by that 'false identification' alone,

- आत्मन :- for 'me' the aathmaa / for 'me' the Purusha:, who is asanghaChaithanyam, Aathmaa is called Purusha thathvam, in saamkhyaa philosophy.

- अनेक अनर्थ संबन्ध(भवति) : - connection with several problems results.

'Sambhandha.' means 'connection' and 'anartha' means 'problem'.

The saamkyaa philosopher says: "Just as a person, man or woman, who is free from problems before marriage, has to share the problems of the spouse after marriage, the Purusha:, free from problems, after false identification with the prakruthi (consisting of the world, body and mind), suffers the problems of prakruthi. This 'false identification' is samsaaraa. Therefore, the solution is sanyaasa: – renunciation of prakruthi / dropping of the false identification with prakruthi. This 'CLASP' (controllership and ownership) rejection is enough for mokshaa. Anaathma mithyaathvam is not required."

- तस्य च निरस्तत्वात् - Since that false identification is eliminated,
- अन्वय व्यतिरेकाभ्यां एव - merely by the rigorous practice of anvaya vyathirekhalogic (the enquiry through co-presence and co-absence),

'Thasya' means 'mithya jnaasya'; 'nirasthathvam' means 'elimination'. 'Mithya jnaanam' refers to 'false identification'.

"The false identification is eliminated by aathma anaathma viveka:, at the end of which, I know 'I' am the asangha aathmaa ; let anaathmaa, the world, continue. Why I should I falsify the world? I have to only know that I have no sanghaa with that anaathmaa" is the saamkhyaa philosopher's stand.

- तत्त्वमस्यादि वाक्यं - the mahaa vaakyani like 'thatthvamasii'
- निर्विषयं प्राप्तम् - become redundant / do not have any further subject matter to deal with.

According to saamkhyaa philosophy, after aathma-anaathma viveka:, there is no further effort required, either anaathma-mithyathva-nischayam or jeevaathma-Paramaathma-aijkyam. This belief of the saamkhyaa philosopher, is also because he does not have a Paramaathmaa separate from the jeevathmaa.

The saamkhyaa philosophy holds: "There are many Purushaas called jeevaathmaas and each purushaa is all-pervading. Each purushaa is asangha: and each purushaa is muktha: | There are as many Purushaas, as there are bodies. Each purushaa is asangha:, chaithanya svaroopaa:, sarvagatha: and muktha:| There is no Paramaathmaa separate from Jeevathmaa. Only Purusha and prakruthi are there. When there is no Paramaathmaa, where is the question of Jeevathma-Paramaathma-eikyam? Where is the requirement of mahaa vaakyam? Where is the requirement of the falsification of the world? There is no need for all these”.

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- महिमा - the great role
- वाक्यस्य - of the mahaa vaakyam
- एषः - is the following :
- यःविभागःअयं आत्म अनात्मनो : - “merely the separation of the aathmaa, the Purushaa and anaathmaa , the prakruthi”.Vibhaaga: - separation.

What is the great role of the mahaa vaakyam? According to the saamkhyaa philosopher: “The role of the mahaa vaakyam is not jeevaathma- paramaathma- eikyam. The ‘separation of aathmaa and anaathmaad’ alone is the job of the mahaa vaakyam”.

- इति - In this manner (up to this is the saamkhyaa’s objection).

‘Ithi’ must be connected with the term ‘saamkhyaa: chodhayanthi’. ‘Ithi saamkhyaa: chodhayanthi’ means ‘In this manner, the *saamkhyaa*s raise objections’

- तन्निराकरणाय - To refute this saamkhyaa philosophy/ for negation of dvaitham, Saamkhyaa is essentially dvaitha philosophy.
- इदं उच्यते - the following sloka is written.

Chapter III: Verse 6 –

भेदसंविदिदं जानं भेदाभावश्च साक्षिणि ।

कार्यमेतदविध्याया जात्मना त्याजयेद्वचः ॥ ६ ॥

This discriminative knowledge is apprehension of difference; but, in the witness, there is no difference. Apprehension of difference is the effect of nescience. The words of the scripture set it aside by focusing on the Self of the nature of pure consciousness.

The saamkhyaa philosophy can be refuted in two ways. One is based on reasoning. But, Sureswaraachaaryaa does not apply that method here, presumably because, that has been done very elaborately in the Brahma Sootraas, in the second chapter, titled Avirodhaadhyaya; the saamkhyaa philosophy is very elaborately refuted, especially in the 2nd paadhaa of the 2nd chapter of Brahma Sootraas, where several sootraas are presented to show that, if purushaa and prakruthi are equally real, then mokshaa is never, never possible. In Dvaitam, mokshaa is never possible, because dvaitam means 'limitation'. Each one Purushaa will be limited by another Purushaa; Purushaa will be limited by Prakruthi. 'Time and space limitation' will cause 'punarapi jananam punarapi maranam' cycle; thus, logically also, 'dvitheeyaath vai bhayam bhavathi'. Duality and mokshaa can never co-exist. This reasoning method is found in Brahma Sootraas.

Whereas, in this particular context, Sureswaraachaaryaa, without resorting to the reasoning method, negates the saamkhyaa philosophy, based on sruthi pramaanam; because, fortunately, the saamkhyaa philosophy is an aasthika darsanam; the saamkhyaa philosopher accepts veda as pramaanam. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "the essential teaching of veda is not dvaitam; but advaitam alone".

In the Upanishads, we can find that there are several statements, such as

- "neha naanaasthi kinchana" (Katopanishad II.I.11) – "there is no plurality at all, in all the three periods of time",
- "yathra vaa asya sarvam aathmaivaabooth thath kena kam jigreth, thath kena kam pasyeth" – (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad II.iv.14) – "When to the knower of Brahman everything has become the Self, then what should one smell and through what and what should one hear and through what" (iii) "brahmaiva idham amritham purasthaath brahma paschaath brahma dakshinaath athascha uttharena" - (Mundaka Upanishad II. 12) – "All this in front is the immortal Brahman alone; Brahman alone is behind; Brahman alone is on the right as well as on the left" (iv) "na bhoomirapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha" (Kaivalya Upanishad - manthraa 22) – "earth and water are not there for me; fire is not there; air is not there; space is also not there". Such statements consistently refute a 'second' entity, other than aathmaa or Brahman.

According to the Aachaaryaa and Advaita philosophy, purusha-prakruthi-viveka alone is not enough for mokshaa or liberation. Prakruthi will have to be falsified.

As already discussed in the earlier session, the entire humanity has its agenda as 'improvement of anaathmaad'; all mental preoccupations, tensions, fears and worries are results of this attempt to improve prakruthi, the anaathmaa.

Vedhaanthaa points out this fact and warns that as long as one's aim and Project is 'improvement of prakruthi / anaathmaad', peace of mind can never, never be attained.

As a solution, Vedhaanthaa suggests a different Project: "Falsify prakruthi. Replace the Project of 'prakruthi improvement' by the Project of 'prakruthi falsification". This is the primary theme of Vedhaanthaa.

Ironically, without understanding this message of Vedhaanthaa, people want to study Vedhaanthaa and use Vedhaantha itself for 'prakruthi improvement'. But, using Vedhaanthaa for 'anaathmaa improvement' will never work.

Of course, after falsification of anaathmaa and after internalizing this falsification, a seeker can come back to prakruthi and choose to work for its improvement as a hobby/ a sport / leela. When the seeker is already 'free', since he / she has to be engaged in activities till death comes, his / her activities may be directed towards improvement of prakruthi, as a healthy hobby. But, 'working for prakruthi improvement', as an important project or saadhanaa, will only cause samsaaraa and, therefore, no seeker should have the intention / plan of improving prakruthi and afterwards claiming mokshaa . This cannot be the agenda at all.

The saamkhya philosopher does not understand this. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- इदं ज्ञानं - This aathma-anaathma-viveka-jnaanam / purusha-prakruthi- viveka- jnaanam
- भेद संविद् (भवति) - is only dvaitha jnaanam .

'Samvidh' means 'jnaanam'/ knowledge.

The Aachaaryaa tells the saamkhya philosopher: "This aathma-anaathma-viveka-jnaanam, which you claim as 'liberating knowledge' can never be a 'liberating knowledge', because this jnaanam is also only dvaitha jnaanam".

Why is this jnaanam considered dvaitha jnaanam? Because of the very term aathma-anaathma-viveka and the very word viveka, both of which mean that one is talking about two things. Even this marginal dvaitha-bhaavanaa is enough to cause samsaara.

Brahadhaarnyaka Upanishad goes one step further, by averring that even Jeeva- Isvara-dvaitha-jnaanam is a cause for samsaaraa. Majority of humanity are believers and think: "God / Isvara is my supporter and savior; and as long as Isvara is there for me, I am free from fear (अवनिर्मुक्तं पयमेन्?)".

But, Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad says: "Even that (devotion) will not give you liberation". The following is the relevant statement of Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad: "Ya: anyaam devathaam upaasathe anya: asau anya: aham asmi ithi, na sa: vedha, yathaa pasu: evam sa: devaanaam" (I.iv.10) – "He, who worships another god, thinking 'He is one and I am another', does not 'know'. He is like an animal to the gods".

The Upanishad implies: "Even Bhagavaan cannot save you, as long as this attitude of Bhagavaan–bhaktha-dvaitam is in your mind". What a bold statement?

The Upanishad gives to such a person, even though a devotee, the title 'devaanaam pasu:', literally meaning 'animal to the gods' and implying 'mahaa asadu'.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says 'idham jnaanam bedha samvidh' – '(even) this discriminative knowledge' (aathma-anaathma-viveka-jnaanam) is only dvaita jnaanam.

- साक्षिणिः च भेद अभावः - (Whereas Upanishads loudly proclaim that) in Saakshi, there is no duality at all (not even purusha-prakruthi-bedha: or jeeva-Isvara-bedha:|)

The manthraa elaborating Bhooma Vidhyaa (VII. 24. 1), from Chaandhoghya Upanishad "Yathra naanyath pasyathi naanyath srnothi naanyath vijaanaathi sa: bhoomaa" – "The Infinite (Brahman) is that, where one does not see anything else, hear anything else and does not understand anything else", is relevant in this context.

- एतद् - This bedha jnaana / this aathma-anaathma-viveka / this purusha-prakruthi-viveka
- अविध्यायाकार्यः - is also a product of avidhyaa only.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says aathma-anaathma-viveka-jnaanam is also a product of ignorance.

In Ashtaavakra Githa it is said, that, whoever claims "I am a sanyaasi" is also ignorant. Normally, when one claims "I am a sanyaasi", the person who makes the claim tends to feel satisfied with himself; and others also respect him. Whereas, Ashtaavakra Githa says "If you claim that you are a sanyaasi, that claim shows that you are ignorant".

Why does it say so? Ans: A sanyaasi means a 'renouncer'. When a sanyaasi claims "I am a renouncer; I have renounced the world", that claim shows that he recognizes, that, there is a world to renounce and that he is the renouncer. Since, thus, he talks of bedha - the duality of "the 'renounced' and the 'renouncer'" - he is in dvaitham, which is a product of ignorance and, is, therefore, 'ignorant'.

The Aachaaryaa is 'relentless' about advaitam and, therefore, looks upon aathma-anaathma-viveka also as a product of ignorance. In this situation, mahaavaakyam only should come for rescue and negate aatha-anaathma-viveka-jnaanam also. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- वचः - Mahaa vaakyam
- त्याजयेत् - makes/ helps/persuades the student negate aathma-anaathma duality,
- ज्ञात्मना - by teaching the knowledge of advaita aathmaa.

The term 'aathma-anaathma duality' is supplied; and, 'jnaathmana' means 'advaita aathma bodhanena'.

By teaching the advaita aathmaa, the Upanishad makes the student negate even the aathma-anaathmaa division. The advanced seeker should never talk about even that division.

In this context, the warning of Dayananda Swamiji is very relevant. He says "when we practice the meditation of Nirvaana Shadkam, we should be very, very careful. We say 'mano buddhi ahamkaara chitthaani naaham na cha srothra jihve chidhaananda roopa: sivo ham'. When we practice this meditation we may conclude, that, there is a vast world which is different from me and I am the chaitanyam different from the world . Therefore, in this meditation also there is a big problem. We will think 'I am the Consciousness , different from Matter', resulting again in duality. Therefore, this meditation should be followed by another meditation. Whatever we have negated, we should bring back again and we should say 'I alone am appearing as whatever I have negated'. First, you say 'I am different from aakaasaa or vaayu etc'; later, you should say 'I only am in the form of aakaasaa, vaayu etc'. 'Withdrawal' ('I am different from everything') is the initial stage; 'expansion' ('I am everything') is the final stage. This Sarvaathma bhaavaa is very important. Otherwise the seeker will have an idea of 'isolation', which may result in a desire to withdraw from the world".

But, 'sitting in a cave, withdrawing from the world' is not Vedhaanthaa. On the other hand, the seeker has to 'expand', to claim (as in the Thaitheeya Upanishad): "aham vrukshasya rerivaa (Seekshaavalli – manthraa 10); aham annam; aham annaadha:; aham slokkrith (Bhriguavalli – manthraa 10)" – " I am the sustainer of the tree of the universe; I am the food; I am the food-eater; I am the combiner".

Mokshaa is not 'escaping the world'; not 'running away from the world, never to come back again'. Such ideas of 'escaping' should be dropped. There is neither 'going' nor 'coming'. "'I alone am appearing as aathmaa; 'I alone am appearing as anaathmaa also" should become the conviction of the seeker. This 'advaita siddhi' is the aim of Vedhaanthaa.

The Aacharya declares (in this verse 6): "Vacha: chaithanya aathma bodhanena dvaitam thyaajayeth" – "The mahaavaakyam makes you 'negate' dvaitam, by teaching the knowledge of chaithanya aathmaa."

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 7:

Hearing that it is set aside by focusing on Self as the nature of consciousness, someone objects as follows: As there is no ignorance of Self other than false knowledge, what is it that is set aside by the Vedhaanthic proposition? By ignorance is meant the absence of knowledge. Since it is nothing positive, how can it be the cause of transmigratory existence? Surely nothing positive can originate from non-existence. Sruthi asks, "How can this be? How can Being take birth in Non-being?" (Chandoghya Upanishad VI. ii. 2). The reply is this:

In the previous portion, Sureswaraacharya differentiated the ajnaanam that is defined by saamkhyaa and the ajnaanam as defined by Vedhaanthaa; i.e. the 'subject matter' is ajnaanam. 'What is the ajnaanam?' is the subject matter.

On this subject matter, as was discussed, the Saamkhyaa philosophy and Advaita Vedhaanthaa have got totally different concepts.

Saamkyaa concept of ajnaanam is nothing but 'false identification with body', with the saamkhyaa philosopher otherwise calls mithyaa jnaanam ('jnaanam' meaning 'identification' and 'mithyaa' meaning 'false'); which means, that, in the mind of the individual, there is a thought "I am the body".

To consolidate, according to the saamkhyaa philosopher: "'I', the aathmaa is already there, which is sathyam. Anaathmaa is also already there, which anaathmaa is also sathyam. Purushaa is sathya: | Prakruthi is also sathyam. As for 'ignorance', in the mind of the 'ignorant' individual, there is a wrong thought 'I am the body'. That wrong / false thought, mithyaa jnaanam alone is called ajnaanam or ignorance. There is no other ignorance."

Thus, according to the saamkhyaa philosopher, ignorance becomes 'a thought in the mind'. What type of thought? Ans: An erroneous / fallacious thought.

'Mithyaa jnaanam eva ajnaanam', according to saamkhyaa.

Whereas, what is ajnaanam according to Advaitam? Ans: The Advaita Vedhaanthin says 'ajnaanam' is 'moolaa avidhyaa', which is different from aathmaa; which is different from prakruthi, the anaathmaa also; which is different from the mind also; which is different from the above wrong thought (viz., 'I am the body') also. Even that wrong thought is not Vedhaanthin's ajnaanam. According to him, this wrong thought 'I am the body' is called adhyaasa: /

The wrong thought "I am the body" is ajnaanam according to the saamkhyaa philosopher. And, according to Advaita Vedhaantha, this wrong thought "I am the body" is adhyaasa: /

Vedhaanthic ajnaanam is different from even that wrong thought – the mithyaa jnaanam. Then what is it? Ans: Moolaa avidhyaa aaha ithi.

Moolaa vidhyaa is different from aathmaa / different from anaathmaa / different from mind / from the mithyaa jnaanam i.e., the fallacious thought 'I am the body'.

Then what is moolaa avidhyaa? The Advaita Vedhaanthin says that the moolaavidhyaa is the cause of all these – the mind, the body, the world and also the false thought.

Moolaavidhyaa ajnaanam is different from mind, body, world and false thoughts and is the cause / the material cause / the upaadhaana kaaranam of all these – the mind, false thought, the world etc. (Of course, it is not the 'cause' of aathmaa).

(There is a lot of repetition in the above portion, in order to stress / drive home the subject.)

Now, the poorva pakshi says "I am not able to accept an ignorance other than the 'false knowledge'. Let me explain. If, ignorance, which you call moolaavidhyaa, is something other than 'false knowledge', what can it be?"

The poorva pakshi proceeds: "Other than 'false knowledge', ignorance can be defined only as 'absence of knowledge'. If there is an ignorance, other than 'false knowledge', it can be only 'absence of knowledge'. For instance, in the conventional example of rajju-sarpam, if 'rope-snake' is 'false knowledge' and if there is an ignorance other than the 'rope snake', what will be the nature of that ignorance? It should only be 'absence of rope-knowledge'. 'Absence of rope knowledge' can alone be called ignorance"

The poorva pakshin's next step is: "If ignorance is 'absence of knowledge', it has to be a negative entity only. It cannot be a positive entity; it cannot be a substance. 'Absence of knowledge' cannot be a substance. It has to be a negative abhaava padhaartham only / a non-existent entity only. Just as darkness is 'absence of light', an abhaava padhaarthaa, ignorance must be 'absence of knowledge' and therefore, an abhaava padhaarthaa".

Then, his next step is "If your (the Advaita Vedhaanthin's) 'ignorance', moolaavidhyaa, is 'absence of knowledge' and therefore, abhaava padhaarthaa, that abhaava padhaarthaa cannot be a cause for anything. The abhaava padhaarthaa cannot be the cause of anything, because, 'abhaavaath na bhaavothpatthi.' (is an accepted maxim). Therefore, you cannot claim that, your moolaavidhyaa, other than 'false knowledge', is the cause of duality."

124. Chapter III, Verses 7 (03-01-2009)

In this portion Sureswaraachaaryaa is discussing a highly technical aspect of Vedhaanthaa. The topic is very rarely discussed, in Vedhaanthic texts. And, even when discussed, the discussions on the topic are found to be very brief. But, the Aachaaryaa chooses to discuss the topic elaborately.

The current question is asked by a poorva pakshin, based on the saamkhyaa poorva pakshaa, given in the previous portion. In the previous portion, the Aachaaryaa said "athraapi chodhayanthi saamkhyaa:", thus specifying the poorvapakshin as a saamkhyaa philosopher. But, in the current portion, the word saamkhyaa is not there; the Aachaaryaa only says "kaschith aah". 'Kaschith' implies a general 'poorva pakshin'; it is not specified as a question from the saamkhyaa philosopher, though an extension of the earlier discussion. 'Kaschith' may be taken as an 'ekades', which means one general poorva pakshin.

What is the topic discussed here? The topic can be understood with the popular example of the 'rope and snake'. As is well known, Vedhaanthaa does talk about the erroneous perception / projection of a 'snake' upon a 'rope'. It says that this error takes place because of 'rope ignorance', consequent on a rope lying in a place where there is no bright light, but, only partial light and partial darkness. Because of the mandha anthakaaram, while the viewer knows that there is something lying in the semi-darkness, he does not know what exactly it is. This is called 'rope ignorance'; and, because of this 'rope ignorance', the rope is mistaken for a snake by the viewer. In Vedhaanthic parlance, the 'rope-ignorance' is called ajnaanam and the erroneous / mistaken / wrong perception of snake is called adhyaasa:.| Another word for adhyaasa: is mithyaa jnaanam.

Thus, in the context of rope-snake, the student has to remember two concepts – one is 'ajnaanam' and another is 'adhyaasa:' or 'mithyaa jnaanam' - 'ignorance' and 'error' respectively. Vedhaanthaa further says that ajnaanam is kaaranam and mithyaa jnaanam is kaaryam. Because of ajnaanam alone adhyaasaa has taken place. Obviously, therefore, Adhyaasaa or mithyaa jnaanam is kaaryam and ajnaanam is kaaranam.

Now, our further analysis is "What is the status of the mithyaa jnaanam? What is the status of the ajnaanam?".

What do we mean by the term 'status'? It can be understood by re-phrasing our above questions.

The first question will be rephrased as "Does mithyaa jnaanam come under bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam or bhaava-abhaava-vilakshana-anirvachaneeya-roopam?" In other words, "Does it come under 'existent' category or 'non-existent' category or the mysterious category of 'unreality' or anirvachaneeyam?"

Sometimes Vedhaantha uses another language to ask the same question: 'sathroopam vaa asathroopam vaa sathasath roopam vad? In this portion, Surewaraachaarya is using the words 'bhaava , abhaava and bhaava abhaava vilakshana'. Both terminologies convey the same meaning.

What is the final conclusion of Vedhaantha on this? Vedhaantha says 'mithyaa jnaanam' is 'bhaava abhaava vilakshana anirvachaneeya roopam', i.e., 'Mithyaa jnaanam' or 'adhyaasa.' ('erroneous perception') will not come either under bhaavam or under abhaavam; but is 'bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam' or 'anirvachaneeyam'.

Thus does Viveka Choodaamani (verse 109) talk about Maayaa: "Sannaapyasanaapyubhayaathmikaa no bhinnaapyabhinaapyubhayaathmikoo no saangaapyasangaahyubhayaathmikaa no mahaadhbhuthaa anirvachaneeya roopaa" (verse 109) - "(Maaya) is neither existent nor non-existent, nor both; neither same nor different nor both; neither made up of parts nor whole nor both. Most wonderful it is and beyond description in words".

Mithyaa jnaanam is bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam. And, this mithya jnaanam is a product, a kaaryam. What is the kaaranam of the mithya jnaanam? As pointed out earlier, Ajnaanam is the kaaranam.

The, the second question is "What is the status of the kaarana ajnanam?" i.e. "Is it bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam or bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam?" Advaitha answers : "Ajnaanam is also exactly like mithyaa jnaanam. Just as mithyaa jnaanam is anirvachaneeyam, the kaarana roopa ajnanam also comes under anirvachaneeya status. In other words, it does not come under bhaava roopam (existent or present); it does not come under abhaava roopam (non-existent or absent) ; but, it comes under bhaava-abhaava-vilakshana-roopam ; it is different from 'existent' category and different from 'non-existent' category".

Thus, both mithya jnanam (kaaryam) and ajnaanam (kaaranam) are bhaava-abhaava-vilakshana-roopam.

This 'bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam' or 'anirvachaneeyam' is also sometimes termed in Advaitham, as 'yath-kinchith-bhaava-roopam', which also only means: "It is neither bhaavam nor abhaavam but bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam". Thus, there are three terms, which are synonymous:

- (1) 'Bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam,
- (2) 'anirvachaneeyam, and
- (3) 'yath- kinchith –bhaava-roopam'.

To re-cap: Mithya jnaanam is also yathkinchith-bhaava-roopam; ajnaanam is also yathkinchith-bhaava-roopam. This is the siddhaanthaa / the final conclusion, of the Advaitin.

Sureswaraachaarya is extending these discussions to moolaa vidhyaa also. What was discussed so far, was "'rope-ignorance', as the cause of the 'erroneous perception of snake' ". Now, Sureswaraachaarya extends the same logic to "'self-ignorance', as the cause of the 'erroneous perception of the entire creation' ".

He says: The very prapancha dharsanam is mithyaa jnaanam; and the kaaranam for this mithyaa jnaanam is aathma ajnaanam.

This aathma ajnaanam is called moolaa avidhyaa. Anaathma / prapancha dharsanam is called mithyaa jnaanam.

Similar to the 'rope-snake' example, where 'rope-ignorance' is kaaranam and 'erroneous perception of snake' is kaaryam, in the context of 'prapancha dharsanam' and 'aathma ajnaanam', prapancha / anaathma dharsanam is product and aathma ajnaanam or moolaa avidhyaa is kaaranam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says that this prapancha dharsana mithyaa jnaanam comes under bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam or anirvachaneeyam or yath-kinchith bhaava-roopam and moolaa avidhyaa also comes under bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam or anirvachaneeyam or yath-kinchith-bhaava roopam. This is the Advaita Parama siddhaanthaa.

All these preliminary discussions are only part of the preparation for later discussions. The poorva pakshaa is yet to be stated. The object / attempt of these preliminary discussions, is to settle Vedhaantha Siddhaanthaa very clearly, before going into poorva pakshaa , in order to avoid any possible confusions.

To re-state the Vedhaantha Siddhaanthaa: Aathma avidhyaa is moolaa avidhyaa which is kinchith bhaava roopam. Prapancha dharsanam is mithyaa jnaanam which is also kinchith bhava roopam.

There is another important point to be noted. What is that? The mithyaa jnaanam which is prapancha darsanam, which is a product of ajnaanam and different from ajnaanam, is sometimes figuratively called ajnaanam, in Vedhaanthic discussions. Really speaking, it (adhyaasa: / mithyaa jnaanam / prapancha dharsanam) is not ajnaanam; it is only a product of ajnaanam; but, is, at times, 'figuratively' called ajnaanam in Vedhaantha, similar to a son being known, at times, by the name of his father.

In fact, in Adhyaasa Bhashyam (of Brahma Soothraas), Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa has himself done it. And, in Katopanishad, even karma itself, which is a product of ignorance, is called ajnaanam.

What is to be noted is, that, mithyaa jnaanam is sometimes called ajnaanam. Mithyaa jnaanam is 'figurative' ajnaanam; moolaa avidhya is 'real' ajnaanam; but, both are bhaava-abhaava- vilakshanam. This is the Advaitha parama siddhantha.

Now, what does the poorva pakshin say? He says: "Other than mithyaa jnaanam, there is no other ajnaanam, as the cause for mithyaa jnaanam". The first point of the poorva pakshin, is, thus, "mithyaa jnaanam alone is ajnaanam".

Then, as the second point, he states: "Since Mithyaa jnaanam (the erroneous perception of aathmaa as anaathmaa) alone is ajnaanam, which is the cause of samsaaraa, mokshaa requires only the removal of mithyaa jnaanam. Removal of mithyaa jnaanam is achieved by sorting out aathmaa and anaathmaa. This 'sorting out' is called aathma-anaathma-viveka; and, this 'aathma-anaathma-viveka is more than enough for liberation".

Proceeding further, the third point in the poorva pakshin's argument is based on an 'abhupethyam' (a temporary acceptance of the opponent's / Vedhaanthin's view, only for the sake of argument / discussions). He says: "Suppose there is an ajnaanam other than mithyaa jnaanam, that ajnaanam, which is other than mithyaa jnaanam, has to be abhaava roopam only". (Whereas, Vedhaantha says ajnaanam is also bhaava-abhaava- vilakshana – anirvachananeeyam).

'Abhaava roopam' means 'non-existent' or 'absent'.

The fourth point of the poorva pakshin is: "If there is such an abhaava-roopa-ajnaanam, which you (the Vedhaanthin) claim as the cause of mithyaa jnaanam, that abhaava-roopa-ajnaanam cannot be the cause of mithyaa jnaanam."

These are all 'abhupethya' (suppositional) arguments of the poorva pakshin, who insists "If there is an ajnaanam, that ajnaanam is abhaava roopam" and says "therefore, that abhaava

roopa ajnaanam cannot be the cause of mithyaa jnaanam". What is his logic for this statement? His logic is "abhaavam means non-existence; how can a non-existent thing enjoy the status of the 'cause' of something / the 'producer' of something? Abhaavaath na kasyachana uthpatthi: |"

The poorva pakshin, based on this logic, argues: " 'Abhaavaath' nothing can be produced. If at all abhaavaa can produce something (again abhupedhyam) abhaavaa can produce abhaavaa only. From 'nothing', only 'nothing' can / will come. Therefore, abhaava roopa ajnaanathaa, mithyaa jnaanasya uthpatthi: na bhavathi. Therefore, I cannot accept your ajnaana / moolaa avidhyaa as the cause of mithyaa jnaanam. Since, thus, moolaa avidhyaa ajnaanam is not possible, you have to accept my concept of ajnaanam alone – which 'ajnaanam' is mithyaa jnaanam alone."

Expressed in Sanskrit, the poorva pakshin's objection / argument is: "Mithyaa jnaana vyathiriktha ajnaanam naasthi | Asthi cheth, thath abhaava roopameva syaath| Thadh abhaavarooopa ajnaanam mithyaa jnaanasya kaaranam bavithum naiva arhathi |".

And, in support of his argument, the poorva pakshin quotes the Chaandhoghya Upanishad Vaakyam (VI. ii. 2): "katham asatha: sath jayetha"- "How can Being take birth in Non-being?". Based on the strength of this Upanishad Vaakyam, the poorva pakshin asks: "How can anything be born, from a non-existent ajnaanam, including mithyaa jnaana roopa prapancha dharsanam?" This is the poorva pakshaa.

Reverting to the text:

- कश्चित् - A poorva pakshin (not necessarily a saamkhyaa philosopher, but, belonging to a similar group)
- 'जात्मना त्याजयेत् वचः' इति उपश्रुत्य - having heard our argument viz., 'mahaavaakyam, by its teaching of advaita aathmaa, helps the seeker negate aathma-anaathma duality',
- आह - declares:
- आत्म अनवबोधस्य अभावात् - Since there is no such thing called 'self-ignorance', 'Anavabodha:' means 'ajnaanam'; 'abhaavaath' means 'since not there'.
- मिथ्याज्ञानव्यतिरेकेण - other than mithyaa jnaanam,

What is the definition of mithyaa jnaanam? Ans: 'anaathmani aathma dharsanam / sareerey aham buddhi: / manasi aham buddhi:' | That anaathma abhimaana misconception is mithyaa jnaanam. 'Vyathirekena' means 'other than / apart from'.

- किं वाक्येन निवर्त्यते - which ignorance is to be eliminated through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa?

Vaakyena – mahaa vakkyena. Kim nivarthyathe – What are you going to eliminate?

The poorva pakshin's question to the Advaithin is: "Since, there is no other ajnaanam apart from mithyaa jnaanam, i.e., since 'your' ajnaanam / moolaa avidhyaa itself is not there, what ignorance are you going to eliminate through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa?"

The poorva pakshin's implication: "If you (the Advaithin) reply 'mahaa vaakya vichaara eliminates mithyaa jnaanam', I will accept it. But, if you say 'maaha vaakya vichaara eliminates an ignorance other than mithyaa jnaanam, I do not agree, since such an ignorance is not there at all".

- अज्ञानं हि नाम - Suppose there is an 'ignorance' other than erroneous perception,

The term 'other than erroneous perception' has to be supplied; i.e., 'ajnaanam naama' should be understood as 'mithyaa jnaana vythiriktha ajnaanam naama'.

This is an abhyupethya vaadham, as already indicated.

- ज्ञान अभावः - that 'ignorance' has to be 'absence of knowledge' alone.

'Ajnaanam hi naama jnaana abhaava:' may be treated as a separate and complete sentence. The essence of this statement / sentence: "If there is an ignorance, other than 'error', that ignorance has to be 'lack of knowledge' or 'absence of knowledge'."

Proceeding further, the poorva pakshin says:

- तस्य च अवस्तु स्वाभाव्यात् - Since that ignorance is of the nature of non-existence,

'Thasya' refers to 'ignorance'; according to the poorva pakshin, that 'ignorance', which is 'absence of knowledge' cannot be said to be an entity, because, 'absence of knowledge' means it is a form of non-existence and therefore, it cannot be a tangible, substantial entity.

- कुतः संसारकारणत्वं? - how can that ignorance be the cause of samsaaraa?

To consolidate the poorva pakshin's objection: " 'Ignorance', if not considered as an 'erroneous perception', can only be 'absence of knowledge'; 'absence of knowledge' is a 'form of non-existence'; how can that non-existence be the cause of samsaaraa or for that matter, cause of anything?"

The word 'kutha:' is not a question, looking for an answer. It is 'aakshepaarthe kim' – expressing objection, meaning "It cannot be the cause".

In the view of the poorva pakshin: "Ignorance is not the cause of any problem; error alone is the cause of every problem. There is no 'ignorance' other than 'error'".

The poorva pakshin justifies his question "kutha: samsaara karanathvam?" by the following logic:

- हि - Because,
- सज्जन्मा - origination (of anything – mithyaa jnaanam / prapanchaa / samsaaraa)
- असत्: - out of a non-existent entity ,
- न इष्यते - is not accepted by anybody / any philosopher.

It is only the soonya vaadhi philosopher, who says that everything comes from soonyam.

Generally, the Advaita Vedhaantha philosophers do not even talk about the soonya vaadhi philosopher, since, because the soonya vaadhi says everything is soonyam, the Advaita Vedhaantha philosophers consider the soonya vaadhaa philosophy itself, as 'soonyam'. In the entire Brahmasoothras, there is no discussion by Vyaasaachaarya on soonya vaadhaa. In contrast, Vyaasaachaarya discusses philosophies such as southraanthikaa, vaibhaashikaa and kshanika vijnaana vaadhaa and negates them; presumably, he does not consider soonya vaadhaa even worth discussing. And, in Panchadasi, Swami Vidhyaranyaa is even more outright about the soonya vaadhi. He says "When poorva pakshi is soonyam, why should I answer him?"

Except the soonya vaadhi, no other philosopher suggests or accepts, that, origination is possible from soonyam – a non-existent entity. The poorva pakshin is referring to this fact, by the term – 'na ishyathe'.

In support of his argument that 'only nothing can come from nothing', the poorva pakshin gives two sruthi vaakyams, from Chaandhoghya Upanishad. Both sruthi vaakyams are taken from the same manthraa (C.U. VI. ii. 2) only.

- "कुतस्तु खलु सोम्य एवं स्यात्" - Good looking one ! but, how is 'this' possible?

It is Udhhaalaka addressing his son and disciple, Svethakethu, as 'Soumya', in Chaandhogya Upanishad, asking "kutha: evam syaath?" – "how is this possible?"

To understand the import of this question/ sentence, the meaning of the pronoun 'this', in this vaakyam, should be known. And, from the context of the question / from the earlier manthraa , the student can understand that, the pronoun 'this' stands for 'origination of the world from non-existence'.

The other quotation is:

- "कथं असत् :सज्जायेत" - How can something be born out of nothing ?
- इति श्रुतेः - These are sruthi vaakyaani.
- इति - Up to this is the poorva pakshin's argument.

To sum up, the poorva pakshin, addressing the Vedhaanthin, says: "'Avidhya' means 'absence of knowledge', similar to 'darkness', which is 'absence of light'. 'Absence of knowledge' and 'absence of light' are forms of 'non-existence'. Therefore, 'moolaa avidhya' is a non-existent entity and therefore, cannot be the cause of Creation; and, therefore, it does not also require negation through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. In fact, why you are you discussing moolaa vidhya, a non-existent entity / something, which is not there at all, so elaborately?"

This gives raise to another interesting discussion, though not related to the current topic. Is darkness an existent entity or a non-existent entity? According to the view of the poorva pakshin, "'darkness' means 'absence of light' and 'absence' has to be a non-existent entity only". Whereas, Vedhaantha says: "'Darkness' is a positive substance; it is not absence of light; it is not prakaasa abhaavam; it is prakaasa virodhi".

For the poorva pakshin, darkness is prakaasa abhaavaa; for Vedhaantha , darkness is not prakaasa abhaava but prakaasa virodhi.

To revert to the main topic, poorva pakshin, thus, asks "where is moolaa avidhya problem at all?"

The Aaachaaryaa responds:

- अत्र उच्यते - When the poorva pakshin raises this question, I will answer here.

The answer is in the verse that follows.

Chapter III: Verse 7 –

अजात : एव सर्वोऽथ : प्राग्यतो बुद्धिजन्मन : ।

एकेनैव सता संश्रु सन्नजातो भवेत्तत : ॥ ७ ॥

All these things are unknown, before the coming into being of knowledge. They are, in that state, one with the pure secondless Being. It is Being that is unknown.

The gist of this sloka is given, before study of the meaning of the text is taken up:

Sureswaraacharya says : "mithyaa jnaanam is only figuratively called ajnaanam; and this ajnaanam, in the form of mithyaa jnaanam, is possible only where there is thriputi or duality. The ajnaanam that the poorvapakshin talks of, which is called mithyaa jnaanam or erroneous perception, i.e., the mithyaa jnaana roopa ajnaanam exists only during the presence of srusht, during savikalpa avasthaa, where the aathmaa-anaathmaa duality is present. But, imagine a state, where everything is resolved / any nirvikalpaka avasthaa. (Nirvikalpaka avasthaa means a state where there is no division at all – either aathma-anaathma division or pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi division). At micro level, we experience such a nirvikalpaka avasthaa, when all divisions are absent, during sushupthi and at macro level, such a nirvikalpaka avasthaa is called pralayam."

Sureswaraacharya is turning our attention to sushupthi and pralayam, which are nirvikalpaka avasthaas. And, in the nirvikalpaka avasthaa, one cannot talk about mithyaa jnaanam / erroneous perception, since there is no 'perception' at all in the nirvikalpaka avasthaa. Then, where is the question of 'erroneous perception', at that time?

Similarly, in the nirvikalpaka avasthaas, one cannot talk about this 'deha aathma bhaava' or 'identification with the body', which is called mithyaa jnaanam, since, when the body itself is resolved during sushupthi and pralayam, where is the question of 'identification with the body' or 'mithyaa jnaanam'?

Thus, the first point that Sureswaraacharya wants to make, is: "At the time of sushupthi and pralaya – during nirvikalpaka avasthaas, mithyaa jnaanam cannot be talked about".

Then, the second point that the Aachaaryaa wants to make, is: "But, at the time of sushupthi and pralaya we do have ignorance ; total ignorance is there, during the nirvikalpaka avasthaa. That's why, after sushupthi, we say 'sukam aham asvaapsam na kinchith avedhisham' - 'I slept well; I did not know anything'. During the nirvikalpaka avasthaa – whether it is micro or macro – there is ajnaanam. And, in nirvikalpaka avasthaa there is no mithyaa jnaanam. In other words, the ajnaanam obtaining in nirvikalpaka avasthaa – sushupthi or pralayaa – has to be some ajnaanam other than mithyaa jnaanam."

To recap:

- (1) During the nirvikalpaka avasthaa, mithyaa jnaanam is not possible.
- (2) But, during nirvikalpaka avasthaa, we do experience ajnaanam.
- (3) Therefore, this ajnaanam experienced in nirvikalpaka avasthaa should be some ajnaanam other than mithyaa jnaanam.
- (4) Therefore, mithyaa-jnaana-vyathiriktha-ajnaanam, nirvikalpaka avasthaayaam asthi.

What is the definition of nirvikalpaka avasthaa? 'Thriputi-rahitha' or 'dvaitha rahitha' avasthaa is 'nirvikalpaka avasthaa.'

'Thathra mithyaa jnaana vyathiriktha ajnaanam asthi' – 'In that avasthaa, there is an ignorance other than mithyaa jnaanam'.

Then the next question is: "That 'ignorance' is of what?" Granting that there is 'ignorance' i.e., granting 'ajnaanam asthi', 'Ignorance of what?' is the question.

The answer: "The ajnaanam during nirvikalpaka avastha is 'sarva padhaartha ajnaanam' or 'samastha prapancha ajnaanam'. It is not the ignorance of a particular object or topic – say, physics or chemistry – but, it is the ignorance of the total creation".

Then the next point: In nirvikalpaka avasthaa, the entire Creation is not in the 'Creation' form. It has been resolved; all the naamaas and roopaas have been resolved, because, when thriputi itself is not there, where is the question of sabda jnaanam, sparsa jnaanam, roopa jnaanam, gandha jnaanam etc.?. thriputi is resolved and therefore, all the naama roopaas are also resolved.

Therefore, it has to be said, that, in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, the prapanchaa is existing in the form of kaaranam Brahman ; it is kaarana avasthaa, which is called Sadh Brahman. This is what Sage Uddhaalakaa is referring to, when he says, in the Chaandhoghya Upanishad "sadheva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam" (C.U. VI.2.1) – "Oh! Good looking one ! In the beginning, this was Existence alone, One only, without a second". Before the kaarya prapanchaa came, the kaaranam was in the form of Sadh Brahman.

In nirvikalpaka avasthaa, the 'ajnaanam' is ignorance of total universe.

In the nirvikalpaka avasthaa of pralayam, the Universe is not in 'Universe' form, but, is in the form of the kaarana avasthaa / Sadh Brahman.

At the micro level also, Sadh aathmaa alone exists during the nirvikalpaka avasthaa of sushupthi, as is eloquently brought out by Sankara Bhagavadh Padhaa in his Sri Dakshinaamoorthy Sthothram (verse 6) – "raahu-grastha divaakarendu sadruso mayaa samaachaadhanaath sanmaathra: kaaranopasamharanatho yo bhooth sushuptha: pumaan praagasvaapsamithi prabodha samaye ya: prathyabhijnyaayatthe....." - "On folding up all the functions of the senses, He who enters into a state of deep sleep and there becomes Existence alone veiled in maayaa, like the sun or moon during eclipse, and who, on waking remembers to have slept.....".

Because of the above facts, we can say, that, the ajnaanam in nirvikalpaka avasthaa is 'Sadh Brahma ajnaanam' or 'sadh aathma ajnaanam'. It is not 'kaarya prapancha ajnaanam' but 'kaarana Sadh Brahma / sadh aathma ajnaanam'. And, in Vedhaanthaa, that ajnaanam is called moolaa avidhyaa.

To recap the above discussions:

- Step (1): Watch nirvikalpaka avasthaa.
- Step (2): nirvikalpaka avasthaayaam mithyaa jnaanam naasthi |
- Step (3): nirvikalpaka avasthaayaam ajnaanam asthi |
- Step (4): That ajnaanam in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, should be something other than mithyaa jnaanam.
- Step (5): That ajnaanam other than mithyaa jnaanam, which obtains in nirvikalpaka samaadhi is the ignorance of Sadh Brahman or sadh aathmaa, which is the resolution of the whole universe.
- Step (6): This ajnaanam of Sadh Brahman/ aathmaa, which is different from mithyaa jnaanam, obtaining in nirvikalpaka avasthaa is called moolaa avidhyaa.

In fact, this moolaa avidhyaa description has been given even in Thathva Bodha, while defining kaarana sareeram, as "anirvaachya anaadhi avidhyaa roopam sareeradhvyasya kaaraana maathram sathsvaroopa ajnaanam nirvikalpakaroopam yadhasthi thath kaarana sareeram". This sathsvaroopa ajnaanam alone is called moolaa avidhyaa, kaarana sareeram etc.

The next question: "What is the nature of this 'sathsvaroopam ajnaanam', which is other than mithyaa jnaanam, obtaining in sushupthi and pralaya? Is it (i) bhaava roopam or (ii) abhaava roopam or (iii) yathkinchith bhaava roopam?"

For argument's sake (i.e., as an abhyupethya vaadhaa), let it be assumed that this ajnaanam obtaining in sushupthi and pralaya is abhaava roopam. What will be the consequence?

It will mean that during sushupthi, there is Brahman (kaarana avasthaa of the entire universe) and there is the abhaava roopa ajnaanam. During pralayam also, there is Brahman and there is the abhaava roopa ajnaanam.

This, in turn, will give rise to another question: "Since in sushupthi and pralayam, Brahman and abhaava roopa ajnaanam are both there, which one of these two is responsible for the creation of duality and thriputi?"

In other words, "Which one generates the savikalpaka avasthaa/ this entire creation / the mithyaa jnaanam / the thriputi? Does Brahman generate savikalpaka avasthaa or does abhaava roopa ajnaanam generate savikalpaka avasthaa?"

Brahman cannot generate savikalpaka avasthaa, because, by definition, Brahman is kaarya kaarana vilakshanam |

The Brahadhaaranuaka Upanishad declares (Madhu Kaandam – II.v.19): "Thadedath Brahma apoorvam anaparam anantharam abhaahyam ayam aathmaa brahma sarvaanubhoo:" – "That Brahman is without prior or posterior, without interior or exterior"; and Katopanishad (I.2.18) declares "Na jayathe mriyathe vaa vipa:schith naayam kutha:schith na bhaaboova kaschith" - "This omniscient one does not originate or die; it did not originate from anything; it did not become anything".

The Brahman obtaining in nirvikalpaka avasthaa cannot produce anything.

Then, can it be said that the abhaava roopa ajnaanam produces savikalpaka avasthaa? The Chaandoghya Upanishad question "Katham asatha: sajjayetha?" will answer this. How can abhaava roopa ajnaanam produce anything? It also cannot.

But, savikalpaka avasthaa is produced out of nirvikalpaka avasthaa; jaagarath avasthaa comes after sushupthi, and the Universe comes after pralayam. Since, thus

- (i) the 'Brahman-ajnaanam' mixture produces a Creation and
(ii) if ajnaanam is abhaava roopam Creation cannot be produced, the conclusion has to be, that, 'the ajnaanam obtaining in nirvikalpaka avasthaa cannot be abhaava roopam'.

To repeat: If ajnaanam is abhaava roopam, it cannot produce the savikalpaka; and, it was seen, that, Brahman also cannot produce. In that case, Creation itself would not have come. Therefore, it has to be concluded that ajnaanam is bhaava-abhaava-roopa-vilakshana-roopam or yathkinchith bhaava roopam.

This is the essence of this sloka.

And, this topic being very important, it bears any number of repetitions, as condensed below:

- (1) During nirvikalpaka avasthaa - whether it is sushupthi or pralayam - there is ajnaanam and there is Brahman .
- (2) This ajnaanam is clearly experienced by us. What is the proof? Our own statement after waking up from sushupthi, viz., "sukham api asvaapsam kinchith na veshidham" is itself proof.
- (3) This experienced ajnaanam is different from mithyaa jnaanam.
- (4) This experienced ajnaanam cannot be abhaava roopam; it has to be understood as anirvachaneeya roopam
- (5) This anirvachaneeya ajnaanam alone is called moolaa avidhyaa.

And, through mahaa vaakya vichaara, the seeker is not attacking mithyaa jnaanam ; the seeker's direct attack is on moolaa avidhyaa alone; once this moolaa avidhyaa is handled through mahaa vaakya vichaara, mithyaa jnaanam also will be eliminated as a natural consequence / as an added benefit.

The poorva pakshin wrongly assumes that mahaa vaakya vichaara directly attacks mithyaa jnaanam. But, according to the Vedhaanthin, mahaa vaakya vichaara attacks only moolaa avidhyaa directly and attacks mithyaa jnaanam only indirectly.

125. Chapter III, Verses 7 and 8 (10-01-2009)

In this important verse (verse 7 – Chapter III) Sureswaraachaaryaa is 'establishing' the (concept of) moolaa avidhyaa, which moolaa avidhyaa is different from mithyaa jnaanam, but which moolaa avidhyaa is the cause of mithyaa jnaanam and, through mithyaa jnaanam, the cause of the entire samsaaraa also.

And, this he is keen to 'establish', because, there are some poorva pakshins, who claim that, mithyaa jnaanam alone is ajnaanam and that, there is no ajnaanam other than mithyaa jnaanam.

These poorva pakshins further argue that "even if there is an ajnaanam or avidhyaa other than mithyaa jnaanam, it cannot be the cause of anything – either dvaitham or samsaaraa. It is because, that ajnaanam or avidhyaa should be abhaava roopam, since 'ajnaanam' means 'na jnaanam' and 'avidhyaa' means 'na vidhyaa', in both of which, the prefix 'na' conveys abhaava artham. Therefore, avidhyaa and ajnaanam can only be abhaava roopam, i.e. in the form of absence. Being abhaava roopam, that abhaava roopa ajnaanam cannot be the cause of anything – either dvaitham or samsaaraa, since abhaavam cannot produce anything. Not only that. There is no need also for negation of abhaava roopa ajnaanam by mahaa vaakya vichaaram, since abhaava roopa ajnaanam is already abhaavam - non-existent."

Their argument, expressed, in Sanskrit, will run as follows: "Moolaa avidhyaa nasthi | Moolaa ajnaanam naasthi | Mithyaa jnaanam eva ajnaanam | Thadeva samsaara kaaranam | Thasmaath aathma-anaathma viveka dhwaara mithyaa jnaanasya nivritthi: eva karthavya: | 'Mahaa vaakya vichaaraath mithyaa jnaana vyathirikthasya ajaanasya nivritthi: bhavathi' ithi sthaapayithum naiva sakyathe thvayaa|"

Sureswaraachaaryaa is giving the answer to this. He wants to 'establish' an ajnaanam other than mithyaa jnaanam. That ajnaanam is otherwise called moolaa avidhyaa.

In this sloka, he is taking an experience of nirvikalpaka avasthaa – either in the form of sushupthi, or in the form of moorchaa (an unconscious state), or in the form of maranam or in the form of pralayam itself. Sushupthi is nirvikalpaka avasthaa at micro level; pralayaa is nirvikalpaka avasthaa at macro level. Both are nirvikalpaka avasthaa, 'a state, where there is no duality or division'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says : "In the nirvikalpaka avasthaa, there is an ajnaanam, which is different from mithyaa jnaanam".

Why is that ajnaanam different from mithyaa jnaanam ? The reason is explained thus: "Mithyaa jnaanam requires duality. The very definition of mithyaa jnaanam is 'wrong identification with anaathma', which means mithyaa jnaanam requires aathmaa-anaathmaa-dvaitam. But, in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, there is no dvaitam at all, though, in nirvikalpaka avasthaa there is ajnaanam. Therefore, that ajnaanam obtaining in nirvikalpaka avasthaa should be different from mithyaa jnaanam".

This is the first point that has to be studied and understood.

Referring to the slokaa:

- बुद्धिजन्मनः प्राक् - Before the rise of any specific knowledge or experience (in other words, during nirvikalpaka avasthaa),

In this context, the word 'buddhi:' does not mean 'intellect'; it means 'visesha jnaanam' or 'visesha anubhavaa'. The 'visesha jnaanam' / 'visesha anubhavaa' requires 'thriputi'. Therefore, 'buddhijanma' means 'rise of thriputi and rise of visesha jnaanam'. When do they (viz. 'rise of thriputi and rise of visesha jnaanam') happen? Ans : In jaagrath avasthaa or svapna avasthaa – otherwise, in savikalpaka avasthaa alone, thriputi and visesha jnaanam are there.

'Praagyathd' should be split as 'praak + yatha:' / The word 'praak' means 'before'. What is the avasthaa, before the rise of thriputi and visesha jnaanam ? Ans: It is nirvikalpaka avasthaa.

Therefore, 'buddhi janmana: praak' means 'before the rise of savikalpaka avasthaa', which finally means 'during nirvikalpaka avasthaa' or 'nirvikalpaka avasthaayaam'.

What is there in nirvikalpaka avasthaa?

- सर्वोऽर्थेव :अज्ञातः - everything in the Creation / the entire dualistic Creation is enveloped in ignorance.

'Sarva: artha:' means 'the entire universe', which includes the physical body, the mind, the thoughts, the chidhaabhaasa and the external universe. 'ajnaatha:' means 'unknown' or 'enveloped in ignorance'. 'Sarva artha: ajnaatha:' means 'the entire dualistic universe is enveloped in ignorance'.

And, because the duality is resolved in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, the avasthaa is called kaarana avasthaa. That's why, it is said, that, "in sushupthi, we are in kaarana sareera (at micro level) and in pralayaa, we are in kaarana prapancham (at macro level). Sushupthi and pralayam are kaarana / nirvikalpaka avasthaa, when everything is enveloped in ignorance.

Why is nirvikalpaka avasthaa said to be 'enveloped in ignorance'? Ans: Because of two reasons.

- Logically speaking, since *visesha jnaanam*s are not there in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, it must be a state of ajnaanam.
- Experientially also, whenever one goes to deep sleep, one's experience is 'I do not know anything', which 'ignorance' is recollected after waking up.

Thus, because of sruthi, yukthi and prathyakshaa, nirvikalpaka avasthaa means "potential universe + enveloping ignorance".

"During nirvikalpaka avasthaa the entire dualistic Creation is enveloped in ignorance" is, thus, the meaning of the first half of the verse.

In the second half of the verse, Sureswaraacharya says "In kaarana avasthaa, the whole universe is in potential form and that is nothing but Brahman only". Why is the 'potential form' of the universe, called Brahman? Because, the kaaranam of the whole creation is Brahman only. As quoted earlier, the Chaandoghya Upanishad declares : "sadheva idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam" (VI.2.1) - "before creation, the whole universe was in the form of Brahman / undivided Existence / naama roopa rahitha Existence". Therefore, Kaarana avasthaa = Brahma avasthaa.

Based on this sruthi vaakyam, Sureswaraacharya says:

- संध - That Brahman (in which form, the universe was existing in nirvikalpaka avasthaa)
- एकेन एव सता - (is) of the nature of undivided Existence.

The word 'ekend' means 'undivided' / 'akandend' / 'adhvitheeyend' / 'sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-bedha-rahithend' and is adjective to the word 'sathaad', 'sath' meaning 'Existence'. 'Ekena eva sathaad' , therefore, means 'in the form of undivided Existence'.

In nirvikalpaka avasthaa, whether sushupthi or pralayam, the whole universe was in the form of 'undivided' Existence. Whereas, in savikalpaka avasthaa, existence is in the form of 'divided' Existence, in the forms of man / woman / bhoomi / jalam etc. In savikalpka avasthaa, 'man is', 'wall is', 'woman is' and so on. The 'isness' is in 'divided' form.

Savikalpka avasthaa means 'divided Existence'. Nirvikalpka avasthaa means 'undivided Existence'. That's why, the above quoted manthraa from Chaandhoghya Upanishad 'sadheve idham agra aaseeth' describes the 'sath' as 'ekam eva advittheeyam'.

In nirvikalapaka avasthaa, the world was existing as Brahman. What else was there in nirvikalapaka avasthaa, in addition to Brahman, (which Brahman is 'potential world')? Ans : According to Vedhaantha, 'enveloping ignorance' was there, in addition to Brahman, in nirvikalapaka avasthaa

Therefore, according to Vedhaantha, sushupthi = Brahman + enveloping ignorance. Instead of 'Brahman', the word 'aathmaa' also can be used

In the language of Maandookya Upanishad, the 'third quarter' is 'thureeyam' + 'enveloping ignorance'.

And, according to Maandookya Kaarika:

- 'Agrahanam' + 'thureeyam' = 'kaarana avasthaa'
- 'Agrahanam and anyathaa grahanam' + 'thureeyam' = 'kaariya avasthaa'.

And, therefore, what is the conclusion?

- ततः - Therefore,
- सत् अज्ञातभवेत् : - it is Brahman which is unknown.

Nirvikalpka avasthaayaam / during sushupthi and pralaya (to be supplied from the first line) there are only two things.

What are they? Ans: Brahman and ignorance alone were there, in nirvikalpka avasthaa.

How does one arrive at this conclusion from this verse? Ans: 'Sat' means 'Brahma' / 'thadh roopa Brahma'. 'Ajnaatha:' means 'unknown'. 'San ajnaatha:' means 'unknown Existence'; 'unknown Existence' means 'unknown Brahma' ; 'unknown Brahma' means 'Brahman enveloped in ignorance'; 'Brahman enveloped in ignorance' means 'Brahman + ignorance'.

But, even as one accepts all these, one may wonder as to why Sureswaraachaarya says all these things? Ans: It is to establish, that, "in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, there is an enveloping ignorance, which is other than mithyaa jnaanam" - "Nirvikalpaka avasthaayaam mithyaa jnaana vyathiriktha ajnaanam asthi".

And, what type of ajnaanam? Ans: 'Aavaranaathmakam ajnaanam / 'enveloping' ignorance is there, in sushupthi and pralayam.

This is point no. 1, viz., "Mithyaa jnaana vyathiriktha aavaranaathmaka ajnaanam asthi". And, that ajnaanam is called moolaavidhya.

Then, the next (2nd) point / question is: "Is this 'aavaranaathmaka ajnaanam', bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam? i.e. is this enveloping ignorance / concealing ignorance, of the nature of 'absence' or is it a 'positive entity?' "

Sureswaraachaaryaa does not explicitly answer this question, in this sloka. It has been indirectly answered. The indirect answer has to be extracted by the student.

That implicit answer was given in the earlier session also and is presented again:

"This Brahman enveloping ignorance, available in sushupthi or pralayam, cannot be abhaava roopam. And, that Ajnaanam cannot be accepted as bhaava roopam also".

Why cannot it be abhaava roopam? Several reasons can be given.

One reason is: "Whatever does the job of concealing or covering, cannot be abhaava roopam."

A non-existent thing cannot envelop or cover something. Can a non-existent dress cover one's body? The 'Story of the Emperor's clothes' is only too well known. If one's body has to be covered by something, that 'cover' will have to be 'existent'. The maxim 'abhaavasya aavrana sakthi: naasthi' or 'abhaavam aavaranaathmakam na bhavathi' cannot be disputed or questioned. Whereas, it is said "ajnaanena aavrutham jnaanam" (a very important vaakyam in this context) and since ajnaanam is 'covering' something, how can it be abhaava roopam?

A second reason (given already in the last session): "If Brahman is there in kaarana avasthaa and abhaava roopa ajnaanam is there in kaarana avasthaa, from that pair, a Creation cannot come. 'Brahman + abhaava roopa ajnaanam' cannot produce a Creation".

Why not? Ans: "Brahman cannot produce a Creation, because Saasthraas clearly say that Brahman is kaarya-kaarana-vilakshanam. Kevalam Brahman cannot be a Kaaranam. Then, can the 'enveloping ignorance' produce? If, as claimed by the poorva pakshin, 'ignorance' is 'abhaava roopam', that 'abhaava roopa ignorance' also cannot produce anything, because "abhaavaath na bhaavothpatthi:"]

Thus, Brahman cannot be the cause; 'Abhaava roopa ignorance' cannot be the cause; therefore, 'Brahman + ignorance' also cannot become the cause of the universe, if the ignorance is abhaava roopam. But, we do find that 'Brahman + ajnaanam' is the cause of Creation, because, from sushupthi, jaagrath avasthaa evolves; and, from pralayam, the prapanchaa evolves".

Therefore, the ajnaanam cannot be abhaava roopam.

Then, can that ajnaanam be considered bhaava roopam?

The opposite of 'abhaavam' is 'bhaavam'. 'Bhaava roopam' means a 'positively existing' / 'independently existing' entity.

Can one say this about ajnaanam? That also cannot be said.

Why not? Again, there are several reasons.

One reason is: Since Brahman is a bhaava roopa vasthu and if ajnaanam is also a bhaava roopam vasthu, with the presence of two bhaava roopa vasthus, Brahman and ajnaanam, there will be dvaitha. Whereas, the Upanishad very clearly says '*sadeva idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam'.

A second reason: Apart from this dvaitha problem, there will be another serious problem also. What is that? Ans: Brahman is bhaava roopam and therefore eternal and un-negatable. If ajnaanam is bhaava roopam, ajnaanam also, like Brahman, will become eternal and un-negatable. Ajnaanam also will be abhaadhyam, "asachchen na pratheeyetha sachchen na baadhyetha" ithi nyaayaath.

The fallacy in considering ajnaanam to be eternal, is obvious. If ajnaanam is bhaavaroopam and un-negatable like Brahman, samsaaraa caused by ajnaanam also will be eternal. Study of Vedhaanthaa and even successful assimilation of Vedhaanthaa will be of no use. Removal of ignorance and the consequent samsaaraa will become impossible. Saasthraas do not accept such a situation.

Therefore, ajnaanam cannot be accepted as bhaava roopam also.

Since, thus, ajnaanam cannot be accepted as bhaava roopam and it cannot be accepted as abhaava roopam also, it has to be accepted as 'bhaava-abhaava- vilakshana-roopam' , which is also called 'yath kinchith bhaava roopam' or 'mithyaa roopam' or 'anirvachaneeya roopam'.

The next and 3rd important point is that, "that moola ajnaanam alone is handled by Mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. To express it differently, the object of Mahaa vaakya vichaara is to remove that moola ajnaanam only".

This statement may give rise to a doubt: If mahaa vaakya vichaaraa removes only moola avidhyaa, then what about mithyaa jnaanam? Will that mithyaa jnaanam not produce samsaaraa? If mahaa vaakya removes only moola avidhyaa, who / what will take care of mithyaa jnaanam?

The answer to this doubt: "Kaarana naase kaarya naasa:' ithi nyaayaath ajnaana naase mithyaa jnaana naasa: bhavathi | Mithyaa jnaana naase samsaara naasa: cha bhavathi" – "By the logic 'if the cause is destroyed, the effect also will be destroyed', once moola avidhyaa is eliminated, the elimination of mithyaa jnaanam automatically takes place; once mithyaa jnaanam is eliminated, samsaaraa is also eliminated".

This argument can be more easily understood through the popular 'rope-snake' example, in which, the moment the 'rope-ignorance' is removed by 'rope-knowledge', the 'snake-misconception' goes away automatically. One need not separately remove 'snake-misconception'. One has to attack ignorance only; error need not be separately attacked.

Therefore, "(1) Moolaavidhyaa is there, other than mithyaa jnaanam. (2) It is yath kinchith bhaava roopam and (3) maaha vaakyam removes that Moolaavidhyaa" is Sureswaraachaaryaa's answer to the poorva pakshin.

This sloka is important for 'moolaa avidhyaayaa: sthaapanam' – 'establishing moolaa avidhyaad', which is a very, very important topic in Advaita Vedhaantha.

An interesting aside: One particular Aachaarya, who came in the Advaitic tradition a few decades before, suddenly got separated from the Advaitic tradition, on this particular aspect. For ages, right from Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, Advaita Vedhaanthic Aachaaryaas have been talking of a moolaa avidhyaa other than mithyaa jnaanam and also holding that moolaa avidhyaa is kinchith bhaava roopam. But, that particular Aachaaryaa from Karnataka, Sachchidhaanendra Saraswathi, who attained siddhi in the 1970s and was a prolific author in three languages - Sanskrit, Kannada and English, started arguing that

- there is no such thing as moola avidhyaa
- mithyaa jnaanam alone is ajnaanam and
- Vedhaantha is required to remove mithyaa jnaanam only.

In this sloka, the traditional Advaitha Vedhaanthins interpret a moolaa avidhyaa other than mithyaa jnaanam. Sachchidhaanendra Saraswathi has written a commentary on Naishkarmya Siddhi, called 'Klesaapahaarini', and, in his commentary on this sloka, he has tried to establish the opposite view.

Thus, a new prakriyaa has come and is also spreading, creating some problems. But, this being an advanced topic, it is not discussed much.

And, in spite of these, the Aachaaryaa, Sachchidhaanendra Saraswathi, is considered an Advaitha Aachaaryaa, since he agrees on the fundamental beliefs of Advaitha, namely, "Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa jeevo brahmaiva naapara."|

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 8 – Chapter III:

सन्नजातो भवेत्त इत्युक्तमधस्तनेन श्लोकेन । कोऽसौ सन्नजात इत्यपेक्षायां तत्स्वरूपप्रतिपादनायाह ।

The previous verse has said 'It is Being that is unknown'. If it be asked, 'What is this unknown Being?' in reply, its nature is brought out:

- अधस्तनेन श्लोकेन - In the previous verse,
- इति उक्तं - it was stated that,
- 'सन्नजातो भवेत्त:-' 'Brahman enveloped in ignorance' alone is available during sushupthi and pralayam.

The Aachaaryaa says: In the previous sloka (4th quarter), it was said by me "sannajnaatho bhaveth' – "Brahman enveloped in ignorance' alone is available during sushupthi and pralayam".

'Adhasthana' is a single word and should not be split as 'adha: 'and 'thana'. It is adjective to the word sloka; 'Adhasthana slokena' means 'in the previous verse'.

But, in the previous verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa did not actually say that "Brahman enveloped in ignorance' alone is there in sushupthi".

Instead of using the word Brahman, he used the word san, meaning 'Pure Existence'. Therefore, the literal translation would read "During sushupthi, 'Pure Existence enveloped in ignorance' alone was there".

Enveloped in which ignorance? Ans: Moolaa avidhyaa. What type of moolaa avidhyaa? Ans: Yath kinchith bhaava roopa moolaa avidhyaa.

This alone Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa talks of, in his Sri Dakshinamurthy sthothram also, (in sloka no. 6) as "raahu grastha divaakarendu sadruso maayaa samaachchaadhanaath sanmaathra: karana: upasamharanatha: yo booth sushuptha: pumaan etc." - "On folding up all the functions of the senses, he who enters into a state of deep-sleep, and there becomes Pure Existence, veiled in maayaa, like the sun or the moon during eclipse etc."

Here, 'maayaa' means 'yath kinchith bhaava roopa moolaa avidhyaa', and 'samaachchaadhaanam' means 'aavaranam / veiling / enveloping / covering'. And, what is the 'form' in sushupthi, as given by this sloka? Ans: 'Sanmaathra:' - 'Form of Pure Existence'.

Thus, this Sri Dakshinamurthy sthothram verse also says: "In sushupthi, Pure Existence alone is there, enveloped by yath kinchith bhaava roopa moolaa avidhyaa".

Now, Sureswaraacharya talks of the real nature of that 'Pure Existence'. During sushupthi, that 'Pure Existence' is covered / veiled by ignorance / maayaa / moolaa avidhyaa and because of that cover / veil, (aavruthathvaath), one is not able to understand that 'Pure Existence' during sushupthi. Then, can one recognize that 'Pure Existence' during jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaas? If so, how? How is that 'Pure Existence' identifiable?

"If and when this question is raised" the Aacharya says "There is no problem at all. That 'Pure Existence' alone is available in jaagrath avasthaa as the 'Consciousness principle', because of which only, everything is awared".

He wants to say: "That 'Pure Existence' is available as 'Awarig Consciousness' in jaagrath avasthaa".

Therefore, he says:

- कोऽसौ सन्नजातइत्यपेक्षायां : - When there is a curiosity to know as to what is this 'Pure Existence enveloped in moolaa avidhyaa', that is available in sushupthi,

'Apekshaa' means 'curiosity to know'; 'asau' means 'this' and is adjective to 'sannajnaatha:', which means 'Pure Existence enveloped in moolaa avidhyaa'; 'ka:' means 'what is that?'.

- तत्स्वरूपप्रतिपादनाय - to talk about its identifiable nature (in jaagrath avasthaa), 'Svaroopam' means 'identifiable nature' and 'that' refers to 'sath'.
- आह - the following sloka is written.

Chapter III: Verse 8 –

प्रमित्सायां य आभाति स्वयं मात्रुप्रमाणयोः।

स्वमहिम्ना च यत्सिद्धः सोऽजातार्थोऽवसीयताम् ॥ ८ ॥

What shines forth by itself in the state of the desire for knowledge, in the knower and his knowing, and is the one, which is self-established i.e. the Self, let that be understood as the unknown Being.

This is another beautiful sloka.

- अजातार्थः - That unknown kaaranaa avasthaa called sath or 'Pure Existence', which is enveloped in ignorance / moolaa avidhya aavrutha sath padhaartha:
- सअवसीयताम् : - should be understood as 'that'.

What is 'sa.' / 'that'?

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "It is nothing but the Consciousness, because of which one is conscious of everything. But, that Consciousness also, is experienced, in two-fold form in the jaagrath avasthaa. One form is the 'divided Consciousness' and other is the rarely experienced form of 'undivided Consciousness'. The 'divided Consciousness' is quite well known and familiar. But the 'undivided Consciousness' requires study. Therefore, I am going to talk about a condition, in which one experiences the undivided Consciousness".

To start with, when does one experience 'divided Consciousness'? Whenever one knows or experiences something, there is the thriputi - pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Pramaathaa is a sentient Subject associated with Consciousness, because of which only, it is a pramaathaa. Pramaanam is also associated with Consciousness ; then alone, it can reveal the prameyam. And, when the pramaathaa and pramaanam come in contact with the prameyam (the object), the prameyam is awared; the prameyam also gets associated with Consciousness. Thus, 'divided Consciousness' is experienced, whenever one has specific knowledge or specific experience. In other words, whenever there is a thriputi operation, culminating in specific knowledge or specific experience, one gets the experience of Consciousness, in its divided version. For instance, 'pot-knowledge' means 'Consciousness associated with pot'. Similarly 'man-knowledge', 'woman-knowledge' etc. are all 'divided Consciousness', associated with the respective objects.

In fact, 'divided Consciousness' alone is named as 'knowledge' or 'experience'. Every particular knowledge or every particular experience is only the name of 'divided Consciousness'. Just as a wave is the name of 'divided water' / water divided by naama roopa, in the same manner, every specific knowledge and every specific experience is only the name of 'divided Consciousness' / Consciousness divided by naama roopaa.

Now (i.e. after having studied the concept of 'divided Consciousness'), the subject of 'undivided Consciousness' is taken up. When does one experience 'undivided Consciousness'? Sureswaraacharya says, that, it ('undivided Consciousness') is experienced 'when one is about to operate the pramaanaa'.

That short moment when one wants to know something / that moment, when one, as a pramaathaa, is anxious to know something, with one's pramaanaas fully alive and active / that anxious moment is called pramithsaa avasthaa .

'Jignyaasaad' is a better known word for 'pramithsaa'. But, Sureswaraacharya chooses to use the word 'pramithsaa'. 'Pramaathum icchad' is 'pramithsaa'.

When pramaathaa is desirous of knowing something and has opened up the pramaanam, at that time, there is Consciousness, but it has not crystallized into a particular knowledge. For instance, when a pramaathaa wants to 'hear' a speaker, the crystallization of knowledge takes place only when the speaker has spoken the word and the listener's (pramaathaa's) Consciousness has established contact with the word ; only at that time, the word gets crystallized into sabda jnaanam. But, before the crystallization of sabda jnaanam / when the anxiety to 'know' is alive, that type of chaitanyam, which is there in the pramaathaa and the pramaanam, is the 'undivided Consciousness'.

When a deer in the forest hears the feeble sound of the distant roar of a lion or tiger, its ears perk up, in the deer's anxiety to know where the roar comes from. (An interesting aside : It is believed, that the lion's roar is so ingeniously designed that the direction from which it comes, cannot be guessed. If the direction is clearly known, the deer can escape. But, because of this ingenious design of the roar, endowed by nature, the deer, very often, runs directly towards the direction of the lion and gets caught).

The example of the deer 'perking up its ears' is quoted just to show, that, while the 'perking up of the ears' of the deer exhibits the deer's anxiety to 'know' and a human does not have any recognized physical sign to exhibit his eagerness to 'know', a similar extreme anxiety / eagerness is roused in a human also, at times, by events happening around him. The chaithanyam that is alive, at that moment of eagerness or anxiety to 'know', is nirvikalpaka chaithanyam or 'undivided Existence'. Even during that short period called jignyaasaa (pramithsaa) avasthaa, when the pramaathaa is not yet invoked, the pramaanam is not yet invoked and the prameyam is also not yet invoked, chaithanyam is very much there and that chaithanyam is nirvikalpaka chaithanyam.

Further, that nirvikalpaka chaithanyam in jaagrath avasthaa alone is nirvikalpaka satthaa in sushupthi avasthaa. Sadhev chith; chideva sath.

Reverting to the text:

- प्रमित्सायां - At the time of the desire to know,
- यस्वयं आभाति : - the Consciousness, which is self-effulgent / self- evident,

The word 'aabhaath/ literally means 'shines', but, implies the meaning 'evident'.

- मात्रुप्रमाणयो :- in the activated pramaathaa and pramaanam,

'Activated' pramaathaa means 'curious' pramaathaa; not in normal state; but, in a state of curiosity.

- यःस्वमहिम्ना सिद्ध : - which Consciousness / Awareness is proved by itself,

The 'proving' of the 'awareness' is by its own svayam prakaasa mahimaa. It does not need a second awareness to make it known, since, such an understanding will result in infinite regress – first awareness to be known by a second, the second to be known by a third and so on.

Manthraa VII.24.1 of Chaandoghya Upanishad – Booma Vidhyaa is relevant here, where, Sage Narada addresses his guru Sage Sanathkumara and asks : "Sa: bhagava: kasmin prathishtitha:" – "O venerable sir, on what is That (Bhooma or Brahman) established?" and Sage Sanathkumara answers : "Sve mahimni (prathishtitha:)" – "(Established) in Its own glory".

- सः - that 'undivided Consciousness' obtaining during 'undivided attention',
- अवसीयताम् - should be known / ascertained / understood / 'nischeeyathaam'.

- अज्ञात अर्थः - as the undivided Existence available in sushupthi.

The example of an individual participating in a running race will make the above statement clearer. After taking his position on the running track, the 'start' is very important for the participant, especially in short sprints. Even a small delay in 'starting' will cost him the victor's prize. Therefore, the most important thing for the participant is to be extremely alert to the signaling whistle, at the time of starting, so as not to lose precious moments. Before the blowing of the whistle, the 'awareness' of the anxious participant is, therefore, fully active, with ears fully open ('all ears', as the usage goes); but, it is not 'divided Consciousness', because he is yet to hear the whistle; it is 'undivided attention/ Consciousness', activated in the curious / anxious pramaathaa and the curious / fully alert pramaanam, the ears.

126. Chapter III, Verses 8 and 9 (17-01-2009)

Sureswaraacharyaa is explaining the 'nature' of moolaavidhyaa. Already in the Introductory portion, the Aachaaryaa had talked about two aspects of moolaavidhyaa, viz., that

- (1). moolaavidhyaa is located in the aathmaa and, that
- (2). moolaavidhyaa is the ignorance about the aathma; i.e., he had stated, that aathmaa is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa and aathmaa is the vishayaa also of moolaavidhyaa.

And, this moolaavidhyaa alone is the cause of the entire universe, including the individual chidhaabhaasaas which are generated. Even they (the individual chidhaabhaasaas) are products of moolaavidhyaa only; and the object of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is to tackle this moolaavidhyaa. These were further details we got in the introductory portion.

Now, in the current portions, the Aachaaryaa is giving a few more details. The Aachaaryaa does not give all the information on moolaavidhyaa at one stretch or in one stroke; but, presents them in several portions of the text. It is up to the students to keep track and consolidate all the information.

In this particular portion, the Aachaaryaa says: "moolaavidhyaa is not bhaava or abhaava roopam; but is yath kinchith bhaava roopam". In English, it can be interpreted as "it is not an 'absolutely positive' entity; but, is an 'empirically positive' or 'relatively positive' entity."

If moolaavidhyaa is considered as an 'absolutely positive' entity (as bhaava roopam), it would become equal to Brahman. But, obviously, it cannot be given a status equal to Brahman.

Moolaavidhyaa is also not (ahaava roopam) or 'absence of knowledge'; it is 'inimical' or 'opposed to' knowledge. It is not 'jnaana abhaava'; but, 'jnaana virodhi'.

In both the words avidhyaa and ajnaanam, there is the prefix 'a'. The difference of opinion, between the poorva pakshin and the Vedhaanthin, is on what this prefix conveys. The poorva pakshin holds that 'a' indicates abhaavam ('absence'); whereas, the Vedhaanthin says that the prefix indicates virodhaa ('inimical' or 'opposed to'). 'Abhaavaarthe akaara.' is the poorva pakshin's stand ; 'virodhaarathe akaara.' is the siddhaanthin's view.

Virodha: implies that 'moolaavidhyaa is an entity, which is eliminated by knowledge'. In Vedhaanthaa, we say avidhyaa is removed by knowledge.

To consolidate the above Vedhaanthic views:

- (1) avidhyaa is opposed to knowledge
- (2) avidhyaa is removable by knowledge and
- (3) but, avidhyaa is not absence of knowledge.

Thereafter, Sureswaraachaaryaa said "Not only is moolaavidhyaa an 'empirically positive' entity, which is opposed to knowledge; moolaavidhyaa is different from mithyaa jnaanam or erroneous knowledge".

Moolaavidhyaa is not 'absence of knowledge'; moolaavidhyaa is not 'erroneous knowledge' also; moolaavidhyaa is different from 'erroneous knowledge' or mithyaa jnaanam. In fact, moolaavidhyaa is the cause of mithyaa jnaanam; but, is itself not mithyaa jnaanam.

Proceeding further, the Aachaaryaa reveals: "This moolaavidhyaa is experienced by us, in all the nirvikalpaka avasthaas / divisionless states".

The nirvikalpaka avasthaa may be in the form of sushupthi, in the form of maranam, in the form of pralayam, in the form of moorchaa or in the form of samaadhi. Samaadhi, moorchaa, sushupthi, pralayam and maranam are all nirvikalpaka avasthaas. In all such avasthaas, 'erroneous knowledge' is not what we experience; what we experience is moolaavidhyaa.

Therefore, taking the nirvikalpaka avasthaa case study in the 7th verse, Sureswaraachaarya established moolaavidhyaa is experiencable.

And, in that nirvikalapkaa avasthaa, what is the function of moolaavidhyaa? The Aachaaryaa answers: "The function of moolaavidhyaa is 'enveloping the causal state of the universe (otherwise called Brahman state of the universe.)'".

The 'causal state' of the universe is called 'Brahman state', because, the cause of the universe is Brahman.

The Brahman or 'causal' state is also called saamaanya saththaa, meaning 'undivided Existence'. Always, the 'Causal state' is 'undivided Existence'; only when 'effects' are born, it will become 'divided existence' – as aakaasa: asthi, vaayu: asthi, jalam asthi, agni: asthi, pramaathaa asthi, pramaanam asthi, prameyam asthi etc. "Kaarya avasthaayaam visesha saththaa ; kaarana avasthaayaam saamaanya saththaa".

To consolidate: "In all nirvikalpaka avasthaas, moolaavidhyaa is existing, 'enveloping the causal or Brahman state of the universe'. Conversely, "In nirvikalpaka avasthaas, there is Brahman in the form of 'undivided Existence', enveloped by moolaavidhyaad'.

As indicated in the earlier session, verse 6 of Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, refers only to this fact, by the terms " raahu grastha divaakarendu sadruso maayaa samaachchaadhanaath sanmaathra: karana: upasamharanatha: yo booth sushuptha: pumaan etc. " - " On folding up all the functions of the senses, he who enters into a state of deep-sleep, and there becomes Pure Existence, veiled in maayaa, like the sun or the moon during eclipse etc." In this verse of Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram , the word 'Maayaa' means 'moolaavidhyaa' and the word 'samaachaadhanaath' means 'enveloping'.

This is what is said up to the 7th verse of the 3rd chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi.

Now, in the 8th verse, the Aachaaryaa is extending that idea.

In sushupthi avasthaa, we are experiencing Brahman enveloped in moolaavidhyaa ; Brahman is experienced in the form of saamaanya satthaa – only 'general Existence'; and that saamaanya satthaa itself is saamaanya chaithanyam also. The 'general Existence' is identical with 'general undivided nirvikalpaka chith' also. The Thaithreeya Upanishad declares "sathyam-jnaanam-anantham-Brahma".

But, in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, the saamanya satthaa alone is prominent; the saamanya chith or chaithanyam (the Consciousness) is not to be experienced there.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out "Only, in the waking stage, we experience the saamanya chaithanyam".

For *saamanya satthaa, one should go to deep sleep state - sushupthi avasthaa. And, "for the experience of *saamaanya chaithanyam" Sureswaraachaaryaa says "you have to come to the 'waking' state ; that experience is also not had throughout the waking state; but, only during special moments, we experience the generalized Consciousness".

And, what are those 'special moments'? The Aachaaryaa's view and statement on this topic, are very, very beautiful. The student will not find this unique view, anywhere else in the Vedhaanthic scriptures. The Aachaaryaa answers this question (in verse no. 8) as "Pramithsaayaam" - "in pramithsaa avasthaad".

Other words for "Pramithsaa" are "Jignyaasa", "Vividishaa" and "bubudhsaa".

The term 'pramithsaa avasthaa' indicates a state when the pramaathaa is curious to know something and therefore has activated the corresponding pramaanam, waiting for the prameyam (the object of knowledge) to arrive. In other words, in the 'pramithsaa avasthaa', the pramaathaa is active with the curiosity to 'know' and has also activated / alerted the pramaanam; but, the prameyam, the object of knowledge, is yet to arrive.

In the last session, the example of a participant in a running race, waiting anxiously for the signaling whistle to be blown, was given to explain the 'pramithsaa avasthaa'. Another example will be the state of a railway passenger waiting for an announcement in the railway station. Generally, before the announcement is made, there is a 'gong', to attract the attention of the passengers. Immediately after the 'gong' and before the actual announcement comes, the pramaathaa (the passenger) is active and anxiously activates the pramaanam (the ears). Therefore, 'Consciousness' or 'Awareness' is aroused 'as it were' (the term 'as it were' is important, because, in reality, 'Consciousness' has no modification) ; but, it has not become a 'particular awareness or knowledge'; it will become 'particular awareness or knowledge' or 'visesha chaithanyam', only when the actual announcement is heard, conveying the information that is important for the passenger.

Only after the actual announcement, the 'awareness' will become a specific sabda jnaanam; but, even before the sabda jnaanam comes, the 'awareness' is there; and that awareness is the generalized 'awareness'; that chaithanyam is Brahma chaithanyam, which is saamaanya chith , as well as saamanya sath also, which is enveloped by avidhya – lack of 'particular knowledge'.

And, an important fact about that saamaanya chaithanyam: 'Experiencing the saamaanya chaithanyam requires only a little bit of attention. Saamaanya chaithanyam can be experienced by everyone, by paying attention, before 'knowing' anything.

Yoga saasthra talks about entering into nirvikalpaka samaadhi to pay special attention to the 'awareness' - saamaanya chaithanyam. But, Vedhaantha says: "If you want to go to nirvikalpaka avasthaa, to pay special attention to the 'awareness'- saamaanya chaithanyam, you may do so. But, that is not compulsorily required. What is sufficient is 'paying attention' even in the jaagrath avasthaa, before seeing anything or hearing anything. That 'paying attention' is nirvikalpaka or saamaanya chaithanyam. That anubhaava is easily attainable".

Vedhaantha is not meant to give a seeker that anubhaava, since 'experience of saamaanya chaithanyam' is easily achievable by 'paying attention' and 'experience of saamaanya saththa' is easily achievable by going to 'deep sleep'. Vedhaantha seeks to give more information regarding that saamaanya chaithanyam.

In other words: Brahma anubhavaa is easily available; 'giving Brahma anubhavaa to the seeker' is not the aim of Vedhaanthaa; 'giving Brahma jnaanam' is its aim.

Nor is Vedhaanthaa required for the purpose of giving the experience of saamaanya satthaa and the saamaanya chaithanyam which are easily experienced.

But, Vedhaanthaa is required to understand the facts about chaithanyam, viz., that,

- (1) chaithanyam is not a part or product or property of matter;
- (2) chaithanyam is an independent entity that pervades matter;
- (3) chaithanyam is not limited by the boundaries of time or space, which belong to matter;
- (4) chaithanyam survives even after the disintegration of matter;
- (5) chaithanyam is beyond transaction, after matter dissolves; but, its 'non-transactability' does not mean it is absent; and finally and most importantly
- (6) that saamaanya chaithanyam is 'myself'; 'I' am not the body, with saamaanya chaithanyam; but I am that saamaanya chaithanyam,

This Brahma jnaanam is the aim of Vedhaanthaa. Brahma anubhavaa is relatively simpler. For the experience of saamaanya satthaa, one has to go to sleep and for the experience of saamaanya chaithanyam one has to 'pay attention', when you are about to listen to or experience something. (Being important, it is repeated).

Reverting to the sloka:

- प्रमित्सायां - Just before the rise of visesha jnaanam,
- यत् आभाति :- that general Consciousness which is aroused (or active),
- स्वयं - by itself,

The word 'svayam' indicates that the general Consciousness is self evidently manifest.

When one says "I am paying undivided attention", the term 'undivided attention' indicates 'undivided Consciousness', because, at that particular moment of 'undivided attention', one is not even self-conscious as a particular individual / one is not even aware of oneself as an individual. An example of such a moment: Imagine a five-match series of the game of cricket, between India and Pakistan; each country has won two matches each, the final match is being played and the last ball of the match is about to be bowled with two runs for a win. Every ardent cricket fan, waiting for that final ball to be bowled and watching that final ball, pays 'undivided attention' and is actually in nirvikalpaka samaadhi; though, it is a common error to believe that nirvikalpaka samaadhi is achieved only in Padmaasanaa.

'Undivided attention' is 'undivided Consciousness'. How is that 'undivided Consciousness' evident? Ans: It is self evident.

Where?

- मातृप्रमाणयोः - in the pramaathaa and pramaanam,

One cannot claim that Consciousness is aroused in 'inert' matter, for example, in a chair. Only in the chethana individual, the 'undivided Consciousness' is evident during 'undivided attention'.

- स्वमहिम्ना च यस्मिद् - and which is evident because of its own glory of svayam prakaasathvam,
- सः अज्ञात अर्थः - is 'chaithanyam enveloped in moola ajnaanam'.
- (इति) अवसीयताम् - (Thus) may you understand.

'ajnaathaa artha:' means 'ajnaanam brahman', which, in turn, means 'chaithanyam enveloped in moolaa ajnaanam'.

The word ajnaathaa should be translated as 'enveloped in moolaavidhyaad'. 'Artha:' means 'undivided Existence' and 'undivided Consciousness'.

'Ajnaatha artha:', therefore, means 'undivided Existence-Consciousness enveloped in moolaavidhyaad'.

When is one experiencing this? Whenever one is paying 'undivided attention'.

After this incidental topic, the student has to remind himself of the original topic. What is the original topic? Ans: It is this moolaavidhyaad which the seeker is trying to tackle with mahaa vaakya vichaara.

Samaadhi avasthaa / samaadhi anubhavaa can never falsify the world; it can only keep away the world and the consequent problems, for a few minutes. The samaadhi anubhavaa will not solve the problems permanently.

Then, what is required? It is "falsification of the world" that is required.

The advantage is, that, whether experienced or not experienced, a falsified world cannot threaten, whether one is sitting in samaadhi or interacting with the world.

To repeat: 'Forgetfulness of the world' is not the Vedhaanthin's aim; 'falsification of the world' is; and, that is possible only through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. This is the main topic, discussed by Sureswaraachaaryaa earlier.

Now, the Aachaaryaa wants to enter another topic, for the purpose of further establishing the relevance of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. It is another very, very important topic, that he is entering into.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 9:

अत्र केचिदाहुः । यत्किंचिदिह वाक्यं लौकिकं वैदिकं वा तत्सर्वं संसर्गात्मकमेव वाक्यार्थं गमयति । अतस्तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्येभ्यः संसर्गात्मकमहं ब्रह्मेति विजायतावन्निदिध्यासीत् यावदवाक्यार्थात्मकः प्रयगात्मविषयोऽवबोधोऽहं ब्रह्मेति समभिजायते । तस्मादेव विज्ञानात्कैवल्यमाप्नोतीति तन्निराकरणायेदमुच्यते ।

Here, some thinkers maintain the following: "Every proposition, scriptural or worldly, conveys an import, which is a complex of many items. Therefore, after one gathers the complex import of Vedhaanthic propositions like 'That thou art' in the form of the judgment 'I am Brahmar', he must practice meditation on that theme, until an integral and non-verbal knowledge of the inmost Self emerges in the form of the direct experience 'I am Brahmar'. It is only through such a realization that liberation is achieved". To refute this view, the following is propounded:

Another serious and important discussion, which discussion is based on the views of two groups of Advaitins. Here, the debate is not between advaitam and saamkyaa or between advaitam and yoga or between advaitam and visishtaadvaitam etc. Within advaitam itself, there is this controversy, which the Aachaaryaa is raising here.

- अत्र केचित् आहुः - Even with regard to mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, there is another view held by some people / some Advaitins hold this following view.

Before proceeding with the study of the text, it will help to study the background of the controversy, which is as follows:

Sureswaraachaaryaa holds that mahaa vaakya vichaaram generates aathma jnaanam / brahma jnaanam / aathma brahma eiykya jnaanam. That jnaanam is expected to tackle moolaavidhyaa, which is eliminated by that jnaanam.

The subject / import of 'this 'elimination' of moolaavidhyaa' has already been discussed and repeated below.

'Elimination' of moolaavidhyaa consists in 'removal' of aavarana sakthi and falsification of vikshepa sakthi. It should be noted that it is removal of only aavarana sakthi; but, not vikshepa sakthi, because if vikshepa sakthi is also removed, the world will disappear.

Therefore, "'elimination' of moolaavidhyaa" is 'removal of aavarana sakthi' and only 'falsification of vikshepa sakthi' and not elimination of vikshepa sakthi.

What will be the advantage? The world will continue but it will be a falsified world. The 5th capsule of Vedhaanthaa (as codified by Swamiji) should be remembered here:

"For a person who remembers the true nature of the world, life is an entertainment; for a person who forgets the nature, life becomes a struggle".

Therefore, even after elimination of moolaavidhyaa, the world will continue as a falsified world; but the aavarana sakthi is gone. And, this is called liberation. Liberation is attained by the knowledge generated by mahaa vaakya vichaaram.

Now, what is the controversy, even among Advaitins? Ans: The controversy is on the answer to the question "Is this liberating knowledge produced at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam / vicharaa itself or is this knowledge produced only during nidhidhyaasanam / meditation during nirvikalpaka samaadh?"

To repeat the same question, in other words: "Is this liberating knowledge produced even at the time of study of mahaa vaakya or is it produced only later, during meditation?"

In Sanskrit, the question is: "Sravanam jnaanam janayathi vaa; dhyaanam jnaanam janayathi vaa?"

The poorva pakshin, who is introduced in this paragraph, argues: "Only during meditation, the liberating knowledge is produced"; i.e. this poorva pakshaa holds: "Meditation alone produces liberating knowledge. Sravanam does produce knowledge but not liberating knowledge". Thus, the poorva pakshin classifies the knowledge into two, viz., 'liberating knowledge' and 'non-liberating knowledge'.

Then the subsequent question arises: What is the difference between the two? The poorva pakshin replies: "During sravanam, the seeker gets knowledge, which knowledge may be called secondary knowledge or book knowledge or intellectual knowledge or indirect knowledge. Even the most qualified disciple, even under the guidance of the best guru, can attain only this knowledge. Any amount of sravanam or any amount of mananam done by the student, will produce only this secondary knowledge. The student, subsequently, has to go to meditation; in meditation alone, because of sustained repetition (aavrutthi:) of the 'secondary knowledge', the secondary knowledge will get more and more ripened and at a particular time, it will produce the 'primary knowledge', also called by other names - 'direct knowledge, 'experiential knowledge', 'saakshaathkaara:', 'realization', 'enlightenment' etc. At that 'flashpoint' alone, the 'liberating knowledge' is generated. The seeker may do any amount of sravanam or mananam. But, they will not do; he has to practice meditation, initially for a short period; gradually increasing the period of meditation, at a particular stage he will attain the 'liberating knowledge'".

Sureswaraachaaryaa strongly refutes this viewpoint. He says: "Primary knowledge is generated during mahaa vaakya vichaara or sravanam itself".

He does recognize a differentiation between a 'primary' and a 'secondary' knowledge, but of a different type. What is that?

The explanation is as follows:

In this context, it is important for the student to note the difference between the terms, avaanthara vaakyam and mahaa vaakyam, which topic is specifically covered during the study of the Panchadasee by Swami Vidhyaaranyaa.

'Avaanthara vaakyaani' are Upanishadic statements, which define Brahman, such as "Brahman is nirgunam, niraarkaaram, jagath kaaranam, sathyam-jnaanam- anantham etc.", but, without saying that "that Brahman is 'you'".

Examples of such vaakyaani are (i) "sathyam jnaanam anantham Brahma" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Brahma valli – manthraa 1) - "Brahman is infinite Existence-Awareness" and (ii) "yath thadh adresyam agrahyam agothram avarnam achakshu:rothram thadapaanipaadam nithyam vibhum sarvagatham sushookshmam thadavyayam yad bhoothayonim" - (Mundaka Upanishad – I.1.6) – "that which cannot be perceived, which cannot be grasped, which is without a source, without properties, without eyes and ears, without hands and legs, which is timeless, all-pervading, very subtle, which becomes many , which is imperishable and which is the cause of all the beings".

Vichaaraa or enquiry into such statements giving definitions of Brahman, leaving aside the mahaa vaakyam, is "avaanthara vaakya vichaara" or "avaanthara vaakya sravanam".

According to the Aachaaryaa's viewpoint, that knowledge which is attained during avaanthara vaakya vichaara or sravanam, is known as 'secondary knowledge' or 'paroksha jnaanam'.

Further in the Aachaaryaa's view, after attaining this paroksha jnaanam through the avaanthara vaakyaani, the seeker should not go to meditation for 'primary knowledge'. He should continue the sravanam and in the sravanam, he should move from avaanthara vaakyaani to mahaavaakyaani such as "thath thvam asi", "aham brahma asmI" etc. And this mahaavaakya saravanam generates 'aparoksha jnaanam' or 'primary knowledge'.

In short, "Sravanam / vicharraa of avaanthara vaakyaani will produce 'secondary knowledge'; but, mahaavaakya vicharaa itself will produce 'primary knowledge'" is the Aachaaryaa's stand.

Thus, in Sureswaraachaaryaa's view, both 'secondary knowledge' and 'primary knowledge' are produced in sravanam; but, for the poorva pakshin, 'secondary knowledge' is produced in sravanam and the 'primary knowledge' is produced in meditation - in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, by constant 'repetition' and that too in a 'flash'. This is the topic, that is being discussed in these portions.

An incidental but, relevant doubt is also to be clarified, at this stage:

In the above discussion, the Vedhaanthic teacher has said that 'liberating knowledge' is produced during sravana-mananam itself and that nidhidhyaasanam is not expected to produce 'liberating knowledge' and obviously, therefore, nidhidhyaasanam is not expected to give mokshaa also.

Thus, if both 'liberating knowledge' and 'mokshaa' are achieved in sravana mananam and not during nidhidhyaasanam, then why is nidhidhyaasanam prescribed in the saasthras? In other words: If 'liberating knowledge' does not require nidhidhyaasanam, since Vedhaanthic study itself can give it, why nidhidhyaasanam at all?

The answer to this doubt: Nidhidhyaasanam is required neither for knowledge nor mokshaa; it is only meant for negating / erasing the seeker's 'triangular format orientation', 'which orientation is: "I am a victim of karma; karma and the world victimize me; and Bhagavaan is the only Saviour"'.

All the bakthi literature, slokas and songs, in any language, will repeatedly plead to God: "I am helpless; You are my Saviour".

But, the fact is, that, 'I' am already free. Therefore, 'I' should not revive or perpetuate the 'triangular format', Nidhidhyaasanam is only deliberate negation of this triangular format / vipareetha bhaavana / vaasanaa. A Vedhaantic seeker has to take a vow, that, during his day-to-day transactions also, he will not slip into 'triangular format'. As can be readily appreciated, a habit will have to be deliberately broken. That 'habit-breaking' exercise is nidhidhyaasanam; the 'orientation-neutralization' exercise is nidhidhyaasanam. It is not meant for a new 'enlightenment' or a new 'realization', as no new realization can arrive in nidhidhyaasanam.

'Realization' has to come only through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, mahaa vaakyani being the only pramaanam.

And, if some saadhakaas claim that they had extraordinary experiences in meditation, the Vedhaantha philosopher does not dispute the claim. In fact, he has no right to. He only points out that those experiences have nothing to do, either with realization or liberation. Those experiences may be there; but, similar to visiting the US and watching the Niagara falls, they are / may be fantastic experiences; but they have nothing to do with 'binary format'. Those experiences will not help the seeker to come to 'binary format'.

The seeker has to understand clearly: "'I' was, 'I' am and 'I' ever will be free; 'I' am never a victim; 'I' do not require a savior".

Dayaananda Swamiji was once asked "What is your New Year message"? Swamiji jokingly, but, significantly replied "O God! Save me from the saviours".

There may be a further reaction to this approach. The question "Then, is not God required at all?" may be raised. The Vedhaanthin's answer will be: "God is not required as a saviour. God, as Viswaroopa Isvara, is available as a master-entertainer; a wonderful Viswaroopa drama is on; enjoy the drama by the viswaroopa Isvara." The Vedhaanthin will never negate Isvara. He will only say that it is not a victimizing Isvara or a saviour Isvara.

In a nutshell, is nidhidhyaasanam required or not? Vedhaanthin's Answer: It is required; but, not for realization, but for dismantling 'triangular format'.

Reverting to the text: The poorva pakshin says,

- यत् किञ्चित् इह वाक्यं तत् सर्व - Every proposition,
- लौकिकं वैदिकं वा - whether worldly or scriptural,
- वाक्यार्थं गमयति - conveys an import,
- संसर्गात्मकमेव - which is a complex of many items.

The poorva pakshin, in this portion, is giving a grammatical reason to establish that the mahaa vaakyam cannot produce advaita jnaanam. According to him: "Only meditation can produce advaita jnaanam; mahaa vaakyam cannot."

Incidentally, this topic has been discussed earlier in this treatise itself, in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 67, of Chapter I (Page 30 of the Text Book in use in the class – lines 5 to 8).

The view of the poorva pakshin is "Sentences cannot give advaita jnaanam".

And, he substantiates his view as follows.

He says: "Leave alone mahaa vaakyam. Let us generally analyze any sentence – worldly or saasthric sentence – loukika vaakyam vaa vaidhika vaakyam vaa saasthreeya vaakyam vaa. Any sentence will have several words, because, a sentence, by definition, is a group of words, of course, arranged in a proper manner and connected syntactically. Every sentence will have several words and every word will have its corresponding object. Taking the sentence 'Rama is driving a vehicle' for analysis, there are two nouns in the sentence – 'Rama' and 'vehicle'. Analyzing another example : 'I am writing a letter with a pen', there are three nouns – 'I', 'letter' and 'pen'. The noun may refer to the 'subject' of the sentence or 'object' or 'instrument' or 'location' . But, every kaaraka padham will reveal a kaaraka padhaartha. Thus, a sentence will reveal only plurality. A sentence can never reveal advaitam".

This is the poorva pakshin's first argument.

His second argument is: "Even if there is a sentence, in which one word reveals an object and all other words are descriptions of that object, the sentence reveals visishta advaitam only".

To understand this argument, the Githa Dhyana Sloka - "prapanna paarijaathaaya thothra vethraika paanaye jnaanamudhraaya krishnaaya geethmruthaduhe nama:" may be considered. In this sentence, there are five nouns, but they are not revealing five objects. They reveal only one Krishna. Even though they are revealing one Krishna, the nouns other than 'Krishnaaya' are revealing various attributes of Krishna. Therefore, they are revealing visista advaitam only – a Krishna with various attributes.

Thus, according to the poorva pakshin, a sentence can reveal only dvaitam or visishta advaitam.

In English, his argument may be stated as: "A sentence will reveal either 'plurality of objects' or it will reveal 'one entity with several attributes' / 'an attributed entity'. A nirvishesha advaitham – a 'non-duality without an attribute', can never be revealed by a sentence." Or, in other words, the poorva pakshin's argument may be stated as: "A sentence will reveal many things or it will reveal one thing with many attributes, one word revealing the noun and the other words its attributes. The 'one, single entity, without attributes' can never be revealed by any sentence".

And, how is Brahman defined? Ans: "As a single Entity, without any attributes".

"So" the poorva pakshin argues "Brahman being 'attributeless, single entity', it can never be revealed by any sentence, whether it is loukika vaakyam or vaidhika vaakyam, whether it is karma kaanda vaakyam or jnaana kaanda vaakyam or whether it is avaanthara vaakyam or mahaa vaakyam."

The poorva pakshin makes a vyaapthi: "Vaakyam nirvishesha advaitha bhinna padhaartha bodhakam" meaning "a vaakyam reveals a thing, which is other than attributeless single entity". Also, "nirvishesha advaitha bhinaa bodhakam vaakyathvaath, 'raama: lekanyaa likathi' ithi loukika vaakyavath".

"Therefore, you may study any amount of Vedhaanthaa; but, you will get only book knowledge. If you want to know or experience that 'attributeless entity' you have to go to meditation" is the poorva pakshaa.

127. Chapter III, Verse 9 (24-01-2009)

In this sambhandha gadhyam to verse 9, Sureswaraachaarya is introducing a poorva pakshin, who is also only an Advaitin.

Therefore, i.e., being an Advaitin, according to this poorva pakshin also, just as all Advaitins believe, “aham brahma asmi' ithi jnaanam'” alone is the ‘liberating knowledge’ and this “aham brahma asmi' ithi jnaanam'” is in the form of ‘nirguna advaita jnaanam'’, otherwise called ‘nirvishesha advaita jnaanam'’. The non-dual Reality, which is without any attribute, is known in this knowledge.

But, where this poorva pakshin differs, is, that, while Sureswaraachaaryaa holds that this nirguna advaita jnaanam is generated by mahaa vaakya vichaaraa (consisting of sravanam and mananam) itself, this poorva pakshin says: “Mahaa vaakya vichaaraa generates only a secondary knowledge. Thereafter, i.e. after the vichaaraa, the aspirant should go to meditation. In this meditation or nidhidhyaasanam, the aspirant should repeat the mahaa vaakya vritthi. As a result of this repetition, bhaavanaa upajaya: takes place. (Bhaavanaa upajaya: means some kind of a ‘ripening’ process). As a result of this ‘ripening’, which happens because of continuous meditation or nidhidhyaasanam, another knowledge takes place, which knowledge alone is primary knowledge / liberating knowledge / saakshaathkaara jnaanam or aparoksha anubhava jnaanam. That jnaanam alone is the ‘liberating knowledge’ and that knowledge alone is nirguna nirvishesha advaita jnaanam. This ‘liberating knowledge’ cannot be produced by mahaa vaakyam itself. Mahaa vaakyam generates only a ‘secondary knowledge’, also known as working knowledge, intellectual knowledge etc. That ‘intellectual knowledge’ alone mahaavaakyam can generate. Therefore, sravanam or vichaaraa, by itself, cannot produce ‘liberating knowledge’. Meditation alone generates ‘liberating knowledge’ ”. This is the contention of this poorva pakshin, known as Vedhaantha Ekadesi.

The champion of this poorva pakshaa is also a great Aacharyaa, known as Vaachaspathy Misra:, who is also the author of Bhamathi, a commentary on Brahma Sootra Sankara Bhashyam, because of which, Vaachaspathy Misra: is known as Bhamathikaaraa and this approach is called Bhamathi prakriyaa.

According to this Bhamathi prakriyaa, meditation alone generates ‘liberating knowledge’.

In turn, Sureswaraachaarya is equally vehement in his opposition to this prakriyaa. He firmly establishes that mahaa vaakya sravanam or mahaa vaakya vichaaraa can itself generate this ‘liberating nirvishesha advaita jnaanam'’ and that, ‘nirvishesha advaita jnaanam'’ does not require the separate process called nidhidhyaasanam or meditation. According to his prakriyaa, nidhidhyaasanam is required, but, it is neither meant for knowledge nor for realization; neither for enlightenment nor for mystical experiences; nor is it meant for liberation ; according to him, nidhidhyaasanam is meant for only removing the habit of 'triangular format'. This 'triangular format' habit is the orientation to pray during crisis "O! God! Save me". Breaking this habitual orientation is the purpose of nidhidhyaasanam. "Liberating knowledge' can certainly be achieved during maaha vaakya sravanam itself. Maha vaakyam certainly has the power to do that" is his stand.

With the intention of establishing his view and refuting this poorva pakshaa, Sureswaraacharya introduces the poorva pakshin here.

As discussed in the earlier session, the poorva pakshin gives a grammatical reason to show that maha vaakyam cannot give nirguna advaita jnaanam. His reasoning is: "Any vaakyam, whether it is a secular statement or a sacred statement, consists of many words; and, 'many words' can reveal not advaitam ; but only dvaita padhaarthaa: | The dvaita padhaani / naanaa padhaani, in a sentence can reveal only dvaita padhaarthaa: / naanaa padhaarthaa: | Advaitam cannot be revealed by a group of words."

The poorva pakshin's further argument is: "Even if there is a sentence which reveals only one object - an eka vasthu - that eka vasthu will be saguna vasthu / savishesha vasthu only, one word of the sentence revealing the object and the other words revealing the attributes of that object". The earlier example given, for such sentences, was the sloka 'prapanna paarijaathaaya thothra vethraika panaye jnaanamudhraaya Krishnaaya githaamruthaduhe nama:' , which sloka reveals one Krishna, but not nirguna Krishna, but One who has got several attributes - 'Prapaana parijaathathvam', 'thothra vethraika panithvam' etc.

Of course, it is an acceptable fact, that, if, in a sentence

- (i) the different nouns do not reveal different objects or
- (ii) if the nouns other than the noun revealing an object, do not reveal the attributes of the object also, then, the nouns themselves will become redundant.

"Therefore, the different nouns in a sentence should reveal either different objects or they should reveal one object and the attributes of that object. In other words, a sentence itself can reveal only aneka vasthu or savishesha eka vasthu. A sentence can never reveal nirvishesha / nirguna eka vasthu" is the view of the poorva pakshin.

"And, therefore" the poorva pakshin continues "nirvishesha eka vasthu jnaanam is revealed mystically in nirvikalapa samaadhi only. A mystic experience takes place and only in that experience, nirvishesha advaita vasthu 'flashes'; it is an inexplicable experience; and, after that experience, 'liberation' dawns".

Another school of aspirants connect 'nirvishesha eka vasthu jnaanam' with the 'rising' of 'kundalini'; they say: "Automatically, whether the seeker engaged in 'meditation', specifically works for it or not, kundalini 'rises' as a by-product, travels upwards through sushumna naadi and 'hits' sahasraara chakram, where the Paramaathmaa is seated. The jeevaathmaa, travelling upwards through the sushumna naadi 'hits' the Paramaathmaa, 'sitting' (the irony is that the Paramaathmaa is 'all-pervading') in the sahasraaraa; 'hitting the sitting Paramaathma', the jeevaathmaa and the Paramaathmaa will 'merge' in that junction. Thereafter, there will be amrutha dhaara pravaaham from the top of the skull and the seeker will feel the liquid amritham flowing down also". In support, this group quotes the sloka 9 from Adi Sankara's Soundarya Lahari: "mahim moolaadhaare kamapi manipoore huthavaham sthitham svaadhishtaane hrudhi marutham aakaasam upari manopi bhrhumadhye sakalamapi bhithvaa kulapatham sahasraare padme saha rahasi pathyaa vikarase"|

Thus, all kinds of 'mystical' dimensions are given to advaita jnaanam, by different schools of thought. But, Sureswaraachaarya says: "No mysticism is required; no 'kundalini raising' is required; study mahaa vaakyaa properly. 'Nirvishesha advaita jnaanam', in the form of clear understanding, is achieved. I will show how it is possible, in the following verses".

To continue with the poorva pakshin's statement (in the introduction to verse 9):

- यत् किञ्चित् इह वाक्यं - Sentences in the world,
- लौकिकं वैदिकं वा - whether secular or sacred / pourusheya or apourusheya,
- तत् सर्वं - all those sentences
- वाक्यार्थं गमयति - reveal a meaning,
- संसर्गात्मकं एव - which is in the form of a relational sense.

'Samsargam' means 'relational'. The use of the term 'Samsargaathmakam' implies "several objects which are interconnected' or 'one object with several attributes which are connected' / 'several connected objects' or 'one object and several connected attributes' / 'aneka saguna padhaarthaan' or 'eka saguna padhaartha'. Therefore, it further implies "never can nirguna padhaartha be revealed".

'Samasargaathmakam' is translated as 'of relational sense' 'Gamayathi' means 'bodhayathi'.

"And, therefore, any amount of the study of prakaranaas like Naishkarmya Siddhi will give only 'book knowledge'. To attain nirvishesha advaita jnaanam, one has to practice hours of meditation" is the poorva pakshin's averment (which follows).

- अतः - Therefore,
- संसर्गात्मात्कं विज्ञाय - having gained the 'secondary knowledge' / 'book knowledge' / 'intellectual knowledge', which is of the nature of 'relational knowledge',

The term 'samsargaathmakam' is adverbial to 'vignyaaya'; therefore, 'samsargaathmakam vignyaaya' means, 'relationally having known'.

- अहं ब्रह्म (अस्मि) - that 'I am Brahman',

Normally 'brahma jagath kaaranam asth' is considered as paroksha jnaanam; but, this poorva pakshin considers even 'aham brahma asmi jnaanam', gained by Vedhaanthic study, as only relational knowledge / secondary knowledge/ paroksha jnaanam .

- तावत् - initially,
- तत्त्वमस्यादि वाक्येभ्यः - from the mahaa vaakyaani like 'thathvamasi',

According to the poorva pakshin, the main saadhanaa is not the study of mahaa vaakyaa / mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. The main saadhanaa should start after the vichaaraa, in a secluded place.

- निदिध्यासीत् - the aspirant should practice intense meditation,

'Nidhidhyaaseetha' is verbal form, meaning 'should meditate' / 'nidhidhyaasanam kuryaath' / 'aham brahma asmi' ithi dhyaanam kuryaath.'

How long should one meditate / practice nidhidhyaasanam?

- यावत् - until,

The poorva pakshin talks of another knowledge, in addition to the knowledge acquired through sravana-mananam, which 'addirional knowledge', he calls enlightenment / realization / aparoksha saakshaathkaara / a mystical 'flash'. And, according to him,, one should continue nidhidhyaasanam, until that 'flash' arrives.

- अवबोधः - another superior 'realization',

'Avabodha:' means 'realization', which the poorva pakshin differentiates from the previous knowledge.

What does this 'realization' deal with?

- प्रत्यक् आत्म विषयः - dealing with advaita aathmaa / the inner Self,

And, what is the uniqueness of this higher 'realization'?

- अवाक्यार्थात्मक :- (and) of the nature of 'non- relational knowledge' / 'non- sentential knowledge' / direct experience,

According to the poorva pakshin, the 'earlier' knowledge was 'savishesha jnaanam'. This latter 'realization' is the 'nirvishesha jnaanam'. And, therefore, the seeker's job is to get into and continue the meditation.

But, for how long? How does the seeker know that he has gained the 'realization'? According to the poorva pakshin, he has to wait for the 'extra-ordinary' experience. But, there may be several extra-ordinary experiences; because, the saamkhyaa philosophers and also the Yoga philosopher Patanjali, talk of nirvikalpaka samaadhi, when the aspirant gets an extra-ordinary experience – but, both philosophies talk only of dvaitham . Therefore, how does the seeker identify that particular experience which is 'realization'? How is he to know that he has got the right extra-ordinary experience of nirvishesha advaita jnaanam? The poorva pakshin has no reply for this. He only says that the seeker himself, at the appropriate time, will know that 'self-proving' mystical experience. Till such time, he should continue the meditation, also gradually increasing the duration of the meditation.

- अहं ब्रह्मेति समभिजायते - that 'I am Brahman', emerges / rises.

The poorva pakshin continues:

- तस्मात् विज्ञात् एव - Only through that mystical saakshaathkaara,
- कैवल्यं आप्नोति - the liberation is achieved.
- इति - Up to this, is the poorva pakshin's statement of his theory.

Sureswaraacharya responds:

- तत् निराकरणाय - To negate this theory,
- इदं उच्यते - the following sloka is given.

Chapter III: Verse 9 –

सामानाधिकरण्यादेर्घटितरखयोरिव।

व्यावृत्ते ॥ ९ ॥ :साक्षान्नस्तत्त्वमर्थयोः स्यादवाक्यार्थः :

According to us, the relations i.e. co-ordination, subject-predicate relation and indirect indication, connecting words, their meanings and the Self, bring out directly the non-verbal import of 'That thou art', like the identity of space through the cancellation of the different adjuncts.

Sureswaraacharya is answering the poorva pakshin's contention, that, a sentence can reveal only savishesha eka vasthu. As already discussed in detail, according to the poorva pakshin: "If a sentence is revealing a single object, then, one word in the sentence will be revealing the object and the other words will be revealing its attributes; then the single object revealed will be only an attributed object ; an attributeless object cannot be revealed by a sentence". This is his contention.

In reply, Sureswaraacharya says: "That need not be; what you say is generally true. Wherever there are saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyaani, the vaakyaani (like the example given earlier, viz., the sloka 'prapanna paarijaathaya', which is a saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyam) will reveal one object with its attributes. We do agree, that, this is the general rule. But, we have exceptions to that rule also. Exceptional sentences can be ingeniously composed. These exceptional sentences are called 'equation sentences' – 'eiyyka vaakyaani' -, in which sentences, two objects are equated as one single object. An 'equation sentence / statement' will talk about two objects – but, by equation, the two objects are reduced into one object. Therefore, the sentence, ultimately, is revealing only one object."

How does this happen? When two objects are equated, the two objects are introduced before equation. Both of them have got attributes. The first object that is introduced, has attributes; in the same manner, the second object that is introduced also, has attributes. These two 'introduced-attributed-objects' are equated and when the equation takes place, the sentence is constructed in such a way that these two attributes get mutually cancelled. To repeat: The sentence is made in such a way, that, in the beginning of the equation object no. 1 also has got attributes and object no. 2 also has got attributes; but, at the time of equation, the first set of attributes belonging to object 1, cancels the second set of attributes belonging to object 2 and, likewise, the second set of attributes belonging to object no. 2, cancels the first set of attributes belonging to object no. 1.

This logic / argument is called sundha-upasundha-nyaaya: |

The name is based on a puranic story. Sundha and Upasundha were two loving and friendly brothers, but, together striking terror in the devas and the humans. Bhagavaan decided to eliminate them; He took the form of a very beautiful girl and appeared before them; both got infatuated with the girl, who promised to marry any one of them, if the other was also made to agree. For the sake of the girl, the brothers fought and killed each other, leaving behind only the 'girl'.

Based on this logic of sundha-upasundha-nyaaya:, in the mahaa vaakyam equation, the jeevaathma viseshanaani and the Paramaathma viseshanaani cancel each other, leaving out one Padhaartha - the eka aathmaa.

To convey this idea, in Advaita Vedhaanthee, an example is commonly given: "Soyam Devadattha". This statement alludes to the following imagery: An individual has seen the person Devadatta years before and sees him again after a long gap of time, but, fails to recognize him, because the physical features of the past Devadattha and the physical features of the present Devadatha are so much different. But, when a third person points out to him "Soyam Devadattha:" - "It is the same Devadattha, whom you have seen earlier; that Devadattha is this Devadattha", recognition of Devadattha, dawns on the individual.

To drive home the point, Swamiji recalled a similar incident that happened a few years before. Swamiji's disciple Swami Omkaaraananda joined Swamiji for a Puja in Asthika Samajam. He had come to Chennai after a long gap of time. During this period, his physical appearance had changed, since he had been requested to take over as the head of an existing Mutt, which position required a particular type of tuft and beard. He had also lost weight. Quite a number of participants in the Puja - Swamiji's students - had known Swami Omkaaraananda earlier, having attended Swamiji's Saadhanaa camps, where Swami Omkaaraananda also had conducted classes, and the students had listened to him. In spite of this, during almost a full hour of the Puja time, they had not recognized Swami Omkaaraananda. Later, after the Puja, when Swamiji presented Swami Omkaaraananda to the gathering, they recognized him and exclaimed: "Oh! Yes! That Omkaaraananda is this Swami; that Swami is this Swami".

What is happening in these 'equation statements'? It is a very big enquiry in Vedhaanthee. How many people does one understand through each of these statements? The statements contain many words; for instance, "That Swami is this Swami" is a sentence with many words. Even so, the listeners are recognizing only one Swami.

Now, in the Saasthras, they ask the question: "When you recognize the Swami through this equation, at the time of recognition of this 'oneness', do you keep in your mind his past physical features or his present physical features?". And, also give the answer: "If you are holding on to the past physical features, the equation will not tally, because the past physical features contradict the present physical features. If you are retaining the present physical features also, the equation will not tally, since the present physical features contradict the past physical features.

"Therefore, when you are 'grasp'ing the Swami, intellectually you are dropping (not physically removing) both the past and present features. Intellectually, an extraordinary phenomenon takes place. Intellect can do that. What is that extraordinary phenomenon? You are 'grasp'ing a Swami, who is stripped of both the past attributes and the present attributes.

"If you are holding on to any one set of the attributes, the sentence will be illogical / will have no sense. If the sentence has to have a sense and you have to 'grasp' that sense, you should understand that, the past Swami had past attributes and the present Swami has got present attributes, but, the 'grasp'ed Swami is stripped of both his past and present attributes".

The Sasthraas have a name for this knowledge. They call it 'vyakthi maathra jnaanam'. 'Vyakthi' means 'individual'; 'maathra' means 'only'; 'vyakthi maathra' | 'only that individual' means 'without bootha gunaa: (past attributes) and varthamaana gunaa: (present attributes)'. The knowledge that takes place is: "bootha varthamaana guna rahitha kevala vyakthi maathra jnaanam".

Thus, in the 'equation statements', both past and present attributes are mutually cancelled.

The difference between the saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyani and the 'equation statements' should thus be clearly understood. In the sloka, "prapanna parijaathaaya thothra vetraika paanaye jnaamudhraaya Krishnaaya Geethaamruthaduhe nama:", each word is cumulatively adding an attribute to Krishna and therefore, at the end of the sloka, one gets to know a Krishna, who has got added attributes. In contrast, in the sentence, "Soyam Devadattha:" the 'many words' have not added any attribute; on the other hand, the word 'sa:' and the word 'ayam' have cancelled the attributes of each other and the listener gets vyakthi maathra bodha: | And, that vaakyam is called vyakthi maathra bodhaka vaakyam.

Thus, we have got certain unique sentences.

There is another sentence also, on which a very big analysis is done in Vedhaanthaa: "Prakrushta prakaasa: Chandra:" | Pages and pages have been written on this vaakyaa. For Brahma Soothra Chathussoothri, there is a Teeka, known as 'Poornaanandeeya Teeka'; and there is a text known as 'samkshepa saareerakaad', authored by Sarvangyaathmendra Sarwawathi. Both these, viz., 'Poornaanandeeya Teeka' and 'samkshepa saareerakaad' discuss this sentence, in detail.

The two sentences 'Soyam Devadhatta:' and 'Prakrushta Prakaasa: Chandra:' are examples of rare 'equation sentences', where the sentence can reveal an entity without attributes.

And, how do they reveal an entity without attributes? As explained earlier, through an ingenious method, by which, one word reveals one set of attributes and a second word reveals another set of attributes, but, both mutually cancel each other. In a similar manner, in the mahaa vaakyam, 'thathvamasi', the word 'thath' reveals a Paramaathmaa, with one set of attributes; the word 'thvam' reveals the jeevaathmaa, with another set of attributes; the word 'as' joins them; and, at the time of the joining, the seeker 'grasps' an 'eka aathmaa', without any attribute. The example of the incident involving Swami Omkaaraananda, given earlier, may be recalled. The 'external' past Swami had past attributes; the 'external' present Swami has present attributes; but, the 'grasped' 'internal' Swami has no attributes.

Similarly, from the mahaa vaakyam, the intellect can 'grasp' an aathmaa, which does not have either thath padha gunaa: or thvam padha gunaa:; thvam padha gunaa: will cancel thath padha gunaa: and thath padha gunaa: will cancel thvam padha gunaa: | Contrasting attributes such as alpagnthvam and sarvagnthvam, alpasakthimathvam and sarvasakthimathvam etc., will all get stripped and the seeker can understand the fact: "aham nirvishesha nirguna chaithanyam asmi" - " 'I' am the eka aatjmaa,, without alpagnthvam and sarvagnthvam, alpasakthimathvam and sarvasakthimathvam etc.". | It is possible.

And, in order to establish this view, instead of citing the two sentences given as examples earlier, viz., "Soyam Devadhatta:" and "Prakrushta Prakaasa: Chandra:", Sureswaraachaarya is taking up yet another sentence: "Ghataakaasa: Mahaakaasa: asthi", meaning "Pot-space is identical with the total space".

This sentence has got many words. Initially it reveals two entities, 'ghataakaasa' and 'mahaakaasaad' and by using the verb 'asthi', the sentence declares that, both of them are identical. When, thus, both of them are declared identical or equal, the listener 'grasps' an aakaasa: / What type of aakaasa is 'grasped' by the intellect? 'Ghataaakaasa' has got 'alpathva guna:', while mahaakaasaa has got 'mahathva guna:', two contradicting attributes. And, when the equation is done, if the listener is retaining any one of the gunaas, alpathvam or mahathvam, the equation will not tally, because they are contradictory to each other and neither of them can apply to both mahaakaasaa and ghataaakaasaa. Therefore, the 'grasped' aakaasaa cannot have either alpathva guna: or mahathva guna: / Thus, the sentence is presented in such a way that both attributes – 'sundha upasundha nyaayena' – are mutually knocked off. And, this unique sentence is able to reveal an aakaasaa, which is free from all these attributes – ghataaakaasasya alpathvam and mahaakaasasya mahathvam etc.

"In a similar manner", Sureswaraachaaryaa says "the mahaa vaakyam, 'thathvamas' can reveal the fact: 'aham nirvishesham Brahma asmi". And, is this saakshaathkaaraa or not? The Aachaaryaa asserts: "This understanding is saakshaathkaara, the other term for saakshaathkaara being aparoksha jnaanam. This is the 'right understanding' / 'knowledge' / 'Realization'. No other separate meditation or mystical experience is required, because, when I know 'I' am nirvishesham Brahman, I am liberated".

The Aachaaryaa further implies: "If a seeker says: 'I have understood 'I' am nirvishesha Brahman; but, I am waiting for liberation', his statement is wrong. Such a situation is not possible. Sraavana eva saakshaathkaara: sambhavathi | Do not condemn the knowledge attained through sravanam as 'book-knowledge'. You do not have book knowledge alone; you have got 'real knowledge' only. Therefore, come to 'binary' format, immediately after sravanam / vicharaa; do not wait or look for a mystical experience to change the format from 'triangular' to 'binary'".

Getting back to the verse:

- घट इतर खयोइव : - As in the case of 'ghataaakaasaa – mahaakaasaa' equation,

'Kham' means 'aakaasam'; 'ghata:' means 'pot'; 'ithara:' means 'the other one' and, in this context, implies 'mahaa'. The word 'kham' should be joined with both 'ghata' and 'ithara'; 'ghata kham' means 'ghataaakaasaa'; 'ithara kham' means 'mahaakaasaa'. When the two are referred to together, in shashti dvivachanam, it becomes 'ghata ithara khayo :' and 'Ghata ithara khayo: iva' conveys the meaning 'Like the equation of ghataaakaasa- mahaakaasaa pair'.

- सामानाधिकरण्यादे: - the usage of saamaandhikaranyam etc., (in the mahaa vaakya),

Here, by using the word 'saamaandhikaranyaadhe:', Sureswaraachaaryaa wants the students to remember the three sambhandhaas, which he had already talked about, in verse no.3 of the current chapter.

In other words, 'saamaandhikaranyaadhe:' means 'thridha sambhandhasya' – 'for the threefold relationship, viz., saamanaadhikaranyam, viseshana-viseshyathaa and lakshya-lakshana sambhandha:' |

- तत्त्वमर्थयोः - for the thath padhaartha and thvam padhaartha,
- व्यावृत्तेः - since the attributes are mutually cancelled,

'Vyavrutthe:' actually means 'visesha vyaavrutthe:' (the word 'visesha' is to be supplied).

And, 'Thaththvamarthayo: (visesha) vyaavrutthe:' means 'since the attributes of thath padhaartha paramaathmaa and thvam padhaartha jeevaathmaa, which are contradictory attributes, get mutually cancelled' / 'because of the mutual nullification of the attributes of jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa.

It may be recollected again, that, in the sloka, 'prapanna paarijaathaaya thothra vethraika paanaye jnaana mudhraaya Krishnaaya Geethamruthaduhe nama:', the attributes do not cancel each other. On the other hand, they get added. Whereas, in the sentence 'soyam devadhattha:', the attributes do not get added; but, they cancel each other. That's why 'lakshya-lakshana-sambhanda:' is introduced after the cancellation of attributes.

- अवाक्यार्थसाक्षात् स्यात् : - a non-sentential / non relational meaning is grasped directly.

What is that non-relational meaning? Ans: 'Nirvisham chaithanyam / aathma'.

This nirvishesha aathmaa cannot be called jeeva-aathmaa, because if the adjective 'jeeva' is added, one set of attributes will have to be accepted; in the same manner, addition of the adjective 'parama' will result in acceptance of another set of attributes.

Therefore, what the seeker grasps from the mahaa vaakyaa is 'paramathva jeevathva rahitha nirvishesha advaita sajaatheeya vijaatheeya svagatha bedha rahitha aathmaa'; and, this jnaanam is called avaakyartha:, in this verse.

The use of the word 'saakshaath' emphasizes that the knowledge can be grasped 'directly', at the time of sravanam itself.

This is exactly like 'grasping' the Swamiji, in the incident involving Swami Omkaaraanandaa, quoted earlier. When it was pointed out that, 'that Swamiji is this Swamiji', a 'mysterious' Swamiji was 'grasped' and, at the time of 'grasping' the Swamiji did not have past or present physical features. That recognition is called 'vyakthi maathra jnaanam'.

In the same manner, 'chaithnya maathra jnaanam syaadeva' - 'chaithaya maathra jnaanam is definitely possible'.

The fact that should encourage the student is that many seekers have gained that knowledge. If asked, Sureswaraachaarya will answer confidently: 'Yes, I have understood'. So many have gathered this knowledge; and in Kenopanishad the student straightaway said: "Naaham manye suvedheti, no na vedhethi vedha cha/ yo nasthadvedha thath vedha, no na vedhethi vedha cha/" (II. 2) "I do not think that I know Brahman well. Not that I do not know Brahman. I know and I do not know. Among us, the one who knows that statement 'Not that I don't know. I know and I don't know' knows that Brahman".

And, therefore, it (chaithnaya maathra jnaanam) is possible (from mere mahaa vaakya sravanam / vichaaraa).

128. Chapter III, Verse 9 to 11 (31-01-2009)

In this portion (verse 9 – Ch. III), Sureswaraacharya is referring to a debate, which is there, between two groups of advaitins themselves.

One group of advaitins claim: "Sravanam gives only secondary 'book-knowledge'. Only through subsequent meditation and samaadhi, 'direct knowledge' / 'direct experience' / saakshaathkaaraa / 'realization' / 'liberating knowledge' is possible".

Sureswaraacharya does not accept this theory; he says: "Mahaa vaakyam itself has the capacity to give advaita jnaanam / aparoksha jnaanam. If a person wants meditation to prepare the mind, it is wonderful; meditation can be utilized for removing obstacles; but, even if one practices meditation and samaadhi for removal of obstacles, one has to come to mahaavaakyam alone for 'liberating knowledge', since mahaa vaakyam is the only source of aparoksha jnaanam."

This debate is the Aacharya's topic now, in these portions.

As already pointed out, Sureswaraacharya had referred to this poorva pakshaa earlier also, in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 67, of Chapter I. The relevant portion is "apare thu bhroovathe vedhaanthavaakya janitham 'aham brahmethi' vijnaanam samsargaathmakavaath aathmavasthu yaathaathmya avaghaahyeva na bhavati | Kim tharhi | Ethadeva Gangaasrothovath sathatham abhyastha: anyadeva avaakyaarthaathmakam vijnaanaantharam uthpadhyathe | Thadeva asesha ajnaana thimirothsaari ithi |" - "Others, again, say : 'The knowledge of the form 'I am Brahma' signifies a complex whole of associated parts and therefore does not constitute a correct apprehension of the Self at all. What then ? In the mind of an aspirant, who practices continuously this knowledge itself, like the flow of the Ganga, a new type of knowledge arises, which is an integral apprehension transcending verbal cognition. It is this new knowledge alone that expels all darkness of ignorance' ".

Sureswaraacharya refutes the poorva pakshin, in this sloka (verse 9 – Chapter III), completed in the earlier session. The Aacharya says: "In an 'equation sentence' – 'aiykya vakyam', - there can be mutual cancellation of the attributes of two introduced objects and ultimately one attributeless entity can be revealed through the equation. In the mahaa vaakyaas, when jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa are equated, one aathmaa, which is free from the jeevathvam attributes , as well as the paramathvam attributes, is revealed. An attributeless, non-dual aathmaa can be revealed through a sentence. Even though a sentence has many words, ultimately many words can reveal the non-dual reality".

Examples of such sentences in Vedhaanthea, viz., (i) Soyam Devadhattha: (ii) Prakrushta prakaasa: Chandra: and (iii) ghataakaasa: mahaakaasa: asthi etc., were discussed earlier.

Not only in Vedhaanthea, but, in other areas also, this view, viz., "In an 'equation sentence' - 'aiykya vaakyam' - , there can be mutual cancellation of the attributes of the introduced objects and ultimately one attributeless entity can be revealed through the equation" is equally true.

'Equation' need not be there when two things are evidently the same and 'equation' cannot be there, when two things are basically and evidently different. For instance, in Arithmetic, nobody will say " $8 = 8$ ", since it is an obvious fact; nobody will say " $8 = 9$ " also, because the two numerals are obviously different.

Then, when is an 'equation' done or necessary? Ans : "When two things are superficially different but essentially the same, 'equation' becomes necessary".

To understand this better, again an example from Arithmetic may be considered: " $5 + 3 = 9 - 1$ " is an 'equation'. The numbers on the left side are different from the numbers on the right side; the arithmetical signs on the two sides also are different. There is a 'plus' sign (+) on the left side; and, a 'minus' sign (-) on the right side. Thus, one's eyes are visually perceiving differences. But, behind the visible differences, one discerns the invisible number '8'. Having discerned the invisible '8' from the left side, one removes / eliminates the visible (5 + 3), which is only an 'incidental' attribute of the number '8'. Similarly, from the right side, the intellect again discerns the invisible '8', rejecting the visible (9-1), which is also only an incidental attribute of 8. Thus, the visible attributes on both sides are eliminated and the invisible number '8' (not written in the equation) is 'grasped' on either side. Thus, in the first stage, there are two '8's ; on the left hand side, there is an '8' ; on the right hand side also there is an '8'. In the middle, there is an 'equation'. Then, by seeing the 'equation', one combines both the invisible '8's and removes the equation sign also. Thus, the numbers 5, 3, 9 and 1 and the signs '+', '-' and '=' are all eliminated ; all plurality disappears. What is left out is only one akanda aksharam - the number '8'.

In the same manner, in the mahaa vaakyam 'thathvamasI, jeevathvam' attributes are removed from 'thvam' and paramathvam attributes are removed from 'thatth' and one attributeless, non-dual Brahman or aathmaa alone remains. This is called avaakyarthha: - non-sentential / non-relational meaning.

This may give rise to another doubt : "If all the jeevaas' attributes and all the Paramaathmaa's attributes are removed, there is nothing left behind".

This is the typical doubt raised by the visishtaadvathin, because, he does not accept a nirguna vasthu. According to him, "Since there can be no nirguna vasthu, if all the attributes are removed, there can be nothing".

To this doubt, Swami Vidhyaaranyaa gives a nice answer, through an example, in his treatise, Panchadasee. He asks: "If you go through a room, where everything including air, has been removed, and if a question is asked of you 'What is there in the room?' your normal answer will be 'there is nothing' ". Swami Vidhyaaranyaa proceeds : "If you say 'there is nothing', what is the meaning of that word 'nothing'?" And, points out: "Even though you use the word 'nothing', that word means only 'space' or 'pure aakaasaa' – an aakaasaa, from which everything that is removable has been removed. When everything removable has been removed, what remains is 'objectless aakaasaa', which alone you are referring to as 'nothing'. And, 'pure aakaasaa is a positive entity. It is not abhaava roopam; but, is a bhaava roopal positive / existent entity, which is, in fact, one of the pancha mahaa boothaas. The subtlest matter is aakaasaa and you have referred to that 'pure aakaasaa' as 'nothing'. Just as in this worldly context, 'nothing' actually means 'pure aakaasaa', which is a positive entity, in mahaa vaakyaa, that 'nothing'(after elimination of jeevathva and paramathva attributes) actually would mean 'Pure Existence- Consciousness, which is also a bhaava roopa padhaartha / an entity".

Vedhaantha , further, exhorts the seeker : " Therefore, you have to 'know' this 'nothing' . That 'nothing' is the ultimate reality, knowing which, you are going to get liberated. The 'nothing', in this context, means 'Pure Existence-Consciousness', called aathmaa, which is free from jeevathva attributes and paramathva attributes.

"And, this 'Pure Existence-Consciousness', can be revealed through mahaavaakyam. When? During sravanam itself, when both jeevathva attributes and paramathva attributes get mutually cancelled. For that purpose, you need not sit in nirvikalpaka samaadhi. If, during the course of your saadhanaas, you enjoy the state of samaadhi, we do not ban it. But, samaadhi or meditation is not required / not essential for he advaita jnaanam- aham brahma asmi."

This is what is said, by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in the sloka (verse 9 – Chapter III).

The anvayaa of the sloka is tricky and is given below:

- घटेतरखयो :इव सामानाधिकरण्यादे) :तत्त्वमर्थयो :विरुद्धाम्श (व्यावृत्ते :न :अवाक्यार्थ :साक्षात् स्यात्।

The term 'vridhaamsa' meaning 'contradictory attributes', is supplied. 'Avaakyārtha.' means 'aparoksha jñānam'. The term 'saakshaath' means 'directly possible'. When? During sravanam itself.

This theory is called 'saabhda aparoksha vaadha.' which is a teaching, which claims "Aparoksha jñānam can be gained during sravanam itself and not in meditation or samaadhi." | The word 'Na.' means 'asmaakam pakshhe' / 'according to our theory, viz., saabhda aparoksha vaadha.'

'Saakshaannasthaththvamarthayo.' should be split as 'saakshaath + na: + thaththvamarthayo;', the term 'thaththvamarthayo.' itself being a compound word.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 10:

कुतोऽवाक्यार्थोऽवसीयत इति चेत्तत्रप्रतिपत्त्यर्थं विशेषणविशेष्ययोः सामर्थ्योक्तिः । :

How is the non-verbal import understood? To answer this, the efficacy of subject-predicate relation is explained.

Here Sureswaraachaaryaa is referring to an idea given in the 2nd verse of this chapter; he is repeating that idea to go further on it. And, that idea is: "mutual cancellation of the contradictory attributes". The Aachaaryaa wants to explain here as to 'which cancels which'. He says:

- "कुत" अवसीयते :अवाक्यार्थः - "How is the 'non-sentential' meaning arrived at?" / "How do you arrive at the attributeless Consciousness?"

'Avaakyārtha.' is an unique expression in Naishkarmya Siddhi. The literal translation of the expression is 'non-sentential meaning', which, the Aachaaryaa uses, to give the meaning 'the attributeless Consciousness'. Therefore, the question "Kutha: vaakyārtha: avaseeyathe" is to be interpreted as "How do you arrive at the attributeless Consciousness?"

'Avaseeyathe' is the verb, in passive voice, meaning 'is arrived at'.

While the poorva pakshi group lead by Aachaaryaa Vaachaspathi Misra, holds that the attributeless Consciousness cannot be understood during sravanam and that, only during nirvikalpa samaadhi it can be understood, Sureswaraachaarya firmly says "No, during sravanam itself, it can be understood".

If asked, 'how is it 'grasped'? – 'kutha: avaseeyathe?':

- इति चेत् - If such a question is raised,
- तत्प्रतिपत्त्यर्थ - to answer that question,
- विशेषण विशेष्ययोःसामर्थ्य उक्ति : - the extraordinary function of the viseshanam and viseshyam, is being explained.

'Saamarthyam' means 'extraordinary function'; 'ukthi:' means 'explanation'.

This is the second stage of the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

The three stages of the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa have been dealt with, earlier. 'Saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa' is the first stage; 'viseshana-viseshya bhaava sambhandhaa' is the second stage. 'Lakshya-lakshana sambhandhaa' is the third stage.

Here, Sureswaraacharya is dwelling upon the 2nd stage, 'viseshana viseshya bhaava sambhandhaa'. When the seeker listens to the 'jeevaathma - Paramaathma-eikyam', initially, 'jeevaathma' becomes an adjective of 'Paramaathma' and later, 'Paramaathma' becomes an adjective of 'jeevaathma'. This is the direct / primary meaning that comes out of the 'eikyam'. 'Jeevaathma' status is given to 'Paramaathma' and 'Paramaathma' status is given to 'jeevaathma'. When 'jeevaathma' status is given to 'Paramaathma', 'jeevaathma' becomes 'viseshanam' and 'Paramaathma' becomes 'viseshyam'; when 'Paramaathma' status is given to 'jeevaathma', 'Paramaathma' becomes 'viseshanam' and 'jeevaathma' becomes 'viseshyam'. Thus, the statuses are mutually exchanged. And, when the statuses are mutually exchanged, some of the attributes will have to be 'knocked off'.

And, what are those 'knocked-off' attributes?

Sureswaraacharya is about to explain the functions of the viseshanams - how they 'knock off' the contradictory attributes. That "knock-off" power to eliminate" is referred to as 'saamarthyam', in this context, by the Aacharya. The word 'ukthi:' means 'is being described / explained'.

Chapter III: Verse 10 -

निर्दुःखित्वं त्वमर्थस्य तदर्थेन विशेषणात् ।

प्रत्यक्ता च तदर्थस्य त्वंपदेनास्य संनिधे ॥ १० ॥ :

The meaning of 'Thou' is construed as free from sorrow owing to the predication of the meaning of 'That'. The meaning of 'That' receives the sense of immediacy, owing to the syntactical apposition to 'Thou'.

As was mentioned earlier, this is almost the repetition of the 2nd verse of this 3rd chapter and with the intention of progressing further on the same topic, the Aachaaryaa is repeating the idea.

Initially 'jeevaathmaa' is serving as the noun – i.e. the viseshyam and 'Paramaathmaa' comes as the adjective / the viseshanam. In other words, the 'Paramaathmaa' status as a viseshanam, joins the 'jeevaathmaa'. This is similar to saying 'blue lotus', where, the 'blueness' as viseshanam, is joining the substance / noun, the lotus. Similarly, the 'jeevaathmaa', at the time of the sravanam of the mahaavaakyam, is approached by 'Paramaathmaa' as the viseshanam and the 'Paramaathmaa' status joins the 'jeevaathmaa'.

Of course, the words 'Paramaathmaa' and 'jeevaathmaa' are not used in the mahaavaakyam 'thaththvamsi'. 'Paramaathmaa' is referred to by the word 'thath', and the 'jeevaathmaa' by the word 'thvam'.

When that 'thath' word is approaching 'thvam', the jeevaathmaa, the most important feature of 'thath' should join the jeevaathmaa and 'knock off' something else.

What is the most important status / feature of 'Paramaathmaa', the 'thath' padham? The Bhruguvalli of the Thaitheeya Upanishad (Manthra 6) answers this:

"Aanandho brahmethi vyajaanaath" – "(Sage Bhrugu) concluded that aanandhaa is Brahman".

During the process of sravanam itself, the 'Original Aanandhaa', – not reflected aanandhaa – which is the intrinsic attribute / essential nature of Brahman, joins 'me', the jeevaathmaa and that powerful 'sathya aanandhaa' must knock off the contradictory attribute 'dhu:kham' or misery, from 'me', the jeevaathmaa. And, after taking away from 'me' - the Aathmaa -, the 'dhu:kham' attribute must be handed over / transferred to anaathmaa – either sthoola sareeram or sookshma sareeram or kaarana sareeram.

The seeker (on sravanam) should move to the 'Binary format', handing over 'dhu:kham' as an attribute of the mithyaa anaathmaa. 'Binary format' means 'Clasp Reduction' (i.e. reduction of 'claiming ownership and controllership' and of 'special prayers'), which means : "dhu:kham should be handed over to anaathmaa".

And, what about 'I'? Ans: 'I' am only the Witness of the dhu:kam of anaathmaa ; 'I', myself, am ever the "Aanandha aathmaa. Brahma puchchaam prathishta" – "Aanandhaa is the Self. Brahman is the tail, which is the support" , as the Brahma Valli of Thaithreeya Upanishad (manthraa 5) declares confidently.

Thus, the seeker should never say thereafter (i.e. after mahaa vaakyam sravanam) " I am miserable", because, 'misery' has been knocked off from 'me' ; 'I' am no more in 'triangular' format, praying to God to remove 'my' sorrow, since, 'I' have no sorrow at all, to be removed from 'me'.

This is what Sureswaraacharya says here (in this verse):

- तदर्थेन विशेषणात् - Because of the attribute provided by the adjective 'Paramaathmaa' (the meaning of the word 'thath'),

To elaborate: "Because of the qualification of jeevaathmaa with Paramaathmaa status, which is provided by the word thath, occurring in the mahaa vaakyam, in saamaanaadhikaranyam with thvam padha".

What is 'knocked off', because of this?

- निर्दुःखित्वं - the dhu:khee status is knocked off,
- त्वमर्थस्य - for the jeevaathmaa (which is the meaning of thvam),

After listening to the mahaa vaakyam, the seeker should never say "I am sorrowful/ I am miserable / I am a samsaari etc." This attitude is called the 'binary format'. When does this happen? Ans: It happens when 'Paramaathmaa' status is viseshanam and 'jeevaathmaa' is the viseshyam.

Thereafter, the process is reversed. 'Paramaathmaa' becomes viseshyam and 'jeevaathmaa' status becomes viseshanam.

When 'jeevaathmaa' becomes the adjective of 'Paramaathmaa', through "joining the jeevaathmaa status by 'Paramaathmaa' " some attributes of 'Paramaathmaa' have to be 'knocked off'. According to Advaita Vedhaanthaa, 'Paramaathmaa', though, in reality, is free of any attribute, is wrongly accorded a few unwanted attributes, which make 'me' a samsaari.

What are those unwanted attributes? Ans: 'Paramaathmaa' is a 'remote' 'object' to be 'reached'.

We have given these attributes to 'Paramaathmaa', viz., that, (i) "'Paramaathmaa' is an object different from 'me' ; (ii) 'Paramaathmaa' is 'remote', located in Vaikuntam/ Kailaasam ; (iii) I have to go through svarga vaasal, travel through sukhla gathi and, after long travel, I have to 'reach' 'Paramaathmaa'.

'Remoteness' is, thus, one unwanted status; 'object'ness', namely, that the 'Paramaathmaa' is an 'object' other than 'me' , is another unwanted status. 'Goal'ness", resulting from the misconceived belief, that one has to 'travel and 'reach' 'Paramaathmaa' is the third unwanted status. These three are incidental statuses given to 'Paramaathmaa', because of ignorance.

The Upanishads exclaim: "What a blunder you are committing?"

Chaandoghya Upanishad declares: 'Eithaadhmyam idhagum sarvam thathsathyam sa aathmaa thaththvamasī' – "All this has got That as the Self. That is the Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That". The Upanishad does not say: " It (Paramaathmaa) is inside you"; nor does it say "It (Pramaathmaa) is near you". There is no preposition in this mahaa vaakyam. Paramaathmaa is not inside you as antharyaami ; Paramaathmaa is not proximate to you. The Upanishad declares "Paramaathmaa is you" – "thaththvamasī".

If the statement is made only once, the student may take it as casual statement. It is repeated nine times, to stress "Drop the idea that Paramaathmaa is your goal".

When the 'Paramaathmaa' becomes a 'viseshyam', with jeevaathmaa status as a viseshanam, it 'knocks off' these three wrong attributes viz., "That Paramaathmaa is a goal; that 'Paramaathmaa' is remote ; and that Paramaathmaa is an object".

The seeker 'knocks off' all these attributes and claims " 'I' am 'Paramaathmaa' ; 'I' am aanandhaa; 'I' am muktha: ; mokshaa is not a goal for me. Hereafter, I shall never look upon 'my'self as a saadhakaa or a mumukshu".

Saadhakathva nivritthi should take place. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- त्वम्पदेन अस्य संनिधे: - Because of the qualification of 'jeevaathmaa' status (being the meaning of 'thvam padhaa')

- तदर्थस्य - for the 'Paramaathmaa' (meant by the word 'thath'),

'Jeevaathmaa' status becomes viseshanam and 'Paramaathmaa' becomes viseshyam. Because of this, viz., 'the jeevaathmaa status attribute joining Paramaathmaa', at once, the three attributes are 'knocked off'.

- प्रत्यक्ता च - 'selfhood' / intimacy / 'one'ness / eykyam takes place.

'Prathyakthaad' literally means 'inwardness'. Earlier, i.e., before maahaa vaakya sravanam, the seeker was looking up, appealing to Bhaghavaan: "I am facing a number of unsolvable problems ; therefore, take me to You". In reality, there is no question of Bhaghavaan 'taking' the seeker with Him. Therefore, the Upanishads exhort: "Do not look outwards". The Katopanishad points out: "Kaschith dheera: prathyagaathmaanam aikshath aavrutthachakshu: amrithathvam icchar" - "Desiring immortality, a rare discriminative one turns away his eyes and sees the inner Self" (II.1.1).

'Prathyakthaad' indicates that 'Paramaathmaa' "becomes" 'me'.

Thus, the 'remoteness' of 'Paramaathmaa' is removed; samsaaraa of jeevaathmaa is also removed. And, the non-remote, asamsaari 'I' is alone left behind.

And, how many 'I's? Ans: Advaitam (only one 'I').

Sureswaraachaaryaa expresses his surprise that there should be any confusion at all, on this fact.

Of course, an important problem is to be accepted / granted. When in the worldly example described earlier, the answer 'nothing' (to the question as to what was there in an empty room) actually means 'space', 'understanding' the space as a positive substance requires sookshma buddhi – a sharp intellect.

Space is a non-tangible, non-visible, formless, colourless, soundless and an extremely subtle entity. But, when the answer 'nothing' is made, that 'nothing' cannot be accepted in its literal sense. The listener's mind should be sensitized by him, to recognize that 'space', which is called 'nothing', in this context .

"Similarly" the Vedhaanthin says "in the Vedhaanthic context also, the 'nothing' is something which is called pure, objectless, attributeless Existence - Consciousness". Comprehension of the space, when it is called 'nothing' (in the worldly example) requires time and effort on the part of the listener. Similarly comprehension of 'Pure Existence-Consciousness' will also require a sharp intellect. "Dhrusyathe thu agriyaa buddhya" - "It is understood by a sharp intellect" is an Upanishadic quotation.

"Therefore", the Aachaaryaa appeals "Do not reject my teaching as 'meaningless' and give up Vedhaantha Vichaaraa. Kindly be with me for some more time. You will understand that 'nothing' as 'something' and you will understand, that, in fact, that something is the 'only thing'. That 'thing' is 'I', Brahman, and it is worth knowing because that is mokshaa ; that, it (Brahman) is 'my'self.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 11 – Chapter III:

उक्तं सामानाधिकरण्यं विशेषणविशेष्यभावश्च संक्षेपतोऽथ लक्ष्यलक्षणव्याख्यानायाह।

Thus the co-ordination of terms and the subject-predicate relation of their meanings have been stated briefly. In interpretation of the indicator-indicated relation, the following is said:

Here, Sureswraachaaryaa says "Of these three stages of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, I have explained the two stages saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa and viseshana-viseshya sambhandhaa. Now, I want to dwell on the lakshana-lakshya-sambhandhaa. I want to explain as to how it works".

As may be recollected, these three stages were mentioned in verse no. 3. Because of which, verse no. 3 is considered as soothra sloka:, while all these subsequent verses are considered vyaakyaana sloka: | That soothra sloka is considered to be extremely important. A number of Vedhaantic Aachaaryas have quoted the verse, in their expositions.

These three stages, Saamaadhikaranya sambhandhaa, viseshana-viseshya sambhandhaa and lakshana-lakshya sambhaandhaa should be carefully remembered by a serious student of Vedhaantha. These were more elaborately discussed, with specific emphasis on how they function, in Vedhaantha Saaraah classes, conducted earlier, with a number of examples also.

- सामानाधिकरण्यं - The relationship between the words, called saamaanadhikaranyam,
- विशेषणविशेष्यभावश्च - and also the relationship obtaining between the meanings of the words, in the form of adjective and substance / attribute and noun, called viseshana-viseshya bhaava:

'Noun-adjective' relationships is between words. 'Substance-attribute' relationship is between the meanings of the words.

- उक्तं - have been stated by me,
- संक्षेपतः - briefly.
- अथ – Hereafter,
- लक्ष्य लक्षण व्याख्यानाय - for the elucidation / commentary upon the lakshya-lakshana sambhandhaa,
- आह - the following is said.

Lakshya-lakshana sambhandhaa is the relationship between lakshyam and lakshanam / the 'indicated' and the 'indicator' / the lakshyaartha and vaachyaartha / the secondary and primary meanings of a word.

Going back to the example from arithmetic viz., the equation given earlier, ($5 + 3 = 9 - 1$), the numerals '5' and '3' and the symbol '+' are the visible components on the left hand side of the equation, and '8' is the non-visible component.

Similarly, '9 - 1' is the visible component on the right hand side and '8' is the invisible component.

The 'visible component' ($5 + 3$) or ($9 - 1$) is the 'vaachyaartha'. What is the lakshyaartha of '5 + 3' or '9-1'? It is the invisible, unwritten '8'.

And, what is the relationship between the visible '5 + 3' and '8' or '9-1' and the invisible '8'? It is lakshana lakshya sambhandhaa.

The mathematics teacher does not want his student to remain on the visible components. He desires, that, even as the student's eyes perceive the visible components ($5 + 3$) or ($9 - 1$), his mind or his 'understanding' should not stay put with the visible components alone, but grasp the invisible, unwritten '8'.

Similarly, there is the visible jeevaathmaa (thvam), with inferior attributes and visible 'Paramaathma' (that) with superior attributes; a diligent seeker should not stop with these two vaachyaarthaas. With the guidance of the mahaa vaakyam, he should proceed to the non-visible, attributeless, eka aathmaa, which is the lakshyaartha. This is the lakshya-lakshana sambhandhaa between lakshyaartha and vaachyaartha.

The Aachaaryaa says:

Aaha – I am going to comment (upon the relationship between vaachyaarthaa and lakshyaarthaa).

Why do we require an elaboration? Ans: Because, there is a law of language, which, Sureswaraachaarya wants to apply here; since, otherwise, the poorva pakshins, who are experts in language and grammar analysis, may raise many objections.

Since Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to firmly establish the Vedhaanthic views, he desires to foresee and introduce all possible objections and to answer them suitably. Such a detailed study may not be required for an ordinary student of Vedhaantha; but, is a 'must' for advanced students.

The vaachyaartham and lakshyaartham of any word, must have some connection or other; from vaachyaartham, one can never understand an unconnected lakshyaartham. This fact was studied in an earlier context also, at the time of discussing the jahathi lakshanaa, the ajahathi lakshanaa and the bhaagathyaaga lakshanaa.

A simple worldly example will make this clearer. If it is said "There is a concert to-day, by Maharajapuram", how is the statement to be understood? 'Maharajapuram' is the name of a place. Obviously, the place cannot give a concert. So, the listener has to understand that a concert is to be given by someone connected with the place, Maharajapuram. In this example, the 'place' is the vaachyaartham; the listener should ignore the vaachyaartham, since, if the sentence is taken literally, it is meaningless. The listener has to understand the sentence as "There is a concert to-day given by someone connected to Maharajapuram", since only a person can give a concert; and, that 'someone' becomes the lakshyaartham of the word 'Maharajapuram'. Obviously, the listener cannot also understand the musician as a person totally unconnected with 'Maharajapuram'. The person has to be connected to the place 'Maharajapuram', either as a native or through some other well-known manner.

Thus, there is a law given in interpretation: "When you give up vaachyaarthaa and come to lakshyaarthaa, the vaachyaarthaa and lakshyaarthaa cannot be anything that you like. They are not subject to your whims and fancies. There must be relationship".

Here, in the mahaa vaakya vichaara, for the vaachyaarthaa jeevaathmaa, we are arriving at the lakshyaarthaa aathmaa, the attributeless One; and, similarly for the vaachyaarthaa Paramaathmaa also, endowed with anantha kalyaana guna ghanaas, we are arriving at the lakshyaarthaa – the attributeless aathmaa. This attributeless aathmaa, the lakshyaarthaa, should have connection with the vaachyaarthaa of jeevaathmaa and the vaachyaarthaa of Paramaathmaa.

(Just as a reminder: the word 'vaachyaartha' is used here to mean 'primary meaning' and the word 'lakshyaartha' to mean 'secondary meaning').

The 'secondary meaning' ('lakshyaartha') aathmaa, should be connected / related to the 'primary meaning' jeevaathmaa and also Paramaathmaa. Then alone, from the attributed ones, jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, we can go to the attributeless One.

The poorva pakshin raises an objection. He says: "You cannot arrive at aathmaa or Brahman as a laksyaartha at all". This objection is referred to, by Swami Vidhyaraanaya, in his prakaranam - Panchadasee, Ch. I., during his discussions on the mananam topic. The poorva pakshin says: "You cannot arrive at the Brahman, as lakshyaartha in the mahaa vaakyam; because, to arrive at a lakshyaartha, it should be connected to the vaachyaartha. But, you say that Brahman is asanghasvaroopam – 'relationless'. 'Relationsless' means 'no connection with anything'. How can a thing which has no connection, be revealed as lakshyaartham of either jeevaathma vaachyaartha or Paramaathma vaachyaartha? For either of them, Brahman cannot be said to be the lakshyaartha, because, the moment you say Brahman is laksyaartha, Brahman will have a connection. Once you say there is a connection, Brahman will no more be asanghaa. In the process, you will convert asangham Brahman into sasangham Brahman, having lakshya-lakshana sambhandha: | Therefore, lakshyaartha is not possible. If you still say it is possible, you will have to explain, as to how it is possible".

Sureswaraachaaryaa is answering this poorva pakshin in this sloka. He will point out "There is a peculiar relationship between Brahman, the adhishtaanam, and the saguna jeevaathmaa; and, similarly between the saguna Paramaathma and the nirguna Paramaathmaa. Once you understand that peculiar relationship, you can happily arrive at the lakshyaartha".

This is the discussion that follows.

129. Chapter III, Verse 11 to 13 (07-02-2009)

Chapter III: Verse 11 -

कूटस्थबोधप्रत्यक्त्वनिमित्तं सदात्मनः ।

बोद्धताहंतयोर्हेतुस्ताभ्यां तेनोपलक्ष्यते ॥ ११ ॥

The unchanging immediate awareness, that is self-existent, is the nature of the real Self. This is the cause of the mind's cognizing power and the immediacy that its ego-hood enjoys. Therefore, by virtue of this cognizing power and immediacy of the mind being causally dependent on the Self, the latter is indicated by them.

In these verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is explaining the soothra sloka, which was given as the third verse of this chapter, viz.

"Saamaanaadhikaranyam cha viseshana viseshyathaa |
Lakshya lakshana sambhandha: padhaarthaprathyagaathmanaam".

That soothra sloka is being explained here, in these portions.

That soothra sloka reveals the three stages of comprehending the mahaa vaakyam, viz., (1) Saamaanaadhikaranyam (2) Viseshana-viseshyathaa and (3) Lakshya lakshana sambhandhaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa's contention is: "If a person goes through these three stages, then aparoksha jnaanam is possible, at the time of sravanam itself. No separate exercise like meditation is required for gaining aparoksha jnaanam".

Of these three stages, the Aachaaryaa had explained the first two stages:

(1) the first stage, as in the form of saamaanaadhikaranyam, the words 'thath' and 'thvam' being in the same case, in the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi'.

(2) the second stage, as the consequent viseshana-viseshya bhaava sambhandhaa, where, 'thath', the Paramaathmaa is the viseshanam for 'thvam', the jeevaathmaa and, similarly 'thvam', the jeevaathmaa, is the viseshanam for 'thath', the Paramaathmaa, thus serving mutually as viseshana viseshyaani.

How is the student to understand this viseshana- viseshya sambhandhaa? Ans: When it is said that jeevaathmaa is the viseshanam of Paramaathmaa, it means the jeevaathmaa status qualifies the Paramaathmaa; in other words, the jeevaathmaa status is an attribute of Paramaathmaa. Similarly, when it is said Paramaathmaa is the viseshanam, the Paramaathmaa status qualifies the jeevaathmaa, i.e., the Paramaathmaa status is an attribute of jeevaathmaa. Thus, both statuses qualify both of them mutually. This is the viseshana - viseshya bhaava sambhandhaa.

Hereafter, the student has to go the lakshya-lakshana-bhaava sambhandhaa. Why should the study proceed to this third sambhandhaa? Ans: It is necessitated because, when the jeevaathmaa status is given to Paramaathmaa and also when the Paramaathmaa status is given to jeevaathmaa, there are contradictions; there are doubts arising in the intellect.

The first doubt is, since, sorrow or samsaarithvam is one of the statuses of jeevaathmaa – in fact, the main status - and, on the other hand, Paramaathmaa is known as nithya muktha: (ever free from samsaarithvam), how can the jeevaathmaa status qualify the Paramaathmaa? This seems to be one evident contradiction.

In the same manner, when the Paramaathmaa status qualifies jeevaathmaa, again there appears to be a contradiction; because, Paramaathmaa is always seen as something 'remote' in terms of space and time - especially as 'remote in time', because Paramaathmaa is defined as jagath kaaranam; and, kaaranam is always 'distanced' from 'kaaryam', in terms of time.

To explain: Since Paramaathmaa is considered jagath kaaranam, Paramaathmaa must have been there in existence, before the generation of creation. 'Kaaranam' is always 'past' and 'kaaryam' is always 'present'. How can the past Paramaathmaa, having 'past'ness as its status, qualify the jeevaathmaa, who has got 'present'ness (varthamaanathvam) as the current status? How can 'boothathvam' and 'varthamaanathvam' / 'kaaranathvam' and 'kaaryathvam' be equated? 'Kaarana Paramaathmaa status' cannot be there for 'kaarya jeevaathmaad'.

Thus, when both these statuses qualify each other, we are experiencing logical problems of mutually contradicting attributes. Therefore, we are forced to go to the third stage.

And, what do we do, in the third stage? Ans : We will 'knock off' from the jeevaathmaa, those attributes which are contradicting the Paramaathmaa status and we will 'knock off' from Paramaathmaa also, those attributes which contradict the jeevaathmaa status.

From Paramaathmaa, the 'remoteness' / 'remoteness' in terms of time must be removed. This would mean that 'kaaranathvam' should be removed, since, as long as one retains the 'kaaranam' status for Paramaathmaa, the 'remoteness' status will also remain. Similarly, from the jeevaathmaa, dhu:kithvam must be removed.

Thus, after knocking of the attributes, we should come to new secondary meanings for both the words jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa. The primary meanings of jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa should be changed to secondary meanings, in which, some of the attributes must be 'stripped off'.

This is done for both thvam padhaartha, the jeevaathmaa . and that padhaartha, the Paramaathmaa. The secondary meanings are called 'lakshyaarthaas'.

But, while travelling from 'vaachyaartha' to 'lakshyaartha', we should find the lakshya-lakshana sambhandha. In other words, the vaachyaartha and the lakshyaartha – the primary meaning and secondary meaning - should have some sambhandha / relationship.

This was explained in the earlier session with the example of the statement "Maharajapuram is giving a concert to-day, with Lalgudi and Kaaraikuddi as accompaniments". When this statement is made, people in the know of Carnatic music and musicians , will immediately recognize the names of the musicians from the places indicated. The musicians are the lakshyaarthaas and the places are the vaachyaarthaas, in this context. For this to happen, obviously the 'place' and the 'musician' should have some connection.

For instance, the name 'Maharajapuram' cannot be understood as 'Michael Jackson', since there is no connection / sambhandha / relationship between the place 'Maharajapuram' and the person 'Michael Jackson'. When 'Maharajapuram' is understood as 'Santhanam' , 'Lalgudi' as 'Jayaraman' and 'Kaaraikkudi' as 'Mani', 'Aasraya aasritha sambhandha / janya janaka sambhandha is there, between the places indicated and the musicians meant.

In the mahaa vaakya vichaara also, the student is expected to come from the vaachyaartha of 'that' and 'thvam', to the lakshyaartha, which lakshyaartha of both, is 'the pure aathmaa', without the limiting attributes. This is considered the third stage in the process of understanding the mahaa vaakyaa.

But, here, we meet with the following problem: "As explained earlier, to move from vaachyaartha to lakshyaartha, there has to be a sambhandha / relationship between the two. But, because aathmaa cannot have sambhandha with anything in creation, how can aathmaa be the lakshyaartha of anything ? How can aathmaa, the pure Consciousness, be arrived at, as lakshyaartha, since, if aathmaa has to become lakshyaartha, it should have connection with vaachyaartha, whatever the vaachyaartha is".

This is what the poorva pakshi also says : "Aathmaa being asangha svaroopaa., it cannot have sambhandha with any vaachyaartha in the Creation. Therefore, you cannot arrive at nirguna, nirvishesha, asangha aathmaa, through mahaa vaakyam".

This question alone is raised as the poorva pakshaa in Chapter I of Swami Vidhyaaranyaa's Panchadasee as : "savikalpasya lakshyathve lakshyasya syaadhavasthuthaa nirvikalpasya lakshyathvam na cha sambhaveeth"]

To counter this question, Sureswaraachaaryaa plans to talk about the sambhandhaa, in these portions.

Before actually entering the text, a broad, general explanation of the Aachaaryaa's approach will be helpful and is therefore, given first.

Sureswaraachaaryaa's arguments will be on the following lines: Aathmaa, the asangha nirvikaara chaithanyam, has got two essential features. One feature is, that, 'it is of the nature of Consciousness'. And, the other essential feature is that 'it is the innermost entity', which can be called 'Selfhood'. Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the word 'prathyakthvam'. 'Prathyakthvam' means 'inwardness' or 'intimacy'.

To explain 'prathyakthvam' : Compared to the external world, an individual is closer to his physical body; i.e. one's physical body is 'internal' / 'inward', compared to the external world; but, compared to one's body, one's mind is 'internal' / 'inward'; similarly, compared to one's mind, the Consciousness is more 'internal' / 'inward'. But, beyond this, it can never be claimed that something else is even more 'inward', compared to Consciousness. In other words, aathmaa is the ultimate innermost entity. Sureswaraachaaryaa, therefore, uses the word 'prathyakthvam', meaning inwardness / intimacy / real Selfhood, to describe this essential feature of aathmaa

And, aathmaa has got 'Consciousness' as its other essential feature. 'Kootastha bodha:' is the word used by the Aachaaryaa here, in this verse, to denote this. 'Kootastha bodha:' means 'changeless Consciousness'.

'Kootastha bodham' ('changeless Consciousness') and 'prathyakthvam' ('real Selfhood') are the two essential features of aathmaa.

And, it is this aathmaa, which the mahaavaakyam wants to reveal through the word 'thvam' i.e., when sruthi says 'thvam', sruthi wants to reveal this aathmaa, which has got 'real Selfhood' and 'changeless Consciousness' as its nature. But, the Upanishad does not / is not able to, really and directly reveal this aathmaa. Therefore, it reveals the mind first as the vaachyaartyhaa / the primary meaning of the word 'thvam'.

And, what type of mind? Ans: The mind which also has got two features.

What are the two features?

Ans : One feature / attribute is 'relative interior'ness', when compared to the external world and physical body. This is not 'absolute interior'ness', which only aathmaa has, but relative interior'ness, which may be termed as 'pseudo-selfhood'. This is called the 'ego' or 'ahamkaaraa'; expressing the same idea in the inverse manner, 'ego' or 'ahamkaaraa' is nothing but the mind, which enjoys 'pseudo selfhood' or 'relative interior'ness'. In common parlance, whenever anybody uses the word 'I', he / she is referring to this pseudo self / the mind only and not to the absolute Self, which is aathmaa. In statements such as "I am disturbed", the mind alone is being referred to, by the word 'I'. Even in religious beliefs such as "I am going to travel after death" or prayers such as "I do not want punar janmaa" etc., the word 'I' refers to the mind alone. Ironically, even after coming to Vedhanthaa, if and when a Vedhaanthic student says "I want to escape the world, never to come back again", the student obviously means the mind alone, referring to it, as 'I'. All these show that the mind has got 'pseudo selfhood' and 'relative interior'ness.

In contrast, the aathmaa has got 'absolute interior'ness' and 'real selfhood'.

The second attribute of mind: Earlier it was pointed out, that, the second feature of aathmaa / real nature is 'kootastha bodha', meaning 'changeless Consciousness'. In contrast, the mind has got 'changing Consciousness' as its second attribute. Aathma has got 'changeless Consciousness' as its nature and the mind has got 'changing Consciousness' as its attribute. 'Changing Consciousness' means 'chidhaabhaasad / reflected Consciousness.

Thus, the mind also has got two attributes, 'pseudo selfhood' and 'changing Consciousness', while aathmaa has 'absolute Selfhood' and 'changeless Consciousness' as its features. The Upanishad, in the first stage, reveals the 'pseudo self' with 'changing Consciousness', as the primary meaning of 'thvam'; i.e., through the word 'thvam', the Upanishad is revealing the mind which is the 'pseudo self', endowed with 'changing Consciousness' as its attribute.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, in the mahaa vaakyam, the mind is only the vaachyaartham of 'thvam' and aathmaa is the lakshyaartham and, that, from the vaachyaartham, the student should go to the aathmaa, which is the 'real Self', with the 'changeless Consciousness' as its nature.

Thus, the travel has to be from the 'pseudo-self' to 'real Self' / from 'changing Consciousness' to 'changeless Consciousness' / from 'ahamkaaraa' to 'saakshi' / from 'chidhaabhaasaa' to 'chith'.

But, if, thus, mind / the ahamkaara is the vaachyaartha and aathmaa / the saakshi, is the lakshyaartha, there must be some sambhandhaa between the mind and the aathmaa. What is that sambhandhaa?

Sureswaraachaaryaa says that the sambhandhaa is, that, the aathmaa alone converts the mind into the 'pseudo-I', by 'lend'ing Consciousness to the mind.

The mind, by itself, has no power to become the false 'I'. It is 'I', the aathmaa alone, which lends power to the mind to become the false 'I'.

How does it do that? Sureswaraachaaryaa is analyzing this process.

He points out, that, the 'mind' does not have the natural capacity to become 'I', the Self, because the mind is an external entity, being an object of 'my' experience. Mind, like any other object in the world, is also only an experienced entity; therefore, being an object / being anaathmaa, it does not have the capacity to become the 'I', by itself.

'That it is an object' is its first disqualification. I cannot claim any experienced object as myself. Mind is intimately experienced, but, it is an object only.

Not only is mind an experienced object, but it is also subject to appearance in jaagrath avasthaa and disappearance in sushupthi avasthaa.

This mind, which is anaathmaa, does not have the power to become 'I'.

The second fact is that the mind is an inert material, made up of pancha bhoothaas. Scientifically also, it is made up of pancha bhoothaas only, since science does not accept any 'mind' other than 'brain' i.e., since mind is considered only as the material 'brain' by Science .

Therefore, whether one scientifically sees the mind as 'brain' or saasthricaly sees the mind as a product of 'pancha bhoothaas', mind is inert ; and therefore, by itself, it does not have the capacity to become the pseudo 'I'.

And, what do 'I' do, in the circumstances? In 'my' greatness, 'I' lend 'chidhaabhaasa' to the mind. And, because of the 'borrowed chidhaabhaasa', the mind becomes sentient like 'I', the aathmaa. The non-sentient mind becomes sentient like 'me'. Therefore, it has a resemblance to 'me'.

(Pointing to the clip and the book on the desk in front, Swamiji says): "This clip does not have a resemblance to 'me', because it is insentient ; this book does not have a resemblance to 'me', because it is insentient. 'Mind' has a resemblance to 'me', because mind has got 'sentiency' ".

But, who has given it the sentiency and the resemblance to 'me'. It is 'I', who has given it both - the 'sentiency' and the 'resemblance to 'me' '. As discussed earlier, mind, when compared to the body is 'interior'; and, therefore, because of (i) its resemblance to 'me' (ii) its 'interior'ness and (iii) its sentiency, mind is elevated to the position of 'I'. And, this elevation is possible only because of 'me'.

Now, based on the above analysis, what is the connection between the aathmaa and the ahamkaaraa? Ans : They have the 'cause - effect' relationship ; the real 'I' is the producer of the 'pseudo 'I' '.

And, (to repeat) how does the real 'I' produce the pseudo I? Ans : By converting the mind into a sentient entity.

Thus, they have a sambhandhaa – janya janaka sambhandhaa. Therefore, the product 'pseudo 'I' ' can be the vaachyaartha and the producer 'real 'I' ' can be the lakshyaartha.

This gives rise to a question from the poorva pakshin. He asks the Advaita Vedhaanthin : "If the 'real 'I' ' is accepted as a producer or a kaaranam, problems arise. Elsewhere, you say that aathmaa is 'kaarya kaarana vilakshanam svayam ' ; you have said that it is not a kaaranam; but, now you claim that aathmaa is the producer of the pseudo – 'I' / ahamkaaraa. How is that possible?"

For this, the Advaita Vedhaanthin gives his explanation. He says "When we say that aathmaa is a kaaranam, we mean it only as a figurative kaaranam and not a real kaaranam; because, to produce the 'pseudo 'I' ', aathmaa does not 'do' any action. By aathmaa's mere presence, mind is converted into the 'pseudo 'I' ', because of the mind's 'interior'ness and because of its borrowed Consciousness. It is not because of any extra or special attempt made by 'I', the aathmaa. Saannidhya maathrena aathmaa kaaranam bhavathi. Therefore, we call it adhishtaana kaaranam or vivartha kaaranam. It is not a real kaaranam, in the sense of doing some action. It does not even say 'Oh mind! May you become sentient. I am blessing you'. Ever since the mind is produced out of pancha boothas, the 'reflection' is automatically formed".

"Therefore", Sureswaraacharya says "from ahamkaaraa, the student should come to the changeless kootastha bodha; the really 'inward' aathmaa, by bhaagathyaagha lakshanaa of dropping ahamkaaraa. Once ahamkaaraa is dropped, limitations also go away, because ahamkaaraa is 'located' ; but the kootastha chaithanyam does not have 'location' ".

This is what Sureswaraacharya is trying to communicate, through this verse.

सदात्मनः - For the sadhaathmaa, the real 'I',

The term 'sadhaathmaa' can be split in two ways. One is as 'sadhaa + aathmaa' meaning "the real 'I', in all three avasthaas". The pseudo-I does not continue to exist in all the three avasthaas. In sushupthi, the false 'I' disappears. In contrast, the aathmaa is sadhaa (always) aathmaa. The term can also be split as 'sath + aathmaa' ("Sadheva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekameva adhvitheeyam" - "o good looking one ! In the beginning, this was Existence alone, One only, without a second" - Chaandoghya Upanishad – VI.2.1) . The second manner of splitting i.e., as 'sath + aathmaa' is more preferable.

कूटस्थबोधः - 'changeless Consciousness' is one feature / attribute / nature;

प्रत्यक्त्वं - 'real inwardness' / 'absolute inwardness' / 'real selfhood' is the second nature .

And, these two features of aathmaa are:

अनिमित्तं - Non- conditional / of intrinsic nature.

'Non - Conditional' means 'not borrowed from outside'. The heat in hot water is 'conditional', borrowed and temporary. The heat in fire is 'non-conditional', un-borrowed and permanent. 'Animittham' means unconditional / un-borrowed / permanent / intrinsic etc., 'intrinsic' being the best interpretation.

'Consciousness' and 'selfhood' are intrinsic to aathmaa. But, they are not intrinsic to the mind. Mind cannot have 'selfhood', because it is only an object of experience. Mind does not have 'Consciousness' also intrinsically. This is said in the second line of the verse. The contrast can be understood better by reading the two lines together as: ""बोद्धताहंतयोर्हेतुः कूटस्थबोधप्रत्यक्त्वमनिमित्तं सदात्मनः" - "Aathmaa has got both 'Consciousness' and 'selfhood' intrinsically (animittham), whereas the mind has got both of them, 'borrowed' from aathmaa, the hethu:".

The Aachaaryaa says (in the second line of the verse):

हेतुः - Aathmaa is the cause for

बोद्धता - the 'changing Consciousness' of the mind

'Bodhruthaa' literally means 'knowerhood', which, in turn, means 'changing Consciousness'. This has to be carefully assimilated. Mind is able to know things, only because of the changing Consciousness / awareness. When different objects such as ghata, pata etc. are mentioned, awareness of the different objects, viz., ghata jnaanam, pata jnaanam etc. are possible in that order, only because of the shifting of the Consciousness / awareness from one object to another / one thought to another. The mind changes; it has to; the chidhaabhaasaa / reflected Consciousness also changes; it also has to. If they do not change / shift, the listener will be stuck with the first word, while the speaker will be moving from word to word.

अहंता - and the pseudo Self hood of the mind.

'Pseudo selfhood' means the 'ego status' / the ahamkaaraa status, which belongs to the mind. In fact, mind alone is called ahamkaaraa.

Both of them viz., the 'changing Consciousness' and the 'selfhood' result from 'me', the aathmaa alone. In a purely hypothetical situation of the absence (which is not possible) of 'I', the mind will be the inert brain, without any 'selfhood' and / or 'Consciousness'.

Both the 'pseudo selfhood' and the 'changing / knowing Consciousness' are lent to the mind – 'antha:karanam' - by 'I', the aathmaa. Therefore, 'I' am the 'hethu:'.

The subject of the sentence is 'sadhaathmana: animittham kootasthabodha prathyakthvam' – 'the intrinsic changeless Consciousness and real Selfhood of the aathmaa- the real 'I' '.

The word 'antha:karanasya' is to be supplied, and this portion of the verse read as "sadhaathmana: animittham kootasthabodha prathyakthvam antha:karanasya bodhruthaa ahamthayo: hethu: (bhavathi)"- "kootasthabodha prathyakthvam of aathmaa, the real 'I', is the cause for the bodhruthaa ahamthaa of the mind .

And, how ? Ans: By 'my' mere presence, 'I' bless.

Therefore, there is a sambhandhaa between aathmaa and antha:karanam.

तेन - Therefore,

ताभ्यां - through the false selfhood and the changing Consciousness,

उपलक्ष्यते - (the real Self and the changeless Consciousness) is indirectly revealed.

'False Self' and 'changing Consciousness' are directly revealed; 'real Self and changeless Consciousness' are indirectly revealed. In other words, "'False Self' and 'changing Consciousness' " is vaachyaartha and "real Self and changeless Consciousness' " is lakshyaartha. And, those two have got a connection – 'kaarya kaarana sambhandha' is there. Pseudo self is generated by the real Self.

'False self' is called lakshanam and 'real Self' is called lakshyam. 'Lakshya lakshana sambhandha' is also there between the 'pseudo 'I' ' and the 'real 'I' ' / between the ego and the 'saakshi Witness'.

The following simple analogy will help in easier understanding of the sambhandha between the vaachyaartha and the lakshyaartha: " Suppose I stand in front of a mirror. And, I look into the mirror. I am looking at the reflection of my face in the mirror; but, I cannot look at my own face; obviously, my real face is not seeable by me / not to be objectified by me, with any amount of effort. Even if I take millions of births, I can never see my own real face. Therefore, what do I do? I see the mirror ; I bless the mirror by my mere saannidhyam; I bless the mirror with the reflection of my face ; that means a pseudo face has been generated by me, on the mirror and I am directly experiencing the pseudo 'I' in front of me, when I am looking at the mirror. How does the reflection in the mirror get the status of 'I', even if pseudo? It gets that respectful status, only because, I have blessed it with that status.

"But, even though I am looking at my pseudo face, I am understanding my real face only, because, when I want to apply a thilakam to my face, I look at the pseudo face, but apply the thilakam on my real face and not on the mirror.

"I experience the pseudo face in the mirror (which may be likened to vaachyaartha) and I understand my real face (which may be likened to the lakshyaartha) without objectification. Aparoksha jnaanam of the face takes place, even though I am looking at my pseudo face only".

Similarly, in common parlance, when an individual uses the term 'I', he / she is generally referring only to the changing Conscious being / the pseudo I, as, for example, in the statement "I am getting old". The noun 'I', in this statement, no doubt, refers to the changing, ageing Conscious being called ahamkaara. But, when the Upanishad says "thaththvamas'", the seeker should shift his / her focus from the 'changing Conscious being' to the 'changeless Conscious being'. The 'changing Conscious being' is the product and the 'changeless Conscious Being' is the producer. 'I' am that kaaranam. This is indicated by the word 'upalakshyathe', meaning 'indirectly revealed'.

The Aachaaryaa exhorts the student: "At the time of sravanam itself, switch over, from 'changing Consciousness' to 'changeless Consciousness'".

And, we are experiencing this 'changeless Consciousness' every day. When? Ans: During sushupthi.

During sushupthi, we are remaining only as the 'changeless Consciousness principle'. But, during our 'waking' state, we want to transact with the world and therefore generate the 'changing Consciousness being', called 'ego'. We put on the ahamkaara kanchukam for transactions, since, without the 'ego', transactions are not possible.

During sushupthi, the ego is gone. What is mistaken as 'blankness' in sushupthi, is, in reality, not total blankness; - but, 'I', the kootastha bodha: | This can be experienced in sushupthi /

It may be remembered, that, Sureswaraachaarya, earlier (in verse 8) , gave another occasion also, when 'I' remain only as the 'changeless Consciousness' – which occasion, he called by the term "Pramithsaa", viz., that particular moment, when one is about to know something and when the ego is not fully operational. During that moment- "Pramithsaa"- also, 'I' am only the 'changeless Consciousness'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 12 – Chapter III:

बुद्धेः कूटस्थबोधप्रत्यक्त्वनिमित्ते बोद्धृताप्रत्यक्त्वे ये त्वसाधारणे तयोः विशेषवचनम् ।

The mind's cognizing power and immediacy are grounded in the unchanging awareness and immediate self-certitude of the Self. These qualities are explained to show how they inhere in the Self and in the mind and how as inhering thus in the latter, they have some speciality.

Now that Sureswaraachaaryaa has introduced two selfhoods – one 'false' and the other 'real' – he wants to differentiate between these two. Buddhi enjoys 'false selfhood' and also 'changing Consciousness'. Aathmaa has got 'real selfhood' and 'changeless Consciousness'.

(Ideally, the adjectives 'false' and 'real' and the adjectives 'changing' and 'changeless' should not be added at this stage of the discussion, but, in order to avoid any confusion, they have been applied, even at this stage. This discussion should ideally run:)

Mind has got 'Consciousness' and 'selfhood'; aathmaa also has got 'Consciousness' and 'selfhood'. What is the difference between the 'selfhood' of the mind and the 'selfhood' of the aathmaa? Similarly, what is the difference between the 'Consciousness' of the mind and the 'Consciousness' of the aathmaa?

(We have already discussed these differences, namely, that, the selfhood of the mind is 'false' selfhood, while the selfhood of the aathmaa is 'real' selfhood and that, the Consciousness of the mind is 'changing', while the Consciousness of the aathmaa is 'changeless'. Though we have discussed the differences earlier, the text is covering the topic only now, in these portions).

The Aachaaryaa wants to talk about the difference between the 'selfhood' of the mind and the 'selfhood' of the aathmaa ; and, similarly, the difference between the 'Consciousness' of the mind and the 'Consciousness' of the aathmaa. Therefore, he says:

- ये बोद्धृताप्रत्यक्त्वे - The 'Consciousness' and the 'selfhood' belonging to the mind, 'Bodhruthaa' means 'Consciousness' and 'prathyakthvam' means 'selfhood'.
- निमित्ते - which are generated / caused by
- कूटस्थबोधप्रत्यक्त्वं - the 'Consciousness' and 'selfhood' of the aathmaa,

This is exactly like the fire generating the brightness and the heat in a red hot iron ball / bar, in a forge shop. In a similar manner, the 'selfhood' and 'Consciousness' of the aathmaa generate the 'selfhood' and 'Consciousness' of the mind.

- असाधारणे - are distinct (from each other).

One belongs to the mind and the other belongs to the aathmaa

- तयोः विशेषवचनम् - The distinctions / differences between the two are to be pointed out (in the following portion).

Once the seeker knows the differences between the 'Consciousness' and 'Selfhood' of the aathmaa and those of the mind, he / she can smoothly and confidently move from the vaachyaartha to lakshyaartha; and, also, inversely from the lakshyaartha to the vaachyaartha , when the situation demands viz., for the purpose of transactions.

The seeker should be clear on these.

The seeker should learn to switch over from the 'pseudo 'I' ', to the 'real 'I'', when samsaaraa thought becomes oppressive. There is no other solution to samsaaraa. 'Pseudo 'I' ' is eternal samsaari, while the 'real 'I' ' has no samsaaraa at all.

But, the `pseudo `I" is also a necessity; it has to be used as a kanchukam, whenever required, since transactions, including Vedhaanthic study will not be possible without it.

130. Chapter III, Verse 11 to 13 (14-02-2009)

What Sureswaraachaaryaa is aiming to teach, in these portions, conveyed in simple language (the Aachaaryaa is presenting it in a technical and involved language) will be as follows:

The Aachaaryaa wants to say that the 'mind' alone is serving as an empirical self, or the worldly 'I', for the sake of all transactions / worldly vyavahaaraas, even though it does not really deserve to serve as 'I'.

The mind does not deserve to be 'I', because of two main reasons, firstly because it is an object of experience and secondly because it is inert in nature. But, even though the inert, external mind does not deserve to be 'I', it is 'raised' / 'elevated' to the level of 'I', the aham, for all worldly transactional purposes.

How does this happen? How does the mind, which does not deserve to be 'I', get that power to be 'I'? Sureswaraachaaryaa says it is because of the 'blessing' of the aathmaa; aathmaa, by its mere presence, converts the mind into an empirical 'I', meaning, that, for all worldly transactions, the mind is serving as 'I' / the aham / the subject.

Then this question may be asked: "If the mind is only an empirical 'I', raised to the level of the 'I' for worldly purposes, then who is the real 'I'?" Sureswaraachaaryaa answers: "It is Aathmaa, which alone deserves to be the real or absolute 'I'".

Thus, the Aachaaryaa has introduced aathmaa as the absolute 'I' and the mind as the empirical 'I'.

And, it is the Aathma which has blessed the mind to become the empirical 'I' for all transactional purposes. Even during the course of the Vedhaanthic class, the student is using his / her empirical 'I' alone as listener and the teacher also is using his empirical 'I' alone as the speaker.

For all transactional purposes, mind has become the empirical 'I', blessed by the aathmaa. It naturally follows, that, since aathmaa has blessed the mind to become the empirical 'I', the aathmaa, the absolute 'I', is the 'generator' of ahamkaaraa, the empirical 'I'.

Thus, aathmaa and ahamkaaraa have got kaarya-kaarana / generator-generated / 'parent'-'child' relationship. This is what the Aachaaryaa is trying to establish first. Once he has established this relationship, thereafter, he can say that, though the word aham primarily means the empirical 'I', the ahamkaaraa, which is the 'child' and which is used for all the transactions, in Vedhaanthic context, the word 'I' should not refer to empirical 'I', but to the 'parent' only, viz. the aathmaa, the absolute 'I'.

Also, the informed seeker should be able to differentiate between the two contexts: viz., (i) when the word means the empirical 'I' and (ii) when it means the absolute 'I'.

The Aachaaryaa wants to present all these facts in a technical manner. What is the method he is using?

The absolute 'I', the aathmaa, has got two essential features viz., 'absolute Selfhood', termed by him as 'prathyakthvam' and 'absolute Consciousness', termed 'kootastha bodham'. This aathmaa is 'bless'ing the inert mind with 'empirical selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness'.

And, once the mind has received these two attributes of 'empirical selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness', the mind has now become empirical Self, which is called the ahamkaaraa / the pseudo 'I' / the ego. This was the idea given in the eleventh sloka.

Now, in the following portion, what is the discussion?

We have seen that, aathmaa is endowed with 'absolute Selfhood' (prathyakthvam) and 'absolute Consciousness' (kootastha bodham) and that, mind is endowed with 'empirical selfhood' (ahamthaa) and 'empirical Consciousness' (bodhruthaa).

The set of attributes belonging to aathmaa is paaramaarthikaa and the other set of attributes belonging to the mind is vyaavahaarikaa. Therefore, it may also be said that aathmaa has got paaramaarthika bodhruthaa and paaramaarthika prathyakthaa, while the mind has got vyaavahaarika bodhruthaa and vyaavahaarika prathyakthaa.

The discussion that follows is: "What is the difference between the paaramaarthika prathyakthaa and bodhruthaa, belonging to aathmaa and the vyaavahaarika prathyakthaa and bodhruthaa, belonging to the mind?"

Sureswaraachaaryaa says (in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 12):

- बुद्धेबोद्धता प्रत्यक्त्वे : - The bodhruthaa and prathyakthaa belonging to the mind, 'budhe:' means 'of the mind'.
- निमित्ते - are caused by,

- कूटस्थबोधप्रत्यक्ते - the paaramaarthika prathyakthaa and boddhruthaa, belonging to the aathmaa.
- ये तु - But, these two pairs (viz., the vyavahaarika prathyakthaa and boddhruthaa belonging to the mind, and the paaramaarthika prathyakthaa and boddhruthaa belonging to the aathmaa)
- असाधारणे - are different.

One is the 'cause'; the other is the 'effect'. The Paaramaarthikaa pair is the cause for the vyavaahaarika pair. They are mutually distinct.

- तयोविशेष वचनम् : - The distinction between the first pair and the second pair is to be stated (in the following sloka).

'Visesha.' means 'distinction' or 'difference' ; 'vachanam' means 'is to be stated'.

Chapter III: Verse 12 –

बोद्धता कर्तृता बुद्धे :कर्मता स्यादहंतया ।

तयोरैक्यं यथा बुद्धौ पूर्वयोरेवमात्मनि ॥ १२ ॥

The mind's agency is its cognizing power and its becoming an object is by virtue of its 'ego'hood. As they are blended in the mind, the features in the Self responsible for this cognizing power and the ego-hood are also blended in essence.

- बुद्धे(भवति) बोद्धता कर्तृता : - The empirical Consciousness of the mind becomes the empirical 'knower', which is subject to change.

'Buddhe: bodhruthaa' means 'the empirical Consciousness of the mind', which is nothing else, but, what is known as chidhaabhaasaa.

'Bodhruthaa' literally means 'knowerhood' and 'knowerhood' should be understood as 'Consciousness', in this context.

Similarly, 'karthruthaa' literally means 'doership'; and 'doership' should be understood as 'changing in nature', in this context; i.e. karthruthaa (in this context) means parinaami / 'subject to change'.

The 'empirical Consciousness' belonging to the mind, because of which, the mind becomes the empirical Self, as 'empirical Consciousness' is subject to modification. Mind being parinaami all the time, the 'empirical Consciousness' also is parinaami. An example is the Vedhaanthic class itself, where, in general, in the initial few minutes, the student's mind is bright and the Consciousness is also bright; but, after some time, the mind becomes tired and the empirical Consciousness becomes dull.

Not only is 'empirical Consciousness' subject to change when changing from dullness to brightness or vice versa, but, even when it is bright also, it is 'changing', because of its association with external objects. The 'empirical Consciousness' alone becomes ghata jnaanam, pata jnaanam, mata jnaanam, vruksha jnaanam etc.

Associated with various objects the 'empirical Consciousness' is subject to change.

And it is this 'empirical Consciousness' that the scientists are analyzing as the neuronal phenomenon, which, they claim, is subject to generation when the neurons are firing and subject to destruction when the neurons stop firing. When the scientists are talking about Consciousness being 'generated' in evolution, that evolutionary Consciousness talked about by them, is the 'empirical Consciousness', generated in the brain through an electrical phenomenon and which is responsible for the awareness of the external world.

Sureswaraacharya says the 'empirical Consciousness' of the mind is 'karthruthaa'; it is the 'empirical knower' which is subject to change. In other words, it is a 'changing knowerhood'.

The 'empirical Consciousness' has thus been discussed. And, what about the other feature of the mind, viz., the 'empirical Selfhood'? That 'empirical Selfhood', the vyaavahaarika prathyakthaa, has to be discussed now. This term 'vyaavahaarika prathyakthaa' has to be supplied in this verse.

- अहंतया कर्मता स्यात् (व्यावहारिक प्रत्यक्ता) - the empirical Selfhood of the mind is being the object of the word 'I', used in empirical transactions.

The empirical Selfhood of the mind is nothing but being the object of the word 'I', during empirical transactions. To express the same idea in other words: "In empirical transactions, when the word 'I' is used, the word does not refer to the sacchidhaanandha aathmaa but it is referring only to the empirical Self, which is 'mind + chidhaabaasad.'" Therefore, the translation (of this portion) is as above, viz., "The empirical Selfhood of the mind is nothing but being the object of the word 'I', in / during empirical transactions to the mind". That is what is being conveyed here as 'ahamthayaa karmathaa syaath'. The essence (to repeat) is: "In worldly transactions, whenever you use the word 'I', the object of the word is not the absolute 'I', but the empirical 'I' only".

Moving to the third quarter of the verse:

- तयोबुद्धौ ऐक्यं : - Both these attributes, viz., 'the empirical Consciousness and the empirical Selfhood' or 'the vyavahaarika boddhruthaa and vyavahaarika prathyaktha' are non-separate from the mind,

Both of them (the 'empirical Consciousness' and the 'empirical Selfhood') are inseparable attributes of the mind.

- यथा - in the same manner as,
- पूर्वयोआत्मनि एवं : - their 'parents' (i.e. parents of 'empirical Consciousness' and 'empirical Selfhood' viz., the 'absolute Consciousness and absolute Selfhood / paaramaarthika boddhruthaa and paaramaarthika prathyaktha') are non-separate from aathmaa.

The 'absolute' features are non-separate from aathmaa; the 'relative' features are non-separate from the mind.

'Purvayo:' means 'paaramaarthika boddhruthaa prathyakthvayo:'; 'evam (bhavathi)' conveys the meaning 'eiykyam (bhavathi)'.

Having said this, Sureswaraacharya, then, says "This can create a problem. And, therefore, I have to clarify the problem."

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 13 – Chapter III:

यथा बुद्धौ पूर्वयोरेवमात्मनीत्यतिदेशेन बुद्धिसाधर्म्यविधानान्नानात्वप्रसक्तौ तदपवादार्थमाह ।

The analogy with the mind might create the presumption that the two features might be conceived as forming attributive distinctions within the Self. That is repudiated in the next verse.

So, what is the problem? It can be explained as follows: Mind has got 'empirical Selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness', as its attributes. Technically, the mind is called the 'substance' and has 'empirical Selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness' as its attributes. When it is thus said that "mind is endowed with 'empirical Selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness' ", what is the relationship between the two? Obviously, it is understood as 'substance-attribute-relationship'.

Sureswaraacharya concedes this: "If you understand the relationship between the mind and its attributes, in this manner viz., as 'substance–attribute– relationship', it is perfectly all right. There is no problem".

Now, talking of the aathmaa, which has got 'absolute Selfhood' and 'absolute Consciousness', when it is said "aathmaa is endowed with 'absolute Selfhood' and 'absolute Consciousness'", what is the relationship between the two? What is the substance and what is the attribute? Can it be said that 'aathmaa is the substance and Consciousness is the attribute' or should it be said that, 'Consciousness is the substance and aathmaa the attribute'? "What is the substance and what is the attribute here?" will be the natural question.

And, to this, Sureswaraacharya wants to say: "When you come to aathmaa and Consciousness, you should never bring in either of the words 'substance' or 'attribute'. This language of 'substance and attribute' fails when you talk about the relationship between aathmaa and Consciousness. Consciousness cannot be called 'substance'; Consciousness cannot be called 'attribute' either. In the same manner, aathmaa cannot be called 'substance' nor 'attribute'. Both these words fail in the case of aathmaa; and, both these words fail in the case of Consciousness also. In short, the conventional language cannot be used".

Now the question is "why"? Explanation follows:

The significance of the word 'substance' and the significance of the word 'attribute' have been analyzed in 'tharka saasthraa'.

The Achaaryaa assumes that his readers will know the significance of these two words 'substance' and 'attribute', since, according to tradition, Vedhaantha Saasthraa can be studied only after acquiring a thorough knowledge of tharka, meemaamsa and vyaakarana saasthraas. This is because of the reason that the terminologies in these three saasthraas are very commonly used by traditional commentators of Vedhaantha saasthraas, right from Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa. Unfortunately, Vedhaanthic teachers of current times do not get the opportunity or the time to discuss in detail, the contents of these saasthraas.

Tharka saasthraa defines the words 'substance' and 'attribute'. What are their definitions according to tharka saasthraa? They define 'substance' as 'that which is the locus of one attribute or another'. "Dharma aasraya: dravyam" is the relevant quotation. 'Dravyam' means 'substance' and is defined as the locus (aasraya:) of one attribute or another.

Thereafter, the tharka saasthraas divide attributes into several types – one type is called 'property' (gunaa); another type as action (kriyaa); and, yet another as species (jaathi) etc. They are all various 'dharmaas' or 'attributes'. And, 'substance' (dravyam) is defined as 'that which is the locus of one attribute (dharma/gunaa) or another'. It follows, therefore, that, any dravyam is always sagunam. Any substance can only be sagunam.

To repeat (in view of the importance of the fact): According to tharka saasthraas, dravyam (substance) means 'the locus of one attribute or another' and therefore, any dravyam, by definition, is sagunam. Yathra yathra dravyathvam thathra thathra sagunathvam.

If one remembers this definition of 'substance', one will realize that, aathmaa can never be defined as a 'substance', because, the moment it is said that 'aathmaa is a substance', it will become sagunam; and, aathmaa cannot be said to be sagunam, since, in Advaitham, aathmaa is nirgunam. Leave alone Advaithaa philosophy; Upanishad itself declares aathmaa as 'nirgunam, nishkalam, nithyam etc'. Therefore, aathmaa is not a 'substance'.

An interesting aside: Visishtaadvaitins draw heavily on the same tharka saasthraas and using all the arguments of tharka saasthraas, conclude that both jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa are sagunam. On the other hand, in Advaitham, aathmaa is nirgunam and, therefore, cannot be a 'substance'.

Proceeding further, what is the significance of the word 'attribute' or 'property'? Again, in tharka saasthraas, as mentioned earlier, all the attributes have been categorized and analyzed. And, tharka saasthraas firmly establish that all 'attributes' depend on 'substances'; that, any 'attribute' depends on one 'substance' or another. "Guna: dravya aasritha:" is their conclusion. Any attribute depends on a substance for its existence. It follows, therefore, no attribute has an independent existence. Attributes are not svathanthraa; they are always parathanthraa.

Therefore, if it is said that Consciousness is an attribute, Consciousness will become a dependent entity; but, the Upanishads always declare Consciousness as svathanthram – independent. Therefore, Consciousness cannot be looked upon as 'attribute'.

Consciousness cannot be looked upon as 'attribute' and aathmaa cannot be taken as 'substance'. Therefore, the relationship between aathmaa and Consciousness, cannot be 'substance-attribute relationship'.

If so, what is their relationship? Ans: "There is no relationship. They are one and the same". Aathmaa is Consciousness; aathmaa is self.

The conclusion is: "Between aathmaa and Consciousness and between aathmaa and Selfhood, there is no dharma-dharmi-sambhandhaa, whereas, between mind and Selfhood and between mind and Consciousness, there is dharma-dharmi / 'substance-attribute' relationship.

To consolidate: When it is said "mind is endowed with self-hood and Consciousness", they – viz., 'mind and selfhood' and likewise 'mind and Consciousness' - have got 'substance-attribute' relationship. But, when it is said "Aathmaa is endowed with selfhood and Consciousness", there is no 'substance-attribute' relationship between aathmaa and Selfhood or between aathma and Consciousness.

The student has to note and remember this distinction carefully. Otherwise, whatever substance-attribute relationship is there in the case of mind will be wrongly extended to aathmaa also. This is what the Aachaaryaa points out: "Wrong extension is the problem here".

What is to be the essence of the following sloka? Ans: "Do not make this wrong extension, viz., the 'substance- attribute relationship', prevailing in the context of the mind, to the context of the aathmaa."

Reverting to the text (introduction to Verse 13):

"बुद्धौ यथा एवं आत्मनि पूर्वयो": - "Just as the mind possesses the selfhood and Consciousness, in the same manner, aathmaa possesses selfhood and Consciousness".

- इति अतिदेशेन - By comparison in this manner, and consequent extension 'Athidesa.' means 'extension through comparison'.
- बुद्धि साधर्म्य विधानात् - since aathmaa has been equated to the mind,

Through comparative extension, aathmaa has been equated to the mind. In what sense is the equation made? Mind also possesses Consciousness and Selfhood; similarly, aathmaa also possesses Consciousness and Selfhood. Thus, in the possession of these two features, mind and aathmaa have been equated.

This equation can create a problem. What is the problem? In the mind, there is 'substance-attribute' relationship. Extending this, the student may conclude that aathmaa also has got 'substance-attribute' relationship. This is the fear of the Aachaaryaa.

'Saadharmyam' means 'similarity' or 'equation'; 'vidhaanam' means 'teaching'. 'Buddhi saadharmya vidhaanaath' means 'because of the teaching of the similarity of buddhi with aathmaa', which teaching was done in the previous verse.

- नानात्वप्रसक्तौ - there will be the problem of plurality.
- 'Naanaathvam' means 'plurality'; 'praskathi.' means 'occurrence of a possibility'.

What is the 'plurality'? It is explained as below: Once the wrong extension ('substance-attribute' relationship in the context of the mind to a similar relationship in the aathmaa) is made, it will lead to a false conclusion.

The student may falsely conclude that just as the mind is a 'substance', aathmaa is also a substance and further falsely conclude that just as the mind has two attributes, Selfhood and Consciousness, aathmaa also has got two attributes, Selfhood and Consciousness. The student will conclude: "Aathmaa is there; Selfhood is there; and, Consciousness is there".

And, once the student makes these false conclusions, plurality i.e., one 'substance' and two 'attributes' will result. In tharka saasthraa, 'substance' and 'attribute' are counted separately, and accordingly there will be 'svagatha bedhaa', which means 'internal difference'.

Because of this wrong conclusion, not only will aathmaa become sagunam, there will be advaita bhanga: also.

The Aachaaryaa is anxious to pre-empt this problem. Therefore, he says:

- तदपवादार्थमाह - The following reply is given to remove that possible problem.

'Apavaadham' means 'negation'; 'thatth' means 'that' and, in this context, means 'that possible conclusion / possible plurality'; 'aaha' means 'the following is given'.

The student should clearly make a mental note, that, according to Advaitam, aathmaa is not a 'substance' and Consciousness is not an 'attribute' also.

And, so, what is the relationship between aathmaa and Consciousness? Ans: (as already stated): There is no relationship. Aathmaa is Consciousness and Consciousness is aathmaa.

And, this 'aathmaa-Consciousness' does not have any attribute either. It is neither substance nor attribute; and, not being a substance; it does not possess any attribute also. If 'aathma-Consciousness' is a substance it will possess attributes; if 'aathma-Consciousness' is an attribute, it will depend on some substance. Therefore, you cannot use either of the words 'substance' and 'attribute' for 'aathmaa-Consciousness'.

And, what about the world? Is the world a 'substance', separate from aathmaa or is the world 'attribute' of aathmaa? If such a question is raised, the answer, according to advaita, will be, that, the world is neither a substance separate from aathmaa nor an attribute.

If the world is considered a 'substance' separate from aathmaa, such a view will constitute dvaita philosophy. World is not also an attribute of aathmaa, because, according to advaitam, aathmaa does not have an attribute. The world is considered as an attribute of aathmaa, by the Visishtaadvaita philosopher.

According to advaitam, the world is neither a substance nor an attribute of aathmaa. A 'substantial' world is not there; an 'attributive' world is also not there. World is nothing but an 'appearance', which is actually not there, seemingly there.

A study or a revision of the Maandookya Kaarika will help in a clearer understanding of this fact. Gowda paadhaa declares in Maandookya Kaarika: "Na nirodho na chothpaathi: na bandho na saadhaka:" – "There is no dissolution, no creation, none who is bound, none who strives for liberation (Verse 32 – Vaithiyparakaranam).

There is only one non-substantial non-attributive aathma chaithanyam, which is 'myself', in which the world is 'dancing'. World is neither a substance nor an attribute; it is maayaa.

This is the topic that the Aachaaryaa is developing, viz., "Prapanchopasama (free from the world) chaithanya aathmaa aham asm' – "I am that non-substantial, non-attributive chaithanya Aathmaa, free from the world".

So, he says "aaha" (sambhandha gadhyam to verse 13) - "(For that purpose) I am saying this".

Chapter III: Verse 13 –

धर्मधर्मित्वभेदोऽस्याः सोऽपि नैवात्मनो यतः ।

प्रत्यग्ज्योतिरतोऽभिन्नं बेदहेतोरसंभवात् ॥ १३ ॥

The distinction between substance and attribute falls within mind. It does not belong to the Self. Thus the Self is immediate awareness without any internal distinction, for there could be no ground for differentiation within it.

- अस्या(अस्ति) :धर्मधर्मित्व भेद : - 'Substance-attribute' relationship is possible, in the case of the mind.
'Asyaa:' means 'for the mind' or 'in the case of mind'.

In the case of the mind, the tharka saasthraa language viz., 'mind is matter' can be used.

Interestingly, tharka saasthraa says that aathmaa is matter, that, aathmaa is dravyam and also that aathmaa is 'inert matter with temporary Consciousness as its attribute'. Sureswaraachaarya does not agree and is anxious to repudiate this view.

He says: "Do not reduce aathmaa to matter. Mind is matter; it is an inert substance, with chidhaabhaasaa / reflected Conscience, as attribute. Therefore, in the case of mind 'substance-attribute' division / dharma dharmithva bedha: is possible. You can even say that this Consciousness, viz., chidhaabhaasaa is temporary also. Asyaa: (buddhe:) dharmadharmibedha: is possible". "But" he continues:

- सअपि : - Such a division / that 'substance-attribute' division
- आत्मन(सम्भवति) न : - is never possible in the context of aathmaa.

There is this important difference between the Conscience of the mind and that of aathmaa. Conscience of the mind is an attribute of the mind, while, Conscience of aathmaa is not the attribute of aathmaa.

131. Chapter III, Verse 13 to 15 (21-02-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is dealing with thvam padha vaachyaartha and thvam padha lakshyaartha.

Thvam padha vaachyaartha is ahamkaara: and thvam padha lakshyaartha is saakshi.

Sureswaraachaaryaa first differentiates between ahamkaaraa and saakshi. And, after differentiating between them, he wants to talk about the relationship between them. Ahamkaaraa being a product of saakshi, the relationship between them is 'kaarya-kaarana sambhandha:' or 'janya-janaka sanbhandha:'|

And, when ahamkaaraa is talked about, an informed Vedhaanthic student will already know that it is the name of the 'mixture of the mind and the chidhaabhaasa', the chidhabaasaa given / lent by saakshi.

Though Ahamkaaraa is, thus, essentially a mixture of matter and reflected Consciousness, while teaching the Vedhaantha saasthraa, sometimes, the mind is given as the more important component of ahamkaaraa; sometimes, chidhaabhaasaa is presented as the pradhaanam or more important component; and, at other times, they are given equal importance.

How are these (the varying degrees of importance) presented? When mind is to be given importance, the Vedhaanthic teacher says "Mind is ahamkaara, backed by chidhaabhaasa"; i.e., if 'mind backed by chidhaabhaasa' is called ahamkaaraa, it is the mind that is being given prominence.

In a similar manner, importance is given to chidhaabhaasa, by the Vedhaanthic teacher saying: "'chidhaabhaasaa, associated with mind' is ahamkaaraa".

Sometimes, the Vedhaanthic teacher says "the mixture of the mind and chidhaabhaasa is called ahamkaaraa".

The student should not get confused because of these differences in presentation.

To repeat: Sometimes, it is said that mind is ahamkaaraa; sometimes, it is said that chidhabhaasa is ahamkaara; and some other times, it is said that the mixture is ahamkaaraa. There should be no confusion; it is only a shift in 'presentation', depending on the context.

In each form of presentation some advantages will be there. The student should have a discerning mind to know the advantages that each mode of presentation has.

In these portions, Sureswaraachaaryaa is giving prominence to mind; and, therefore, he is consistently saying that mind is ahamkaaraa.

What is the advantage that he derives from this mode of presentation? The advantage that the Aachaaryaa gets is that, when the mind is presented as ahamkaaraa, he can easily say "mind is an object of experience and, therefore, ahamkaaraa also is an object only".

In other words, the advantage in this presentation is, that, it is easier to establish that ahamkaaraa is also an object of experience, going through the three steps (i) ahamkaaraa is mind (ii) mind is an object and (iii) therefore, ahamkaaraa is also an object.

Therefore, i.e. based on the fact that ahamkaaraa is also an object like the world and the body, through mahaa vaakyam, Vedhaanthee wants the seeker to give up the ahamkaaraa. Once ahamkaaraa, which is the vaachyaarthee, is dropped, the seeker can comfortably move to the lakshyaarthee, the saakshi. It is with this purpose, that, the Aachaaryaa is equating the ahamkaaraa to the mind, throughout these discussions.

And, then, the topic currently under discussion, covered in detail in the earlier session, is briefly given below:

"The mind, which is ahamkaaraa, which is the thvam padha vaachyaarthee, is endowed with Selfhood and Consciousness. Saakshi, the aathmaa, is also endowed with Selfhood and Consciousness. But, there is a difference. The difference is, that, between the mind and the other two, viz., Selfhood and Consciousness, there is a 'substance-attribute' relationship, whereas, in the case of saakshi, though it is said that saakshi is also endowed with Selfhood and Consciousness, there is no question of 'substance-attribute' relationship. (The logic was discussed in earlier sessions.) In the context of mind and its attributes, Selfhood and Consciousness, 'mind' is the substance; Selfhood and Consciousness are 'attributes'. In the context of Saakshi, the student / seeker should carefully avoid both the words 'substance' and 'attribute'. Saakshi is Self; saakshi is Consciousness. Their 'relationship' is that all the three are one and the same. Eiykyam alone is the 'relationship', which, in fact, is not a relationship, in the real sense of the word, since 'relationship' is possible only when there is duality. There is no duality or plurality among these three – saakshi, Self and Consciousness. All the three are one and the same.

"Then, 'is the 'saakshi-Self-Consciousness' a 'substance' or is it an 'attribute'?' is the question. It is neither."

This is the discussion that is being presented in this verse (verse 13).

- अस्याः धर्म धर्मित्व भेदः (अस्ति) - In the mind / ahamkaaraa , 'substance- attribute' division is there.
- आत्मनः सः अपि न एव - But, in the case of saakshi, that division is not at all there.

The pronoun 'Sa:' denotes 'dharmadharmithva bedha:' / 'substance-attribute' division; 'aathmana:' means 'saakshina:' / 'in the case of aathmaad'; 'naiva' means 'is never possible'.

Why is it not possible? The question is answered in subsequent verses:

- यतः असंभवात् - Since there is no possibility of (or scope for)
- भेद हेतोः - giving any reason for 'substance-attribute' division,

'Bedha:' means "substance-attribute' division' ; 'Hethu:' means 'reason'.

There is no reason to establish 'substance-attribute' division, between saakshi and Selfhood or between saakshi and Consciousness.

- अतः - therefore, (the conclusion is)
- प्रत्यग्ज्योतिः - the saakshi chaithanyam,

'prathyak jyothi:' literally means 'inner light' and denotes 'saakshi chaithanyam' here. 'Prathyak jyothi:' is only a figurative expression for Consciousness, not the reflected Consciousness ; but, the Original Consciousness .

- अभिन्नं - is free from 'substance-attribute' division.
'Abhinnaam' means 'dharma-dharmi bedha rahitham'.

This makes aathmaa a non-material entity.

An important and relevant fact is to be noted here, in this context:

Everything that is experienced in the world is material in nature. And, in the material field, there will always be either substances or / and their attribute. As a result, the human mind is habitually used to the concept of 'substance-attributes', which is a common phenomenon belonging to the material world. But, in the Advaita world of spirituality / Consciousness, the mind has to get out of the orientation of objectification, the orientation of materiality and the orientation of substance-attribute division. Understandably, the intellect always finds this difficult and since the intellect finds it difficult, the intellect concludes that aathmaa means 'nothing'. In other words, since the intellect does not have the capacity to conceive of a nirguna padhaartham, because a nirguna padhaartham is not a conventional material, nirguna aathmaa is rejected as 'nothing'. This intellectual 'rejection' is done not only by lay people; but, even by a number of philosophers. Ramanajuchaaryaa, the Visishtaadvaita Aachaarya and many other philosophers rejected the concept of the nirguna aathmaa / non-material entity.

Because all our experiences are in the field of 'substances and attributes', these philosophers vehemently reject the concept of nirguna aathmaa, saying "Nirguna aathmaa does not exist at all; there is no proof for this". And, if and when the word nirgunam is found in the Upanishad, they hold that the word does not mean the 'attribute-less'. Even when the Advaita Aachaaryaas clearly cite to them the relevant teachings from the Upanishads, the ultimate pramaanaa for all vaidhikaas, the anti-advaita philosophers reject this 'nirguna brahman' concept. Then, if asked why the word nirguna is applied to Brahman or Paramaathmaa in the Upanishad, they reply that the word 'nirguna' only means 'free from dhushtha gunaa:.' | 'nirgathaa: dhushtha gunaa:.' | Thus, according to Visishtaadvaita, 'nirguna aathmaad' means 'saguna Vishnu | 'saguna Narayana' alone. He is not 'dhushtha guna yuktha:.'; their conclusion is that 'absolute nirguna vasthu' is not there at all, which we, Advaitins, consider as an unfortunate conclusion.

What the Advaita Vedhanthins say is that, the non-material Consciousness is free from both good and bad attributes. The Katopanishad manthraa (I. 2. 14), where Nachikethas asks Lord Yama: "Anyathra dharmath anyathra adharmath anyathra asmaath kruthaakruthaath anyathra bhoothaascha bhavyaascha yath thath pasyasi thadvadha" – "Tell me of that absolute Truth which you see as different from dharm and adharma, cause and effect, past and future", is relevant in this context. Aathmaa does not have either kalyana gunaas or akalyana gunaas. This is what the Advaita Aachaaryaas try to establish, though the fact is mind-boggling.

This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa also means, when he says (in verse 13) "prathyak jyothi: abhinnaam" which means "Conscience transcends 'substance-attribute' division".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 14:भेदहेत्वसंभवं दर्शयन्नाह ।*Why there could be no ground for differentiation is brought out:

In the fourth quarter of the previous sloka, there was an expression 'bedha hetho: asambhavaath'. What does that expression mean ? It means : "Because there is no reason / logic to establish 'substance–attribute' division (in saakshi chaithanyam)". That expression is being expanded in the following verse. Therefore, the following sloka is a commentary upon the word 'bedha hethu asambhavam'. The illogicality of 'substance-attribute' division is explained here.

- दर्शयन् - Explaining (or ' to explain')
- भेद हेतु असंभवं - the illogicality of 'substance attribute' division (in the case of saakshi chaithanyam)
- आह - the following statement (sloka) is made:

Why do we say that it ('substance-attribute' division) is illogical? The reason is given in the verse.

Chapter III: Verse 14 –न कस्यांचिदवस्थायां बोधप्रत्क्त्वयोर्भिदा ।*व्यभिचारोऽथवा द्रष्टो यथाहंतद्विदोस्सदा ॥ १४ ॥

In no condition are Consciousness and immediacy differentiated; nor are they found separately. This is unlike the relation between the ego and the knower thereof.

What is the explanation that Sureswaraacharya gives? He says: "You cannot make a difference between the saakshi and the Selfhood or between the saakshi and Consciousness, because, we never experience any dissociation / separation among these three. Between two objects, to qualify one as substance and the other as attribute, we have to experience, at times, the absence of any one of the two ; but, in this case, viz., of 'saakshi, its Selfhood and its Conscience', at no time, do we experience the absence or dissociation of any one of these three ".

The Aacharya says:

- कस्यांचित् अवस्थायां - Under any circumstance / condition (whether it is jaagrath or svapna or sushupthi or within the jaagrath avasthaa itself, at any time) ,

- भिदा नास्ति - there is no separation experienced,
- बोधप्रत्ययत्वयोः - for the Consciousness-Selfhood pair,

Between the 'Consciousness-Selfhood' pair and the saakshi, we do not see any dissociation / separation at all, to identify one (the saakshi) as the substance and the other (the 'Consciousness-Selfhood' pair) as attribute.

If, between any two given objects, you should call one as a 'substance' and the other as an 'attribute', you should show a possible separation between the two - for instance, as we perceive

- (i) in a substance and its colour or
- (ii) in a substance and its form or
- (iii) in a substance and its smell.

We do know that separations can be brought about between a substance and its colour or between a substance and its form or between a substance and its smell.

But, a separation between the saakshi and 'Consciousness-Selfhood' pair, is never possible. Therefore, differentiation of one as substance and the other as attribute, is also not possible. There is no reason to classify them as substance and attribute, because, we have never seen a dissociation / separation between them.

The Naiyaayikaa philosopher differs from the Vedhaanthin on this aspect also. He says that Consciousness can disappear at times and the Self can exist by itself. According to him Aathmaa is only inert matter. He says: "When the aathmaa gets associated with the mind which is also matter, the aathmaa-matter and the mind-matter join together and Consciousness is generated in the aathmaa temporarily. This happens during both jaagrath avasthaa and svapna avasthaa. Therefore, aathmaa is sentient in jaagrath and sentient in svapna; but, in sushupthi, the mind is 'dismantled' from the aathmaa." (The Naiyaayikaa, however, does not explain as to how this can happen, when aathmaa is all-pervading as he also believes?) Thus, the naiyaayikaa holds, that, chaithanyam is a temporary attribute, generated in the inert aathmaa, which generated chaithanyam is lost by aathmaa, during sushupthi avasthaa.

But, Advaita Vedhaanthaa does not agree. Sureswaraachaarya also points out : "This is not true experientially, since, if Consciousness is not there in sushupthi, we will not be talking about sushupthi itself, after waking up".

The sruthi pramaanam also clearly says "nahi dhrashtu: dhrushte: viparilobho vidhyathe avinaasathvaath" – "The vision of the witness (the Self) can never be lost, because it is imperishable" (Brahadharanyaka Upanishad IV.iii.23). Consciousness is never lost, not even in sushupthi avasthaa, Therefore, aathmaa and Consciousness never get dissociated, contrary to what the naiyaayikaa claims. Therefore, one cannot qualify saakshi as 'substance' and the 'Consciousness-Selfhood' pair as a temporarily emergent 'attribute'.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa declares 'bodha prathyakthvayo: bhidhaa na (asthi) – "for Selfhood and Consciousness, separation is not there".

Separation from what? The term 'saakshina:' meaning 'from saakshi' is to be supplied.

- (साक्षिणः) भिदा न दृष्टः - separation from saakshi is never seen.

'Na dhrushta:' means 'never proved / never recognized/ never perceived.

Not only can this pair, viz. 'Selfhood-Consciousness' pair, be ever separated from saakshi, this pair itself cannot be internally separated also, i.e. 'Selfhood' of the saakshi cannot be separated from 'Consciousness'.

The Aachaaryaa just stated that, this 'Selfhood-Consciousness' pair cannot be separated from saakshi, the third entity. In the next quarter of the verse, he says that, this pair itself, the 'Conscience and Selfhood' pair, cannot be separated to count as two different attributes.

- अथवा व्यभिचारः (न दृष्टः) - Separation can never be seen / proved
- (बोधप्रत्ययत्वयोः) - between Selfhood and Consciousness also.

'vyabhichara:' means 'deviation' or 'separation'.

Between what and what? Ans: Between Selfhood and Consciousness. Wherever there is Selfhood, there is Consciousness and wherever there is Consciousness, there is Selfhood. In short, "all these three (saakshi, Selfhood and Consciousness) are non separable from one another" is the essence.

The Aachaaryaa gives a counter example for this. What is the counter-example ? Ans: 'saakshi and ahamkaaraa', which are separable.

The previous three (saakshi, Selfhood and Consciousness) are non separable, unlike saakshi and ahamkaaraa which are separable.

- यथा - Unlike,
- अहं - ahamkaaraa (in this context, as interpreted by commentators).

An aside: Vedhaanthic students during the Aachaaryaa's lifetime, would have understood these slokas without a commentator's help, because, they would have thoroughly studied tharkaa, meemaamsaa and vyaakarana saasthraas before taking up the study of Vedhaantha saasthraa. But, current students, because of non-exposure to these saasthraas, are intellectually at a disadvantage. They have to depend on the commentaries or interpretations authored by later scholars.

- तद्विद :- and its saakshi (saakshi of ahamkaaraa),
Between ahamkaaraa and saakshi, there can be 'difference'; they are separable.
- सदा - (which are separable) always.

We should carefully understand that this is a counter example.

How is this fact, viz., 'ahamkaaraa and saakshi are separable' proved? The answer is simple. It is regularly proved, when we go to sleep.

During jaagrath avasthaa, the ahamkaaraa is active, awake and functioning, the primary function of ahamkaaraa being the 'reporting of the existence of the world'.

Ahamkaaraa alone reports the existence of the duality itself; duality can never be proved without ahamkaaraa. That is why, Ramana Maharshi, both in his Upadesa Saaraa and Sad Dharsanam, repeatedly says ahamkaaraa alone is responsible for the dualistic universe. When ahamkaaraa is there, dualistic universe is reported; when the ahamkaaraa is resolved, the dualistic universe also is resolved; even family problems are resolved.

In jaagrath and svapna avasthaas, saakshi is associated with ahamkaaraa ; to express it differently, 'I', the saakshi am associated with ahamkaaraa, during jaagrath and svapna avasthaas ; in sushupthi avasthaa, ahamkaaraa is resolved and even as ahamkaaraa is resolved, the universe also gets resolved by itself.

Verse 20 of Ramana Maharishi's Upadesa Saaram runs: "Ahami naasabhaaji aham ahamthayaa spurathy hruthsvayam paramapoornasath" – "When the ego is destroyed, the limitless, full Existence, that is Self, shines by Itself as 'I', 'I' ".

When ahamkaaraa is separated, 'I', the saakshi, am non-dual.

Sushupthi avasthaa is the proof for the possibility of / capacity for separation of ahamkaaraa, from 'I', the saakshi.

But, it should be carefully noted, in this context, that Advaita Vedhaanthaa does not say that ahamkaaraa is 'destroyed' in sushupthi ; ahamkaaraa only 'resolves', which is only ahamkaaraa's temporary absence. Only after Vedhaanthic study and assimilation, ahamkaaraa is 'destroyed', that too, in the sense, that, ahamkaaraa is 'falsified' through jnaanam.

'Falsification of ahamkaaraa' is the ultimate solution for samsaaraa. Resolution of ahamkaaraa can only be a temporary measure. During deep sleep, ahamkaaraa is resolved and the individual is happy; during nirvikalapa samaadhi also, ahamkaaraa is only resolved and not falsified. Coming out of samaadhi, the individual can, in fact, be more depressed and irritable, since he has temporarily enjoyed samaadhi aanandhaa and finds himself back in samsaaraa. Only in Vedhaanthaa, through mahaavaakya vichaaraa, undertaken during jaagrath avasthaa (obviously, not in samaadhi) the seeker understands (i) that, ahamkaaraa is separate from 'me' (ii) that, ahamkaaraa is a product of moolaavidhyaa (iii) that, ahamkaaraa is a false entity and (iv) that, ahamkaaraa cannot cause any disturbance in all the three periods of time. This falsification is called permanent removal of ahamkaaraa or advaita siddhi or naishkarmya siddhi. Ahamkaaraa, thankfully, is not an integral part of 'Me'.

Reverting to the text:

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 15 (Chapter III):

यस्मादज्ञानोपादानाया एव बुद्धेर्भेदो नात्मनस्तस्मादेतत्सिद्धम् ।

This is established, that divisions occur in the mind, which is an outcome of ignorance and never in the Self.

What follows is a consolidating sloka. What the Aachaaryaa has established is: "Mind is a substance, which has got Selfhood and Consciousness as attributes. Therefore, at the mental level 'substance-attribute' division is present. But, such a division is not present at saakshi level, though saakshi also has got Selfhood and Consciousness, as its features".

This is what has been arrived at, by the discussions, in the just completed portion. This is being consolidated in the next verse.

- बुद्धेः एव भेदः अस्ति : - There is a division only in the mind,

'Buddhi:' means 'mind', which is nothing but ahamkaara, because one of the definitions of ahamkaara, as discussed earlier, is "the 'mind', backed by 'chidhaabhaasaad ". Therefore, though only the word 'mind' is mentioned here, it means 'the mixture of mind and chidhaabhaasaad', which is ahamkaaraa.

The 'division' referred to, is in the form of 'substance' and 'attributes' – the attributes being 'empirical Selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness'.

During worldly transactions, the mind enjoys 'empirical Selfhood' and 'empirical Consciousness', and not 'absolute Selfhood' and 'absolute Consciousness'.

What type of mind?

- अज्ञान उपादानायाः - which is a product of moolaavidhyaa.

'Ajnaana upaadhaanaa' is a noun, meaning 'product of moolaavidhyaa'; it is used here, as adjective to buddhi: | Ajnaanam upaadhaana kaaranaam yasyaa: saa buddhi: yajnaana upaadhaanaayaa: buddhi:|

(An aside: There is a different method of studying these texts, based on Sanskrit grammar, which process is also equally interesting).

Why does the Aachaaryaa remind us of this (that, 'mind' is a product of 'moolaavidhya'), in this context? Ans: It is important to recollect this fact, because, only then, the unreality of the mind or ahamkaaraa will be remembered.

But, again, why is it necessary to remember the unreality of the mind?

Ans: During jaagrath 'I' get associated with the mind for the purpose of transactions. In sushupthi, 'I' get detached from ahamkaaraa, the mind. It follows, that, the moment one gets associated with ahamkaaraa, one is committed to duties, both family duties and social duties. And, for a normal individual, duties are burdensome / fearsome/ worrisome. Therefore, one will always hesitate to associate with ahamkaaraa.

Even a student exposed to saasthraas and Vedhaanthic studies might pray for videha mukthi, so that he will be permanently free from ahamkaaraa. The seeker might tend to think: "Association with ahamkaara is a problem; therefore, through videha mukthi, I should get permanently dissociated from ahamkaaraa". Therefore, it is important for a seeker to understand that ahamkaara is mithyaa, which will lead him to confidently think: "I am not worried by association with ahamkaara, because mithyaa ahamkaaraa will not and does not give me problems, through my association with it; in fact, mithyaa ahamkaaraa gives me 'entertainment' through the association". This realization is mokshaa.

The Vedhaanthic seeker should have the convictions: "Mithyaa ahamkaaraa does not give problems through its association. Therefore, my aim is not videha mukthi or permanently dissociating from ahamkaaraa. Mithyaa ahamkaaraa gives entertainment, through its association. Therefore, I am not worried with the 'false' association with 'false' ahamkaaraa. There is no real association in all the three periods of time. Why is there no real association? Ahamkaaraa itself is false. How can I have a 'real' association with 'false' ahamkaaraa ? Therefore, when am I free? I am free as saakshi, all the time. I have only taken to false ahamkaaraa for the sake of leelaa or entertainment. Therefore, I am not worried about jaagrath avasthaa; nor svapnaa avasthaa ; nor marana avasthaa ; nor moorchaa avasthaa ; nor pralaya avasthaa. All avasthaas are entertainment given to me, by false ahamkaaraa, which ahamkaaraa is a product of moolaavidhya".

That "ahamkaaraa is a product of moolaavidhya" was established by Sureswaraachaaryaa in the lengthy Introduction to this chapter.

- न आत्मनः - This 'substance-attribute' division is not there in the aathmaa.
- यस्मात् - Because of this reason,
- तस्मात् - consequently,
- एतद् सिद्धम् - the following Upanishadic teaching has been successfully arrived at.

The successful conclusion is "I need not look forward to mokshaa. This is because ahamkaara is welcome. Ahamkaaraa has got vaasanaa-based thoughts and emotions; it also has will-based thoughts and emotions. Let the ahamkaaraa continue to go through will-based thoughts and emotions and quite often the vaasanaa-based thoughts and emotions. Some of them are manageable / can be reduced; some of them are unmanageable / cannot be reduced. Let ahamkaaraa go through all these; but, I have nothing to do with them; 'I' am only the saakshi, the never-changing Witness. I have nothing against ahamkaaraa, because ahamkaaraa is 'mithyaa'. I have nothing against saakshi, because saakshi is wonderful. I have no complaint about either of them".

In short, mokshaa need not be sought after at all, since 'I' am ever free.

Verse 15 – Chapter III:

कूटस्थबोधतोऽद्वैतं साक्षात्त्वं प्रत्यगात्मनः। :

कूटस्थबोधाद्धोत्री धीः स्वतो हीयं विनश्वरी ॥ १५ ॥

The inmost Self is one and non-dual and has immediacy, because of its nature as unchanging Consciousness. But, the mind has the power of cognizing owing to the influence of that unchanging Consciousness. By itself, the mind is perishable.

- सिद्धम् (borrowed from sambhandha gadhyam) - The conclusion is, that,
- प्रत्यगात्मनः - for the prathyak aathmaa / the saakshi chiathanyam / the real 'I' / the thvam padha lakshyaartha,
- साक्षात्त्वं अद्वैतं सन्ति(- there are 'Absolute Selfhood' and 'freedom from division'.

'saakshaathvam' means 'absolute Selfhood'; 'advaitam', in this context, means 'freedom from division'.

What kind of division is kept in mind? Ans: 'Substance-attribute' division.

The seeker has to receive this message and must remember this message, even when varieties of situations arise. The seeker should successfully get out of the triangular (jeeva-jagath-Isvara) format, in which format ahamkaaraa appears 'real' and 'dominant', because of which the 'situations' appear as 'problems', and special prayers to Isvara are found necessary. In contrast, when the seeker diligently remembers that ahamkaaraa is false, the 'situation' will not be tagged 'problem'. It will be re-tagged ; the problem tag is removed and every situation will be considered as an 'entertainment', provided by mithyaa ahamkaaraa, with 'I', the saakshi, just observing the entertainment.

- एतद् सिद्धम् (again from the sambhandha gadhyam) - This conclusion is arrived at,
- कूटस्थ बोधतः - because of the 'absolute, changeless Consciousness' nature of saakshi chiathanyam.

'Kootastha bodhatha:' means 'Kottastha bodhaath hetho:' |

For the ahamkaaraa to be able to present this entertainment, 'I' have to be there. Ahamkaaraa is only the mind and the mind cannot give entertainment unless 'I' am there, blessing the mind with chidhaabhaasaa. (This is somewhat similar to the 'sensors' provided for modern day water taps, which open automatically to provide water, when the hand or receptacle is extended beneath the tap.)

When 'I' am there, the 'water' of life 'flows'; in sushupthi, the 'flow' stops temporarily.

132. Chapter III, Verse 15 to 17 (28-02-2009)

Explaining the lakshya-lakshana sambhandhaa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is differentiating the thvam padha vaachyaartha and the thvam padha lakshyaartha, in the mahaa vaakyam, 'thaththvamasi'.

He first points out, that, the thvam padha vaachyaartha is the mind and the thvam padha lakshyaartha is the aathmaa.

Having presented aathmaa as laksyaartha and mind as vaachyaartha, he then shows the difference between the aathmaa and the mind, as well as the relationship between the two.

The important differences between aathmaa and mind are:

- (i) aathmaa is the primary Self and mind is the secondary Self;
- (ii) aathmaa has got intrinsic Consciousness and mind has got borrowed Consciousness;
- (iii) aathmaa is the observer of the mind and mind is the observer of the world;
- (iv) aathmaa observes the mind without undergoing any change; but, mind observes the world by undergoing changes
- (v) aathmaa is the permanent observer of the mind ; but, mind is non-permanent observer of the world , because mind observes the world, only in the waking stage; mind does not observe the world all the time.
- (vi) aathmaa observes the mind without a will and an action; it observes by its mere presence; whereas the mind observes the world by action, not by its mere presence.
- (vii) aathmaa is the kaaranam and mind is the kaaryam .

Of these, the last fact, viz. aathmaa is the kaaranam and mind is the kaaryam, is in the sense that aathmaa, the primary Self generates the secondary Self, the mind, by lending Consciousness. Aathmaa can be and is Self without the help of the mind, but, mind becomes the self, only because of borrowing Consciousness from the aathmaa. Expressing it differently, if the aathmaa does not lend Consciousness to the mind, mind cannot become the secondary self.

All these differences should be remembered by a diligent Vedhaanthic student / seeker.

Sureswaraachaaryaa concedes: "In common parlance, the word 'thvam' would have meant the secondary Self, the mind" and proceeds "but, in Vedhaanthic parlance, the word 'thvam' should refer to the primary Self, aathmaa alone." And, their relationship is, that, the secondary self is the 'son' (kaaryam) and the primary self is the 'father' (kaaranam).

The Aachaaryaa is struggling to communicate all these differences; his job is understandably difficult, because aathmaa and mind cannot be physically separated during the jaagrath avasthaa. If only this were possible, i.e. if only aathmaa and mind could be separated during the jaagrath avasthaa, the Vedhaanthic teachers can more easily point out the differences between the two.

But, during jaagrath avasthaa, primary Self and secondary Self are always together and are both operational. Also, the secondary Self dominates the primary Self during jaagrath, the tangible proof being the 'mental worries' that the individual is subject to, when awake. The causes of worry may differ; but, presence of worry is permanent in jaagrath avasthaa, proving the domination of the secondary self over the primary Self.

The introduction to or the experience of the primary Self, without the domination by the secondary Self, can be had in the sushupthi avasthaa, when the mind, the secondary Self resolves and only 'I' remain, dominating as the primary Self, Aathmaa. But, unfortunately, instead of claiming this primary Self, the ajnaani concludes: "I am 'nothing' during sushupthi".

That is what Indira also said in the Prajapathi Vidhya - Chaandoghya Upanishad (Ch. VIII), during the teachings he received on 'viswa-thaijasa-praagnya-thuriya' stages. In the third stage of the teaching, without a clear understanding of the primary Self, Indira mistakenly says "During sushupthi, I surely get lost (vinaasameva apitha: bhavathi). I am 'nothing'". Then, Prajapathi has to correct him and teach him "During sushupthi you are not 'nothing'; you are the primary Self"

But, an important factor is to be noted in this context: To 'be' the primary Self, sushupthi avasthaa is enough. But, to 'claim' the primary Self (i.e. to claim "'I' am the primary Self") the seeker has to come back to jaagrath avasthaa and, ironically, use the instrumentality of the secondary Self, the mind. Using the secondary Self, 'I' claim "'I' am the primary Self".

'Guiding the student to understand this', is the job attempted by the Vedhaanthic guru, through the mahaavaakya vichaaraa.

"With the help of the secondary Self, I am claiming 'I' am the primary Self" is the essence of all these slokaas.

The first half of the sloka no. 15 deals with the primary Self and the second half deals with the secondary self. In the first half (as discussed in the earlier session), the Aachaaryaa said "kootastha bodhatha: advaitham saakshaathvam prathyaagaathmana." meaning "because the aathmaa has got changeless Consciousness, that (aathmaa) is the primary Self

/ the absolute Self, without any internal 'substance-attribute' division". 'Advaitam' means 'without any division', in this context.

In the second half, Sureswaraacharya says:

- धीः बोद्धी(भवति) - The mind becomes the secondary Self / the observer of the external world,

'Bhodhree' means 'observer / knower of the external world'; 'dhee:' means 'mind'. 'Bhodree' is 'feminine' form of 'Bhodhad', which word is of masculine gender; since 'dhee:' is 'feminine', the word 'bhodhree' is used, instead of 'bhodhad'.

How does the mind become the 'knower of the world'?

- कूटस्थ बोधात् - because of the borrowed Consciousness of the aathmaa.

An important factor to be noted, in this context: Since it is said 'Consciousness of the aathmaa, it may appear that there is a 'substance-attribute' relationship between the two. Strictly speaking, the term, 'of aathma' should not be used, since aathmaa and Consciousness are not different. Aathmaa is Consciousness and Consciousness is aathmaa. But, obviously, one has to use language for expressing / communicating ideas and in the process of using language, such compromises become inevitable.

This problem is explained by an expression, 'raaho: siravath shashti'; 'raho: sira:' means the 'head of raahu'. According to mythology, an asuraa, in the form of a snake, was cut into two, by Lord Vishnu; the head part of the asuraa became Rahu and the tail part became Kethu. Therefore, really speaking, the expression 'head of Raahu' or 'Raaho: sira:' should not be used, since Raahu itself is the head. But, the expression 'raho: sira:' is commonly used to be more explicit. Just as in that expression, the shashti vibakthi / the preposition 'of', has no meaning and the 'head of Raahu' means only Raahu, in a similar manner, 'Conscience of aathma' means only 'Consciousness, the aathma'. The preposition 'of' is only figurative.

From the Consciousness of the aathmaa, (i.e. from the Consciousness, 'borrowed' from aathmaa), the mind becomes the secondary observer called ahamkaara:, which is the thvam padha vaachyaartha: |

- अयं हि - Further, this mind/ the secondary Self,

- स्वतः :- by itself,
- विनश्यती - is subject to dissolution.

Unlike the primary Self which is permanent, the secondary self is impermanent. During sushupthi, the secondary self is gone. What is the proof? During sushupthi, the world is not observed. During moorchaa, the secondary self is gone; the world is not observed. During maranam, the secondary self is gone; the world is not observed. During pralayam, the secondary self is gone; the world is not observed.

In nirvikalpaka samaadhi also, if all the thoughts are removed, the secondary self/ the mind also will go; in 'thoughtless' nirvikalpaka samaadhi, the primary Self will be there alright; but, the primary Self cannot claim "'I' am the primary Self ". That is why the Advaita Vedhaanthin says, that, nirvikalpaka samaadhi is not useful for jnaanam, if nirvikalpaka samaadhi is a 'thoughtless' stage. And, that is why, the Advaita Vedhaanthin further advises the seeker: "Never aim for a 'thoughtless' stage in meditation; even if you choose to practice meditation, the mind should be kept alert and active. Only then, the secondary self will be available. Only when the secondary self is available, you can claim "'I' am the primary Self".

When the seeker does mano naasam, the result will be, that, though the seeker will be the primary Self alone, it will be of no use for him / her, because he / she cannot claim "'I' am the primary Self". Whereas, mokshaa requires this 'claiming' that "'I' am the primary Self". Just 'being' the primary Self does not help 'liberation'; every samsaari is primary Self 'alone', in sushupthi. In fact, the seeker is primary Self all the time, coupled with secondary self during jaagrath and 'alone' as primary Self, during sushupthi; but, it is "'claiming' the primary Self" that gives liberation.

That 'claiming' requires jaagrath avasthaa ; that 'claiming' requires the mind ; that 'claiming' requires the deep, precious thought "aham brahma asmi", which thought, ironically, has to be entertained by the secondary Self. Through that alone, the seeker has to claim "'I' am the primary Self".

Therefore the Aachaaryaa warns 'Iyam hi svatha; vinaswaree', where, 'iyam' denotes the 'buddhi:' / the secondary self; 'svatha:' means 'by itself' and 'vinaswaree' means 'impermanent'. 'Vinasevaree' is sthree lingaa, because, the word 'buddhi:' is sthree lingaa.

What is to be importantly noted is: 'Using the secondary' self is harmless. Not only is it harmless but, 'using the secondary self' is highly useful and necessary also. Even to attempt Vedhaanthic study and study of texts such as 'Naishkarmya siddhi', the seeker has to use the secondary self. Therefore, the aim of Vedhaanthaa is not 'rejection of the ego'; but, is 'use of the ego' to claim "I am not the ego'.

"Use the precious 'ego' to claim 'I am not the 'ego'; 'ego' is my instrument.' I' am the primary Self, the aathmaa, user of the 'ego' " should be the realization. This is nithya mukthi.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 16 – Chapter III:

अथाधुना प्रकृतस्यैव परिणामिनः कूटस्थस्य च लक्षणमुच्यते ।

Now the definitions of the 'changing entity' and the 'unchanging reality' are given:

In the following slokaa, another important difference between the primary Self, the aathmaa, and the secondary self, the mind, is highlighted by the Aachaaryaa, the difference being, that, the primary Self is 'changeless observer', observing by its mere presence, while secondary self is 'changing observer', observing by undergoing thought modifications. (This difference has been included in the 'list of differences' enumerated earlier, numbered as (iv)).

- अथाधुना - Hereafter / in the following slokaa
- लक्षणं - the distinct nature(s),
- परिणामिनः - of the changing secondary self, viz., the mind
- कूटस्थस्य च - and of the changeless primary Self, which is the aathmaa,

One (the mind) is thvam padha vaachyaarthaa and the other (the aathmaa) is thvam padha lakshyaarthaa.

- प्रकृतस्य एव - which is (are) the topic(s) of discussions

'Prakrutham' means 'current topic', which is mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. The primary Self and the secondary Self will have to be discussed, as parts of the vichaaraa.

- उच्यते - are being given.

The lakshanam(s) given here are very beautiful definitions. The Aachaaryaa explains as to what the 'changing entity' is and what the 'changeless entity' is.

'Changing entity' is that entity, some of the features of which, change; but, whose continuity nevertheless, is recognized by means of what can be termed the 'recognition process', which process consists in 'noting the changeless features'. For instance, when one comes across a known person, though one notes changes in some of the features of that individual, since the time one met the individual last (the earlier dark coloured hair changing into grey coloured hair etc.), there will be certain unchanged / common features also, because of which one recognizes that known individual. Those unchanged / common features help in arriving at the conclusion, 'that person is this person', which is called the 'process of recognition'. When the identity is thus recognized, through the unchanged / common features, the changed / uncommon features are also noticed. But, the 'oneness' is established because of the common continuous features. In other words, the saamaanya dharmaa: help in establishing the 'oneness' of the entity.

'Oneness' is the recognition such as 'that Rama is this Rama', 'that Devadhaththaa is this Devadhaththaa', 'that Swami Omkaranandha is this Swamiji' etc. In the incident referred to, in an earlier session, many people, who had not recognized Swami Omkaranandha for more than an hour during the Puja, because of changes in his appearance, recognized his voice, when the Swamiji started his speech, and remarked 'Oh! It is that Omkaranandha'.

In this incident, it was the voice of Swami Omkaranandha which was unchanged / the saamaanya dharma, which helped in recognition of the 'oneness' of the entity, in and through his changed physical features.

Thus, 'ParinaamI' is that, which has got saamaanya dharmaa: / unchanged features / common features and also visesha dharmaa: / changed features / uncommon features. The saamaanya dharmaa: / common features help in recognition of the 'oneness' / continuity of the entity. The visesha dharmaa: / the changed features / uncommon features reveal the 'changes' in the 'ParinaamI'.

The two combined features, 'saamaanya + visesha dharmaa:', is the lakshanam of a changing entity. This definition is given in this verse no. 16.

Why does the Aachaaryaa give this definition? Ans: He wants to say that the secondary self is the changing self; that, Ahamkaaraa, the ego, is the parinaami aham / the changing entity. 'That the primary Self is the changeless aham' is covered in the next sloka.

Chapter III: Verse 16 –

विशेषं कंचिदाश्रित्य यत्स्वरूपं प्रतीयते ।

प्रत्यभिज्ञानप्रमाणेन परिणामि स देहवत् ॥ १६ ॥

What gets apprehended through recognition as one and continuous, in and through differences, is the changing phenomenon, like the body.

- यत्स्वरूपं प्रतीयते - The continuity of a changing substance is known
- प्रत्यभिज्ञाप्रमाणेन - by means of the process of 'recognition',

What is this 'process of recognition'?

In the saasthraas, the 'recognition process' is clearly explained. A Vedhaanthic student should clearly understand the process. The process has three stages or phenomena. The first stage / phenomenon is called 'cognition'. When one sees an individual / an object for the first time, it is called 'cognition'; 'cognition' is the result of prathyaksha pramaanam. The second stage / phenomenon is, that, even after the individual goes away/ the object is removed, the individual / the object is 'remembered'. That phenomenon / stage is 'remembrance'. When the individual / object is seen a second time, and understood as 'that is this', it is the third stage / phenomenon, termed 'recognition'.

The 'recognition process' can be further explained by a simple example, as below:

"Suppose I see a person for the first time, introduced to me, as Rama. I get to know him as Rama. This is 'cognition', when there is thought, as 'ayam Raama:'; Rama vrutthi is there. After Rama leaves my presence, I remember him and in that 'remembrance' also, there is thought, but, as 'sa: Raama:' | Rama vrutthi is there in 'remembrance' also; but, Rama is not in front of me. When I have Rama vrutthi, when Rama is in front of me, the vrutthi is 'ayam Rama:' / When I have Rama vrutthi, without Rama in front of me, the vrutthi is 'sa: Raama:' | 'Ayam Raama:' is 'cognition'; 'sa: Raama:' is 'remembrance'. But, in both, i.e. in 'cognition' and in 'remembrance', Rama vrutthi is there, in 'cognition' with Rama in front and in 'remembrance' with Rama not in front.

"Now, suppose Rama comes in front of me for a second time, and I see him. Can it be called cognition? No, it cannot be called 'cognition', since the word 'cognition' is to be used only when Rama is perceived for the first time. But, this is not the first time. Therefore it is not 'cognition'. Then, can it be called 'remembrance'? Again, no, because, in 'remembrance' Rama will not be in front of me; he will be away. But, in this instance of Rama coming for a second time, Rama is in front of me. Since Rama is in front, it is not 'remembrance' also.

"Thus, it is neither 'cognition' nor 'remembrance'. Then, what is it? Ans: It is 'recognition'; i.e. I have re-cognized the previously cognized Rama.

"How is the 'recognition' expressed? Ans: As 'Sa: Rama: ayam Rama:' – 'the previously cognized Rama is the Rama I am cognizing now'. Thus, in 'recognition', two Rama-s are involved:

- (i) the previously cognized Rama, and
- (ii) the presently cognized Rama.

I equate both of them as one Rama, because they have some common features, even though they may have some uncommon features also.

"I notice the common features (saamaanya dharmaa:) between the two Rama-s , because of which common features, I equate the two Rama –s; but, I also notice some uncommon features (visesha dharmaa:), because of which , I get to know that Rama is a 'changing' person.

"Previously cognized Rama is presented as 'sa: Rama:''; presently cognized Rama is called 'ayam Rama:' | Therefore, in all 'recognitions' both the words 'sa:'' and 'ayam'' must come. 'Soyam'' is the typical factor in all 'recognitions'.

"To consolidate: In 'cognition', the word 'ayam'' is used, as 'ayam Rama:''; in 'remembrance', the word 'sa:'' is used, as 'sa: Rama:''; in 'recognition', the compound word 'soyam'' is used, as 'soyam Rama:''. In 'soyam Rama:'', both the changeless, saamanyaa dharmaa: and the changing , visesha dharmaa: are kept in mind. And I equate both Rama-s, as 'soyam''."

In Sanskrit, 'cognition' is called 'prathyaksham''; 'remembrance' is called 'smrithi:'' and 'recognition' or 'recognition' is called 'prathyabhijnyaa''.

Every 'prathyabhijnyaa'' involves the two components, 'prathyaksham'' and 'smrithi:'' | Expressed arithmetically, 'Prathyaksham' + 'Smrithi:'' = 'Prathyabhijnyaa''.

In the compound term 'soyam'', the 'sa:'' part is 'remembrance', 'ayam'' part is 'cognition' and the combination 'soyam'' is 'recognition'. To express in Sanskrit, 'sa:'' part is 'smrithi:'', 'ayam'' part is 'prathyaksham'' and 'soyam'' combination is called 'prathyabhijnyaa''. Every 'prathyabhijnyaa'' reveals the continuity of a 'changing entity'.

Coversely, whatever is revealed by 'prathyabhijnyaa'' is called 'a changing entity'. 'Prathyabhijnyaa: vishaya:'' is 'the changing entity'.

Reverting to the text (verse 16):

- यत्स्वरूपं प्रतीयते - Whatever gets apprehended
- प्रत्यभिज्ञाप्रमाणेन - through the 'process of recognition',
- सः - that entity,
- परिणामि - is a 'changing entity' ,

An example is given for 'parinaami'.

- देहवत् - like the body,
- विशेषं कंचित् आश्रित्य - because of some 'changing special features',

'Visesham' means 'changing special feature'. What is meant by 'changing special feature'? Ans: A current feature which was not there earlier.

To understand this term 'visesham' more clearly, the earlier cited example of Swami Omkarananada may again be taken up. The voice of the Swamiji had not changed and is, therefore, termed the saamaanya dharma, i.e. as 'common feature' between the Swamiji known in the past and the Swamiji now present.

The unchanged voice helped in 'equating' the two Swamijis, the past and the present, and therefore, in the 'recognition' of the Swamiji. But, some of his other features such as jata, facial hair etc. were not there earlier, and are the therefore his 'changed features, termed 'visesham' in Sanskrit.

All 're-cognized entities' are called parinaami – 'changing entity'. Human body is parinaami / 'Mind' (ahamkaaraa) also is a parinaami |

In this verse, the 'thvam padha vaachyaarthaad' viz., ahamkaaraa has been talked about. The next verse talks about the thvam padha lakshyaarthaad, viz., aathmaa, the 'changeless entity'.

Chapter III: Verse 17 –

सामान्याच्च विशेषाच्च स्वमहिम्नैव यो भवेत् ।

व्युत्थायाप्यविकारी स्यात्कुम्भाकाशादिवत्तु सः ॥ १७ ॥

What, by its own nature, transcends the universal and particular determinations as their witness and abides by itself without any change whatever, is called unchanging like the space transcending the limiting condition of a jar.

Whereas (i.e. having discussed about 'mind'), what about aathmaa?

- यः भवेत् - That which remains
- अविकारी - as a 'changeless entity',

Body changes; mind changes; chidhaabhaasaa also has to undergo changes. When the mind is dull, the absorbing capacity of chidhaabhaasaa also comes down. Chidhaabhaasaa changes. Chith remains changeless.

How?

- स्वमहिम्ना एव - by its own glory,

Ahamkaaraa 'is', but, not because of its own glory; it has got only borrowed glory, chidhaabhaasaa, whereas, aathmaa has svamahimaa. It remains the saakshi / the 'changeless Observer', by its own intrinsic Consciousness.

- व्युत्थाय - transcending
- सामान्याच्च - saamaanya dharma-s / general attributes

Aathmaa, unlike the mind which has got its own common attribute viz. that of being 'matter', does not have any common / universal attribute. Thoughts of the mind may be 'changing'; but, bhudhikathva dharma (materiality) is always there for the mind. That is the saamaanya dharma of the mind, and, in fact, of any other object.

- विशेषाच्च - and also visesha dharma-s / particular attributes,

This is a very important concept, discussed in Vedhaanthaa. Aathmaa should be presented as that which is beyond saamaanyam and visesham, 'saamaanyam' meaning 'generality' and 'visesham' meaning 'particularity'.

Whatever is 'saamaanyam' / 'general' will be associated with 'particular' and whatever is 'particular' will have relationship with 'saamaanyam' / 'general'. How and why? Ans: Anything

'general' is associated with 'particular', because, the very word 'general' is that, which is in and through all the 'particulars'. Anything 'particular' is called 'particular', only because it is associated with 'general', since without association with 'general', the very word 'particular' is meaningless.

Therefore, 'saamaanyam' and 'visesham' have got non-separable relationship. This is one important fact to be noted.

A consequent fact is, that, when visesha undergoes change, saamaanya being related, is also influenced by the change. The continuity of Saamaanyaa is there; but it is influenced by the change, because, it has got a relationship with the changing viseshaa.

It follows, therefore, that, if aathmaa comes under either saamaanyam or visesham, it will become a 'changing entity'. It will be 'eternal but eternally changing', similar to matter. Whereas, aathmaa is beyond both saamaanyam and visesham.

A more detailed explanation / analysis of this topic will be given in the next session.

At this juncture, it is enough to note the following: "We have got two types of 'eternity'.

"One is 'changing eternity' and the other is 'changeless entity'. Matter comes under 'changing eternity'; it is 'eternal entity' – but, is 'changing eternal entity'. There is continuity for matter, for it is 'matter' all the time; but it is changing matter. The eternity is 'changing eternity'.

"Consciousness is also eternal but it is a 'changeless eternity'.

"Matter has got saamaanyaa and visesha. Consciousness has neither."

- सःस्यात् - is the thvam padha lakshyaartha:, called the aathmaa .

The Aachaaryaa gives an example, for the 'changelessness and limitless' of the aathmaa.

- कुम्भ आकाशादिवत् - (This aathmaa is 'unchanging and limitless') similar to 'space' in a jar, but, which transcends the limiting condition of the jar

133. Chapter III, Verse 17 to 19 (07-03-2009)

Sureswaraachaarya is differentiating between the 'thvam padha vaachyaarthaa', which is the 'mind' or 'ahamkaaraa' and the 'thvam padha lakshyaarthaa', which is the 'aathmaa'. The differences between 'aathmaa' and 'mind' are presented by him.

In the previous session, the differences were given in the form of a chart. In view of the importance of the topic, they are listed out again, as below:

- (i) aathmaa is the primary Self and mind is the secondary Self;
- (ii) aathmaa has got intrinsic Consciousness and mind has got borrowed Consciousness;
- (iii) aathmaa is the 'perceiver' of the mind and mind is the 'perceiver' of the world;
- (iv) aathmaa is the permanent 'perceiver' of the mind ; but, mind is the temporary perceiver of the world;
- (v) aathmaa is changeless 'perceiver' ; mind is changing 'perceiver'.
- (vi) aathmaa's 'perception' requires only its mere presence; mind's 'perception' requires a process.

These are the main differences between 'thvam padha vaachyaarthaa', the mind and 'thvam padha lakshyaarthaa', aathmaa.

In the context of mahaavaakyam 'thath thvam asi', only the lakshyaarthaa should be taken for the word 'thvam' and not the vaachyaarthaa.

In these two verses 16 and 17, Sureswaraachaarya is highlighting the 'changing nature' of the mind and the 'changeless nature' of the aathmaa.

Mind is subject to change and therefore, is called parinaami | Aathmaa is not subject to change and therefore, called kootastha: | Sureswaraachaarya is presenting here, the differentiation between the 'parinaami mana:' and 'kootastha aathmaa' | The Aachaaryaa is presenting it in a particular language, which the student has to understand.

Whenever any 'change' is talked about, it requires two things; i.e., any 'change' presupposes two things. One is the 'locus' of the change. The other is the 'witness' of the change.

What is the difference between the 'locus' of the change and the 'witness' of the change?
Ans: 'Locus' of the change is that entity which is the 'possessor' of the change and which is affected by the change. Whereas, 'witness' of the change is not a 'possessor' of the change and is not affected by the change also.

To repeat in other words: One is 'possessor' and the other is 'non-possessor'. One is 'affected' and the other in 'non-affected'. The 'possessor, affected one' is called 'locus' and the 'non-possessor, non-affected one' is called 'witness'.

Whenever the property of 'change' is talked about, both the 'locus' and 'witness' are involved. And, Sureswaraachaarya points out that mind is the (i) possessor of 'change' (ii) the 'locus' of 'change' and (iii) is affected by 'change'.

In contrast, aathmaa is the 'witness' of the change and therefore is neither the possessor of the 'change', nor is the affected party.

Therefore, mind is called 'parinaami' and aathmaa is called 'kootastha:', which word only means 'aparinaami'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa further says that both the 'locus' of the change and the 'witness' of the change are understood only through 'prathyabhignyaa pramaanam' i.e., during 'the process of recognition'. This is a very important and unique proposition made by this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi.

This proposition / concept is explained by a simple analogy, as below:

"When you are visiting the aasthika samaajam hall for the first time, you are 'cognizing' the hall. When you are thus cognizing the hall for the first time, can you talk about a 'change' in the hall? Can you say 'the aasthika samaajam hall has changed'? The answer is obviously 'no', since you see the hall for the first time. When you are visiting the hall for the first time and therefore, without the knowledge of how the hall looked earlier, you can never talk about the hall as 'changed' or as a 'locus' of change. If and when you say 'the hall has changed', then, it is not your first-time perception of the hall. You can talk about any change in the hall, only when you are visiting the hall for the second time. And, when you are visiting the hall for the second time, are you 'cognizing' the hall or 're-cognizing' the hall? It is 're-cognition'. Only at the time of recognition, when you perceive the hall for the second time, you can recognize changes, if any, such as 'the hall has been re-painted' or 'the previously dilapidated hall has been renovated' etc. The conclusion, therefore, is that the 'locus' of the change can be known through 'recognition' only. In other words, a parinaami vasthu is known as parinaami vasthu, only through or during 'prathyabhignyaa'.

"Similarly, witness of the change also can be known only through prathyabhignyaa. Going back to the aasthika samaajam hall example, during the first visit, i.e. in the first 'cognition', you could not talk of a 'change' in the hall and therefore, you could not talk of yourself as 'witness' of any 'change'. Only during the second or subsequent visits, when, changes, if any, are noticed and you can talk of the changes and therefore, you can talk of yourself as 'witness' of the changes. You were 'witness' of the previous condition of the hall and later you are a 'witness' of the changed condition of the hall also. It follows, therefore, that, the 'witness' of the 'change' is also known through 're-cognition' or 'prathyabhignyaa' only.

"In the above example, the aasthika samaajam hall is the 'locus' and you are the 'witness' and both 'locus' and 'witness' are known during the second visit only or through 'recognition' or 'prathyabhignyaa' " .

The difference between the locus and witness is: "'Locus' is the possessor of the change and is affected by the change. 'Witness' is neither the possessor nor is the affected one".

And, Sureswaraacharya points out: "Whenever you refer to yourself as 'I am the changing one, the possessor of the change and affected by change', the word 'I' refers to the parinaami ahamkaara; the mind or the parinaami body . Alternately, if and when you refer to yourself as only the 'witness' of the change, not the possessor and nor the affected one, the word 'I' refers to aathmaa, the saakshi".

Therefore, what is the difference between mind and aathmaa? Ans: "When I am the possessor of the change, I am the mind. When I say that I am witness of the change I am the saakshi. One is affected by the change; another is unaffected by the change".

A further factor is to be noted: The 'locus' of the change is present in and through the change as the possessor of the change. 'Witness' of the change is also in and through the change but not affected by the change. In other words, the parinaami is also continuous and the 'witness' also is continuous.

To consolidate: Continuity is there for the 'locus' of the change; continuity is there for the 'witness' of the change also. The continuous 'locus' is the affected one; the continuous 'witness' is the unaffected one. Mind is the continuous 'locus', the affected one; Consciousness is the continuous 'witness', the unaffected one. The 'continuous, affected locus and the 'continuous, unaffected witness' are both known through / during prathyabhignyaa.

And, to differentiate the 'continuous, affected locus' from the 'continuous, unaffected witness', specific Sanskrit terms are used for both:

- The 'continuous, affected locus' is called 'saamaanyam' .
- The 'continuous, unaffected witness' is called 'nissamaanyam' .

Mind is saamaanyam, which is the possessor of visesham and affected by visesham. Whereas aathmaa has neither visesham nor is saamaanyam. The definition for aathmaa is 'nissaamaanya visesham' – 'continuous witness, which does not possess any visesham'.

In the 16th sloka, Sureswaraachaaryaa talked about mind as the saamanya amsaa, which possesses the visesham; in the 17th verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa says aathmaa is the 'continuous witness' of visesham, but, neither saamaanyam nor possessor of visesham.

Reverting to the verse no. 17:

- यः - Aathmaa, which is the continuous 'witness',
- व्युत्थाय - which (aathmaa) transcends
- सामान्याच्च - the continuous mind, which is the locus of the change,
'Saamaanyam' refers to the continuous mind, which is the 'locus' of the change, the possessor of the change and is affected by the change. Aathmaa is different from that mind.
- विशेषाच्च -- and the changing attributes also,

In short, aathmaa is different from the changing attributes and aathmaa is different from the changing locus also. It is neither the attribute nor the locus of the attribute. It is the 'changeless witness'.

- स :- that aathmaa
- अविकारी स्यात् - is called 'unchanging' / 'changeless'

Like what? An example is given.

- कुम्भ आकाशादिवत् - like the ghataakaasa thathvam.

'Ghataakaasam' means 'pot space'. How is the example to be applied? Ans: The pot space is in and through the change but not the locus of the change. When the pot is broken i.e., when the condition of the pot changes, the space in the pot does not change. The pot is the 'locus' of the change; but, pot-space is not the 'locus' of change. In a similar manner, Consciousness is also in and through change; but not the 'locus' of the change, unlike the mind which is also in and through the change but is the 'locus' of the change.

The word 'locus' is used to refer to an entity which itself changes when exposed to a change. Conversely, when an entity is said to be 'not the locus', it means that 'the entity itself does not undergo change'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 18 and 19 – Chapter III:

आत्मनो बुद्धेश्च बोधप्रत्यगात्मत्वमभिहितं तयोरसाधारणलक्षणाभिधानार्थमाह ।

To both the Self and the mind, Consciousness and immediacy were ascribed. Now their distinctive natures are definitely elucidated:

To recap the recent discussions: Matter is also eternal; Consciousness is also eternal. Matter is the 'locus' of all the changes; therefore, it is 'changing eternity' or 'parinaami nithyam'. Consciousness is also eternal, but, is only the 'witness' of all the changes, not subject to change. Therefore, it is 'changeless eternity' / 'kootastha nithyam'. This important difference between the 'locus' and the 'witness', between 'matter' and 'Consciousness' should be noted and remembered.

Now, in the sloka following this sambhandha gadhyam, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about some other differences between mind and aathmaa. In the sambhandha gadhyam, he says:

- आत्मनः बुद्धेश्च - For the aathmaa and the mind,
- बोधप्रत्यगात्मत्वं अभिहितं - 'sentiency' and 'selfhood' have been ascribed .

'Bodha' means 'sentiency' / 'chethanathvam'. Sentiency is there for the mind also and sentiency is there for the aathmaa also; i.e., 'Chethanathvam' is common to both the mind and the aathmaa. Similarly, 'prathyagaathmathvam', meaning 'selfhood', is also mentioned for the mind as well as aathmaa. Mind was called 'secondary self'; aathmaa was called 'primary Self'. 'Selfhood' is common to both. What do you mean by 'selfhood'? Ans: It means "can be referred to by the word 'I' ". 'Prathyagaathmathvam' or 'selfhood' means 'aham sabhda vishayathvam'.

When an individual says "I am emotional", he / she is referring to his / her secondary self, the mind. The word 'I' is used, in this context, to refer to the secondary self, the mind. But, if and when the same individual claims 'aham Brahma asmi', the very word aham / 'I' is used to refer to the changeless aathmaa. Thus, the opportunity / possibility of being referred to, by the word 'I', is called 'selfhood' and 'selfhood' is attributed to both aathmaa and mind. Sentiency is also attributed to both aathmaa and mind.

This gives rise to the question: "If 'selfhood' and 'sentiency' are common to both, what is the difference between the 'selfhood' of the mind and that of the aathmaa; and, similarly, what is the difference between the 'sentiency' of the mind and that of the aathmaa?"

- अभिधानार्थम् - For the purpose of teaching,
'abhidhaanam' means 'teaching'
- असाधारणलक्षणम् - the distinctions
- तयोः - between these two (viz., the 'selfhood' of the mind and that of the aathmaa; and the 'sentiency' of the mind and that of the aathmaa)
- आह - the author is presenting the following verses.

The Aachaaryaa is presenting the following two slokas, to highlight the distinguishing features of the two 'sentiency-s' and the two 'selfhood-s'.

Chapter III: Verse 18 –

बुद्ध्यन्तप्रत्यगात्मत्वं तत्स्याद्देहाद्युपाश्रयात् ।

आत्मन्स्तु स्वरूपं तन्नभसः सुषिता यता ॥ १८ ॥

The mind can be regarded as the inner self only relatively to the body etc., but being the inmost self is the intrinsic essence of the real Self, even as spaciousness is the essence of space.

Of course this is a known idea, which the Aachaaryaa is crystallizing here.

- प्रत्यगात्मत्वं यत् तत् - The selfhood of the mind
- देहादि उपाश्रयात् स्यात् - is (only) from the standpoint of the external body.

From the standpoint of the external physical body, the mind is called 'I' or 'subject'. When you are looking at the body, the mind becomes the 'subject', the 'self'. But, when the mind itself is objectified, at that time, the mind becomes the non-self and Consciousness becomes the self. In other words, mind's selfhood is only when you are objectifying the body. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says 'dehaadhi upaasrayaath' meaning 'from the standpoint of the body'.

Referring to the chart of differences discussed earlier, it was said that, "when aathmaa is the 'perceiver', the mind is the 'perceived' " and also that, "when the mind is the 'perceiver', the world is the 'perceived' ". Therefore, if the question "Is the mind the 'perceiver' or the 'perceived'?" is asked, there can be no immediate answer, since the mind has got 'dual' status and therefore, the question itself would need further clarification.

Mind is called a 'perceiver' from the standpoint of the world; whereas, from the standpoint of aathmaa, mind is no more the 'perceiver'; it becomes the 'perceived'. Therefore, from the standpoint of the world, mind becomes the 'subject', whereas, from the standpoint of aathmaa, it cannot be referred to, by the word 'I'; it should become an 'object' only.

Thus, the mind will be referred to, by the word 'I', when it gets the subjective status, from the standpoint of the world. Mind cannot be referred to by the word 'I', when it gets the objective status, from the standpoint of aathmaa.

This is the essence of the Aachaaryaa's statement "dehaadhi upaasrayaath buddhe: prathyagaathmathvam syaath" – "from the standpoint of the body and the world, the mind has got 'perceiver' status / 'subject status / selfhood'".

Then, what about aathmaa? Sureswaraachaarya says:

- आत्मनः तु - Whereas , for the aathmaa,

When does aathmaa enjoy 'the perceiver' status ? Mind enjoys 'the perceiver' status from the standpoint of the world, whereas it has only 'the perceived' status from the standpoint of aathmaa. In contrast, aathmaa enjoys 'the perceiver' status all the time ; because aathmaa is never / at no time perceived.

- प्रत्यगात्मत्वं - the 'perceiver' status / the 'subject' status
- स्वरूपं - is intrinsic / absolute.

Like what? An example is given.

- नभसः सुषिता यथा - like the 'hollowness' of the sky.

'Nabhas' means 'aakaasa.'| 'Sushitha' means 'hollowness', which, in turn, indicates, 'capacity to accommodate objects'. Other examples may also be quoted, such as, the 'heat of the fire' / the 'coldness of ice' etc. Similar to the 'accommodating capacity' of space, the 'heat of the fire' and the 'coldness of ice', which are all intrinsic or absolute to space, fire and ice respectively, the prathyagaathmathvam of the Consciousness is also intrinsic or absolute.

In simple language, "mind's self hood is relative; aathma's selfhood is absolute."

Chapter III: Verse 19 –

बोद्धृत्वं तद्वदेवास्याः प्रत्ययोत्पत्तिहेतुतः ।

आतमनस्तु स्वरूपं तत्तिष्ठन्तीव महीभूतः ॥ १९ ॥

The cognizing power of the mind is relative to its being the cause of mental presentations. But, the consciousness of the Self is its intrinsic essence, like the stability of a mountain.

In the previous sloka, the difference between the 'selfhood' of the mind and the 'selfhood' of aathmaa was presented. Here, in this verse, the difference between the 'awaring capacity' or 'sentiency' of the mind and the 'awareness' or 'sentiency' of the aathmaa is discussed.

One difference is that aathmaa has got intrinsic 'sentiency', while, mind has got only borrowed 'sentiency'.

But, here, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about another difference. What is that? Ans: The sentiency of the mind requires thought modification all the time, whereas, Aaathmaa's awareness is its very svaroopam.

To explain in detail: Mind enjoys awareness of things, only by undergoing thought modifications. To become aware of the world, it requires 'world thought (idham vrutthi)'; to become aware of itself, the mind requires 'I' thought (aham vrutthi).

In other words, mind's 'awareness of things' or 'self awareness', requires vrutthi parinaama. That's why in sushupthi, when the vrutthis are resolved, the mind is neither aware of the world nor aware of itself. In sushupthi, mind does not entertain thoughts; therefore it is neither aware of the world (because 'idham vrutthi' is absent); it is not aware of itself also (because 'aham vrutthi' is absent). In short, awareness of the mind requires a process.

Whereas, when you talk of the awareness of the aathmaa, in that context, the Consciousness is not a process; it is not based on vrutthi parinaama. 'Thought process' is not involved. Aaathmaa's awareness is its very svaroopam. It is not a faculty derived from thought modifications.

Referring to the sloka (verse 17):

- तद्वदेव - In a similar manner,

- अस्याः बोद्धृत्वं - the self awareness and world awareness of the mind,
(In this context, the term 'self awareness' is used to mean 'mind awareness').
- प्रत्यय उत्पत्ति हेतुतः - are only because of the 'rise' (and fall) of thoughts;

'prathyaya.' means 'thought'. When the student listens to the teacher, he / she is 'aware' of the teacher's words; he / she is 'aware' of the external world ; but, at that time he / she is not deliberately 'self-aware', in the form of "I am sitting ; I am listening" etc. He / she is not entertaining such thoughts. That's why, quite often, the absorbed student says "I forgot myself during the class". This 'forgetting' is because of absence of aham vrutthi in the mind of the student. But, if the teacher, at that time, questions the student 'how are you?', the aham vrutthi is deliberately entertained/ brought into action by the student and he / she talks about himself / herself, his / her physical condition, mental condition etc. This shows that the 'awareness' of the mind requires the 'thought process'.

'Prathyaya' means thought; 'uthpatthi' means rise ; 'hethutha.' means 'caused by'. This alone is meant by 'thought process'. Thought process is involved in mental awareness.

- आत्मनः तु - whereas, for the Self,
- बोद्धृत्वं स्वरूपं - the Consciousness / awareness is intrinsic.

The 'awareness' of the aathmaa is not the result of a process that happens in the aathmaa. Then, can it be said that 'Consciousness' / 'awareness' is an attribute of the aathmaa? Ans: No, this has also been negated before. It was pointed out earlier, (while discussing the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 15) that the 'mind' and 'awareness' have got 'substance-attribute' relationship, whereas aathmaa and 'awareness' do not have even 'substance-attribute' relationship. Therefore, 'awareness' of aathmaa is neither a process in aathmaa nor an attribute of aathmaa.

Then, what is the relationship between 'awareness' and aathmaa? Ans: There is no relationship; awareness is the aathmaa, which is 'changeless principle'.

That is why, in English, the term 'spirit' is used to denote aathmaa, because 'spirit' means 'non-material entity'. Anything 'material' would involve either 'attribute' or 'process' or both. Aathmaa is not a material, because neither process, nor attribute is involved in the context of aathmaa. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "aathmana: thu boddhruthvam svaroopam", meaning, that 'awareness' is the very nature of aathmaa – neither an attribute nor a process.

In contrast, in nyaaya-vaisheshika dharsanam, one dharsanam says awareness is an attribute of aathmaa; and, the other says awareness is an action of aathmaa.

Vedhaanthee asserts that 'awareness' is neither 'kriyaa' nor 'guna'. 'Aathmaa' is neither 'jnaana kriyaasrayam' nor 'jnaana gunaasrayam' but 'jnaanavaroopam'.

This gives rise to a doubt, viz., "if it is not a process, how can it be said that aathmaa is the 'perceiver' of the mind? The expression 'perceiver' is derived from the root 'perceive', 'perceive' is a verb and a verb reveals a process. So, would not the statement 'aathmaa is 'perceiver' of the mind, result in admitting the involvement of a 'process'? If in reply to this, it is said 'No, aathmaa is not a 'perceiver' ; but it is a 'witness', even then, aathmaa will get associated with a process, since 'witnessing' is also a process. Whatever verb is used, aathmaa will get associated with a process. Then, how can statements such as 'aathmaa is saakshI, 'aathmaa is the knower' etc. be made at all?"

Sureswaraacharya answers this doubt. He says: "We are using a verb, but the verb used in the context of aathmaa does not convey a process. We are helplessly using a verb, because, in language, there is no other method available; and, therefore, we are constrained to use a verb. But, in the case of aathmaa, the verb does not reveal a process. Therefore, aathmaa is a 'processless' perceiver of the mind".

How does one understand this statement? Ans: "It is 'perceiver'; but, no action is involved in this 'perception'".

Several examples are given for this. One is what Sankara Baghavadh Padhaa gives in Upadesa Saahasri, the 'burning action' of fire. It can be explained as follows:

"Let us assume a piece of paper was placed in fire and was burnt. You say 'fire burned the paper'. When did the burning action start? Only when the paper is placed on the fire, the fire burnt. Therefore, the burning action of the fire seems to start at that particular time, when the paper is kept on the fire. Let us assume that at 8 o'clock, the paper was placed on the fire. At that time, what did the fire do? It burned the paper. But, can you say that the burning action of the fire started at 8 o'clock? Even though fire burned the paper at 8 o'clock, you cannot say that 'before 8 o'clock, the fire was not burning. At 8 o'clock, the burning action started'. Even though you use the expression 'fire burnt the paper at 8 o'clock', you cannot attribute an action on the fire at 8 o'clock, because the fire was remaining the same throughout, before placing the paper and after placing the paper. The fire did not do any special action. Still, we make the statement 'fire burnt the paper', with the verb 'burnt'. Here, with regard to fire, the verb 'burning' does not convey any process. If at all a process was involved, it is only in the paper. It was the condition of the paper that changed. We use the verb 'burns' for the fire; but, fire actually does not perform any action, in 'burning'.

Then, what is the 'burning'? It is the svaroopam of the fire. In the same manner, when you say 'aathmaa illumines the mind', aathmaa does not do any action; it was, it is and it ever will be. Just, as in the presence of paper, we say 'fire burnt the paper', using the verb 'burnt', in the same manner, in the presence of the mind, we say 'aathmaa illumines the mind', using the verb 'illumines', though the verbs 'burnt' and 'illumines' do not involve any process on the parts of the fire and aathmaa respectively".

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives another example, instead of the above more popular 'fire' example given by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa,

- तत् तिष्ठन्तीव महीभूतः - (But) this is similar to saying that 'the mountain is 'standing' there.

To explain this example: In Sanskrit grammar, the verb 'standing' is used in the sense of non-motion / not moving – gathi nivrutthau. 'Withdrawal from motion' is called 'standing'. One can say 'a man is standing', because a man can also move / walk ; from the standpoint of 'motion' / 'walking' there is a meaning for the verb 'standing'. When it is said 'the man is standing', it means, 'the man is not moving now'. But, in the case of the mountain, strictly speaking, one cannot say 'the mountain is standing', because, the mountain never moves. In the context of the mountain, the verb 'standing' is used to convey its 'eternal motionless'. Though, thus, the verb 'standing' does not, in reality, have any significance in the context of the mountain, but, nevertheless, is used in the case of the mountain also, the verb 'perceives' is used for the aathmaa, though, it does not perform the action or process of 'perceiving'.

Aathmaa 'perceives' without a process; the mind perceives through a process. This is the difference between the awareness of the mind and awareness of the aathmaa.

134. Chapter III, Verse 19 to 21(14-03-2009)

Sureswaraacharya is differentiating between thvam padha vaachyaarthaa, which is nothing but the mind and thvam padha lakshyaarthaa, which is the aathmaa.

Aathmaa is the primary Self. Mind is the secondary self.

In these two verses 18 and 19, the Aacharya is differentiating between the selfhood of the mind and the selfhood of the aathmaa, as well as, between the sentiency of the mind and the sentiency of the aathmaa.

The differentiation of the 'selfhood' was done in the 18th verse. The student should first know what is meant by the word 'selfhood'. 'Selfhood' means 'having the status of being the meaning of the word 'I' '. In other words, the 'referability' (ability of being referred to) by the word 'I', is 'selfhood'. As for the differentiation, the selfhood of the mind is only relative selfhood, whereas the selfhood of the aathmaa is absolute selfhood. The 'I' status of the mind is only from the standpoint of the body and the world. The very same mind loses 'selfhood' from the standpoint of the aathmaa, from which standpoint, the mind becomes an 'object', and, therefore, cannot enjoy 'selfhood' or 'subject-hood'. To repeat for clarity: From the standpoint of the world, the mind is the 'subject', whereas, from the standpoint of aathmaa, it is only an 'object'. On the other hand, aathmaa is ever the 'subject' and never an 'object'. Therefore, mind's 'selfhood' is relative; aathmaa's 'selfhood' is absolute.

Having said that in the 18th verse, in the 19th verse, Sureswaraacharya talked of the differentiation on the 'sentiency' aspect. He said that the mind's sentiency depends upon the process of 'awaring' things by entertaining thoughts, whereas the sentiency of aathmaa is its very nature.

Mind's awareness is a result of a thought process. When the thoughts are ended or suspended, as in the sushupthi avasthaa, the mind can never 'aware' the world; nor can it 'aware' itself, as the relative 'I'. In sushupthi, when thoughts are suspended, the mind is neither aware of the world nor is it aware of itself or its condition. It follows, therefore, that, mind's awareness is a process or an action. This process or action is called 'prathaya uthpatthi:' | 'Prathyaya uthpatthi:' is another term for 'vrutthi parimaana:' and both of them mean 'thought modification'. Therefore, the Aacharya says "asyaa: (budde:) bodhruthvam prathyaya uthpatthi hethutha:" meaning "the mind's sentiency or awareness is only because of rise and fall of thoughts"; as for the sentiency of aathmaa, he says "aathmana: thu bodhruthvam svaroopam", meaning "whereas, the sentiency of the aathmaa / the awareness of the aathmaa is not an action done by aathmaa; but, it is its very nature".

But, even though aathmaa does not have awareness as an 'action', we figuratively use verbs with regard to aathmaa also, as in the sentences "aathmaa is 'experiencing' the mind, aathmaa is 'witnessing' the thought" etc. We do use verbs; but, those verbs do not have any connotation of 'action'. To explain this concept, Sureswaraachaarya gave an example: "the mountains are 'standing'", in which statement, the verb 'standing' does not really have any 'action' connotation.

Another example is the statement "fire is 'burning'", in which sentence also, the verb 'burning' does not have any 'action' connotation.

To explain more in detail:

An action is always conditioned by time; that is why, any verb of action will always be associated with either present tense or past tense or future tense. Can one imagine a predicate in a sentence, without any tense – present, past or future? No; every predicate has to exist either in the varthamaana kaalam or bootha kaalam or bhaavi kaalam. For instance, the predicate 'eats' is in the varthamaana kaalam, 'ate' is bootha kaalam and 'will eat' is bhaavi kaalam. The predicate or the verb of action is always associated with tense or kaalam. But, in the statement 'mountains stand', the 'standing' of mountains is not associated with any particular kaalam – past, present or future. Since the three *kaalam*s have no relevance with regard to the 'standing' of the mountain, it is concluded that the verb 'stand', in this context, is not an 'action', even though it is a verb. That verb 'stand' does not also indicate a will on the part of the mountain; not does it involve a process on the part of mountain. In the same manner, when it is said "aathmaa is 'witnessing' the mind", the verb 'is witnessing' does not involve will; it does not involve action; it does not involve kaalam also. Therefore, the 'witnessing' is called svaroopam.

In the statement, 'maheebhrutha: thishtanthi, maheebhrutha:' is plural or bahuvachanam, 'mahibhruth' being the singular form or 'ekavachanam'; and, 'maheebhrutha:' means 'parvathaa:' or 'mountains'; 'thishtanthi' is the verb, where the verb indicates svaroopam and not action. Similarly, when it is said 'aathmaa is aware', the 'awareness' is neither an action nor a property; but, it is aathmaa's svaroopam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 20:

तयोः कूटस्थपरिणामिनोरात्मानवबोध एव संबन्धहेतुर्न पुनर्वास्तवः कश्चिदपि संबन्ध उपपद्यत इत्याह।

Between these two, the unchanging Self and the changing self, there is a phenomenal relation brought about, by the ignorance of the Self. No 'ultimately real' relation is possible between them. This is stated below:

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "The secondary self, viz., the mind and the primary Self, viz., the aathmaa are intimately together. Whenever I use the word 'aham' or 'I', it is this mixture that is using the word 'I'; the mind, by itself, cannot use the word 'I'; aathmaa, by itself, also can never use the word 'I'; therefore, whenever I use the word 'I', it is the mixture of the secondary self and the primary Self together; and, since it is an 'intimately-together' mixture, an ignorant person fails to understand the distinction between the two components of the mixture. The 'ignorant' person is not aware of the fact that there is a higher, real component and a lower, mithyaa component in this mixture. This fact is not known to him. Therefore, there is anyonya adhyaasa: between them".

- तयोः कूटस्थ परिणामिनोः - Between these two, the primary Self and the secondary self, which are 'changeless' and 'subject to change' respectively.

The primary Self, viz. the aathmaa is kootastha; the 'changeless' ; the secondary self, viz. the mind is parinaami, the 'changing'.

- आत्म अनवबोधः एव - only because of the sheer ignorance of the fact that I am a mixture of the two things, of which one is higher and changeless and the other is lower and changing,

One is sathyam; the other is anrutham; the sathya anrutha vivekaa is not there; therefore, they are mixed up. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in Adhyaasa Bhaashyam (Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam) refers to this delusion as 'sathya anrutha mithunee krithya'.

Because of this confusion,

- संबन्ध हेतुः - a relationship is struck.

Even though the higher 'I', the aathmaa, cannot have relationship with the lower 'I', the mind, nor with the emotions of the mind, I still form the 'connection' and I say 'I have problems'. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "aathma anavabhodha: eva sambhandha hethu." meaning "Only the 'ignorance of the two' is the cause for the relationship between the two, the higher, 'changeless' 'I', and the lower, 'changing' 'I'."

A relationship between the two, for the sake of worldly transactions is perfectly fine and is, in fact, needed. During transactions, an individual cannot use the word 'I', in the meaning of the higher 'I'. At vyavahaarika level, the word 'I' can and should be used with the meaning of the lower component only, for transactional purposes. But, a diligent seeker should always be aware / bear in mind, that the real 'I' is the higher component only.

For transactional purposes the thoughts can be ahamkaaraa-centric; but, when there is no transaction, the 'I' should be saakshi-centric.

Saakshi-centric thoughts also can go on only in the mind; ahamkaaraa-centric thoughts also can go on only in the mind. In other words, mind is the common locus, for entertaining ahamkaaraa-centric thoughts, as well as saakshi-centric thoughts. The type of thoughts that dominate one's mind determines whether one is a samsaari or not. If one entertains ahamkaaraa-centric thoughts for transaction purposes only, he/she is wise. But, if, on the other hand, ahamkaaraa-centric thoughts keep disturbing one's mind / dominate one's mind, at all times, even when one goes to bed, when in bed and when one wakes up in the morning etc., samsaaraa is certain to result for such an individual.

Vedhaatha is intended for making the aspirant's mind get dominated by saakshi-centric thoughts. That 'domination' is not there in a samsaari's (an ignorant individual's) mind. Therefore, the Aachaarya says "anavabodha: eva sambhandha hethu:" - "ignorance only is the cause of mixing up". And follows it up saying:

- पुनः वास्तवः कश्चिदपि संबन्धन उपपद्यते : - But, no real connection between 'me' and the mind is possible.

That is why, it is advised that 'mind' be considered as a vesham, which is used for transactional purposes. If this is understood, life is not a burden. On the other hand, if one has serious relationship with the mind, life will be miserable, since mind itself will always have problems, because mind is in 'triangular' format.

This is indicated in Verse 3 of the Nirvaana Shadgam of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa also, a popular nidhidhyaasana sloka: "na me dvesha raagau, na me loba mogau, mado naiva me naive maathsarya bhaava:" – "'I' do not have hatred or desire; 'I' do not have greed or delusion; 'I' do not have arrogance or feelings of jealousy / malice".

This verse also answers the question "When am I free from raaga dveshaa"? The answer is to be deduced from the verse: "'I' am free all the time from raagha dveshaa, because 'I', the saakshi, do not have any connection, at any time, with the mind, which is the one that is burdened with all emotions. When I have no connection with the mind, how can I have connection with raagha dveshaa, which are attributes of the mind. When even substance-connection is not there, where is the question of attribute-connection?"

The term 'na upapadhaythe' stresses the fact 'it is impossible for 'me' to be agitated'. 'I' am never agitated, because 'I' am only the saakshi of the vyaavahaarika agitations, which cannot affect 'me'.

- इति आह - This (that, no real connection is possible between 'me' and the mind or its motions) is being said.

Chapter III: Verse 20 –

सम्यक्संशयमिथ्यात्वैर्धरिवेयं विभज्यते ।

हानोपादानतामीषां मोहादध्यस्यते दृशौ ॥ २० ॥

It is only the mind that assumes diverse forms such as correct knowledge, doubt and false understandings. The emergence and cessation of these are attributed to pure Consciousness, by delusion.

Sureswaraachaarya says "The mind can never be free of thoughts, at any time, except during sushupthi or, if and when, a person chooses to sit in samaadhi. Except those times, the mind is bound to have thoughts, all the rest of the time. The thoughts may be of the nature of saathvik or raajasic or thaamasic varieties. But, the mind can never be free from some kind of thoughts, at any time. Just as the physical body has healthy and unhealthy conditions fluctuating all the time, the mind will also have either healthy or unhealthy thoughts; but, what is certain is, it will have thoughts all the time".

As Swami Vidhyaaranyaa famously said in his Panchadasee, "mind is also subject to 'jvaram', just as the healthiest body also has jvaram, now and then. The frequency of jvaram may vary from body to body; but, no physical body will be entirely free from health problems. The 'mind' also, in keeping with the fluctuations of the three gunaas, in keeping with the fluctuations of praarabhdhaa, in keeping with the fluctuations of vaasanaas and in keeping with the fluctuations in the events of the world, will be subject to thoughts all the time.

Even the greatest jnaani's mind cannot avoid empathetic disturbances, on hearing news of tragic events. When such news are received, the thoughts of even a jnaani certainly cannot be sukhavrutthi; it can be dhu:kavrutthi only, because mind is designed to empathize with the environment. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says: "At ahamkaaraa level, thought fluctuations will ever be there; therefore, freedom can never be at the mental level. We do not have ownership or controllership with regard to the mind also".

- धीः विभज्यते - The mind is associated with / influenced by, 'vibhajyathe' means 'viseshyathe', which, in turn, means 'associated with' or 'influenced by'.

An interesting relevant thought: Bhagavaan's mind cannot have sukha vrutthi at any time, since Bhagavaan is ever aware of some tragic event or another. In this regard, Bhagavaan is in a worse situation than a human being, because an ordinary mortal does not know many events; for instance, his / her mind is blissfully ignorant of the many tortures going on, in the many jails all over the world and as the saying goes "out of sight, out of mind". On the other hand, being omniscient, Bhagavaan is intensely aware of all the sufferings of all the beings, all the time, day and night. Therefore, Bhagavaan, as Bhagavaan, i.e. as ahamkaaraa, can never be free from dhu:kha vrutthi. Bhagavaan's mokshaa also is not as Bhagavaan ; but as Brahman only. Bhagavaan can never enjoy freedom from pain as Bhagavaan, because being sarvagnya: , Bhagavaan also will be disturbed by all the sufferings resulting from paapam. But, if Bhagavaan says "I am aananda:" – "aanando asmi", it is only from svaroopa dhrushti. Freedom, whether for jeeva or Isvara, is only from saakshi dhrushti.

The Aachaaryaa says, that, the mind is associated with,

- सम्यक् संशय मिथ्यात्वैः - correct knowledge, doubt and false understanding.

'samyak' means 'samyak jnaanam' / 'right knowledge', which represents, 'saathvika vrutthi:' | 'samsaya' means 'samsaya jnaanam', which means 'raajasa vrutthi:' | And, 'mithyaathvam' means 'mithyaa jnaanam', which is 'thaamasa vrutthi:' | These three types of vrutthis will be there in every mind, whether it is jeeva's mind or Isvara's cosmic mind. As discussed earlier, even Isvara's mind cannot avoid pain-vrutthi:, when it is aware of the pains of the world, which constantly go on. This is the nature of the secondary self, the mind.

But, what happens thereafter?

- मोहात् - Because of delusion,
- अमीषां हान उपादानता - the arrival and departure of these thoughts (these vyaavahaarika emotions)
- अध्यस्यते - are superimposed
- दृशौ - upon the real 'I'.

'Upaadhaanathaad' means 'arrival; 'haanam', in this context, means 'departure'. Dhrusaal means 'saakshi chaithanye' / 'aathma chaithanye' / 'upon the real 'I''. 'Dhrusi:' is the noun, meaning, 'Chaithanyam' or 'aathmaad'. 'Dhrusaal is sapthami vibhakthi: format, meaning 'upon the aathmaa, the real 'I' '.

The vyaavahaarika emotions like pleasure, pain etc., which actually belong only to the mithyaa mind, are superimposed, because of delusion, upon the real 'I', the saakshi, which saakshi alone really exists. The ignorant individual, after thus 'throwing' the mithyaa mind's emotions on the real 'I', attributes samsaara upon himself / herself, as a consequence.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "mohaath dhrusau adhyasthe". And, the moment this adhyaasaa takes place, a 'terrible' reaction sets in. The reality of the adhishtaanam is transferred to all the emotions. Borrowing reality from aathmaa, the unreal emotions also become real, just as the unreal, fictitious movie becomes a reality for a totally engrossed viewer. Just as when watching a movie, 'fiction' becomes a 'fact', borrowing the reality from the movie screen, life which is only 'fiction', becomes a fact, because of the adhyaasam detailed above.

Tragedy in fiction is entertainment and can be entertainment only when it is understood as fiction. Life is a mixture of tragedy and comedy and therefore, life can become entertainment, only when it is seen it as 'fiction' – a naatakaa. The moment this approach is forgotten / this attitude is forsaken, tragedy becomes serious and that is called samsaaraa. To recall the fifth capsule of Vedhaanthaa (as enunciated by Swamiji): "By remembering my real nature, I convert life into an entertaining fiction; by forgetting my real nature, I convert fiction into a fact and life into a burden – not ordinary burden but mahaa burden." An inevitable consequence of this 'forgetting' is, that, the constant prayer to Bhagavaan will be: "Oh! Lord! This must be my last janmaa. I should be relieved of this burden of life, at the earliest. I should go away from this world, never to return." For such a person, life itself is a tragedy and a burden. Such a person 'hates' life and for him / her, videha mukthi is 'escaping from the world'. But, if, on the other hand, Naishkarmya Siddhi (Vedhaanthaa) is understood properly, life will never be a burden; even the worst tragedy will only be 'fiction'. There will be no yearning to escape from the world nor a desire to continue in the world. The cycle of life and death will be rightly understood only as a continuous drama that is going on.

An interesting aside: Everything in life is both an asset and a liability. For example, whether the physical body of an individual is looked upon as an asset or as a liability, depends on the age of the individual. In the initial years of life, body is looked upon as an asset by the individual and death appears to him / her as a liability. Death is seen as amangalam and body as mangalam. Mangalam is an asset and amangalam is a liability. But, the same individual, after ageing, tends to look upon the body, as a liability, because of physical infirmities that have set in, and starts looking upon death as a 'welcome asset', which will relieve the individual of the miseries caused by the infirmities resulting from 'aging'. Mercifully, when body gets diseases and becomes a liability, the body itself, still holds an asset, in the form of maranam. A jnaani understands all these and looks upon the universe as a mixture of assets and liabilities, a source of 'entertainment' and also as a necessity, which is required for acquisition of jnaanam. If Brahman alone exists, one cannot even claim "I am Brahman". Brahman cannot say "I alone exist", because, even to say "I alone exist", it requires the body-mind complex. The moral is: "Let us own up Brahman with the help of this asset-cum-liability universe. But, let this drama/ entertainment go on". In fact, this attitude is called 'liberation', which 'liberation' is lost because of adhyaasa:/

In the second line of the verse no. 20, 'haana upaadhaanathaad' means 'arrival and departure'; 'ameeshaam' means 'of these emotional modifications' / 'samyak, samsaya, mithyaa jnaanaanaam'. The word 'ameeshaam' is 'shashti vibakthi - bahu vachanam'.

Lord Krishna also presents this same idea, in the 14th Chapter of the Bhagavadh Githaa (in the very important verse 22), while talking of a guna adheetha: (one who has transcended the three gunaas): "prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha mohameva cha paandava na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaankshath" – " Arjuna ! (the gunaadheetha.) does not hate brightness, activity and delusion, as they arise; nor does he desire for them, as they withdraw". This verse also implies : "Even a jnaani's mind will go through saathvika vrutthi , raajasa vrutthi and also thaamasa vrutthi. Do not imagine that a jnaani has only sukha vrutthi all the time. Dhu:kha vrutthi-s will also be there". What, then, is the greatness of a jnaan? The verse answers: "Na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaankshath" – "he does not hate their arrival; nor does he desire for them when they withdraw". When pain-vrutthi comes, along with that pain-vrutthi, jnaani entertains another parallel vrutthi. Pain vrutthi is ahamkaaraa-centric; jnaani entertains a saakshi-centric vrutthi also, viz., that, 'this pain vrutthi belongs to the mind, which has to go through certain thoughts, of which some are avoidable and some are unavoidable. But, they are all only vyavahaarikaad'. Therefore, he does not hate the pain vrutthis, when they come; when wonderful vrutthis go away, he is not disturbed also. Why? Because he has objectivity with the mithyaa mind also. Therefore, he maintains the Saakshi-centric vrutthi, in spite of the worldly vrutthis.

An interesting analogy for this attitude of the jnaani: 'Tying' of the maangalya dhanthu is an important part of the conventional Hindu wedding. At the moment of the 'tying' of the dhanthu, the purohith will call for 'getty melam' – playing the Naadaswaram and the accompanying Thavil loudly, producing a lot of noise. What is the purpose of this loud music? One purpose is to announce that, the main event, viz., 'tying' of the mangala soothram is on. The other, more important purpose is to drown any other possible inauspicious noises, like weeping, sneezing (considered inauspicious) etc., in the vicinity. The loud noise produced by the 'getty melam' drowns the possible amangala sounds. In the same manner, the jnaani's saakshi-centric thoughts, viz., the binary format thoughts, which the jnaani makes 'louder' and 'louder', by nidhidhyaasanam, 'drown' the ahamkaaraa-centric thoughts about family, possessions, body etc. The triangular format vrutthi-s are ahamkaara-centric and unavoidable. But, a Jnaani is not afraid of them. Whenever these thoughts become 'loud', he makes the saakshi vrutthi 'louder', so that the ahamkaara vrutthi is not 'heard' at all. This is called moksha.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 21:

कुतः कूटस्थात्मसिद्धिरिति चेद्यतः।

How is the unchanging Self established?

In the last verse, the Aachaaryaa mentioned the word dhrusi: or aathmaa. A doubt may arise. He, now, therefore, talks of this fundamental doubt, viz. "How do you know that the changeless Consciousness / saakshi is there, when the emotions are thus constantly arriving and departing?" The word 'emotions' is used, in this context, to mean samyak jnaana, samsaya jnaana and mithyaa jnaana vrutthaya:, otherwise called saathvika, raajasa and thaamasa vrutthaya:, or, in short, happy and unhappy feelings.

- कुतः - "What is the reason / logic
- कूटस्थ आत्म सिद्धिः - for the existence of kootastha aathmaa?"
- इति चेत् - If such a question is raised,
- यतः - the following is the reason / answer.

What is that?

Chapter III: Verse 21 –

न हानं हानमात्रेण नोदयोऽपीयता यतः ।

तत्सिद्धिः स्यात्तु तद् हीने हानादानविधर्मके ॥ २१ ॥

Nothing that appears and nothing that disappears can be established, as thus appearing and disappearing by itself. They are established to be appearing and disappearing in the awareness of the Self, which neither appears not disappears.

Of course, this is an idea known to an advanced student of Vedhaantha. The Aachaaryaa is only reminding the student of the idea. The very fact that we are talking about 'changes', is only because of the 'changeless Witness'. If the 'witness' has appeared with emotion no. 1 and that 'witness' disappears with emotion no. 2, it would mean that you have a 'second witness' for the second emotion ; likewise, a third 'witness' for the third emotion. Thus, as many emotions are there, so many saakshis also will be there, viz., saakshi no. 1 for emotion no. 1, saakshi no. 2 for emotion no. 2 and so on. If, thus, the 'witness' also changes, what is the consequence? Witnesses will also be many. Then, what will be the resulting problem? No single witness can talk about all the emotions. First witness will know only the 1st emotion; the second witness will know only the 2nd emotion and not the 1st or the 3rd. But, we are able to talk of all the emotions. That we are thus able to talk about the 'flow' of emotions, is only because of 'one changeless principle'.

The Aachaaryaa says:

- हानामात्रेण हानं न (सिद्यति) - The departure of the emotion / the thought, is not proved merely by the 'departure'.

The departure of the thought, by itself, does not / cannot prove the departure. The departure of the thought has to be proved by someone who has not departed.

An analogy: "Suppose at the end of the class, if someone says 'all the students have departed from the hall', the one who has observed and says this, is obviously one who has not departed, which means, that, the departure is proved by the non-departing one".

'Haanam' means 'departure'; 'na' means 'not possible' / 'not proved'; 'haanamaathrena' - 'by mere departure'. But, then, how is it proved? Ans: By a non-departing saakshi.

So, 'every departure presupposes a non-departing one' is the logic. So also every arrival

Extending the above 'class' analogy: "Suppose someone says 'the first student has arrived'; to say that, you require somebody; and, that one is the non-arriving one". This is said in the second half of the first line of the verse:

- उदयः अपि - The arrival also
- न - is never proved
- इयता - by the mere 'arrival'.

'Iyathaa' implies 'udhaya maathrena'. "Udhaya: udhaya maathrena na (siddhyathi)" - "Arrival is not proved by mere arrival".

The word 'iyathaa' is derived from the root 'yath' | The 'yath sabdha:' is 'thakaarantaha: pullinga:' | 'iyathaa' is its 'thritheeyaa vibakthi eka vachanam' | Literally, it means 'by this much alone'; and, 'by this much alone' it implies 'by mere arrival'.

"Haanam haanamaatherena na siddhyathi; udhaya: api iyathaa (udhayamaathrena) na siddhyath'" - (The verb 'siddhyath'' is to be supplied) - "Departure is not proved by mere departure; arrival also is not proved by mere arrival".

Then, how are the 'departure' and 'arrival' proved? Both departure and arrival are proved by the non-departing, non-arriving (ever present) Consciousness.

- यतः तु - On the other hand,
- तद् सिद्धिस्यात् : - the establishment of both of them (arrival and departure of the thoughts) is possible,

The word 'thadh'' refers to 'arrival and departure of the thoughts / emotions / saathvika raajasa thaamasa vrutthis''; 'siddhi:' means 'establishment'; 'syath'' means 'is possible'.

How is the 'establishment' made possible?

- तद् हीने हान आदान विधर्मके (आत्मनि) - in the presence of the 'Witness Consciousness entity', which is free from both departure and arrival.

The word 'aathman'' is supplied.

'Thadh', in this portion of the verse also, means 'arrival and departure'; 'heenan'' means 'free from'. 'Thadh heene aathman'' means 'haana upaadhaana rahithe aathmani''. The term is 'sathi sapthami'', which means 'in the presence of'.

'Thadh heene (aathmani)' would therefore mean 'Only in the presence of the non-material Witness Consciousness, which is free from both arrival and departure', which is further stressed by the usage 'haana aadhaana vidharmake'' - 'free from both departure and arrival'.

And, as it is always said in Vedhaanthaa, during sushupthi avasthaa, even when time and space depart, even at that time, 'I' am there, as the witness of 'absence of time' and 'absence of space', which means that "even when time and space have departed, 'I' am there", which, in turn, means " 'I' am not located in time and space. Time and space are located in 'me'".

135. Chapter III, Verse 21 and 22 (21-03-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is analyzing the thvam padhaartha occurring in the maahaa vaakyam. He pointed out that this thvam padhaartha is a mixture of the secondary self, called the mind and the primary Self, called aathmaa. Mind is parinaami aham, the changing 'I' and aathmaa is kootastha aham, the changeless 'I'. This "changing 'I'- changeless 'I' mixture" alone is referred to, by the word 'thvam', in the mahaavaakyam. From this mixture, we have to set aside the changing 'I', called the mind and then alone the equation 'aham brahma asmi' is possible, i.e., 'aham brahma asmi' equation is valid, only from the standpoint of the changeless 'I'.

The Aachaaryaa further said, that, the existence of the changeless 'I' is proved by the awareness of the changing 'I', because one can talk about the changing parts in the mind, only from the standpoint of the 'changeless awareness'. If the awareness also changes along with the thought, that changing awareness will not be able to talk about the changing thoughts.

Therefore, he said in the 21st verse (completed in the last session) "haanamaathrena haanam na siddhyath" - "The departure of the thoughts will not be proved by the departure of the thoughts alone". The departure of the thoughts will have to be proved by the non-departing Consciousness. Similarly, "udhaya: api iyathaa na siddhyath" - "the arrival of thoughts is also never proved merely by the arrival of thoughts". Arrival of thoughts is also proved by the non-arriving Consciousness only. Thus, all departures and all arrivals are proved by the non-departing and non-arriving Consciousness.

An example .from our mundane experiences: In a railway station, if someone is talking about the arriving and departing trains, that someone who talks about the arriving and departing trains can never be in one of the trains; he must be outside the arriving train also; he must be outside the departing train also. A traveler in one of the trains can never talk about the arrivals and departures of the various trains.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa said "thadh siddhi: thadh heene syaath" meaning "the proof of the arrival and departure is possible only in the presence of the saakshi, which itself is free from arrival and departure'.

"Siddhi:" means 'proof'; thadh, in this context, means 'haanam and udhayam' or 'arrival and departure'. 'Thadh heenam' is 'thritheeya thath purusha', meaning 'one, which is free from both arrival and departure'. By the term 'thadh heene', the word 'saakshin' is understood, 'saaksh' being implied by the nature of the 'saaksh', which nature is 'freedom from both arrival and departure'. The usage 'thadh heene' is sathi sapthami, meaning 'saakshini sath' or 'in the presence of a saakshī ; 'syaath' means 'can be proved'. To make the meaning of 'thadh' more explicit, the Aachaaryaa follows up his statement "thadh siddhi: thadh heene syaath", with the term 'haana aadhaana vidharmake', repeating the same idea, viz., 'which is from arrival and departure'. Up to this was discussed in the previous session. Proceeding further:

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 22 and Verse 22 – Chapter III:

एवम्-

आगमापायिहेतुभ्यां धूत्वा सर्वाननात्मनः ।

ततस्तत्त्वमसीत्येतद् हन्त्यस्मदि निजं तमः ॥ २२ ॥

Thus – After discarding all that is non-Self on the ground that it is subject to origin and cessation, the proposition 'That thou art' destroys in the Self, its darkness.

Now, the Aachaaryaa wants to describe as to what happens at the time of 'mahaa vaakya sravanam' i.e. he wants to describe the internal phenomenon, at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam. Generally, when we are dealing with the external vyavahaaraa, it is the secondary self, the mind functioning as 'aham', which is prominent. From the standpoint of the body and from the standpoint of the external world, mind, as the self, becomes prominent. And, when the secondary self is thus prominent, the primary Self goes to the background; its importance is not known at all. When we are in triangular format, the binary format is pushed behind. The proverb 'when the cat is away the mice have a field-day' is apt in this context. During worldly transactions, the secondary self appears as though primary and the primary Self is overshadowed.

But, when the seeker comes to the mahaavaakyam, when the seeker looks from the standpoint of the primary Self, at that time, the secondary self should be reduced to non-self. The mind, otherwise called ahamkaaraa, otherwise called the 'changing self', should be pushed 'out'. Along with the body and the world, the mind should also be pushed 'out'. Thus, the secondary self loses its selfhood and it becomes non-self. Mahaa vaakyam will function only when the secondary self is converted into non-self. Then alone, the equation, 'aham brahma asmi', will work. 'Including' the mind in 'me', the seeker can never claim freedom.

That is why it is pointed out: "You, as a seeker, may think that mokshaa is complete freedom from fear in the mind. But, you should understand, that, this thought is wrong. Do not ever worry about the fear coming in the mind. Remember, you will never be able to eliminate fear from the mind totally; therefore, instead of trying to eliminate fear from the mind, you have to eliminate the mind itself, so that, when the mind is afflicted by any fear, you can claim 'I am not the fearing mind; I am the saakshi of the fearing mind'. The ultimate mokshaa is not the 'elimination of the fear from the mind'; ultimate mokshaa is the 'elimination of the mind from 'me'', by seeing the mind as non-self'. This must be understood clearly by you; otherwise you will always wonder: 'My fear is not completely gone; how can I claim I am a muktha?' Remember that even with 'jvara' in the mind, you can be 'anujvara.' | That is mokshaa. Therefore, "I have no fear, because I have no mind. I am not saying I have a fearless mind; I am saying I am mindless 'me'" should be the conviction. This will result in the further conviction "I am ever free, from both fear and the mind which contains the fear". Fear in the mind can probably be reduced by effort; but, can never be totally eliminated from the mind. Total elimination of fear is only at aathmaa level; therefore, reduce the fear in the mind and eliminate the fear from the aathmaa, by understanding 'I' never have fear at all, during all the three periods of time."

Reverting to the text, what is the topic here? Ans: "At the time of mahaavaakya sravanam, the secondary self should be converted into non-self" is what is said here.

- धृत्वा - Eliminating / having eliminated

For the word 'dhoothvaa', 'dhod' is the root, which root means 'to shake off' / 'to remove' / 'to throw off'.

- सर्वान् अनात्मनः - all the anaathmaa,

What are all the items included in anaathmaa? Ans:

- (1) The entire world is included in anaathmaa.
- (2) All possessions come under anaathmaa.
- (3) 'Profession' or 'vocation' comes under anaathmaa.
- (4) The family, which obsesses the mind, even during Vedhaanthic study, is also part of anaathmaa.
- (5) Most importantly, the body and the mind are also parts of anaathmaa alone.

What is meant by 'Dhoothvaa' or 'eliminating'? Ans: The seeker should learn to dissociate from all these anaathmaa items. He / she should have the conviction "mind is neither 'me'; nor is the mind belonging to 'me'. Mind is neither 'me' nor is it 'mine' ". If he/ she claims "mind is 'me' ", it is ahamkaaraa problem; if he / she says "mind is 'mine'" it is mamakaaraa problem.

"Mind is neither 'me'; nor is it 'mine'. I am the asangha saakshi. Mind's problems do not belong to 'me', at any time" should be the firm understanding; but, ironically, the seeker has to reach this understanding, only with the help of the mind. In other words, to say and understand "mind is not 'me'; mind is not 'mine'", the seeker has to use the mind alone.

"Using the mind, dissociate from all the anaathmaa – including the family, the body and the mind also; remain as asangha aathmaa; always remember 'na me mrithyur na sankhaa na me jaathibedha: pithaa naiva me naiva maathaa cha janmaa na bandhur na mithram gururnaiva sishya: chidhaanandharoopa: sivoham sivoham' (Verse 5 of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa's Nirvaana Shadkam)" is the advice.

By saying "sarvaan anaathmana: dhoothvaa", Sureswaraacharya means: "Internal sanyaasaa, renouncing the entire anaathmaa, should be practiced". Then and then only, mahaa vaakyam will be very, very meaningful.

How can this elimination / rejection be achieved? The Aachaaryaa replies:

- आगम अपायि हेतुभ्यां - by using / applying the reasoning that all of them are subject to arrival and departure,

Even the mind 'arrives' only during jaagrath and svapnaa; during sushupthi, the mind 'dissolves' / 'departs'. During maranam and pralayam also all of them (the anaathmaa items) go away. How long could one hold on to the mind, the family, the body etc.? They are not saasvatham / eternal.

'Aagama apaayi hethu:' means the 'arrival and departure logic'.

When, thus, the aspirant stands alone as this primary Self, eliminating / removing the family, the possessions, the body and the mind,

- ततः - then,

An analogy can be given. When a major surgery like a bye-pass in the heart is to take place, the senior surgeon, who has to actually perform the surgery, does not arrive at the beginning of the surgery; his paramedical team prepares the patient, doing all the preliminary work, sometimes including even administering the anaesthetic; after all preparations are done, the expert surgeon comes in, performs the actual surgery and goes away, again leaving it to the paramedical team to complete the rest of the job.

(In a lighter vein): The mahaa vaakyam 'Thathvamas!' is the super surgeon. When the vaakyam arrives, the mind should not stand along with 'me', because mind is always full of problems. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says `thatha:', meaning `after pushing away the body, mind etc.'

He advises: "Keeping away all this, listen to the mahaa vaakyam, as saakshi, the nirvikaara chaithanyam, the primary Self".

Then, what will happen?

- "तत्त्वमसि" इति एतद् - this maahaa vaakyam, `thaththvamas'
- हन्ति - destroys
- निजं तमः - the moolaavidhyaa
- अस्मदि - located in the aathmaa, the primary Self.

As the student would remember, a detailed analysis of the locus of moolaavidhyaa was done in the introduction to this chapter and it was concluded that Aathmaa is the locus of moolaavidhyaa, apart from being the subject of moolaavidhyaa also. The primary Self is the locus of moolaavidhyaa. Mahaavaakyam will eliminate that moolaavidhyaa from the locus of the primary Self. The Aachaaryaa uses the word `hanthi' meaning `destroys'.

The splitting of the words, in the second half of the verse, should be done carefully and properly. The different words are `thatha:', `thadh', `thvam', `asi' `ithi', `ethadh', `hanthi', `asmadh' and `nijam thama:' | `Asmadh', here, means saakshi chaithanyam, the primary Self. `Nijam thama:' means `the thamas, the moolaavidhyaa'. The anvayam of the sentence is "Thatha: `thath thvam asi' ithi ethadh (mahaa vaakyam) asmadhi nijam thama: hanthi' meaning "Then, (the mahaa vaakyam), `thath thvam asi' destroys the moolaavidhyaa, located in the primary Self, the saakshi" |

And, because of the elimination of moolaavidhyaa, the `localization' of the saakshi, (the limitation that is attributed to the saakshi) which is born out of ignorance, will go away. Before the mahaa vaakyam, the spiritual seeker may have advanced enough to arrive at the right understanding "I am neither the body nor the mind; I am the saakshi of my body and mind"; but, may still wrongly conceive the saakshi as a localized entity, with each individual having a different saakshi behind his / her body and mind.

The mahaa vaakyam will remove this wrong concept of the `localization of the saakshi'. Jeeva saakshi will be understood as sarva saakshi. Aham, the jeeva saakshi, thvam padha lakshyaartha is identical with sarva saakshi, thath padha lakshyaartha. That `eikyam' is gained by the removal of ignorance.

Therefore, 'I' am neither 'here', nor 'there' nor even 'everywhere'; strictly speaking, even the word 'everywhere' should not be used as 'location' of the aathmaa, because the usage will mean, that, aathmaa is located all over the space. Aathmaa is not located in space also; in fact, it is space that is located in aathmaa. Therefore, aathmaa is neither 'here'; nor 'there'; nor 'everywhere'; it is nowhere; but it is the adhishtaanam of 'here', 'there', 'everywhere' etc. That 'localization' ignorance should go away for a diligent seeker. But, unfortunately, quite often, that ignorance continues even after years of Vedhaanthic study. What is the proof? Ans: The student prays to the Lord: "This must be my last janmaa; after this janmaa, I should go from here and join Bhagavaan and after joining that Bhagavaan, I should never again come back here".

Unfortunately, quite often, this idea is very strong even in seekers who have been diligently studying Vedhaantha for a long time. This wrong idea of 'escaping from the world' indicates that the individual is looking upon himself / herself as somebody in Bhooloka, waiting for videha mukthi. An informed seeker should not entertain this 'escaping' idea, even in dreams. A diligent Vedhaanthi student / seeker should practice the thoughts: "There is no question of 'my' running away from the world. In fact, it is the world that is 'arriving' and 'departing' in 'me' eternally. Therefore, I do not have to escape from the world. I do not also want to escape from the world, because either the presence of the world or the absence of the world does not make any difference in 'me', the asangha saakshi. Therefore, let this body continue for billions of years or let this body perish tomorrow. 'Na jeevithe na marane dhruthim kuryaath' is a vaakyam that Sankara Bhavadh Paadhaa quotes in his Isavasya Bhaashyam. I should not entertain attachment either to life or to death; also, neither hatred of life nor hatred of death". This attitude is moksha.

'Nijam thama: hanth' conveys the import 'There is no more self-ignorance; I get the realization that 'I' am ever free'. The verb 'hanth' means 'destroys'.

An incidental, but important point to note: When it is said that "mahaavaakyam destroys moolaavidhyaa", it should be understood as "maha vaakyam destroys the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhyaa; not the vikshepa sakthi of moolaavidhyaa, which will continue; the mithyaa world and the mithyaa sariram will continue. But, 'I' have no problem, because the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhyaa is gone."

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 23 & 24 – Chapter III:

इत्यादि पुनःपुनरुच्यते ग्रन्थलाघवाद्बुद्धिलाघवं प्रयोजकमिति । तत्र यध्यपि तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्यादुपादित्स्मिताद्वितीयात्मार्ववत्पारोक्ष्यसद्वितीयार्थः प्रतीयते । तथापि तु नैवासावर्थः श्रुत्या तात्पर्येण प्रत्तिपादयिषितः प्रागप्येतस्य प्रतीतत्वादितीममर्थमाह ।

In this fashion, the same truth is again and again presented, with the idea that as the exposition is rendered easy, the comprehension of meaning becomes easy. Even though the terms 'That' and 'Thou' signify the wanted aspects of meaning, namely, that of being secondless and being the Self, and similarly those of mediateness and of having a second, the latter aspects of meaning are not purported to be conveyed by sruthi, for they are matters of experience even prior to the hearing of the sruthi. This point is brought up now.

Here, Sureswaraachaarya says: "I am very much aware that I have been repeatedly talking about saaksh's distance or freedom from the mind and saakshi's distinction from the mind. I have been talking about these, all through this Naishkarmya Siddhi text. In the second chapter, I discussed this, in the form of aathma-aanaathma vivekal saakshi-mind vivekaa. In this 3rd chapter also, I am repeating this. I am intensely aware of the repetitions. Technically speaking 'repetition' is a dhosha, known as punarukthi dhosha.; otherwise called grantha gourava dhosha: | It is called 'Grantha gourava dhosha:', because, the granthaa (treatise) becomes bulkier because of the repetitions, even though the subject matter remains the same. The period of study also necessarily increases. I am aware that my repetitions also may be considered dhosha. But, on the other hand, in making the seeker understand the subject thoroughly and for creating the necessary impact in him/her, 'repetition' serves as 'reinforcement' and becomes necessary. 'Repetition' in the context of subtle and important topics should not be considered as 'repetition', but, as 'reinforcement'. Reinforcement is very important for a Vedhaanthic student, because of the following reason: For a diligent student / an ideal maanasa sanyaasi, at the time of listening to Vedhaanthaa, saakshi becomes more prominent than ahamkaaraa, as it should be. But, the problem is, even during the dedicated and engrossed study, if and when any worldly vyavahaaraa arises, the student's ahamkaaraa immediately takes over and becomes more prominent than saakshi, because of the student's heavy involvement with P.O.R.T. (Possessions, Obligations, Relationships and Transaction). Thus, there is a 'tug-of-war' between the saakshi and ahamkaaraa, even for a diligent and serious seeker. Saakshi pradhaanaa 'I' and ahamkaara pradhaanaa 'I' constantly compete in occupying and dominating the mind space. And, unfortunately, quite often, it is the powerful and problematic ahamkaaraa that succeeds in occupying the mind. Therefore, the guru and Vedhaanthaa have to introduce saakshi again and again. Therefore, I am deliberately repeating the teaching. The repetitions are required / necessary, because, the notion 'I am samsaar' does not go away easily; the 'escapist philosophy' also does not go away easily".

- इत्यादि - In this manner,
- पुनः पुनः उच्यते - the same teaching is deliberately repeated by me,

The Upanishads also repeat the message again and again, as in Kenopanishad : "thadheva brahma thvam viddhi yadh vaachaa anabhyudhitham nedham yadhidham upaasathe" – "Brahman is that very consciousness that is not revealed by speech; this deity which people meditate upon is not Brahma"(I – 5); "thadheva brahma thvam viddhi yan manasaa na manuthe" – "Brahman is that very consciousness, which people do not know with the mind" (I-6) ; "thadheva brahma thvam viddhi yath chakshushaa na pasyathi" – "Brahman is that very consciousness which one does not perceive with the eye" (I-7) etc.

This 'repetition' has to be done, because, transactions do require ahamkaaraa prominence and therefore, lay-people who are involved in worldly transactions and therefore, are dominated by ahamkaaraa, have to devote more and more time to the study of Vedhaanthee, to make the ahamkaaraa less prominent. This is true about some present-day sanyaasin-s also. There are two types of sanyaasin-s nowadays (1) sanyaasin-s involved in vyavahaara-s and (2) sanyaasin-s without any vyavahaaraa. The latter type of sanyaasin-s have an advantage, because they do not have to invoke ahamkaaraa as much as the former type, viz., sanyaasin-s with vyavahaaraas. Therefore, the vyavahaaraa-involved sanyaasin-s require more meditation than the vyavahaaraa-less sanyaasin-s, since ahamkaaraa is more prominent in them. Ironically, though, the vyavahaaraa-less sanyaasin-s have more time for meditation than the vyavahaaraa-involved sanyaasin-s. Coming back to lay-people, since they are involved in worldly vyavahaaraas all the time and therefore, they are invoking ahamkaaraa all the time, they require repeated exposure to Vedhaanthee principles. This makes it necessary for the Vedhaantha Guru to keep repeating his teachings.

Therefore, the Aachaarya says:

- इति - with the idea, that,
- ग्रन्तलाघवात् - by increasing the text / by presenting the teaching again and again,
- बुद्धिलाघवं - the facility of comprehension
- प्रयोजकं - will be the benefit / will result.

After all, the entire Vedhaanthee is either 'thadh padha aratha' or 'thvam padha arthaa' or 'asi padha artha'. In all the Upanishads, the message is the same – 'thath thvam asi'. Ultimately, the whole Vedhaanthee teaching is "aham sathyam jagan mithyaa" and "aham brahmaiva naapara:"| There is nothing else in Vedhaanthee, other than this 'binary format'. But, this teaching, viz., 'brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa jeevo brahmaive naapara:' has to be repeated over and over, since 'binary format' is easily achieved at 'lip level', but, is hard to be achieved at 'heart level'. To bring the binary format from 'lip level' to 'heart level', even while faced with worldly problems, a long and intense Vedhaanthee study is required. The aim is (metaphorically speaking) only a short travel of the 'binary format' from 'lip' to 'heart'; but, to achieve this seemingly simple aim, it requires consistent and systematic study of Vedhaanthaa over a considerable length of time. And, as the seeker becomes older, it becomes tougher and tougher. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says: "Let the sravanam become nidhidhyaasanam for you".

From the next sentence, the Aachaaryaa is re-entering the technical topic. He is going back to our original discussion. As the student will recollect, it was discussed, that, between 'Thadh padhaa' and 'thvam padhaa' there is saamanaadhikaranya sambhandha:, and, between the thvam padha vaachyaartha and thadh padha vaachyaartha, there is viseshana-viseshya-bhaava- sambhandha:.

Now Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to establish, that, by going through the vaachyaartha alone, the seeker can go to lakshyaartha. He / she can never skip vaachyaartha and go directly to lakshyaartha.

The Aachaaryaa further wants to talk about 'how the intermediary stage of vaachyaartha functions' / 'the mechanism by which the intermediary stage of vaachyaartha works' in the arrival of lakshyaartha.

Before going into the text, a brief introduction will help and is given as follows:

In the intermediate stage, the student takes the vaachyaartha of thvam padhaa and the vaachyaartha of thadh padhaa. Vaachyaartha means 'primary meaning'. Primary meaning of 'thvam' is 'jeevaathmaa'. Primary meaning of 'thadh' is 'Paramaathmaa'. This 'jeevaathmaa' is a mixture of the primary Self and the secondary self. When you take the vaachyaartha, it is not the saakshi part alone or ahamkaaraa part alone. In the vaachyaartha, saakshi is there; ahamkaaraa is also there. 'Jeevaathmaa' is a mixture of 'jeeva saakshi' and 'jeeva ahamkaaraa'. In the same manner, the vaachyaartha of 'thadh padhaa' also, includes both 'Paramaathma saakshi' and 'Paramaathma ahamkaaraa' |

What is the difference between 'jeevaathma saakshi' and 'Paramaathma saakshi? Ans: There is no difference between, jeevaathmaa, the Saakshi and Paramaathmaa, the Saakshi.

But, when the ahamkaara component of the jeevaathmaa and the ahamkaaraa component of Paramaathmaa are taken up for comparison, there is a vast difference between the two. The distinct ahamkaara of jeevaathmaa and the different ahamkaaraa of paramaathmaa are included in the vaachyaartha-s of thvam padhaa and thadh padhaa respectively. The student has to come into this intermediary level, where he / she keeps the mixture in the thvam padhaartha and the mixture in the thadh padhaartha. After coming to that level only, the student has to eliminate the ahamkaara component in each of the mixtures.

This is similar to buying a banana fruit with its outer peel. The shopkeeper does not give the buyer, only the fruit portion of the banana, removing the skin. He hands over to the buyer the entire banana, with the fruit portion and the skin portion. In the intermediate stage, the fruit is also there; the skin is also there. Later, the buyer peels away the skin and discards it, for eating the fruit portion.

In the same manner, when the student gets the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi' from the sruthi 'shop'. in the intermediate stage, the vaachyaartha of 'thvam' will include two components, the saakshi 'fruit' component and the ahamkaara 'skin' component. The 'thadhpadha vaachyaartha' also has got saakshi 'fruit' and the mahaa ahamkaara 'skin', which is sarvagnya:-sarveswara:

And, the relationship of this vaachyaartha of thvam padham and the vaachyaartha of thadh padham is called viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha: or just viseshana-viseshya-sambhandha: | It is the relationship between vaachyaartha jeevaathmaa and vaachyartha Paramaathma, both of them including saakshi and ahamkaara.

The student should know what is meant by viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha: | Ans: It means: 'They mutually qualify each other'. Jeevaathmaa becomes the 'qualifier' and Paramaathmaa becomes the 'qualified'; in turn, Paramaathmaa becomes the 'qualifier' and jeevaathmaa becomes the 'qualified'. They will mutually qualify each other and by mutually qualifying each other, both of them exchange their statuses mutually. The Paramaathmaa status is given to jeevaathmaa and jeevaathmaa status is given to Paramaathmaa. Thus, they mingle, exchanging their statuses mutually. This exchange of the statuses by mutual mingling is called viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha: |

And, Sureswaraachaarya tells the seeker: "You cannot skip this step; after entering this step alone, and after tarrying there for some time, the length of the period depending on your intelligence, you have to leap into the final lap of the journey, which is lakshana-lakshya-sambhandha: | In that final lap alone, you throw away the peels called ahamkaara – sarvagnya Isvara ahamkaara and alpagnya jeeva ahamkaara".

In the modern advanced space investigation experiments, the rockets fired into space, drop their fuel tanks, after reaching the required heights. In a similar manner, both the 'skins' have to be 'dropped', at the appropriate stage and at the appropriate stage only. Carrying forward the analogy, the first 'fuel tank' to be dropped is sthoola sareeram, second 'fuel tank' is the sookshma sareeram and the third 'fuel tank' to be dropped is the kaarana sareeram. After getting out of the samsaaraa gravitational pull , becoming 'light', the seeker gets into the orbit, nithya mukthi: / Only in the final stage, the ahamkaara-s have to be dropped.

In this portion, the Aachaaryaa is addressing the student in the viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha: stage, in which stage, ahamkaaraa-s are included.

- तत्र - This being so,
- तत्त्वमसि 'वाक्यात् - from the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi',
- उपादित्सित अद्वितीय आत्म अर्थवत् - similar to the wanted non-dual saakshi,
- पारोक्ष्य सद्वितीयार्थः प्रतीयते - the ahamkaaraa parts of both Isvara and jeeva also enter.

In the intermediary stage, when the student is listening to the 'thaththvamas' vaakyam, just as a banana is taken from the shop with both the fruit portion and the skin portion, when the thvam padhaartha and the thadh padhaartha enter the mind, there is the wanted 'fruit', called saakshi and the unwanted 'skin', called ahamkaaraa also.

'Upaadhithsitham' means 'the wanted'.

The wanted saakshi comes at the time of sravanam and along with the saakshi, the unwanted ahamkaaraa, the secondary self also comes.

(In a lighter vein:) In a crowded auditorium or community hall, where there is not much open space for parking of the vehicles of all the guests, when the gate is opened to exclusively allow the car of the VIP to enter, other unwanted cars may also enter, along with the VIP's car.

Along with the intended 'saakshi', the unintended 'ahamkaaraa' also comes. This is the reason, when a student in the initial stages of the study of Advaita is told, "You are aananda svaroopaa.", he / she gets a doubt. The guru, by the word 'you', means the 'saakshi' part. But, the student, along with the saakshi, includes the miserable, worry-riddled mind also in the word 'you'. With the mind included in 'me', how can one claim "I am aanandhasvaroopam"?

When the Aachaaryaa, thus says "the ahamkaaraa part of the Isvara also enters along with the saakshi", the student should understand that this statement is with reference to the thadhpadhaartha; he should further understand that it is true about the thvampadhaartha also. Ahamkaaraa part of the jeeva enters, along with the saakshi part, in the thvampadhaartha also.

Once, thus, Isvara the 'ahamkaaraa' part of Paramaathmaa enters the thadhpadhaartha, Isvara's ahamkaaraa being great and wonderful, the seeker finds it difficult to understand the jeevaathma-Pramaathma-aiykyam. That is the reason also why the Visishtaadvaitin finds fault with the Advaitin and considers the Advaitin's philosophy blasphemous.

The Advaitin, in reply, appeals to the Visishtaadvaitin, to 'peel off' and discard the 'skin', when the jeevaathma-Pramaathma-aiykyam equation is made. As long as this 'peeling off the skin' is not done, the 'binary format' will not work for the aspirant. He / she will continue only in the triangular format.

136. Chapter III, Verse 22 to 24 (28-03-2009)

In these verses Sureswaraachaaryaa is minutely studying the three compulsory stages, through which one has to go through while comprehending the 'thath thvam asi' mahaa vaakyam. He wants to establish, that, each stage is a significant and important stage and that, the aspirant cannot skip or avoid any one of these three stages.

The three stages have already been introduced by him, in the 3rd verse – "saamaanaadhikaranyam cha viseshanaviseshyathaa lakshya lakshana sambhandha: padhaarthaprathyagaathmanam". That is the most crucial verse of this chapter. In fact, the entire chapter is a commentary on this soothra sloka only.

Now, in this verse (no. 23) and in the following few verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is talking about the significance of the second or intermediary stage called viseshana- viseshya- sambhandha. | He points out that this 'viseshana-viseshya-sambhandha:' has to be applied after applying the first stage of 'saamaanaadhikaranyam sambhandha:', in which first stage, since the words 'thadh' and 'thvam' are being used appositionally in the mahaa vaakyam, the relationship between them, is called 'saamaanaadhikaranyam sambhandha:' or 'appositional relationship'.

After having first taken note of this appositional relationship, the student enters the second stage. While entering the second stage, Sureswaraachaaryaa tells the student: "In this second stage, you have to take only the primary meanings for these two words. You should not directly jump into the lakshyaartha-s / the secondary or target meanings of the words. Even though ultimately we are going to take the target meanings of 'thvam padha' and 'thadh padha', you should not apply them in this intermediary stage. In the intermediary stage, you have to take the vaachyaartha-s only. When you take the 'thvam padha vaachyaartha', the vaachyaartha will have a mixture of 'Chith' and 'chidhaabhaasa', Chith being nirguna thathvam and chidhaabhaasa being saguna thathvam. Chith is paaramaarthika thathvam and chidhaabhaasa is vyaavahaarika thathvam. In the intermediary stage, you should take this 'Chith-chidhabhaasa' / 'nirguna-saguna' / 'paaramaarthika- vyaavahaarika' mixture alone, as the primary meaning of 'thvam'."

To recall the example given in the earlier session, when one wants to eat a banana, and purchases it from the shop, at the time of purchasing, not only the eatable fruit portion is purchased, but, the purchase includes the non-eatable skin also. In the same manner, jeevaathmaa includes both the aathma (the nirguna and paaramaarthika Chith part) and the jeeva (the saguna and vyaavahaarika chidhaabhaasa part). This mixture must be taken as the primary meaning of 'thvam'. The student cannot straightway discard this primary meaning. Only after deliberately applying the second stage, the 'skin' of chidhaabhaasaa can be 'peeled' off; it should not be 'peeled' in the beginning stage itself.

Similarly, when the word 'thadh' is received, there also, the 'parama athmaa / the chith principle in Isvara / paaramaarthika chith / nirguna chith' and the 'chidhaabhaasa / vyavahaarika / saguna Isvara' mixture alone is comprehended by the intellect, during the intermediary stage.

The student should clearly note / understand this second or intermediary stage.

And, what is the relationship between the 'mixture Paramaathmaad' and the 'mixture jeevathmaad'? Ans: The relationship is 'viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandhaa'.

What is viseshanam and what is viseshyam? Ans: 'viseshanam' means the 'qualifier' and 'viseshyam' means the 'qualified'. The 'qualifier-qualified relationship' has to be mutually applied. Paramaathmaa qualifies jeevaathmaa, Paramaathmaa transferring the Paramaathma status to jeevaathmaa. Jeevathmaa qualifies Paramaathmaa, jeevaathmaa transferring the jeevaathmaa status to Paramaathmaa. Thus, both of them exchange the statuses, by mutually giving their respective status to the other. Ultimately, we get a jeevaathma-paramaathmaa mixture. Already they are themselves 'mixtures', as explained earlier. These two mixtures will combine together, exchanging their statuses. This is the intermediary stage, which the student has to necessarily go through, before proceeding to the lakshyaartha of advitheeya-nirguna-chaithanyam.

Another example given earlier, viz., of the rocket fired into space and its fuel tanks, may also be recalled. The fuel tanks are extremely essential for the exercise; they have to be fitted into the rocket in the initial stages for the take-off of the rocket. Only after the fuel tanks have been properly utilized for the intended purpose, viz., for the 'pay-load' to go up to a particular stage, the fuel tanks can be ejected. The fuel tanks cannot be jettisoned in the beginning stages of firing the rocket or before the 'pay-load' gets into the orbit. The vaachyaartha-s and the viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa which the seeker has to use in the second stage, to enable him / her to go to the third stage, can be likened to the important fuel tanks. Therefore, the student is advised by the Aachaaryaa to deliberately and slowly go through this second stage. That is what is being said here.

- तत्र - In the context of the mahaavaakyam,
- तत्त्वमस्यादि वाक्यात् - from the mahaavaakyam-s like thatthvamasī etc.

The word 'aadhi', meaning 'etc.', is intentionally added by the Aachaaryaa, to indicate that 'thatthvamas' is not the only mahaavaakyam. There are hundreds, of mahaavaakyam-s in the Vedas. Any one of the mahaavaakyam-s will have saamaandhikaranya, viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa and lakshya-lakshana-sambhandhaa. That is uniform for all mahaavaakyam-s.

- आत्मार्थवत् - similar to the chith,
- उपादित्सित - which is the wanted
'Upaadhaathum ishtam' is 'upaadhithsitham', meaning 'the wanted/ to-be-consumed'
- अद्वितीय - (and) the non-dual (component),

What first enters the intellect is the chith, which includes (i) the nirguna paaramaarthika chith thatvam, the higher component of Paramaathmaa and also (ii) the chith thatvam of jeevaathmaa also, which is the higher component of jeevaathmaa. Both of them enter the intellect of the discerning student, when he / she studies the mahaavaakyam, just as, in the 'banana' example, the fruit comes into the purchaser's hand, while making the purchase. But, unfortunately, again, just as, in the example, it is not only the fruit portion that comes into the hand, but the skin portion also, the unwanted components also enter the intellect.

What are those unwanted components?

- पारोक्ष्य सद्वितीयार्थः - the 'remote' ahamkaaraa part of Isvara and the 'limited' ahamkaaraa part of Jeeva
- प्रतीयते - (also) appear (in the intellect of the student).

'Paarokshyam' means 'remoteness'. Does 'paarokshyam' belong to jeevaathmaa or Paramaathmaa? Ans: Only paramaathmaa chidhabhaasa has got remoteness. Remoteness belongs to the chidhabhaasaa of Paramaathmaa. Why does it (chidhabhaasaa of Isvara) become remote? Ans: Because Isvara's chidhabhaasaa has got extraordinary attributes such as sarvagnyathvam, sarveswarathvam and anantha kalyaanaguna nilayathvam etc., none of which, an ordinary mortal is endowed with. Therefore, the more one thinks of Isvara's chidhabhaasaa, the more it appears farther and farther away, because of the feeling of self-inadequacy to even approach Isvara. Attainment of the required Saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is itself found to be an uphill task for an aspirant. Where is the question of suddhathvam etc., for a lay-man preoccupied with worldly and mundane affairs? Therefore the chidhabhaasa component of Isvara always brings in a sense of 'remoteness'.

Is 'remoteness' a wanted or unwanted attribute? Ans: 'Remoteness' is unwanted because, looking upon Paramaathmaa as 'remote' from 'me' is what causes strong samsaarithvam. After Vedhaanthalaa, remoteness of Paramaathmaa must go away. Paramaathmaa should come closer and closer and should ultimately join 'me'.

That is the reason why chidhaabhaasaa of Isvara also must be dismissed as mithyaa. Only then, the aspirant can happily accept jeevaathma-Paramaathma eikyam. But, before dismissal of the chidhaabhaasaa, it has to enter the student's intellect. The very word 'thadh' reveals remoteness. 'That' Paramaathmaa indicates the remoteness, which enters the intellect as the 'peel' of the banana, to be discarded later.

Reverting to the text, 'Sadhvitheeyathvam' means 'having a second entity'. This, viz., 'having a second entity' is the status of jeevaathmaa. Paramaathmaa can never have a second entity, because Paramaathmaa is only One. Jeevaathmaa alone can have a second entity, in the form of another jeeva. 'Sadhvitheetyathvam' means 'secondness' 'secondness' implies 'limitation'. This final implied meaning of the word 'Sadhvitheetyathvam', viz. 'limitation' is the attribute belonging to the jeevaathmaa's chidhaabhaasaa component.

Thus, jeevaathmaa's chidhabhaasaa component has 'limitation' and Paramaathmaa's chidhabhaasaa component has got 'remoteness'. Sureswaraacharya says that these two unwanted components also, viz., the 'limitedness' component of thvampadhaartha and the 'remoteness' component of thadhpadhaartha enter the intellect, at the time of sravanam, along with the upaadhitsitha chith, similar to the 'skin' in the banana example. Both of them are also occupying the 'chair' (the intellect of the student), along with the non-dual chith.

The word 'Paarokshya' is connected with thadh padha vaachyaartha and the word 'sadhvitheeya' is connected with thvam padha vaachyarthaartha.

- (यध्यपि)तथापि तु - But, even though both of them enter the 'stage' ,

Recollecting the banana example, both the fruit and the peel portions of the banana enter the hands of the buyer, though only the 'fruit' part is intended to be sold and the peel part is not intended to be sold. In a similar manner, in the thvam padha artha and thadh padha artha, Sureswaraacharya says the adhvitheeya aathmaartha is the 'intended component' and the other two, viz., the paarokshya chidhaabhaasaa of Isvara, (in thadhpadhaartha) and the sadhvitheeya chidhaabhaasaa of jeeva (in thvampadhaartha) are 'unintended components', conveyed to the student. This is what is indicated by the Aachaaryaa in this portion.

One more example (apart from the banana example and the rocket example) may also be given. In an 'award presentation function', the winners of the awards may be very advanced in age ; when called upon to go on the stage and occupy their designated seats at the head table, they may need escorts to help them to their seats, because of their advanced age and consequent infirmity,. To assist them, the escorts will also go up to the dais. But, once the aged dignitary / the prize winner is properly seated, the assistants will go back to join the audience.

- असौ अर्थः - the 'remoteness' component which belongs to the vyaavahaarika chidhaabhaasaa of Paramaathmaa and the 'limitation' component which belongs to the vyaavahaarika chidhaabhaasaa of jeevaathmaa,
- न प्रतिपादयिषितः एव - are not really desired to be conveyed
- श्रुत्या - by the sruthi,
- तात्पर्येण - as its essential message / teaching.

The sruthi does not want to convey these meanings when using the words thvam and thath. Again, referring to the banana example, both the shopkeeper and the buyer know that only the fruit part alone is consumable; the skin part is not for consumption. But, the shopkeeper does not peel off the skin, to hand over the fruit portion alone to the buyer. He expects the buyer to peel off the skin and discard it, before eating the fruit portion. In a similar manner, the sruthi does not peel off the saguna amsaas; it gives the saguna amsaas also, though the sruthi does not really intend to convey the saguna amsaas. This is an unique, minute observation by Sureswaraacharya on this aspect, not found in other Advaita granthaas.

The compound word 'naivaasaavartha:' is to be split as 'na + eva + asau + artha:'| 'Asau artha:' refers to the saguna components of the two mixtures viz., the Paramaathmaa and the jeevaathmaa.

'prathipipaadhaishitha:' is also a complex word, the past passive participle of the desiderative form of the causal form of the root 'prathi+padh', meaning 'prathipaadhayithum ishta:' or 'desired to be conveyed' / 'intended to be conveyed'.

But, how can it be claimed that sruthi wants to convey only the nirgunaa component of jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, by thvampadhaartha and thadhpadhaartha and that it does not want to convey the saguna components of the two?

This is a very big poorva pakshaa raised by the visishtaadvathins and the dvaithins, both of whom believe that sruthi conveys only the saguna components. They assert that there is no question of any nirguna component being conveyed by sruthi and that, there is no question of any eiyyam also.

According to the visishtaadvathins and dvaithins, Sruthi wants to convey only the saguna / 'limitation' component of the jeevaathmaa, and the saguna / 'remoteness' component of Paramaathmaa. They hold that the Veda wants to impart the teaching that the jeevaathmaa should continue to be 'limited' as 'daasoham'; and, as saguna jeeva, should continue to do upaasanaa of saguna Iswara; and, after practicing upaasanaa throughout life, the saguna jeevaathmaa should pass through sushumnaa naadi, exit the physical body through brahma randiram and travelling through sukla gathi, reach Paramapadam / Vaikuntaa, the remote abode of Paramaathmaa. This is the vehement stand of the visishtaadvathins and dvaithins.

Sureswaraachaaryaa takes on these two powerful poorva pakshins on this topic. He says, that, the Upanishad does not want to convey the saguna chidhaabhaasaa of jeevaathmaa or the saguna chidhaabhaasaa of Paramaathma, by the words 'thadh' and 'thvam'. He asserts, that, that is not the intention of the sruthi at all.

Now, he has to explain his stand, which is an important technical argument. In essence, it is: "Any pramaanam need not talk about something which the student already has in his mind. Naturally, an idea which is already firmly rooted in the mind of the listener need not be conveyed / repeated by the speaker".

This is a very, very important law of communication. The student should register this in his / her mind, because this is a very powerful argument, which is used by the Aachaaryaa to dismiss both visishtaadvaitam and dvaitham.

What is this law of communication? Ans: "A speaker should / need not convey an idea which is there already, firmly rooted in the mind of the listener. A speaker should convey only something which is not in the mind of the listener". An example: Even a person without any advanced education, but who has a basic knowledge of arithmetic, need not be told that $2 + 2 = 4$, because that is already in his / her mind.

In the context of a pramaanam itself, there is this important clause, viz. that, "a pramaanam should convey only ideas which are not already known to the listener". This is called the anadhigathathvam clause, otherwise as apoorvathaa. According to this anadhigathathvam or apoorvathaa clause, "a pramaanam is meant to convey to the listener an idea, which is not already in the mind of the listener".

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out : "The concept, that 'I am a 'limited entity, far away from God' need not be taught to me, by the Veda anthaa portions, very elaborately, through pancha kosa viveka, avasthaathraya vivekaa etc., since I already entertain that concept strongly in my mind, because of the karma kaandaa, the Veda poorvaa.

"The entire jnaana kaandaa is struggling to teach 'something' to the aspirant and how can that 'something' be an idea which is already there in karma kaandaa ? In karma kaandaa, the jeeva has been doing puja-s and upaasanaa-s and, as a helpless human being, has been appealing to saguna Isvara for succour. This is the religious mind, which is engaged in the karma kaandaa of the Veda. Why should an elaborate jnaana kaandaa also again tell the jeeva: 'you are samsaari; you are different from God; God is far away' etc.?"

"On the other hand, does not the Chaandhoghya Upanishad take the trouble of repeating 'thaththvamas' nine times (Chaandhoghya Upanishad - VI.8.7, VI.9.4, VI.10.3, VI.11.3, VI.12.3, VI.13.3, VI.14.3, VI.15.3 and VI.16.3)?"

"Does not Thaithreeya Upanishad (Bhrugu Valli – 10.6) declare "Sa: yaschaayam purushe / yaschasaavaadhithye / sa eka:" – "That (Aanandaa) which is in the human being and that (Aanandaa) which is in the sun – that is one"?"

"Does not Aithreya Upanishad (III.1.3) conclude "Pragnyaanam Brahma" – "Consciousness is Brahma"?"

"Does not Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (I.iv.1) proclaim "Aham Brahma Asmi" – "I am Brahman" ?

"Does not Katopanishad (II.i.11) assert "Neha naanaasthi kinchana" – "There is no plurality at all here"?"

"Why should sruthi make thousands of such statements, if its intention is to keep the samsaari a nithya samsaari and a remote God even remoter?"

"The saguna idea is 'already pratheetham' (which means 'already present in the mind of the student')".

An interesting 'aside' (discussed earlier, in other contexts): Before taking to study of Veda, an average individual has iha loka bhayam i.e., 'fear of this world'. Samsaaraa is bhayam, fear of the world. Veda's aim is to remove the 'iha loka bhayam' of aspirants. In other words, Veda is meant for removing this fear. When the aspirant enters the karma kaandaa of the Veda, it introduces a Bhagavaan, who is also the karma pala dhaathaa, i.e. One Who grants 'results' for the 'actions' of any individual, depending on the individual's past karma. In this context, Veda talks of three types of karmaa – sanchitha, praarabhda and aagaami. It also talks of the nava grahaas, such as raahu, kethu etc. and the different dasaas that the individual goes through etc. It further talks of the different types of para lokaas; and tells the aspirant that it is the nature of the aspirant's karmaas which decides that para loka to which the aspirant will be taken, after his / her death.

So, what is the result of this teaching by karma kaandaa? Ans: Before exposure to karma kaandaa, the individual was blissfully ignorant of these different para lokaas. Now, after completion of the entire karma kaandaa, the aspirant is stuck with more fear. Previously, as a non-religious person, the individual was suffering only from iha loka bhayam – including fear of old age. Now, after exposure to the karma kaandaa of the Vedas, the individual adds the fear of punar janmaa also to his/ her list of fears.

Now, if study of jnaana kaandam also results only in retention of these fears, continuing to maintain the aspirant in the triangular format, hooked to the two-fold iha loka and para loka bhayam, in that case, study of Vedas, assimilation of Vedic truths and leading a Vaidhika life etc. would all appear unnecessary or even undesirable. Being a non-believer might appear more sensible.

The jnaana kaandam of the Vedas is meant to remove both the fears – iha loka bhayam and para loka bhayam. It is, of course, the Sruthi, which introduces paraloka bhayam, through karma kaandaa; but, only with the specific intention of steering the aspirant towards dharma anushtaanam and karma yoga. And, the jnaana kaandam of sruthi is meant to remove both iha loka bhayam and paraloka bhayam. These fears can never be got over, as long as an individual is in saguna chidhaabhaasa; as long as the individual is in the 'triangular format' of jeeva, jagath and Isvara, with the concept "I am jeeva, Bhagavaan is 'elsewhere' and there is a world separate from me and Bhagavaan, holding out threats to me".

The aspirant has to discard both jeeva chidhaabhaasaa and Isvara chidhaabhaasaa. The saguna outlook should disappear. The 'triangle' of jeeva, jagath and Isvara should be transcended. The aspirant's conviction should be: "There is only the niruguna 'I'. The 'triangle' of jeeva – Jagath - Isvara belongs to mithyaa naama-roopaa. Whether this 'triangle' of jeeva – Jagath - Isvara is there or not, does not make a difference to me at all, because it is mithyaa and, at best, an entertainment".

Since, saguna chidhaabhaasaa-s, introduced by karma kaandaa have to be discarded, Jnaana kaandaa cannot again introduce them; on the other hand, Jnaana Kaandaa has to remove them. Saguna concepts must disappear; all the three, viz., saguna Isvara, saguna

Jeeva and saguna prapanchaa should become mithyaa. They should all be falsified. There is absolutely no other way out of bondage and samsaaraa.

“Na kaschith jaayathe jeeva: sambhavasya na vidhyathe | Ethath thadh utthama sathyam yathra kinchith na jaayathe” – “No jeeva is born; this jeeva has no cause. This Brahman is the absolute Truth, in which nothing is born” asserts Gouda Paadhaachaarya in his Maandookya Kaarika (Advaita Prakaranam – verse 48).

Gouda Paadhaachaarya also declares: “Na nirodho na chothpatthi: na baddho na cha saadhaka: na mumukshur naiva muktha: ithyeshaa paraamaarthathaa” – “There is no dissolution, no creation, none who is bound, none who strives for liberation, none who desires liberation and none who is liberated. This is the absolute truth (Maandookya Kaarika – Vaithithya prakaranam - Verse 32.)

Without the aspirant coming to this conclusion, there is no remedy for him / her. The alternative concept, viz., ‘to continue as ahamkaaraa till this body falls, to ‘escape’ from this world to some other loka after death and to never come back again to this world’ is wrong and will only be futile. ‘Running away’ from this world will never work. It will make the world only more real. Instead, the effort of the seeker should be to falsify the world, even while remaining in the world. Other than that course, there is no remedy for samsaaraa. This is what the Aachaaryaa is also conveying. He wants to say “saguna is already a known idea. Jnaana kaandaa does not want to teach saguna”. Therefore, he says:

- एतस्य प्रतीतत्वात् - since these two ideas (paarokshyam of Paramaathmaa and sadhvitheeyathvam of jeevaathmaa) are already in the seeker’s mind,
- प्राक् अपि - even before coming to jnaana kaandaa (mahaa vaakya sravnaath poorvameva).

The term ‘ethasya’ means ‘paarokshya sadhvitheeya arthasya’ / ‘saguna arthasya’ / ‘vyaavahaarika arthasya’ / of the two ideas of ‘limitation’ and ‘remoteness’. The two ideas, viz., the ‘limitation’ of jeeva and ‘remoteness’ of Isvara are already there in the mind of the student. Those need not be stressed by mahaa vaakyam once again.

- इति इमं अर्थं आह - The author is conveying this important / significant idea in the ensuing verse (23).

Chapter III: Verse 23 – तदित्येतत्पदं लोके बह्वर्थप्रतिपादकम् ।

अपरित्यज्य पारोक्ष्यमभिधानोत्थमेव तत् ॥ २३ ॥

The term 'That' has many meanings in popular parlance. In all its meanings, it contains an intimation of remoteness.

- तद् इति एतत् पदं - This word thadh
- लोके - in common or loukikaa communications / popular parlance ('as well as in vaidika vyavahaare' is to be understood)

In the maahaa vaakyam`thatthvaması', there is the word `thadh'. That word, by grammar itself, refers to something which is `remote'. To express the same idea in different words: "remoteness' is conveyed as the vaachyaartha of the word `thadh'". But, in the context of the mahaa vaakyam, though the `remoteness' is conveyed by the word thadh', it is really not the thaathparyam / intended object of the word. This is what Sureswaraachaarya wants to convey, by saying: " It is granted that the word `thadh' conveys `remoteness' as its in-built meaning; but, that meaning is not intended to be retained while understanding mahaa vaakyam'. The banana example may be recalled, in which the shopkeeper gives the skin also to the buyer; but, he expects and knows, that, the buyer will discard the skin. In a similar manner, sruthi `hands over' the `remoteness'; but the `remoteness' is not intended to be `retained'; it is to be discarded.

- बहु अर्थ प्रतिपादकम् - conveys many meanings (depending upon the context).

The reason for this follows, though it is quite obvious: `thadh' means `that'; and, the word `that' is a pronoun i.e. a `proxy noun'. `Proxy' means `representative'. Pronoun is `representative' for a noun. The word `thadh', therefore, can stand for any object that is far away; it can be used to represent a distant range of hills, a distant planet, a distant star and so on. But, in and through all the meanings which the pronoun `thadh' gives, one message is common to all. What is that common message? Ans: `Paarokshyam', meaning `remoteness'. `Remoteness' is common to all the nouns denoted by the pronoun `that', as in that range of hills, that star etc. If there is no `remoteness' in the object to be referred to , the pronoun `that' or `thadh' will not be used to denote it. Instead, the pronoun `idham' or `this' will be used.

An interesting aside: There is a specific verse in Sanskrit grammar related to the two pronouns, `this' and `that': "Idhamasthu sannikrishtam sameepathara varthi ethadho roopam adhasasthu viprakrushtam thadhithi parokshe vijaaneeyaath'". This verse points out, that, in Sanskrit, we have two types of `this' (idham' and `ethadh') and two types of 'that' ('adhas' and 'thadh'), to denote 'proximate' and 'very proximate' and similarly 'remote' and 'very remote'.

Reverting to the topic under discussion, 'paarokshyam' is included in all the nouns, denoted by the pronoun 'thadh'. Therefore, when 'thadh' is used to refer to Paramaathmaa, not only does Paramaathmaa enter the intellect as the meaning of the word 'thadh', 'remoteness' also enters as the vaachyaartha of 'thadh'.

- पारोक्ष्यं अपरित्यज्य तत् - (But) such a meaning which includes remoteness,

The word 'parithyajya' means 'excluding'; therefore, 'aparithyajya' means 'not excluding', which, in turn means 'including'.

- अभिधानोत्थम् एव - is only the vaachyaartha / primary / direct meaning only

This vaachyaartha / primary / direct meaning, conveyed by the word 'thadh', is a mixture of 'chith' and 'chidhaabhaasa' / 'paaramaarthika' and 'vyaavaharika' / 'nirguna' and 'saguna'. Two components together enter the mind, on hearing the word 'thadh'.

'Abhidhaanottham' means 'born out of the word primarily' / 'vaachyaartha'.

Chapter III: Verse 24 –

त्वमित्यपि पदं तद्वत्साक्षान्मात्रार्थवाचि तु ।

संसारितामसंत्यज्य सापि स्यादभिधानजा ॥ २४ ॥

The term 'Thou' is connotative of the direct knower. But it also contains in its meaning an intimation that what it signifies is a samsarin, a soul caught up in transmigratory existence.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says the same rule is applicable to the word 'thvam' also. When the word 'thvam' enters the mind through the ears, in that word also, a mixture of 'chith' and 'chidhaabhaassa' / 'paaramaarthika' and 'vyaavahaarika' / 'nirguna' and 'saguna' enters. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- तद्वत् - In a similar manner,
- त्वं इति पदं अपि - the word 'thvam' also.
- साक्षात् मात्र अर्थवाचि - (The word) signifies something intimately available.

Whether in Vedhaanthic context or in loukikaa / worldly parlance, the moment one hears the word 'thvam' or the word 'you' in English, one conceives an entity which is not far away, not even just close by, but, an intimately available entity. Sureswaraacharya uses the word 'saakshaath', meaning 'intimacy' / 'proximity' / 'immediacy'. Since the word 'thvam' refers to the listener's own self, it conveys the idea of something, which has is intimate / close / proximate / immediate.

The Aacharyaa, in addition, uses the word 'maathra', which usage is significant. How? Ans: There are certain objects which are intimately close by – for instance the clothing one wears. It is intimate to the wearer. One's physical body also is intimate. But, what is the difference between the 'intimacy' of the clothing and the 'intimacy' of myself ; or even the 'intimacy' of the body and the 'intimacy' of 'myself'?

The usage of the word maathraa answers this: "The cloth, body etc. are intimate now, at a given moment. But, they can become remote later. Therefore, they are intimate at times; they can be far away also at other times. Whereas, 'I', my'self, is also intimate, but, 'I' can never become remote; 'Self' has an intimacy which can never become remote. In other words, the word 'you' refers to an intimate thing which can never become remote from you, at any time, which, in fact, is 'You'. The usage of the word 'maathram', in this verse, highlights this fact.

An object becomes saakshaath when one perceives it; later, when the object goes away, it becomes asaakshaath. On the other hand, 'I' am always saakshaath. 'Thvam' refers to a nithya saakhsaath vasthu. 'This' refers to an anithya saakshaath vasthu.

137. Chapter III, Verse 24 to 26(04-04-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is analyzing the three stages through which the mahaa vaakyam functions and conveys its meaning to the student, the first stage being saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa, the second stage being viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa and the third being lakshya lakshana sambhandhaa.

In the first stage, the relationship between the two words is called 'saamaanaadhikaranyam', roughly translated in English as 'relationship between two words related without any preposition in between the two' or as 'preposition-less relationship' or as 'appositional relationship'.

Numerous examples of sentences with prepositions can be given, such as 'I write with a pen', 'he is on the ground' and 'water is in the bottle' etc. In the first example, between the two nouns 'I' and 'pen', there is an intermediary preposition 'with'. Similarly, in the second example, between the two nouns 'he' and 'ground', there is the preposition 'on' and in the third example, between the two nouns 'water' and 'bottle', there is the preposition 'in'. In these examples, two nouns are linked with a preposition in between. When the words are thus linked with prepositions, the relationship between the words is called vaiyadhikaranya sambhandhaa.

In contrast, relationship between two words in a sentence, without any preposition in between, is called saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that, in the mahaa vaakyam, 'thatthvamasI', in between the two words 'thadh' and 'thvam', there is only saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa. That means there is no prepositional relationship between the words 'thadh' and 'thvam'. The vaakyam does not convey the meanings that jeevaathmaa is in Paramaathmaa or jeevaathmaa is with Paramaathmaa etc. Between the two words 'thadh' and 'thvam', these prepositions 'on', 'at', 'with', 'in' etc. are all absent. This is a very, very important fact to be noticed, because, use of a preposition between two nouns in any statement, conveys a relationship between the two objects denoted by the nouns, while the absence of preposition reveals eikyam between the two objects.

Therefore, for Advaitam, the absence of preposition between the two words 'thadh' and 'thvam', in the mahaa vaakyam, 'thatthvamasI' is a very, very significant fact to be observed and mentally recorded, since, it, at once, reveals the eikyam between 'thadh padha arthaa' and 'thvam padha arthaa', viz., the Paramaathmaa and the jeevaathmaa.

This saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa in the mahaa vaakyam is the first stage in the process of understanding the mahaa vaakyam.

In the current portion (verses 23 and 24), the Aachaaryaa is discussing the second stage, termed viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa, which exists between the two primary meanings of the 'thadh padhaa' and the 'thvam padhaa'. The earlier Saaamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa is the relationship between the two words, 'thadh' and 'thvam', whereas, the 'viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa' is between the two primary meanings of the two words, 'thadh' and 'thvam'.

This 'viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa' between the primary meanings of the two words 'thadh' and 'thvam' can be translated as 'qualifier-qualified relationship'. Jeevaathmaa 'qualifies' Paramaathmaa and Paramaathmaa 'qualifies' jeevaathmaa. What is conveyed by the term 'qualifies', is that "jeevaathmaa transfers its status to Paramaathmaa" and similarly "Paramaathmaa transfers its status to jeevaathmaa". This may again be stated as "Jeevaathma-hood is gifted to Paramaathmaa and Paramaathmaa-hood is gifted to jeevaathmaa", where, Jeevaathma-hood means jeevathvam and Paramaathmaa-hood means Paramaathvathvam. Jeevathvam qualifies Paramaathmaa and Paramaathvathvam qualifies jeevaathmaa. This 'hood exchange' relationship is called 'qualifier-qualified relationship' or 'viseshana-viseshya sambhandhaa'. The student has to understand this viseshana-viseshya relationship properly, while studying the second stage of the process of understanding the mahaa vaakyam.

Of these two primary meanings, Sureswaraachaarya first talked about the primary meaning of the word 'thadh' in verse no. 23. In the primary meaning of the word thadh or Paramaathmaa, there is chaithanyam / Consciousness. "But" the Aachaaryaa pointed out "in the primary meaning of 'thadh', there is also an unwanted component". This fact again has to be marked carefully by the student. What is that unwanted component, in the primary meaning of 'thadh'? Ans: When Paramaathmaa is referred to, by the word 'thadh' or 'that', since the word 'thadh' literally means 'that', which is a pronoun used to refer to a remote object, the use of the word results in a 'remoteness' being attributed to Paramaathmaa.

This is very much an obstruction for eigyka jnaanam, because the more 'remote' or 'away' Paramaathmaa is considered or understood to be, the greater is the samsaaram. But, unfortunately, this paarokshya uktha artha: also is conveyed by the use of the word 'thadh', in the mahaa vaakyam. The wanted component in the meaning of 'thadh' or Paramaathmaa is asamsaarithvam or mukthi: / The unwanted, but inevitable component is 'remoteness'. This was said in verse no. 23.

Now, in verse 24, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about the primary meaning of the word 'thvam', which is the jeevathmaa. This word also has got an unwanted component which has to be ultimately scraped off. Similar to the word 'thadh', there is a wanted component and an unwanted component in the primary meaning of the word 'thvam' also.

It was said, that, in Paramaathmaa there is a wanted component and there is an unwanted component. What are they? The wanted component of Paramaathmaa is asamsaarithvam. The mukthi in Paramaathmaa - not even ordinary mukthi, but nithya mukthi - is the wanted component of Paramaathmaa. But, 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa is something, which an aspirant to mukthi does not want. The reason is obvious, viz., because if Paramaathmaa is remote, nithya mukthi also will become remote.

In a similar manner, in the thvam padha vaachyaartha or the jeevaathmaa also, there is a wanted component and there is an unwanted component. What is the wanted component of jeevaathmaa? Ans: Jeevaathmaa is in proximity, meaning that it is close to 'me'. How close? Ans: It is me, myself.

This wanted component is called 'proximity' or 'immediacy'. 'Proximity' or 'immediacy' is the wanted component of jeevaathmaa, which component should be 'retained' by the seeker. Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the term saakshaath, which word means 'directness' / 'immediacy' / 'proximity' / 'closeness' etc.

The word saakshaath is also of two types. There is one type of proximity / saakshaathvam, which proximity is a temporary proximity or anithya saakshaathvam.

What is the example of anithya saakshaathvam? When puraanaas talk about devathaa saakshaathkaara:, i.e. when they talk of a bhakthaa having direct experience of a devathaa like Rama or Krishna or Devi, the bhakthaa is said to have saakshaathkaaraa. The devatha was directly available to the bhakthaa, because of the thapas and devotion of the bhaktha. Bhagavaan Rama appeared in front of His devotee-par-excellence, Saint Thiagaraja.

In a like manner, Bhagavaan Krishna made His appearance in front of Meera. Bhagavaan Krishna became saakshaath available to Meera; Meera's Krishnadharsanam became saakshaathkaara: | And, Bhagavaan Krishna enjoyed the status of saakshaathvam / immediacy / directness. But, what type of directness was it? Was it nithyam or anithyam? Ans: The very fact that the bhakthaas lament, in most such instances "I had the saakshaathkaaram of Bhagavaan; but, He has gone away now" shows that it was only anithya saakshaathkaaraa. This type of saakshaathvam, which is temporary, belongs to prathyaksha padhaartha.

There is another type of 'directness' called nithya saakshaathvam, which means 'permanent immediacy'.

Every prathyaksha vasthu has got temporary directness, whereas, 'I', the jeevaathmaa, is not temporarily saakshaath ; 'I' am permanently available to 'myself'. Bhagavaan Krishna comes and goes ; Bhagavaan Rama comes and goes; They have temporary saakshaathvam. But, 'I', the jeevaathmaa is not temporarily saakshaath, but permanently available, directly.

To emphasize this permanency, the Aachaaryaa uses the extra word maathraa, which usage stresses "'I' am permanently 'directly available' for 'myself' ".

The term 'Saakshaathmaathram' stresses this 'permanent directness of oneself to oneself', which is conveyed through the word 'thvam'. To sum up, the word 'thvam' reveals 'permanent directness' of 'oneself to oneself'.

If the question "Is this permanent immediacy of jeevaathmaa is a wanted component or unwanted component?" is raised, the answer is "it is a wanted component". That "'I' am always available for 'myself'" is the wanted component.

But, there is an unwanted component also, in the word 'thvam'. What is that? The answer is in the verse (verse no. 23):

- संसारितां असंत्यज्य - Including the samsaarithvam (the unwanted component),

'Asamthyajya' means 'without giving up' / 'retaining' / 'including' . '

- सा अपि अभिधानजा स्यात् - that word 'thvam' denotes a samsaari (as the meaning of 'thvam').

'Abhidhaanam' means 'denotation' / 'intimation' and 'Abhidhaanamam' means vaachyaartha: / mukhyaartha: / primary meaning / direct meaning.

The two verses (23 and 24) indicate that in both the primary meanings of 'thadh' and 'thvam', unwanted components are included – 'paarokshyam' / 'remoteness' in 'thadh' or 'Paramaathmaa and 'samsaarithaa' / 'bondage' in 'thvam' or 'jeevaathmaa. As in the 'banana' example, the primary meanings of the words 'thadh' and 'thvam' still have the unwanted 'skins', in the second stage. In the third stage alone the 'skins' will be peeled off.

The unwanted component in 'me', the jeevaathmaa, is the samsaari status. In the jeevaathmaa, samsaarithvam is unwanted. In the Paramaathmaa, 'remoteness' is unwanted. If the aspirant scrapes off both of them in the third stage, Paramaathmaa ceases to be remote and jeevaathmaa ceases to be a samsaari, and then they are ready for eikyam. This 'scraping off' in the third stage is called bhaagha thyaaga lakshanam. This is being discussed in the subsequent portion.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 25 – Chapter III:

विरुद्धोद्देशनत्वाच्च पारोक्ष्यदुःखित्वयोरविवक्षितत्वमित्याह ।

As the two terms equated, contain contradictory connotations, these conflicting elements, namely, mediateness and subjection to misery, are not intended to be asserted. That is brought out now.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "When you take the primary meanings of the words 'thadh' and 'thvam' you have the unwanted components included in them - samsaarithvam in jeevaathmaa and remoteness in Paramaathmaa. As a sequel to the saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha between the two words in the first stage, which sambhandha signifies eikyam between the two, in the second stage, we have to apply viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha, the qualifier-qualified relationship between the primary meanings of jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa. But, when you try to apply this relationship, viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha to thadh padha vaachyaarthaa and 'thvam padha vaachyaarthaa', they will not join together. Jeevaathma status cannot go to Paramaathmaa and Paramaathmaa status will not go to Jeevaathmaa, because the two unwanted components make them repel each other. 'Remoteness' of Paramaathmaa makes it difficult to approach jeevaathmaa. And, similarly, the samsaarithvam of jeevaathmaa makes it impossible to approach Paramaathmaa".

As long as these two components which cause the 'repelling' between Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa are there in the meanings of the words 'thadh' and 'thvam', there cannot be eikyam between 'thadh' and 'thvam'. Therefore, the Upanishad does not want to retain the repelling components and expects the student / seeker to remove the unwanted components, so that 'thadh' and 'thvam' can be equated.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- पारोक्ष्य दुःखित्वयोः - The remoteness in the Paramaathmaa and the samsaara dhu:khithvam in the jeevaathmaa

The term 'Paarokshya dhu:khithvayo:' is 'dwandva samaasam', arrived at as 'paarokshyam cha dhu:kithvam cha – thayo:' |

- अविवक्षितत्वं - are not intended to be taught / conveyed / communicated (by sruthi),

The example of the banana is to be recollected again ; when the shopkeeper sells the banana, even though he hands over the banana with the skin, he expects the buyer to peel off and discard the skin, the unwanted component. Similarly, the sruthi, gives two components in each of the words 'thadh' and 'thvam''; but, it does not want the student to retain one component in each, viz. 'remoteness' in Paramaathmaa and 'samsaarithvam' in the jeevaathmaa, since they are the causes for the jeevaathmaa maintaining separation from Paramaathmaa.

- विरुद्ध उद्देशनत्वात् - because the components of Paramaathmaa and of the jeevaathmaa are contradictory.

'Paramaathmaa' is 'remote'; 'jeevaathmaa' is 'intimately proximate'. 'Paramaathmaa' is 'nithya muktha:'; 'jeevaathmaa' is a 'samsaar'.

This may be likened to a married couple with incompatible natures; if the couple desires to live together, they should give up the mutually incompatible natures, which 'giving up' may be called bhaagha thyaagha lakshanam. If there is no bhaaga thyaaga lakshanam, eikyam between the couple is not possible. They have to separate. The vaachyaarthaas of the words 'thadh' and 'thvam' may be compared to the incompatible svabhaavaas of the husband and wife. Bhaagha thyaagha lakshanam has to be applied to the vaachyaarthaas, to achieve eikyam between the Paramaathmaa and the jeevaathmaa.

'Uddhesanam' here means 'primary meaning' and 'viruddha' means 'contradictory' or 'mutually exclusive'.

- इति आह - That is clarified (in the following sloka).

At the moment, we (the teacher and the student) are in the secondary stage of viseshana viseshya sambhandhaa .

Chapter III: Verse 25 –

उद्दिश्यमानं वाक्यस्थं नोद्देशनगुणान्वितम् ।

आकाङ्क्षितपदार्थेन संसर्गं प्रतिपद्यते ॥ २५ ॥

The subject does not get related to the predicate, along with the aspect that seems natural to it but really conflicts with the predicate.

When the student is in the second stage, he is yet to scrape off the samasaarithvam of jeevaathmaa and the remoteness of Paramaathmaa. As a consequence, the 'thathvamas/ mahaavaakyam' does not reach his intellect.

At this intermediary stage, when the Advaita guru assures the student "you are nithya muktha:", the student may not protest and appear to agree because of his respect for the guru; but, is unable to really appreciate or accept that he is a nithya muktha: | He wants to continue either in visishtaadvaitam or dvaitam; advaitam is unacceptable to him. This is because of the reason, that, he is still holding on to the unwanted components in the primary meanings of 'thadh' and 'thvam'.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- वाक्यस्थं - In the mahaa vaakyam
- उद्दिश्यमानं - the subject of the sentence viz., jeevaathmaa,

In the mahaa vaakuam 'thaththvamas/, the subject of the sentence is 'thvam' or jeevaathmaa. The word 'thadh' in the sentence is the 'predicate'. In Sanskrit, 'subject' is called 'uddhisyaamaanam' and 'predicate' is called 'vidheeyamaanam' or 'aakaankshitham'.

How does one know that 'thvam' is the subject of the sentence? In fact, the word 'thadh' comes first in the sentence and, therefore, 'thadh' looks like the subject of the sentence. But, a grammatical analysis will show that it is only 'thvam' which is the subject of this statement and not 'thadh'.

The grammatical analysis would run as follows: The verb used in the sentence is 'asi' and in Sanskrit grammar, 'asi' is a second-person verb / madhyama purusha ekavachanam verb. Since the verb in the sentence is in the 'second' person, the subject has to be in the 'second' person only. Out of the two nouns in the sentence, 'Thvam' is in second person, while 'thadh' is not. It follows, therefore, that 'thvam' is the subject of the sentence, 'thadh' is the predicate and 'asi' is the verb.

And, therefore, the 'uddhisyaamaanam vaakyastham', which means, 'the subject of the mahaa vaakyam', mentioned in this verse, refers to 'thvam' or 'jeevaathmaad'. What is the nature of jeevaathmaa at this second stage?

- उद्देशन गुण अन्वितम् - which has got the unwanted component included in its primary meaning,

'uddhesana guna.' means 'primary meaning'; 'anvitham' means 'endowed with'. The primary meaning, the vaachyaartha of the word 'thvam' includes the unwanted component of samsaarithvam in it. Only in the secondary meaning or lakshyaartha, the unwanted component is removed / rejected.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says "The subject of the mahaa vaakyam, viz., the jeevaathmaa, with its primary meaning, which primary meaning includes the unwanted component of samsaarithvam",

- न सम्सर्ग प्रतिपद्यते - can never have connection or oneness / will not jell or join

With what?

- आकाङ्क्षित पदार्थेन - with the predicate.

What is the predicate? Ans: 'Thadh' or Paramaathmaa with its primary meaning, which primary meaning includes the unwanted element of 'remoteness'.

As long as primary meanings are taken for 'thadh' and 'thvam', the unwanted elements will be included in them and the viseshana-viseshya-bhaava- sambhandha will not work at all. Because of the unwanted components, Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa cannot mutually exchange their statuses. The jeevaathmaa including the unwanted element of samsaarithvam, can never combine with the Paramaathmaa including the unwanted element 'remoteness'. With the unwanted elements in them, Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa cannot be equated. The concept "Aham brahma asmi" will appear a sacrilege. That is the reason why the visishtaadvaitin is highly irritated at the advaitin claiming 'aham brahma asmi', 'soham' etc. According to the visishtaadvaitin, the jeeva should always say only 'dasoham' and therefore, has to keep a distance from Bhagavaan, since Bhagavaan is great, while the jeeva is only a miserable samsaari. These repelling gunaas in them, viz., the 'greatness' in Bhagavaan and the miserable samsaarithvam in the Jeeva prevent the eiyyam or 'oneness' between them.

'Samsargam' can be translated as 'eiyyam'; 'samsargam na pradhipadhyathe' means 'cannot have eiyyam'; 'aakaankshitha padhaarthena' means 'Paramaathma vaachyaarthena'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 26:

यत एतदेवमतोऽनुपादिस्त्वयोरपि तत्त्वमर्थयोः विशेषणविशेष्यभावः भेदसंसर्गरहित
वाक्यार्थलक्षणायैवेत्युपसंहारः ।

Therefore, the subject-predicate relationship of the imports of 'That' and 'Thou', which are not really intended, is for indicating a meaning of the proposition devoid of association with difference:

Sureswaraacharya asks: "What is the object of all these discussions? Why is there such an elaborate discussion on these topics, such as the vaachyaarthaas, the viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa between them etc.?"; and, answers that this intermediary stage discussion is necessary, to show the importance of the third stage.

He says: "Only if we come to the intermediary stage, take the vaachyaarthas initially and try to apply the viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa, at that time of applying the sambhandhaa, we will become intensely aware of the mutual repulsion between jeevaathma vaachyarthaa and Paramaathma vaachyarthaa. The repulsion must be intensely experienced. Only when we find that they are not coming together, we will get to analyze as to what the repelling components are. And, on a diligent analysis, we will come to know the repelling components in the primary meanings. And, then, we will have to drop them".

For instance, Sruthi expects the seeker to remove deha abhimaana ; if the academic language is reduced to practical experience, the seeker will realize that as long as he/ she has deha abhimaana, the mahaa vaakyam will not work. Deha abhimaanaa is one repelling component. There are other repelling components - like abhimaanaas for wife, son, family, property etc. If all these have to be discovered, the seeker should come to the intermediary stage and experience the 'repulsions' by himself / herself. Once the 'repulsions' are established, the seeker will proceed to the third stage of lakshya-lakshana-sambhandhaa, between vaachyaarthaa and lakshyaarthaa.

The Aacharya says:

- यतः एतद् एवं - Because of this above mentioned condition (namely the mutual repulsion / incompatibility)
- तत्त्वमर्थयोः - between the primary meanings (vaachyaarthaa-s) of 'thadh' and thvam'
- अनुपादित्सितयोः अपि - which meanings are not intended by the Upanishad,

But, how can it be said that the Upanishad does not intend the primary meanings? To the seeker who has total and unquestionable faith in sruthi, this doubt is answered as follows: "If you take the primary meanings for the words 'thadh' and 'thvam', 'eykyam' between them does not appear possible. On the other hand, Sruthi confidently asserts 'thadh thvam as', the verb 'as' positively revealing the eykyam. Since, thus, you come to know from the mahaa vaakyam, that, sruthi is sure of the eykyam between `thadh' and `thvam', and is also keen to communicate the eykyam, you should understand that sruthi cannot be intending the primary meanings of the words `thadh' and `thvam', since the primary meanings include the unwanted components of 'remoteness' (in `thadh') and `samsaarithvam' (in `thvam').

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the adjective `anupaadhisithayo:' – 'not intended', for `thatthvamarthayo:' /

- ((:तत्त्वमर्तयो)विशेषणविशेष्यभावः - this 'qualifier-qualified' relationship / exchange of mutual statuses (between `thadh' and `thvam'),

The Aachaaryaa says "this mutual exchange of statuses of jeeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, with their primary meanings, is of the above mentioned condition". `Evam' conveys the meaning 'above mentioned condition'. What is that 'above mentioned condition'? Ans: It (mutual exchange of statuses) is impossible; the Paramaathmaa and jeeevaathmaa, in their primary meanings are repelling each other; they are not able to come together; Na samsargam prathipadhyathe ; samsarga aprathipaddhi: |

Therefore, what is the aim of the Upanishad? Ans: The Upanishad expects the seeker to come to the intermediary stage of the primary meanings and the viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha:, only to use it as a stepping stone and wants the seeker to go to the third stage thereafter.

In this context, the Githa Dhyaana Sloka, quoted in an earlier session, as an example for the use of saamaanaadhikaranam is to be recollected and compared with the mahaavaakyam. In that Githa Dhyaana Sloka "prapanaanpaarijaathaaya thothra vethraika paananye jnaana mudhraaya Krishnaya geethamruthaduhe nama:" also, there is saamaanaadhikaranyam i.e., there are no prepositions connecting the various nouns. But, we find an advantage in this sentence. When we take the primary meanings for the five different nouns and apply the viseshana-viseshya-sambhaandhaa between them, with those primary meanings themselves, the message of the sloka is clear. This is because there are no contradictions in the primary meanings of the different nouns. The primary meanings of the nouns jell with Krishna, without any difficulty.

But, here, in the mahaa vaakyam, the primary meanings of the two nouns used, do not jell. Therefore, the seeker's journey has to continue further. For what purpose?

- वाक्यार्थ लक्षणाय - should be applied to the secondary / target meanings of the words `thadh' and `thvam',

- भेद संसर्ग रहित - which target meanings are free from all types of divisions and all types of relationships.

'Bedham' means 'division' and 'samsargam' means 'relationship'. 'Bedha samsarga rahitham' indicates the final meaning of 'eiyyam / total oneness'. There are not only no divisions, but, no relationships also between the secondary meanings of 'thadh' and 'thvam'- the Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa. Any type of relationship will convey that there are two separate entities, related to each other. Between Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa there is neither any division nor any relationship. Paramaathmaa is jeevaathmaa and jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa.

Once the seeker goes to this third stage and understands all the three stages thoroughly, then, in one sweep, the intellect will grasp the grand picture. An analogy to emphasize this assurance: An individual arriving in a City for the first time, finds himself / herself at a loss to locate the different places to be visited by him / her and the routes to be taken from one place to another. But, once he / she gets used to the new City, there are no more confusions. The task of visiting and identifying different places is not found difficult at all. In a like manner, initially, the seeker may find the three different stages of understanding the mahaa vaakyam, viz., (i) saamaanaadhikaranya bhaava:, (ii) viseshana-viseshya-sambhandha bhaava: and (iii) lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha bhaava:, a daunting task, with each aspect appearing mind-boggling; but, later, the seeker can land in eiyyam effortlessly and claim "I am free; I was free; there is no samsaaraa for me at all".

Once the seeker goes through the secondary meanings and the third stage, the seeker arrives at a jeevathmaa, which is pure sath and chith, rid of ahamkaara and also mamakaara with regard any of the anaathmaa ; anaathma-ahamkaara-mamakaara-rahitha-kevala-sacchith is arrived at, as the secondary meaning of the word jeevaathmaa, who is free from all the inferior attributes. Similarly, after going through the third stage, Paramaathmaa also will lose its primary meaning and the seeker will get pure 'Existence-Consciousness', freed from all the superior attributes of Paramaathmaa, as the target meaning. Remoteness of Paramaathmaa will go away; Samsaaraa of jeevaathmaa will also go away. The pure sath-chith-Paramaathmaa and the pure sath-chith-jeevaathmaa can now be happily together, as one identity.

Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the phrase 'bedha samsarga rahitha vaakyartha', conveying final meaning of 'eiyyam', the 'total oneness', between Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa. 'Bedha rahitha' means 'which is free from all types of divisions'.

'Samsarga rahitha' means 'free from any type of relationship'. Between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, there is no relationship at all. Any type of relationship will convey that they are two separate entities. Jeevaathmaa is not related to Paramaathmaa. If it is said "jeevaathmaa is related to Paramaathmaa", an unwanted preposition is introduced.

Therefore, what is the ultimate meaning of 'bedha samsarga rahitha vaakyarthā' ? "Jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa and Paramaathmaa is jeevaathmaa". That concept is called 'bedha samsarga rahitham' / 'free form division and free from relationship'.

The use of the term 'lakshanaaya' indicates that such a vaakyartham / bedha samsarga rahitha vaakyartham should be arrived at, through lakshanaa, i.e. by applying the lakshanaa, the secondary meanings.

The intermediate stage is to be used by the seeker as a stepping stone for that ultimate purpose alone.

- इति उपसंहारः - This is the end of the second stage of mahaa vaakya vichaaram (as a stepping stone for the third stage).

Chapter III: Verse 26 –

तदो विशेषणार्थत्वं विशेष्यत्वं त्वमस्तथा ।

लक्ष्यलक्षणसंबन्धस्तयोः स्यात्प्रत्यगात्मना ॥ २६ ॥

The term 'Thou' signifies the subject. The term 'That' signifies the predicate. The proposition as a whole relates them to the inner Self as their indicated import.

This verse can be considered a 'threshold' sloka, connecting the second and third stages. It marks the completion of the second stage and the beginning of the third stage. In this verse, Sureswaraacharya talks of the second stage, the viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandhaa, in the first line of the verse; and, he talks of the third stage, the lakshya-lakshana-sambhandhaa, in the second line.

- विशेषणार्थत्वं - The primary meaning
- तदः - of the word 'thadH,
- विशेष्यत्वं - is a qualification
- त्वमः - for the word 'thvam', with its primary meaning.

In the second stage, Paramaathmaa becomes an adjective /attribute of jeevaathmaa, the noun / the qualified substance or object.

The term 'Thadha:' is a peculiar expression. The word 'thadh' itself is declined. 'Thadha:' is the shashti vibhakti of the word 'thadh'. The 'Thadh padha:' refers to Paramaathmaa. 'Viseshanaarthavam' serves as a 'viseshanam'; 'viseshanam' means 'qualifier'. 'Thvama:' is also a peculiar grammatical usage. The word 'thvam' is declined here. 'Thvama:' is also shashti vibhakti of the word 'thvam'. 'Thvam' refers to jeevaathmaa. Paramaathmaa is 'viseshanam', the 'qualifier' and jeevaathmaa is 'viseshyam', the 'qualified'.

138. Chapter III, Verse 26 and 27(11-04-2009)

In this verse (Verse 26), Sureswaraachaaryaa is referring to the second and third stages of maahaa vaakya vicharaa, the second stage being viseshana-viseshya- sambhandhaa, the relationship obtaining between the vaachyaartha-s of thvam padhaa and thadh padhaa. Only when the student goes through the second stage, he / she is able to discover the contradictions in the vaachyaartha-s. And, only after seeing this contradiction he/ she is allowed to go to the lakshyaartha-s. This is obviously logical, because, the vaachyaartha-s or direct/ primary meanings are more powerful, compared to the lakshyaartha-s. Therefore, the more powerful vaachyaartha-s alone will have to be used first. Only when it is realized that the vaachyaartha-s have got contradictions, the student has to reject the vaachyaartha-s and go to the secondary meanings or lakshyaartha-s.

Sureswaraachaarya is talking about both these two stages in this verse. In the first half of the verse, he mentioned the second stage: "thadha: viseshanaarthathvam viseshyathvam thvamasthathaa" |

The 'subject' of a sentence is called viseshyam. In any sentence, the 'subject' is a known factor. The subject of a sentence is already known to the speaker as well as the listener. The predicate alone is the new information that is given by the speaker to the listener. For example, when somebody says "Rama is the king of Ayodhya", the understanding is that Rama is already known to the speaker as well as the spoken-to and that the new information is that he (Rama) is the king of Ayodhya. Subject is always a known entity and therefore, it is called 'viseshyam' meaning 'the substance'. The predicate is defined as an information which is unknown to the listener; it is a new information that is given by the speaker. Therefore, the predicate is called 'viseshanam', meaning 'a new information' (on the viseshyam).

Coming to the mahaa vaakyaa, when the sruthi or guru says 'thadh thvam asI, thvam' is said to be the subject of the sentence, because it is known to the student also. Therefore, 'thvam' is 'viseshyam', a known entity and 'thadh' is 'viseshanam', a new information given by the sruthi. The student does not yet know "'I' am Brahman". Therefore, Brahmathvam is called predicate; it is also called vidheeyamaanam / aakaankshitha padhaartha: / apoorva: etc. The 'predicate' must always be the 'unknown'.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says 'thvama: viseshyathvam' meaning 'the thvam padhaa, (that is 'You'), is the subject, the already known' and 'thadha: viseshanaarthathvam' meaning 'thadh padha: (the thadhpadhaartha called Brahman) is viseshanam, the predicate, a new information given'.

When we apply the viseshana-viseshya-sambhandha to the vaachyaartha-s of thadh and thvam, we experience twofold contradictions. One contradiction is in terms of 'remoteness and proximity'. Viseshyam (thvam) has got 'proximity', while Brahman has got 'remoteness'. This 'Proximity-remoteness- contradiction' is the first contradiction. The second contradiction is samsaarithvam and asamsaarithvam, the 'bound status' of thvam and the 'liberated status' of Brahman. This is the second contradiction. Because of this twofold contradiction, the student has to go the third stage of lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha:

"Thvama: viseshyathvam (bhavathi); Thadh padhasya viseshanaarthvam cha (bhavathi)" is the first half of the verse, meaning "The term thvam ('thou') signifies the subject and the term thadh ('that') signifies the predicate". This is the second stage, in brief.

Moving to the second half of the verse, in the third stage of the mahaa vaakya vicharaa, termed lakshya lakshana sambhandha; these two primary meanings or vaachyaartha-s of the Paramaathmaa and the jeevaathmaa, which contradict each other mutually, must be considered together, to arrive at what is termed 'lakshanam'. The 'coupled' vaachyaartha pair will be called 'lakshanam'. What happens when they come together thus? Ans: In order to resolve the contradictions, both Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa, will drop some of their components as mithyaa. Paramaathmaa will drop some of its components as mithyaa; jeevaathmaa also will drop some of its components as mithyaa.

What are the components dropped? The Paramaathmaa will drop maayaa or prapanchathrayam, which is the upaadhi of Paramaathmaa. All the superior attributes of the Paramaathmaa, mentioned in the Vibhuthi Yoga of the Bhagavadh Githa, such as sarvagnyathvam, sarveswarathvam and sarvasakthimathvam will be dropped. The kaaranam status of Paramaathmaa will also be dropped. The thus 'undressed' Paramaathmaa will be called aathmaa.

Similarly, the jeevaathmaa vaachyaartha also has several attributes contradictory to those of Paramaathmaa and some of the components will therefore be dropped. What are these dropped components of jeevaathmaa? Sareerathrayam will be dropped; all the inferior attributes, including the sanchitha, praarabhdha and aagami karmaas will be dropped. It must be specially noted that Praarabhdham is also dropped. Finally, the kaaryam status i.e., the 'created' or 'creature' status also gets rubbed off the jeevaathmaa, by the Paramaathmaa.

Thus, Paramaathmaa rubs off some of the attributes of jeevaathmaa. And, what is left behind when these contradictory components of the primary meaning of the jeevaathmaa are knocked off? Ans: The 'jeeva' adjective will go away and what is left behind is 'aathma'.

The Visishtadvaitin, on the other hand, will answer this question, viz., "what is left behind when all the attributes are dropped?" as "nothing is left behind". This is because he believes a nirguna padhaartha is not possible at all. That is his philosophy. Therefore, he answers this question as 'nothing', whereas we, Advaitins, say "when the jeeva adjective goes, aathmaa is left behind".

Expressed arithmetically,

'Paramaathmaa' minus 'Parama' = nirguna aathmaa .

'Jeevathma' minus 'jeeva' = nirguna aathmaa.

And, these nirguna aathmaa-s are one and the same. There are not two nirguna aathmaas. The one and only left-behind entity is called 'ekaathmaa'.

To repeat, the process of the third stage is: "Take the Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa; pair together their vaachyaartha-s; this vaachyaartha pair is called lakshanam; and this lakshanam is sagunam only, because the Paramathmaa vaachyaartha has got superior attributes and the jeevaathma vaachyaartha has got inferior attributes; but, when they are intentionally coupled or equated, both of them lose their upaadhis/'skins' / 'dresses' and what comes out is the ekaathmaa and this ekaathmaa is called lakshyam. In the third stage, when the saguna jeevaathma and saguna Paramaathmaa 'rub' each other, because of their mutual rubbing, what comes out after this 'rubbing', is not two separate aathmaa-s but, one nirguna aathmaa. This lakshya ekaathmaa is free from prapanchathrayam and free from sareerathrayam also. All the superior attributes and all the inferior attributes will also be dropped. Lastly, the kaaarnam status of the Paramaathmaa and the kaaryam status of the jeevaathmaa are also dismissed "

When it is said that the ekaathmaa is free from prapanchathrayam and sareerathrayam, it should be carefully understood that the prapanchathrayam and sareerathrayam do not 'disappear'; they are only falsified. In the third stage alone, prapanchathrayam and sareerathrayam will be falsified as mithyaa anaathmaa. Similarly, the 'dropping of the superior attributes and inferior attributes' also does not mean that the attributes will 'go away'; but, that, they will be understood as mithyaa. The dismissal of sareerathrayaa, dismissal of the prapanchathrayaa, dismissal of the superior and interior attributes, and dismissal of the kaaranam and kaaryam statuses is termed 'falsification', in Vedhaantha.

What is left behind after all these 'dismissals' or 'falsification' is the kaarya-kaarana-vilakshanam-Brahman. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Viveka Choodaamani, sums up all these in a beautiful sloka : "Ekam eva sadh aneka kaaranam kaaranaanthara niraasya kaaranam kaarya kaarana vilakshanam svayam brahma thatthvamasī bhaavayaathmani” – “Who is One, the cause of many, but, who has no cause and is separate from cause and effect, self-existent Brahman – Thou art That. Think this in thy own self” (Verse 260).

After completing the third stage of the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, what is left behind is one 'thureeya ekaathmaa'. The viswa-thyjasa-praagnyaa triad is gone; the Viraat-Hirayagarbha-Antharyaami triad is also gone. Everything goes away. What is left behind is the kaarya-kaarana- vilakshana nirguna ekaathmaa.

What is the nature of this ekaathmaa? Ans: The nature of Pure Existence and Pure Consciousness.

What is 'Pure Existence'? Ans: (i) Existence is not a product, property or part of matter (ii) Existence is an entity, independent of matter, but, pervading the matter (iii) Existence is not limited by the boundaries of matter – not limited by 'space' (iv) Existence is not limited by 'time' also and (v) Existence, though it continues to survive even after destruction of matter, is not available for transactions, in the absence of the medium, the matter.

And, what is 'Pure Consciousness'? Ans: Similar to 'Pure Existence', 'Pure Consciousness' is also not a product, property or part of matter – the body and the mind, in fact, nor even of the heart.

This is the third stage.

The jeevaathmaa-Paramaathmaa pair is called 'lakshanam' and the 'Ekaathmaa' is called 'lakshyam'. And, there is lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha between nirguna ekaathmaa and the saguna –Paramaathmaa-jeevathmaa pair.

Reverting to the sloka, the second half:

- तयोः - For the saguna jeevaathma-Paramaathmaa pair,
- लक्ष्य लक्षण संबन्धः स्यात् - there will be a relationship of 'indicator- indicated' or 'revealer- revealed',
- प्रत्यगात्मना सह) - with the nirguna ekaathmaa.

Here 'prathyagaathmaa' means the 'nirguna ekaathmaa'. What is the adjective to this ekaathmaa? Param or jeeva? Ans: Neither.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 27:

कथं पुनरविवक्षितविरुद्धनिरस्यमानस्य लक्षणार्थत्वम् ।

How can what is not intended, is conflicting and is rejected, serve the purpose of indicating another meaning?

Here a poorva pakshin is raising a question. Sureswaraachaarya assumes that somebody has already partially understood the message and that, based on that partial understanding, a new doubt has arisen in him. The doubt, as addressed by that poorva pakshin to the Vedhaanthic guru is: "You are talking about lakshya-lakshana sambhandhaa, between the vaachyaartha-s and the lakshyaartha, the vaachyaartha-s being the saguna pair of Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa and the lakshyaartha being nirguna-eka-aathmaa. And, you are very happy to talk about this sambhandhaa, since you are using this sambhandhaa, to 'land' into the Ekaathmaa. But, the very expression lakshya-lakshana-sambhandhaa means that you are accepting duality, since you talk of a lakshyam and then of a lakshanam, and, also about a relationship between the two. You cannot deny that a relationship can be talked about only between two separate entities. Therefore, once you accept a distinct lakshyam, a distinct lakshanam and a relationship also between the two, how can you say Ekaathmaa? Ekathvam itself is impossible, since you are talking about lakshya-lakshana-sambhandhaa. In other words, sambhandhaa and advaitam can never go together. If you talk of advaitam, you should not talk about sambhandhaa, since sambhandhaa means relationship and relationship requires the existence of a minimum of two separate entities. If, in order to save advaitam, you drop sambhandhaa, you will not be able to understand mahaavaakyam, since, even according to you, sambhandhaa-s are necessarily required for successful understanding of the maha vaakyam. Therefore, without this lakshya-lakshana-sambhandhaa, in the third stage, maahavaakya vichaara would become impossible. And, if, therefore, again, you accept sambhandhaa for the sake of maha vaakya vichaara, advaitam becomes impossible. How do you solve this dilemma?"

How does the Advaita philosopher solve this problem? Ans: The Advaitin does not see a problem in this at all. He answers: "Even though we talk about a sambhandhaa between two entities, one of them happens to be mithyaa and the other is Sathyam. The vaachyaartha pair, the saguna jeevathma-Paramaathmaa pair, is mithyaa and the lakshyaartha, the nirguna eka aathmaa is Sathyam. Since we claim that there is ultimately only one sathya vasthu, this relationship between a mithyaa entity and the sathya vasthu will not rebel against Advaitam".

In response, the poorva pakshin comes up with another objection. He asks "How can there be a relationship between sathyam and mithyaa, since, relationship is possible only between two entities belonging to the same order of reality?"

This subject had been discussed many times earlier, in different contexts. An example supporting the poorva pakshin's view had also been given, as follows: "A parent is looking for a suitable match for his marriageable daughter. He repeatedly fails in his attempts, since whenever he comes across a suitable groom, he meets with some other problem, such as incompatibility in horoscopes etc. Years roll on. The anxious parent, in his dream, on a particular day, comes across an ideal match for his daughter, satisfying all conditions. The question is: Can that dream boy get married to the daughter in jaagrath avasthaa? Obviously not, because they belong to two different orders of reality".

Therefore, the poorva pakshin asks: "If the saguna-Paramaathma-jeevaathma pair, the vaachyaarthaa-s, is mithyaa and the lakshya ekaathmaa is sathyam, how can there be lakshya lakshana sambhandhaa between them, when they have different orders of reality?"

Sureswaraachaarya gives the answer in the following sloka (verse 27). The sambhandha gadhyam to the verse, is the poorva pakshin's question:

- अविवक्षित विरुद्ध निरस्यमानस्य - For the 'unintended', contradictory and 'to-be- rejected' vaachyaarthaa pair of saguna jeevaathma and saguna Paramaathmaa,

'Avivakshitham' means 'not intended' ('by the Upanishad is to be understood). Then what is intended by the Upanishad? Lakshyaarthaa alone is intended. Vaachyaarthaa comes under 'unintended component'. Going back to the banana example, though the shopkeeper does not intend to sell the 'peel' portion, and the buyer does not really intend to buy it, since the peel will not remove his hunger, the shopkeeper hands over the banana, with both the fruit and the peel portions. The fruit portion is the 'vivakshitha amsad', while the peel portion is the 'avivakshitha amsad'. Similarly, the vaachyaarthaa in the mahaa vaakyam is 'avivakshitam'. This is actually the stand of the Advaithin. The poorva pakshin is quoting the Advaithin alone, when he uses this adjective.

The second adjective is 'viruddham'. The two constituents of the vaachyaarthaa pair, the saguna Paramaathmaa and the saguna jeevaathmaa are mutually contradictory.

The third adjective is 'nirasyamaanam' meaning 'to be rejected / falsified'. The vaachyaarthaa pair is mithyaa, to be falsified, which again is the view of the Advaithin and which alone is quoted by the poorva pakshin.

Thus, vaachyaarthaa-s have got three features (i) they are in unintended (ii) they are mutually contradictory and (iii) they are mithyaa. "How can this mithyaa vaachyaarthaa-s and sathya lakshyaartham have lakshana-lakshya- sambhandhaa?" is the doubt of the poorva pakshin.

- कथं पुनः लक्षणार्थत्वम् - how can there be the role of being an indicator (of the sathya lakshana vasthu - the Ekaathmaa) ?

In brief, the poorva pakshin's objection to the Advaitin is: "How can the mithyaa vaachyaartha serve as a lakshanam to reveal the lakshya nirguna sathya aathmaa, through a lakshya lakshana sambhandhaa, because sambhandhaa is never possible between mithyaa and sathyam?"

If the poorva pakshin's objection is conceded, the Advaitin should either accept that both, viz., (i) the saguna Paramaathma-jeevaathmaa pair and (ii) the Ekaathmaa are sathyam; or accept that both are mithyaa. If he says both are sathyam, he will end up as a dvaitin. If, on the other hand, he says both are mithyaa, he will end up as a soonya vaadhi mahaa yaana Buddhist – a nihilist. Sureswaraachaaryaa has, therefore, to wriggle out of both dvaitam and soonya vaadhaa.

As an Advaitin, he asserts: "Both of them are not mithyaa ; and, both of them are not sathyam also. One is sathyam and the other is mithyaa. And, they do have lakshya-lakshana- sambhandhaa. They do have a revealer-revealed relationship".

Sureswaraachaaryaa also gives an explanation. He says: "Even though normally mithyaa and sathyam cannot have any relationship, in a mysterious manner, mithyaa can reveal sathyam. And, when it reveals sathyam, they have a mysterious relationship, which is one form of lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha:" |

To indicate this mysterious relationship, the Advaitin has coined two new words and those two words are 'upalakshanam' and 'upalakshyam'. The relationship is termed upalakshana-upalakshya-sambhandha: | This mysterious relationship is talked about, by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in the 27th verse.

Chapter III: Verse 27 –

लक्षणं सर्पवद्रज्जाः प्रतीचः स्यादहं तथा ।

तद्वाधेनैव वाक्यार्थं वेत्ति सोऽपि तदाश्रयात् ॥ २७ ॥

Even as the snake indicates the rope, the ego is the indicator of the inner Self. The import of the sentence is grasped by a sublation of the ego and the Self is capable of being so indicated because it is the substratum of the ego.

So what is the topic here? Given briefly: "Mithyaa and sathyam can never have any real relationship. But, even though they do not have any real relationship, they have got a mysterious relationship of mithyaa revealing the sathyam. And, mithyaa can reveal the sathyam because of a peculiar situation. What is that peculiar situation?

"Wherever mithyaa is there, sathyam is very much there, 'lending' existence to mithyaa, as an aasryaaa. Expressed in a different manner: Since sathyam exists as the lender of existence to any mithyaa padhaartha, wherever mithyaa is there, there itself, sathyam is also there. Therefore, by showing the mithyaa, I can reveal the sathyam, which is the lender of existence behind the mithyaa padhaartha".

And, Sureswaraachaarya gives the well known example of 'revealing the rope with the help of the false snake'. A guru can make use of the 'false snake', even though false snake cannot do any other function; it cannot produce poison; it cannot be used by the snake-charmer for earning money; even though the false snake is thus useless for anything, the guru can still use the false snake to reveal the rope.

Where is the rope? Ans: In the very same place where the snake is. And, the snake reveals the rope.

And, how does the guru do that? (Incidentally, all these are issues of epistemology; the study is called 'epistemology' / the 'process of knowing', which is being analyzed. Also, the argument is being presented as a dialogue between a guru and a sishyaa for the purpose of clarity). The guru reveals the rope by using the snake in an ingenious manner. What is that ingenious method? In the vision of the guru, there is no snake. It is the sishyaa who sees the snake there and is agitated. Since in the vision of the guru, the snake does not exist, the guru should not, in fact, use the word 'snake' at all. If at all there is a snake, it is only a 'false' snake, which is as good as non-existent for the guru. But, what the guru does, is, that he introduces the word 'snake'. This method is called anuvada:| He is quoting the 'snake', not from his view point, but, from the view point of the sishyaa. Since a snake exists in the view of the sishyaa, the guru compromises and deliberately uses the word 'snake', even though the snake does not exist. Not only does the guru use the word snake, he does not even use the adjective 'false'. This is because the snake is false only for the guru, while for the sishyaa, until the teaching is complete, not only the snake is there, the snake is real also. Therefore, the guru compromises and merely says "that snake". Even as he says this, the guru knows that he is not mentioning facts, since there is no snake at all. Deliberately, the guru is using the word 'snake', of which (false) snake the sishyaa is tremendously afraid.

The guru's statement is: "That snake is rope". The moment that sentence is used, because of using the word 'that snake', the sishyaa scrutinizes that place, where he is seeing the snake. And, because of the scrutiny of 'that snake', what does he understand? Ans: With the help of the statement of the teacher, he understands the rope. What type of rope? Ans: The real rope. In effect, to make the sishtyaa understand the 'real rope', what did the guru utilize? Ans: He used the false snake. If he did not use the false snake to show the real rope, the sishtyaa would have continued to be frightened of the snake. He would never 'discover' the rope.

By using the 'false' snake, the 'real' rope has been revealed. Therefore, in this instance, what is the relationship between the 'false' snake and the 'real' rope? Ans: There is a mysterious lakshya lakshana sambhaandhaa, which is called upalakshanam.

The guru can extend this principle to Vedhaantha also, by saying "This world that you see, is nothing but Brahmar". When the guru gives this teaching, the 'false' world, which is nonexistent in the vision of the guru, is used by him, to reveal the 'real' Brahman.

What is that real Brahman? Ans: The Pure Existence. And, where is that Pure Existence? Ans: Not somewhere else. Just as the rope is where the snake is, similarly the 'Pure Existence Brahmar' is in this world itself.

The 'real' Pure Existence is there and the sishtyaa has to grasp that 'real' Pure Existence ; and in the discovery of Pure Existence, what should happen to the world? Ans: The world should get falsified as mithyaa.

And, when this revelation takes place, the vaachyaartha has become lakshanam and the lakshyaartha becomes the lakshyam. If the 'false' snake can reveal the 'real' rope, the mithyaa saguna Paramaathmaa-jeevaathmaa pair can reveal the sathya nirguna Ekaathmaa. It is possible. This is what the Aachaaryaa points out.

Referring to the verse:

- सर्पवत् - Like the false snake,
- लक्षणं - which serves as the 'revealer'
- रज्ज्वाः - of the real rope,

The revelation of the 'real rope' by the 'false snake'. is through a mysterious relationship. When both the lakshanam and the lakshyam are equally real, the 'revealer-revealed relationship' is termed 'lakshana-lakshya-sambhandha.'| When one of them is real and the other is unreal, the 'revealer-revealed relationship' is called 'upalakshana-upalakshya-

sambhandha:' | In the context of the rajju-sarpaa, the relationship, therefore, is upalakshana-upalakshya-sambhandha: |

- तथा - in the same way,
- अहं - the vaachyaartha jeevaathmaa Paramaathmaa pair' (which is false),

Though the literal meaning of the word 'aham' is the vaachyaartha jaavaathmaa, in this context, in the meaning of the word, the vaachyaartha Paramaathmaa also should be included. The final meaning of the word 'aham', should, therefore, be understood as the 'vaachyaartha jeevaathmaa Paramaathmaa pair'.

- (लक्षणं)स्यात् - can become the 'revealer'
- प्रतीच :- of the nirguna ekaathmaa, (which is the lakshyam- the 'revealed')

'Pratheecha:' means 'of the thureeyam / the nirguna ekaathmaa, (which is sathyam)'. The word 'Pratheecha:' is 'shashti vibhakthi' of the noun 'prathyang'.

In the second half of the verse, the Aachaaryaa talks of the phenomenon, that takes place for the listener. Coming back to the rope-snake example, when the guru says "this snake is rope", two important phenomena take place. Both of them are extremely important for advaitam.

What is the first phenomenon? 'Mysteriously', the 'false' snake is able to reveal the 'real' rope, because guru has used the false snake alone to point out the rope. The 'false' snake has been utilized to reveal the 'real' rope; or, in other words, the 'false' snake has lead to the 'real' rope. This fact, viz., 'false leading to the real' is a fantastic phenomenon. The famous Upanishadic prayer runs: "asatho maam sathgamaya; thamaso maam jyothigamaya; mrithyor maam amritham gamaya". Mysteriously the 'finite' leads to the 'infinite', which does not seem logically possible. How can the finite lead to infinite? But, mysteriously, it has happened. This is fantastic phenomenon no. 1, viz. 'false snake leading to real rope'.

What is the second equally or more important phenomenon? "That snake is rope" is the statement of the guru. The first part of the sentence is 'that snake is'. Even till the time the sishyaa listens to this part, he takes the snake as real and existent, i.e., the "isness" is attributed by him to the snake. The portion 'that snake is', is the statement of the 'subject'. 'Rope' is the 'predicate'. Before listening to the 'predicate', viz., the 'rope', when the student is listening to the part of the sentence 'that snake is', the 'isness' / existence / reality had been given by him to the snake, because, even up to this point of time, i.e. even till the time 'that snake is', is being said by the guru, the sishtyaa remains in fright of the 'snake'. But, the moment the guru completes the sentence by stating the predicate 'rope', the sishtyaa transfers the "isness" from the snake to the rope. The moment the predicate is stated, the predicate 'absorbs' / 'swallows' the "isness". It must be noted that, there is only one 'is' in the sentence. Once, thus, the rope absorbs the "isness" i.e., once the "isness" goes to the rope from the snake, another fantastic phenomenon takes place. What happens? The frightening / terrible snake loses its "isness". What does that mean? The snake gets falsified. The falsification of the snake takes place, after the job of revelation - not before, but after the revelation job. The snake 'goes away', just as a lighted agarbatthi burns, gives fragrance and in the process, destroys itself.

To recap: "The snake reveals" is phenomenon no. 1. What is the second phenomenon? Ans: "After the revelation, the snake loses its 'isness'; it gets falsified".

Similarly, when the teacher says "saguna-jeevaathma-paramaathma pair is nirguna ekaathmaa", the first phenomenon is "saguna-jeevaathma-paramaathma pair revealing the nirguna ekaathmaa"; and, the second phenomenon is: "The 'isness' goes to the nirguna ekaathmaa and both the saguna jeevaathmaa and saguna paramaathmaa (saguna paramaathmaa means the Isvara with all His attributes) get 'falsified. Sankara Bhavadh Paadhaa in his Advaita Makarandaa says: "upasaantha jagath jeeva sishya aachaaryaa Isvara bhrama thadaaseetha giraa lakshyam aham ekarasam maha:". Sankara Bhavadh Paadhaa calls them all, including Isvara, as 'bhramaad' or misapprehension / delusion. Saguna jeeva is false; saguna Isvara is also false; nirguna ekaathmaa alone is.

This phenomenon (the second level phenomenon) of falsification of vaachyaarthaa is called baadha: | That is said in the second half of the verse.

139. Chapter III, Verse 27 to 29 (18-04-2009)

In this 27th verse, Sureswaraacharya is dealing with the third stage of understanding the mahaa vaakyam, through lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha: | Here, the word lakshanaa refers to the vaachyaartha-s of thvam padhaa and thadh padhaa in the form of saguna-jeevaathma-Parmaathma pair and the word lakshyam refers to the lakshyaartha of thvam padhaa and thadh padhaa, which is in the form of nirguna ekaathma. Between the saguna-jeevaathma -Parmaathma pair and the nirguna ekaathma, the relationship is lakshana-lakshya-sambhandha; or, to express this in a different manner, saguna-jeevaathma-Parmaatmaa pair reveals the nirguna ekaathma. And, therefore the relationship between them is 'revealer-revealed relationship'.

In this verse, Sureswaraacharya is answering a possible question. The saguna-jeevaathma – Parmaathma pair is said to be 'revealer' and nirguna Ekaathma is said to be the 'revealed'. In Advaita, saguna jeevaathma is mithyaa; saguna Paramathma is also mithyaa. And, nirguna ekaathma is considered to be sathyam. The question is "how can the mithyaa reveal sathyam, having a 'revealer-revealed' relationship, because of the law / fact that any relationship is possible only between two things having the same order of reality?". In other words, "How can mithyaa and sathyam have lakshya-lakshana-sambhandha?" is the question.

Sureswaraacharya gave the answer to this question, which answer was discussed in the earlier session also. He asserted: "It does happen sometimes – 'mithyaa revealing sathyam'". The example which Sureswaraacharya quoted was: "revealing the (real) rope, with the help of the (false) snake". When a person has mistakenly seen a snake in a rope, the very same snake is used by another person to reveal the real rope as the adhishtaanam for the false snake. In this example, the mithyaa snake is capable of revealing the sathyam rope, through the statement "That snake is nothing but rope". In this statement "that snake is a rope", the false snake itself is utilized to reveal the real rope. The interesting fact is, the moment the rope is revealed, the 'isness', which is in between the snake and the rope, like the proverbial cat on the wall, changes its position. Before the teaching, the 'isness' was associated with the snake; after the teaching, the 'isness', which the snake carried, is 'donated' to the rope, by the snake. The snake donates the 'isness' to the rope and after donating the 'isness' to the rope, the snake gets falsified. But, even though, the snake is to be falsified later, before falsification, the very snake was useful. In what way? Ans: It was carrying 'isness' or 'existence' for donating. This can be likened to a disposable coffee cup, which cup carries the coffee until the coffee is drunk. Thereafter, the cup becomes useless and is therefore disposable. The false snake serves as a disposable cup 'carrying' the existence and donates the existence to the rope. Thus, the false snake can reveal real the rope. And, how?

- तद्वाधेन एव - through its falsification.

Through the falsification of the snake, the rope is revealed. If that is possible, in a similar manner, saguna-jeevathmaa and saguna-Paramaathmaa can reveal nirguna ekaathmaa. Saguna Jeevaathmaa and saguna Parmaathmaa are both mithyaa, for which fact, the Advaitha Aaachaarya has saasthric support.

Even though mithyaa, Saguna Jeevathmaa and saguna Parmaathmaa 'carry' 'existence' temporarily and the temporarily-borrowed 'existence', is handed over to the nirguna ekaathmaa at the time of mahaa vakyaa. Nirguna ekaathmaa receives the 'existence' and the student comes to know that nirguna ekaathmaa alone is. Once the 'isness' is transferred, jeevaathmaa is falsified; Paramaathmaa is also falsified. But, until then, both of them were useful. Therefore, mithyaa can reveal sathyam, by transferring the 'existence'. This is what the Aachaaryaa says:

- सर्पवत् - Like the false snake,
- लक्षणं - which serves as the 'revealer'
- रज्ज्वाः - of the real rope,
- तद्वाधेन एव - through its own falsification;
- वाक्यार्थं वेत्ति - (and) the listener understands the statement ,

What is the statement, in the example given? 'the snake is the rope' is the statement, which the listener understands.

- तथा - in the same way,
- अहं - the saguna vaachyaartha jeevaathmaa Paramaathma pair (which is false),
- (लक्षणं)स्यात् - can become the 'revealer'
- प्रतीचः - of the nirguna ekaathmaa, (which is the lakshyam- the 'revealed').

'Lakshanam' means 'revealer'. 'Aham' means the false 'jeevaathmaa' and by implication, includes the false Paramaathmaa also. The adjective 'saguna' should also be added to both the jeevaathmaa and the Paramaathmaa.

Just as the false snake becomes the revealer of the real rope, the mithyaa-saguna-jeevaathma-Paramaathma pair also serves as the revealer of the real nirguna ekaathmaa.

And, in the process, i.e. even as the nirguna ekaathmaa gets revealed, which really means that, the existence is transferred to ekaathmaa from the jeevaathma-Paramaathma pair, both saguna jeevaathmaa and saguna Paramaathmaa get naturally falsified. 'Baadhitam' means 'getting falsified'. The term 'falsify' should be understood carefully. 'Falsify' does not mean that the perception or experience of jeevaathmaa or Paramaathmaa is lost. The perception will continue. The jeevaathmaa will continue to be seen; the Viswaroopa Saguna Paramaathmaa / Isvara will also continue to be seen, with all His glories / vibhuthies. For perception, all of them will be there; but, the seeker will not attribute reality to them.

Now we go to the 4th quarter of the verse, which is a separate sentence.

- सःअपि - (In the same way) the mahaavaakyam listener also,

'Sa:', in this context, means mahaavaakyasrothaa / the listener of the mahaavaakyam. 'api', of course, means 'also'.

The sentence is incomplete. We have to use 'vaakyartham vetthi' and 'thadhbaadhena' again.

- वाक्यार्थं वेत्ति - understands the final meaning of mahaavaakyam,

'Vaakyartham', in this context, should be understood as 'mahaavaakyartham'. What is 'mahaavaakyartham'? Ans: 'Nirguna ekaathmaa aham' is the mahaavaakyartham.

- तद्बाधेन एव - merely by the falsification of the vaachyaarthaa,

'Vaachyaarthaa' includes both 'thvam padha vaachyaartham', and 'thadh padha vaachyaartham'. 'Thvam padha vaachyaartham' is the saguna jeevaathmaa and 'thadh padha vaachyaartham' is 'saguna Paramaathmaa'. Both of them are falsified. 'Alpagnya:' is mithyaa ; 'Sarvagnya: is also mithyaa ; 'alpa sakthimaan' is mithyaa ; 'Sarva sakthimaan' is also mithyaa. All attributes, inferior or superior, all of them are mithyaa.

The verse declares: 'Thadh (vaachyaartha) baadhena eva vetthi'. But, how is this possible? This is answered in the verse itself:

- तदाश्रयात् - because the nirguna ekaathmaa is the aasrayam / adhishtaanam of both the sagunas.

'Thadh', in this term, includes both saguna jeevaathmaa and saguna Paramaathmaa. For both of them, nirguna ekaathmaa is aasrayam.

And, in Vedhaanthaa, when you say aasrayam, the meaning must be very, very clear. 'Aasrayam' means 'adhishtaanam'. Nirgunam is adhishtaanam for sagunam. But, when this is said, i.e. when it is said that 'Nirgunam is adhishtaanam for sagunam', it does not mean that two things are there in the manner "nirgunam is there and, sagunam is sitting upon that nirgunam". On the other hand, it means: "Nirgunam alone is there ; sagunam does not at all exist as a second thing. Sagunam is a false thing, which only borrows existence from the nirgunam." In other words, 'aasrayam' only means "they, viz., the nirguna ekaathmaa and the saguna-jeevaathma-Paramaathmaa pair, have got sathya mithyaa sambhandhaa'. Therefore, the 'false' can reveal the 'real'.

Quite often, the Advaita Aaacharyaas give another example (part from the rope-snake example) also, to convey this idea, viz., 'the false can reveal the real'. It is also a quite well known, popular support for this view. When one wants to apply a thilakam on one's forehead, one would naturally want to look at one's face. Unfortunately, there is no possibility of seeing one's own real / original forehead. One has no way of looking at one's forehead directly. What is done? A mirror is used; the mirror produces a reflected forehead, which is used to know the real forehead; looking at the unreal forehead, the thilakam is applied to the real forehead. For the purpose of revealing the real forehead, the unreal reflection is used as a means. The unreal reflection is used to know the real face. If, thus, mithyaa prathibhimbham can reveal the sathya bhimbham, the mithyaa sagunaa can reveal sathya nirguna. There is no problem at all.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 28:

इयं चावाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तिरन्वयव्यतिरेखाभिन्नस्येव । यस्मात् ।

This grasp of the meaning of the sentence which goes beyond its obvious verbal sense, is possible only for him who has known the discrimination between the Self and non-Self. For:

- इयं अवाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तिः च - This dvaita visishtadvaita bhinna nirguna advaita artha: / (or simply) nirguna advaita arthaa:

The term 'avaakyartha prathipatthi:' calls for a detailed explanation. 'Prathipatthi:' means jnaanam / vidhyaa / understanding / avabodha: / avagathi: |

'Chaavakyarthaprathipatthi:' should be split as 'cha + vaakyarthaprathipatthi:' | 'Vaakyam' means sentence. What we understand from a sentence, is called 'vaakyartham'. But, Sureswaraacharya says that, when it comes to understanding the maha vaakyam, an unique phenomenon happens. Once you understand the mahaavaakyartham, it becomes avaakyartham, meaning, "from the sentence you get / gather the non-sentential meaning".

'Avaakyarthaprathipatthi:' is an unique expression coined by Sureswaraacharya. Why does he coin this expression? To answer this, the student should know the background. Then only it will be clear.

Any sentence has got a plurality of words ; a single word, by itself, cannot become a sentence. A sentence consisting of plurality of words can obviously reveal only plurality of meanings. Therefore, normally, all the sentences can reveal either dvaitham or visishtaadvaitam only,

(In a lighter vein, Swamiji says there is a word, which can become a sentence and that word is 'marriage'. Of course, 'sentence', in this context, means 'punishment')

To revert: Normally a sentence has plurality of words; therefore, it should reveal plurality of meanings. And, the plurality can be related only in two ways: (1) The sentence can reveal many objects or (2) it can reveal one object with many attributes. If a sentence is revealing many objects, then the meaning is called dvaitha vaakyartha: | If it reveals one object with many attributes, as in the popular sloka, "prapannapaarijaathaaya thothra vethraika paanaye jnaana mudhraaya Krishnaaya Geethamruthaduhe nama:", which is a sentence revealing one Krishna with many attributes, the meaning is visishtaadvaita vaakyartha: |

Based on this principle only, dvaithins and visishtaadvaitins argue that Vedavaakyas also can reveal only dvaitham or visishtaadvaitam and therefore, revelation of nirguna ekaartha by a Vedavaakyam is not at all possible. Advaitins vehemently refute this view point. They hold, that, while it is granted, that, in the first two stages, mahaavaakyam talks of saguna vasthu-s, in the third stage, maha vaakyam does reveal only one entity without a second object and without any attribute also – the nirguna ekaathmaa.

And, to convey this unique idea, Sureswaraacharya uses the expression 'avaakyartham'. 'Avaakyartham' means 'dvaitha visishtaadvaita bhinna nirguna advaita artha:' | In English, it can be translated as "an attributeless non-dual entity, which is different from duality as well as attributed non-duality". Such a meaning is called 'avaakyartham', by the Aacharya.

The term 'dvaita visishtaadvaita bhinna nirguna advaita artha:' can be called, in brief, as 'nirguna advaita jnanam'. It is also important to note that, the statement 'nirguna advaitam asthi', should never be made, because, it would mean "it is existing somewhere as an object" ; the verb 'asthi' should not be used. The first person verb 'asm' alone can be used and the statement should be "nirguna advaitam aham asm".

But, this profound knowledge is achieved only by certain students, who fulfill an essential condition. What is that condition, which should be fulfilled by the student, for the rise of this knowledge? Sureswaraacharya answers:

- अन्वयव्यतिरेखा अभिज्ञस्य एव - only for a student who has gone through anvaya vyathirekha enquiry.

'Anvaya vyathirekha abhignya:' means 'one who is thoroughly conversant with the anvaya vyathirekha enquiry and its result' / 'a person who has removed identification with the body mind complex, by anvaya vyathirekha enquiry'.

Such a seeker has removed identification - both ahamkaara and mamakaara - with the five anaathmaas – which anaathmaas are (i) possessions (ii) profession (iii) family (iv) body and (v) mind. With regard to these pancha anaathmaas, ahamkaara and mamakaara must have been given up, through 'CLASP REJECTION' method. These pancha anaathmaas must be 'washed off' the seeker's hands and should be handed over to Viswaroopa Isvara. In the word 'I', none of these five should be included. When the statement 'Aham Brahma smi' is made, in the word 'aham' none of these five items should be allowed to find a place.

An example from mundane experiences can be given. It is common practice (or it was) to prepare बलप्लव-स in households, during the summer season, and lay them out for drying in the sun on the terraces. To protect the drying बलप्लव-स from crows and other birds, a youngster from the household will be asked to stand sentry; the youngster would chase away the crows with a stick in hand. In a similar manner, the seeker studying the mahaa vaakya, when uttering 'aham brahma sm' will be inevitably disturbed by thoughts of the family, profession or possession - all of them waiting, as it were, to hold the seeker by the neck. The seeker should therefore be on guard, chasing them away with the stick of 'anvaya vyathirekha argument', to the Viswaroopa Isvara, thus saving the 'moksha बलप्लव-स', which he / she can enjoy as a result. The anaathmaa crows should be chased away, using the anvaya vyathirekha stick to attain the 'moksha बलप्लव-स'.

By the term 'anvaya vyathirekhaabignyasya eva', the Aachaaryaa means 'Pancha anaathma niraakarthu: eva' / 'Anvaya' means the 'persistent / immortal aathmaa' and 'vyathirekha' means the 'incidental anaathmaa', which anaathmaa must be dismissed.

- यस्मात् - The reason is as follows (in the verse):

Chapter III: Verse 28 –

यावध्यावन्निरस्यायं देहादीन्प्रत्यगञ्चति ।

तावतावत्तदर्थोऽपि त्वमर्थं प्रविविक्षति ॥ २८ ॥

As one approaches the inmost Self progressively rejecting the non-Self, aspect by aspect, from the body onwards, exactly concomitant with the process is the tendency of the meaning of 'That' to merge in the meaning of 'Thou'.

This is a very important and beautiful sloka, which clearly gives the reason why the conviction 'aham brahma asmi' is strong or weak in an individual. What is the reason for the conviction 'aham brahma asmi' being strong in one individual and what is the reason for the same conviction being weak in another? Reasons for both are given in this sloka.

The student can visualize this in the form of an imagery : "Imagine I am a jeevaathmaa standing at a particular spot; on my left hand side, the pancha anaathmaa, consisting of possessions, profession, family, body and mind, is standing, wooing me strongly, as a candidate contesting a Public election would woo his voters. The pancha anaathmaa-s 'pull' me very strongly towards them – to my left. On my right hand side, Paramaathmaa is standing. I am the jeevathma in the centre – on one side is the anaathmaa and on the other side, is Paramaathmaa'.

Now, what Sureswaraachaaryaa says is "the more you go closer to anaathmaa, obviously you will get farther away from Paramaathmaa and the more you get away from anaathmaa, the closer you get to Paramaathmaa. Thus, what you want, whether anaathmaa or Paramaathmaa, is your choice. You have to choose between the two." Therefore, he says:

- यावत् यावत् निरस्य अयं देहादीन् - The more one negates the anaathmaa such as one's physical body etc.,

'Nirasya' means 'to negate'; but, here the 'negation' is not physically throwing away or physically abandoning. 'Niraasa:', literally, means 'ejection / expulsion / throwing out / removal' etc. But, on the pretext of 'niraasa:', the seeker need/ should not abandon his / her family. They (the seeker and his / her family) may continue to live, as and where they are living. 'Niraasa:', in this context, is only mental – it means 'abhimaana thyaga:'; this 'abhimaana thyaga:' is a compulsory process, in understanding the message of the mahaa vaakyam.

But, how does one know whether one is overwhelmed by abhimaanam or not? This subject, viz., 'aanthara sanyaasa:' or 'inner renunciation' was discussed during a Guru Poornima talk. Two methods were given for identification of abhimaanaa. The first acid test is 'anxiety'. The more the abhimaanam the more is the anxiety. The second test is 'special prayers' or 'sakaama bakthi:'. This is the second strong indication of abhimaanaa. The more the abhimaanaa, the more the special poojas. 'Abhimaana thyaga:' means thyaga: of worry and special prayers, (which the Swamiji calls 'CLASP Rejection').

And, what is the significance of the term 'yaavath yaavath:', meaning 'more and more'? Ans: All the five anaathmaas cannot be rejected in one stroke. Abhimaanaa for the external anaathmaas, such as possessions and profession is relatively weaker, whereas the abhimaanaa for family, body and mind is more strong. Therefore, the seeker should first start with rejection of abhimaanaa for the external 'possessions' and abhimaanaa for the external 'career'. The tougher proposition is dropping of abhimaanaa towards family members. This attachment is so strong that the seeker may have to resort to special meditation on the son, the daughter etc., and deliberately hand over each one to Viswaroopa Isvara. Family abhimaana thyaghaa is tougher than thyaghaa of abhimaanaa for profession and possessions.

Still stronger is the abhimaanaa in one's body, especially, when the body is ill. Later, even if the seeker manages to give up body abhimaanaa, he / she has the problem of tackling abhimaana with regard to the mind. The very videha mukthi prayer is from the standpoint of the mind only.

Greater the prayer for videha mukthi, greater is the abhimaanaa on the mind. That's why it is said that prayers for even videha mukthi should be dropped; mind abhimaanaa also should be dropped. Let the mind, along with the body, come again or not come again; why should it disturb an informed seeker?

Since, thus, dropping of abhimaanaa is understandably a gradual process, Sureswaraacharya uses the expression 'yaavath yaavath:' to convey this idea; the usage can be compared to the usage in verse 25, Chapter VI, of the Bhagavadh Geetha, where Lord Krishna uses the term 'sanai: sanai:', giving the same meaning 'gradually'. (The relevant portion of the verse runs "sanai: sanai: upamedh:" – "One should withdraw the mind gradually (from all desires) ").

The abhimaanaa for the pancha anaathmaa should be gradually given up. 'Dehaadheerl' means 'anaathmaa such as the body etc.'. 'Dehaadheerl' is the object of 'nirasya'. As even as the seeker gives up the pancha abhimaanaa and withdraws himself / herself from them, what is the result?

- प्रत्यक् अञ्चति - the more he / she goes towards prathyak aathmaa , the inner Self.

'Prathyak' refers to the 'saakshi chiatanyam', which is the saakshi to the pancha anaathmaa. (Incidentally, this term 'pancha anaathmaa' is not a traditionally used term; 'panchakosam' is a term traditionally used, in Vedhaanthic scriptures. 'Pancha anaathmaa' is a term coined by Swamiji, to refer in short and as a group, to the five factors which commonly disturb and worry people – possessions, profession, family, body and mind.)

'anchathl' mean 'gacchathl'. 'Prathyak anchathl' means 'travels inwards towards saakshi chaithanyam'. The seeker, through avasthaathraya viveka, sareerathraya vivekaa, pancha kosa vivekaa etc., 'travels inwards'. Then what happens?

- तावत् तावत् - In a gradual manner,

Gradually, the mahaavaakyam seems to become more and more a fact. When the student first listens to the Advaita Aachaarya saying "You are free", the statement appears to him/ her , to be a joke or a consoling statement - as if the guru is only trying to console the listener by saying that the listener is 'free' / is 'aanandasvaroopa.' etc.

But, what initially appeared as a jocular or consoling statement to the student, viz., the maha vaakyam, is realized to be more and more meaningful, as even as the student gradually but surely reduces pancha anaathma abhimaanaa. It is not a sudden realization. The 'realization' cannot be a sudden, mysterious event. What appears as a joke, later becomes 'possible'; from 'possible' to 'probable'; and, finally, from 'probable' to an absolute fact.

The more and more one gives up abhimaanaa, more and more will one have questions such as: "What am I waiting for? Why am I postponing my liberation? Is my liberation not a fact right now? Can I not straightaway claim 'I am free; I am in the binary format?' " etc. 'Liberation' will appear very, very possible.

Ultimately, if and when, for the seeker, the word 'I' excludes pancha anaathmaa, the seeker can happily claim "aham nithya muktha aathmaa asmI'".

'Thaavath thaavath' means 'gradually'.

- तदर्थःअपि - the thadh padha lakshyaartha: / the lakshyaartham of thadh padha
- प्रविविक्षति - enters / merges into
- त्वमर्थ - the thvam padha lakshyaartham.

'Praveshtum icchathi' is 'pravivikshathi' | The 'thvam padha lakshyaartham' means 'nirguna ekaathmaanam'.

'Thadh padha lakshyaartham' will get closer and closer to 'thvam padha lakshyaartham', as and when the anaathma abhimaanam gets further and further away and ultimately they merge together. Recalling the imagery described earlier, as the jeevaathmaa moves more and more away from anaathmaa, it will move more and more towards Paramaathmaa, until it merges with Paramaathmaa.

This great idea alone is symbolically presented in the form of the Chin mudhrra. When a human palm is stretched out, it is seen that the index finger is set apart from the thumb, while it appears closely associated with the other three fingers, the middle finger, the ring finger and the small finger, all four of them standing together in a line. In interpreting the Chin mudhrra, the thumb is taken to symbolize Paramaathmaa, the index finger is taken to symbolize jeevaathmaa and the other three fingers, the middle finger, the ring finger and the little finger are taken to represent the avasthaathraya anaathmaa, sareerathraya anaathmaa etc. The natural observation during the normal stretching out of the palm, of the index finger staying close to the middle, ring and small fingers, while separated from the thumb, can be read as the natural close association of jeevaathmaa with anaathmaa, and, also the natural tendency of the jeevaathmaa to maintain a distance from Paramaathmaa. Lord Krishna also points out in the Bhagavadh Githa : "Sarva bhhothaani sangham sarge yaanthi paranthapa'", conveying the idea that "everyone tends to 'join' anaathmaa only".

In the Chin mudhrra, the top of the index finger is bent to touch the top of the thumb, the two together forming a circle, while the other three fingers are left erect, keeping away from the index finger. This symbolizes the Vedhaanthic idea that when anaathmaa is kept away from the jeevaathmaa, the jeevaathmaa can get closer to and ultimately merge with Paramaathmaa.

In guiding the sishyaa, the guru has to forcefully draw the index finger (representing the jeevaathmaa) away from anaathmathrayam (represented by the middle, ring and small fingers) and forcefully join the index finger jeevaathmaa to the 'angushta maathra: purusha:' (of the Katopanishad). 'Angushta maathra:' is Paramaathmaa. And, in the Advaithic chin mudhraa, the index finger representing jeevaathmaa, should join with the top of the thumb, thus symbolically merging with Paramaathmaa. (In contrast, in Saiva Siddhaantha Mudhraa, the index finger touches the root of the thumb, to show that jeevaathmaa is eternally the dhaasaa of Paramaathmaa).

Further, the index finger going to the top of the thumb, forms a full circle, a Poorna, the circle indicating that there is no beginning or end. The 'anaadhi anantha nirguna Ekaathma' is indicated by the circle. The chin mudhraa, thus, conveys jeevaathma-Paramaathma eikyam, the entire anaathmaa becoming mithyaa.

"Angushta darjani yoga mudhraa vyajena dehinaam sruthyartham brahma jeeva eikyam darsayanahaa avathaath Siva:" is a beautiful sloka on Lord Dakshinamurthy.

Sambhandha Gadhyaam (part) to Verse 29:

कस्मात्पुनःकारणादेहाध्यनात्मत्वप्रतिपत्तावेवात्मा तदर्थमात्मत्वेनाभिलिङ्गते न विपर्यय इति ।

Why is it that the Self fuses with the meaning of 'That', only on our understanding that the non-Self such as the body is not the Self?

In the previous verse, Sureswaraachaarya had declared, that, 'merging into Paramaathmaa requires a pre-requisite, viz., 'distancing from anaathma'. He had said that 'pancha anaathma thyagha:' is compulsory; that, attachment to anaathmaa should be given up. This is compulsory for mahaa vaakyam to do its job.

When this much is said, many seekers with lingering attachments, will certainly be disturbed; because, it is a natural tendency for everyone including a diligent seeker to desire (as the English saying goes) to 'have the cake and eat it also'. Or as the Tamil proverb goes 'koozukkum aasai meesaikum aasai'.

People do not want to give up their attachment towards their children, grandchildren, possessions etc. (termed aasaa paasam). They want to strongly hold on, with one hand, to the possessions, profession, family etc. and add to them Paramaathmaa and moksham also, trying to 'grab' them with the other hand. Sureswaraachaarya warns it is never possible. He declares that 'Anaathma abhimaana thyagha:' is compulsory for mahaa vaakyam to be effective. If the attachment to anaathmaa is not given up, the knowledge of mahaa vaakyam will be purely academic. Such an aspirant, i.e. the one who studies Vedhaantha diligently, but, does not give up attachments, may become a scholar in Vedhaantha, but, will continue to be a samsaari.

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa also declares somewhere "sanyaasena eva moksha:"| By this statement, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa is not referring to the external symbols of sanyaasaa, like kaashaaya vasthram etc. What he means by sanyaasaa is 'giving up attachment to the pancha anaathma | 'pancha anaathma abhimaana thyaaagha:'| That is compulsory.

Manthraa 3 of the Kaivalya Upanishad manthraa runs: "Na karmanaa na prajayaa (na) dhanena thyaaagene eke amruthathvam aanasu:"- "People attained immortality not through karma; not through offspring; nor through wealth; but, only through thyaaghaa". In this manthraa also, the word 'thyaagha:' does not mean "running away from home or putting on ochre robes". After assuming ochre robes, one can get attached even to the ochre robes. Even if one joins or acquires an aashramaa (a hermitage), aasrama abhimaanam might result. Merely moving to sanyaasa aasramaa from grihastha aasramaa does not guarantee abhimaanathyaagha: | One can renounce one's family, possessions, position etc. to take to aasrama sanyaasaa. But, one's body will still go along with him / her. Even if a person is able to give up attachment to the physical body and forgetting the body, sits in meditation, the mind will continue to function and cause disturbances. So, what is required is firm mental renunciation of all anaathmaa

This is sanyaasa: and that sanyaasa sahitha jnaanam alone will work in giving 'liberation'. Jnaanam will never work alone without sanyaasaa – the word sanyaasa (to be noted again) meaning abhimaana thyagha: |

Abhimaana thyagha: / 'Clasp rejection', as explained, is a silent inner phenomenon, which the aspirant has to develop gradually.

Towards this end, the student, in fact, can make use of even every instance of 'anxiety' as an opportunity for practicing sanyaasaa. Any time anxiety arises, the student should remember these exhortations of Sureswaraacharya and remind himself/ herself that abhimaanaa is indicating its presence, through the anxiety. He/ she should refuse to worry and thus, get over abhimaanaa.

This does not mean that duties should be given up. 'Performance of duty' is not abhimaanaa ; worry alone is abhimaanaa. Performance of duty is 'role playing', i.e. playing one's mandatory role in society. 'Role Playing', by itself, does not cause samsaraa. Abhimaanaa and worry alone cause samsaraa. Role playing is saamaanya adhyaasa: ; worry is visesha adhyaasa: | A diligent seeker should give up this visesha adhyaasa: of worry and abhimaanaa.

But, majority of people do not do this, because, they think that worry is an indication of care and love. They wrongly assume that anxiety about children indicate 'their love for their children and also conversely, that, absence of anxiety indicates 'lack of love' and 'irresponsibility'. People want to worry, thinking that 'worrying' is their responsibility. Vedhaanthaa points out, that, one can love and be responsible, without worrying / getting anxious. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya advises "Give up that wrong thinking".

- देहादि अनात्मत्व प्रतिपत्तौ एव - "Only when a person understands the anaathmaa status of the body etc.,

'anaathmathvam' means 'anaathmaa status' ; the compound term 'prathipatthaveva' should be split properly as 'prathipatthau + eva'. 'prathipatthi:' means 'understanding' / 'knowledge'. 'Anaathmathva prathipatthi:' means 'understanding the anaathmaa status'. This 'understanding of the anaathmaa status of the body etc.' leads to 'abhimaana thyaagha:' or 'renunciation of attachments'. Therefore, 'Anaathmathva prathipatthau eva', may be interpreted as 'abhimaana thyaaghaath eva'.

Only by renouncing the attachments:

- आत्मा - I, the jeevaathmaa
- तदर्थं अभिलिङ्गते - will embrace / merge with the Paramathmaa,

Only by giving up the abhimaanam on anaathmaa, the jeevaathmaa will 'embrace' Paramaathmaa. 'abhilingathe' means 'aalingathe' / will embrace. 'Thadhartham' means 'thadh padha lakshyaarthaam' which, in turn, means 'Paramaathmaa'.

- आत्मत्वेन - in the form of 'eiykyam' or in the form of total 'one-ness';
- न विपर्ययः - not otherwise"
- इति कस्मात् कारणात् - Why is it so ?

The Aachaaryaa foresees the questions / objections: "Why do you insist on abhimaana thyaagha:? Why can I not have attachment to anaathmaa on one hand and simultaneously have attachment to Paramathmaa also. Why can I not hold on to both?"

'viparyayam' or 'otherwise' indicates the questions 'why not have abhimaanaa and gain Brahman also?. Why can I not have both? Why are you insisting upon sanyaasa?"

Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts that without sanyaasaa, Naishmarmya Siddhi will not work.

140. Chapter III, Verse 29 (06-06-2009)

In these portions of the third chapter of this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, Sureswaraachaaryaa is pointing out that 'thvam padhaartha vichaaraa' is the crucial first step, if 'mahaa vaakya vichaaraa' has to be successfully concluded. The successful conclusion of 'mahaa vaakya vichaaraa' is possible only when there is a strong foundation of 'thvam padha vichaaraa', done through anvayaa and vyathirkhaa; and, through this 'anvaya vyathireka vichaaraa', one has to come to the conclusion that, 'I', the observer – the dhruk - am aathmaa and the entire observed universe- the dhrusyam- is anaathmaa . To repeat (in view of its importance) the conclusion to be arrived at, is: "'I', the dhruk saakshi, am aathmaa ; and the entire dhrusya prapanchaa is anaathmaa". This 'dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam' is very important. And, when this term 'dhrusya prapanchaa', meaning the 'observed universe', is used, the dhrusya prapanchaa should be understood to include five significant components: (1) property (2) profession (3) family (4) body and (5) mind. Care must be taken to include all these significant components in dhrusya prapanchaa and also to ensure that dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam takes place, during thvam padha vichaaraa, through anvaya vyathirekhaa method.

This dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam has a further corollary, which also must be understood. Dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam must mean dhrusya prapancha abhimaana thyaagha: | 'Anaathmathva dharsanam' should be understood as 'abhimaanaa thyaagha:'; and, in this term, by the word abhimaanaa, what are meant are 'ahamkaaraa' and 'mamakaaraa'| Both the bhaavanaas, 'me' and 'mine', must be given up. Anaathmathva dharsanam includes abhimaana thyaagha:; and, this dhrusya prapancha abhimaana thyaagha: alone is called dhrusya prapancha sanyaasa: or just sanyaasa: |

Thus, thvam padhaartha vichaara should lead to sanyaasa:| And, without sanyaasaa, mahaavaakyavichaaraa cannot be fruitfully concluded. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa also repeatedly says "sanyaasa poorvaka jnaath eva moksha:" | Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says that dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam, dhrusya prapancha abhimaana thyaagha: and dhrusya prapancha sanyaasa are all very important. In fact, dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam = dhrusya prapancha abhimaanaa thyaagha: = dhrusya prapancha sanyaasaa: | And, 'Thvam padha vichaaraa' and 'sanyaasaa' may even be considered synonymous, since thvam psdhaartha vichaaraa leads to sanyaasa:|

To recap: "jnaanam includes sanyaasa:; sanyaasa: means dhrusya prapancha abhimaana thyaagha:; dhrusya prapancha abhimaana thyaagha: is the result of dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam ; dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam is the result of thvam padha vichaaraa through anvaya vyathirekhaa".

This sanyaasaa is externally indicated by the kaashaayaa vasthrraa and giving up of the grihastha aasrama. But, the kaashaaya vasthrraa and the formal sanyaasa aasramaa are only external aspects. Whether these external aspects are resorted to, or not, is not very significant; what is significant is the mind, which must be a 'kaashaayaa' mind - a mind without abhimaanaa. And, Sureswaraachaaryaa says only when abhimaanaa-s are given up, the first layer of ignorance is removed

In the thvam padhaartha vichaaraa, in the renunciation of dhrusya prapancha abhimaanaa alone, the first layer of ignorance is gone. What is that first layer of ignorance? Ans: 'Dhrusya prapancha aathmathva dharsanam' (seeing the dhrusya prapanchaa as 'myself' or as 'mine') is the first layer of ignorance. And, 'dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam' (correcting this vision of dhrusya prapanchaa, as 'myself' or 'mine') is the removal of this first layer of ignorance.

And, after the successful conclusion of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, a second layer of ignorance also will be removed. What is that second layer? Sureswaraachaaryaa says dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharasanam is also another form of ignorance. This will be discussed later.

Now, in these portions, we are in the process of dhrusya prapancha anaathamathva dharsanam – the process of removing the first layer of ignorance, which is 'putting on kaashaaya vasthram' or 'dipping the mind in sanyaasaa' by abhimaanaa thyaghaa of property, profession, family, body and mind. Sureswaraachaaryaa is emphasizing this, in this introductory paragraph under study.

The sambhandha gadhyam under study starts with a question from a poorva pakshin "Why are you insisting on sanyaasaa?". The question arises, because, the very topic of sanyaasaa is a painful topic; a normal individual is attached so much to his / her family that the very thought of sanyaasaa is a disturbing thought. When one has to choose between sanyaasaa and samsaaraa, one invariably votes for samsaaraa, rather than sanyaasaa, because sanyaasaa seems to be more painful than samsaaraa. One tends to say: "If worry results from my attachment, so be it. But, I do not want to give up attachment". The story of the monkey and groundnuts is well worth remembering in this context. The story is as follows: "A monkey was regularly taking away handfuls of groundnuts spread in the open, by a farmer, for drying. To catch the monkey, the farmer, one day, set a narrow-necked pot with some ground nuts in the pot, as a trap. The monkey thrust its hand into the pot and grabbed a handful of nuts; but, since the neck of the pot was narrow, it could not pull out its hand containing the fistful of groundnuts; the monkey resorted to squealing. The farmer rushed to the spot and started thrashing the monkey. All that the monkey had to do, to escape the thrashing, was to drop the groundnuts, free its hand and run away. But, the monkey would rather receive the 'thrashing' than 'renounce' the groundnuts". So are most grihasthaas; they do not mind the family problems, because their attachment is so strong that they do not want to give up their families. Sureswaraachaaryaa and Bhagavaan tell such people: "Go ahead and get the 'thrashing'; but, a time will come, when you will be hurt so much that the 'renunciation' will have to happen helplessly".

The poorva pakshin, who obviously has intense attachments, is questioning the need for sanyaasaa. He asks: "Is not jnaanam enough? Why is sanyaasaa necessary?"

- कस्मात्पुनःकारणात् - "What is the reason
- देहादि अनात्मत्वप्रतिपत्तौ एव - that only through the understanding of the anaathmathvam of the body etc.,

The term 'dehaadhi' stands for 'pancha vidha dhruhya prapanchaa' | 'anaathmathva prathipatthi:' means 'anaathmathva dharsanam'; anaathmathva dharsanam' results in 'abhimaana thyaagha:;' 'abhimaana thyaagha:' means 'sanyaasa:;' |

- आत्मा तदर्थं अभिलिङ्गते - aathma can merge into Brahman,

'Aathmad, in this context, means the 'jeevaathmaa'. What kind of jeevaathmaa? Ans: Which has done sanyaasaa / sanyaasi jeevaathmaa. 'abhilingathe' means 'embraces' / 'aalingathe'. What does it embrace? Ans: 'thadhartham'; 'thadhartham' means 'thadh padhaartham'; 'thadh padhaartham' means 'thadh padha lakshyaartham'; 'thadh padha lakshyaartham' means 'Paramaathmaa'.

The word 'aalinganam' does not indicate a physical act, in this context (as Lord Rama is sometimes depicted embracing Lord Anjaneya, His devotee par excellence). It only conveys the intellectual understanding of the seeker of the mahaa vaakyam, 'aham brahma asmi'.

- न विपर्यये - and not otherwise ?"
- "Not otherwise" means "without sanyaasaa".
- इति - If such a question is raised:

Sureswaraachaaryaa had earlier stated: "Only after sanyaasaa, jeevaathmaa can 'embrace' / merge with Paramaathmaa". And, the poorva pakshin asks the Aachaaryaa, "kasmaath puna; kaaranaath dehaadhi anaathmathva prathipatthau eva aathmaa thadhartham abhilingathe?" meaning "Why do you insist upon sanyaasaa as a prerequisite for jeevaathma-Paratmaathma eikyam?"

In other words, the poorva pakshin's question is: "Why do you insist that jeevaathma-Paramaathma- eikyam is not possible without sanyaasaa?"

It must be carefully understood and remembered, that, when the word 'sanyaasaa' is used in this context, what is talked about is not the external aasrama sanyaasaa. What is insisted upon is the internal sanyaasaa (for which Swamiji's coined term is 'clasp rejection'). Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa gives the answer.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 29:

उच्यते । प्रत्यगात्म अनवबोधस्य अनात्मस्वाभाव्यात् तदभिनिर्वृत्तश्च अयं बुद्ध्यादिदेहान्तः। तस्मिन् आत्मत्वं अविध्याकृतमेव । आत्मत्वं इव अनात्मत्वं अपि साविध्यस्य एव । यतो निरविध्यो विद्वान् अवाक्यार्थरूप एव केवलोऽवशिष्यते। तस्मादुच्यते ।

Let me explain. The non-apprehension of the Self is not inherent to the Self. By that non-apprehension itself all this non-Self like the body is set up. Its identification with the Self is due to nescience. Similarly, its distinction from the Self and its presentation as non-Self is also due to nescience. Thus the enlightened one, free from ignorance, abides alone and is himself of the nature of the non-verbal import of 'That thou art'. Therefore, the following is said:

Why do we say that dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam is compulsory?

As already indicated, it should be carefully remembered by the student that 'anaathmathva dharsanam' and 'sanyaasaa' are synonymous. 'Anaathmathva dharsanam' = 'abhimaana thyagha.' = 'sanyaasaa'. These three words should be understood as one and the same concept.

Earlier, Sureswaraachaaryaa had said dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharasanam is compulsory. Now, he gives the reason why. The gist of the Aachaaryaa's answer is first gone through, before entering the actual text.

The gist is as below (in steps):

Step 1: The entire dhrusya prapanchaa is born out of moolaavidhyaa. This fact was discussed and established in the introduction to this chapter (Chapter III) and also in the earlier chapter (Chapter II).

Step 2: Moolaavidhyaa or maayaa is of achethanasvaroopam / jada svaroopam.

Step 3: Since maayaa is achethana / jada svaroopam, the dhruya prapanchaa born out of maayaa, is also achethana/ jada svaroopam.

Step 4: Entire dhruya prapanchaa being achethanam, all the five significant components of dhruya prapanchaa are also achethanam.

To name the five components again, they are: Property, profession, family, body and mind. Though difficult to assimilate, the entire family, all the perceived bodies, are achethanam and one's own body is also achethanam, since it is also a product of moolaavidhyaa (moolaavidhyaa kaaryathvaath) . Not only is the body achethanam, the mind is also achethanam.

Step 5: Therefore, the entire pancha achethana dhruya prapanchaa has to be anaathmaa only.

Why do we say it is anaathmaa? The explanation: 'Aathmaa' refers to 'Self'; and 'I', the 'Self', am chethana: | 'I' am a Conscious entity. The pancha dhruya prapanchaa being achethanam, it obviously cannot be the chethana aathmaa aham and is, therefore, termed anaathmaa, which term means 'different from Self'. /

Step 6: It follows, therefore, that, looking upon the body-mind as aathmaa, is ignorance or avidhyaa. (This ignorance is considered as the first layer of avidhyaa)

Step 7: It further follows that, correcting this outlook is essential, if mahaa vaakyam has to be understood properly. 'Correcting this outlook' i.e., 'cognizing the body-mind as anaathmaa / 'anaathmathva dharasanam' is 'peeling off' the first layer of avidhyaa . This 'peeling off' alone is otherwise called *sanyaasa | Since this 'peeling off' / correcting is an essential step, 'sanyaasaa' is said to be compulsory |

Reverting to the text, for clarity, this passage can be split into several sentences.

First sentence:

प्रत्यगात्म अनवबोधस्य अनात्मस्वाभाव्यं (अस्ति) - Maayaa is of the nature jadam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to maayaa or moolaavidhyaa as 'prathyagaathma anavabodha.' or as 'Self-ignorance'. | Prathyagaathma anavabodha: = moolaavidhyaa = maayaa |

'svaabhaavyam' means 'essential nature'. Since aathmaa is chethanasvaroopam, the opposite term viz., anaathmaa will mean 'jadam' (as already pointed out above).

In this context, it should be noted, that, in Advaita Vedhaanthaa, 'Self ignorance' alone is called moolaavidhyaa, whereas, the 'ignorance of anything else that is anaathmaa' is called 'sthoolaavidhyaa'. Ignorance of mathematics is not moolaavidhyaa; ignorance of atom is not moolaavidhyaa. Moolaavidhyaa is the name of only one ignorance, viz. 'self-ignorance' (as seen in the introduction of chapter III).

Second sentence:

तदभिनिर्वृतश्च अयं बुद्ध्यादिदेहान्तः - This entire universe including pancha kosaas is born out of that maayaa.

'Thadh' refers to the avidhyaa / moolaavidhyaa / maayaa, mentioned in the first sentence. Moolaavidhyaa was defined (in the first sentence) as 'prathyak aathma anavabodha:' or 'ignorance of the inner Self', and, that 'prathyagaathma anavabodha:' or 'moolaavidhyaa' or 'maayaa' is what is being referred to, by the pronoun 'thadh', occurring in the second sentence. 'Abhinirvruthaa:' means 'produced'. 'Thadh abhinirvruththa:', therefore, means 'produced by maayaa' | It can be expressed as 'maayaa kaarya bhootha:' |

Thus, 'Prathyagaathma anavabodha anirvruththa:' means 'maayaa kaaryam'. What is that 'maayaa kaaryam'? The Aachaaryaa says "ayam buddhyaadhi dehaantha:" meaning "all these, beginning with buddhi up to the deham" | The reference is to the pancha kosaa:, which should also include the family, possessions etc. All these are born out of maayaa and are therefore jadam only.

The third sentence:

(तस्मात्)तस्मिन् आत्मत्वं अविध्याकृतं एव - Therefore, in that panchakosaas, which are also jada svaroopam, the notion of 'I' or the notion of 'mine' (the notions, 'body is myself' and 'body is mine') are both ideas born out of ignorance only.

'Thasmih', in this context, means 'in the buddhyaadhi dehaantha: / in the pancha kosaas; 'aathmathvam' refers to the notions of 'I' and 'mine', i.e. having the notions 'I am the body' or 'the body is mine'.

The term 'avidhyaa krutham eva' means 'is born out of ignorance only'.

The reason why it is ignorance, is obvious, because jada pancha kosaas cannot be chethana aham, as explained already.

And, therefore, during the course of thvam padha vichaaraa, the student has to 'peel off' this avidhyaa. This 'peeling off' of avidhyaa is anaathmathva dharsanam, otherwise called sanyaasaa. Therefore this sanyaasaa becomes compulsory, before the student goes to thadh padha eikyam. If the seeker retains this avidhyaa, the meaning of the word 'aham' in 'aham brahma asmi' or 'thvam' in 'thadh thvam asi', would continue to include all the layers of anaathmaa and as a consequence, when the guru teaches the mahaa vaakyam and tells the student "You are Brahman", the guru's statement will sound hollow and unconvincing.

With this, the Aachaaryaa had indicated the necessity for dhrusya prapancha anaathma dharsanam / dhrusya prapancha abhimaana thyaagham / sanyaasaa.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa moves on to the next step, which is akin to a big jump, though, Sureswaraachaaryaa appears to make a 'shocking and surprising' statement, in a very casual manner. What is that 'big jump'?

As before, the gist of the Aachaaryaa's statement can be gone through, before entering the actual text.

What is the first layer of ignorance? It was seen that "dhrusya prapancha aathmathva bhaavanaa / dhrusya prapancha aathmathva dharsanam" is the first layer of ignorance i.e., "looking upon the dhrusya prapanchaa as 'I' or 'mine' " is considered as the first layer of ignorance. It was also seen that this first layer of ignorance is to be removed by diligently correcting / changing one's perspective to the contrary, i.e. by realizing that dhrusya prapanchaa is anaathmaa.

Let us assume that we have crossed this first step successfully. Now, we have got 'dhrusya prapancha anaathma dharsanam' and we are happy that we have 'peeled off' the first layer of ignorance.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa, to our utter surprise, appears to explode a bombshell. He says that dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam is also avidhyaa, i.e., he says that, 'seeing the world as anaathmaa is also avidhya'.

As a first step, Sureswaraachaaryaa said: "World is anaathmaa". Now, he warns: "Do not say that the world / the family / pancha kosaas are anaathmaa".

Then, can we say that they are aathmaa? Obviously not, because that has already been negated by him.

Now, anaathmathva dharsanam is also considered by him, as avidhyaa. The reason as to why this is so, is explained by the Aachaaryaa, later. Now he says:

आत्मत्वं इव अनात्मत्वं अपि साविध्यस्य एव - Like dhrusya prapancha; aathmathva dharsanam, dhrusya prapancha; anaathmathva dharsanam also belongs to an ignorant person only.

'Saavidhya:' means 'ignorant person'. 'avidhyayaa saha varthate' ithi 'saavidhya:' (The word is similar to the well-known name 'Somaaskanda Parameswara:', wherein the word 'somaaskandha:' is split as 'sa + Uma + Skandha:', referring to Lord Siva, as accompanied by Uma and Skandhaa.)

Sureswaraachaaryaa's statement is: "Seeing dhrusya prapanchaa as anaathmaa is also a wrong vision, belonging to an ignorant person only".

The question arises: "Why?" Ans: "Because, once you say dhrusya prapanchaa is anaathmaa different from aathmaa, you are accepting that there are two things, i.e., you are accepting dvaitham, which 'acceptance' will be against the final goal of Advaita Vedhaanthaa. Also, the universe is vast and big and 'I' being someone different and away from that vast, anaathmaa universe, 'I' will become small; 'aathmaa' will become limited".

Because of this wrong vision of accepting a dvaitha prapanchaa only, people have a wrong concept of mokshaa also. They tend to think: "The entire dhrusya prapanchaa is 'terrible' anaathmaa and 'I', the aathmaa, am now in the world, helplessly disturbed by the happenings in the anaathma prapanchaa. My goal is mokshaa, which, therefore, is to escape from this world and to never, never return to the world again".

This wrong concept of mokshaa results, because of the perspective of 'two' (dvaitham) things – (i) the world, which is anaathmaa and (ii) 'I', the aathmaa. The goal is, therefore, looked upon as getting videha mukthi to attain mokshaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says that both visions, viz., (i) looking upon the world as anaathmaa and (ii) looking upon escape from the world as mokshaa, belong to the ignorant person.

He says: "World is not even anaathmaa. World is not aathmaa; world is not anaathmaa also, because there is no second thing other than aathmaa".

What is the meaning of the word anaathmaa? As indicated earlier also, anaathmaa means 'that which is different from aathmaa'. And, that which is different from the aathmaa is possible, only if there is a second thing other than aathmaa. Only then, the second thing can be called anaathmaa. But, since our (Advaitins') ultimate vision is that there is no second thing apart from aathmaa, the word anaathmaa itself should not exist in the dictionary of an advanced Advaitic student. The very word anaathmaa should not exist, because to use the word anaathmaa, is to accept that there is something other than aathmaa. Since there is nothing other than aathmaa, the world cannot be called anaathmaa. "Therefore" the Aachaaryaa concludes "dhrusya prapancha anaathma dharsanam is also ignorance".

Then, the next question is: "If the world is not aathmaa and if the world is not anaathmaa also / if the world is neither aathmaa nor anaathmaa / if aathmathva dharsanam of the world is wrong and anaathmathva dharasnam of the world also is wrong, then, what is this world? What other dharsanam is right?"

This dhrusya prapanchaa has to come under some category. If it does not come under either aathmaa category or anaathmaa category, then what category does it come under? What dharsanam is right?

Sureswraachaaryaa answers: "'aathmathva-anaathmathva-vilakshana- dharsanam' is the right dharsanam. World is something different from aathmaa and something different from anaathmaa. Therefore, dhrusya prapancha aathmathva-anaathmathva-vilashana-dharsanam is alone right".

At the conclusion of Mahaavaakya vichaara, the seeker should have 'peeled off' the second layer of ignorance also. When the first layer of ignorance is 'peeled off', 'aathmathva dharsanam' will go away; and, when the second layer of ignorance is 'peeled off', the anaathmathva dharsanam also will go away. After, maaha vaakya vichaara, the seeker will have dhrusya prapancha aathmathva-anaathmathva-vilakshana- dharsanam only.

Then, the next question is "What do you mean by aathmathva-anaathmathva-vilakshana dharsanam". Ans: Aathmaa has been defined as 'sath' i.e. of the nature of 'Existence'. The Chaandoghya Upanishad Manthraa (VI.16. 3) which states: "Eithadh aathmyam idhagum sarvam thath sathyam sa aathmaa" may be recollected in this context.

'Aathmaa' has been defined as 'sath' principle. What does 'sath' mean? 'Existence'. And, if 'aathmaa' means 'sath', 'anaathma' should mean 'asath'. Therefore, 'aathmathva-anaathmathva-vilakshnam' would mean 'sath-asath-vilakshanam' | This 'sadhasadvilakshana

dharsanam' is the right dharsanam | And, 'sadhasadhvilakshana dharsanam' means 'mithyaathva dharsanam'.

Dhrusya prapanchaa is neither aathmaa nor anaathmaa. It is mithyaa; it is unreal; it is as good as non-existent.

'Dhrusya prapancha aathmaathva dharsanam' is avidhyaa ; 'dhrusya prapancha anaathmathva dharsanam is also avidhyaa; 'dhrusya prapancha mithyaathva dharsanam' is alone vidhyaa.

The entire universe is mithyaa, akin to a movie or a drama. The 5th capsule of Vedhaanthaa (as enunciated by Swamiji) exhorts: "By remembering 'my' real nature, I convert life into a drama or an entertainment ; by forgetting 'my' real nature, I convert life into a struggle".

Samsaaraa is "viewing life as a 'meaningless, burdensome and boring struggle'". Looking upon life as a 'drama', at once a 'comedy' and a 'tragedy', is mithyaathva dharsanam.

Then the next question: If the entire dhrusya prapanchaa is mithyaa, then, who am 'I'? Ans: 'I' am the 'dhruk' of the dhrusya prapanchaa. 'I' am the spectator, seeing the world as a movie and seeing 'myself' as a mere spectator.

Proceeding further, if the entire dhrusya prapanchaa is mithyaa / unreal, it will require a sathya adhishtaanam, which should be something other than dhrusya prapanchaa, because, any 'unreal' requires a 'support', different from itself.

What is that adhishtaanam for the mithyaa dhrusya prapanchaa? Ans: What is there, other than dhrusyam, can only be the adhishtaanam. What is there, other than dhrusyam, is the dhruk 'I', 'myself'. Therefore, the 'adhishtaanam' for the mithyaa dhrusya prapanchaa is 'I', myself; 'I' am not only the spectator of the dhrusya prapanchaa , 'I', myself, am the adhishtaanam also of dhrusya prapanchaa.

Therefore, 'I' do not want to escape from dhrusya prapanchaa. In fact, how can 'I'? How can the adhishtaanam 'I', escape from the world, in the name of videha mukthi?

Therefore, an informed seeker should never pray "I should never, in the future, return to this earth". On the other hand, he / she should understand as to what mokshaa really is.

Such an informed seeker should first get the conviction: " I do not want to escape from the mithyaa prapanchaa, since it is 'I', who am the adhishtaanam of the entire mithyaa prapanchaa . 'I' am the spectator- cum- adhishtaanam".

This gives rise to a further question: "Who has produced this dhrusya prapanchaa?" The answer is: "I, am the producer also of this mithyaa prapanchaa. 'I' am not only the spectator and the supporter; I am the producer also, through my moolaavidhyaa or maayaa."

Therefore, what is the final vision ? Ans: "I am the 'producer-cum-spectator-cum-supporter' of the mithyaa dhrusya prapanchaa".

But, what is the meaning of 'I', in this context? Is it the body or the mind? Ans: "Neither. 'I', the saakshi, am producer-cum-spectator-cum-supporter of the entire mithyaa dhrusya prapanchaa. Let the 'entertainment', therefore, eternally continue. Why should I bother about this mithyaa prapanchaa?"

Such a firm conviction is the "peeling off the second layer of ignorance". First layer of ignorance is 'dhrusya prapanche aathmathva dharsanam'. 'Dhrusya prapanche anaathmathva dharsanam' is the second layer of ignorance.

After peeling away both layers of ignorance, what should be the dharsanam? Ans: The dharsanam should be "The dhrusya prapanchaa is neither aathmaa nor anaathmaa. It is only mithyaa naama-roopa. 'I' alone am everywhere, 'lending' existence to the mithyaa naama roopa dhrusya prapanchaa".

The first half of Verse 3 of Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram, of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, brings out this fact clearly: "Yasyaiva spuranam sadhaathmakam asath kalpaarthakam bhaasathe saakshaath thath thvam asi ithi veda vachasaa yo bodhayathi aasrithaan" – "He , whose manifestations – which are nothing but the Reality – appear as the objects of the world; He who imparts to those who have surrendered to him, direct enlightenment, through the Vedic commandment 'That Thou Art'... " .

This is the teaching of the Upanishads also. All these idea are nicely presented in the latter portion of Kaivalya Upanishad: "Jaagrath svapna sushupthyaadhi prapancham yathprakaasathe thadh Brahma aham ithi jnaathvaa sarva bandhai: pramuchyathe" (manthraa 17) – "Having known that 'I' am that Brahman which illumines the world consisting of the waking stage, dream stage and sleeping stage, one is liberated from all bonds".

"Thrishu dhaamasu yadboghyam, bokthaa, bhogascha yadh bhaveth thebhyo vilakshana: saakshee chinmaathroham sadaasiva." (manthraa 18) – "'I' am distinct from all those which are subjects of experience, objects of experience and instruments of experience, in all the three states. I am the Witness, which is pure Consciousness and which is ever auspicious”.

“Mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathishtitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi thadh Brahma advayam asmi aham” (manthraa 19) – “Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything resolves into me alone. I am that non-dual Brahman”.

These manthraas are wonderful meditation slokaas. After this mediation, can a seeker talk about ‘escaping from this world as mokshad’?

Sureswaraacharyaa, therefore exhorts the seekers: “Come to this fantastic vision, i.e. to mahaavaakya vicharaa”.

Reverting to the last sentence in this sambhandha gadhyam:

यत् :निरविध्यः विद्वान् - That wise person who has removed (both layers of) ignorance,

A person who has removed both layers of ignorance is referred to, here, as ‘niravidhya’, derived as ‘nirgathaa avidhyaadhvayam yasmaath sa’.

‘Kevala.’ means ‘non-dual’; for such a vidvaan, this world is as good as non-existent, obviously because ‘unreal’ is as good as ‘non-existent’. This fact is also covered in the Kaivalya Upanishad (in manthraa 22), as “Na bhhimiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha” - implying “For me, where is bhoom? Where is water? Where is fire? Where is air? Where is aakaasa? They are unreal appearances, not worth counting.”

Since bhoomi., aapa., vahni., anila., ambaram etc. – therefore, the entire dhrusya prapanchaa - is not there, as Katopanishad (II.1.11) declares “ Na iha naanaasthi kinchana” – “There is no plurality at all here”.

141. Chapter III, Verse 29 and 30 (13-06-2009)

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that mahaa vaakya vichaaraa goes through two stages. The first stage is 'thvam padhaartha vichaara:', through anvaya vyathirekha: | The second is 'thadh padha eikya vichaara:' |

When the student goes through these two stages of enquiry, two layers of ignorance will go away. Incidentally, this manner of presentation is generally not found in other Vedhaanthic texts and is unique to this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi.

The first layer of ignorance is "wrongly seeing dhrusya prapanchaa, as the aathmaa". In other words, 'dhrusya prapancha aathmathva dharsanam' is the first layer of ignorance. The term 'dhrusya prapanchaa' includes the body-mind complex also. Therefore, 'seeing the body-mind complex as aathmaa' is the first layer of ignorance. And, by 'thvam padha vichaaraa', we dismiss the entire dhrusya prapanchaa, as something different from 'me'. 'I' am not the world, because the world is an object of experience. Similarly, 'I' am not the body nor the mind. In this manner, I reduce the entire dhrusya prapanchaa into anaathmaa. Thus, converting dhrusya prapanchaa from aathmaa to anaathmaa – anaathmathva dharsanam - is the completion of the first enquiry.

And, in this completion, the first layer of ignorance is gone. But, we are still in the second layer of ignorance, because "seeing the world as anaathmaa" is also another form of ignorance. Why it is so, is explained as follows: "As long as there is something called anaathmaa, there is duality, since aathmaa is already there; as long as there is duality, there is limitation; as long as there is limitation, there is suffering; And, as long as there is suffering, mokshaa will be looked upon as 'running away' or 'escaping' from the world". Therefore, there should not be an anaathmaa also.

Towards this end, through thadh padha vichaaraa, we negate the world, by saying that, there is no anaathmaa also / that, there is nothing other than aathmaa.

Through the Vedic nishedha vaakyaas such as "Neha naanaa asthi kinchana" (Katopanishad – II. 1 . 11) – "there is no plurality at all here", "Sa esha nethi nethyaathmaa" – (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – IV. iv. 22) - "This Self is That which has been described as 'not this, not this'" and "Na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha" – (Kaivalya Upanishad – manthraa 22) – "For me, earth and water are not there; fire is not there; air is not there; space also is not there", the student concludes that there is nothing other than aathmaa, which would mean there is no anaathmaa at all.

Then, naturally the question arises: "If the experienced universe is not aathmaa and if the experienced universe is not anaathmaa also, then what is the nature of this 'experienced universe'?" This will be an inevitable question. Vedhaanthaa gives an unique answer. It says: "The world comes under a category which is other than aathma and anaathmaa" or "aathmathva anaathmathva vilakshanam dhrusya jagath".

But, what do you mean by 'aathmathva anaathmathva vilakshanam'? 'Aathmathvam' means 'sath'; 'anaathmathvam' means 'asath'. 'Aathmathva anaathmathva vilakshanam' means 'sath asath vilakshanam'.

Therefore, after the completion of the second stage of enquiry the world is reduced to 'sadhasath vilakshanam'. It does not come under 'existent' category; nor does it come under 'non-existent' category. Is the world existent? Ans: 'No'. Is it non-existent? Ans: Again 'no'.

It comes under a third category, which is a category unique to Advaitam only. Other philosophies such as saamkhyaa, yoga, dvaitam or visishtadvaitam do not accept this. Only in Advaita, there is this unique third category, which is "something different from existent and different from non-existent". If you then ask "What do you mean by that?", the Advaita philosopher answers "It is the seemingly existent category". This term 'seemingly existent' category means 'appearance for experience; but, disappearance on enquiry', which is called by the terse term 'mithyaa'.

The conclusion is: "The entire dhrusya prapanchaa has to be reduced into mithyaa, at the end of mahaavakya vichaaram." As mentioned repeatedly earlier, 'dhrusya prapanchaa' should importantly include the five items, viz. (1) all possessions or property (2) profession (3) family (4) the intimate body and (5) the disturbed mind, (which mind can be looked upon either as 'terrible' or 'wonderful'). The aspirant should understand and see the entire dhrusya prapanchaa as a movie or a drama programme, a naatakaa running continuously, except for short breaks provided by the 'deep sleep' state (the sushupthi avasthaa).

But, it is not sufficient to see the dhrusya prapanchaa as a drama or movie. One should also understand that the dhrusya prapanchaa requires an aadhaaram – even a movie is not possible without a screen as aadhaaraa or adhistaanam.

What is that aadhaaram or adhistaanam? Ans: That aadhaaram for the dhrusya prapanchaa is 'myself'. 'Brahma' as answer is acceptable in the earlier stages of Vedhaanthic study. But, for an advanced Vedhaanthic aspirant, 'Brahman' is not the aadhaaram for this jagath; 'Aathmaa' is also not the aadhaaram. 'I am' the aadhaaram. Proceeding a further step, 'I' am, in fact, the 'producer' also. 'I' am the producer-cum-supporter-cum-spectator of this world. And, 'I' am thoroughly enjoying the drama of this world. Whether tragedy or comedy, 'I' look upon jagath, as a type of entertainment.

But, it should be carefully understood, that the word 'I', in this context, does not mean the body or the mind. When it is said "'I' am not affected", the word 'I' does not mean the body which is mithyaa; nor the mind which is also mithyaa. They are affected. What is meant by 'I', is the 'aathmaa', the 'saaksh'. This vision alone is 'liberation'; nothing else will solve the human problem of samsaaraa.

And, therefore "everything experienced is mithyaa; 'I', the adhishtaanam alone am sathyam". With this knowledge / conviction, the second layer of ignorance is also gone.

To recap: What is the second layer? The concept "Dhrusya prapanchaa is anaathmaa" is also ignorance and is the second layer of ignorance.

The conclusion is: "Dhrusya prapanchaa is aathma vilakshanam anaathma vilakshanam cha". This 'dhrusya prapancha aathmathva- anaathmathva- vilakshana dharsanam' or 'dhrusya prapancha mithyaathva dharsanam' is 'wisdom'.

This view alone Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa presents in the first verse of his Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram, very casually, like a child's play: " visvam dharpana dhrusyamaana nagareethulyam nijaanthargatham pasyan aathmani maayayaa bahirivodhbhoottam yathaa nidhrayaa yath saakshaath kuruthe prabodha samaye svaathmaanam eva advayam" - "He, who experiences at the time of realization, his own immutable Self, which Self alone plays as the universe of names and forms, like a city seen in a mirror, due to the maayaa power, as though produced outside, as in a dream". The mayaa is 'my' own maayaa.

And, that is said here (sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 29) also.

- यतः - Thus
- विद्वान् निरविध्यः - the wise person, who has managed to grasp this teaching
- अवशिष्यते - remains
- केवल एव - as the Advaita aathmaa,
- अवाक्यार्थरूपः - which is the 'non-sentential' meaning born out of the sentence 'that thvam asi'.

'Avaakyartham' means 'non-sentential meaning'. 'Avaakyarthad' is not a regular sentential meaning but non-regular meaning. Though this has been discussed earlier, a few more important aspects are worth noting. Two types of interpretation can be given.

The first interpretation had already been discussed; but, is explained again as follows:

Normally, a sentence has got several words; and therefore, one possibility is that the sentence can reveal many objects. Such a sentence is called 'dvaitha artha bodhaka vaakyam'. i.e. when a statement is made with its many words revealing many objects, such a sentence is called 'dvaitha artha bodhaka vaakyam'.

There is a second possibility: 'a sentence with many words, can reveal one substance, but, with several attributes'. The substance revealed by such a sentence is only one. All the other words in the sentence reveal several attributes of the substance revealed. An example given earlier was the Geetha Dhyana Sloka – "Prapanaa paarijaathaaya thothra vethraika paanaye jnaana mudhraaya Krishnaaya Geethaamurutha duhe nama:"| This sentence has many words but reveals only one Krishna, with several attributes. Therefore, this sentence is revealing 'ekam' or 'advaitam'; but, because it reveals a substance with attributes, it is termed a 'visishta advaita bodhaka vaakyam'.

Normally, all sentences reveal either dvaitha padhaartha or visishta advaita padhaartha. This is the convention.

But, 'thath thvam asi' is an unique sentence which does not reveal dvaitham; it does not reveal visishta advaitam also. It reveals 'nirvisishta advaitam'. Since, thus, the maha vaakyam is non-conventionally / uniquely a 'nirvisesha artha bodhaka vaakyam', what is revealed by it, is called 'avaakyartham'.

And, how does 'thath thvam asi' sentence manage to reveal 'nirvisishta advaitam? (This was also discussed before).

'Thvam padhaa' reveals only a 'savisesha jeevaathma'; 'thadh padhaa' also reveals only savisesha – the 'saguna Parmaathma'. But, the 'asi padham' does something unique. What is that? Because of the 'as' equation, 'saguna jaavaathma' and 'saguna Paramathma' will 'rub' each other; and, because of the 'rub'bing process, the saguna jeevaathma will 'rub off' all the attributes of Paramaathma and saguna Pramaathma will 'rub off' all the attributes of the jeevaathma. Jeevaathma and Paramaathma thus come together, each one rubbing off the other's attributes, leaving behind one 'nirvisesha advaita vasthu' which is called avaakyartha: |

This alone Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa had given in his famous 'vaakya vrutthi' – verse 38: "samsargo vaa visishto vaa vaakyartho naathra sammatha: akanda eka rasathvena vaakyartha: vidhushaam matha:" meaning "What is meant by the sentence (viz., thath thvam asi) is not accepted either to be connected with or qualified by anything else. The meaning of the sentence, according to the wise, is an indivisible Being consisting of Bliss only"| In this 'vaakya vrutthi' verse, 'samsarga:' is referring to 'dvaitha bodhaka vaakyam'; 'visishta:' means 'visishta advaita bodhaka vaakyam'. 'Vaakyartho na athra sammatha:' means 'both interpretations should not be taken here'. What, then, should be the interpretation? Ans: 'akanda eka rasathvena vaakyartha: vidhushaam matha:' | 'akanda eka rasathvena' means 'nirvishesha advaita bodhakathvena'; 'vaakyartha: vidhushaam matha:' means 'the wise understand the meaning of the sentence'. They understand it as ('akanda, eka, rasathva') the indivisible Being, of the nature of Bliss only'.

This is one type of interpretation for 'avaakyartham', which had been already discussed.

There is a second grammatical interpretation which is explained as below:

In a sentence, there are several words – nouns and verbs. There may be one noun or several nouns. And, generally, one verb alone will be there. And, in Sanskrit, in a given sentence, nouns occur in different cases, known as 'kaaraka vibkathl'; by the word 'kaaraka vibakthl', what Sanskrit grammar conveys is that "the noun contributes to the production of action represented by the verb in one manner or other"; and, all the nouns in a sentence, put together also, are contributing to the production of the action represented by the verb.

To understand this clearly, an example of a sentence may be considered: "Rama writes a letter, with a pen, in his room". In this sentence, 'Rama', 'letter', 'pen' and 'room' are four different nouns. 'Writes' is the verb. Each noun is called a 'kaarakam', represented by a 'kaaraka vibakthl', i.e. a 'case ending', termed in English, as 'preposition'. The four nouns in this sentence, are serving as either 'subject' or 'object' or 'instrument' or 'location'. 'Rama' is the subject. As the 'subject', he is contributing to the action of 'writing'. 'Letter' is also contributing to the 'writing' action, but not as the 'subject' but, as an 'object'; 'Pen' is a contributor as an 'instrument' of 'writing' and 'room' is contributing to the 'writing', as location of the 'writing' action.

Thus, the contributions of the nouns are done in various capacities. In English, this capacity or nature of contribution is conveyed through prepositions, such as 'with the pen; 'in the room etc.

To consolidate: What does a sentence do? The sentence can have several nouns; all the nouns will have 'kaaraka vibkathi'; the nouns will serve as 'kaarakam' or as 'contributors' for the action represented by the verb in the sentence.

Therefore, whenever one reads a sentence, what should be one's perception? One should understand that all the nouns in the sentence are 'kaarakam'-s contributing to 'action', and the verb is the 'action'. In other words, a sentence reveals the contributors or generators of action, represented by nouns and the action itself is represented by a verb.

To repeat: the many words of a sentence reveal (i) the generators of the action represented by nouns and (ii) also the action itself, represented by the verb. Expressed differently, kaarakam-s and kriyaa are represented by the words of a sentence. As explained, kaarakam means 'generator of action'; kriyaa means an action. Subject is a generator of action; object is a generator and so on. In fact, 'action' is defined as 'kaaraka janyaa kriyaa'.

This being the explanation of a 'sentence', the question may arise: "Can aathmaa be revealed by a sentence?" If aathmaa is revealed by any sentence, aathmaa will come under one of these two i.e., either a kaarakam or a kriyaa. If kaarakam, what type of kaarakam? Either subject kaarakam or object kaarakam or locus kaarakam or instrument kaarakam. And, if aathmaa comes under any one of the kaarakam-s, then aathmaa will become a producer / generator of something, whereas Vedhaantha (sruthi) wants to reveal an aathmaa, which is neither a producer nor a producer entity. "Anyathra dharmaath anyathra adharmaath anyathra asmaath kruthakruthaath" – "Different from dharma, different from adharma, different from this cause and effect" is the definition of aathmaa / Brahman given by the Katopanishad (I. 2.14).

But, still, mahaa vaakyam, in an ingenious manner, cancels all the subjects, objects, instrument, attributes etc.; and, the finally revealed aathmaa is neither a kaarakam nor kriyaa. Because of this, i.e. "kaaraka-kriyaa-vilakshana-aathma- bodhakathvaath", mahaa vaakyam is avaakyam. Mahaa vakyyam, even though it is a vaakyam, for all practical purposes, should be looked upon as avaakyam, because, when one finally arrive at the meaning, one arrives at an aathma, which is neither a kaarakam nor kriyaa, whereas, any word in a normal sentence can either by only a kaarakam or kriyaa.

There may be an objection to this view, which objection also has to be discussed in this context. As indicated earlier, normally, in a sentence, most of the words will come under kaarakam, generating a kriyaa. But, exceptionally, there can be certain words in a sentence, which will be neither kaarakam nor kriyaa; there may be words which reveal something, which is neither kaarakam nor kriyaa.

An example is the sentence: "Dasarathaa's son goes to forest". In this sentence, there are three nouns, viz., 'Dasarathaa', 'son' and 'forest' ; and, an action is there, viz., the 'going' action.

In this sentence, the word 'son' comes under kaarakam, because it is the 'subject' going to the forest i.e. the 'going' action is done by the son; therefore the son is a 'generator' of the action. Similarly, the word 'forest' is also a generator, serving as destination or object; therefore, the word 'forest' is also a kaarakam.

But, what about the word 'Dasarathaa'?

All these are elaborately analyzed in Panini's grammar, in a portion called 'kaaraka prakaranam'. What is attempted here is only a 'glimpse' of Panini's detailed / elaborate analysis.

Panini admits, in the kaaraka prakaranam, while discussing this particular sentence, that, the word 'Dasarathaa' is not contributing to the action of 'going' in any manner; because, it is neither the subject nor the object nor the instrument nor the destination nor the location. The word 'Dasarathaa' does not come under any kaaraka, because the word does not contribute to the action / the movement.

Then, can it be said that 'Dasarathaa' is a kriyaa? Certainly not. "Going" is the kriyaa. 'Dasarathaa' is neither kaarakam nor kriyaa. But, the word is appearing in the sentence. The, what is its function?

Panini points out the obvious, that, the word is revealing a relationship. The 'apostrophe' sign following the word 'Dasarathaa', reveals a relationship. (Alternately, the sentence can run 'Son of Dasarathaa goes to the forest', in which sentence, the preposition 'of' will reveal the relationship). Such a word in a sentence, like 'Dasarathaa' in this particular sentence, revealing a relationship is neither a kaarakam nor kriyaa. Expressed in Sanskrit, it is a 'Kriyaa-kaaraka- vilakshana sambhandha bodhaka padham'.

Therefore, what is Panini's teaching? He says: "A sentence has several words; and the words can reveal either 'kaarakam' or 'kriyaa' or 'sambhandha'. A sentence can reveal either a kaarakam ('generator of action' is the definition of kaarakam), a kriyaa (an action) or a sambhandha (relationship). Every sentence can reveal only one of these three".

But, mahaa vaakyam is a most unique sentence in the entire Vedhaanthic teaching. What is that uniqueness? That sentence reveals an aathmaa which does not come under kaarakam, because it is not associated with any action and therefore is not a kaarakam. It is not a kriyaa also; it is not an action. In fact, according to Vedhaantha, even 'awareness' / 'knowing' is not an action. 'Opening the eye' to perceive or know, is an action; but, the actual 'knowing' process is not an action. Aathma is not a sambhandhaa – relationship also. It cannot even have a sambhandhaa, leave alone being considered a 'sambhandhaa'. Sruthi declares "asangho hi ayam purusha:" Aathmaa cannot have relationship with any object in the creation. This 'kriyaa-kaaraka-sambhandha-vilakshana aathmaa' is revealed through a sentence, which, ironically, is full of kaaraka vibakthi and kriyaa padham. Uniquely this is the aathmaa revealed by the mahaa vaakyam.

To convey this Paninian message, Sureswaraachaaryaa is using the technical word 'avaakyartham'. 'Avaakyartham' / 'non-sentential meaning' is a 'loaded' word, and means a 'kriyaa-kaaraka-sambhandha-vilakshana aathma bodhaka vaakyam'.

This is the second interpretation of 'avaakyartham'.

A diligent aspirant understands such an aathmaa viz., 'kriyaa-kaaraka-sambhandha-vilakshana aathma', through the mahaa vaakyam.

Reverting to the text, significantly, instead of saying "the vidvaan understands avaakyartha aathmaa", Sureswaraachaaryaa says "the vidvaan remains as avaakyartha aathmaa".

Why does he say so? Ans: If it is said "the wise man understands the avaakyartha aathmaa", it will be akin to reverting to a vaakyartham, in the form of subject/ object / understanding etc. Even this kriyaa-kaaraka sambhandhaa cannot be there, in relation to the 'kriyaa-kaaraka-sambhandha-vilakshana aathma'.

Therefore, after mahaa vaakyam, what is there? 'I', the aathmaa alone is left out as Reality. Thereafter, everything else becomes mithyaa. The 5th capsule of Vedhaantha (as enunciated in other contexts), viz., "For a person who remembers the nature of oneself, the entire life is an entertainment" should be recollected in this context. The conviction should be "kriyaa-kaaraka-sambhandha-vilakshana aathmaa asmi aham. 'I' am a nithya muktha: /" The word 'avasishyathe' meaning 'remains' is, therefore, very significant and important

Chapter III: Verse 29 –

देहादिव्यवधानत्वात्तदर्थं स्वयमप्यतः ।

पारोक्ष्येणैव जानाति साक्षात्त्वं तदनात्मनः ॥ २९ ॥

It is owing to the intervention of factors like the body, the meaning of 'That', though intrinsic to the Self, appears as if remote and mediately given and the non-Self seems to be immediately apprehended.

The aathmaa understood by the mahaa vaakyam is not an object of understanding. It is neither a remote object nor is it a proximate object; aathmaa happens to be 'I', the Subject; therefore, the knowledge of aathmaa is called aparoksha jnaanam.

To explain this statement: The knowledge of a remote object or indirect object is called paroksha jnaanam; the knowledge of a close-by / proximate or direct object is called prathyaksha jnaanam.

Even the knowledge of one's own body comes under prathyaksha jnaanam only, because body is also an object, though it is an intimate object. Knowledge of the mind is also prathyaksha jnaanam, because mind is also only an object, though very intimate. The knowledge of every experience in the mind is also prathyaksha jnaanam, because every experience is also an object, though, again, an intimate object. Thus, Body knowledge is also prathyaksha jnaanam; mind knowledge is also prathyaksha jnaanam; thought-knowledge is also prathyaksha jnaanam.

Of course, two marginally different terms are used, when one talks of prathyaksha jnaanam, viz., 'indriya prathyaksha jnaanam' and 'saakshi prathyaksha jnaanam'. Knowledge of an external object, say, the clip (on Swamiji's desk) is called indriya prathyaksha jnaanam; knowledge of one's own body, mind etc., is called saakshi prathyaksha jnaanam. The term 'saakshi prathyaksha jnaanam' is used for awareness of one's own body and mind etc., since even if one's eyes are closed, one is aware of one's own body, mind and thoughts, since, they are very intimate objects and do not require the use of sense organs for 'knowing / awaring' them.

To recap: The knowledge of a remote object or place is termed 'paroksha jnaanam'; the awareness or knowledge of another individual or an object, in proximity i.e. right in front of the perceiver is 'indriya prathyaksha jnaanam'; the knowledge of one's own body, mind and thoughts, which does not require the use of sense organs is 'saakshi prathyaksha jnaanam'.

But, what about the knowledge of Consciousness / the saakshi chaithanyam itself, when one claims "I am a Conscious being"? Does that 'knowledge of Consciousness' come under paroksham or indriya prathyaksham or saakshi prathyaksham? If these questions are raised, the answer will be "It (Jnaanam of Consciousness) does not come under paroksham or indriya prathyaksham or saakshi prathyaksham". But, nevertheless, Consciousness is 'known' by me, proved by the very fact that, I say "I am conscious". Therefore, that jnaanam should come under some category, other than all the above three, namely, paroksha jnaanam, indriya prathyaksha jnaanam and saakshi prathyaksha jnaanam. Expressed in Sanskrit: "Paroksha jnaana indriya prathyaksha jnaana saakshi prathyaksha jnaana vilakshanam saakshi chaithanya jnaanam asthi." Advaita dharsanam uses the word 'aparoksha jnaanam' for this unique category. 'Aparoksham' conveys the meaning "it is experienced in the form of 'I', the Subject of all experiences". According to Advaita Vedhaanthaa, 'aathma jnaanam' is always 'aparoksha jnaanam'.

Having known what is meant by 'aparoksha jnaanam', the next question is: "When is the aathmaa aparoksham?" Ans: "Aathmaa is aparokshaa all the time".

The nature of knowledge of other objects in the world will gradually change. For instance, the knowledge of a mango in the shop is paroksham; when the mango is bought from the shop, brought home, cut into pieces and is on the table, ready to be eaten, the knowledge of the same mango, comes under indriya prathyaksha jnaanam; later, when the mango is eaten and its taste is experienced in the mind, at that time, the knowledge of the mango is converted from indriya prathyaksham to saakshi prathyaksham, as the taste of the mango is 'experienced' in the mind. In the same manner, all the other objects will change from paroksham to prathyaksham - indriya prathyaksham or saakshi prathyaksham; but, aathmaa is nithya aparoksham / aathma jnaanam is aparoksha jnaanam only.

Now, Sureswaraacharya says, that, even though the chaithanyam is aparoksham all the time, because of deha abhimaanaa, aathmaa is mistaken as paroksham. The nithya aparoksha aathmaa appears as paroksham, because of deha abhimaanaa.

How do we know this? Ans: Because many people are 'waiting' for aathma aparoksha jnaanam. Even though aathmaa is nithya aparoksham, they are wrongly 'waiting' for aathma aparoksha jnaanam, because, they think that aathmaa is a remote object; some even think, that, in meditation, it will 'arrive' from somewhere outside the body or maybe from inside one's own body. They have the wrong notion "It (aathma jnaanam) will be arriving shortly; I will be experiencing it". Thus, a non-remote aathmaa is made to appear remote. This mistaken notion is because of deha abhimaanaa. That is what, the Aacharya also says here:

- देहादि व्यवधानत्वात् - Because of the distance caused by the body, 'vyavadhaanam' means 'distance' or 'remoteness'.

By whom or what is that 'distance' or 'remoteness' caused? Ans: By 'dehaadhi' / by the body etc.

How does the body cause the distance? Ans: Because of deha abhimaanaa. The term 'Dehaadhi vyavadhaanam' should be understood as 'dehaadhi abhimaana janitha vyavadhaanam'. The 'remoteness' is not real; it is false.

- तदर्थ - Paramaathmaa or Brahman,

'Thadhartham' means 'thadh padha lakshyaartham', viz., Brahman.

- स्वयम् अपि - though ever experienced in the form 'I' am,

'Svayam api' implies 'nithya anubootha svaroopaa: api' / 'nithya upalabhdha svaroopaa: api'

The experience of Brahman or aathmaa is there, all the time. Dayananda Swamiji stresses this and says: "There is only one anubhava you need not work for. For every other anubhavaa, you have to put forth effort. There is one anubhavaa for which you need not put forth any effort whatsoever. That anubhavaa is Brahma anubhavaa or aathma anubhavaa, because we have brahma anubhavaa all the time, in the form of Consciousness. In fact, it is because of the experience of Consciousness, you want to experience / you do experience all the other things in the world".

But, even though brahma anubhava is there all the time as saakshi or Consciousness i.e. even though Brahman / aathmaa is thus experienced all the time, the ignorant individual conceives of that Brahman, as though it is remote. Sureswaraachaarya points this out:

- पारोक्षेण इव जानाति - is understood as though it is remote.

It is commonly seen, that, quite a number of persons, even after the study of Vedhaanthaa for a number of years, tend to state: "I have got book / theoretical / intellectual knowledge of Brahman. But, I do not have the 'experience' of Brahman at all" and yearn "When will I get that anubhavam?" They think that they have failed in their saadhanaas and wonder if an increase in the duration of their 'meditation' will help them 'experience' Brahman. Even advanced students of Vedhaanthaa thus 'wait' for Brahma anubhavaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa, elsewhere, strongly chastises such students as: "Tham katham bodhayeth saasthram loshtam nara samaakruthim" – "How can I teach saasthram to such a student made up of solid clay?" He implies: "I have repeated several times that Brahman is chaithanyam; and, that, you have that chaithanya abubhavaa all the time; still, you have the foolish notion that you are yet to 'experience' that chaithanyam".

What the Vedhaanthic aspirant has to learn and be convinced of, is that (i) chaithanyam is not a product or property (ii) he / she always has that Chaithanya anubhavam and (iii) he / she does not have to 'get' it afresh from elsewhere.

But, "dehaadhi vyavadhaanathvaath paarokshyenaive jaanaathi" – "because of deha abhimaanaa, (wrongly) understands that Brahman as though, it is remote". Not only that, an ignorant person wrongly views the body as aparoksham.

- तत् साक्षात्त्वं - That aparoksha jnaanam,
- अनात्मन(जानाति) : - is associated with anaathmaa.

The aparoksha jnaanam, which should be associated with Consciousness or aathmaa and which should be expressed as " 'I' am aathmaa", is wrongly associated with the body instead of aathmaa ; and , the ignorant person reveals that wrong notion, by the expression "I am the body". Instead of 'aathma aparoksha jnaanam', he has come down to 'deha aparoksha jnaanam'. Aathma aproksha jnaanam is expressed as "I am aathmaa"; deha aparoksha jnaanam is expressed as "I am deha." This is an universal and common problem. Sureswaraachaaryaa gives an example for this.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 30:

यथोक्तार्थप्रतिपत्तिसौकर्याय दृष्टान्तोपादानम् ।

To put this point in a clearer light, an analogy is given:

Sureswaraachaarya says: "I will give you an example to convey this idea".

- प्रतिपत्ति सौकर्याय - For the facility of understanding 'saukaryam' means 'facility'; 'prathipatthi.' means 'knowledge' or 'understanding'.
- यथोक्त अर्थ - the above mentioned idea,

What is the 'above mentioned idea'? Ans: "The ever Conscious, ever available, proximate Brahman is considered as remote".

- दृष्टान्त उपादानम् - an example is given.

'dhrushtaantham' means 'example' and 'upaadhaanam' means 'presentation' or 'introduction.'

Chapter III: Verse 30 –

प्रत्यगुद्भूतपित्तस्य यथा बाह्यार्थपीतता ।

चैतन्यं प्रत्यगात्मीयं बहिर्वत् दृश्यते तथा ॥ ३० ॥

One who suffers from jaundice in himself sees all things as yellow. Similarly, the Consciousness that is constitutive of the Self appears as if it were an external reality.

An example often quoted in the Vedhaantha Saasthra is given, by Sureswaraachaaryaa. The example is based on common experience. When a person gets diseased by jaundice, too much of bile (pittham in Tamil) is produced in his body. Bile is yellow in colour. As a consequence, the whole body of the patient turns yellow; the eyes also get yellow, commonly termed as 'jaundiced eye'. When the eyes are thus yellow, the patient tends to attribute the yellowness of the eye to every object that he sees. The patient reports, even a conch, which is reputed to be pure white, as 'peetha: sankha:' – 'the conch is yellow'. What has happened here? The yellow colour which is 'proximate' to the patient, has been falsely seen as though 'outside'. A different modern example can also be given. A person wearing dark glasses attributes darkness to the external world.

In a similar fashion, though Brahman is available as Consciousness, close by, that Brahman is made remote; the Visishtaadvaitin wants to go to Vaikunta to meet that Brahman. There are some other people 'meditate' for the 'arrival' of Brahman. All these people have got the mistaken notion that Brahman is 'away', because of the 'jaundiced' understanding called adhyaasa: /

Sureswaraachaaryaa is emphasizing the importance of thvam padha vichaaraa, which consists in using the technique of anvaya vyathirekha and arriving at 'myself' as a self revealing Consciousness principle, which is always available, evident and experienced, whenever we use the expression "'I' am".

Whenever we say "'I' am", the Consciousness principle is available as the self revealing chaithanyam; to express it differently, when the Consciousness is revealing itself as "'I' am", that Consciousness is alone called the saakshi chaithanyam. And, it is this saakshi chaithanyam, which is always evident and available, that is equated with Brahman, the sarva adhishtaanam.

But, when I say "'I' am", it is not only the saakshi that reveals itself, as 'I', the chaithanyam; simultaneously, the body-mind complex also reveals itself in the expression "I am". This body-mind complex, which is also revealing itself along with the word 'I', is not an integral part of the saakshi; it is only 'saakshi prathyaksham', i.e. it is 'revealed by the saakshi', as an object only.

Even though, thus, in addition to the saakshi chaithanyam, this body-mind complex also is revealed, as ahamkaaraa, in the expression "I am", the seeker's attempt should be "to intellectually exclude the body-mind complex, from the expression 'I am', through anvaya vyathirekha logic and to understand this body-mind complex as only an 'object' of this self revealing saakshi".

Why do we consider the body-mind complex as an 'object'? Ans : Because body-mind complex being inert matter, it does not have self-revealing capacity. If body has got self revealing capacity, even a statue can say "I am". That does not happen. The body-mind complex, being similar to an inert statue, does not have self-revealing capacity and therefore is only an object. And, what type of object? Ans: It is not 'indriya vishaya'; i.e. it is not an object of 'sense organs'; but is an object of saakshi. The external world is an object of sense organs – indriya prathyaksham, whereas body-mind complex is not indriya prathyaksham but saakshi prathyaksham.

To re-cap: When I say "'I' am", two things are simultaneously revealed. One is the self revealing saakshi (Consciousness); and, mixed with saakshi, the saakshi prathyaksha vishaya / the object of saakshi, the body-mind complex, is also simultaneously revealed.

An example for this, which example has been given on earlier occasions also, is: "When you stretch your palm and look at your outstretched palm, you are experiencing the 'palm'; and, along with the 'palm', the light that makes the 'palm' visible, is also experienced. The self-revealing light and the hand which is revealed by the light are both there, though, invariably, the presence of the light goes unnoticed".

In a similar manner, whenever you say "'I' am", saakshi is also evident; and saakshi-revealed body-mind is also evident; but, while the body-mind is realized in the statement "'I' am", the general tendency is to ignore or overlook the saakshi chaithanyam component.

The aim of thvam padha vicharaa is to consciously do the reverse, viz., "excluding the saakshi-revealed body mind complex and taking only the formless Consciousness part as 'I am'".

But, ironically, to exclude the body-mind complex and claim "I am the Consciousness", one has to use the body-mind complex. Because, saakshi, by itself, cannot exclude the body and mind and say "I am saakshi". To say "I am the saakshi", the saakshi requires the body-mind complex.

Thus, one has to use the body-mind complex and exclude the body-mind complex and say "I am the saakshi". One should entertain this thought through the mind, but learn to exclude the mind, in understanding the saakshi component of "'I' am".

If a seeker can successfully do this, which is the subtlest part of thvam padha vicharaa, thereafter, he / she can understand and claim: "(i) 'I' am not a part, product or property of the body-mind complex. (ii) 'I' am not even a part, product or property of the thought 'I' am'. 'I' am an independent principle, different from not only the body-mind complex, but, different from even the thought 'I' am'. When I say "'I' am", the thought part is not me; but, in the thought, the Consciousness is there. That Consciousness is independent of the body-mind complex. (iii) 'I' am not limited by the boundaries of the body mind complex and (iv) 'I' continue to survive even after the disintegration of the body-mind complex".

If the seeker can, thus, arrive at that saakshi chaithanyam independent of the body-mind complex, as the meaning of "'I' am", through thvam padha vicharaa, which is only a cognitive, discriminating process, if that part is diligently taken care of, Sureswaraacharya assures that such a seeker can very easily claim "aham Brahma asmi", without feeling any 'jerk' or disturbance in the intellect.

But, the problem is, that, it is at this stage, that most students 'goof' up ; when they say "'I' am", instead of taking the Consciousness component in the body mind complex as 'I', they leave out or ignore the Consciousness component, and take the body-mind complex itself as 'I'. This is because the body-mind complex is always very, very dominant.

Body-mind complex is dominant, because it has got beauty, variety, novelty etc. Because of this, when one says "'I' am", instead of claiming the saakshi component as 'I', one has the tendency to claim the sakshi prathyaksha body-mind component as 'I'. And, once the saakshi, very much available in the body mind complex, is thus ignored, that saakshi cannot be recognized elsewhere. It has to be recognized as the Consciousness available in "'I' am"; if the Consciousness in "'I' am", is missed out, then, that Consciousness is missed for good, because, it can never be perceived outside as indriya prathyaksham.

To repeat: The aparoksha saaksi is ignored. (What is meant by aparoksha saaksh? Ans: The saakshi component readily available in "'I' am" experience.) Prathyaksha saakshi is not available, because saakshi is not an object of sense organs. Then, as an inevitable consequence, a blunder is committed. That blunder alone is described in this sloka.

What is the blunder that is committed? Ans: Such a seeker, who has missed the saakshi chaitanyam component in the experience "'I' am", makes that saakshi a paroksha vasthu, as something available elsewhere, which he / she has to 'wait for', to experience through a mystical event. Such a seeker introduces mysticism in Vedhaanthetaa, where no mysticism is involved. Therefore, what does he / she think that he / she should do? Ans: "Sit in meditation, enter into nirvikalpaka samaadhi and expect that mysterious saakshi to 'arrive' in the fourth avasthaa, viz., samaadhi." After meditating for years and years, some experience or other might 'arrive' – the vision of a light or some stars or a circle and this tired meditator concludes that, that is Brahman and claims "I had Brahman experience". Brahman or saakshi will never 'arrive' in this manner.

This blunder is a natural consequence of missing the saakshi in the experience "'I' am". Therefore, Sureswaraacharya warns the seekers: "avoid this pitfall".

The blunder that is committed by the seeker is discussed in this sloka, with an example. (This was partly covered in the earlier session also).

The example given by the Aacharyaa is: "When a person suffers from jaundice, the bile or pittham in his body is increased or enhanced; as a consequence, the patient's body and eyes turn yellow; the patient, because of adhyasaa, erroneously sees the yellowness of the bile or pittham, which is inside the body, in external objects perceived by him. Even pearl-white objects are seen as yellow objects by him and the patient even says "peetha: sankha:", though an yellow conch does not exist at all. Just as, in this example, something which is available within the body, is falsely thrown outside the body, in a similar manner, Brahman which is available within, all the time in the "'I' experience", is thrown out falsely, as a paroksha vasthu".

Aparoksha brahmana: parokshee karanam is a blunder, like aparoksha pitthasya parokshee karanam or prathyak pitthasya bahishkaranam.

Reverting to the text (verse 30),

- यथा - Just as
- प्रत्यक् उद्भूत पित्तस्य - for a person who has got 'enhanced' pittham inside,

In this context, the term 'prathyak udhbootha pittha:' is bahuvreehi samaasam, referring to a person who is endowed with the condition of 'enhanced pittham' inside the body. 'Udhbootham' means 'enhanced'. Why does the Aachaaryaa say 'enhanced'? Ans: Some amount of pittham is required by all the people. But, for a jaundiced person, pittham is enhanced, because of which, 'yellowness' becomes pronounced within the body, including the eye. For such a person:

- बाह्यार्थ पीतता - there is 'yellowness' seen in external objects (even though the perceived 'yellowness' is not true),

'Baahyaartham' means 'external object'.

- तथा - in a similar manner,
- प्रत्यगात्मीयं चैतन्यं - the saakshi chaithanyam, which is always experienced in the " 'I' am" self-experience,

"chaithanyam prathyagathmeeyam" means "prathyagaathma sambhandhi chaithanyam" or "the Consciousness that is constitutive of the Self".

The very beginning of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa's Maneeshaa Panchakam refers to the same idea. It is "jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa yaa samvidhujjrumbathe" – "That which shines forth very clearly in the three states of 'waking', 'dream' and 'deep sleep'", 'yaa' referring to the saakshi chaithanyam. This Maneeshaa Panchakam verse also, implies: " In the " 'I' am" experience of all the three states, saakshi is clearly experienced (sputatharaa samvidhujjrumbathe); others 'come and go' / 'arrive and depart'; but, saakshi is always experienced".

Even though that is the fact, for the spiritually ignorant person,

- बहिरवत् दृश्यते - (the prathyagaathmeeyam chaithanyam) appears as an external object

For such a person (who has got 'spiritual jaundice'), Brahman becomes an external object, as it were, 'waiting' to be experienced, in the 'white heat' of meditation or during some other saadhanaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 31:

यस्मादेवमतो विशुद्धमवसीयताम् ।

Such being the case, let this be firmly understood.

Introducing the 31st verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa concludes his discourse on the importance of thvam padha vichaaraa. He says:

- अतः यस्मात् - Because of this reason,
- एवं विशुद्धं अवसीयताम् - let the following be clearly ascertained :

'Visuddham' means 'clearly' or 'firmly'; 'Avaseeyathaam' is passive voice, meaning 'thvayaa avaseeyathaam' or "let it be ascertained / understood by you".

What should be ascertained? That is said in the slokaa that follows.

Chapter III: Verse 31 -

पदान्युद्धृत्य वाक्येभ्यो ह्यन्वयव्यतिरेकतः ।

पदार्थाल्लोकतो बुद्ध्वा वेत्ति वाक्यार्थमञ्जसा ॥ ३१ ॥

Let the words be properly taken and let their meanings be properly understood through rational discrimination and the usage of the world. Then the final import of the proposition is rightly grasped.

In this verse, Sureswaraachaarya is entering into another important topic as a corollary of the earlier discussion. The essence of the new topic is: "Mahaa vaakyam will give the direct knowledge of Brahman, only under one condition. That condition is, that, every word in the mahaa vaakyam should be fully comprehended at the time of listening. Conversely, if every word of the mahaa vaakyam is fully comprehended, for the thus prepared student, the mahaa vaakyam can directly give aparoksha jnaanam".

The student might require a number of years for the full comprehension of each of the words `thvam` and `thadh`. The student's efforts can be considered as fructified, only as and when he listens to the word `thvam` or says the word `aham`, at that very moment, he is able to exclude the pancha anaathmaa, consisting of the possessions, profession, family, body and mind, and understand the expression `thvam` or `aham` as referring to the independent, formless, space-like Consciousness only. The understanding must be instantaneous.

Similarly, the moment he listens to the word `thadh`, he should understand the word as referring to "that Brahman, which is in the form of Pure Existence, which is not a part, product or property of matter and which is a formless, all-pervading, space-like principle". This understanding also must be instantaneous.

Thus, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, the student must have independently practiced `thvam padha vicharaa` and independently practiced `thadh padha vicharaa`, both, if necessary, for a number of years, till the practice gives him such a skill, that, as even as the words `thadh` and `thvam` are listened to, they should refer to the `sath` and `chith` part alone. `Chith` being formless and `sath` also being formless, the `sath-chith` equation must immediately become meaningful. The conviction "'I' am the Consciousness, who happen to be the Existence also" should be so firm, that the Kaivalya Upanishad declaration "mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathishtatham mayi sarvam layam yaati thad brahmaadvayam asmi aham" will not be mere 'lip service', but, a heart-felt fact.

In essence, Sureswaraachaarya says, that, (i) for a prepared student, mahaa vaakyam can directly give aparoksha jnaanam (ii) mahaa vaakyam alone can give aparoksha jnaanam and (iii) if mahaa vaakyam does not give aparoksha jnaanam, nothing else, including meditation, can. Any amount of meditation cannot produce aparoksha jnaanam.

This is the thesis of Naishkarmya Siddhi: (1) mahaa vakyam can give aparoksha jnaanam at the time of listening; (2) mahaa vaakyam does give aparoksha jnaanam at the time of sravanam; (3) mahaa vaakyam alone can give aparoksha jnaanam and (4) most importantly, if mahaa vaakyam does not give aparoksha jnaanam at the time of sravanam, meditation cannot give aparoksha jnaanam.

That is because, in Vedhaantha, meditation is never accepted as a source of knowledge. According to Advaita Vedhaantha Saasthraas, there are only six sources of knowledge: (1) Prathyakshaa (2) anumaana (3) upamaana (4) arthaa patthi (5) anupalabdhi and (6) sabdaa. Dhyaanam is not at all considered a pramaanam / source of knowledge.

Sureswaraacharya says aparoksha jnaanam is only through sabda pramaanam. Therefore, if a student complains "I have listened; but I do not have aparoksha jnaanam", the Aachaaryaa would only advise "Listen again". And "Again, if necessary". Sravanam and repeated sravanam has to / will make it clear to a seeker, that 'aham brahma asmi' is a fact, so that the seeker can successfully follow 'binary' format.

In other words, "sabda paramaanam for aparoksha jnaanam" is the thesis of the Aachaaryaa. Sabda means vaakyam, in this context.

The Aachaaryaa divides the general term vaakyam into two types (i) loukika vaakyaani - worldly sentences and (ii) vaidhika vaakyaani – saasthric sentences.

Sureswaraacharya avers: "Loukika vaakyaani will give only theoretical knowledge, which will have to be confirmed or validated through another experience or pramaanam. Loukika sabda pramaanam, is, therefore, non-final. On the other hand, mahaavaakya janya jnaanam, the knowledge resulting from the maha vaakyam, is final knowledge, which does not require validation or confirmation through any other mystic experience or through any other pramaanam, because, there is no other pramaanam also to confirm this knowledge".

In the case of loukika sabdaa, if one gains any knowledge through a book, for instance, about Gangodhri, that knowledge can be confirmed through a sensory experience. But, in the case of maha vaakya jnaanam, a different confirming mystic experience is not possible, because if there is a confirming experience, that will become another pramaanam; but, in the Vedhaanthic tradition, no other pramaanam is accepted to confirm the knowledge of the Self / aathma jnaanam. Except sabda pramaanam, no other pramaanam is either possible or needed.

"Therefore" the Aachaaryaa appeals "may you approach vaakya pramaanam diligently. Do not dismiss the study of Vedhaanthaa as mere book-knowledge. You have to respectfully approach sabda pramaanam."

As a part of that appeal, Sureswaraacharya talks about how sabda pramaanam comes into the life of a human being. For acquisition of knowledge through sense organs or through prathyaksha pramaanaa, the pramaanaa 'comes into' the life of a human being even at the time of the birth of the human being; it need not 'come into' the life of a human being later. In other words, prathyaksha pramaanam is 'inborn' in a human being, in the form of sense organs like eyes, ears, tongue, skin etc. On the other hand, sabda pramaanam is not 'in-born'. It is an acquired pramaanam, which comes into existence, through a gradual educational process; it comes into existence gradually as the child gets older and older. The saasthraas analyze as to how a child picks up sabda pramaanam, as the child grows. Interestingly, this analysis and related topics are used as parts of mahaa vaakya vicharaa by Sureswaraacharya.

How does a child pick up sabda pramaanam? 'Picking up sabdapraamaanam' is 'understanding the relationship between a padha and its artha - the relationship between a word and its meaning'; in other words, 'picking up sabdapraamaanam' is nothing but understanding the sambhandha between a sound symbol and the corresponding external object in the creation. For instance, consider the word 'table'; it is a sound; the sound symbolizes an external object. The 'table' sabda and the 'table' artha: have got a relationship known as 'prakaasya prakaasaka sambhandha.' a 'revealer- revealed relationship'. The sound is the revealer.

Considering another example, when a class is conducted by a teacher, what does the teacher do? He generates a 'series of sounds' and, as even as the teacher generates the sounds, mysteriously meanings are 'striking' the students and the 'teachings' are conveyed. Of course, if an individual, who does not know the language in which the class is conducted, is present during the course of the class, the teacher's words would not communicate anything to him.

As for the listener who knows and understands the language of the communication, actually two pramaanam-s work. Assuming that the listener's hearing faculty is in order, prathyaksha pramaanam works in the first stage. The sound is 'heard' by the listener. After the working of prathyaksha pramaanam, the second pramaanam viz., the sabda pramaanam takes over. How? A particular sound reveals a particular object. Thus, prathyaksha pramaanaa is separate; and, the sabda pramaanaa is separate.

In the case of a person, whose hearing faculty is sound, but, who does not know the language of the communication, only the prathyaksha pramaanam works for him. Sabda pramaanam does not work.

What Sureswaraacharya points out is "Sabda pramaanam is an acquired pramaanam; one has to know the 'prakaasya prakaasaka sambhandha' existing between a sound symbol and a corresponding sense object".

How is the sabda pramaanam acquired? All these are analyzed very elaborately in the pramaana saasthraa; Sureswaraacharya briefly covers these topics, in this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi. These topics are not found in other Vedhaanthic treatises and is therefore an unique feature of Naishkarmya Siddhi.

How does a child acquire sabda pramaanam? The methodology of acquisition of sabda pramaana by a child is called 'vruddha vyavahaara.' | For this to happen, the child, of course, should have its hearing faculty in order. If a child is born deaf, it cannot acquire sabda pramaanam. Other methods, like lip movement, gestures etc. have to be used. Sabda pramaanaa is not available for a child born with impaired hearing.

A normal child gathers sabda pramaanaa through vruddha vyavahaaraa. What is vruddha vyavahaaraa? To explain this term:

"Assume that the child is in the presence of two adults, who are communicating through sabda i.e., words and sentences. One of the adults is utthama vruddha., meaning an elder adult and the other is a madhyama vruddha., meaning a younger adult. They are interacting. Utthama madhyama vruddhayo: sabda vyavahaara is taking place. And, the child is present during the vyavahaaraa. What kind of vyavahaaraa is taking place? The elderly adult is giving a series of commandments to the younger adult; and, the younger adult is implementing the commandments. The child is hearing the 'words' of commandments from the utthama vruddha: and is also watching the corresponding 'actions' by the madhyama vruddha:. 'Action' follows, after every commandment. Therefore, the child, as a first step, understands that, words can communicate / that, words can convey sense.

"Then, the child sufficiently grown up, uses anvaya vyathirekha method, unknowingly / instinctively, by seeing the varied and unvaried words in the commandments and understands the nouns and verbs gradually.

"How does the child understand the nouns and verbs?

"Let us assume that four commandments are given by a husband, the utthama vruddha, to his wife: '(1) Bring the cow (2) wash the cow (3) feed the cow and (4) tie the cow'. In these four commandments, the verbs are varied. But, the noun, the 'cow', is unvaried. Assume, that, the wife, the madhyama vruddha implements the commandments. Different types of actions - bringing the cow, washing the cow, feeding the cow and tying the cow - are performed by her. In all these four actions, what is common? 'Cow' is common. Therefore, in the actions also, as in the commandments, there is one 'unvaried', namely, the cow.

"In the verbal expressions there is one 'unvaried' - the word 'cow'. In the actions, the object 'cow' also is unvaried. The others are varied in both the commandments and the actions. From that, the child gradually understands that the word / sound 'cow' and the animal 'cow' have a connection. By seeing the common sound and the common object, the relationship between the inherent word and the inherent object is learnt by the child. Of course, in a single commandment, the relationship cannot be learnt by the child. In a series of commandments one 'word' / one 'sound' is common and in the following actions one 'object' is common. From that, the relationship between the sound symbol 'cow' and the animal 'cow' is made. This is how the nouns are gradually picked up.

"Consider another instance: Suppose the utthama vruddha says '(1) bring the desk (2) bring the book (3) bring the pen and (4) bring the spectacles'. Here also four commandments are given. What is the difference between the earlier set of commandments and the present? In the previous set, the noun was unvaried – anvaya. In the present set of commandments, the verb 'bring' is unvaried. In all the four commandments, one sound symbol is unvaried, even though the 'objects' are changing. In response to the commandments, the madhyama vruddha brings the desk, brings the book, brings the pen and brings the spectacles. The child is watching the actions. From that, the relationship between the verb used and the relevant action is understood by the child.

"This method of understanding is anvaya vyathirekha and this vyavahaaraa between the utthama and madhyama vruddha is called 'aavaapa udhvaapa vyavahaaraa'. This term 'aavaapa udhvaapa vyavahaaraa' means "different words are introduced and removed, but, keeping one word as unvaried/ common". To repeat: "Keeping one word as unvaried and bringing in other words and removing them" is called 'aavaapa udhvaapa vyavahaaraa'. When the commandment 'bring the desk' is given, the word desk is brought in, termed 'aavaapa'; when the next commandment 'bring the book' is given, 'book' 'aavaapa' takes place and the word 'desk' is now 'udhvaapa' and so on."

Thus, "aavaapa udhvaapa roopa utthama madhyama vruddha vyavahaaraath anvaya vyathirkha nyaayena padha padhartha sambhandha: jnaayathe" – "By watching the interaction between two adults, the elder adult giving verbal instructions and the younger adult carrying out the instructions, the interaction being of the nature of what is known as 'aavaapa udhvaapa vyavahaaraa', and by applying instinctively the anvaya vyathirkha logic, the relationship between a word and its meaning is understood".

This is how children learn their mother-tongue. They may learn other languages later, in schools. But, they pick up their first sabda pramaana called mother tongue, in the manner explained above, as analyzed and detailed by Saasthraas.

Reverting to the text, verse 31:

- वाक्येभ्यः पदानि उद्धृत्य - Picking up the words from sentences,
- लोक्तः - used in worldly transactions,

As explained, a child picks up the unvaried words occurring in several commandments given by utthama vruddha to madhyama vruddha. 'Utthama madhyama vruddha vyavahaara' is a typical example of 'worldly transactions'
'Vaakyebhya:' means 'from the sentences'.

What does the child do? The term 'padhaani uddhruthya' answers this. The child 'picks up' the unvaried noun or the unvaried verb. The child, of course, does not use the words noun or verb. But it understands nouns also and understands verbs also.

- अन्वय व्यतिरेकतः - and by applying the method of anvaya vyathirekhaa,

What does the child do further? The unvaried 'sound' is picked up; the unvaried 'action' also is picked up and they are connected. In the example given, 'cow' word is common to the four commandment sentences; 'cow' animal is common to the four actions. The common 'cow word' and the common 'cow animal/ object' are picked up and matched. This methodology is 'anvaya vyathirakha', though, of course a child would not know this technical term, but, nevertheless use the method instinctively, especially with regard to its mother tongue.

- पदार्थान् बुद्ध्वा - learning the meanings also of the words,

'Padhaartham buddhvaad' means 'learning the connection between a padhaa and its arthaa / a word and its meaning'.

Learning the connection between padha and its arthaa is called sabda sakthi: | In another advanced Vedhaanthic text, Vichaara Saagaraa , all these topic are more elaborately discussed. There are different theories also on this topic– Vedhaanthin' s theory, naiyyaikaas theory, meemaasakaas theory etc. In the treatise, Vichaara Saagaraa, its author establishes the Vedhaanthic theory of how we understand 'sound', refuting all other theories on the topic, by valid arguments.

Reverting to the text, ultimately what does the child do? Not only does the child understand the language from the mother, later, with that sabda pramaana the child is able to employ it everywhere else also. This is similar to an youngster learning cycling on a vacant football field and acquiring the capacity to ride the cycle later on crowded roads also. Similarly sabda pramaanaa is available not only at home, but everywhere else also. So, the Aachaaryaa says:

- वाक्यार्थम् वेत्ति - understands sentences used by others in different contexts,
- अञ्जसा - directly / immediately.

143. Chapter III, Verse 31 to 33 (04-07-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is talking about the mahaa vaakyam functioning as a pramaanam and revealing the jeevaathma-paramaathma-eikyam. The mahaa vaakyam happens to be a sabda pramaanam, the term 'sabda pramaanam' meaning 'language used to communicate an idea'. Sabda pramaanam, unlike prathyaksha pramaanam, does not come into the life of a human being at the time of birth itself. The prathyaksha pramaanam, in the form of sense organs, comes into the life of a human being, even at the time of birth. But, sabda pramaanam enters into the life of an individual, only during the growth of the individual. Pramaana saasthraas have made a study of as to how sabda pramaanam enters into the life of a human being.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is briefly referring to the functioning of sabda pramaanam, based on the pramaana saasthraas. He points out that sabda pramaanam comes into the life of a child, by association with vruddha vyavahaaraa, meaning, 'by observation of the interaction taking place between two elderly people, who have got knowledge of the language'. The child hears the commandments given by one elder to another elder and also sees that every commandment is followed by a corresponding action by the second elder. The child observes that there is a verbal commandment, followed by a physical action and learns to co-relate the commandment and the action. And, the child indirectly understands that the commandment is able to convey a message and that is why, it is followed by the action. The fact, that the commandment can give a message, makes it a sabda pramaanam. Even though, obviously, the child cannot and does not use technical words like pramaanam etc., the child understands the commandment and its message, by the following action and thus the co-relation between the commandment and the action.

Afterwards, the child sees the unvaried part of the various commandments and the unvaried part of the actions. Suppose, there are several commandments, as in the example given during the earlier session: "Bring the cow, wash the cow, feed the cow and tie the cow". These are four different commandments, in which the child listens to one non-varied word cow. The child also sees four different actions. Even though the actions are varied, in all of them there is a non-varied object, namely, the cow. By observing this, the child sufficiently grown up, understands the relationship between the 'word' cow and the 'object' cow.

What is this knowledge, gained by the child? Ans: It is termed 'Padha artha sambhandha grahanam'. 'Padha arthayo: grahana sambhandham' takes place. 'Cow padha (word)' and 'cow artha (object)' sambhandhaa is grasped. This method is called anvaya vyathirekaa method or aavaapa udhvaapa method. Thus, vruddha vyavahaaraa, through anvaya vyathirekaa method and aavaapa udhvaapa method, educates the child on the functioning of sabda pramaanaa.

In every household, special words are used for different objects. The child initially picks up these special words and gradually builds up a vocabulary of words or various padhaas. Later, after padha jnaanam, vaakya jnaanam also takes place; because, vaakyam is nothing but a group of words, arranged in syntactical order. Padha jnaanam takes place first; then, vaakya jnaanam takes place.

Thus, having initially gathered the jnaanam of a few padhaas and the jnaanam of a few vaakyaas, later, when the child is exposed to new sentences, the child is able to gradually derive 'knowledge' from even the new sentences, based on its already acquired padha jnaanam. Extending the same principle, it stands to reason, that, the mahaa vaakyam also, will be able to convey its meaning, because mahaa vaakyam also consists of words only. Thus, a person is able to grasp the message of mahaa vaakyam, in which sabda pramaanam functions. This was the idea given in the 31st sloka, completed in the previous session.

Now, Sureswaraachaarya wants to tackle a new problem that can crop up in the functioning of sabda pramaana. He presents the new problem as a poorva pakshaa and then gives the answer. What is that problem?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 32:

कुतः पुनः सामान्यमात्रवृत्तेः पदस्य वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तिहेतुत्वमिति । बाढम् ।

How do terms standing for generalities produce the understanding of the specific meaning of propositions? It happens this way:

These are all technical topics; technical poorva pakshaa and technical siddhaanthaa. Also, this discussion is not commonly found in Vedhaanthic texts. In fact, it is almost unique to Naishkarmya Siddhi.

What is that discussion?

It is explained as below: In the earlier verse, the student learnt, that, by observing vruddha vyavahaaraa and later by directly listening to the elders, the child learns about words and the objects denoted by words. Imagine that the child later goes to school and the teacher teaches the child, the language of English; at home, the child has picked up only its mother tongue, assuming English is not its mother tongue. The child goes to school and the teacher points out to a tree and says in English, "this is a tree". The child learns to connect the 'sound / word tree' and the 'object tree'. Later, the teacher shows another tree and says "this is a tree". Imagine, that the child thus sees four different trees and understands the meaning of the word 'tree', connected with the object 'tree'.

Now, the analyzers of language ask the question: "When the child understands the word 'tree', referring to a 'tree' as an 'object', does the child understand a particular tree as a meaning of the word 'tree' or does the child understand the general 'tree'ness, as the meaning of the word 'tree'?" This is the analysis. To repeat: "By the word 'tree', does the child understand a particular tree or does the child understand certain common characteristics belonging to all the four trees seen by the child?" More explicitly: " Does the child understand a particular, say, a mango tree as the meaning or does the child understand a common characteristic, belonging to a number of trees, say, a mango tree, a tamarind tree, a coconut tree and a neem tree? What does the child understand as the meaning of 'tree'? Does the word tree refer to a particular characteristic belonging to a particular tree or does it refer to a common characteristic belonging to all the trees?"

In technical language, they frame the question as: "Is the meaning of a word 'a particular' or is the meaning of the word, 'the universal' "?

In tharka saasthraa language, they present it as 'jaathl' and 'vyakthl'. 'Vyakthl' means 'particular'; 'jaathl' means 'universal'. Long debates have been undertaken by philosophers of all dharsanaa-s – the saamkhya philosopher, the yoga philosopher, the nyaaya and vaiseshikaa philosophers, the poorva meemaamsaa and utthara meemaamsaa philosophers and, of course, the grammarians, on whether the word conveys a 'particular' or the 'universal'.

After the long debates, both poorva meemaasakaas and advaitins come to the conclusion that a word can never refer only to a 'particular', because, if a word, say, 'tree' refers only to a particular tree, then that word can never be used for any other tree. And, if it cannot be used for any other tree, when one comes across a new tree, one can never communicate that new tree, by using the word 'tree', because the listener has already associated the word 'tree' only with a particular tree. In the same manner, the word 'boy' can never refer only to a particular boy, since, in that case, one will never be able to use the word 'boy' to reveal other boys, playing or sitting.

Therefore, no word can refer to a particular object.

The contention of Advaitam is "After observing a few trees and hearing the word 'tree', the intellect connects the word 'tree' not with a particular tree; but, associates the word tree with the 'tree'ness', which is common to all the observed trees, and, in fact, of all the unobserved trees also. One might have observed only a few trees; but, one understands the 'tree'ness', not only belonging to the observed trees, but belonging to the unobserved trees also. For instance, if an individual goes to America and comes across a redwood tree, which he / she has never seen earlier even in pictures or movies and somebody says "this is a redwood tree", the individual understands the word 'tree'.

Therefore, the conclusion is: "sabdaa: jaathi vaachakaa: na thu vyakthi vaachakaa:; Padham jaathi vaachakam, na vyakthi vaachakam". This can also be expressed as "padham saamaanya vaachakam na visesha vaachakam"; and, in yet another manner, as "padham aakruthi vaachakam". 'Aakruthi' means 'common features', belonging to all the trees, when the word 'tree' is mentioned; 'common features' belonging to all the boys when the word 'boy' is mentioned; 'common features' belonging to all the animals, when the word 'animal' is mentioned. The words 'tree', 'boy', 'animal' etc., refer to saamaanya gunaas.

This gives rise to a question. What is that?

The question is explained by an example, as follows: "Imagine there is a teacher and there is a student. The student has got the vocabulary; he knows what is a 'table', what is a 'chair', what is a 'pen', what is a 'book' etc. By the above theory of the Advaitin, the student should understand a 'table', to mean 'table^{ness}' common to all the tables; similarly, he should understand 'chair' to mean 'chair^{ness}' belonging to all the chairs.

"Suppose the teacher wants the student to get a particular chair closer. To communicate this message, he has to use language / words. He says: "Bring the chair closer". What does he want to communicate? He wants the student to bring a particular chair closer. When the teacher uses the language – the words – what will the student understand? Jaathi or vyakthi? As per the above theory, by the word 'chair', the student will understand the 'chair^{ness}', i.e. the jaathi; but the teacher does not want the student to bring the jaathi (all the chairs) closer but the vyakthi (a particular chair alone) closer. How can a 'chair^{ness}' vaachaga sabda: be used to specify a particular chair? Similarly, considering another example, how can a 'boy^{ness}' vaachaka sabdha:, namely 'boy', be used to specify a particular boy? How can anybody, say, the teacher, just command 'call the boy'? 'Boy' will mean 'universal boy^{ness}'. But, the teacher wants to call one particular boy.

"To express this problem in general terms: For communicating any instruction, the instructor has to use a sentence which contains words, which words can communicate only jaathi, as per the above theory. But the instructor may want to refer to a vyakthi alone.

"Therefore, the poorva pakshin raises this question: 'How can the teacher use a jaathi vaachaka sabdha: to specify a vyakthi?'"

'Universals' are not available for physical transaction. 'Particulars' alone are available for physical transactions. To quote another example, when someone says 'eat the mangoes', the word 'mangoes' (according to the theory enunciated by both the Meemaamsakaas and the Advaitins) convey 'mangoness'. But 'mangoness' cannot be eaten; i.e. jaathi cannot be eaten; only vyakthi (a particular mango) can be eaten. Therefore, when someone wants another person to eat a particular mango, how will he / she communicate?

This is the poorva pakshin's question: "How can jaathi vaachaka sabdhaas reveal vyakthi for transaction? How can words revealing 'the universal', talk about or reveal a 'particular' for the sake of transaction? And, if they cannot reveal the 'particulars', how can we use the language for communication?"

This is the purva pakshaa. Siddhaanthaa will be discussed later.

Referring to the text: (sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 32;)

- पदस्य सामान्यमात्रवृत्तेः - Since words deals with only 'universals',

The word 'boy' deals with 'boyness', 'table' deals with 'tableness', 'mango' deals with 'mangoness' and so on.

'Saamanyam', in this context, means 'jaath' or (in English) 'the universal'. 'Padhasya' means 'of the words'.

- कुतः पुनः - how can
- वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तिहेतुत्वम् - they (words) be means of understanding 'particulars'?"

How can words dealing with 'the universal' be used to communicate 'a particular'? How can words referring to 'the universal', lead to the understanding of vaakyarthaa-s, which deal with 'particulars'?

"Bring a chair" means "Bring a particular chair"; but, the word 'chair' refers to 'universal chairness'. How can a sentence communicate 'particular's, when the words can reveal only 'universal's? How does the transition take place from 'universal' to 'particular', at the time of communication?

These and similar doubts are raised with regard to both loukika and vaidhika sabdhaa:, including the mahaa vaakyam.

- इति - If such a question is asked,

- बाढम् - I (the Aachaaryaa admits) do accept such a problem existing.

First, Sureswaraachaarya appreciates the poorva pakshin, as if to tell the poorva pakshin: "You are a very good thinker ; you have understood the functions of words very well. Your poorva pakshaa is genuine. But, I have an answer to that, thought of, by me, long before. I will give you the answer".

The term 'bhaadam' conveys 'artha angheekaara.'| The Aachaarya tells the poorva pakshin: "I partially accept your poorva pakshaa; but I do not totally accept it, because the problem has been solved already".

Verse 31 – Chapter III:

सामान्यं हि पदं ब्रूते विशेषो वाक्यकर्तृकः ।

श्रुत्यादिप्रतिबद्धं सद्विशेषार्थं भवेत्पदम् ॥३२॥

A term, of course, stands for a universal. But, what is specific is conveyed by sentences. The term itself, determined by its particular context, acquires a determinate significance.

What is the answer?

A simple explanation, before entering the text is in order and is as follows:

"When a person tells another 'eat the mango', the listener who hears the word 'mango', initially understands the universal 'mango ness' only, because any word will only reveal the generality. In fact, the word, by itself, could include all the 132 known varieties of mangoes. That alone strikes the mind of the listener first, as the meaning of the word 'mango', since the vaachyaartha or primary meaning of a word is 'the universal' or 'saamaanyam'. The listener had heard the speaker say 'eat the mango'. Now, the listener first tries to apply the primary meaning / 'vaachyaartha' to the word 'mango'. But, he finds that the vaachyaartha cannot be applied here. Why not? Obviously because, the 'universal', the 'mango ness' or all the 132 varieties of mangoes, cannot be eaten. Since the commandment 'eat the mango' will not be sensible when one takes the vaachyaartham, what should one do? To make the command sensible, the listener has to drop the vaachyaartha and look for the lakshyaartha. The general rule is: 'When a listener wants to understand the meaning of a sentence, and finds that the vaachyaartham of a word in the sentence is not 'fitting' the situation, he should drop the vaachyaartham and look for the lakshyaartham or secondary meaning of the word.'

"In his treatise 'Vaakyavrutthi:', Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa eloquently gives expression to this general principle: 'Maanaantharavirodhe thu mukhyaarathasya parigrahe mukhyaarthena avinaabhootho lakshanaartha parikeerthithaa' – 'In case there is an inconsistency with other evidences in accepting the directly expressed meaning of a word, the meaning connected with what is denoted directly, and clearly intelligible by itself, is called the meaning indirectly expressed' (Verse 47).

"The essence of this Vaakyavrutthi verse is: ' When the vaachyaartha or primary meaning of a word in a sentence does not make the sentence sensible, drop the vaachyaartha of the word and look for the lakshyaartha or secondary meaning of the word, which, of course, should be closely associated with the vaachyaartha'.

"The secondary meaning of a word should be connected to the primary meaning of the word. In the example given above, a 'particular mango' is associated with the 'universal mango ness'. The 'particular mango' in front of the listener's eyes, is connected to the 'universal mango ness'. Therefore, what does the listener of the commandment do? He drops the vaachyaartham of the word 'mango' and understands the 'particular' mango in front of him, as the lakshyaartham of the word 'mango' and taking this visesham, enjoys the 'particular mango'.

"This happens to everyone all the time, under similar circumstances. The saamaanyam is unknowingly / instinctively dropped and the visesham taken.

"It can, therefore, be concluded from this, that padham conveys saamaanyam independently; but, in a sentence, conveys visesham. To repeat in English: Words outside a sentence convey 'the universal'; words occurring in a sentence convey 'the particular'.

Therefore (i.e., on the basis explained), the Aachaaryaa says:

- सामान्यं हि पदं ब्रूते - The word, of course, conveys 'the universal';
'Bruthe' means 'conveys / reveals'; 'saamaanyam' means 'the universal'.

Every word in the dictionary, when it exists in our mind as a part of vocabulary, conveys only 'the universal' as its vaachyaartha. This is the conclusion of both the Advaitin and the Poorva Meemaamsakaa. Whereas:

- विशेषः वाक्यकर्तृकः - the 'particular' / specific meaning (of the word) is conveyed by sentences.

A word, which conveys only 'the universal' when mentioned independently, can reveal 'visesha.', the 'particular', when used in a sentence. What is the reason? Because vaachyaarthaas may not 'fit in', in a given context. For instance, in the examples earlier quoted, nobody can bring 'chairness' closer; only a particular chair can be brought closer. Therefore, the listener brings a particular chair closer. Nobody can call 'boyness' ; only a particular boy can be called. Therefore, the listener calls the particular boy. This is a general rule applied in loukika vyavahaaraa.

But in vaidhika vyavahaaraa, what do we do? When the very same words occur in the Vedas, to arrive at the meaning of the words, not only should one use the lakshyaartha, one has to use other methods of enquiry also. Six 'lingaas' are mentioned in the meemaasaa saasthram. Those six lingaas must also be used to arrive at the meaning of the word thath, the meaning of the word thvam etc.

The six lingaas used in Vedhaantha Saasthraa are given in the sloka: " upakramo-upasamhaarau abhyaaso poorvathaa palam arthavaadho upapaththi cha lingam thaathparya nirnaye" meaning "In determining the essence of any word / statement (i) upakrama-upasamhaarau (ii) abhyaasa: (iii) poorvathaa (iv) palam (v) arthavaadha: and (vi) upapaththi: are the six lingaas used". While these six are the lingaas used in Vedhaantha vichaaraa, in the karma kaandaa , the ritualistic portion of the Vedaas, a different set of six lingaas are given for proper understanding of the meanings of the words given in karma kaandaa. Those six lingaas, according to the poorva meemaamsa saasthraas are: (i) sruthi (ii) lingam (iii) vaakyam (iv) prakaranam (v) sthaanam and (vi) samaakyaa. Using these six clues, every word used in the Karma Kaandaa of the Vedaas, can / must be understood i.e. as to what particular object is revealed by what particular word etc.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, having been a staunch Poorva Meemaamsakaa, known by the name Mandana Misraa, before he took to sanyaasaa and having been extremely eloquent in debates supporting Poorva Meemaamsaa philosophy, is naturally well versed in karma kaandaa. Therefore, when he wants to refer to lingaas, he uses the names of the lingaas, used in the karma kaandaa. He says:

- श्रुत्यादि सत् प्रतिबद्धम् - Being associated with the six clues like sruthi etc.,
- पदं - the vaidhika padham (words in the Vedaas)
- विशेषार्थ भवेत् - will be capable of giving the meaning of 'a particular', dropping the meaning of 'the universal'.

'Jahalalakshanayaa' (by the application of jahath lakshanaa), it can reveal the viseshaartha. Thus, mahaa vaakyam can finally reveal ekaathmaa, which is the essence of jeevaathmaa and Paramaathma. There is no problem at all, if the student / seeker properly listens to the mahaa vaakyam.

'Sruthyaadhi sath prathi badham' is adjective to 'padham'. The word 'Sath' (in the compound term sadhviseshaartham) means 'being' and should be read after 'sruthyaadh'. Being associated with various clues, every Vedic word will reveal 'the particular', dropping 'the universal'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 33:

अन्वयव्यतिरेकपुरस्सरं वाक्यमेव सामानाधिकरण्यादिनाविध्यापटलप्रध्वंसद्वारेण मुमुक्षुं स्वाराज्येऽभिषेचयति न त्वन्वयव्यतिरेकामात्रसाध्योऽयमर्थ इत्याह ।

Now, it is pointed out that coming after the discrimination between the Self and non-Self, the proposition itself, through relations like co-ordination, destroys the veil of nescience and by that establishes the aspirant after liberation, in the supreme kingdom of self- sovereignty. This goal is not to be secured by mere discrimination through reason:

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about the relative importance of 'anvaya vyathirekaa' and 'vaakya vicharaa'. 'Anvaya vyathirekaa' is an extremely important exercise, to separate the saakshi and the pancha kossaa; i.e., to separate the saakshi and sareerathrayam; i.e. to separate the aathmaa and anaathmaa. For this purpose, anvaya vyathirekaa is essential.

In the same manner, 'mahaa vaakya vicharaa' is extremely important to understand the 'eykyam' between 'saakshi' and 'Brahmar'. For saakshi's 'separation' / 'distinction' from pancha kosaa / sareerathrayam / anaathmaa, 'anvaya vyathirekaa' is essential. For saakshi's 'union' / 'eykyam' with Brahman, 'mahaa vaakya vicharaa' is essential. Thus, both stages are equally important.

First stage is anvaya vyathirekaa, during which stage, the 'separation' of saakshi from sareerathrayam is done. In the language of Bhagavadh Githaa (chapter XIII), 'kshethragnya' should be first separated from 'kshethram'. Verse 2 of Chapter XIII, of the Bhagavadh Githa runs: "Idham sareeram kauntheya kshethram ithi abhidheeyathe / ethadh yo vetthi tham praahu: kshethragnya: ithi tadhvidha:" - "Oh Arjuna! This body is known as 'Kshethram'. There is a Conscious principle which knows this body. Wise men declare that 'knower' principle to be 'Kshethragnya.'" | This is the 'anvaya vyathirekaa' stage, as presented by Lord Krishna.

Immediately afterwards, in verse 3 of chapter XIII, Lord Krishna declares: "ksethragnyam chaapi maam viddhi sarvakshethreshu Bhaaratha | Kshethra kshethragnyor jnaanam yath thath jnaanam matham mama" – "Oh? Arjuna ! May you understand kshethragnyaa to be Myself also, obtaining in all bodies. This knowledge, dealing with kshathram .and kshethragnyaa, is true knowledge. This is my teaching". This verse in the Githa is the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa step. Lord Krishna has thus included both steps of Vedhaantha Vichaaraa, extremely intelligently, in a concise manner, in Bhagavadh Githaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say: "Without 'anvaya vyathirekaa', 'vaakya vichaaraa' is impossible. 'Vaakyam' cannot 'communicate' to the seeker, the 'eikyam' between saakshi and Brahman, without the seeker successfully completing the anvaya vyathirekaa exercise. At the same time, without 'mahaa vaakya vichaaraa', the saadhanaa of 'anvaya vyathirekaa' is incomplete."

Therefore, both must be given equal importance; both must be followed; and, sequentially, not simultaneously. The sequence is: anvaya vyathirekaa is the first step and the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, is the second. In the first stage, the seeker should have successfully separated himself / herself from the pancha anaathmaa and remaining as saakshi, should move to the second stage of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. When he / she does that, mahaa vaakya vichaaraa will be instantaneously successful. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- वाक्यं एव - Only the mahaa vaakya sravanam or vichaaraa,
- अन्वयव्यतिरेकपुरस्सरं - which has already been preceded by anvaya vyathirekaa / which comes after efficient anvaya vyathirekaa,

The pancha anaathmaa renunciation, which is the result of efficient anvaya vyathirekaa saadhanaa alone is called by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, as sanyaasaa. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa insists on external sanyaasaa. But, even if the aspirant does not take to the external sanyaasaa aasrama, the minimum requirement for successful mahaa vaakya vichaaram is aanthara sanyaasam, signified by mental renunciation of the pancha anaathmaa and 'CLASP' rejection.

After pancha anaathma sanyaasaa / separation from pancha anaathmaa, what does the mahaa vaakyam do? The Aachaaryaa says:

- अभिषेचयति - does the Pattabhishikham,

Mahaa vaakyam is the grand priest who does the Pattabhishikam.

Of whom?

- मुमुक्षुं - of the wonderful aspirant (who has succeeded in achieving internal Sanyaasaa and 'CLASP' rejection),

To what saamrajyam? Obviously, any Pattabhishekam requires a saamraajyam.

- स्वाराज्ये - to moksha saamraajyam,

Just as in a democracy, every citizen is king, in vedhantha saasthraa, every seeker is an emperor.

How does the mahaa vaakyam do that?

- अविद्या पटल प्रध्वंसद्वारेण - by tearing away the veil of ignorance,

'Patalam' means 'cover' / 'lid' / 'membrane'. 'pradhvamsam' means 'elimination' / 'destruction'.

It must be understood that the separation between the seeker and the seeker's moksha saamraajyam is not a physical separation. Nor is there a long distance separating the two, requiring a long travelling time to achieve eiikyam. Mokshaa is 'my' very nature. The distance is only 'ignorance'. To emphasize this fact, the Aachaaryaa points out 'avidhyaa patala pradhvamsa dvaarena' meaning 'by eliminating / destroying ajnaana thimiram'.

How does the mahaa vaakyaam do that particular job of eliminating avidhyaa? By functioning at three levels, saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha:, viseshana viseshya sambhandha: and lakhsya lakshana sambhandha:, (already discussed earlier, in this same chapter). / Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- सामानाधिकरण्यादिना - by functioning through three levels, starting with saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandha: |

Mahaavaakyam 'tears off' the avidhya patalam and as even as the patalam is removed, the mumukshu feels the cool waters of the abhisheka jalam falling on him / her. What is that abhisheka jalam? Ans: Moksha saamrajya 'claiming'.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa exhorts: "Do not stop with anvaya vyathirekaa. You have to do vaakya vichaaraa also efficiently".

- न तु अन्वयव्यतिरेकमात्रसाध्य अयं :- This (viz., moksha saamraajya pattabhishekam) is not possible by mere aathma anaathma vivekaa.

'Maathra' conveys 'merely'; 'saadhya:' conveys 'attainable'.

After the seeker has attained the maturity to claim "'I' am the aathmaa, the saakshi and the entire dhrusya prapanchaa, is anaathmaa, the saakshyam", if the seeker chooses to stop at this stage, what will be his / her approach ?

The seeker will tend to think: "I am here; the entire overwhelming anaathmaa is in front of me. I am the 'observer'; the world is the 'observed'. The world is too big and threatening for me and I am too small and powerless in front of this world". What is mokshaa for an individual with this concept? Ans: His / her prayer would be: "Oh, Lord! I want to escape this world. This must be my last janmaa".

This would be the problem when a student stops with aathma anaathma vivekaa and does not receive the message of mahaa vaakyam. Mokshaa for such an individual will be only 'escapist' mokshaa. Anaathmaa will be still 'threatening', because the student, at this stage, has not falsified anaathmaa. By anvaya vyathirekaa exercise, anaathmaa has been 'separated' from saakshi, but not falsified. Anaathmaa which has not been falsified, will continue to be a 'threat'.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya warns: "Falsification of anaathmaa alone will stop you from seeking to 'run away' from the world / the pancha anaathmaa; and, the 'falsification' can take place only when vaakya vichaaraa is thoroughly done and you get the conviction 'aham sathyam anaathmaa mithyaad'. Mere aathma anaathma vivekaa alone will not do".

-)अयं अर्थं (इति आह - This fact is to be pointed out (in the following verse).

Verse 33 – Chapter III:

बुद्धियादीनामनात्मत्वं लिङ्गादपि च सिध्यति ।

निवृत्तिस्तावता नेतीत्यतो वाक्यं समाश्रयेत् ॥ ३३ ॥

This very important message, viz. "'separation' of anaathmaa is not enough; 'falsification' of anaathmaa is crucial" is being conveyed by this verse; this is a very, very important message. As long as anaathmaa is not falsified, the philosophy / concept of mokshaa as 'running away' or 'escaping' from this world, will be always in the mind. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- बुद्धियादीनाम् अनात्मत्वं - The realization of the anaathmathva nature of the mind etc.

The pancha anaathmaa had already been listed; they are possessions, profession, family, body and mind. The term 'buddyaadh' refers to this group of pancha anaathmaa. These are the five factors which are constantly creating the feeling "I am bound; not liberated".

- सिध्यति - can be easily be accomplished
- लिङ्गादपि - by using 'reasoning'.

'Lingam' represents 'anumaanam'. By simply using 'reasoning', the aspirant can separate anaathmaa from aathmaa.

Different types of reasoning have been discussed in different contexts. One of them (covered in detail, in the summary of the 2nd chapter) was that "Anaathmaa has dhrusyathvam, boudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam, while aathmaa is totally free of these five attributes". With the help of such reasoning, anaathmaa can be 'separated' / 'identified as distinct' from aathmaa.

But, by mere reasoning, anaathmaa can never be falsified.

- तावता - But, by that much study or reasoning,
- निवृत्तिः (न) सिध्यति(- anaathma nivurtthi: / elimination of anaathmaa does not take place

'Nivurtthi:' means 'falsification' or 'mithyaathva nischaya:' / 'Nivrutthi:' does not mean physical disappearance.

The 'falsification' of anaathmaa can never be accomplished by anvaya vyathirekaa. For that purpose mahaa vaakya vichaaraa must be properly done.

- अतः - Therefore,
- वाक्यं समाश्रयेत् - may you dwell upon mahaa vaakya vichaaram, in the form of mahaa vaakya sravanam, mahaa vaakya mananam and mahaa vaakya nidhidhyaasanam, until 'falsification' takes place.

144. Chapter III, Verse 33 to 35 (11-07-2009)

In these verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is talking about the importance of both anvaya vyathirekaa and vaakya vichaaraa. In the beginning stages, anvaya vyathirekaa will help the aspirant in thvam padha vichaaraa; and, anvaya vyathirekaa should be followed by vaakya vichaaraa. Only then, the whole journey of the aspirant is complete. Without anvaya vyathirekaa, vaakya vichaaraa will not be fruitful and without vaakya vichaaraa, anvaya vyathirekaa will remain incomplete. Therefore, both must be given equal importance by a serious mumukshu.

But, their implementation should be sequential and not simultaneous. And, what is the sequence? Anvaya vyathirekaa must be first and vaakya vichaaraa must follow.

If a person stops with anvaya vyathirekaa, what will be the problem? Sureswaraachaaryaa says here: "With anvaya vyathirekaa exercise, anaathmaa can, of course, be separated from aathmaa. The pancha anaathmaa, consisting of possessions, profession, family, body and mind, will be separated / distinguished from aathmaa. In fact, this separation of anaathmaa can be done even with the help of simple logic, viz., that anaathmaa has got five attributes, dhrusyathvam, baudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam, while aathmaa is totally free of these attributes and therefore, is distinct from anaathmaa. With the help of such logic, anaathmaa will be and can be 'separated'. But, mere 'separating' of anaathmaa will never solve the problem. This is because, even after 'separating' anaathmaa, the seeker will remain only in 'triangular' format; and, as long as the seeker remains in triangular format, his / her sense of samsaaraa will not go away. The seeker will continue to look forward to mokshaa, only as a future event. If the 'triangular' format should go away and 'binary' format is to be achieved, 'falsification' of anaathmaa / anaathma mithyaathva nischayam is extremely important. Only then the seeker will arrive at the 'binary' format, with the conviction, 'aham sathyam; dhrusyam sarvam mithyaa'. Only with that falsification, the seeker can realize that he / she is free here and now, in spite of several problems and issues which the seeker may be facing. If the seeker has to claim "I am free here and now", it is possible only when anaathma mithyaathvam is established and aathma sathyathvam is claimed".

And, therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "thavaathaa nivrutthi: na yethl".

(With regard to part of the second line of the verse, there are two different readings. 'Na yethl' is a better reading than 'na ithl', printed in the book that is being followed. The letter 'ne' in the book, may be corrected as 'na'. This change is suggested, since, if the reading is done as 'nethl', it will be followed by another 'ithl' and the sentence will run as 'na ithi ithl'.

The suggested change will make it read 'na yethi ithf, which, indisputably, is a better way of presentation.)

What is the meaning of "thavaathaa nivrutthi: na yethi"?

- तावता - By merely separating anaathmaa from aathmaa,
- निवृत्ति :न येति - 'falsification' of anaathmaa will never take place.

'Baadha:' is the technical term used in Advaita, for this 'falsification'

And, therefore, what is required?

'Falsification' of anaathmaa is crucial to move to binary format and that 'falsification' requires mahaa vaakyam. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- अतः - Therefore,
- वाक्यं समाश्रयेत् - the aspirant should resort to / enter into vaakya vichaaraa / eiyya vichaaraa.

This statement may give rise to a question. How will mahaa vaakya vichaaraa help in falsifying anaathmaa? This is a very important doubt, to be given thought and understood. What is the question / doubt? It is: "Mahaavaakyam does not directly talk about anaathmaa. Mahaavaakyam talks only about jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eiyyam. Therefore, Mahaa vaakya vichaaraa may help in claiming 'I', the aathmaa, am Brahmarf. But, how will it help in falsifying anaathmaa?"

The direct answer to this query, is, that, "a conclusion about anaathmaa has to be derived through a corollary"; and that direct answer is followed by an explanation of the corollary, which is as follows: "During thadh padha vichaaraa, it was established that Brahman is kaaranam and therefore, sathyam; it was also established that, 'jagathf, the anaathmaa, is kaaryam, and therefore, mithyaa. The student should recollect that earlier information, in this context. Now, through mahaa vaakyam, the student gets the additional information, 'I', the aathmaa, is identical with Brahman. Combining the two, the conclusion is: 'aham sathyam anaathmaa mithyaa'".

In spite of the above explanation that "Brahman is kaaranam and therefore, sathyam and also that, 'jagathf, the anaathmaa, is kaaryam, and therefore, mithyaa', the question "How do you say Brahman is sathyam and anaathmaa, the jagath, is mithyaa?" may still persist in the mind of the student. To counter this, in addition to the above answer, the Thaithreeya Upanishad's "anaathmathva nischaya:, kaaryathva nischaya:, naamaroopathva nischaya:, mithyaathva nischaya: pravilaapanam" should also be recollected. Pancha kosa viveka of the Upanishads should be recollected, because, all the siddhi granthaas only tie up the teachings of Upanishads. The treatises, Naishkarmya Siddhi, Advaitha Siddhi etc., do not exist independently; but are based on Upanishads only. Therefore, if the aspirant remembers the essential teachings of the Upanishads, these statements will naturally fall into place.

The conclusion: Only through 'jeeva-Brahma-eikyam', 'anaathma mithyaathvam' is established. And, therefore, the exhortation "vaakyam samaasrayeth".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 34:

न केवलमनुमनमात्रशरणोऽभिलषितमर्थं न प्राप्नोतीत्यनर्थं चाप्नोतीत्याह ।

One who subsists on mere reason, does not only fail to achieve the desired goal but also lands in evil. This is brought out now:

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa says that mahaa vaakyam alone is capable of jagan mithyaathva nischaya: | Mahaavaakyam alone will lead to 'falsification' of anaathmaa. If a person ignores mahaa vaakya pramaanam in particular or sruthi pramaanam itself in general, and, instead, attempts to use prathyaksha pramaanam or tharkaa, any amount of prathyaksha pramaanaa or tharka pramaanaa that is used, will not help him / her to arrive at jagan mithyaathvam. Prathyaksha pramaanaa can never prove jagan mithyaathvam. On the other hand, prathyaksha pramaanam will give more and more credence to the mistaken concept, that, jagath is mahaa sathyam. Anumaanaa or tharka pramaanaa will also never prove jagan mithyaathvam, because tharka pramaanaa is based only on the data received from prathyaksha pramaanaam. Therefore, tharka pramaanaam also can never prove jagan mithyaathvam. All the modern sciences also cannot establish jagan mithyaathvam, since all the modern sciences are based on experiments and collection of data, which means, that they are also indirectly based on prathyaksha pramaanam only. This is a very important doctrine of Advaitham, that only sruthi pramaanam can establish anaathma mithyaathva nischayam. Another vehement argument of Advaitham is, that, without jagan mithyaathva nischayathvam, one will never attain mokshaa.

Even if the aspirant achieves the maturity of perceiving anaathmaa as visvaroopaa, that will not help in mithyaathva nischaya: | 'Looking at anaathmaa as viswaroopa Isvara.' will, of course, be temporarily useful at Karma Yoga level. It will be useful for reducing raagha dveshaa; but, it will not permanently solve the problem. Coming to the final jnaana yoga level only, anaathma mithyaathva nischayaa alone will give liberation. This is the Advaithin's conclusion. The reasons have been discussed earlier and are briefly indicated, as follows: "If anaathma mithyaathvam is not established, the seeker's sanchitha, praarabhdam and aagaami karmaas will also be sathyam. If anaathmaa is not falsified, karmaas will not be falsified. If karmaas are not falsified, sanchitham, is also not falsified. If sanchitham is not falsified, punar janmaa will not be falsified. A seeker may exhaust praarabhdam by experiencing the praarabhdam palaani; but, sanchitham, since not 'falsified', will be waiting, ready to push the seeker into another birth. How can a seeker escape re-birth, as long as sanchitham is sathyam and cannot be got rid of?"

An interesting fact to note, is that, even Isvara's liberation is also only because He is fully aware of jagan mithyaathvam. For argument's sake, let it be imagined that Isvara does not know jagan mithyaathvam. In that case, Isvara will be the most miserable in the universe, because His job will turn very, very unpleasant and very, very uncomfortable. What is Isvara's job? He has to create (or cause to manifest) the jeevaas regularly, because he is the Creator. Then, He has to give the jeevaas their karma palam regularly, because He is the karma paladhaataa; more often, the palam will have to be in the form of dhu:kham, old age, degenerative disorders etc. And, then, Isvara has to watch all of the suffering of all the jeevaas, who are His own creations, because He is sarvasaakshi. And most importantly, He will undergo this ordeal without an end, since He is eternal and does not even go to sleep. Who can remain comfortable and happy, seeing other people screaming? Therefore, Isvara also will never be liberated if He does not know jagan mithyaathvam. The Advaitin's stand is that, whether it is a jeeva or a Devatha or even Isvara, anybody's liberation is only because of jagan mithyaathva nischaya: and that jagan mithyaathva nischaya: is possible only through mahaa vaakya vicharaa /

In line with this, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- अनुमान मात्र शरणः - One who takes refuge only in tharka pramaanaa

'Sarana:' literally means 'one who takes refuge'. This is a figurative expression; it only means 'one who uses' or 'one who resorts to'.

There may be such individuals, who say: "I do not want Vedas; I want to use only logic and modern sciences; using them, I want to arrive at jagan mithyaathvam". In fact, this is what Buddhism is trying to do. These topics have been discussed by Goudapaadhaachaaryaa, in detail, in his Maandookya Kaarika. In Buddhism, there are two main divisions Heena Yaanaa and Mahaa Yaanaa. Mahaa yaanaa itself talks of two doctrines, kshanika vigjnaana vaadhaa or yogaachchaara vaadha and maadhayamika vaadhaa. But, both Yogaachchaara mahaa yaana and maadhyaamika mahaa yaana try to establish jagan mithyaathvam through pure tharkaa. The Advaita philosophers vehemently refute their approach and say "without accepting Veda Pramaanam, jagan mithyaathvam cannot be arrived at".

'Anumaana maathra sarana:' refers to 'a philosopher who believes only in anumaanaa' or expressed in a different language to 'a naasthikaa / one who does not accept sabdha pramaanam'.

- अभिलषितं अर्थं न प्राप्नोति - does not achieve the desired goal.

'Abhilashitham artham' means 'desired conclusion / goal'. In this context, the desired conclusion is 'mithyaathva nischayam of the universe' / 'falsifying the universe' ; 'na prapnoothi' means 'does not achieve / attain' or 'does not arrive at'.

- इति न केवलं - Not only is this the problem.

The word 'ithi' after 'na prapnoothi' should be read with 'na kevalam', in the beginning of the sentence in the text.

The problem mentioned is that, such a person will not be able to arrive at jagan mithyaathvam. But, that is not the only problem; there are other problems also.

- अनर्थं च आप्नोति - He also lands in evil.

Such a philosopher, who rejects sabda pramaanam and is dependent only on tharka pramaanam or 'reasoning', will get into several problems, because of his / her not achieving jagan mithyaathva nischayam. One of the problems was already presented, namely, 'continuation in triangular format'. He / she will tend to complain: "I am a helpless jeevaa; I am always persecuted by the world and by the nava grahaas and their positions" and so on. As long as an individual is in 'triangular' format, he/she has to constantly placate one devathaa or another; resort to one praayaschitthaa or another. Even if praarabhdha karma is exhausted by him / her, sanchitha karma, which is looked upon as sathyam by such an individual, will give botherations in the form of punar janmaa. If praarabhdhaa is 'frightening sathyam', by the same token, sanchithaa also will be 'frightening sathyam' only.

On the other hand, if the aspirant is able to claim "By 'knowledge', I have falsified praarabhdhaa", then there is no possibility of 'frightening sanchithaa' also; conversely, if sanchithaa is falsified, why should anybody worry about praarabhdhaa, which also stands falsified?

The word 'anartham', may be interpreted to include 'navagraha bhayam' also, based on the observation of the current tendency of a vast number of 'religious' people resorting to grahapreethi, praayaschitthani etc., though, Sureswaraachaarya might or might not have meant it.

इति आह - This is being said here (in the verse that follows).

Chapter III: Verse 34 –

अनादृत्य श्रुतिं मोहादतो बौद्धाः तमस्विनः ।

आपोदिरे निरात्मत्वमनुमानैकचक्षुषः ॥ ३४ ॥

The Buddhists disregarded the sruthi in delusion and were given to darkness as a consequence. They, being guided solely by reasoning, landed in the unreality of the Self.

This blunder was committed by the Buddhist philosophers, especially the mahaa yaanaa Buddhists, known as soonya vaadhaa Buddhists or as 'nihilist' Buddhists. They committed the blunder. Sureswaraachaaryaa is wild with them and therefore, uses a very strong term in describing them:

- तमस्विनः बौद्धाः - The Buddhists, overpowered by thamo gunaa,

Why does the Aachaaryaa consider Buddhists as 'overpowered by thamo gunaa?

Ans: They had sufficient intelligence to use tharka pramaanam. They were all great thaarkikaas. In fact, there is a general assumption in philosophical circles, that the greatest philosopher among all types of philosophers, is a Maha yaanaa Buddhist, Nagaarjuna, who is believed to have lived even before Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa. This assumption that he is the greatest philosopher is due to the fact that Nagaarjuna was undoubtedly one of the greatest logicians and used tharkaa / arguments wonderfully well in support of his doctrines. One of his arguments is known as 'chathushkoti tharkhaa' and Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, who came later, was so impressed by that argument, that, he also adapts and adopts that argument.

Great Buddhists like Nagaarjuna had sufficient intelligence to handle tharkaa ; but, did not have sufficient intelligence to understand the limitation of tharkaa. The greatest limitation of tharkaa is, that, it can function only in empirical field and can never enter the Absolute. Goudapaadhaachaaryaa, in his Maandookya Kaarika says of such philosophers "parasparam viruddhyanthe" - "The dualists contradict one another". (Verse 17 – Advaitaprakaranam-Maandookya Kaarika). They are arguing on and on, each one contradicting the other. Nobody is able to arrive at the Absolute, because they do not know that "Naishaa tharkena mathir aapaneyaa – “This knowledge cannot be attained by reasoning”, as declared by the Katopanishad (1. 2. 9). Tharkaa can / should never be used to ‘arrive’ at the Truth. It must be used to ‘extract’ the Truth from saasthraas. That is why it is said “srothavya: manthavya:”, stressing the need to study saasthraas, under a guru. The Buddhists are not aware of this important fact and therefore, Sureswaraacharya calls them ‘thamasvina:’ meaning ‘dull witted people’, though they are intellectually brilliant.

What is the result of the thamo gunaa?

- अनुमान एक चक्षुषः - (and) with ‘reasoning’ as their only eye,

They have only one eye, in the form of ‘tharkhaa’; they do not have the second eye called ‘saasthra chakshu:’| To arrive at the truth, the aspirant requires both saasthra chakshu: and tharka chakshu:| How do saasthra chakshu: and tharka chakshu: complement each other? Tharka chakshu: will help in extracting the meaning of saasthra chakshu: / But, the Buddhist philosophers refuse to use the saasthra chakshu:| Therefore, they are partially blind people. The term ‘anumaanam eka chakshusha:’; is bahuvreehi samaasam, arrived at, as ‘anumaanam eva ekam chakshu: yesham the’.

Because of that, what blunder have they committed?

- अतः - (and) consequently,
- मोहात् - because of their delusion (and partial blindness),
- श्रुतिं अनादृत्य - ignoring the sruthi pramaanaa,

In fact, in modern times, even some advaitins do not want to accept that, sraddhaa in the saasthram is required. These advaitins have got a dislike for the word sraddhaa; because, they translate sraddhaa as faith; and, faith is associated with religion ; and religion is ‘red rag’ for science. Therefore, for modern people, ‘to be scientific ’ is ‘to negate religion’. To negate religion is to negate faith; to negate faith is to negate the word sraddha ; To negate the word sraddha is to negate saasthram. Thus, a few modern advaitins want to negate religion, saasthram and sraddhaa and want to present advaitam as a scientific philosophy. In their opinion, advaitam can be demonstrated purely with the help of science.

Sureswaraacharya warns: “Never join that group, who have no sraddhaa in saasthra pramaanam; you will have problems establishing advaitam logically”.

What happened because the Buddhist philosophers ignored sruthi pramaanam?

- निरात्मत्वं आपेदिरे - landed in the unreality of the Self.

What was the culmination of Buddhists reasoning / of the tharkhaa of Nagarjuna? Ans: Like Advaithins, they also arrived at jagan mithyaathvam / anaathma mithyaathvam, which, no doubt, was a very great accomplishment. But, Not only did they arrive at anaathma mithyaathvam, they arrived at aathma mithyaathvam also. Their conclusion was that "the 'Observed' is all mithyaa; the 'Observer' is also mithyaa ; sarvam mithyaa". And, what is the adhishtaanam for everything, according to them? Ans: Soonyam. They arrived at 'soonyam' or 'nothingness'. This is the misguided consequence of anumaana eka chakshuthvam.

'Niraathmathvam' means 'negation of aathmaad'. They first negated anaathmaa, on which Advaithins agree with them; but, unfortunately, they extended that mithyaathvam to aathmaa also. Therefore, according to them, "jadam is mithyaa; chaithanyam is also mithyaa ; sarvam mithyaa. The Truth is Soonyam".

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his 'Sri Dakshinamuorthy Sthothra' refers to these soonya vaadhins. The first half of the 5th verse of the Sthothraa runs: "Deham praanam api indriyaani api chalaam buddhim cha soonyam vidhu: sthree baala andha jadopamaa: thu ahamithi bhraanthaa bhrusam vaadhina:" – "Those, who, intellectually innocent like women, children, the blind and idiots, because of their delusion, firmly consider the Reality, as the physical body or as the praanaa or as the senses or as the ever-changing intellect or even as mere void". The reference in the first portion, viz., 'deham praanam api indriyaani api chalaam buddhim cha (vidhu:)' is to the charvaakaa and similar philosophers, who consider only the physical body, or the praanaa or the senses or the intellect as the ultimate Reality. The second portion 'soonyam vidhu:' refers to the soonya vaadha Buddhists, who think that Reality is soonyam, similar to the experience of 'nothingness' in sushupthi.

Having talked about soonya vaadhaa in the 5th sloka, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa refutes the soonya vaadha in the very next sloka (verse 6) by saying: "raahu grastha divaakarendhu sadurso maayaa samaachchaadhanaath sanmaathra: karanopasamharanatho yobhoothsushuptha: pumaan" – "On entering the deep sleep state, the individual folds up all the functions of the senses, and becomes 'Existence' alone, like the sun or the moon during eclipse", implying his refutation: "Oh! Buddhist mahaayaani ! how can you say there is soonyam in sleep? To talk about soonyam, you require some chaithanyam. A Soonya saakshi is required to talk about soonyam. And, once you accept soonya saakshi, there is no soonyam. That soonya saakshi is sath Brahman, which 'I' am".

The Buddhists negated that sath Brahman, because of their mohaa – delusion. 'Niraathmathvam' means 'negation of aathmaa'. 'Aapedhire' means 'arrived at'. 'Aapaadhanam' means 'concluding' or 'arriving at the conclusion'.

Therefore, what is Sureswaraachaaryaa's instruction? Ans: "Use tharkhaa alright; but, may you note that sruthi is the primary pramaanam to arrive at Advaitam. Therefore, may you have sraddhaa in Veda Pramaanam."

(Swamiji had earlier given a separate talk, in a different context, on sraddhaa ; when, he had given the definition of sraddhaa not as faith but as 'upajeevya pramaana svatha: praamaanya jnaanam'. For details, that talk can be referred to). That sraddha is crucial for Vedhaanthic study. This fact is being highlighted by Sureswaraachaaryaa in the following portions.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 35:

न चानादरे कारणमस्ति । यस्मात्सर्वत्रैवानादरनिमित्तं प्रमाणस्य प्रमाणान्तरप्रतिपन्नप्रतिपादनं वा विपरीतप्रतिपादनं वा संशयितप्रतिपादनं वा न वा प्रतिपादनमिति न चैतेषामन्यतमदपि कारणमस्ति । यत आह ।

In fact, there is no ground for such a disregard. In all cases where such a procedure is legitimate, the knowledge in question must be simply re-affirming what is ascertained through another source of knowledge or it must be affirming what is contradicted by another source or it must be indeterminate in itself or it must fail to convey any knowledge whatever. In the present case, none of these reasons holds good. Therefore, it is said:

This is the topic of sraddhaa in any pramaanam in general, sraddhaa in saasthra pramaanam in particular and sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam, to be still more particular.

Without sraddhaa, maaha vaakyam will not produce jnaanam; Mahaa vaakyam will produce a hypothesis only. The listener will take the maaha vaakya message as only a hypothesis; and, once he / she takes it as a hypothesis, he / she will always require a proof through some other pramaanam. A hypothesis can be converted into a theory or a fact, only when it is proved through some other pramaanam. Once the student takes mahaa vaakyam teaching only as a hypothesis, he / she will always look for proving that 'hypothesis' through some other pramaanam, and will say : "I still have only theoretical knowledge; I am waiting for 'proving' my knowledge".

'Proving the knowledge' is what is termed by people as 'converting knowledge into realization'. A student without sraddhaa in the saasthraas, will always be looking for a new 'realization' other than the knowledge derived from the saasthraas. He / she will conclude that an extraordinary mystic experience is that other pramaanam, which will have to 'prove' this knowledge.

Such a seeker will believe: "Until that mystic experience comes, I have only got knowledge; I do not have 'anubhavaa' " and will struggle to prove his / her knowledge through that some other experience.

Sureswaraacharya says: "Other than saasthram, there is no pramaanam to prove the saasthram".

Tharka pramaanam, prathyaksha pramaanam etc. cannot prove or disprove saasthra pramaanam. As for 'meditation', which, some misguided people consider as capable of 'proving' the 'knowledge' derived from saasthraas, it should be realized, that dhyaanam is not even accepted as a pramaanaa, by Advaita philosophy. 'Meditation' or 'dhyaanam' does not find a place in the shadpramaana list of Advaita.

People who lack sraddhaa will always look and wait for a separate anubhavaa to validate 'knowledge'. But, they have to wait forever, since there is absolutely no possibility of such a separate anubhavaa happening.

Therefore, to avoid this blunder, what should the seeker know and do? Ans: The seeker should have sraddhaa in saasthraas. Once he / she has sraddhaa, mahaa vaakyam gives final and complete knowledge in the form of 'understanding' and other than this 'understanding', there is no other separate 'realization' required. That 'knowledge' or 'understanding' itself is called anubhavaa; and, that 'knowledge' or 'understanding' itself is also 'realization'. All this will become clear, if the student has sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya asks the question "Why do you lack sraddhaa in saasthram? Why do you not have sraddhaa in saasthram? There is no reason for not having sraddhaa in the saasthra pramaanam, in the same manner, as we have sraddhaa in prathyaksha pramaanam".

The entire humanity has sraddhaa in prathyaksha pramaanaam. Nobody questions prathyaksha pramaanam. Nobody wants to validate prathyaksha pramaanam. Even a scientist wants to collect data from prathyaksha pramaanam; that means, even a scientist does not question prathyaksha pramaanam.

Just as, we, thus, naturally have sraddhaa in prathyaksha pramaanam, why should we not have sraddhaa in saasthra chakshu also, which is also an upajeevya pramaanam / a primary pramaanam like prathyaksha pramaanam? Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- अनादरे च कारणं नास्ति - There is no reason for non-acceptance of saasthra pramaanam.

If an individual does not have sraddha in saasthra pramaanam, it may be due to one of four obstacles, because of which sraddha is obstructed.

Sureswaraacharya is entering another territory. He says: "If you do not have sraddha in saasthram, that lack of sraddha can only be due to any one of four types of obstacles / Chaturvidha prathibhaandhaa: | 'Sradhha in saasthram ' means 'acceptance of saasthra pramaanam'.

In this context, Sureswaraacharya, in fact, talks not only of 'Sradhha in saasthra pramaanam', but in pramaanam-s in general. If sraddha even in prathyaksha pramaanam, should go away, it can be due to four types of obstacles. Sureswaraacharya himself introduces those four obstacles.

He says: "These may be the obstacles, because of which you do not accept saasthraas. I will remove those four obstacles and show that there is no reason for you in not having saasthra sraddha."

Now, Sureswaraacharya introduces the four obstacles, which obstruct sraddha in any pramaanam. This is a highly technical, but, important topic – important because if a seeker does not understand this technical topic, he / she will wait forever, for a future Brahma anubhavaa ; he / she will be eternally practicing meditation or some other saadhanaa for Brahma anubhavaa; conversely, if this is understood he /she will never 'wait' for 'anubhavaa'. The seeker will understand that 'understanding' itself is 'anubhavaa'. After this 'understanding' also, he / she may go in for meditation ; but, the meditation will be a different type of meditation (details of which were given by Swamiji in an earlier talk on 'Meditation' during a Guru Poornima.) The meditation will not be for Brahma Anubhavaa.

What are the obstacles? Reverting to the text:

- यस्मात् - Because
- सर्वत्र एव - always,
- प्रमाणस्य अनादरनिमित्तं - the reason for disregarding any pramaanam may be, that,

'Pramaanam' means 'source of knowledge' and in this context, includes all six pramaanaas – prathyaksham, anumaanam, upamaanam, arthaa patthi, anupalabhdhi and sabdham.

'Nimittham' means 'reason'. 'Disregard' refers to 'Lack of sraddha'. The 'disregard' or 'lack of sraddha' is because of the following four obstacles.

- (प्रमाणस्य) प्रमाणान्तर प्रतिपन्न प्रतिपादनं वा- either the pramaanam is revealing an object which can be revealed by another pramaanam;

Explanation: "Suppose pramaanam no. 1 reveals an object which can be revealed by pramaanam no. 2; then, naturally, my interest in pramaanam no. 1 will be relatively less only. Why? Because, I know I can manage through pramaanam no. 2. On the other hand, suppose I know that a particular pramaanam, say, the same pramaanam no. 1 again, reveals an object, which can never be revealed by any other pramaanam, then, for knowledge of that object, I know I have to depend on that pramaanam no. 1 alone and I will therefore have more regard for pramaanam no. 1.

"An example: The eye and the 'colour of an object'. It is my eye that reveals the colour of any object. If my ears also are capable of revealing colours, the interest I attach to my eye will come down. In such a hypothetical situation, even if there is a probability of a 'retinal detachment' for me, which may result in total blindness, I will remain relaxed, thinking that if my eyes are not there, I can always depend on my ears. But, it is not so. 'Eye' is the only pramaanam capable of revealing the 'colour of an object'. 'Chakshu' is a unique pramaanam not an anuvaadakha pramaanam. One who does not understand this uniqueness of the eye will be careless with regard to the protection of the eye and one who understands the uniqueness of the eye will be very careful about protecting the eye.

'In the same manner, one who understands the uniqueness of mahaa vaakyam will have 'regard' for the mahaa vaakyam and one who does not understand the uniqueness of the mahaa vaakyam will have lesser regard".

This is obstacle no. 1 for having 'sraddha' in a 'pramaanam', viz., 'the particular pramaanam revealing an object which is revealed by some other pramaanam'.

'prathipaadhanam' means 'the revealing / ascertainment'; 'prathipannam' means 'object which can be revealed'; 'pramaanaanthara' means 'by a different 'pramaanam'.

What is the second obstacle?

- (प्रमाणस्य प्रमाणान्तरविपरीत प्रतिपादनं वा (- alternately, the pramaanam is revealing an object or an idea which is contradicted by another pramaanam;

Explanation: "Suppose a pramaanam reveals an idea which is contradicted by another pramaanam, then my sraddha or regard in the first pramaanam will go away".

145. Chapter III, Verse 35 (18-07-2009)

In the context of mahaavaakya vichaaraa, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to take a small diversion, as it were.

He wants to deal with the topic of the role of sraddhaa in maaha vaakya vichaaram, because, mahaa vaakyam can give knowledge only when it is enquired into, with sraddhaa. That is the reason why 'sraddhaa' is included as an important qualification, in saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi also. In the Chaandoghya Upanishad, in the sixth chapter, there is a vaakyam, addressed by Sage Uddhaalaka Aaruni to his son Svethakethu: "sraddhathsva soumya" – "Have faith, O! Good-looking one" (VI.12.2), highlighting the importance of sraddhaa. In the Bhagavadh Githa also, Lord Krishna declares: "Sraddhaavaan labhathe jnaanam" - "One who has faith attains knowledge" (IV-39). A diligent aspirant should, therefore, realize, that, Sraddhaa plays a very crucial role in mahaa vaakya vichaaraa and conversely, asraddhaa is a very big obstacle in mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

In this particular portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to discuss sraddhaa ; but, he uses a different name 'aadhara'. Instead of using the word sraddhaa, he uses the word aadhara: and instead of the word asraddhaa, he uses the word anaadhara: |

What is this sraddhaa? (Swamiji had discussed this topic in one of his Guru Poornima talks, titled 'what is sraddhaa?'. And, according to Swamiji, he had 'borrowed' almost that entire talk, only from this portion of Naishkarmya Siddhi.)

Sraddhaa, in the context of mahaa vaakyam, denotes two healthy attitudes: one is the student's attitude towards the mahaa vaakyam itself and the second is the student's attitude towards the 'understanding' that is derived from mahaa vaakyam.

What are the two attitudes?

The first, on the mahaa vaakyam, should be: "Mahaa vaakyam is the only source of 'aham Brahma asmi' knowledge and also that mahaa vaakyam is a valid source of 'aham Brahma asmi' knowledge". This must become crystal clear. Mahaa vaakyam is the only source and the valid source of 'aham Brahma asmi' jnaanam.

Then, on the 'understanding' of mahaa vaakyam, the student's healthy attitude should be: "This 'understanding' of mahaa vaakyam is the final and direct knowledge of 'aham Brahma asmi'. Since mahaa vaakyam is the only source and since mahaa vaakyam is the valid source, understanding mahaa vaakyam clearly, is, itself, the final and direct knowledge of 'aham Brahma asmi' ". The student should have the conviction: "Other than this 'understanding', which is final and valid, I need not work for any other separate final liberating knowledge, in the name of 'realization' or in the name of 'enlightenment' or in the name of 'Brahma anubhavaa'. I do not have to work for any separate knowledge through a mystic or any other experience. This 'understanding' of mahaa vaakyam is 'direct knowledge'; this 'understanding' is 'final knowledge'; this 'understanding' is 'direct experience'; this 'understanding' is 'enlightenment' ; this 'understanding' is 'realization' ; this 'understanding' is 'Brahma anubhavaa'. Other than this 'understanding', I do not have to work for anything else. Mahaa vaakyam is capable of giving me this jnaanam which is aparoksha jnaanam and final".

This fact is stressed repeatedly, because, some other statements occur in the Upanishads, other than the mahaa vaakyam, known as 'avaanthara vaakyaani', which avaanthra vaakyaani may give only indirect knowledge; they may give only incomplete knowledge; they may give only book-knowledge. But, this limitation of the avaanthara vaakyaani should never be extended to the mahaa vaakyam. The statement, viz., that 'this vaakyam gives indirect or incomplete or book knowledge' can be made about an avaanthara vaakyam. But, one should never commit the blunder of making that statement with regard to mahaa vaakyam.

To consolidate: The first part of sraddhaa is the conviction "mahaa vaakyam is the valid and only source of aparoksha jnaanam". The second part of sraddhaa is the conviction "the 'understanding' that I derive from the mahaa vaakyam is the final. I do not have to work for any other distinct / separate 'experience' ".

This gives rise to a common question / doubt: "If a separate mystic experiences is not required, why is nidhidhyaasanam prescribed at all? If mahaa vaakya sravanam itself completes the process, why should the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad say 'srothavya, manthavya, niddhidhyaasithavya' (II.iv.5) ? Why is Vedhaantic meditation prescribed?"

This doubt is answered as below:

Many people mistake nidhidhyaasanam as a means of mystic experience. This is an unfortunate conclusion / a misconception.

Tradition defines nidhidhyaasanam as 'vipareetha bhaavanaa nivrutthi saadhanam'. It is never a saadhanam presented as a means for 'final' knowledge or mystic experience. Nidhidhyaasanam is prescribed for the purpose of 'changing one's habitual thinking'; not for the purpose of producing any mystic experience.

What is that 'habitual thinking' to be changed? Ans: "The 'triangular' format of jeeva, jagath and Isvara".

Changing / shifting from this 'triangular' format to the 'binary' format is a must, if the 'understanding' from the mahaa vaakyam should have an impact. In other words, the impact of the 'understanding' from the mahaa vaakyam will become evident and palpable, only when it goes along with 'throwing away' the habit of the 'triangular' format. Also, this shifting from the old habit of 'triangular' format and moving to the new habit of 'binary' format is not during nidhidhyaasanam alone, but, throughout the rest of the aspirant's life.

The 'triangular' format mind-set is the 'vipareetha bhaavanaa'. The aspirant should 'break' that 'vipareetha bhaavanaa' and move to 'binary' format. That is the purpose of nidhidhyaasanam.

In this treatise, Sureswaraacharya also is anxious to remove the misconception that nidhidhyaasanam is intended to produce a mystic experience.

Reverting back to the main topic of 'sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam', the attitude/ bhaavaa that "Mahaa vaakyam alone can and does give me 'jnaanam' or 'understanding'; that 'understanding' alone is 'realization'; that alone is 'enlightenment'; there is no other mystic experience or any other anubhavaa' is called 'sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam' .

Sureswaraacharya further points out: "Sraddhaa towards prathyaksha pramaana is very natural / in-born to every human being. It is so natural that we do not even realize that we are applying sraddhaa to prathyaksha pramaanam. We never call the 'knowledge' / information, which prathyaksha pramaanam gives, as second-hand information; we take it as factual knowledge. This is because we have got sraddhaa in prathyaksha pramaanam, without anybody educating us and without anybody specifically instructing / requesting us to have sraddhaa on the prathyaksha pramaanam".

Even scientists do not have any doubt with regard to prathyaksha pramaanam, even though sense organs do create 'illusions' at times, as for instance, the eye admittedly creating 'optical illusions' at times. Even when, thus, the eyes give optical illusions, the tendency is only to 'explain away' the illusions, without the sraddhaa in the sense organ ever getting 'shaken'. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "sraaddhaa in prathyaksha pramaanam is natural".

Then, he argues "If sraaddhaa is natural in prathyaksha pramaanam, why do we not have the same sraddhaa in mahaa vaakya pramaanam, which is apourusheyam, nirdhushtam and Isvara krutham or in the Lord's declaration 'vedaischa sarvai: aham eva vedhya: | vedhaanthkruth veda vidh eva aham cha? We should have natural sraddhaa in mahaavaakya pramaanaa also. But, why is it not so?"

Sureswaraachaaryaa himself answers: "It is not 'absence of sraddhaa', because sraddhaa is in-born. But, that sraddhaa is obstructed by certain factors. What we require is not 'generation of sraddhaa'; but, what we do require is 'removal of the obstacles' ".

In some other texts, 'five' obstacles are enumerated. Sureswaraachaaryaa lists four obstacles here and says: "If those four are removed, we 'discover' sraddhaa. When the obstacle / cover is removed, we will develop the same keen type of sraddhaa that we have in prathyaksham, in the mahaa vaakyam also. As a consequence of that sraddhaa, the 'understanding' derived from the mahaa vaakyam will become 'final' and we will be 'relaxed'".

What are the four obstacles enumerated by the Aachaaryaa? The first two obstacles were discussed in the previous session. But, in view of their significance / importance, they are being repeated now.

The first obstacle is : 'pramaanaanthara prathipanna prathipaadhanam'. To explain: "If a so-called pramaanam reveals an already known object or fact, then, that so-called pramaanam does not deserve to be called a 'pramaanam' or 'source of knowledge', because, the object or fact is already known. The so-called pramaanam is not 'producing' knowledge; it only 'restates' something which is already known. Such a statement cannot be called pramaana vaakyam . It will have to be called anuvadhaka vaakyam".

The first obstacle is, thus, 'anuvadhakathvam'. 'Anuvadhakathvam' means 'restatement of a known fact', and, obviously, cannot be considered as 'production of new knowledge'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the term 'pramaanaanthara prathipanna prathipaadhanam', to denote anuvadhakathvam. Another term 'athigathathvam' also is commonly used for this. The first obstacle or prathibhandha: is therefore, 'anuvadhakathva prathibhandha.' or 'athigathathva prathibhandha.' or 'pramaanaanthara prathipanna prathipaadhana prathibhandha.'"

The commentators give examples for 'anuvadhakathvam' - both loukikaa examples and vaidhikaa examples.

A common loukikaa example is as follows: "Two persons are seated on the bank of a river. There are many trees around them, with large numbers of fruits. Both the individuals are looking at the river, the trees and the fruits. Both are fully aware of their surroundings. If, under such circumstances, one of them makes a statement 'naddhyastheere palaani santhi' – 'there are many fruits on the bank of the river', can that statement be called pramaana vaakyam? Obviously not, since the other person is also equally aware of what was stated. You cannot call it pramaana vaakyam, because the statement is about something well known and evident. It is only an anuvadhaka vaakyam'.

A saasthric example, which is given, is the statement 'Agni: himasya beshajam'. This is a vaakyam occurring in some part of the Vedaas, meaning 'fire is a remedy, when there is lot of snow around'. In severely cold climates with snowfalls, bonfires are kindled and used as remedy or relief for the cold surroundings. Even though it is the Veda that had made this statement, it is again not a pramaana vaakyam, because the content of the vaakyam is a well known fact. It is only an arthavaadhaka or anuvadhaka vaakyam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa asks: "Do you think that mahaa vaakyam is an anuvadhaka vaakyam (similar to the examples given)?" and says "If mahaa vaakyam is revealing something that we already know, mahaa vaakyam also cannot be a pramaanam, and, there is justification for your not having sraddhaa in it. But, it is not so. Mahaa vaakyam reveals a fact that cannot be known from any other pramaanam".

What is the second obstacle? It is this. If one so-called pramaanam / 'source of knowledge' is revealing something, which is contradicted by another so-called pramaanam, then at least one of the so-called pramaanam-s becomes invalid. The observer loses regard for one or both pramaanam-s. Thus, 'contradiction' is the second obstacle to sraddhaa or acceptance.

An example given by Swamiji: "If I point out to the desk in front of me and say 'this object is an elephant, black in colour and weighing five tons', my statement, which may be considered sabda pramaanam, is contradicting the already operational pramaanam called prathyaksha anubhavaa, which very clearly has established the object to you, as a lightweight, brown desk. My statement is anubhava viruddham – contradictory to what you experience. The sabda pramaanam, in this case, is viruddhaartha prathipaadhakam or vipareethaartha prathipaadhakam. Such 'contradictory revelation' is also an obstacle in 'acceptance', i.e. to 'sraddhaa'. This is the second type of obstacle, in the Aachaaryaa's list.

For 'Vipareethaarthaprathipaadhanam' also, the commentators give examples - both loukika and vaidhika. The loukika example is the statement "graavaana: plavanthe", meaning "rocks are floating (in the water)". Obviously, this cannot be a pramaana vaakyam, since it contradicts prathyaksha pramaanam, this reason stated in Sanskrit as, "vipareethaarthaprathipaadhakathvaath".

The Vedic example for this type of obstacle is a statement in Chaandoghya Upanishad. In the Panchaagni Vidhya of the Upanishad, there is a statement "purusho vaava Gouthama agni:" (V.7.1) meaning "O Gauthama! Man is indeed the fire". Obviously, this statement 'man is fire', is not acceptable on its face value. Again, "vipareetharthaprathipaadhakathvaath" i.e. because it contradicts prathyaksha pramaanam, even this Vedic statement "purusho vaava Gouthama agni:" cannot be taken as a pramaana vaakyam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa asks: "Vipareetharthaprathipaadhanam Vaa?" - "Is it because the sabda pramaanam is revealing something contradictory?", making it clear, that Vipareetharthaprathipaadhanam is the second possible obstacle to sraddhaa.

What is the third obstruction? And: It is termed 'samsayithaprathipaadhanam'.

To explain: If a so-called pramaanam gives doubtful or vague knowledge, (a doubtful knowledge is no knowledge), then it cannot be accepted as pramaanam.

An example from mundane life: "Imagine that a person wants to board a particular train, but, does not know the exact time of departure of the train. Another person had recently travelled by the same train. Therefore, the first person asks the second person as to what time the train starts from the Railway Station. The second person replies 'at 10 PM' and then adds 'I think so; I am not 100 % sure; but, I am 99% sure'. Then can the first person use this statement as pramaanam for going to the Station? Obviously not, since the second person has given only a doubtful or vague answer". A pramaanam is not a pramaanam, if it gives doubtful knowledge / information, as in this instance.

The commentators give examples for 'samsayithaprathipaadhanam' also - both loukika and saasthreeya examples. A loukika example is the purported statement, i.e. someone remarking, "sthaanu: vaa purusha: vaa" meaning "There is something there; I do not know whether it is pillar or a human being ". Such a vague statement cannot be pramaana vaakyam, 'samsayitharthaprathipaadhakathvaath', meaning 'because its import is vague or of doubtful nature'.

As for the saasthreeya example, there is a Vedic statement "ko hi thath vedhaa yadhi amushmin loke asthi vaa na vaa" - "Who knows whether there is life or not in Paraloka ?". This is a statement found somewhere in the Vedas, almost atheist in nature, expressing the doubts "Is there a Paraloka at all? Will we go to Paraloka, after death? Are our forefathers now in Paraloka?" If one considers this statement 'ko hi thath vedhaa yadhi amushmin loke asthi vaa na vaa', the statement is 'samsayitharthaprathipaadhakham'; i.e. it expresses only doubts on a subject. Such 'samsayithaprathipaadhanam' - 'conveying an information in a very vague manner' also is considered an obstacle, in accepting something as a valid 'source of knowledge'.

What is the fourth obstacle? Ans: If a so-called 'source of knowledge' does not produce any knowledge at all, such a defect is termed 'aprathipaadhanam' or 'jnaana adhanakathvam', meaning, 'non-generation of knowledge' and obviously, that so-called 'source of knowledge' cannot be considered a pramaanam at all.

A loukika example is the 'talk' of a person during sleep. Invariably, such talks do not convey any sense; very often, they cannot even be de-ciphered. These meaningless sentences coming from a sleeping person cannot be considered pramaanam, because they do not produce any knowledge.

Saasthreeya example for this fourth obstacle: In the Vedas, at times, along with several manthraa-s, certain sounds, which do not have any meaning are used. In Saama Veda, such letters are termed 'thobha akshaarani'. In the well known Praana pradhista manthraas before commencing any Puja, there are some terms such as voushat (nethrathraaya vaushat), hoom (kavachaaya hoom), patu (asthraaya patu) etc., which are all only basic letters. They do not have any independent existence, nor do they have any particular meaning. They all come under apramaana vaakyaani.

Sureswaraacharya concedes: "If any of these four defects viz., (1) anuvaadhakathvam (2) vipareethaatha prathipaadhakathvam (3) samsayithaatha prathipaadhakathvam and (4) aprathipaadhakathvam is there in mahaa vaakyam, then the mahaa vaakyam will not govern any respect"; and, wonders : "But, when none of these four defects is there, how could anyone refuse to accept mahaa vaakyam as a valid and final source of knowledge, exactly like prathyaksha pramaanam ?"

When an individual sees some object as prathyakshaa, he / she does not follow it up by 'meditation' for 'realizing' the object. He straightaway considers the object as 'evident'.

Mahaa vaakyam is talking about the ever experienced Consciousness, which is experienced, in fact, more permanently, than any other object seen as prathyaksham. Any object experienced as prathyaksham, is experienced only when it is in front of the 'viewer'. On the other hand, Consciousness is experienced all the time.

The Aachaaryaa asks: "When mahaa vaakyam is talking about such an ever available Consciousness, what obstructs you from receiving that knowledge and accepting that knowledge as final? And, what obstacle is there for your sraddhaa in that mahaa vaakya pramaanam?"

Sradhaavaan receives immediate knowledge; asraadhaavaan resorts to meditation, which can produce no result at all, even if pursued for a length of time.

Reverting to the text:

- (प्रमाणस्य) संशयितप्रतिपादनं वा - alternately, the pramaanam must be making a vague or doubtful statement;
- (प्रमाणस्य) न प्रतिपादनं वा - alternately, the pramaanam should not be producing any knowledge at all ;
- इति - these four are the defects / obstacles for lack of sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam.

Since none of these four defects is there in mahaa vaakyam, there should be no obstacle to sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam; and, if sraddhaa is there, the aspirant will be convinced that his / her 'understanding' of the mahaa vaakyam is 'enlightenment', apart from which there is no other enlightenment for which he / she need work. If at all the aspirant should work for something, he/she should work only for eliminating 'triangular' format from his / her life and nourishing 'binary' format, especially when praarabhdhaa is not favourable. Other than this, nothing else is required. This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa, the foremost amongst the sishtyaas of Adi Sankara, is trying to convey. He says:

- एतेषां - Among these four,
- अन्यतमत् अपि कारणं नास्ति - none of the reasons is there (in the context of mahaa vaakyam).

'anyathamath' is aarsha prayogam; actually, it should be 'anyathamam'.

There may be defects / obstacles, in the sentences given earlier as examples, viz., "naddhyastheree palaani santhi" (example of anuvaadhakathvam), "purusho vaava Gouthama agni:" (example of vipareethaatha prathipaadhakathvam) and "ko hi thath vedhaa yadhi amushmin loke asthi vaa na vaa" (example of samsayithaatha prathipaadhakathvam) etc. "But" warns the Aachaaryaa, "Do not bring those obstacles in the case of the mahaa vaakyam. Kindly do not apply those defects". And, if a seeker says that he / she has sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam, what can prevent him / her from claiming that the 'understanding' derived from the mahaa vaakyam is final and is 'enlightenment'?

- यतः आह - This particular point, viz., that mahaa vaakyam does not have any of these four obstacles / defects. is elaborated (in the following verses).

In the following slokaas, Sureswaraachaaryaa proceeds to eliminate each one of them, in the case of mahaa vaakyam. These are very technical and significant slokaas.

Chapter III: Verse 35 –

मानान्तरानवष्टब्धं निर्दुःख्यात्मानमञ्जसा ।

बोधयन्ती श्रुतिः केन न प्रमाणमितीर्यते ॥ ३५ ॥

On what grounds, can sruthi, which truly reveals the real Self, free from misery and inaccessible to other sources of knowledge, be judged as not being a source of valid knowledge?

Sureswaraachaaryaa negates the first and second obstacles in this sloka.

- श्रुतिः मानान्तरानवष्टब्धं बोधयन्ती - Sruthi is revealing a fact, which is not revealed by any other pramaanam,

What do the Upanishads reveal?

- निर्दुःखी आत्मानं - the aathmaa or Self, which is free from misery.

Through mahaa vaakyam, Sruthi is revealing a fact about Consciousness, which fact about Consciousness, is never revealed by any other pramaanam. If any other pramaanam had already revealed the fact, then the mahaa vaakyam will become anuvadhaka vaakyam / a re-statement only. It will become a secondary source.

In this context, reference has to be made to a blunder committed by many non-traditional people. They have a wrong concept of Vedhaanthaa or mahaa vaakyam. They think that the rishis, who are authors of the Veda, gained Brahma jnaanam through their mystic experiences. This is the first part of the blunder.

The non-traditional people further assume that the rishis, who have already gained their knowledge' through their meditation and mystic experiences, are only recording that 'knowledge' in the Vedhaanthic text book. In short, Vedhaanthaa is looked upon as the recording of a knowledge gained by rishis, through their meditation and mystic experience.

This is the presentation of Vedhaanthaa by all the non-traditional people, an unfortunate presentation.

What is the consequence of this 'presentation'? Ans: It leads to the misconception, that, Vedhaanthaa does not produce knowledge; it only talks about a knowledge gained through meditation. Therefore, instead of looking upon Vedhaanthaa / mahaa vaakyam, as the primary source of knowledge, they look upon 'meditation' as the primary source of knowledge. .

In other words, because of the misconception, 'meditation' becomes pramaanam and Vedhaanthaa becomes anuvadakham, i.e. only a 'restatement' of knowledge gained through meditation. Once an aspirant, thus, mistakenly looks upon Vedhaanthaa as only a restatement, he is no more satisfied with what he considers as 'book-knowledge'. He aims to experience whatever direct experience the rishis are supposed to have had. He tends to think : "This 'aham brahma asmi' statement of the mahaa vaakyam is not the original knowledge; I have to get the original knowledge which the rishis themselves got, either through meditation or some mystic experience".

Meditation is wrongly considered as the 'source of knowledge', because of this wrong presentation / concept. Sureswaraacharya warns: "Kindly do not commit this blunder. Vedhaantha vaakyam is not anuvadahakam of the experience gained during meditation. Vedhaantha vaakyam itself is the primary source of knowledge for you also, for me also and for the rishis also. Rishis also gained the knowledge not through meditation, but through mahaa vaakyam only".

In the Kenopanishad, the guru declares : "ithi susrooma poorveshaam ye na: thath vyaachachakshire" (Chapter I- Verse 4), – "We have heard the following teaching of the ancient teachers who revealed that to us" implying "We did not get the knowledge in meditation; we are not recording our mystic experiences; we are only sharing the same words which our guru taught to us".

Therefore, for the entire advaita parampara, mahaa vaakyam is the final, valid and only source of knowledge. Therefore, understanding of mahaa vaakyam is the final knowledge. The seeker does not have to meditate or attempt to have any mystic experience.

Reverting to the text, Sureswaraacharya says "Sruthi: maanaanthara anavashtabhdham bodhayanthee" – "Upanishads are revealing 'knowledge' not revealed by any other pramaanam"}

The term "Maanaanthara" means "any other pramaanam". But, in this context, the term should be understood to include meditation or any other mystic experiences also, though neither 'meditation' nor 'mystic experiences' is included in the list of the six pramaanams, accepted by Advaithaa. Unfortunately, many people wrongly think that the final knowledge should come in meditation. In his treatise, Panchadasee, Swami Vidhyaaranya also repeatedly says: "Final knowledge should come in mahaa vaaka vichaaraa only and not in meditation".

With this statement "sruthi: maanaanthara anavashtabhdham bodhayanthee", the Aachaaraa has removed the first obstacle, viz., 'anuvaadhakthvam'.

Now, on the second obstacle:

- अञ्जसा) श्रुति :आत्मानं बोधयन्ती(- (Sruthi reveals the Self) without contradicting any other pramaanam.

'anjasaad means 'without contradiction' / 'avaipareethyena'|

Vedhaanthaa never contradicts any other pramaanam; conversely, no other pramaanam can contradict Vedhaanthaa.

For instance, Vedhaanthaa never says " You, the mind, is nithya suddhaa"; it says "You, the Consciousness , is nithya suddhaa"| In this statement, there is no contradiction at all; prathyakasha virodha is not there; anumaana virodhaa is not there; virodhaa to modern science is also not there.

In fact, there can be no virodhaa between sruthi / sabdha / mahaa vaakyam and any of the other five pramaanams, because all pramaanams other than sruthi or sabdha pramaanam are dealing only with 'matter', while sruthi / mahaa vaakyam is dealing with the non-material entity, Consciousness.

When one says "I am fat", using prathyakshaa, one is talking about the material body. And, when one says "I am agitated / depressed", which experience is also based on prathyakshaa, then, one is talking about the material mind. Whether it is indriya prathyaksham or saakshi prathyaksham, prathyaksham deals with 'matter' only. Other Pramaanams (except mahaa vaakyam), like anumaanam, upamaanam etc. are based only on prathyaksham; therefore, all other pramaanams also deal with 'matter' only. On the other hand, Mahaa vaakyam is dealing with the non-material entity 'Consciousness'. Therefore, how can the other pramaanam-s contradict sruthi?

Unfortunately, at times, there is a seeming contradiction. This is because, the word 'I' is used very, very loosely. To explain: "When I say 'I have a body', then I realize that I am different from my body, because I claim to be the possessor of the body. But at other times when I say 'I am fat'/'I am lean' etc., then, by the word 'I', I mean my body. Thus, we have got a vagueness regarding the term 'I', as to whether we are referring to the 'Consciousness' part or to the 'matter' part". The term 'I' can be used for Consciousness part or for the 'material' part. Therefore, there is a seeming contradiction.

'Nirdhu:khee' is adjective to 'aathmaa', meaning that aathmaa is 'ever free' from dhu:kham. The Aachaaryaa does not say that mind is free from misery. Mind will always have ups and downs. As declared by Lord Krishna in the Bhagavadh Githa (Chapter XIV), the three gunaas will be fluctuating all the time, causing different emotions in the mind. Saasthraas never say that mind is ever free from dhu:kham. They only say: "You are not the mind; and, you, who is other than the mind is eternally aanandasvaroopa; and, 'your' aanandhaa, sometimes get reflected in your mind; that aanandhaa is called experiential or prathibhimbhaa aanandhaa". The Aachaaryaa asks: "What is your problem in accepting this nirdhu:khee aathmaa, not contradicted by any other pramaanam?"

146. Chapter III, Verse 35 to 38 (25-07-2009)

In these important and technical verses, Sureswaraacharya is taking a small diversion, dealing with the topic of sraddha and the crucial role played by sraddha in mahaa vaakyavichaara: | When a person does not have sraddha in mahaa vaakyam, he will receive the understanding of mahaa vaakyam, but, will treat it as only 'theoretical knowledge', and think that there is some 'enlightenment', which has to follow later. To express it in a marginally different manner, a person without sraddha, makes (attributes) a difference between knowledge and 'enlightenment', between knowledge and 'realization', between knowledge and 'anubhava jnaanam' and between knowledge and 'saakshaathkaara'. The difference is 'made' (attributed), when sraddha is lacking.

On the other hand, when mahaa vaakyavichaara is done with sraddha in the mahaa vaakyam, for such a sraadhavaan, the knowledge received from mahaa vaakyam is itself 'enlightenment', is itself 'realization', is itself 'aparoksha jnaanam', is itself 'anubhava jnaanam' and is itself 'saakshaathkaara.' | The sraadhavaan sees no difference at all between 'knowledge' and 'understanding' or between 'knowledge' and 'realization'. In other words, the seeming difference between 'knowledge' and 'enlightenment' is caused only by lack of sraddha. It is sraddha, whose presence makes knowledge and enlightenment identical and whose absence makes knowledge and enlightenment different. It has nothing to do with any mystic experience.

The conviction that knowledge born out of mahaa vaakyavichaara and 'enlightenment' are identical, is the result of taking the message of mahaa vaakyam as final. In fact, 'enlightenment' is itself nothing but looking upon the message of mahaa vaakyam as final and factual; that, the message does not require any further validation, any further confirmation or any further corroboration.

Once, thus, the message of mahaa vaakyam is understood firmly as final and factual, the aspirant will change his mindset from the 'triangular' to the 'binary' format.

Therefore, whether one can come to binary format or not, is dependent on the presence or absence of sraddha, and, ultimately, 'liberation' depends upon 'binary' format.

Thus, the route is: (i) sraddha in mahaa vaakyam (ii) sraddha 'makes' knowledge itself into 'enlightenment' (iii) 'enlightenment' makes message of mahaa vaakyam final and factual (iv) the 'factuality' of the mahaa vaakyam, makes 'binary' format possible and (v) the 'binary' format leads to liberation.

It follows, therefore, that, sraddhaa takes the mumukshu / the aspirant right up to 'liberation'. That is the reason Lord Krishna makes the seemingly simple, but, actually a very significant declaration, 'sraddhaavaan labhathe jnaanam'. And, Swami Vidyaaaranaya, in his treatise, Panchadasee, declares: "sarvathra eva mahaa vaakya vichaaraa aprokshath" meaning "when mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is done with sraddhaa, what knowledge the student gains is aparoksha jnaanam".

That knowledge is enlightenment; that knowledge is saakshaathkaara: / The aspirant need not work for any separate 'realization' or 'anubhava.' | And, therefore, sraddhaa is crucial.

Sureswaraacharya defines sraddhaa as "appreciation of the pramaanam status of mahaa vaakyam". And, for this appreciation, there can be different obstacles. The Aaacharya lists four, all four in the forms of different types of misconception. Any one of the four types of misconception is an obstacle to the appreciation of the pramaanam status of the mahaa vaakyam. When any one of these four obstacles / four types of misconception is there in the mind of the seeker, he / she does not see mahaa vaakyam as a pramaanam ; that means, that he / she has no sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam; that means, that he / she will treat the knowledge only as 'theoretical knowledge' and look for some other 'enlightenment'.

Sureswaraacharya enumerated those four misconceptions, in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 35. Now, in the 35th verse, he is negating the first two misconceptions.

What is the first misconception? Ans: "Thinking that there are two pramaanams for achieving eikya jnaanam; that, one pramaanam gives 'knowledge' and another pramaanam gives 'enlightenment'. This misconception is a very big obstacle. Mahaa vaakyaa is taken as the pramaanam, giving only 'theoretical knowledge' and meditation is taken as the second pramaanam, giving 'actual enlightenment'"

This is a very big obstacle / misconception, which, unfortunately, most seekers tend to have. They assume that there are two pramaanams, that 'study' is one pramaanam which gives 'knowledge' and 'meditation' is the second pramaanam which gives 'enlightenment'. This assumption of two pramaanams is the first type of blunder.

Sureswaraacharya 'blasts' that misconception and strongly asserts "there is no separate 'meditation pramaanam'; there is only one pramaanam, viz., the mahaa vaakyam, which gives 'knowledge', which 'knowledge' is 'enlightenment'".

It should not even be said that mahaa vaakyam gives 'knowledge' and 'enlightenment', since such a statement will lead to another misconception in the seeker, that he /she has received knowledge from the mahaa vaakyam as a first step and will get 'enlightenment' later, as a second step, from the same mahaa vaakyam.

It is not so. It is one pramaanam, mahaa vaakyam, which alone and by itself, gives 'knowledge' which is 'enlightenment'. The seeker should / need not 'wait' for a later or subsequent 'enlightenment', even from that one mahaa vaakya pramaanam. If he / she waits, the 'wait' will only be eternal.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "sruthi: maanaantra anavashtabdam aathmaanam bodhyanthee" - "sruthi is revealing an aathmaa, which cannot be revealed by any other pramaanam".

Thus, the Aacharya makes it very, very clear to the student that (i) the 'revelation'/ 'knowledge' given by the mahaa vaakyam is 'enlightenment'(ii) the 'enlightenment' has to help the seeker see the message given by mahaa vaakyam as factual and (iii) that 'factuality' has to take the seeker to the 'binary' format and liberation. If it does not, nothing else can do that.

Then, what is the second misconception? Ans: "That, Vedhaantha reveals a fact, which is contradicted by other pramaanam-s."

The 'other pramaanam-s' mainly means 'prathyaksham'.

This is the second misconception. This misconception results essentially because of two reasons: (1) because, Vedhaantha reveals advaitam and other pramaanam-s reveal dvaitam and (2) because, while Vedhaantha asserts "'I' am aanandha svaropa:", 'experience' or 'prathyaksha' reveals "I am not aanandha svaropa: / In fact, more often, I am miserable or dhu:khee". Mainly because of these reasons, the seeker concludes that "Vedhaantha is 'vipareetharthaprathipaadhanam'" – "Vedhaantha affirms what is contradicted by other sources of knowledge".

The further result of this conclusion, is that, the seeker is not able to accept Vedhaantha as factual and tends to resort to other *saadhana*s, like meditation, for achieving a new aanandha.

Even if, for the sake of argument, it is accepted that such an aanandha 'arrives' during meditation, it cannot be called 'enlightenment' or 'liberation'. The reason is obvious. The extraordinary aanandha that came because of meditation, will go away, when the seeker stops meditation. The aanandha will be temporary; the 'enlightenment' and the 'moksha' will be temporary. When the 'experience' that gave the aanandhaa goes away, samsaaraa will come back.

Swami Dayananda Saraswathy jocularly calls this misconceived philosophy (viz. of achieving aanandhaa through meditation) 'see-saw' philosophy, because "In meditation, 'I' am 'up' and samsaaraa is 'down'; once, out of meditation, 'I' am 'down' and samsaaraa is 'up'; all the problems come back".

Then, how is this seeming contradiction between what is revealed by mahaa vaakyam and what is revealed by prathyakshaa is to be resolved? Sureswaraachaarya answers. He says: "In reality, there is no contradiction between the fact that 'I' am aanandha svaroopaa: and my 'experience' of sorrow. How do I say that? I will answer. Whenever you talk about any experience, that experience deals with only anaathmaa. All your experiences are dealing with anaathmaa, either external anaathmaa or internal anaathmaa. Internal anaathmaa means body / mind/ intellect / annamaya / mano mayal praana mayaa etc. All experiences deal only with anaathmaa. But, 'I', the saakshi, is never an object of experience. Mahaa vaakyam deals with 'I', the Consciousness, which is not subject to any form of objectification, through any pramaanam. In short, mahaa vaakyam deals with aathmaa ; other pramaanam-s deal with anaathmaa. Thus, when the very subjects they deal with, are different, where is the question of any mutual contradiction between mahaa vaakyam and anubhavaa or prathyakshaa?" (Anubhavaa means objective experience).

The Aachaaryaa conveys this fact, by saying "sruthi: nirdhu:khee aathmaanam bodhayanthee anjasaa" – "sruthi reveals the aanandha svaroopaa aathmaa very clearly, without any contradiction". And, aathmaa is not the mind.

Mind has got two conditions, which nobody can stop. What are the two conditions? At times, mind gets into a particular type of state, in which 'my' aanandhaa (the svaroopaa aanandhaa) can be reflected by the mind; at other times, it gets into another particular type of state, when 'my' aanandhaa cannot be reflected by the mind. The mind cannot avoid either the 'reflecting state' or the 'non-reflecting state'. 'Reflecting state' gives 'temporary happiness'; 'non-reflecting state' gives 'temporary sorrow'. Mind can never, never avoid either.

In other words, mind can never avoid the arrival of prathibhimbha aanandhaa or the departure of prathibhimbha aanandhaa. Depending on praarabdham, the proportions may vary. In higher lokas, prathi bhimbha aanandhaa is more ; in lower lokas, prathi bhimbha aanandhaa is less; in manushya loka, prathi bhimbha aanandhaa will be going 'up and down'. Nobody can stop that, including Bhagavaan. "Understanding this, as it is and claiming 'my' bhimbha aananadaa status" is what mahaa vaakyam is helping the seeker to achieve. "Therefore" asks the Aachaaryaa "Where is the contradiction, between sruthi and prathyaksham? Why are you thinking of the ephemeral prathi bhimbha aanandaa in the mind, when mahaa vaakaym is talking about the permanent bhimbha aanandhaa of aathmaa?"

The term 'Nirdhu:khee' in this verse, refers to 'bhimbha aanandhaa'.

When the real Self revealed by sruthi is not accessible to other pramaanam-s and (i) therefore, cannot be revealed by other pramaanam-s and (ii) therefore, cannot be contradicted also by other pramaanam-s,

- केन श्रुति :न प्रमाणं इति ईर्यते - How can it (sruthi) be judged as not being a 'source of knowledge'

The first misconception that "eykya jnaanam can be / has to be achieved by pramaanam-s other than sruthi (mahaa vaakyam)" and the second misconception, that "Vedhaanthaa contradicts 'Experience'", have both been, thus, resolved by Sureswaraachaaryaa. Now, he proceeds to talk about the third misconception.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36:

न च संशयित्वमवगम्यति । यतः ।

Nor does it convey what is open to doubt; for:

What is the third misconception? It is: "sruthi gives a vague or doubtful message".

If sruthi gives samsaya jnaanam, then, there may be justification for the student's lack of sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam. But, sruthi does not reveal samsaya jnaanam, though, at times, there is a 'perceived' vagueness about its message. This 'perception' is a result of the fact, that, there are advaitins extracting one message from the Upanishads, there are visishtha advaitins extracting another message and there are dvaitins extracting yet another message. Since the messages extracted by the different philosophers do have contradictions, the student concludes that the Upanishads are vague. It is to counter this problem that 'mananam' has been included in the Advaita philosophy as a crucial part in the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.| 'Mananam' is to firmly establish that there is only one message which comes from the Upanishads and that message is 'thath thvam asI |

Mahaa vaakyam or sruthi is not giving any vague message at all. This has to be clearly understood. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- संशयित्वं च - A doubtful message also

- न अवगम्यति - is not given (by the Upanishads).
- यत : - I will give you the reason why I say this.

What is that reason? The Aachaaryaa gives two slokaas (36 and 37) to remove the third misconception / obstacle. Verse 35 removed the first two misconceptions; verses 36 and 37 remove the third misconception.

Chapter III: Verse 36 –

सर्वसंशयहेतौ हि निरस्ते कथमात्मनि ।

जायेत संशयो वाक्यादनुमानेन युष्मदि ॥ ३६ ॥

When the non-Self, which is the root cause of all possible doubts, is removed through reasoning, how can the meaning of the sruthi in relation to the Self be open to doubt?

Sureswaraachaaryaa has averred: "No doubt can come at all, if sruthi is understood properly".

The Upanishad reveals "I am aanandha svaroopaa.", but, only after negating the pancha kosaas from the 'I'. Without understanding this crucial fact, if the student mistakenly retains the pancha kosaas in 'I', the doubt is bound to arise. The following example of an imaginary situation when a student finds it difficult to negate or dismiss the annamaya kosa (the physical body) will make this statement clearer. Sruthi is telling the student "you' are free from jaraa and maranam". Sruthi also says "you' are free from degenerative diseases". When sruthi makes this declaration, sruthi is not talking about the annamaya kosaa / the physical body, which it has already negated. But, imagine that the student is suffering from a knee-joint pain and refuses to sit on a chair, thinking that, as a mark of respect for the Aachaaryaa, he should sit only on the floor; and having done so, continues to suffer from the pain more intensely, during the course of the class. At this stage, when he is strongly in annamaya kosaa, he listens to the Aachaaryaa giving this message from the sruthi "You are immortal. You are free from old age. You are free from degenerative disorders". Since the student is preoccupied with his intense pain, he will naturally get the doubt as to whether the Sruthi is right at all.

It is obvious, therefore, that 'doubts' arise because there are two 'I'- s. One is the annamaya kosaa 'I' (with which the student has continued to identify in the example given). The second 'I', is the aathmaa 'I', which saasthra is talking about. The doubt will persist as long as both the kosaa 'I' and aathmaa 'I' are together. Therefore, the Upanishad is taking pains to move the seeker's mind out of the pancha kosaas and make him receive the message, that, in reality, there is only one saakshi, which is aanandha svaroopam: or poorna svaroopam: and that everything else is mithyaa / If and when the listener negates the pancha kosaas intellectually and listens to the mahaa vaakyam remaining as saakshi, he can directly lap up the message of the mahaa vaakyam as 'knowledge-cum-enlightenment'.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- अनुमानेन - By anumaanam or anvaya vyathirekhaa logic,
- युष्मदि निरस्ते - when the pancha kosaas are negated,

'Yushmadh' literally means 'you' or any object that can be addressed as 'you'. It is a peculiar/ rare usage, the word declined as 'yushmadh – yushamadau – yushmadha:'. In this context, it means the 'pancha kosaa 'aham' † 'Nirasthe' means 'negated'.

Sruthi is 'revealing' facts about 'me' and sruthi alone can reveal. No other pramaanam can. Scientists can never study Consciousness and declare whether it is aanandha svaroopam or dhu:kha svaroopam. Even 'I', the Consciousness, cannot objectify the Consciousness, just as eyes cannot see the eyes themselves. Just as the eyes require a mirror to see them, similarly sruthi alone, like the mirror, has to reveal whether Consciousness is aanandha svaroopam or dhu:khaa svaroopam. Sruthi pramaanaa alone has to reveal 'I' or aatmaa and it is revealing "'I' am pancha kosa adheetha: / 'I' am aanandha svaroopam:'"

The 'I', which mahaa vaakyam reveals, am not anna maya kosaa. Therefore, annamayaa-centric mortality cannot be talked about. That 'I', which mahaa vaakyam reveals, am not praana mayaa kosaa; therefore, praana mayaa-centric 'hunger', 'thirst' etc. cannot be talked about. That 'I', which mahaa vaakyam reveals, am not mano mayaa kosaa. Therefore, mano-mayaa-centric raaghaa, dveshaa, kaamaa, khrodaa etc. cannot be talked about. That 'I', which mahaa vaakyam reveals, am not vijnaana mayaa kosaa; therefore, vijnaana-mayaa-centric 'ignorance' of worldly matters cannot be talked about. That 'I', which mahaa vaakyam reveals, am not even aanandha maya kosaa. Therefore, aathma ajnaanam also cannot be talked about. Then, what is that 'I' that mahaa vaakyam reveals? It is that 'I', the aathmaa, devoid of all *upaadhi-s / attributes and limiting adjuncts. The Aachaaryaa asks : " When such is the case, if you have sraddhaa, what is the difficulty in accepting the fact, that sruthi / mahaa vaakyam is a non- contradictory pramaanam?"

Highlighting the need for the 'negation of the pancha kosaas', while understanding the import of 'aham' in the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi' or of 'thvam' in the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi', the Aachaaryaa says "anumaanena yushmadhi nirasthe (sathi) " - "when the pancha kosaas are removed from 'I', by anvaya vyathirekhaa logic ":

- सर्वसंशयहेतौ हि (निरस्ते) - all the reasons for the doubts are also gone.

What are the reasons? These had already been discussed. When annamaya kosa is retained in 'aham', the student will have doubts about the mahaa vaakyam, because anna maya, the body, is mortal, whereas mahaa vaakyam talks of the immortality of 'aathma' or 'aham'. When mano maya kosa is retained in 'aham', the student will have doubts about the mahaa vaakyam, because mano mayaa, the mind is loaded with sorrow, whereas mahaa vaakyam declares 'aathmaa is aananda svaroopam'.

But, when anna mayaa is negated, what can be the basis for the doubt about 'my' immortality?

In a similar manner, when mano maya is negated, where is the question of the doubt whether 'I' am aanandhaa or dhu:kham. That is the reason, why in sushupthi avasthaa or deep sleep state when mano maya is resolved, it becomes aanandhaa for everyone. "Thatha aathmaa sadhaanandho naasya dhu:kam kadhaachana / Yath sushupthau nirvishaya aathmaanandha: anubhooyathe sruthi: prathyaksham eithiyam anumaanam cha jaagrath" – "The aathman is ever blissful; it never suffers misery. In dreamless deep sleep, there are no sense-objects; the bliss of aathman is experienced then. This is attested by sruthi, sense perception, tradition and inference, in the waking state" declares Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Veveka Choodaamani (verse 107).

In sushupthi, we are enjoying aathma aanandhaa alone, though, of course, we are not aware of this fact during sushupthi. If we want to know this fact, we have to 'wake up' and return to the jaagrath state, to claim that we experienced aathma aanandhaa during the deep sleep state. For 'claiming' this fact, mano maya and vijnaana maya kosaas are, of course, required.

'Sarva samsaya hethau' is saphthami vibhakthi and is an adjective to 'yushmadhi'. It should be read as: 'sarva samsaya hethau yushmadhi nirasthe (sathi)'. Sruthi has first rejected all the pancha kosaas by avaya vyathirekhaa logic. Therefore:

- कथं आत्मनि संशयः जायेत - Where is the scope for any doubt with regard to 'my' nature ?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 37 and Verse 37 (Chapter III):

अपि च ।

यत्र स्यात्संशयो नासौ ज्ञेय आत्मेति पण्डितैः \

न यतः संशयप्राप्तिरात्मनोऽवगतित्वतः ॥ ३७ ॥

Further: That about which doubts may arise it not to be considered the Self, by the wise. With regard to the Self, there could be no doubt, for it is of the nature of awareness itself.

- अपि च – Further:

This verse is also dealing with the same topic, viz., that, sruthi is not revealing anything doubtful or vague. It gives another reason to establish that sruthi is not talking about anything that is doubtful or vague. The reason is this: What sruthi talks about is something whose existence can never be doubted by anyone. In fact, the very doubt is possible, because of that 'doubtless one' only. What is that 'doubtless one'? It is the Consciousness principle. Nobody can have any doubt as to whether he / she has Consciousness or not, because, even to doubt the existence of Consciousness, he / she has to be a Conscious being. If sruthi is talking about a 'mysterious' Brahman, the listener / the student can have a doubt as to whether that Brahman really exists or not. But, when Sruthi is talking about the Consciousness itself as Brahman, since Consciousness cannot be doubted, Brahman also cannot be doubted. That is the reason why Thaithreeya Upanishad says: "asanneva sa: bhavathi asadh brahmethi veda cheth| asthi brahmethi cheth veda| santhamenam thatho vidhurithi" – " If one considers that Brahman is non-existent, then, he himself becomes non-existent. If one considers that Brahman is existent, then, the wise consider him to be existent" (Brahmavalli – Paragraph 6).

Referring to the sloka:

- यत्र संशयः स्यात् - "Wherever there is doubt,
- असौ न आत्मा - that which is doubted, is within the field of anaathmaa only"

All the doubts in the world are anaathmaa -centric.

- इति पण्डितैः ज्ञेयः - This fact has to be understood by discerning people.

Intelligent students should understand that wherever there is doubt, it can be only in the field of anaathmaa, whereas mahaa vaakyam is dealing with something other than anaathmaa.

- यतः आत्मनः संशयप्राप्तिः न - This is because, with regard to aathmaa, there can be no doubt at all,

Why? Ans: The very presence of doubt with regard to anaathmaa is because of the doubtless presence of aathmaa, which is of the very nature of awareness. This is what the Aachaaryaa also says:

- अवगतित्वतः - since aathmaa is of the very nature of chaithanyam / awareness.
'avagathi:' means chaithanyam / awareness.

Suppose a sishtyaa concedes this, but, says: "I have no doubt that there is chaithanyam; but, I have the doubt as to whether that chaithanyam is aanandha: |"

The guru asks him "Why do you have that doubt, when sruthi, the pramaanam, is revealing that chaithanyam as aanandha:?"

Suppose the sishtyaa replies "I understand that sruthi says that chaithanyam is aanandha: | But, I can accept it as a fact, only after verification,".

Then the guru asks: "How do you want to verify?"

The sishtyaa answers: "By some other pramaanam".

The guru: "But, I have already said there is no other pramaanam for verification and proof of sruthi's teachings. Therefore, do not waste your time on verification. Either accept or do not accept. Eyes tell me that the colour of a piece of cloth as 'orange'. Eyes have revealed the colour. Do you accept this or not?"

The adamant sishtyaa responds: "No. Why should I accept it? I want to verify it with some other pramaanam, say, my ears".

The guru: "But, You cannot; because, with regard to colour, eyes are the only 'source of knowledge'. Therefore you have no other option except to accept what the eyes have revealed. You cannot make attempts for verification. Similarly, when sruthi reveals that chaithanyam is aanandha:, one can never verify it. There is only one option: have sraddhaa and accept it. Attempts to verify will not be fruitful, since other pramaanam-s are not capable of either confirming or contradicting the sruthi, exactly like the incapacity of the ears or any other sense organ to confirm or contradict the 'colour' that the eyes have revealed".

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa exhorts: "Treat mahaa vaakyam, just as you treat your eyes – viz. a valid 'source of knowledge'. With regard to aathmaa, sruthi is the chakshu:, the only valid source of knowledge. Accept it".

Thus, the third misconception has been removed by Sureswaraachaaryaa. The fourth misconception is clarified in the next verse.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 38:

अननबोधकत्वं तु दूरोत्सारितमेव । यत आह ।

That the sruthi does not reveal anything at all is not even remotely possible. Therefore, it is said:

Suppose a person says: "Since I cannot verify the sruthi's messages by any other pramaanam, I do not want to accept mahaa vaakyam itself as a pramaanam. I want to reject it". Sureswaraachaaryaa objects and says that, that 'rejection' is also not possible, since what gives you knowledge cannot be rejected.

Going back to the example of the eyes being a pramaanam, what the eyes reveal cannot be verified by any other sense organs or even by science. But, would anyone consider this fact as a reason for rejecting eyes as a 'source of knowledge'? Certainly not. Eyes are accepted as pramaanam, since they are able to reveal colours and forms, even though what they reveal cannot be verified by any other pramaanam. Similarly, mahaa vaakyam gives new knowledge about the Self, which new knowledge should be accepted as facts, even though it cannot be verified or confirmed by any other pramaanam, or by other means, such as meditation. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- अननबोधकत्वं तु दूर उत्सारितं एव - "That the mahaa vaakyam does not reveal anything at all" is not even remotely possible.

"Anavabodhagathvam" means "not revealing a knowledge". "Dhoora uthsaaritham" means "is removed far away", implying the meaning "not even remotely possible".

"The idea that 'sruthi does not teach anything and is, therefore, not a pramaanam' is very strongly negated" is the import of the sentence "anavabodhkathvam thu dhoora uthsaaritham eva".

Like what? Similar to 'eyes', which are considered pramaanam, even though whatever they reveal, cannot be verified with the help of any other sense organ. Exactly like the eyes, mahaa vaakyam is also revealing new and unique knowledge, viz., about chaithanyam, which knowledge cannot be verified or contradicted by other pramaanams. Then why cannot sruthi's teachings be accepted as facts, exactly as the 'colours' and forms' revealed by the eyes are accepted as facts?

Therefore, it can never be said that sruthi is apramaanam.

Yatha: aaha – Therefore, it is said:

Chapter III: Verse 38 –

बोधेऽप्यनुभवो यस्य न कथंचन जायते ।

तं कथं बोधयेच्चास्त्रं लोष्टं नरसमाकृतिम् ॥ ३८ ॥

How can he in whom no experience arises concerning the matter on hand, be instructed by the scripture? Instead he is a figure of clay in the likeness of man.

Sureswaraacharya says: "When sruthi is talking about the ever-available Consciousness and giving information about that Consciousness, which is new knowledge about a new subject, which knowledge can never be questioned or contradicted by anyone, including modern science, and which subject is available all the time as chaithanya svaroopam, if a person is missing this, he must be a human being made up of solid clay. Not only his head is clay (as is commonly said of an unintelligent person), his whole person must be clay, because he is refusing to claim a new fact / a liberating fact".

- यस्य कथंचन :अनुभव :न जायते - If a person does not have enlightenment, which is nothing but clearly grasping the mahaa vaakyam,

'anubhava:', in this context, means 'knowledge, which is enlightenment'.

If a person does not have this 'anubhava:',

- बोधे - with regard to Consciousness,

The term 'bodhye', as printed in the book, means 'in the teaching'. Use of the term 'bodhe', in the place 'bodhye' gives a better reading. 'Bodha:' means 'chaithanyam'.

When the sruthi is talking about the ever-experienced Consciousness, how can a person work for separate experience?

Therefore, "bodhe api yasya anubhava: na jayathe" – "one who does not grasp the meaning instantaneously", must be the dullest student.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is not able to see any problem at all, in a discerning student understanding the import of the mahaa vaakyam. Therefore, he says:

- शास्त्रं कथं बोधयेत् - how can saasthraa teach
- तं - such a dull student,
- लोष्टं - who is nothing but an embodiment of clay,

'Loshta:' means 'clay'.

- नर सम आकृतिम् - which has got a human shape?

Saasthra cannot help such a student at all. Therefore, the problem is with the student and not the mahaa vaakyam.

Mahaa vaakya sravanam is one moment's job; the student will have to listen and forthwith negate the pancha kosaas, when, 'I', the Consciousness alone, will be left behind. The student still does not know the nature of that Consciousness. Upanishad tells him; it declares: "'I' am aanandha:". The student has to claim that aanandha:, which gets reflected, now and then, in empirical experience. But, the student should claim: "'I' am original aanandhaa" and walk off as "sath-chith-aanandham Brahmar". "Where is the problem in this?" wonders Sureswaraachaaryaa.

147. Chapter III, Verse 38 and 39(01-08-2009)

In this verse (no. 38) Sureswaraacharya is presenting mahaa vaakyam, which serves as a sabdha pramaanam, as 'introducing words'.

To explain: Sabdha pramaanam can be considered to be of two types. One type of sabdha pramaanam is in the form of 'introducing words', introducing something which is already experienced by the listener. The second type of sabdha pramaanam is in the form of 'describing words', where the words are describing something which is not already experienced.

Swamiji gives an example in detail, to make the above distinction clear. He says:

"For example, when I go to a student's house for bhikshaa, the student introduces several members in the family as wife, son / daughter, brother / sister etc. When he is introducing these people, his words are not really 'revealing' the people to me, because the people have already been revealed to me, by my sense organs, viz. my eyes. The words do not have to do the job of revealing the people, because even before the student employing his words, my eyes have revealed the people, all very well dressed and neatly presenting themselves. They are already people 'experienced' by me. Therefore, when the student makes the 'introduction', 'this is my brother / sister' etc., his words are not 'revealing' the individuals; but, are revealing a new status about the already experienced individuals. To repeat for emphasis and clarity:

The words are not revealing the people, which 'revealing' has already been done by my eyes; the words are revealing only the status or relationship of the people.

"Conversely, my sense organs can only reveal the people, i.e. they can reveal only their presence; they cannot reveal their status or relationship. I see a man standing in front of me; my eyes 'reveal' the man. But they do not say 'this person is the brother / son / son-in-law of the student'; the sense organs do not reveal the brother-hood etc. But they 'reveal' the person.

"In short, prathyaksha pramaanam has revealed the people; the sabdha pramaanam does not reveal the people, but, reveals the status or relationship of the people, which relationship I come to know through the words.

"And, when, thus, the words reveal brother-hood, sister-hood etc., is the knowledge that I get 'direct' knowledge or 'indirect' knowledge? The answer is: 'The knowledge is a direct knowledge, because it is talking about the status of the directly experienced people'.

"Now, if, on the other hand, the student talks of an absent brother and says 'I have a brother in America', I do not 'experience' the brother in America with my sense organs, but, I only come to know of him through my student's words.. That 'knowledge' is, therefore, 'indirect knowledge'. In this situation, the student's words are to be termed 'describing words' and not 'introducing words'.

"When the student points out to his brother standing before me and says 'this is my brother', the knowledge of the brother is 'direct'. The 'experience' of the brother is given through sense organ and the status is revealed through the words. Thus, in this example, 'introducing words' give 'direct' knowledge, as they talk about an already 'experienced' person. In contrast, the student talking of a brother in America are 'describing words', which give 'indirect' knowledge of a brother, who is in America and therefore not 'experienced' by me. 'Describing words' give only indirect knowledge and 'introducing words' give 'direct' knowledge".

Having understood the distinction between the terms 'introducing words' and 'describing words', what about the mahaa vaakyam?

Sureswaraachaarya says "mahaa vaakyam is not 'describing words'; mahaa vaakyam is 'introducing words'. Mahaa vaakyam is not describing some Brahman somewhere; if mahaa vaakyam is describing some Brahman somewhere, the mahaa vaakyam would have been 'describing words' and those 'describing words' would have given only 'indirect' knowledge. But, mahaa vaakyam is 'introducing words', giving 'direct' knowledge' ".

This gives rise to the questions: "How do you say that? Whom or what is mahaa vaakyam 'introducing' or 'giving direct knowledge' about"?

They are answered by Swamiji, as follows: "Just as the student, in the example given above, is introducing people who are already experienced by me, mahaa vaakyam is talking about the Consciousness, which is already experienced by me. I am a Conscious being and not an inert being. Even as I say 'I', I know I am a Conscious being; when I know this, the Consciousness is already experienced by me. It is this already experienced Consciousness, which is being 'introduced' by mahaa vaakyam ; and, while 'introducing' it, the mahaa vaakyam is revealing a new status of an already experienced Consciousness.

"Going back to the example, as explained already, when my student is introducing his brother, the person has already been 'experienced' by me; my student's words are revealing not the person, but, a new status. And, what is the new status? The 'brother-hood' is the new status. The sense organs did not reveal the 'brother-hood'; the sense organs only revealed a person standing in front of me.

"Similarly, in the context of the mahaa vaakyam also, Consciousness is already experienced directly (aparokshathayaa) by me, similar to the person standing in front of me being experienced by me directly. The 'introducing words' of my student revealed, not the person standing in front of me, but, only a new status of the person; and, exactly in a similar manner, the mahaa vaakyam is revealing only a new status of a known entity, viz. Consciousness and not a new entity. This aspect should be carefully understood and noted. The mahaa vaakyam reveals only the status of the already experienced Consciousness.

"And, what is that status? The answer: Brahmathvam is the new status of the ever-experienced Consciousness.

"Brahman is not a new entity. It is nothing but a new status of an already experienced Consciousness. By the word Brahman, Sruthi means: 'the Consciousness which is experienced in the body, is not part of the body nor a property of the body nor a product of the body; this ever experienced Consciousness is free from all types of limitations'; i.e., the word Brahman is revealing the limitless status of the already experienced Consciousness.

"When this revelation is made by a reliable mahaa vaakyam, what stops me from 'understanding' it? When (in the example) my student says 'this is my brother', I straightaway receive it as a 'knowledge'; the person is already experienced; the 'experienced' person's status is revealed by the reliable student. Therefore, I get the 'direct knowledge' of the brother, derived from the 'introducing words', coming from a reliable source of knowledge, viz., my student. Similarly, mahaa vaakyam does not reveal a new entity called Brahman; it is revealing a new status about bodha., the already experienced Consciousness.

"To repeat: Sruthi is not revealing the Consciousness, because Consciousness is already 'revealed' / 'experienced'; it is something with which I am already 'familiar'. Then, what is sruthi revealing? Sruthi is revealing only a status about that Consciousness, which status is not known to me. What is that status? The answer: Brahman status. 'Brahman' means 'not limited by time; not limited by space; not limited by property'. It means 'desa parichedhaa is not there; kaalaparichedhaa is not there; attribute- paricchedhaa is not there.

"That time-less, space-less, attribute-less status of the already available Consciousness is revealed by a reliable mahaa vaakyam , which is, in fact, many times more reliable than ordinary mortals. Even my student may not have been wholly accurate in presenting his 'brother' to me, because, in Tamil Nadu, the word 'brother' is used very loosely. The word is used for a 'direct' brother and, quite often, for a 'cousin' also, showing that words locally used may be vague. But, mahaa vaakyam is 'nirdhushta aparoksha saasthra pramaanam', coming from Bhagavaan Himself. Therefore, the knowledge generated by the mahaa vaakyam should be 'direct' knowledge and not indirect knowledge. Just as the 'introducing words' of my student (in the example) give a 'direct knowledge' of his brother, whom I had perceived already with my sense organs, 'aham Brahma asmi jnaanam', which I get from the mahaa vaakyam, has to be 'direct' knowledge only, since I have already experienced Consciousness directly".

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- यस्य कथंचनः अनुभवः न जायते - If a person does not have enlightenment, which is nothing but clearly grasping the mahaa vaakyam,
- बोधे - with regard to Consciousness,
- शास्त्रं कथं बोधयेत् - how can saasthraa teach
- तं - such a dull student,
- लोष्टं - who is nothing but an embodiment of clay,
- नर सम आकृतिम् - which has got a human shape?

If the introducing words called mahaa vaakyam does not give aproksha jnaanam of the Brahman status of the ever experienced Consciousness to a student, that student must be an extraordinary student like a wax or a clay model. He cannot be a sentient person.

With this rather strong remark, Sureswaraachaaryaa concludes his arguments to prove that there is no obstacle at all to mahaa vaakyam generating aparoksha jnaanam. He established that all the four possible obstacles mentioned in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 35 are absent, in the context of mahaa vaakyam, which mahaa vaakyam (1) does give a message (2) gives a new message (3) gives a clear message and (4) gives an unchallenged message.

Because of these four criteria, mahaa vaakyam is a pramaanam. In Sanskrit, this is popularly known as anadhigatha, abhaadhitha, asandhigdha jnaana janakam pramaanam.

When the student appreciates this pramaanam status of the mahaa vaakyam, he is said to have sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam. And, when he has got sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam, the knowledge that he derives from mahaa vaakyam, i.e. the knowledge that he derives with *sraddhaa, is itself called 'realization' or 'enlightenment'. Knowledge + sraddhaa is 'enlightenment'.

When sraddhaa is present, 'knowledge' and 'enlightenment' are synonymous; 'knowledge' and 'realization' are synonymous; 'knowledge' and 'saakshaathkaaraa' are synonymous. 'knowledge' and 'aparoksha jnaanam' are synonymous; 'knowledge' and 'Brahma anubhavaa' are synonymous.

Conversely, when sraddhaa is absent, 'knowledge' and 'enlightenment' become different; 'knowledge' and 'realization' become different; 'knowledge' and 'saakshaathkaaraa' become different; 'knowledge' and 'aparoksha jnaanam' become different; 'knowledge' and 'Brahma anubhavaa' become different.

Thus, one's perception of the 'sameness' or 'difference' between 'knowledge' and 'realization' is caused by sraddhaa only. The presence of sraddhaa makes them synonymous or identical; absence of sraddhaa makes them different. The 'difference' is not caused by the absence of a mystic experience or by the absence of meditation or by the absence of samaadhi.

Sraddhaa is thus crucial in mahaa vaakya vicharaa.

Sureswaraacharya feels that since he had removed all possible obstacles to sraddhaa, there is no reason for anybody to lack sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam and wonders: "When there is no reason for losing sraddhaa, why can't you have that sraddhaa?"

He further points out: "When sraddhaa is there, you will not make the mistake of complaining 'I have only 'knowledge'; but, no 'realization'; instead, you will confidently say 'I have aparoksha jnaanam. I have no hesitation in claiming I am a jnaan'. When there is thus no hesitation in accepting the message that 'knowledge' and 'realization' are identical, as a fact, you will move to binary format without any hindrance. There is no snag at all".

After all, sraddhaa in 'veda vaakyam as pramaanam' is not a new thing for us; because, even the 'triangular format' that we are currently following, is based only on sraddhaa in 'veda vaakyam as pramaanam'. The most crucial component/ powerful entity in the triangular format of 'jeeva-jagath-Iswara', is Iswara. Based on what pramaanam, do we accept Iswara as a fact? Obviously not on prathyaksha pramaanam, because we do not see Iswara in physical form, anywhere around. Prathyaksha pramaana does not reveal Iswara; anumaanam does not; logic does not; science has never revealed Iswara. (The consolation is that science or any other pramaanam has not disproved and cannot also disprove Iswara.) Iswara is never proved by any pramaanam, other than saasthraas.

When Iswara is not thus 'proved' by any pramaanam other than Veda, how do we adhere to the triangular format, accepting Iswara as a fact? Are we not taking an 'un-proved' Iswara as a fact, based on only Veda Pramaanam, though such acceptance may be considered unscientific or non-rational? We are rooted firmly in triangular format; we are already implementing the triangular format; we are benefitting also from the triangular format.

If we have thus got sufficient sraddhaa in Veda Pramaanam, to accept an 'unproved' Iswara as a fact, and can implement triangular format, both the 'acceptance' and the 'implementation' based only on Veda Pramaanam / Veda poorva pramaanam, what stops us from moving to the 'binary' format, which is also equally based on Veda pramaanam / Veda antha pramaanam? If Veda is reliable for triangular format, the same Veda can be relied upon for the binary format also. Conversely, if Veda is not reliable for binary format, the same Veda cannot be relied upon for the triangular format also.

In other words, if we do not have sraddhaa in Veda, neither the triangular format of 'jeeva-jagath-Iswara' nor the Vedhaanthic 'aathma-anaathma' binary format can be accepted and implemented. We would have to go to the binary format of the rational people. The naasthika also has got a binary format. His format is 'jeeva' and 'jagath'. By coming to the Vedas, we, the aasthika-s have added an Iswara to the naasthika's binary format. Is not this 'addition' of Iswara purely based only on Veda pramaanam? Thus, if from naasthika's binary format, we came to Veda Poorva's triangular format, why should we not move to Veda Antha's binary format of aathma and anaathmaa?

Sureswaraacharya says: "You already have sraddhaa in Veda. What is the proof? To solve your problems, you 'run' to God, Who is proved only by Veda. If God can be relied on, because of Veda Poorva sraddhaa, 'aham brahma asmi' can also be implemented through Veda antha sraddhaa / mahaa vaakya sraddhaa".

This portion of the treatise, from verse 35 to verse 38, talks of the need for sraddhaa in binary format, similar to the sraddhaa in triangular format. The Aacharya avers: "If triangular format can bless, binary format also can bless, in fact, even better than triangular format".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 39:

अन्वयव्यतिरेकपुरस्सरं वाक्यमेवावाक्यार्थरूपमात्मानं प्रतिपादयतीत्यस्य पक्षस्य द्रढिम्ने श्रुत्युदाहरणमुपन्यस्यति

I

In support of the position that the Vedhaanthic proposition itself, coming after discrimination between the Self and non-Self, reveals the Self, which transcends the primary import of the proposition, the authority of the sruthi is added:

So, we saw that mahaa vaakyam is 'introducing words'. It does not reveal a new entity; but, it reveals a new status of an already known/ experienced entity. What status? Answer: 'Brahman status'. What is the already known/ experienced entity? Answer: 'Consciousness', which is very much there in the physical body itself.

(In a lighter vein): What is the proof for Consciousness being in the body? Answer: The very fact that the body has not been taken for cremation indicates that the body is a sentient, live and Conscious entity.

So, Consciousness is an evident fact. With regard to this evident fact / the available entity, Brahman status is revealed.

Therefore, what is the message of mahaa vaakyam? Answer: "aparoksha chaithanyam Brahma asthi". 'Aparoksha chaithanyam' is otherwise called 'Pragnyaanam'. This "Pragnyaanam Brahma" is the Rig veda mahaa vaakyam, occurring in Eithreya Upanishad.

The intimately available Consciousness has got Brahman status. And, Sureswaraacharya says: "But, this conviction alone viz., 'Pragnyaanam Brahma' is not sufficient to liberate the seeker; the seeker has to be further convinced that, "that Pragnyaanam is 'I' ".

Therefore, what the Upanishads do, is, to train the seeker to use the word 'I' for 'Consciousness', by employing 'anvaya vyathirekhaa' methods, one type of which is the 'avasthaathraya viveka' method. Using such methods, Sruthi trains the seeker to use the word 'I', for Consciousness. 'Anvaya vyathirkha' is a training ground, by which the seeker practices using the word 'aham' for the Consciousness.

In the 'avasthaathraya viveka anvaya vyathirekha' method, the seeker regularly practices saying "'I', the Consciousness, am common to all the three avasthaas. 'I' employ the physical body medium / the 'waker's' body medium for jaagrath anubhavaa. 'I' use dream body medium for svapna anubhavaa. 'I' use kaarana sareeram medium for sushupthi anubhavaa. The mediums change; the avasthaas change. Mediums are variable; avasthas are variable. Mediums are vyathirekha; avasthaas are vyathirekhaa. But, 'I' am the changeless / non-variable / anvaya Consciousness. 'I' 'push off' the body; 'I' 'push off' the mind; and practice claiming 'Pragnyaanam saakshi 'I' am".

When does the seeker do this? Answer: Before going to mahaa vaakyam, the seeker practices equating Consciousness with 'I' / pragnyaanam with aham. By anvaya vyathirekhaa method, the seeker practices this equation, before going to mahaa vaakyam. Thereafter, when the seeker goes to mahaa vaakyam, the mahaa vaakyam reveals the new status of Pragnyaanam, viz., Brahman. The seeker has already practiced "pragnyaanam aham asmi". Now, when mahaa vaakyam reveals the new status of Consciousness and says "Pragnyaanam Brahma", instantaneously, the seeker replaces 'Pragnyaanam' by 'aham' and claims "aham Brahma asmi".

Therefore, training the mind to use the word 'aham' for Consciousness, using 'anvaya vyathirekha' is an important preliminary exercise.

And, Sureswaraacharya says "sruthi itself gives this basic training of equating aham and pragnyaanam; sruthi itself does the later job of equating pragnyaanam and Brahman also".

Reverting to the text:

- अन्वयव्यतिरेकपुरस्सरं - "After initially discriminating between the Self and non-Self, by anvaya vyathirekha logic,

'Purassaram' means 'initially'.

Initially, the sruthi itself does the anvaya vyathirekha or avasthaathraya viveka, to equate aham and pragnyaanam, otherwise called saakshi. Sruthi first equates 'I' and the Consciousness, which is already experienced.

And, thereafter:

- वाक्यं एव - the mahaa vaakyam itself,

What does the mahaa vaakyam do in the second stage?

- आत्मानं प्रतिपादयति - reveals that 'pragnyaanam-aham' / reveals the new status of that 'pragnyaanam-aham',

As what?

- अवाक्यार्थरूपं - as the absolute Brahman"

'Avaakyartharoopam' is a technical word, which has been discussed and explained in detail earlier. 'Avaakyartham' means 'absolute Brahman status'.

- इति अस्य पक्षस्य द्रढिम्ने - To reinforce this statement / position / viewpoint,

The approach of the sruthi is to first equate 'I' and 'saakshI' and then to equate 'saakshI' and 'BrahmarI'. First equation is accomplished through anvaya vyathirekhaa and the second step is accomplished through mahaa vaakyam.

To reinforce / confirm / consolidate / corroborate / substantiate this view:

- श्रुत्युदाहरणं उपन्यस्यति - the author gives various Upanishadic quotations .

'Udhaaharanam' means 'quotations'; 'Sruthyudaaharanam' means 'sruthi vaakyaanI'. 'upansyathI' mean 'the author is presenting'.

Why does Sureswaraacharya present sruthi vaakyaani to reinforce the statement made above? Answer: He wants to emphasize: "This is not my message".

If Sureswaraacharya says "This is my view", his opponents will ask for prathyaksha pramaanam or anumaana pramaanam in support of his view. Sureswaraacharya will be in trouble, because prathyaksham / anumaanam / modern science etc. cannot prove his statement. They cannot even prove that Consciousness is an independent entity. If Sureswaraacharya stands alone, modern science will challenge him; therefore, the Aacharya points out that his teaching is based on sruthi pramaanam. "Naishaa tharkena mathiraapaneya" – "This knowledge cannot be attained by reasoning" declares Katopanishad (I .ii.9).

At this juncture, Swamiji gives an example of an experience he had.

He says:

"I had a visitor who told me 'Swamiji! I have no problem in accepting God. But, I have difficulty in accepting existence of other lokaas, such as svarga, narakaa etc. I have difficulty in accepting the karma theory of punyam and paapam. I have difficulty in accepting rebirth etc. I am a rationalist / a scientist. And, by what is known as 'random theory' in scientific circles, I can explain all these phenomena satisfactorily. I am not able to see any scientific proof in support of any of these religious theories. I am told that you teach Vedhaanthaa

'scientifically'. Is there any scientific evidence for karma theory, punar janma, paraloka etc.? I have not seen any proof so far. Can I have any satisfactory proof from you?'

"I replied: 'You say that you have belief in God. Can you give me a scientific proof for God? If you do, I can disprove your 'proof' of God also, by another scientific theory. Even creation can be explained by random theory, without requiring the need for a God.'

"My visitor was perplexed with my reply. He least expected me, a Swamiji, to talk about a scientific theory disproving the existence of God. In confusion, he said 'Swamiji! Let me think about it and come back'; and he never did".

Swamiji continues:

"A large number of people are partly rational like this visitor of mine. They accept God; but reject rituals. But, 'negating rituals and accepting God' is partial rationalism. It is not very different from the so-called rationalism of certain current organizations in Tamil Nadu, who criticize temples and idols ; but, unabashedly, garland the statues of their deceased leaders and even wave camphor in front of the 'inert matter' that the statues are.

"Therefore, let it be clear that every religious theory, right from 'existence of God' / the triangular format, is based on saasthraa only. Acceptance of God is based only on saasthra pramaanam. Similarly all the other beliefs like karma theory, punar janma etc., also have to be accepted based on saasthra pramanaam only. Any logic that is used is not 'proving' logic but 'supporting' logic."

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "sruthi udaaharanam upansyathi" – "the author presents sruthi vaakyaani, as authority".

For what purpose? "Dhradimne" – "for reinforcing / endorsement /validation".

'Dhradam' means 'firm'. 'Dhradima' is the abstract noun meaning 'firmness'.

Hereafter, the Aachaaryaa gives several sruthi quotations, to show the first stage, viz., 'equating aham and Pragnyaanam (Consciousness) '; and, the second stage, viz., 'equating 'Pragnyaanam and Brahmar'.

aham = Pragnyaanam; Pragnyaanam = Brahman ; therefore, 'aham Brahma asmi'.

Verse 39 – Chapter III:

जिघ्राणीममहं गन्धमिति यो वेत्त्यविक्रियः ।

य आत्मा तत्परं ज्योतिः शिरसीदं वचः श्रुतेः ॥ ३९ ॥

The head of the sruthi has this statement: 'He who cognizes the ego experiencing "I smell this smell" and is unchanging, is the Self, and he is the supreme light.

Now, in this portion. we get several references to the Upanishads. Most of the references are taken from Chaandoghya Upanishad and Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, which, unfortunately, are the least familiar Upanishads. The other Upanishads are smaller in size and content and easier to remember also. Chaandoghya Upanishad Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad are large/ voluminous. But, Sureswaraachaaryaa quotes mostly from them.

Therefore, if the student desires to get the full impact, he will have to go back to the Upanishadic portions and repeatedly read those manthraas. And, that is the reason why Nithya Upanishad Paaraayanam is recommended for a serious Vedhaanthic student.

Traditional Vedhaanthic Aachaaryaas advise a Vedhaanthic student to gradually replace Saguna Isvara Sthothra Paaraayanam like Vishnu Sahasranaama Paaraayanam, by Geetha Paaraayanam, Upanishadic Paaraayanam and even (Brahma Soothra) Bhaashya Paaraayanam. If Saguna Isvara Sthothra Paaraayanam-s are reduced, a seeker need not feel guilty or disturbed by fear of 'punishments' by Isvara. Geetha and Upanishads are also saasthraa-s only, talking about Bhagavaan only – the 'Paraa Prakruthi Bhagavaan', while Sahasranaamam-s talk about 'Aparaa Prakruthi Bhagavaan'.

Therefore, without any sense of guilt, Vedhaanthic students can and should take to Upanishad Paaraayanam. And, when they do so, they will find anvaya vyathirekhaa being talked about in different contexts.

Prajapathi Vidhya (Chapter VIII of Chaandoghya Upanishad) talks about akshi purusha:, svapana purusha:, suptha purusha: and utthama purusha: | Consciousness in jaagrath avasthaa is called akshi purusha: | Consciousness in dream is called svapna purusha: | Consciousness in sleep is called suptha purusha: | And, the Consciousness separated from all the three is called utthama purusha: | Utthama Purushaa is non-variable; the avasthaas are variable. Thus, 'Indira prajaapathi samvaadha roopena' – 'through a discussion between Indira and Prajaapathi, 'avasthaathraya saakshi' is beautifully brought out.

Similarly, in 'Svayamjothi Brahmanam' of Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad 'Janaka Yagnyavalkyq samvaadha roopena' – 'through a discussion between King Janakaa and Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa', 'avasthaathraya saakshi' is talked about.

Sureswaraacharya advises the seeker: "Read and re-read such portions. The teaching will become more and more alive".

148. Chapter III, Verse 39 and 40 (08-08-2009)

In the introduction to this sloka (no. 39), Sureswaraachaaryaa said "asya pakshasya dhradimne sruthyudaaharanam upanyasyathi" |

The word 'dhradimne' means 'for confirmation'. 'Udaaharanam' means 'citations' or 'quotations'.

The statement "asya pakshasya dhradimne sruthyudaaharanam upanyasyathi", therefore, means : "For confirmation of the teaching that he has given till now, the author gives citations from sruthi", indicating that the Aachaaryaa wants to draw support for his teaching, from the Upanishads.

In keeping with this statement, Sureswaraachaaryaa presents a number of Upanishadic quotations in the following verses. As was mentioned in the earlier session, Sureswaraachaaryaa is drawing the quotations mainly from the Chaandoghya and Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishads. Naturally, if the student is familiar with those two Upanishads, the student can get the full impact of the quotations. One of the methods to familiarize oneself with Upanishads is to resort to regular Paaraayanam of the Upanishads. The Vedhaanthic student can do more of Githa and Upanishad Paaraayanam-s, even if, in the process, Saguna Isvara paaraayanam-s have to be reduced, since Githa and Upanishads also talk of Bhagavaan's glory alone.

If and when a Vedhaanthic student wants to follow this advice and desires to do Paaraayanam of Chaandoghya or Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, since the two Upanishads are voluminous, the student might wonder how he could do the Paaraayanam of the entire texts. The answer is that the entire texts need not be done , but, paaraayanam of selected portions would be sufficient.

In the Chaandoghya Upanishad, the portions to be chanted, can be limited to the last three chapters (6, 7 and 8), which are the Vedhaanthic chapters. Chapter 6 is the famous 'thathvamas' chapter called 'Sadh Vidhyaa'. The seventh chapter is called Bhooma Vidhya and the eighth chapter is called Prajapaathi Vidhyaa. As for the Brahadhaaranyak Upanishad, three whole chapters are extremely important for a Vedhaanthic student – the 2nd, 3rd and 4th. And, in addition, in the 1st Chapter, the fourth section called 'Purusha Vidha Brahmanam' is also important.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is heavily borrowing from the 'Prajaapathi Vidhya', the 8th chapter of Chaandoghya Upanishad and from the 'Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam' of the fourth chapter of Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad. And, in both these Chaandoghya and Brahadhaaranyaka portions, the Aachaaryaa is taking the 'avasthaathraya vivekaad' topic, which consists of 'the analysis of the three states of experience', in order to identify the non-variable part in the individual.

'Avasthaathraya vivekaad' is one type of 'anvaya vyathirekhaad'. 'Avasthaathraya vivekaad' is the analysis of the three states of experience, with the intention to find out the 'non-variable' in 'me' and the variables in 'me'. The non-variable is called 'anvayaad' and the variable part is called 'vyathirekhaad'. Through this analysis, done diligently, the seeker will arrive at the only non-variable, which is "'I' am".

This "'I' am" portion alone is the non-variable part of 'me' in all the three avasthaas. Everything else is variable. The physical body is variable. During jaagarth avasthaa I use one body and in svapna avasthaa I use another body. Even the mind is variable. The student finds that bodies are variable, minds are variable and attributes are variable.

And, in the only non-variable part "'I' am", 'I' means 'Consciousness' and 'am' means 'Existence'. "'I' am" = chith sath; in other words, 'sath-chith' is 'my' non variable essence. Everything else is variable – bodies, minds, attributes, and of course, relationships such as father, mother, wife, husband etc.

After thus arriving at the non-variable 'I', through avasthaathraya vivekaa, the student analyses as to what 'relationship' all these variable attributes have got with 'me'. Expressed conversely, he analyses what relationship 'I' have with all the variable attributes like father-hood, mother-hood, husband-hood etc., raagha dveshaa, kaaama krodhaa etc., punya paapam etc.

When I claim that they are my 'own' attributes i.e. when I look upon them as my 'own' attributes, I am called ahamkaaraa. But, when I realize, through diligent enquiry, that they are not my 'own' attributes; but, are only attributes of my body or mind / i.e. once I shift the perception of attributes, from 'own' attributes to 'known' attributes, they do not belong to me anymore and, 'I' am called the saakshi non-variable.

Thus, the three stages of avasthaathraya vivekaa are :

Stage no. 1: "'I' am" is the non-variable component; attributes are variable .

Stage no. 2: The variable attributes are my 'own' attributes; at this stage, I am called ahamkaaraa and Stage no. 3: The variable attributes are not my 'own' but are only 'known' attributes; at this stage, I have arrived at non-variable saakshi.

Non-variable "I am" is the first step; non-variable ahamkaaraa is the second step; non-variable saakshi is the third step. In these three steps, the student has come to "I am the non-variable Saakshi". With this, the anvaya vyathirekhaa part of the study is over. After the successful completion of the anvaya vyathirekhaa part, the student is ready for the mahaa vaakyam part, whose essence is "the saakshi 'I', am the Brahman, the all-pervading Existence-Consciousness principle".

Sureswaraacharya says that this is the route map that a student finds in all the Upanishads, namely, "With the anvaya vyathirekhaa logic, arrive at the saakshi ; then, through mahaa vaakyaa 'merge' into Brahman". (The word 'merge' is not used in the literal sense, but only denotes the need for realization or recognition of the fact that 'I' am already Brahman). These steps of teaching are found in all the Upanishads, including Chaandoghyaa.

And, in the Chaandhoghyaa, Sureswaraacharya takes up for study and support, the 7th to 12th sections, of the 8th chapter, 'Prajaapathy Vidhyaa'. The Aachaaryaa is taking several references from these sections.

Therefore, as mentioned earlier, to get the full impact of the teaching in this portion, the student will have to study these Upanishadic sections repeatedly. The Aachaaryaa gives numerous Upanishadic quotations, in this portion.

In the first line of the verse 39, the Aachaaryaa talks of manthraa 8.12.4 of Chandoghyaa. What does the Upanishad say in this manthraa? The Upanishad says "the saakshi Consciousness 'changelessly' (i.e. without itself undergoing any change) reveals the thriputi in every experience". And, the Upanishad refers to a particular experience, as a sample. And, what is that experience? Ans : "I am smelling this fragrance" - "Aham imam gandham jigraan".

'Jighraan' means 'smeller'; 'imam gandham' means 'this fragrance'.

In this single experience of 'smelling', there are three factors – the 'knower', the 'known' and the 'knowledge'; or the 'smeller', the 'smelled' and the 'smell- cognition' or 'smell-experience'.

The Aachaaryaa starts verse 39 with this statement: "Jighraani aham imam gandham" - "I am smelling this particular fragrance".

The 'smeller' is the mind. Mind is the pramaathaa, because, the mind alone contacts the smell outside. Therefore, pramaathaa, the subject, is the mind ; prameyam, the object, is gandhaa, the smell. The 'cognition' or 'experience' is the 'smell thought' or 'ghraana vrutthi.' | Thus, during the 'experience' or 'cognition' in the jaagrath avasthaa, these three, viz., the mind, the object and the thought / pramaathaa, prameyam and pramithhi: , come together and stay together.

And, during the deep sleep state, the mind has revolved i.e. the pramaathaa is not there; the thought also is resolved; the knowledge is not there; the smell / the world also has resolved for the sleeper.

To repeat briefly: in jaagrath avasthaa, mind, thought and object come together giving the experience; in sushupthi avasthaa, mind, thought and object resolve together simultaneously, resolving the 'experience' also.

Now, this Chaandoghya manthraa further says "all these three, viz., the mind, the thought and the fragrance, are inert in nature". Mind is inert matter; thought is also inert matter and of course the smell or the fragrance is also inert. All these three inert objects are together revealed by the Consciousness principle, which is other than the pramaathaa, the prameyam and the pramithhi: / ahamkaaraa, vishayaa and vrutthi. That is what is said in the Kaivalya Upanishad also, in a splendid manthraa : "Thrishu dhaamasu yadboghyam bokthaa boghascha yadh bhaveth thebhyo vilakshana: saakshee chinmaathroham sadhaasiva." – "I am distinct from all those which are the subject of experience, object of experience and the instrument of experience, in all the three states. I am the witness, which is pure Consciousness and which is ever auspicious".

In the various avasthaa-s, the thriputi rises and the thriputi falls and 'I' am the changeless revealer of the thriputi. That is the idea presented here also.

- यः - He, who
- वेत्ति - reveals
- अविक्रियः - changelessly,

The 'revealing' is not an action done by 'me'; without doing any action, by 'my' mere presence, 'I' reveal. The term 'avikriya:' conveys this 'saannithya maathrena'.

- अहं"इमं गन्धं जिघ्राणिइति " - that 'the pramaathaa ahamkaara: is the 'smeller' of this particular fragrance',

In the statement "I am smelling this particular fragrance", thriputi is there. The pramaathaa, the subject, is 'aham', which refers to the 'ahamkaaraa' and not to the 'saakshi', since it is the mind or ahamkaaraa, which is the 'smeller' or the 'jighraani'.

The mind is smelling. How does it do that? By having a thought, which is associated with an object. How does the thought get associated? By travelling through the nose, 'as it were'.

Part of the 4th verse of Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram runs : "Naanaachchidhra ghatodharasthitha mahaadeepaprabhaa bhaasvaram chakshuraadhikaranadvaaraa bahi: spandhathe" – "The bright light of a great lamp placed in a jar having many holes, flashes outside through eyes and other sense organs".

The thought from the mind, travelling through the nose, 'as it were', contacts the smell. Thus, 'mind' is the subject; 'thought' is the knowledge; 'smell' or 'fragrance' is the object.

When it is said "I smell this fragrance", the thriputi consisting of (i) ahamkaaraa, the subject, (ii) the 'fragrance, the object and (iii) experience or cognition viz., 'smelling', gets 'revealed' .

Ahamkaaraa, the mind does not have a sentiency of its own. Then, who lends it the sentiency? Ans: 'I', the saakshi, bless the mind with Consciousness ; and, through the mind, 'I' bless the thought with Consciousness and through the thought, 'I' bless the fragrance with Consciousness. To repeat: The saakshi blesses the mind directly ; through the mind, it blesses the thought; and through the thought, it blesses the object. Thus the mind , the thought and the fragrance are all simultaneously blessed with sentiency, by 'I', the saakshi or, in other words, revealed by the saakshi.

- स :आत्मा - he is the real Self.
- तत्परं ज्योतिः - This aathmaa, the real Self, is nothing but Param Brahman.

This statement of the Aachaaryaa is akin to mahaa vaakyam.

The term 'param jyothi:', is borrowed from the Chaandoghya Manthraa 8.12.3 - "Evamevaisha samprasaadha: asmaachchareeraath samutthaaya param jyothi: upasampadhya svena roopena abhinishpadhyathe sa utthama: purusha:" – "In this very way, this tranquil one (the individual soul) becomes established in his own nature after rising up from this body and reaching the supreme Light. He is the supreme Person”.

Incidentally, Lord Krishna also borrows the term 'utthama: purusha:', appearing in this manthraa, in the 15th chapter of the Bhagavadh Githa.

In this Chaandoghya manthraa, 'utthama: purusha:' is equated to 'param jyothi:'| This Chaandoghya manthraa is a fantastic manthraa, which is analyzed in the Brahmasoothraas, by Vyaasaachaaryaa, in several soothraas.

Reverting to the text, 'thath param jyothi:' means 'That 'I', the chith, am the sath'. This sath-chith equation is always important, because, even if advanced enough to look upon oneself as saakshi, one might tend to think "'I' am a localized entity; the whole world is an object 'outside' and 'I' am the saakshi'inside'

This 'inside-outside' duality is permissible in the initial stages of looking at oneself as the saakshi. In Ramana Maharishis Sad-dharsanam, there is a verse (no. 30) running "koopē yathaa ghaadajale thatha antharnimajya buddhyaa sithayaa nithaantham praanam cha vaacham cha niyamyā chinvan vidhen nija ahamkruthimoolaroopam" - meaning "just as a person goes inside a deep well and recovers an object that has fallen in, you have to dive 'inside' and claim 'saakshi'".

These two terms, 'diving in' and 'claiming saakshi', might make the aspirant close his eyes to claim his 'saakshi' status, since he thinks "'I' am inside".

But, it is important to remember, that an aspirant has to, ultimately get out of this orientation. He has to finally reach the conviction: "'I', the chith, is none other than sath, the Existence principle. Therefore, the saakshi is not only within, but is everywhere , in the form of Existence". Verse 3 of Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram declares: "yasyaiva spuranam sadhaathmakam asath kalpaarthakam bhasathe" - "He, whose manifestations – which are themselves nothing but the Reality, appear as the objects of the world". Therefore, to appreciate 'Me', one need not close one's eyes . To borrow terms from Bhagavadh Githa "Pasyan srnvan sprusan jigran api" (Ch. V – Verse 8) – "Even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling etc.", "sarvaboothastham aathmaanam eekshathe" (Ch. VI – verse 29) - "the jnaani perceives, that 'I' am present everywhere- in all the beings".

In the initial stage, 'closing the eyes' (to claim saakshi status) is not wrong; but, ultimately the aspirant does not have to close his eyes, because "'I' am the sath chith ekaathmaa, which is everywhere". In fact, as the Kaivalya Upanishad declares "Mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham" (manthraa 19)- "Everything is born in 'me' alone; everything is based in 'me' alone".

A Vedhaanthin never closes his eyes to appreciate aathmaa. A yogi may do it, because, for the yogi, purushaa and prakruthi are different and the yogi wants to escape from prakruthi. For a Vedhaanthin, 'inside' and 'outside', "'I' am Param jyoyji:", 'param jyothi:' meaning 'sadhaathmaa'.

Reverting to the text,

- इदं वचः - This teaching (viz., 'I' am everywhere / 'I' am the whole)
- श्रुते शिरसि - (is given) in the head of the Vedas.

What is the head of the Vedas? 'Vedic head' means Vedhaanthaa. The statement, therefore, means, "In the Upanishads, the teaching is "I' am the whole".

Therefore, what is mokshaa? It is not 'escaping from the world, never to come back again'. Mokshaa is 'the understanding that the world is an entertainment, provided free for me'. This is the teaching of the Sruthis.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 40:

यथा "तत्सत्यं स आत्मा तत्त्वमसि" इत्यस्य शेषत्वेनान्वयव्यतिरेकश्रुतिः यथा "य एषोऽक्षिणि पुरुषो दृश्यते" इत्याध्या "अथ यो वेदेदं जिघ्राणि" इत्यन्ता तथा "असं ब्रह्मास्मि" इत्यस्य शेषः।

Just as the passage beginning with 'He, the purushaa seen in the right eye' (Chaandhogya Upanishad VIII.vii.4) and ending with 'I am smelling' (Chaandhogya Upanishad VIII.xii.4) is preliminary and subsidiary to the text 'That is real, He is the Self and thou art That' (Chaandhogya Upanishad VI.viii.7), even so, the text 'I am Brahman' has the following subsidiary passage:

In the Chaandhogya Upanishad itself, we find both the anvayavyathirekha step of teaching, as well as the mahaa vaakyam step of teaching.

What is the mahaa vaakyam part of teaching? Sureswaraachaaryaa quotes from VII.viii.7 of the Chaandhogya Upanishad:

- तत्सत्यं"स आत्मा तत्त्वमसि" - "That is the Reality, He is the Self and thou art That".

As is well known, this manthraa is repeated several times in this Chapter VII, in sections 'vii' to 'xv', as "thath sathyam sa aathmaa thathvamasi svethaketho", as the mahaa vaakyam, the main teaching of the Chaandhogya Upanishad.

- अस्य शेषत्वेन - As a part of this teaching,
- अन्वयव्यतिरेकश्रुति : - anvaya vyathirekhaa teaching (is also given).

Seshathvena means 'as a part of' 'Sruthi:', in this context, means 'teaching'.

And, why is that required? When the teacher says "you are Brahmar", the student, of course, should have sufficient intelligence and also knowledge of grammar, to convert the second person noun to the first person noun and change the verb also and say "'I' am Brahmar" and not repeat to the teacher "you are Brahmar".

And, when he thus says "'I' am Brahmar", that 'I' should be taken as saakshi and not ahamkaaraa. Otherwise, when the teacher says "You are aananda:", the student will not be convinced. He will wonder "I have numerous problems, troubling my mind all the time; how can the teacher say that I am aanandha:" Therefore, the student should have already gone through and successfully completed the anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise. Only then, the student will use the word 'I', as non-variable saakshi and not as non-variable ahamkaaraa.

Only on this consideration, that 'anvaya vyathirekhaa' teaching should go as preliminary to 'thathvamas' teaching, the anvaya vyathirekha method has been in-built in the Upanishadic teachings.

An example can be given from a mundane experience, to explain the importance of anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise : " Suppose a thirsty person buys a bottle of coco-cola. He has the bottle in hand. But, the bottle alone will not give him the benefits of 'drinking' and 'quenching his thirst'. He would require a 'bottle opener'. He will not get the benefit from the bottle, if a bottle- opener is not readily available. Mahaavaakyam can be likened to the bottle of coco-cola and anvaya vyathirkhaa to the opener. With anvaya vyathirekhaa opener, the seeker can open the bottle of mahaa vaakyam and drink moksha aanandhaa".

Therefore, the mahaa vaakyam and anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise always go together as sesha - seshi. Mahaa vaakyam is 'seshi' and anvaya vyathirekhaa is 'seshaa'. Bottle is 'seshi' and the opener is 'seshaa'.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "seshathvena anvaya vyathirekha sruthi: "What is that anvaya vyathirekha? It is avasthaathraya viveka: |

And, where do you find that? Sureswaraachaaryaa answers:

"य एष :अक्षिणि पुरुष " दृश्यते :इत्याध्या - Beginning with "He, the purushaa, seen in the right eye" (VIII.vii.4)

अथ"यो वेदेदं जिघ्राणिइत्यन्ता " - and ending with "I am smelling" (VIII.xii. 4)".

The contents of these six sections from 'XIII.vii. 4' to 'XIII.xii. 4' are on avasthaathraya viveka: /

Here, 'I' am given four names:

'I' am called 'viswa', when I am illumining jaagrath avasthaa.

'I' am called 'thyjasaa', when 'I' am revealing svapna avasthaa.

'I' am called 'praagnyaa' when I am revealing sushupthi avasthaa .

'I' am called 'saakshI', the 'thureeyam', from the standpoint of 'my'self.

Thus, viswa is talked about; thyjasaa is talked about; praagnyaa is talked about. But, these three are only 'my' incidental names, when 'I' am functioning in jaagrath avasthaa, in svapna avasthaa and in sushupthi avasthaa respectively. But, 'I', from 'my' own standpoint, am 'saakshI' different from all of them. Not only that; 'I' am free from the punyams and paapams, which come in the avasthaas.

'I' do not have any punyam or paapam ; 'I' am 'punya papa rahitha chaithanyam'.

Thus, in four stages, viswa, thyjasaa, praagnyaa and thureeyam are taught. Viswa is called akshi purusha: | Thyjasaa is called svapna purusha: | Praagnyaa is called suptha purusha: | Thureeya is called utthama purusha: |

To recollect this episode (Prajaapathy Vidhyaa) from Chaandoghya Upanishad:

Indira and Virochana, kings of the Devas and Asuraas respectively, come to Prajaapathy as students. As customary, they do service (seva) to Prajaapathy for 32 years. Guru Prajaapathy then gives them his first teaching, as "you are the 'waker' individual". Virochana is very, very happy with the teaching; he goes away, never to return; and, he teaches this misconception to other asuraas also. That is why, all of them have got deha abhimaanaa, as 'waker' 'I'.

But, Indira, after thinking over this teaching, finds himself dissatisfied with it, and comes back to Prajaapathy, and serves him for another 32 years. Prajaapathy then teaches him "You are not the 'waker' 'I'; but, you are the 'dreamer' 'I'. Indira goes away and contemplates on this teaching; but, dissatisfied with this teaching also, he comes back again to Prajaapathy.

He serves the guru for another 32 years, at the end of which he is taught "You are the 'sleeper' 'I' ". This appears to be a fantastic teaching, because in sleep, 'I' exist without any limitation. It is poorna 'I', closest to Brahman. In sleep, 'I' do not have physical limitations; 'I' do not have emotional limitations; 'I' do not have intellectual limitations. Nevertheless, I am existent also. Therefore 'sleeper' 'I' seems to be the real 'I', Brahman.

But, after contemplating on this teaching, Indira is dissatisfied again ; because, he realizes the problem in the 'sleeper' 'I'; no doubt, the sleeper 'I' is limitless; but, the sleeper 'I' does not know that he is limitless. 'I' am limitless in sleep; but, 'I' cannot claim 'I' am limitless.

Therefore, Indira comes back again to Prajaapathy. When, he, thus, approaches Prajaapathy the fourth time, Prajaapathy gives him a concession. He asks Indira to serve him only for five more years. Thus, Indira serves Prajaapathy totally for 101 years.

On completion of the final five years, Prajaapathy gives his main teaching as:

"Maghavan, marthyam vaa idhagum sareeramaattham mruthyunaa thadasya amruthasya asareerasya aathmanodhishtaanamaathho vai sasareera: priyaapriyaabhyaam na vai sareerasy satha: priyaapriyayo: apahathirasthi asareeram vaava santham na priyaapriye sprusatha:" (VIII.xii.1) – "O Indra, this body indeed is mortal. This is covered by death. But, the body is only the seat of this Self, which is immortal. Anything embodied is within the range of the desirable and the non-desirable. Surely, for that which remains embodied, there can be no elimination of the desirable and the undesirable. But the desirable and the undesirable cannot surely touch It, which has become embodied"

"evamevaisha samprasaadho asmaachachareeraatthasmutthaaya param jyothi: upasampadhya svena roopena abhinishpadhyathe sa utthama: purusha: sa thathra paryethi jakshathkreedan ramamaana: sthreebhi: vaa yaanairvaa jnyaathibhirvaa nopajanagum smarannidhagum sareeragum sa yathaa prayoghya aacharane yuktha evamevaayam asmin sareere praano yuktha:" (VIII. xii. 3) – "In this very way, this tranquil one becomes established in his own nature after rising up from this body and reaching the supreme Light. He is the supreme Person. There he moves about laughing, sporting and enjoying with women, vehicles or kinsmen, but not remembering this body born from the contact of man and woman. That is, just as a horse is harnessed to a vehicle, in that very way, this individual soul is joined with this body".

Prajaapathy's teaching, in this portion, goes on further. But, the essence of this fourth level teaching of Prajaapathy is: 'I' am 'utthama purusha', free from ignorance also; ignorance belongs to the sleeping mind, kaarana sareeram, whereas, 'I' am free from ignorance also. Then, who am 'I'? "I' am the 'saakshi chaithanyam', free from the sthoola sareeram and its limitations, free from sookshma sareeram and its limitations and free from kaarana sareeram and its ignorance. 'I' am the saakshi and that saakshi is the all-pervading Brahman".

Sureswaraacharya says, that, the entire anvaya vyathirekhaa teaching culminates with the statement "atha yo vedha idham jigraani ". This is, in fact, the culmination of the main Chaandoghya teaching, which started with VI. viii.7, now concluding in the Chapter VIII. The entire range of teaching reveals the fact, "I' am the chith, which is none other than sath".

Thereafter, Sureswaraacharya says: "You can enjoy the same fantastic teaching in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad also; I will give you the reference".

An incidental and interesting aside: Even now, in an Aashramaa, known as Kailaasa Ashrama in Hrishikesh, with a branch in Uttharakasi, when students are admitted for vedhaantha vicharaa, several conditions are imposed on them, before giving the teaching. One of the conditions is, that, whatever text the student wants to study, he has to, first, get by heart. That is the basic qualification for commencing the 'study'. If a student wants to study Chaandhogya Upanishad, he has to go back, get the Upanishad by heart and then report for the class. But, the problem is that, most prospective students, finding it difficult to get entire texts by heart and also not understanding the value of 'getting the text by heart', do not return at all. Even earnest students do not realize that, once one is thoroughly familiar with the text, one's 'understanding' of the text and its intricacies is easier. The tradition of 'getting by heart' is, therefore, disappearing gradually. Unfortunately, modern gadgets like 'I Pods', further contribute to this tendency. But, the indisputable fact is, that, once a text is got by heart, studying the text thereafter, is not only easier, but, highly enjoyable also. A compromise formula will be, to, at least, resort to repeated paarayanam of the text, that is being studied.

Now, Sureswaraacharya comes to Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad and says:

- तथा - In the same manner,

- अहं"ब्रह्मास्मि "इत्यस्य - for the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi' ,

'Aham Brahma asmi' is the mahaa vaakyam in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (I. iv. 10), just as 'thath thvam asi' is the mahaa vaakyam of Chaandhoghya Upanishad.

- शेषः - the subsidiary passage (is as follows).

The following portion is the anvaya vyathirekhaa 'opener' for the mahaa vaakyam 'aham Brahma asmi', in the form of avasthaathraya vivekaa. What are those manthraas? Sureswaraachaaryaa gives in verse 40.

Chapter III: Verse 40 -

अहमः प्रत्यगात्मार्थो निरस्तशेषयुष्मदः ।

बम्भणीति श्रुतिर्न्याय्या योऽयमित्यादिनाऽसकृत् ॥ ४० ॥

The sruthi 'He, who is full of consciousness and resides as the inner light among senses' (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad IV .iii. 7) etc., repeatedly refers to the inmost Self divested of all non-Self, in the manner of reason.

In the first chapter, I.iv.10, Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad gives 'aham Brahma asmi' as the teaching and the student learns to say 'aham Brahma asmi'. Brahma means the limitless Brahman.

One of the meanings of Brahman is aananda: also. As the popular manthraa of Thaithreeya Upanishad (Bhruguvalli- manthraa 6) goes: "Aanandho Brahmethi vyajaanaath | Aanandhaath eva kalu imaani boothaani jaayanthe | Aanandhena jaathaani jeevanthi | Aanandham prathi abhisamvisanthi ithi" | Brahman, therefore, means aanandha: |

So, 'aham Brahma asmi' means 'aham aananda: asmi' | But, as even as a student says "I am aanandha:", he is not convinced. On the other hand, he is disturbed by the teaching. With all his worldly worries, he wonders "How is this possible?" To him, there appears to be a contradiction between the teaching and the facts. The contradiction can be resolved, only when the student understands the true meaning of the term 'I'; when he understands that, " 'I' am not viswaa ; 'I' am not thyjasaa; 'I' am not praagnyaa; 'I' am none of the three, but, 'I' am thureeya:".

Therefore, as part of the main teaching 'aham Brahma asmi', 'thureeyam' is revealed in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad also. And, how? In Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad also, there is an anvaya vyathirekhaa vichaara, again through avasthaathraya viveka, given in the third section of Chapter IV, of the Upanishad.

This is a very famous section, known as 'Svayamjyothi Braahmanam', a wonderful dialogue between King Janakaa and Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa, wherein Janakaa asks Yaagnyavalkyaa "What is the light, O, Sage! with which a man does all transactions?"

As is well known, 'light' (either sunlight or moonlight or any artificial light) is important for carrying out any transaction. That's why when one enters a hall or a room, even a bathroom, one makes sure that there is sufficient light in the room, for the transaction to be done. All vyavahaaraas require light.

And, when Janakaa asks the question "What serves as the light for a man?" Yaagnyavalkyaa replies: "The light of the sun, O Emperor. It is through the light of the sun that he sits, goes out, works and returns". Janakaa responds "But, when the sun has set, what exactly serves as the light for a man?" Yaagnyavalkyaa replies "The moon serves as his light. It is through the light of the moon that he sits, goes out, works and returns". King Janaka queries again "When the sun and the moon have both set, what exactly serves as the light for a man?" and so on.

After thus eliminating all the lights one by one, they come to the conclusion "Any light can help you, only when there is the basic light of Consciousness". For a dead body, all lights are useless for transaction.

Thus, through an enquiry and avasthaathraya vivekaa, King Janakaa and Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa arrive at the light of Consciousness and also at the conclusion "That Consciousness Light, 'I' am".

For jaagarth vyavahaaraa, 'I' serve as the basic light. For dream transactions, 'I' serve as the basic light. As for the sushupthi avasthaa, there are two transactions that go on in kaarana sareeram. One transaction is "'I' do not know anything"; the second transaction is "'I' am comfortable", because sleep is the most comfortable state. Both transactions go on as "'I' do not know! 'I' do not know!" and as "'I' am comfortable! 'I' am comfortable!". But even these minimum transactions, ajnaanam and aanandhaa, are experienced by 'me' only. Those minimum transactions are also happening in a particular light – the light of 'Consciousness'.

"All these transactions, viz., transactions during waking, transactions during dream and transactions during sleep have got thriputi; and 'I', the light of Consciousness, saakshi, am revealing all those " Yaagnyavalkyaa tells Janakaa. How does he tell?

Sureswaraacharya uses an unique verb 'bambaneethi', derived from the root 'bar', which root means 'to declare' or 'to proclaim'. 'Bambaneethi' is a special usage called 'frequentative' usage. This usage indicates 'repeated proclamation'.

'puna: puna: banathy' ithi 'bhambaneethi'.

Sureswaraacharya chooses this onomatopoeic word as the verb. To explain: A word is considered 'onomatopoeic', when the sound of the word itself conveys the idea. Examples are (i) the word 'whisper', which by its very sound, conveys the soft undertone being used and (ii) the word 'humming' in the sentence 'the bee is humming', where again the word 'hum', by its very sound, conveys the noise made by the bee.

To stress the idea, namely, "the Vedas are loudly and repeatedly proclaiming" (so that nobody will miss this fantastic teaching "I am the thureeya aathmaa, which is none other than Brahman"), Sureswaraacharya uses the verb 'bhambaneethi' and says 'bahambaneethi sruthi.' |

149. Chapter III, Verse 40 and 41 (15-08-2009)

Many students of Vedhaanthea often have a grievance against Vedhaantic teaching. Their thoughts go on the lines that follow:

"We approach Vedhaanthea as samsaaris, to solve our problems of samsaaraa. And, after listening to our problems, Vedhaanthea first acknowledges all the problems; and, Vedhaanthea even gives explanations to our problems, pointing out that I am a karthaa and bokthaa and because of that, I have several karmas fructifying regularly; and, because of the fructifying karmaas, I am going through ups and downs in life. Vedhaanthea, thus, diagnoses the problem.

"Thereafter, Vedhaanthea even gives a special saasthric name for me, the samsaari, suffering the samsaaraa, as ahamkaara: | The technical word for ahamkaara: is 'thvam padha vaachyaartha.' |

"When, thus, Vedhaanthea sees through and presents my condition very clearly, namely, that, I am samsaari, I am kartha-bokthaa, I have several problems, I am ahamkaara:, I am 'thvam padha vaachyaartha.' etc., as a student, I am excited, listening to all these teachings of Vedhaanthea. And, I eagerly wait for the solution, that Vedhaanthea will give to my problems.

"But, Vedhaanthea, somehow, at this point, surprisingly drops this ahamkaara topic and introduces a new topic saying: "You have a higher nature; that higher nature is called saakshi; that saakshi is called 'thvam padha lakshyaartha.'; that saakshi is wonderful / fantastic, without any karma, and therefore, devoid of problems also; saakshi is nithyam, suddham, buddham and muktham; it is identical with Brahman, jagath kaaranam" etc. Vedhaanthea goes on and on about that saakshi on similar lines. Even when Vedhaanthea thus goes on describing the saakshi, I fondly hope that, after some time i.e. after briefly discussing that saakshi, Vedhaanthea will come back to me, the ahamkaaraa, and give solutions to my problems. And, I wait for Vedhaanthea to come back to the problem of ahamkaaraa, which is myself. I wait and wait and wait and wait; but, even after long years of study and waiting, I find that Vedhaanthea is only going on and on about my higher nature, the saakshi, which, of course, seems to be fantastic; but, all the time, I am bothered about myself, the samsaari, the ahamkaaraa; and, Vedhaanthea does not seem to give any solution for me.

"How does the knowledge the status of some saakshi, which may exist or even not exist at all, matter to me? It is like knowing the higher status of my neighbor, when I am facing varieties of problems. Imagine a situation, when I call a building expert to solve the problems in my building; and, that, he comes and agrees with me: 'Yes, you have plumbing problems; you have electrical problems'; and, that, he diagnoses the problems correctly; but, then, instead of solving my problems, he says: 'Do you know your neighbor has got a fantastic house? There is no plumbing or electrical problem there'. I have called the expert for solving my problems; but, he keeps talking about my neighbor not having any problems at all. Knowing about the superior status of some saakshi is only akin to this hypothetical situation of knowing about the superior status of my neighbor, when I, myself, have numerous problems."

And, therefore, it may appear to a seeker, that, Vedhaanthaa has missed the point, viz., his worries and concerns, and is talking about irrelevant things. Instead of sorting out the problems of ahamkaaraa, the samsaari, Vedhaanthaa keeps talking about saakshi, 'my' higher nature, something seemingly non-relevant.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is trying to sort out this grievance, of course, of not all students, but, some students, who always feel that Vedhaanthaa is talking about something non-relevant.

Addressing such students, he points out: "It is not Vedhaanthaa that is missing the point; it is you, who are missing the point. It may be that you are listening to the Vedhaanthic teachings carefully; however, you are missing the punch line of Vedhaanthaa. Vedhaanthaa has several teachings alright; but, if you miss the punch line, Vedhaanthaa will appear non-relevant".

What is that punch line of Vedhaanthaa? That is what Sureswaraachaaryaa is trying to point out.

He explains to the student: "What is your complaint? Is it not 'how does the status of my neighbor, saakshi, matter to me?' This is your question. Let me correct your question based on Vedhaanthic teaching. The entire Vedhaanthic teaching is that you should learn to ask the same question, looking at ahamkaaraa as your neighbor. Instead of standing as ahamkaaraa and looking at saakshi as neighbor, you should stand as saakshi and look at ahamkaaraa as neighbor. Then, you will yourself realize that, whatever be the status of ahamkaaraa, whether going through sanchitha-aagaami-praarabhda karmaas, or through jaagrath-svapna-sushupthi avasthaas etc., all types of statuses of ahamkaaraa, will appear like the fluctuating statuses of the neighbor. Then, instead of asking 'How does the status of my neighbor, the saakshi, matter to me?', you will ask the question 'How does the status of my neighbor, ahamkaaraa, matter to me?' "

It may be even said that the difference between mokshaa and samsaaraa is only the perspective. If you ask this question "What does it matter to me whatever be the status of my neighbor?", looking at saakshi as the neighbor, it is called samasaara. When you ask the same question "What does it matter to me, whatever be the status of my neighbor?" with ahamkaaraa as your neighbor, that is moksha: | Therefore, the Vedhaanthic punch line is "'neighbourise' (this is not a regular English word, but conveys the meaning effectively) the ahamkaaraa".

This is the Vedhaanthic teaching. If a seeker misses this punch line and, therefore, standing as ahamkaaraa, looks at saakshi as neighbor, even long years of study will not help him; he will feel that the teaching is irrelevant.

It also sometimes happens that, even after understanding this teaching, a seeker does not seek to 'neighbourize' ahamkaaraa; and instead, desires to improve ahamkaaraa. But, when the seeker's aim is 'improving ahamkaaraa', again Vedhaanthaa cannot help and will also appear irrelevant. The aim of Vedhaanthaa is not 'improving ahamkaaraa', but, 'neighbourising' ahamkaaraa.

Suppose a person says "I am not interested in making ahamkaaraa the neighbor. I want to remain as ahamkaaraa; and as ahamkaaraa, I want to improve my status. My aim is 'repairing' ahamkaaraa. What does Vedhaanthaa have to offer to me?"

For such a person, Vedha anthaa is not the solution. He has to resort to the Vedha Poorva portions of the Vedas. Vedha Poorva prescribes a number of karmaas and upasanaas, all aiming at improvements or 'repairs' to ahamkaaraa.

But, for such a person also, the Vedhaanthic guru has a message. It is: "A number of karmaas and parihaaraas will be prescribed for you, by the Veda Poorva, for your problems. No doubt, you will find them efficacious. But, by the time you 'repair' one part of ahamkaaraa, (i.e. when one particular problem is solved for you) there will be another part falling into disrepair and needing attention (another problem will crop up). Thus, ahamkaaraa 'repair' works will go on and on; and, a time will come when you will be utterly frustrated and you will feel utterly helpless. At that stage, you will discover that "'repairing' ahamkaaraa is exactly like the proverbial 'straightening of a dog's tail' ". And, when you thus tire of 'repairs' to ahamkaaraa and the remedies suggested by Vedha Poorvaa, your only recourse is Vedha anthaa, to which you are always welcome". This is what is conveyed by the well known manthraa (I. ii. 12) of Mundakopanishad "pareekshya lokaan karamachitthaan Brahmana: nirvedam aayaath" – "Having examined the worlds, which are achieved through Karma, a Brahmin should come to dispassion".

One should know the difference between 'repairing' ahamkaaraa and 'neighbourising' ahamkaaraa. Vedha poorvaa is meant to 'repair' or improve ahamkaaraa. The aim of Vedhaanthaa, on the other hand, is teaching the aspirant to make the claim "'I' am saakshi" and to look at ahamkaaraa, not only as a neighbor, but also as a mithyaa neighbor.

Vedhaanthic teaching is: "Perceive ahamkaaraa as 'neighbor'; perceive sareerathrayam also as 'neighbor'; perceive chidhaabhaasaa also as 'neighbor'; even one's family is 'neighbor'. All these will have permanent problems. Karma will doggedly follow these".

Seeing ahamkaaraa as a mithyaa neighbor, the aspirant should ask the question "What does it matter to me, whatever be the status of the mithyaa ahamkaara neighbor?"

Verses 8 and 9 of the 5th chapter of the Srimad Bhagavadh Githa are relevant here: "Naiva kinchith karomi ithi yuktha: manyetha thathvavith pasyan srunvan sprusan jigran asnan gacchan svapan svasan pralapan visrujan gruhnan unmishan nimishan api indriyaani indriyaartheshu varthanthe ithi dhaarayan" – "Even while engaged in activities such as seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing, talking, evacuating, receiving, opening and closing the eye, the disciplined knower of the Truth understands 'I do not do anything at all' bearing in mind, that senses organs remain in sense-objects".

The aspirant should have the conviction "mithyaa ahamkaara: mithyaa vishayeshu varthethe; aham saakshi chethaa kevalo nirgunascha" – "It is the mithyaa ahamkaaraa that dwells on mithyaa sense-objects. But, 'I' am only the Witness, devoid of any attributes". If this punch line is missed, Vedhaanthaa will appear indifferent and irrelevant to one's problems. Then, as already explained, the remedy is to go to Vedha Poorva, get frustrated and then come back to Vedhaanthaa.

That is the reason why anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise becomes very important. Anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise is the method of 'neighbourising' ahamkaaraa.

"In the jaagrath avasthaa, viswa, the neighbor ahamkaaraa is there; in svapna avasthaa, the thyjasaa neighbor ahamkaaraa comes; in sushupthi, praagnyaa ahamkaaraa arrives; the visva-thyjasaa-praagnyaa ahamkaaraa-s arrive and depart. Each ahamkaaraa has its own problems, in its own relevant state. But, 'I' am the thureeyam, beyond all the three and not conditioned by any one of them and not suffering any problem also". This is the teaching in Chaandoghya Prajapathy Vidhya and in Brahadhaaranyaka Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam also.

"'Neighbourising' ahamkaaraa through avasthaathraya vivekaa" is the method advised by both Prajapathy Vidhyaa and Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam.

Reverting to the text, (verse 40 – Chapter III):

अहम् प्रत्यगात्म अर्थ : - "The meaning of the word 'I' is the innermost Self, Saakshi, the thureeyam,

The meaning of the word 'I', is not ahamkaaraa, having saakshi as the neighbor; but, the meaning of the word 'I', is the saakshi, which has got ahamkaaraa as the neighbor, which ahamkaaraa 'comes' and 'goes'. In jaagrath avasthaa, viswa comes; in svapna avasthaa, thyjasaa comes; in sushupthi avasthaa, praagnyaa comes. 'I' am the thureeyam, beyond all the three. Therefore, the assertion: "ahama: artha: prathyagaathmaa" meaning "the thureeyam or saakshi, is the meaning of the word 'I'"; and, also the exhortation: "Do not make saakshi the neighbor; make ahamkaaraa the neighbor".

What type of thureeyam / saakshi is it?

- निरस्त अशेष युष्मदः - totally free from all anaathmaa"

"yushmadha:", in this context, means "anaathmaa". Literally, the word means "you"; in this context, the word "you" means, "other than 'I'", 'I' meaning 'aathmaa'; therefore. in this context, 'you' means 'anything other than aathmaa'.

'Yushmadh' is 'anaathmaa'; and, anaathmaa consists of threefold thriputi, viz.,

- (1) the 'experiencer'
- (2) the 'experienced' and
- (3) the 'experience':

(1) the 'jaagrath avasthaa thriputi' consisting of:

- (i) the 'experiencer'
- (ii) the 'experienced' and
- (iii) the 'experience', belonging to jaagrath avasthaa, viz.,

- a) viswaa
- b) sthoola prapanchaa and
- c) sthoola sareeram

(2) the 'svapna avsthaa thriputi' consisting of:

- (i) thyjasaa
- (ii) sookshma prapanchaa and
- (iii) sookshma sareeram; and

(3) the 'sushupthi avasthaa thriputi' consisting of:

- (i) praagnyaa
- (ii) kaarana prapancha, and
- (iii) kaarana sareeram.

All these three triads are called 'yushmadh'.

But, who am 'I'? 'I' am the thureeyam, free from all the three triads. 'Nirastha' means 'free from'. 'Asesha' means 'totally'.

This is what is said in Maandookya Upanishad also, in the well known manthraa 7: "Naantha: pragnyam na bahi: pragnyam nobhayatha: pragnyam na pragnyaanaganam na pragnyam naapragnyam| adhrushtam avyavahaaryam agrahyam alakshanam achinthyam avyapadesyam ekaathmaprathyayasaaram prapanchopasamam saantham sivam advaitham chathurtham manyanthe sa aathmaa sa vignyeya:" – " They consider the thureeyaa to be that which is not the outward consciousness, not the inward consciousness, not the consciousness turned both sides, not a mass of consciousness, not the all-knowing consciousness, not unconscious, beyond perception, beyond transaction, beyond grasp, beyond inference, beyond thoughts, beyond description, traceable through the unbroken self-awareness, free from the world, tranquil, auspicious and non-dual. It is the Self. It is to be known".

Viswa is chidhaabhaasaa reflected in sthoola sareeram; thyjasaa is chidhaabhaasaa reflected in sookshma sareeram; praangnyaa is chidhaabhaasaa reflected in kaarana sareeram. All the three are three types of chidhaabasa / prathibhimbha chaithanyam / 'reflected Consciousness'. 'I' am the 'thureeya saakshi' free from all these three. I dismiss all these and 'I' am the Original Consciousness – chith.

Incidentally, all these have been discussed even during the study of basic texts such as Thathva Bodhaa, using notations for easier reference and understanding, such as RC1 , RC 2 and RC 3, OC, and RM 1, RM 2 and RM 3 etc.

'RC' stands for 'Reflected Consciousness' meaning 'chidhaabaasaa'

RC 1 is 'Reflected Consciousness 1' or Viswa, in the RM 1 or 'Reflecting Medium 1' viz. sthoola sareeram.

RC 2 is 'Reflected Consciousness 2' or Thyjasaa, in the RM 2 or 'Reflecting Medium 2' viz. sookshama sareeram.

RC 3 is 'Reflected Consciousness 3' or Thyjasaa, in the RM 3 or 'Reflecting Medium 3' viz. kaarana sareeram.

OC is 'Original Consciousness' viz., thureeya saakshl or chithl.

'Ahama:' is a special Sanskrit word, meaning 'for the word 'I' '. And, by saying 'ahama: prathyagaathmaartha:', Sureswaraacharya points out, that, according to Sruthi, the meaning of this word 'aham' is 'prathyagaathmaa saakshl', which is free from all these three groups of thriputi-s'.

- इति - Thus,
- श्रुतिः बम्भणीति असकृत् - the Sruthi loudly proclaims repeatedly,

What is the purpose of the Sruthi in making the proclamation 'repeatedly'? The intent of Sruthi is to stress to the aspirant, that the 'switching' or changing of his perspective has to take place. The perspective of a samsaari is "I am ahamkaara: | Saakshi is my neighbor". This perspective should be switched over to "'I' am the saakshi; ahamkaaraa is my neighbor". This 'switch-over' has to take place. Without this 'switch-over', even after long years of study, Vedhaanthee will appear irrelevant. A student / seeker, who has not made the 'switch-over', will tend to ask: " Even if I accept that saakshi is nithya muktha:, how does that acceptance help heal my bodily pains or mental worries ?" That is the reason that Sruthi is 'drumming' this message loudly, i.e., like a drum sounding 'bhaml 'bhaml 'bhaml '.

As already pointed out, the verb 'bhambaneethl' is derived from the root 'bharl', meaning 'utter loudly'. The 'frequentative' form (again, a rare form of usage) of the root 'bharl', is the verb 'bhambhaneethl', indicating 'loud and repeated proclamations'. 'Athisayena bhanathi' is 'bhambaneethl'. The word 'asakriith' also means 'not once' or 'repeatedly'. Thus, the Aacharya gives dual stress to his view, that Sruthi proclaims this fact repeatedly.

And, Sureswaraacharya says " Sruthi has not made a mere statement to be accepted without any questioning. Sruthi justifies it by reasoning also".

- न्याय्या - by using reasoning / logic,

What is the reasoning? It has been discussed several times before, in different contexts; but, being important, should be noted again, in this context.

It is: "Whatever is subject to arrival and departure has to be my incidental nature. Whatever is not subject to arrival and departure is my intrinsic nature. Using a different terminology, whatever is variable is my incidental nature and whatever is non-variable is my intrinsic nature".

If one analyzes the question "Is ahamkaaraa subject to arrival and departure?", one will conclude that ahamkaaraa is certainly subject to arrival and departure.

In jaagrath avasthaa, the individual has one ahamkaara and its (that particular ahamkaaraa's) own body, the physical body. He has one set of family members, possessions, position etc.; there is one particular ahamkaaraa, with its own paraphernalia.

But, that particular paraphernalia is available only in jaagrath avasthaa and disappears in svapna avasthaa. . In svapna, the individual finds himself in another body not infrequently having a different set of family, living in a different place, in a different period etc.

Svapna ahamkaaraa and jaagrath ahamkaaraa are themselves, thus, mutually exclusive.

In sushupthi avasthaa there is yet another ahamkaaraa

- (i) which is an unique ahamkaaraa
- (ii) which may be termed 'un-localized' ahamkaaraa
- (iii) which has merged into saakshi, but is still a potentially existent ahamkaaraa and
- (iv) which disappears when it comes into jaagrath avasthaa.

Thus we have three ahamkaaraas, all of which are subject to arrival and departure.

How can that variable ahamkaaraa, be 'my' intrinsic nature?

Then, what is intrinsic to 'me'? The answer is: "That whatever is non-variable and common to all these three. And, that is the Consciousness principle. 'I' am sath and 'I' am chith i.e. "'I' am" and "'I' am Conscious" ".

Thus, logic itself proves that "Ahamkaaraa is incidental and therefore 'neighbour'. 'I', the saakshi, is intrinsic".

Sruthi repeatedly talks about the saakshi being 'my' real nature.

'Nyaayaa', in this context', means 'anvaya vyathiraka siddhaa' / attained by anvaya vyathirekha exercise.

- योऽयमित्यादिना - through manthraas such as the one starting with 'yoyam'.

By the use of the term 'Yoyam ithyaadhinaa', the Aachaaryaa refers to the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad Manthraa IV.iii.7, wherein begins the discussions on avasthaathraya vivekaa, one form of anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise.

The manthraa (IV.iii.7) runs: "Yoyam vijnaamaya: praaneshu hrudhyantharjyothi: purusha: ; sa samaana: sannubhau lokaavanusancharathy, dhyayatheeva lelaayatheeveva ; sa hi svapno boothvaa imam lokam athikraamathi mruthyo roopaani" – "This infinite entity (Purusha:) that is mistakenly identified with the intellect and is in the midst of organs, is, in reality, the self-effulgent light within the heart (intellect) ; but, assuming the likeness of the intellect, moves between two worlds; it thinks, as it were, and shakes, as it were. Being identified with dream, it transcends this world – the forms of death (ignorance etc.)".

The next Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad manthraa (IV.iii.8) is: "Sa vaa ayam purusha: jaayamaana: - sareeram abhisampadyamaana: - paapmabhi: sansrujyathe; sa uthkraaman – bhriyamaana: - paapno vijahaathi - "That man, the individual Self, when he is born or attains a body, is connected with evils (the body and organs) and when he dies or discards the body, he discards those evils".

And, the next Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad manthraa (IV.iii.9) goes: "Thasya vaa ethasya purushasya dve eva sthaane bhavatha: - idham cha paralokasthaanam cha ; sandhyam thrutheeyam svapnasthaanam; thasmin sandhye sthaane thishtan ethe ubhe sthaane pasyathi – idham cha paralokasthaanam cha | Atha yathaakrama: ayam paralokasthaane bhavathi thamaakramamaakramya ubhayaan paapmana aanandhaamscha pasyathi; sa yathra prasvapithi, asya lokasya sarvaavatho maathraam apaadhaaya svayam vihathya, svayam nirmaaya, svena bhaasaa, svena jyothishaa prasvapithi; athra ayam purusha: svayam jyothi: bhavathi" – "That man has only two abodes, this and the next world. The dream state, which is the third, is at the junction of the two. Staying at that junction, he surveys the two abodes, this and the next world. Whatever outfit he may have for the next world, providing himself with that, he sees both sufferings and joys. When he dreams, he takes away a little of (the impression of) this all-embracing world (the waking state), himself puts the body aside and himself creates a dream body in its place, revealing his own luster by his own light – and dreams. In this state, the man himself becomes the light".

And, so on.

This fantastic Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad portion, Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam, introduces the three avasthaas and says that thureeyam goes through all the three avasthaas but is not touched by any one of the avasthaas. And, the Upanishad gives an apt example for this, in IV.iii.18, which is as follows: "Thadhyathaa mahaa mathsyaa: ubhe koole anusancharathi poorvam cha aparam cha, evam eva ayam purusha: ethau ubhaavanthau anusancharathi svapnaantham cha vrudhaantham cha" - "As a great fish swims alternately to both the banks of a river, eastern and western, so does this infinite being move to both these states, the dream and waking states".

The large fish in this example moves from one shore to another shore of a wide river, in which it lives. When it goes near one shore, it does not touch the shore; but it experiences the events happening on the shore. Thereafter, it goes near the other shore and experiences another set of events. And, thereafter, tired of both the shores and events happening on both, it moves through the middle of the river. Even though, thus, the fish moves around from shore to shore, it is not affected by the events of the right shore or events of the left shore also.

A subsequent manthraa, IV.iii.22 of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, stresses this fact (that the saakshi is never affected) by saying "ananvaagatham punyena ananvaagatham paapena theerno hi thadhaa sarvaan sokaan hrudhayasya bhavati" – "This form of his (the thureeyam or saakshi) is untouched by good work and untouched by evil work, for he is beyond all the woes of his heart / intellect".

The next manthraa (IV.iii.23) goes on to say "Yadhvai thanna pasyathi pasyanvai thanna pasyathi, na hi dhrashtur dhrushte: viparilopo vidhyathe avinaasithvaath | Na thu thad dvitheeyam asthi thathonyadvibhktam yathpasyeth" - " That it does not see in that state is because, though seeing then, it does not see; for the vision of the witness can never be lost, because it is imperishable. But, there is not that second thing separate from it, which it can see".

The whole Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam reveals that "saakshi is asangha:" (asango hi purusha:). And, as even as King Janaka hears these teachings, he is so excited, that when Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa stops briefly, to rest his voice and breath, as it were, King Janaka says "soham bhagavathe sahasram dhadhaam" (IV iv. 7) – "I give you a thousand cows, Sir", as if to say " Sir, Do not stop the teaching. I will give you another thousand cows. Continue the teaching".

The teaching goes on and on; and, at last, King Janaka says "Soham bhagavathe videhaan dhadhaami maam chaapi saha dhaasyaam" (B.U. IV. iv. 23) – "I give you, Sir, the empire of Videha and myself too, with it, to wait upon you”, implying “I have understood your teachings. Any amount of dakshina given to you, will not commensurate with your teachings”.

Thus concludes the teaching of Janaka-Yaagnyavalkya-samvaadhaa in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad. In Anubhoothiprakaasaa, Swami Vidhyaaranyaa devotes nearly a thousand slokaas to the teachings of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad. Sureswaraachaarya also exhorts the seeker: “Do not miss this portion”. Repeated study of these and similar portions of the Upanishads will be highly beneficial to a serious student and aspirant.

That is the reason why sruthi also repeats this teaching a number of times, as pointed out by Sureswaraachaaryaa, through his statement “Sruthi: bambhaneethi asakruth”| And, now, he wants to give some reference points.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 41 (Chapter III):

कथं पुनरयमर्थोऽवसीयते अहंव्याजेनात्रात्मातो बुबोधयिषित इति यत। :

How is it known that the real Self is referred to by the gateway of the Ego?

Sureswaraachaarya pointed out that both Chaandoghya Upanishad and Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad have taken great pains to emphasize the need for the ‘switch over’ from “identification with ahamkaaraa as myself, with saakshi as my neighbour” to “identification with saakshi as myself, with ahamkaaraa as my neighbour”.

Vedhaanthaa should be studied with the mindset “‘I’ am saakshi and ahamkaaraa is only ‘my’ incidental neighbor”. When, with this mindset and conviction, the student / seeker listens to the Vedic mahaa vaakyam “aham Brahma asm” (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad I.iv.10), the vaakyam will appear very, very right and no contradiction will be felt. If, on the other hand, the mindset remains as “‘I’ am ahamkaaraa and saakshi is my neighbor”, the mahaa vaakyam “aham Brahma asm” will not only not make any sense, but, may even appear as a joke. Therefore, the Vedic punch line viz., “the exhortation to make this ‘switch over’ should not be missed by a serious and sincere mumukshu”.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, naturally, the question will be asked “how do you know that this ‘switching over’ is essential?”

Even after long years of study a student might have missed this punch line of Vedhaanthaa and, therefore, Vedhaanthaa might appear irrelevant to him. He may continue to feel: “When I have family problems, I have not got a solution for them from Vedhaanthaa, though I have been studying it for long.” What such a student has missed to realize is that, the family problems belong to the ahamkaaraa, his neighbor, and not to his real Self, the saakshi.

An individual may desire to assist a neighbor as loka sangrahaa, at a time when the neighbor is facing problems. It is, of course, a healthy desire and the rendered assistance a healthy action. But, when, he, thus extends relief to the neighbor, only if he takes care to remember all the time, that they are only neighbor's problems, there will be relaxation in his inner heart, because of which better results will be achieved. That relaxation can be called internal mokshaa; experiencing that mokshaa, the individual can go to the rescue of the neighbor.

Similarly, after claiming "aham muktha:", the Vedhaanthic student / aspirant can do some service to ahamkaaraa also; but, diligently remembering that ahamkaaraa is the 'neighbor', he should not get too involved. The 5th capsule of Vedhaantha (in Swamiji's 'Five Capsules of Vedhaantha'), can be marginally modified and rewritten as follows: "For the individual, who remembers ahamkaaraa is the neighbor, life is an entertainment; but, for the individual, who forgets that ahamkaaraa is neighbor and, therefore, considers himself ahamkaaraa, life becomes a big struggle".

Reverting to the text:

- कथं पुन अयं :अर्थ :अवसीयते - "How is this meaning known, 'avaseeyathe' means 'known' / nischeeyathe / ascertained.

What is the meaning?

- अहं व्याजेन आत्मार्थ :बुबोधयिषित :इति - that, the real Self / saakshi is revealed / referred to, by the word 'aham' ? "

'Aham vyaajena' means 'through the device or means called ahamkaaraa' ; 'aham', in this particular context, means 'ahamkaaraa' ; 'vyaaja:' means 'by means of/ through the instrumentality of / pretext / guise .

'Aathmaartha:' means 'the saakshi meaning'. 'Bubodhayishitha:' means 'is intended to be revealed'.

The essence: How do you say that saakshi is revealed through ahamkaaraa?

(इति - If such a question is asked)

यत्तः - the reply follows.

Sureswaraachaarya will be saying: "Not difficult at all; it is sampradhaaya".

In Vedhaanthic studies, the sampradhaaya guru (traditional teacher) is highlighted. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Bhaashyam to the Bhagavadh Githa, (the 13th chapter), warns: "asampradhaayavith sarvasaasthravith api moorkavath upekshaneeya:" – "a teacher who claims to teach Vedhaanthea, but, who does not have sampradhaaya, i.e. not taught by a live guru, and therefore, not acquainted with traditional interpretation, is to be neglected as an ignorant man, though he may be learned in all saasthraas".

Such a teacher may claim proudly: "I do not have a guru; I have learnt everything without a guru". One may revere such a scholar, but should never take him as Aachaaryaa, because a self-taught vedhaanthin is considered to be a 'kanishta guru', which term means the 'worst form of guru'.

An Utthama guru is supposed to be a srothreeya Brahmanishta;, who comes in sampradhaaya. A sampradhaaya guru can and will communicate; an asampradhaaya guru will make mystic statements, which the student will not understand.

The Aachaaryaa says, that, in sampradhaaya all these are very clear. What is that? That is said in the sloka that follows.

Chapter III: Verse 41 -

एष आत्मा स्वयंज्योती रविसोमग्निवाक्षुसः।

एतेष्वस्तं दृगोवास्ते भासयंस्चित्तचेष्टितम् ॥ ४१ ॥

This Self is self-luminous and it illumines the activities of the mind when the sun, moon, fire and speech subside and set.

In this sloka, Sureswaraachaaryaa is summarizing part of the Janaka-Yaagnyavalkya samvaadhaa - how the svayam jyothi Brahmanam develops.

King Janaka asks sage Yaagnyavalkyaa the question (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – IV.iii.2): "Yaagnyavalkya kim jyothirayam purusha:" – "Yaagnyavalkyaa, what serves as a light for a man?"

It is common knowledge that all transactions require light in one form or another; without a light, no transaction is possible. That is why, when one enters a dark room in the night, the first job that one does, is to switch on the light in the room. To facilitate this, normally, the switch is provided outside the room or just at the entrance to the room, because even to switch on the light, which is a vyavahaaraa, light is required.

The Svyam Jyothi Brahmanam of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad starts with this question of King Janaka: "Yaagnyavalkya kim jyothirayam purusha:"]

Sankara Bhagaavdh Paadhaa has written a sloka, summarizing the entire Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam, in that one slokaa, which is considered as one of his prakaranam-s, popularly known as 'Eka Sloka' or 'Eka sloka Vedhaantha'. The sloka is as below:

- किं ज्योतिस्तव भानुमानहनि मे रात्रौ प्रदिपादिकं
- स्यादेवं रविदीपदर्शनविधौ किं ज्योतिराख्याहि मे ।
- चक्षस्तस्य निमीलनादिसमये किं धीर्धियो दर्शने
- किं तत्राहमतो भवान्परमकं ज्योतिस्तदस्मि प्रभो ॥

Sureswaraachaaryaa is making a similar attempt in this sloka 41.

The teaching of Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam starts with the question from King Janaka "Yaagnyavalkya kim jyothirayam purusha:" - "What is the light in which men do all transactions?" Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa answers "Sunlight".

Then, Janaka asks the question "What will you do after sunset?" The sage replies: "Moonlight".

Janaka continues his questioning: "If moon is not there, what will you do?" Yaagnyavalkyaa replies: "By the light of a fire".

Janaka persists: "If fire is also not there in a dark room, what will you do?" Yaagnyavalkyaa replies: "Vaagevaasya jyothirbhavathi" (IV.iii.4) – "Speech serves as his light".

Swamiji gives an example: "Imagine an individual is visiting a friend. Just as he enters the friend's house, the power fails and there is absolute darkness in the room. But, fortunately, the host is present in that dark room and being thoroughly aware of the lay of the room and its furniture, he would warn the guest of the possible objects against which the guest may stumble and also would give him directions to a chair where the guest will be asked to sit, till the power returns". What is the 'light' in this situation? It is 'vaak jyothi:' or 'light of words/ speech'. That is what Yaagnyavalkyaa refers to by his terse answer "Vaagevaasya jyothirbhavathi"

King Janaka, then, asks: "When the sun and moon have both set, the fire has gone out and the speech has stopped, what exactly serves as the light for a man?" and Yaagnyavalkyaa replies "aathmanaa eva ayam jyothisha aasthe palyayathe karma kuruthe vipalyetha" - "It is through the light of the Self, that he sits, goes out, works and returns" (IV. iii.6).

King Janaka is satisfied and concurs "It is just so, Yaagnyavalkyaa".

This is true about svapnaa also, where there is no sunlight, no moonlight, no firelight and no words also. The dreamer carries out all dream vyavahaara-s / perceives everything in his dream, only in the light of Consciousness. That light of Consciousness alone illumines / reveals everything. Aathmaa eva jyothi: bhavathi That is said here, in this verse.

रविसोमाग्निवाक्षु अस्तं इतेषु - When the sun, moon, fire and speech have all ended or resolved,

'astham itheshu' means 'astham gatheshu'; 'ravi' means 'soorya:', denoting 'sunlight'; 'soma' denotes 'moonlight' ; 'agni' denotes 'firelight'. 'vaak' is 'speech' and since it can give knowledge can be considered 'the light of speech'.

What is there, when all of them are resolved?

- सः एषः स्वयंज्योती आत्मा एव - this Self-luminous aathmaa alone
- दृक् आस्ते - is there as the dhruk / saakshi chaithanyam,
- भासयन् - revealing / illumining
- चित्तचेष्टितम् - the various movements of the mind.

'Svayam jyothi:', because of sandhi rules of grammar, is written as 'svayamjyothee', in this context.

During jaagrath avasthaa, the mind is an instrument of experience and the world is the object; whereas, in svapna avasthaa, the world is not there ; the mind and thought become the objects of experience; because, a dream tiger or a dream mountain is only a thought. That means 'I' am objectifying / revealing the mind; which, in turn, means 'I' am not the mind; but I am the saakshi, different from the mind.

The Katopanisahd manthraa (II.ii.15) "Na thathra sooryo bhaathi na chandratharakam nemea vidhyutho bhaanthi kuthoyamagni: | Thameva bhaantham anubhaathi sarvam thasya bhaasaa sarvam idham vibhaathi" - "The sun does not illumine that Self. The moon and the stars do not. The flashes of lightning also do not illumine. How can this fire illumine? Everything shines after that Self alone, which is self-effulgent. By its light all these shine" is very relevant here.

150. Chapter III, Verse 41 to 43 (22-08-2009)

In these portions, Sureswaraachaaryaa is taking the support of sruthi for the teaching that he is giving, by pointing out that, avasthaathraya vivekaa is done by most of the Upanishads, as a part of anvaya vyathireka nyaayaa.

And, through this avasthaathraya vivekaa, 'I', the aathmaa, as the saakshi, is clearly revealed as distinct from ahamkaaraa, which ahamkaaraa is nothing but the mind plus chidhaabhaasaa.

This sakkshi-ahamkaaraa-vivekaa is accomplished through avasthaathraya analysis.

The Aachaaryaa first talked about Chaandhoghya Upanishad. Now, he is talking about Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, especially Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam, where also avasthaathraya vivekaa is done.

And, the teaching that is presented is:

'I', by myself, am saakshi chaithanyam.

In the jaagrath avasthaa by 'my' mere presence, 'I' illumine the inert mind; 'I' enliven the inert mind by providing chidhaabhaasaa; and, 'I' experience the inert mind.

Since, thus, 'I', as saakshi, illumine, enliven and experience the mind, the mind and its conditions are clearly knowable to me, since mind is the object and 'I' am the subject. In this first stage, 'I' am the saakshi and mind is an enlivened object of 'my' experience.

And, in the second stage in jaagrath avasthaa, after enlivening the mind, 'I' join the mind; and as the joint entity, 'I' experience the external world.

To repeat, in the jaagrath avasthaa, in the first stage, 'I' experience the mind, which is, at that stage, an object of 'my' experience; thereafter, in the second stage, 'I' join the mind and along with the mind, 'I' experience the external world.

When 'I' am objectifying the mind, 'I' am called saakshi; when 'I' join the mind to experience the world, 'I' am called pramaathaa. When 'I' objectify the mind as saakshi, the mind is away from me, as it were. And, when I join the mind to experience the world, the very same 'I', am called pramaatha.

Thus, in jaagrath avasthaa, I am saakshi also, 'objectifying' the mind and then, I become pramathaa also, 'joining' the mind and, thus, have a twofold role in jaagrath avasthaa, viz., saakshi-cum-pramaathaa.

(Repeating the above in a 'question and answer' format for the purpose of clarity:

Q. When am 'I' saaksh?

A: While objectifying the mind.

Q. When am 'I' pramaathaa?

A: While 'I' am joining the mind.

Q. When 'I' am joining the mind, what to 'I' objectify?

A. The world is objectified).

And, in jaagrath avasthaa, since 'I' am thus functioning both as saakshi and pramathaa, the saakshi status of 'mine' is not distinctly recognizable, because it is jumbled into a mixture of saakshi and pramaathaa. Therefore, 'I' am not able to clearly distinguish or understand 'my' saakshi status, in jaagrath avasthaa.

As for sushupthi avasthaa, in that avasthaa also, 'I' do exist as saakshi, but, there is a problem. The mind is in a resolved / dormant condition, because of which there is total blankness. If at all 'something' is said to be perceived during sushupthi, 'nothingness' is that 'something' which is perceived. Therefore, my saakshi status is not very clear, in sushupthi avasthaa also.

It is the third avasthaa, in which 'my' status is clear. What is the third avasthaa, other than jaagrath and sushupthi? Paarishesha nyaayena, i.e. by the law of exclusion, it is svapna avasthaa. Svapna avasthaa is the unique state in which 'my' saakshi status is distinct and clear.

This statement is justified as follows: In svapnaa, mind becomes a clear object of 'my' experience, since all dream experiences are nothing but thoughts and thoughts alone. The dream tiger is a thought; dream river is a thought; dream husband is a thought; dream wife is a thought, dream food is a thought. Everything in dream is nothing but thought; and, thought is nothing but the mind. Therefore, the entire dream world is nothing but mind, and mind alone. And, in dream, 'I' am clearly experiencing a dream world. That means 'I' am clearly experiencing my own mind; that means 'I' am clearly objectifying the mind and the mind alone.

From the above, one can see that there is a difference between jaagrath and svapnaa, in this aspect. In svapnaa, 'I' only objectify the mind; unlike in jaagrath avasthaa, 'I' do not join the mind. Why not? Ans: 'Joining the mind' is required to experience the external world as a pramaathaa. But, in svapna avasthaa, 'I' do not experience the external world; that means 'I' do not join the mind; that means 'I' do not become a pramaathaa; that means 'I' remain a saakshi, clearly experiencing the mind and the conditions of the mind only.

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Upadesa Saahasri, takes this portion from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad and writes a full chapter called 'svapna smruthi prakaranam'. In this prakaranam, he also shows that svapnaa is a clear state, in which, the mind becomes an object of experience and 'I' remain as saakshi.

To understand these facts more clearly, the example of one's spectacles can be given. When a bespectacled individual finds dust settled on the glasses and desires to clean his spectacles, he 'looks' at the spectacles and wipes them. At that point of time, he is the 'subject' and the spectacles is an 'object of experience'. It is clearly an 'object'. Then after wiping the spectacles, he puts on the spectacles. Now, the spectacles is still an object of the individual's experience; but, not merely that; the individual joins the spectacles; and, joining the spectacles, he becomes another type of 'observer'. Earlier, he was the 'observer' of the spectacles, which was the 'object observed'. Now he has become a 'joint observer' along with the spectacles, of the external world. But, what happens is, that, when he experiences the external world, though the spectacles still continues as an object of his experience, he forgets that fact, and instead 'mixes up' the spectacles with him as the 'subject'. He completely forgets spectacles as an object and considers only the external world perceived by him along with the spectacles, as the 'object'.

'Mind' is similar to the spectacles in the example. In svapna avasthaa, 'I', purely as a saakshi, without doing anything (saannidhya maathrena), am watching the mind and the entire svapna prapanchaa, which prapanchaa has been generated by the mental vaasanaa-s in the form of thoughts. At that time, i.e. during svapna avasthaa, mind serves only as an 'object of experience'; 'I' do not join the mind to experience the external world, because, there is no external world in svapnaa. But, the moment I wake up, (just as I put on the spectacles), I join the mind / the mind joins me and my saakshi status is overwhelmed / suppressed by my pramaathaa status.

It follows, therefore, that, to recognize or invoke his saakshi status, the student should close all his sense organs and should live in his internal world. Obviously, that is difficult, if not impossible.

Therefore, as a compromise, Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad advises the student: "Visualize your dream mind to recognize your saakshi status". In svapnaa, the mind is clearly objectified; mind does not have a Consciousness of its own; it is inert in nature; it has the five qualities of 'matter', viz., dhrusyathvam, baudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam. In svapnaa, 'I' clearly witness such an inert material mind. Therefore, that is referred to, in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad. Sureswaraachaaryaa also refers to it in this portion.

Reverting to the text (verse 41):

- एष :आत्मा स्वयंज्योति(भवति) - 'I', the aathmaa, am 'self effulgent';
- रवि सोम अग्नि वाक्षुसु अस्तं इतेषु - when the sun, moon, fire and speech subside and set (i.e., in the svapna avasthaa),

In jaagrath avasthaa, to experience the external world, one has soorya prakaasa or chandra prakaasaa or agni prakaasaa or vaak prakassa, as discussed in the dialogue, given below, between King Janakaa and Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa in the Svayam Jyothi Prakaranam of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iii.2 to IV.iii.5):

Janakaa : Yaagnyavakya kim jyothi: ayam purusha:?
 Yaagnyavalkyaa : Aadhithyajyothi: |
 Janakaa : Asthamitha aadhithye kim jyothi: eva ayam purusha:?
 Yaagnyavalkyaa : Chandramaa eva asya jyothi: bhavathi |
 Janakaa : Asthamithe aadhithye chandramasyasthamithe kimjyothi:
 eva ayam purusha:?
 Yaagnyavalkyaa : Agni: eva asya jyothi: bhavathi |
 Janakaa : Asthamithe aadhithye chandramasyasthamithe saanthe agnau kim jyothi: eva ayam purusha:?
 Yaagnyavalkyaa : Vaag eva asya jyothi: bhavathi |

But, during svapnaa state, vaak is also saanthaa and all other lights have also gone out. That is mentioned here (in the verse under study) as 'ravi soma agni vaakshu astham itheshu', which, therefore, has to be interpreted as 'svapana avasthaayam' |

In svapna avastha, when all lights are resolved,

- स :- (and), that svayamjyothi: aathmaa, saakshi,
- दृक् एव आस्ते - remains as the 'experiencer' of the mind,

The mind is the object of experience in both jaagrath and svapna avasthaa-s, but, with the difference as explained above and as repeated below.

In jaagrath avasthaa, the external world is also the object of experience; mind is also an object of experience, though, we do not notice that mind is also an object of experience, because we are busy with the external world.

In contrast, in svapna avasthaa, since the world is not there to distract our attention, the fact that 'mind as an object of experience' is crystal clear. In svapnaa, 'I' am not a pramaathaa, because, to become a pramaathaa, I should join the mind. Therefore, in svapna avastha 'I' remain only as saakshi. 'Dhrugeva aasthe' means 'saakshi eva aasthe'. 'Aasthe' means 'bhavathi'

And, what is 'my' job in svapna avasthaa? Obviously, 'I' do not experience the external world; (in a lighter vein) but, 'I' want some fun, as it were, because sushupthi is boring, when 'I' alone am there. 'I' am bored; therefore, 'I', the saakshi, in svapna avasthaa also, as in jaagrath avasthaa, by 'my' mere saannidhyam, bless the mind, illumine the mind and enliven the mind. Because of the 'enlivening', vaasanaas of the mind get activated and become svapna prapanchaa.

It may be recalled, that, in the basic text Thathva Bhodhaa, svapnaa is defined as "jaagrath avasthaayaam yadh dhruhtam yadh srutham thadh janitha vaasanayaa nidhraa samaye ya: prapancha: pratheeyathe saa svapnaa avasthaa" – "The 'world' that is created during sleep, purely by memories of whatever is seen and whatever is heard during the waking stage is the 'dream' state".

Whatever experiences one undergoes in the waking state are all registered in the mind and during disturbed sleep, such registered experiences are activated; the 'activated' thoughts become the 'dream world', which is the 'observed object' in svapnaa; but, as already explained, the 'dream world' is only thoughts; and thoughts are only 'mind'. Therefore, mind is the only object observed during svapnaa.

If the mind is an object, 'I' will have to be someone other than the mind. And, who am that 'I'? Ans: 'I', the observer of the mind is saakshi.

And, what is 'my' role in svapnaa? The verse answers.

- भासयन् - illumining
- चित्त चेष्टितं - the activities of the mind.

'Cheshtitham' means 'cheshtaa' or 'activity'. Just as the physical body does a lot of cheshtaa in jaagrath avasthaa, the mind does a lot of cheshtaa in svapnaa avasthaa. The dreamer does not have any control over the cheshtaa of the mind in the dream. The dreamer is only the 'experiencer' of the dream and not 'controller' of the dream, because the dream is controlled by the karma of the mind or karma of the ahamkaara. Karma determines the nature of the dream, whether a nice dream, such as a visit to a temple or a scary dream, such as images of a ghost.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 42:

निर्णेक्ति च पृष्टो मुनिः।

The sage, being asked, specifically settled this matter.

Sureswaraachaaryaa continues to quote from the dialogue between Yaagnyavalkyaa and Janakaa, in the Svayam Jyothi Brahmanam of the Brahadhaarananyaka Upanishad.

The question asked by King Janaka was: "What illumines all the transactions? (IV.iii.2)". Sun was mentioned as 'illuminator', by Yaagnyavalkyaa; then, moon was mentioned; then, agni was mentioned; then, vaak was mentioned.

"When all of them are resolved, in svapnaa and sushupthi, what / who is the illuminator?" was the last question of King Janaka. To this, Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa answered: "Aathmaa eva asya jyothi: bhavathi; aathmanaa eva ayam jyothishaa aasthe, palyayathe, karma kuruthe, vilpalyetha" (IV.iii.6) - "Because of the aathma jyothi: alone, all activities are happening (in svapna avasthaa)".

When this answer was given by the Sage, King Janakaa asked "kathama: aathmaa?" (IV.iii.7) - "What is that aathmaa, that you are talking about?"

As an answer to this question, the avasthaathraya vivekaa was given by Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa. Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa is referring to this portion of the Brahadhaarananyaka Upanishad.

पृष्टः मुनिः - When the Sage (Yaagnyavalkyaa) was asked (by King Janakaa),

What is the question? Ans: "kathama: aathmaa?" - "What is that aathmaa, which is the ultimate light?"

In Vedhaanthaa, the word 'light' has a special definition. That definition is: "Light is that, in the presence of which, things are known and in the absence of which, things are not known".

Based on this definition, it is easy to comprehend that 'sun', 'moon', 'fire' etc. are 'lights', as in common parlance. But, in Vedhaanthaa, extending this definition, 'sense organs' are also called 'lights'. Taking 'eyes' as example, if a person is blind, even in the presence of bright sunlight, he cannot see any object. This fact can be expressed as "only in the presence of eyes, things are seen or 'known' and in the absence of eyes, things are not seen or 'known'". The above definition can therefore, be extended to 'eyes' also, and 'eyes' also called 'light' in Vedhaanthaa. So also the ears, since a deaf person will not be able to comprehend or 'know' subjects addressed to him, because of absence of the hearing faculty.

In short, in Vedhaanthaa, when the word 'light' is mentioned, it should not be restricted to sunlight, moonlight, light of fires, light of a lamp etc.; 'sense organs' are also looked upon as 'lights'.

And, thereafter, Vedhaanthaa says, that, 'mind' also is a light; because, in the presence of mind alone, things are known. In the absence of mind, even if external lights are there and sense organs are there, things will not be known. Needless to say, that, if, during a class, a student's mind wanders away from the class, he will not hear the teachings. Therefore, 'mind' is also a 'light'.

Vedhaanthaa finally says that even if all of them, viz., external lights, sense organs and mind are there, the world cannot be known, if another important entity is missing. Sense organs are made up of matter only i.e. they are inert by nature. They do not have 'knowing power' of their own. Mind is also made up of matter only i.e. it is also inert by nature and does not have 'knowing power' of its own. Sense organs and mind can function only when there is another 'light'.

What is that 'light'?

Vedhaanthaa talks about two types of light – boudhika jyothi: and aboudhika jyothi: - material light and non-material light. 'Baudhikam' means 'material' and 'abaudhikam' means 'non-material' / 'spiritual'.

Soorya:, Chandra:, agni:, indriyaani, mana: etc. are all boudhika jyothi: / The sense organs and mind are also boudhika jyothi only. Therefore, the external lights, sense organs and mind are not 'ultimate light'. All of them are able to function as jyothis, only because of an aboudhika jyothi, which is none other than Brahman or Aathmaa.

What is the difference between boudhikam jyothi: and aboudhikam jyothi:? The difference is : Boudhika jyothi: can become jyothi:, only in the presence of aboudhika jyothi:, whereas the aboudhika jyothi: can be a jyothi:, without the support of boudhika jyothi: |

Mundakopanishad (II.ii.10) declares: "Hiranmaye pare kose virajam brahma nishkalam thath subhram jyothishaam jyothi:" – "The spotless, partless Brahman is in the supreme effulgent abode. It is pure. It is the light of lights". Lord Krishna also refers to Brahman in the Bhagavadh Githa (Ch. XIII – verse 18) as "Thadh jyothishaam api jyothi:"- "It is the light of all lights".

All *boudhika jyothi:*s are able to function as jyothi:, only because of that aboudhika jyothi:, Brahman, the 'jyothishaam jyothi:' | And, that non-material 'jyothishaam jyothi:' is called svayam jyothi:, in the Chaandoghya Upanishad (VIII.12.3).

In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa says "aathmaa eva asya jyothi: bhavath'" (IV.iii.6) - "The Self serves as his light". Aathmaa illumines the mind and converts the mind into a jyothi: | King Janakaa questions the sage further : "Kathama: aathmaa'" (IV.iii.7) – "Which is the Self ?".

This question is what Sureswaraachaaryaa is referring to, in this sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 42, by 'Prushto muni: - "The sage, when questioned".

When King Janakaa thus asks for more clarification on aathma jyothi:, what does Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa do? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- निर्णेनेक्ति - (the sage) clarifies.

The verb 'nirnenekth' is a rarely used difficult word. 'Nij' is the root for this verb and 'nir' is a prefix. The verb literally would mean 'cleanses' or 'washes' and in this context, stands for "washing' the brain' or 'clarifying'.

The use of the word 'muni:', by Sureswaraachaaryaa, to refer to Yaagnyavalkyaa in this sambhandha gadhyam, is interesting. In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, the third and the fourth chapters are the most important and productive chapters. Both in these chapters, Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa is the central character. He roars like a lion, addressing everyone authoritatively with his brilliant teachings. Since he, a muni:, is the main aacharyaa in the 3rd and 4th chapters of the Upanishad, the two chapters are together called 'Muni kaandam', while the first two chapters together are called 'Madhu kaandam' and the last two together 'Kila kaandam'.

The middle pithy two chapters, together, get the name 'Muni Kaandam' because of Yaagnyavalkya Muni. Presumably, this is the reason that Sureswaraachaarya uses the word 'muni:', to refer to Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa, without mentioning his name.

Reverting to the text, how does Yaagnyavalkyaa clarify? Sureswaraachaaryaa answers in the next few verses.

Chapter III: Verse 42 –

आत्मनैवेत्युपश्रुत्य कोऽयमात्मेत्युदीरिते ।

बुद्धेः परं स्वतोमुक्तमात्मानं मुनिरभ्यधात् ॥ ४२ ॥

The King, being told 'by the light of the Self, it remains' (Brahadhaaryaka Upanishad - IV.iii.6), asks 'Who is the Self?'. In reply, the sage speaks of the Self, transcending the mind and intrinsically free.

- "आत्मना एव "इति उपश्रुत्य - Hearing 'by the light of the Self alone',

The reference is to King Janaka hearing the expression of Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa, in B.U. IV.iii.6. The expression quoted in this verse is 'aathmanaa eva'. The full sentence is "aathmanaa eva ayam jyothishaa aasthe palyayathe karma kuruthe vipalyethi" - "for every individual, aathmaa alone is the ultimate and non-material light, which is required for all the transactions".

Even to handle the material lights, one requires the non-material light of Consciousness. Obviously, even an elegant, life-like statue, sculpted with open eyes and also holding a light in the hand, cannot do anything, including 'handling' the light, because the statue is inert; whereas, a live person is able to handle and use all the material lights, because of the non-material light of Consciousness in him. Therefore the statement , "aathmanaa eva ayam jyothishaa aasthe palyayathe karma kuruthe vipalyethi" – "because of the grace of the non-material light, aathmaa, alone all transactions are possible". Sureswaraachaarya does not give the full sentence here. The sentence will have to be completed as "Because of the grace of the non-material light aathmaa alone, the individual does all the transactions".

In which avasthaa? Ans: In all three avasthaas - jaagrath, svapnaa and sushupthi.

In sushupthi avasthaa, there is minimum transaction, viz. 'experiencing ajnaanam and aanandhaa.' 'Ajnaana aananda anubhava' transaction is going on in sushupthi, with the help of the dormant mind, called kaarana sareeram. With the help of the dormant mind, 'I' do the minimum transaction of 'ajnaana aananda anubhavaa'.

What is the proof for this minimum transaction? Ans: After waking up, 'I' am able to say: "I slept well; and, I was thoroughly happy".

The essence is, that, all transactions in all the avasthaas are possible only because of the non-material aathmaa.

Having heard such a statement, what did Janakaa do?

- कोयं"आत्मा इति "उदीरिते - (Janakaa) asked a question 'Who is that Self?'

Janakaa asked: "What is that non-material light of Consciousness / saakshh?"

This question bears comparison to the opening questions in the Kenopanishad, "Kena ishitham pathathi preshitham mana: kena praana: prathama: praithi yuktha: kena ishithaam vaacham imaam vadhanthi chakshu: srothram ka vu devo yunakthi" - "Willed by whom, does the mind fall on objects, as though it is forced? Directed by whom, does the main Praana function? Willed by whom, do the people speak these words? Which divine principle, indeed, directs the eyes and ears?", the questions essentially meaning "What is the non material light because of which the material sense organs are functioning and the material mind is functioning?"

The Kenopanishad guru commences his answer to these questions as: "srothrasya srothram manaso mana: yadh vaacho ha vaacham sa vu praanasya praana: chakshusha: chakshu:" (I.2) – "That principle is indeed the Ear of the ear, the Mind of the mind, the Speech of the speech, the Praana of the praana and the Eye of the eye" and ultimately reveals that 'light' as "Yadh vaachaa anabhyudhitham yena vaak abhyudhyathe thadeva brahma thvam viddh!"(I.5) – "May you understand that Brahman is that very Consciousness, which is not revealed by speech, but, by which Consciousness, the speech is revealed".

Reverting to the text, when Janakaa asked the question "Ka: ayam aathmaa?"- "Who is that Self?", what did Yaagnyavalkyaa do ?

मुनि :आत्मानं अभ्यधात् - The sage revealed the aathmaa,

Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa reveals the aathmaa as the 'observer' of the 'active mind' in svapnaa or the 'observer' of the 'dormant mind' / silence in sushupthi. Observer of the mind in svapnaa is aathmaa ; and, observer of the dormant mind in sushupthi is also aathmaa. But, in sushupthi, the fact "I am the observer" is not very clear. In svapnaa, the fact "I am the observer", is clear, because I go through varieties of svapnaa. 'Abhyadhaath' means 'taught'.

What is that aathmaa?

- बुद्धेः परं - which is distinct from the mind, (as 'observer' of the mind)

The general principle is: "The 'observer' of an 'object' is different from the 'object'. Ghata dhrashtaa ghataath bhinna: | Vruksha dhrashtaa vrukshaath bhinna: | 'I am the 'observer' of the tree; therefore, 'I' am different from the tree. 'I' am the 'observer' of the mind; therefore, 'I' am different from the mind. Hence the description 'buddhe: param'; and, therefore,

- स्वतः मुक्तं - and eternally free.

If someone hesitates to say "I am free", why the hesitation? Because, he considers himself obsessed with worries. Mind, of course, is subject to varieties of worries. But once the individual realizes that he is not the mind, he can dump all the worries on the mind and boldly claim "I am muktha:", not because worries are absent, but because he knows that worries belong to the objective world, in which objective world, mind is also an entity and 'I', the 'observer' of the worried mind am ever free.

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa declares in his Nirvaana Shatkam: "Na me dvesha ragau na me lobha mohau madho naiva me naiva maathsaryabhaava: | Na dharmo na chaartho na kamo na moksha: chidhaanandha roopa: sivoham sivoham" - " 'I' am free from hatred, free from desires , free from greed, free from delusion, free from arrogance and free from jealousy: nor am 'I' obsessed with the four purushaarthaas – dharmaa, arthaa, kaamaa and mokshaa. 'I' am of the nature of pure knowledge and bliss".

People bemoan "I have got kaama krodhaa problems. How can I claim I am muktha:?" Yaagnyavalkyaa argues: "Where do you have kama kridha or any of the other problems? All of them belong only to the mind. Why can you not move to the binary format, with the conviction "I am muktha:?" "

This line of thinking does not mean that one can allow one's mind to be impure. Even though 'I' am different from the mind, I cannot keep my mind dirty; I should cleanse my mind; but, I should also remember that 'my' liberation is not connected with the conditions of my mind. I should try to keep my mind clean always; but, whatever be the status of my mind, I will claim "nithya muktha: aathmaa asmi aham"| This is what Yaagnyavalkyaa taught Janakaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa asks: "Why do you not also join Janakaa and claim "'I' am muktha:?" "

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 43:

यस्माच्च आत्मा अत्र अहं व्याजेन प्रत्यङ् मात्रो जिग्राहयिषितस्तस्मादहंवृत्तिः स्वरूपस्य विलयेनैव वाक्यार्थावगमाय कारणत्वं प्रतिपद्यते इतीममर्थमाह ।

The inner Self is to be grasped through the ego-consciousness. Therefore, the ego sheds its own being and leads to the apprehension of the import of the proposition:

When a student comes to mahaa vaakya vicharaa and when the teacher says 'thath thvam asi', at the time of listening, the student has to use the ahamkaaraa. This is because, for sravanam, the student has to experience the external world; as a mere saakshi, he only 'objectifies' the mind and does not know the external world, as in dream. If the student has to experience the external world, what should he do? Not only should he illumine the mind as saakshi; thereafter, using the mind, he has to listen to the vaakyam thath thvam asi. This is similar to wiping the spectacles as an 'observer' or 'saakshi' and then putting the spectacles on, to become pramaathaa.

When the student hears the word 'thvam' (in 'thath thvam asi'), he should first convert it into 'aham'; in the first stage, when he says 'aham', he is premaathaa, because pramaathaa is listening to the teaching.

But, when the student comes to the whole mahaa vaakyam, viz., 'aham brahma asmi', what should he do? He should drop the mind which was used for listening / sravanam.

An example can be given. A rocket propelled into space is fitted with three or more fuel tanks; and, in stages drops the tanks, one by one. Ultimately, only a small portion of the rocket that is fired into space, goes round in space. The fuel tanks correspond to the three sareeram-s.

In the same manner, the student uses the 'mind fuel tank', for listening to the mahaa vaakyam. When he receives the vaakyam, at that time, he is pramaathaa. Thereafter, what does the student do? He drops the mind i.e. he dissociates from the mind.

When he associates with the mind, he is 'pramaathaa'; when he dissociates from the mind he is 'saakshi', different from the mind and 'observer' of the mind. That saakshi alone is equated with Brahman in 'aham Brahma asmi'. Associated with the mind, one cannot claim 'aham Brahma asmi'. This deliberate 'dissociating' from the mind is called bhaaga thyaaga lakshanam.

This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa also says: "Use the ahamkaaraa first ; later, drop the ahamkaaraa and remain as saakshi, while claiming 'aham Brahma asmi'.

- अहं व्याजेन - By using ahamkaaraa as an instrument / through the instrument called mind,

Mind and ahamkaaraa are synonymous. Mind with chidhaabhaasaa is called ahamkaaraa.

- प्रत्यङ् मात्र :आत्मा - the saakshi aathmaa, which is the internal Self,
- जिग्राह इषितः - is desired to be taught by the aachaaryaa.

What does the statement mean? The teacher wants the student to use the mind, at the time of sravanam, because, if the mind is not used, the student cannot hear the mahaa vaakyam. Therefore, use the mind to hear the mahaa vaakyam. Thereafter, when you say aham, the identification with the mind / inclusion of the mind has to be dropped. The word 'maathra' denotes this 'exclusion of the mind'. Only aathmaa is to be retained; not the ahamkaaraa.

'Jigraaha ishitha:' means 'desired to be taught'. The word 'Jigraaha' is also a peculiar usage, with the root as 'grah', arrived at, in four stages of grammar.

Therefore, what should be done? Ahamkaaraa has to be dissolved at the time of claiming 'aham Brahma asmi'. Dissolution / falsification / 'neighbourisation' of ahamkaaraa is compulsory for mahaa vaakyam to work. Unfortunately, quite a few Vedhaanthic students do not 'neighbourise' ahamkaaraa; therefore, to them, Vedhaantha appears to be irrelevant.

151. Chapter III, Verse 43 to 44 (27-08-2009)

One of the questions often asked by the Vedhaanthic student is "Who exactly claims 'aham Brahma asmi'?"; whether it is the saakshi that claims 'aham Brahma asmi' or whether it is the ahamkaaraa that claims 'aham Brahma asmi', 'saakshi' meaning the Original Consciousness or bhimbha chaithanyam and 'ahamkaaraa' meaning the mind, associated with prathibhimbitha chaithanyam.

If you give a firm and specific reply either way, you will be in trouble, because neither saakshi nor ahamkaaraa can claim 'aham brahma asmi'. In fact, saakshi cannot do any vyavahaaraa without ahamkaaraa. That is why, in 'deep sleep' state, when the ahamkaaraa is resolved, we are not able to do any vyavahaaraa, let alone study Vedhaantha or claim 'aham Brahma asmi'.

What about ahamkaaraa? Ahamkaaraa also cannot claim 'aham Brahma asmi', because of the simple reason that, ahamkaaraa is not Brahman; ahamkaaraa being a finite, changing entity, it can never claim "I am the infinite Brahman". Therefore, ahamkaaraa also cannot make this claim and saakshi also cannot.

Then, who claims 'aham Brahma asmi'?

Vedhaantha's answer is: "All vyavahaaraa-s are done neither by the pure ahamkaaraa nor by the pure saakshi; all vyavahaaraas are done only by the mixture of saakshi and ahamkaaraa. Since all vyavahaaraas go on through the mixture, the saasthric study is also done by the saakshi-ahamkaaraa mixture only and 'aham Brahma asmi' is also claimed by the mixture only".

This question "Is it the saakshi, that claims 'aham Brahma asmi' or is it the ahamkaaraa that claims 'aham Brahma asmi'?" is akin to the question "Is it electricity that illumines the room or is it the bulb that illumines the room?" The answer to this (second) question is obvious: "The electricity cannot illumine, if the bulb is not there; and the bulb also cannot illumine, if electrical power is not there. It is the combination of electricity and bulb that illumines or reveals".

In the same manner, ahamkaaraa cannot do any transaction without saakshi, because the very consciousness of ahamkaaraa is borrowed from saakshi. Therefore, kevala ahamkaaraa cannot do any vyavahaaraa. Kevala saakshi also cannot do any vyavahaaraa, in the absence of the medium, the mind. Mind and thought are required for vyavahaaraa. So, the Vedhaanthic student should clearly know, that all vyavahaaraas are done by the saakshi- ahamkaaraa mixture only. This is clearly stated by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa also, in his Adhyaasya Bhaashyam, with which he starts his Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam, that, all transactions are because of this saakshi-ahamkaaraa mixture only.

If you want to know the independent nature of saakshi and the independent nature of ahamkaaraa, you have a tough job, because, the two cannot be physically separated. Saakshi cannot be physically separated and shown; nor can ahamkaaraa be physically separated. The 'separation' requires ingenious methods of enquiry. We require sruthi pramaanam; we require yukthi pramaanam; and we require anubhava pramaanam also.

Using the combination of the three, sruthi, yukthi and anubhavaa, we have to intellectually separate the saakshi and ahamkaaraa.

But, it should be remembered, that, all transactions are always done by this mixture only.

The avasthaathraya vivekaa is done, because, we find, that, during sushupthi avasthaa, saakshi is dominant, and ahamkaaraa is dormant, even though I am still a mixture of saakshi and ahamkaaraa. Ahamkaaraa is not absent in sushupthi; it is only dormant. I am still a mixture only; but, in that mixture, during sushupthi, saakshi is dominant and ahamkaaraa is dormant.

So, to understand or know the saakshi component of 'me', I should go to sushupthi anubhavaa. 'Going' to sushupthi anubhavaa means 'recollection' and 'study' of my sushupthi anubhavaa. In sushupthi, I find, that, I do not have time limitation; that, I do not have space limitation; that, I do not have any limitation.

I do not have any sorrow also in sushupthi; not only that; I have all aananda in sushupthi. What is the proof? Ans: I love to go to sushupthi, which fact indicates, that, in sushupthi, limitations are absent, sorrow is absent and aanandhaa is present. And, since, in sushupthi, saakshi is dominant, the study of sushupthi anubhavaa would show the saakshi as sath-chith-aananda-svaroopaa: |

Similarly, when I want to know the nature of ahamkaaraa, I should 'go' to jaagarath avasthaa, i.e. I should recollect and study jaagarath anubhavaa. In jaagrath avasthaa also I am a mixture of saakshi and ahamkaaraa. The mixture is in all the three avasthaas. But, during jaagrath avasthaa, the 'mind plus chidhabhaasaad' or the ahamkaaraa is dominant. Space-wise limitations, time-wise limitations, attribute-wise limitations, problems etc. are dominant. Therefore, what is ahamkaaraa? Ans: Full of problems. In contrast, what is saakshi? Ans: Nithya muktha: |

Thus, using the sruthi, yukthi and anubhava pramaanam-s, I separate the higher I and the lower I intellectually. There is no state in which saakshi alone is present. Many people wrongly think that, in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, I am pure saakshi without ahamkaaraa. But, it should be realized and remembered that if ahamkaaraa is destroyed in my nirvikalpaka samaadhi, as they wrongly believe, I will never come out of that samaadhi. The very fact that people come out from the nirvikalpaka samaadhi, indicates that in the nirvikalpaka samaadhi also, ahamkaaraa is there. Therefore, it should be very clear to the student of Vedhaanthee that the 'mixture' is always involved.

And, during the mahaa vaakya sravanam also, the mixture is involved. Therefore, when I am listening to the mahaa vaakyam, who am I? Ans: I am the saakshi-ahamkaaraa mixture.

But, instead of saying "I am the saakshi-ahamkaaraa mixture", I marginally change the language and say "I am the saakshi, operating through the ahamkaaraa".

During Vedhaanthee, Saakshi component is given prominence and therefore, to the question "who am I?", I reply "I am the saakshi, but functioning through ahamkaaraa, to listen to the mahaa vaakyam".

Sureswaraacharya says that the aspirant repeats the mahaa vaakyam with the help of ahamkaaraa and through the ahamkaaraa, he learns to claim the saakshi component alone as Brahman. I use the ahamkaaraa; but, later, I should discount the ahamkaaraa; I should not include the ahamkaaraa part in 'me', when I claim 'aham Brahma asmi'. This 'discounting' is called bhaaga thyaagha lakshanam.

What do I do thereafter? I should remember the Brahman description in that part of Vedhaanthee, where "Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa" has been talked about; everything other than Brahman is mithyaa. Therefore, having claimed the saakshi part alone as Brahman, ahamkaaraa is to be understood as mithyaa instrument to claim the sathya saakshi. Sureswaraacharya calls this process as 'ahamkaaraa laya.', in this sambhandha gadhyam, using the expression 'vilayena eva'. But, the 'falsification' should be done only after coming to saakshi – not in the beginning of the Vedhaanthee study itself. The example given in an earlier context may be recollected: "After drinking coffee from a paper cup, the cup is crushed and trashed".

Reverting to the text:

- तस्मात् - Therefore,

- अहंवृत्ति :स्वरूपस्य विलयेन एव - by 'falsification' of the ahamkaaraa component, 'vilayam' literally means 'dissolution'. Here, 'dissolution' means 'falsification'.
- वाक्यार्थ अवगमाय - leading to understanding the saakshi component as Brahman,
- कारणत्वं प्रतिपद्यते - ahamkaaraa becomes an instrument.

And, even after claiming 'aham Brahma asmi', I will be using ahamkaaraa for transactions; but, with the awareness that the ahamkaaraa is a mithyaa costume. Therefore, who am 'I'?
Ans: 'I' am Saakshi only. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says 'kaaranathvam prathipadhyathe', meaning that ahamkaaraa becomes only a means.

इति इमं अर्थ आह - This idea is clarified in the following sloka.

Chapter III: Verse 43 –

अहंवृत्त्यैव तदब्रम यस्मादेषोऽवगच्छति ।

तत्स्वरूपलयेनातः कारणं स्यादहंकृतिः ॥ ४३ ॥

As one understands that Brahman through the ego-awareness, the ego becomes instrumental in this matter by self-elimination.

Esha: - The student

'Esha:' refers to the student, who is the saakshi using the ahamkaaraa component as a medium for contacting the external world.

The example of the 'spectacles' may be recollected. When I am merely looking at my spectacles, it is an object; when I am wearing the spectacles to perceive the external world, it is an instrument. In a similar manner, I use the 'ahamkaaraa spectacles' as an instrument to listen to the mahaa vaakyam coming from the teacher. Therefore, 'esha:' means 'saakshi with ahamkaaraa instrument'.

अहं वृत्त्या एव - through the ahamkaaraa spectacles / instrument,

Obviously, Sureswaraachaaryaa does not say 'spectacles' or use it as an example. But, the example is useful to make the understanding easier.

How do you prove that the ahamkaaraa is a temporary spectacles / instrument? Ans: In sushupthi, I remove the ahamkaaraa and exist as pure saakshi. That is the pramaanam that ahamkaaraa is 'usable and removeable'. In Jaagrath avasthaa, through the ahamkaaraa spectacles :

तद् ब्रह्म अवगच्छति - clearly grasps that Brahman,

'Thadh' and 'Brahma' are two separate words.

This Brahman, which is 'sath', the 'pure Existence', is introduced as the jagath kaaranam in Chaandoghya Upanishad, where, the teaching starts with 'Pure Existence'; and later, that Existence is equated with 'I', the saakshi Consciousness. It is 'Consciousness-Existence-equation' that is done.

And, after claiming "'I' am the 'Consciousness – saakshi', which is identical with 'Existence – Brahma'", what happens to the mind / ahamkaaraa?

तत्स्वरूपलयेन - by self-elimination i.e. by falsification of 'ahamkaaraa'.

After coming to sath-chith-Brahman, the mind is falsified. Mind does not have a consciousness of its own nor does mind not have an existence of its own. 'I' lend both of them (Consciousness and Existence) to the mind. When I wake up to the saakshi, mind resolves (falsifies). 'Thadh svarooapa layena', means 'ahamkaara svarooapa layena'.

The anvayam of this part of the verse will read: "Aham vrutthya thadh svarooapa layena esha: (saakshi vidhyaarthe) thadh Brahma avagachchathi" |

- अतः : - Therefore,
- अहंकृति कारणं :स्यात् - ahamkaaraa becomes a temporary means (to claim the saakshi Brahman).

'Kaaranam' means 'the temporary means'.

This alone is otherwise called 'adhyaropa apavaadha nyaayaa', which has been explained by the example of the 'pot and the clay', in earlier contexts and is repeated below.

The example is explained as follows: As a first step, the guru introduces: "There is a pot, which is a kaaryam or a product". The student recognizes the existence of the pot as 'kaaryam'. Then, what is its kaaranam? The guru points out: "The pot is born out of clay", i.e., he introduces clay as 'kaaranam' for the pot. The student's attention shifts from the kaaryam pot to the kaaranam clay. Once the student's attention has thus shifted to the clay, the guru asks the student: "Does the pot exist separate from clay?" On careful analysis, the student arrives at the conclusion that there is no such thing as pot, other than clay. The student may still be holding / handling the pot, but, he understands that there is no pot other than clay. This 'understanding' is called 'falsification' of the pot. But, initially, the very same pot is useful to understand the clay. Thus, through the pot, the clay is understood; and after understanding the clay, the pot is 'falsified'.

'Falsification of pot' does not mean 'physical removal of the pot'; but, understanding that there is no pot other than clay, even while using the pot.

'Ahamkaara' is similar to the pot in the example and saakshi is similar to the clay. "Use the ahamkaara pot; come to the saakshi clay; thereafter, falsify the ahamkaara pot, even when you are using the ahamkaara pot" is the route map.

The jnaani understands that there is no ahamkaara other than saakshi; nevertheless, he uses the 'falsified' ahamkaara after attaining jnaanam also, for loka sangraha karmaani. Therefore, ahamkaara is useful.

A question may arise: "If ahamkaara is false, how can it be useful?" Vedhaantha points out that, ironically, only false things are useful. Gold is never, never useful as ornament directly i.e. as a bar or nugget of gold. It is useful only when it is shaped into an ornament i.e. its utility arrives because of naama and roopa. Similarly, pure wood is not useful; it has to be shaped into 'furniture'; pure clay is not useful; it has to be shaped into a 'pot' to be useful. This shows that only 'naama-roopaa-s' are useful for vyavahaara. But, neither naama nor roopaa has 'existence-s' of their own; i.e. they are 'false' or 'mithyaa' by nature. So, we arrive at the inevitable conclusion that only 'false' things are useful. Therefore, the question "If ahamkaara is false, how is it useful?" is answered by Vedhaantha, as "Because ahamkaara is false, it is useful".

Similarly, pure Brahman also is utterly useless. "Therefore," Vedhaantha advises "Be Brahman, use the false naamaas and roopaaas and do all the transactions".

"Therefore" (in a lighter vein) "I' am useless Reality; but, 'I' use the mithyaa ahamkaara, for the entertainment called life".

Chaandhoghya Upanishad (VI.1.4) declares: "Yathaa ekena mruthpindena sarvam mrunmayam vinyaatham syaath vaachaarambhanam vikaaro naamadheyam mritthikaa ithyeva sathyam" – "As by knowing a lump of clay, all things made of clay become known, all transformations have speech as their basis and they are names only. Earth, as such, is the reality" implying "If one 'knows' Brahman, one 'knows' the entire creation, since the world is only a form of Brahman. It is the Cause, Brahman, which alone has Reality. Everything else is only name and form".

Brahadhaaranayaka Upanishad (I.vi.1) also declares: "Thrayam vaa idham naama roopam karma" – "This universe indeed consists of three things, name, form and action". World is nothing but mithyaa names, mithyaa forms and mithyaa functions. The only Reality is saakshi and ahamkaaraa is used to understand that saakshi.

If, then, a question is raised "If Brahman is useless and the world alone is useful, why do we not 'ignore' or 'abolish' Brahman?", this question will be similar (in absurdity) to the question "If gold is useless and its naama-roopaa-s are useful, why do we not remove the gold?". Obviously, ornaments cannot exist without the material of which they are made. Similarly, naamaas and roopaa-s cannot have existence without Brahman. In a movie theatre, the screen does not participate in the movie as a character; but without the screen, no character can be there in the movie.

The above analysis shows that we require the saakshi also and we require the ahamkaaraa also, for all vyavahaaraas. But, it should be remembered that ahamkaaraa is mithyaa. Vedhaanthee does not want the aspirant to destroy ahamkaaraa; it advises him "Use the ahamkaaraa ; but understand that it is mithyaa". That is called svaroopa pravilaapanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 44:

अत एव च यः प्रतिजातोऽर्थो "नाहं ग्राहो न तद्वीने" इत्यादिः स युक्तिभिरुपपादित इति कृत्वोपसंहियते।

Therefore, what was declared in the beginning (II.5) stands vindicated through reason and as such, the argument concludes.

अतः एव - Therefore only,

What does the Aachaaryaa mean by 'atha'?

Explanation: It was already seen, that, at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam, the student should use ahamkaaraa; using ahamkaaraa, he should climb up to the saakshi; and, after coming to the saakshi, he should 'neighbourise' ahamkaaraa; he should not say "I am the ahamkaaraa, with a saakshi component"; but, should say "I am the saakshi, with an incidental ahamkaaraa neighbour". The attitude "I am ahamkaaraa and saakshi is the neighbor" is of no use, since, in that case, 'my' neighbor is wonderful, while 'I', the ahamkaaraa will continue to be miserable.

If, on the other hand, I do mahaa vaakya sravanam properly, using ahamkaaraa alright, thereafter, climb up to the saakshi, and, thereafter, arrive at the firm conviction " 'I' am the saakshi; ahamkaaraa is my neighbor; not only neighbor but a falsified neighbor also", there will be no contradiction in claiming "sacchidhaanandha: Brahma aham asmi". This 'neighbourisation' of ahamkaaraa is what is referred to, by Sureswaraachaaryaa, by the term 'svaroopasya vilayena', in the previous sambhandha gadhyam (of verse 43).

But, if the student continues as ahamkaaraa, because his mind is preoccupied with his family and other circumstances, and considers saakshi as the neighbor, the sruthi mahaa vaakyam 'aham Brahma asmi' will not fit . If ahamkaaraa is 'neighbourised', "aham saakshi Brahma asmi" is not a contradiction. This is what is being referred to, by Sureswaraachaaryaa by the terse term 'atha: eva' |

In short, by the term 'atha: eva' he means "because ahamkaaraa is neighbor and I am the saakshi / because ahamkaaraa is costume and I am the wearer".

प्रतिज्ञात अर्थ : - the proposition that was made in the beginning,

Where was the proposition made?

नाहंग्राह्ये"न तद्वीने "इत्यादि : - in sloka 5 of the dvitheeya adhyaaya: , starting with 'Na aham graahye na thadveene',

What was the proposition given in that sloka? Ans: "There is no contradiction (pramaana virodha;) at all, in the Sruthi statement 'aham Brahma asmi', when I make the claim 'aham Brahma asmi'".

How has it been established? Ans: "If you view the 'aham' of the mahaa vaakyam as the ahamkaaraa component of the saakshi-ahamkaaraa mixture, the vaakyam is a contradiction. But, if you view 'aham' as the saakshi component of the mixture, there is no contradiction. In other words, if you take the vaachyaartha of the word aham, there is contradiction. If you take the lakshyaartha, there is no contradiction."

Bhaaga thyaagha lakshanaa has to be done, if mahaa vaakyam is to be understood in the proper sense.

Unfortunately, most Vedhaanthic students, even if they thoroughly learn the theoretical meanings of jahathi lakshanaa, ajahathi lakshanaa, bhaaga thyaaga lakshanaa etc., when they think about themselves / when they do a self-assessment, they tend to continue in the ahamkaaraa component and conclude "Life is terrible and I am miserable". This conclusion is the result of ahamkaaraa dominating the mind, whereas, Vedhaantha says "'You' are wonderful", meaning saakshi by the word 'you'. Thus, there is a communication gap.

As already pointed out in an earlier session, suppose a student says "I am not interested in saakshi; I am interested in ahamkaaraa; I am interested in improvements to ahamkaaraa", Vedhaantha will tell him "In that case, you have come to the wrong place; you should go to the karma kaanadaa of the Vedaas; you can go to temples for special prayers and vows; and, also do parihaaraa-s as prescribed by the Karma Kanda. But, be warned, that all parihaaraa-s will be only temporary. Therefore, it is up to you, to decide whether you want 'temporary' ahamkaaraa improvements or the permanent solution to samsaaraa, viz., the 'saakshi claim with ahamkaaraa falsification'".

इति कृत्वा उपसंह्रियते - That topic (the need to attribute 'thvam' and 'aham' in the mahaa vaakyaa-s with their laksyaartha-s and not vachyaartha-s) is being concluded now.

Chapter III: Verse 44 –

गृहीताहंपदार्थस्चेत्कस्मात्जो न प्रपद्यते ।

प्रत्यक्षादिविरोधाच्चेत्प्रतीच्युक्तिर्न युष्मदि ॥ ४४ ॥

If a person has understood the import of 'I' in the proposition "'I' am Brahman", why does he not understand the meaning of the whole proposition? If it be said that the proposition goes against the evidence of perception etc., it is untenable. The proposition concerns the inmost and self-luminous Self and not the external world.

Sureswaraacharya asks the question: "What is the problem in grasping the mahaa vaakyams, as even as the teacher is revealing them? I do not see any problem at all. The communication must be the smoothest thing. The teacher tells the student 'thath thvam asi' and in response, the student must say 'aham Brahma asmi'. And, this communication must be over in a few minutes. I do not know why it should take long years. I am confused as to why there is 'confusion' in this understanding".

अहं पदार्थः गृहीतः चेत् - If the meaning of the word 'aham', (at the time of the statement 'aham Brahma asmi') is grasped,

What is aham padhaartha? Ans: It is the 'sathyam saakshi' component. And, what about ahamkaaraa? Ans: I am using ahamkaaraa for the Vedhaanthic study; but, ahamkaaraa is mithyaa superficial component of me; it is the mithyaa vesham that 'I' have put on, for the drama called life.

The 5th capsule of Vedhaanthalaa (in Swamiji's 'five capsules of Vedhaanthalaa'), viz. 'By forgetting my real nature, I convert life into a struggle and by remembering my real nature, I convert life into a blessing' is relevant here.

The aspirant should remember that 'I' am 'sathyam saakshI', and that 'I' only use 'mithyaa ahamkaaraa' component for all vyavahaaraa-s, including study of Vedhaanthalaa.

'Gruheetha: chethI' (in the verse) means 'if grasped'. If the true meaning of 'aham' had been grasped:

- कस्मात् अ न प्रपद्यते - why does the student / the listener / the pramaathaa not understand (that 'I' am wonderful Brahman) ?

'jnaya:' refers to the student / the listener of the mahaa vaakyamI the pramaathaa.

(In a lighter vein) Why does not the student come out of the class saying "'I' am wonderful", instead of saying "The class was wonderful" or "The Swamiji was wonderful" or "Sureswaraachaaryaa is wonderful"?

The informed student should claim "'I' am wonderful; life is wonderful". Instead why should he say "I want to die, never to come back again. This must be my last birth"?

He should claim, as in Thaithreeya Upanishad – Bhrguvalli: "aham annam aham annaadha: aham slokakrith aham asmi prathamajaa: ruthasya" - "I am the food. I am the food eater. I am the combiner. I am the eldest of the Creation". Instead, why should the student moan "I am miserable"?

A student might respond: "But, what you say is against all my experiences. I am not able to accept that I am wonderful; all my experiences are terrible experiences. When the experiences are terrible, how can I say I am wonderful? Your statement is contradictory to my experiences". Sureswaraachaarya refers to such a response (in the second line of the verse):

प्रत्यक्षादि विरोधात् चेत् - If it is said "I will never accept I am wonderful, because all my experiences gained through all pramaanams, starting with prathyakshaa, (viz.,

prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapathi and anupalabhdhi are terrible" / If it be said that the proposition goes against the evidence of perception etc.,

"If this is your question" Sureswaraacharya says "I will answer it. If only you think properly, you will understand that if all experiences are found terrible, it only means that anaathmaa is terrible. This is because every experience through every pramaanaa is dealing only with anaathmaa and there is no pramaanaa which objectifies the experiencer 'I'. Why do you not think on this? 'All the experiences are terrible' means 'all the objects of experience are terrible'. This may not be totally true; but even granting that this is totally true, it only means that anaathmaa is terrible. Vedhaantha is not talking about anaathmaa. Vedhaantha never said that anaathmaa is wonderful. Vedhaantha says the experiencer 'I', which is experiencing the anaathmaa / which is reporting that anaathmaa-s are terrible, is the one which is wonderful".

There are two types of anaathmaa - remote anaathmaa and proximate anaathmaa. Out of the pancha anaathmaa-s, 'remote anaathmaa' refers to one's profession, possessions and family. They are all remote anaathmaa. There is the proximate anaathmaa consisting of one's body and mind.

All experiences are related to these remote and proximate anaathmaa; they may be terrible; and, these experiences are reported by the pancha pramaana-s other than sruthi – viz., prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthy and anupalabhdhi.

But, mahaa vaakyam, on the other hand, is not talking about anaathmaa. Mahaa vaakyam never said anaathmaa is wonderful. It is talking about 'you', the aathmaa, who is behind the experiences / who is objectifying the anaathmaa.

Prathyaksha pramaanam has never seen that experiencer 'I'. Prathyakshaa has not seen the aathmaa; anumaanaa has not seen the aathmaa; nor have upamaanaa, arthaapatthy and anupalabhdhi.

These five pramaana-s - prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapathi and anupalabhdhi – are all talking about only anaathmaa / dealing with yushmath prathyaya gocharaa:| These five pramaana-s may report anaathmaa is terrible. But, Mahaa vaakya pramaanam is talking about aathmaa / is dealing with asmath prathyaya gocharam. Mahaa vaakya pramaanam says "'I", the aathmaa is wonderful". Where is the contradiction?

"Therefore" Sureswaraacharya says "If you see any contradiction, it is because you have mixed up and messed up the pramaanam-s and prameyam-s. You have mixed up Anaathma pramaanam-s and anaathma prameyam-s with aathma pramaanam and aathma prameyam.

Prathyakshaadhi pramaanam-s are anaathma pramaanam-s and all your terrible experiences are anaathma prameyam-s. Mahaa vaakyam is aathma pramaanam and the aathma prameyam is 'I', the saakshi'.

- उक्तिः - The mahaa vaakya statement
- प्रतीची - is talking about the experiencer 'I',
- न युष्मदि - and not about the external world.

It is the experiencer 'I', which is sath, which is chith and which is aanandhaa. World does not have a drop of aanandhaa. The seeker should meditate on this fact. Pancha anaathmaa-s do not have a drop of aanandhaa of their own. Even mind does not have or produce aanandhaa, leave alone the other anaathmaa - profession / possession/ family or body.

What happens is, when there is punyaa, favourable conditions are created and the mind is able to produce three types of vrutthi - priya, modha and pramodhaa; either priyaa thought or modhaa thought or pramodhaa thought.

At best, the mind generates priya, modha and pramodhaa ; and, at that time, 'I', who am the embodiment of anandhaa (of which truth there can be no doubt) temporarily get reflected in priya, modha and pramodhaa. Then there is experiential, temporary aanandhaa. When the vrutthi goes away, the experiential aanandhaa also will go away, because the reflecting medium is gone. Thereafter, who is there? 'I', the aanandha aathmaa am there.

Thaithreeya Upanishad (Brahmaanadha vaalli) describes aathmaa as "aanandha aathmaa". Therefore, the seeker should regularly claim this fact, viz., "'I' am aanandha svaroopaa:", even more often than "'I' am sath" or "'I' am chith".

But, when can I experience it? Ans: As already said, whenever priya vrutthi, modha vrutthi and pramodha vrutthi comes. (Of course, one can 'generate' that vrutthi, by remembering some wonderful past experience).

Another interesting fact: "When your hand is healthy and functioning, even though the aanandhaa svaroopaa is there, you do not experience or enjoy it; but, if, because of an accident or some other temporary disorder, the hand is not functional for a few days and thereafter the hand becomes functional again, you are so happy that you are able to make use of the hand again and 'enjoy' the use of the hand. To enjoy the hand, you required to lose it for some time and get it back. Similarly, aanandhaa is always 'mine' only; but, now and then, when it manifests, I understand and enjoy it".

Thus, priya, modha and paramodha vrutthi-s are only manifestations of 'my' aanandhaa. But, aanandhaa is 'my' nature all the time. The seeker should keep claiming this through mahaa vaakyam and whenever there is a sense of contradiction, he should say: "All terrible experiences belong to anaathmaa only; but, I am aanadha svarooopa:". There is absolutely no contradiction in this; not the ahamkaaraa.

152. Chapter III, Verse 44 and 45 (05-09-2009)

Sureswaraacharya points out that mahaa vaakyam itself will be directly able to give 'aham Brahma asmi' jnaanam, even at the time of the very sraavanam itself, if only the student co-operates with the guru and saasthraas, keeping aside all pre-conceived notions. On the other hand, if proper co-operation is not there on the part of the student, there will be communication gaps and mahaa vaakyam will not be able to do what it has to do.

Mahaa vaakyam says "'I' am wonderful"; but, we are not able to accept or claim this. We have views against the mahaa vaakyam. Our argument is "When all my experiences are terrible, how can I believe that 'I' am wonderful? All the pramaanams reveal to me only terrible experiences and the sruthi pramaanam says 'I' am wonderful. Therefore, sruthi's teaching is sarvapramaana virodha: | And, when a sarva pramaana virodhaa teaching is given, I will not be able to accept it, though I may have respect for sruthi."

Dayananda Swamiji often gives an example for this: "Suppose I take a small bunch of flowers in my hand and tell you 'I have got a huge elephant on the palm of my hand ; may all of you look at this elephant for one minute'. Every student will screw his ears and wonder 'what is Swamiji saying?' I repeat my statement a second time. Then, out of respect for me and giving me the benefit of doubt, you will ask your neighbor 'My ears seem a little bit hard of hearing. What did the Swamiji say?'. The neighbor will confirm: 'Swamiji says 'look at the huge elephant on my palm'. And, even if all the students have got sraddhaa and bhakthi for the Aacharya, they may continue to do namaskaaraa to the teacher, they will not be able to accept this statement, because the statement is contradictory to their prathyaksha anubhavaa, which tells them 'there is no elephant here; it is only a small bunch of flowers that Swamiji is holding in his palm'."

The essence is that "intellect cannot accept pramaana viruddha ideas". This is what happens at the time of listening to mahaa vaakyam also. Sureswaraacharya understands this confusion of the student and hastens to assure "There can never be a contradiction between sruthi pramaanam / mahaa vaakya sabdha pramaanam and other pramaanam-s, like prathyaksha, anumaanaa etc. and there is no contradiction also."

He explains why: "All our experiences are results of prathyaksha pramaanam. Mental experiences such as emotions will come under saakshi prathyaksha pramaanam. External world comes under indriya prathyaksham. All our experiences, external or mental, are, therefore, based on prathyaksha pramaanam. But, all experiences deal only with anaathmaa. It follows, therefore, that, prathyaksha pramaanam deals with anaathmaa only; on a similar analysis, you will find that, all pramaanam-s other than mahaa vaakyam, are also dealing only with anaathmaa. On the other hand, sruthi pramaanam is dealing with aathmaa. And, it is the only pramaanam dealing with aathmaa. Thus, when the very subject matter of sruthi pramaanam is different from that of prathyakshaa and other pramaanam-s, how can there be any talk of contradiction between sruthi and other pramaanam-s?

“To explain this with an example: ‘eyes’ reveal the knowledge of forms and colours; ‘ears’ reveal knowledge of sound; thus, ‘eyes’ and ‘ears’ are functioning in two totally different fields. How can there be any contradiction between ‘eyes’ and ‘ears’?

“If two pramaanam-s function in the same field, there is a possibility of contradiction – one pramaanam revealing a particular knowledge and the other revealing something contradictory. But, certainly not when they function in two different fields.

“When the very subject matters of sruthi and the other pramaanam-s are different, how can there be any contradiction? Mahaa vaakyam is dealing with ‘aathmaa’; all our experiences deal with anaathmaa. Mahaa vaakyam is dealing with ‘Me’, the observer. All our experiences deal with the ‘observed’. Mahaa vaakyam is dealing with ‘saakshi’; all our experiences deal with ‘saakshyam’. Thus, the very fields of operation are different. Therefore, contradiction is not at all possible between sruthi and other pramaanam-s.

“This fact must be clearly understood and assimilated by a diligent seeker. Otherwise, mahaa vaakyam will never function, even if he listens to it for millions and millions of janmaa-s”.

As long as the seeker thinks that there is contradiction, he will ask “How can I claim I am free here and now, when my experiences are terrible experiences?”.

Sureswaraacharya is aware of this problem and therefore, emphasizes, in the last portion of the 44th sloka, “pratheechi ukthi: na yushmadhi”. This is a very important line.

‘ukthi:’, in this context, means ‘mahaa vaakya pramaanam’ and ‘pratheechi’ conveys ‘is dealing with the prathyak aathmaa, the saakshi’.

Sruthi or mahaa vaakya pramaanam does not say that body is wonderful. Sruthi will never say “body is wonderful”, because it knows that no physical body can ever be free and totally wonderful. Therefore, no sruthi pramaanam will or can say “body is wonderful”.

No sruthi pramaanam will also ever say “mind is wonderful”, because mind also is anaathmaa, subject to the influence of millions of forces, including biochemical conditions. Mind is also subject to desaa, kaalaa and the laws of karmaa.

Even Isvara's mind can never be relaxed all the time. When Isvara sees people suffering because of their past karmaas and therefore, screaming in anguish, His mind also will be disturbed by emotion, even if that emotion is called 'compassion'. No mind, including Bhagavaan's, can be perfectly wonderful or free. And, therefore, no sruthi vaakyam will say "mind is wonderful".

Everyone's mind is subject to the fluctuations of sattva, rajas and thamas constantly. As for one's physical body, generally, in the first thirty or forty years of one's life, the physical body is fantastic. But, as one ages, the physical body decays gradually and, very often, at an advanced age, it is experienced as 'terrible'

If sruthi says "body is ever wonderful", it is 'contradiction'. If sruthi says "mind is ever wonderful", it is 'contradiction'. If sruthi says that any part of anaathmaa is ever wonderful, it is 'contradiction'. Anaathmaa is always a mixture of good and bad. If one part of anaathmaa is good, another part of anaathmaa may be bad. And, also, the very same anaathmaa, may be good at times and found to be bad at other times.

Sruthi, through the mahaa vaakyam, does not say "anaathmaa is wonderful". Then what does it say? When it says 'thvam', by that word, it means "pancha kosa vilakshana saakshi aathmaa". This is what Sureswaraachaarya is emphasizing.

'Ukthi:' literally means 'statement' and refers to the mahaa vaakyam here. 'Pratheechi' means 'saakshi chaithanye'. Grammatically 'Pratheechi' is "chakaaraantha: pullinga prathyak sabdha: saphthami eka vachanam". In essence, "Ukthi: pratheechi" means "mahaa vaakyam deals with prathyak aathmaa".

Sureswaraachaaryaa adds emphatically "na yushmadhi" meaning "mahaa vaakyam never talks about anaathmaa".

And, why does not mahaa vaakyam talk about anaathmaa? Ans: There are so many other pramaanam-s that are dealing with anaathmaa. Why should sruthi also talk about topics which other pramaanam-s are dealing with? If a student is learning the subject of Mathematics from one particular teacher, he need not approach another teacher also to learn Mathematics, as the move will only be redundant and thus futile. Why sruthi does not talk about anaathmaa and chooses to talk only about aathmaa is explained by the Vedhaanthic guru in a single word, "apoorvathvaath". In other words, "Sruthi pramaanam has apoorvathvam", which means "It talks about something which other pramaanam-s do not and cannot deal with".

'Yushmadh' means 'anaathmaa'. "Na yushmadhi" means "not about anaathmaa".

Mahaa vaakyam does not deal with any of the pancha anaathmaa, viz., possessions, profession, family, body and mind. Sruthi does not say that any of this pancha anaathmaa is 'perfect' or wonderful'. Sruthi will never say this. 'Anaathmaa' will be wonderful now and then; it will be terrible now and then. 'Eternally perfect and wonderful' is only the real 'I'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 45:

पूर्वस्यैव श्लोकार्थस्य विस्पष्टार्थमाह ।

The significance of the verse above is cleared:

The content of the 4th quarter of the previous sloka is a very important point to be remembered at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam. If the seeker is preoccupied with any of the pancha anaathmaa, he will not be able to say "I am wonderful". When his mind is hovering around anaathmaa or when he identifies himself with anaathmaa – either in the form of ahamkaaraa or in the form of mamakaaraa, he will, at best, say "certain things are wonderful and certain things are terrible". But even those 'wonderful' things will not give him joy, since he knows that they are subject to loss and therefore, will keep worrying as to how long they will last.

Mahaa vaakyam will not work on a mind obsessed with anaathmaa. Because of the importance of this aspect, Sureswaraacharya is elaborating on the 4th quarter of the 44th verse, in the ensuing verse also.

- विस्पष्टार्थ - For further clarification
- पूर्वस्य एव श्लोक अर्थस्य - of the essence of the previous sloka,
- आह - the following sloka is given .

The 'clarification' is to be especially on the 4th quarter of the previous verse.

What is the essence of the 4th quarter? Ans: Mahaa vaakyam deals with aathmaa and not with anaathmaa.

One's experiences deal with anaathmaa; and, experiences will always be a mixture of terrible and wonderful things. Nobody, including God, can change that fact about anaathmaa. In contrast, mahaa vaakyam deals with the eternally wonderful aathmaa. Sureswaraacharya is re-emphasizing this distinction in sloka 45.

Chapter III: Verse 45 -

पराञ्च्येव तु सर्वाणि प्रत्यक्षादीनि नात्मनि ।
प्रतीच्येव प्रवृत्तं तत्सदसीति वचोऽञ्जसा ॥४५॥

All evidences like perception pertain to external objects and do not concern themselves with the Self. On the contrary, scripture saying 'That ultimate Being, you are', by its very nature, relates to the Self.

This is a very beautiful verse.

प्रत्यक्षादीनि सर्वाणिप्रमाणा) नि (पराञ्च्येव - The pancha pramaanaani, starting with prathyakshaa, viz., prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi and anupalabdhi pertain to external objects or anaathmaa only,

In fact, this is true even about part of sruthi also, viz., Veda Poorvaa. The entire karma kaandaa is talking about anaathmaa only / about the 'improvement' of the anaathmaa. Karma kaandaa talks about different homaas for the 'improvement' of one's possessions or profession or family or physical body or mind. It also talks about a 'better standard of living' in svarga lokaa and Brahma lokaa. But, even in these lokaa-s, the anaathmaa is supposed to be only 'almost' perfect, but never 'entirely'. There are problems in those lokaa-s also. And, then, there is the major problem, of which, Krishna warns in Bhagavadh Githa, "Aabrahamabhuvanaath lokaa: punar aavarthina:" – (Verse 16 – Chapter VIII) – "All the worlds up to Brahmalokaa, are subject to 'returning' (the jeevaas to Bhoolokaa)". Even Chathurmuka Brahmaji, who enjoys the best anaathmaa, is 'counting down' his age. More than fifty years are supposed to have elapsed for the currently ruling Brahmaaji, out of his total lifetime, believed to be of one hundred years. Therefore, there is no such thing called 'perfect' anaathmaa.

Veda Karma kaanda pramaanam deals only with the 'imperfect' anaathmaa. Veda Upaasanaa kaanda pramaanam also deals only with the 'imperfect' anaathmaa.

Considering the futility of attempting to 'perfect' anaathmaa, Gouda Paadhaachaaryaa, in his Maandookya Kaarika, comments "Those people who want / strive to 'perfect' anaathmaa are unfortunate people (krupanaa:) indeed". Such people are 'unfortunate', because, they have not understood the approach / attitude that is to be practiced by an intelligent individual , viz., that "he can only 'contribute' to anaathmaa , but, can never 'control' anaathmaa ; he should enjoy 'contributing' to anaathmaa with his body-mind instrument, without attempting to 'control' anaathmaa".

Reverting to the text, the Aachaaryaa points out that all pramaanaas other than sruthi, are dealing with anaathmaa by saying "prathyakshaadheeni sarvaani (pramaanaani) paraanchi eva'. Use of the word 'paraanchi', is to convey that the pancha pramaanaani, starting with prathyakshaa, viz., prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi and anupalabdhi are 'extrovert'. The word 'paraanchi' is used as adjective or as subjective complement to 'prathyakshaadheeni pramaanaani'. Sureswaraachaarya intentionally uses this word, to remind the student of the popular and well-known manthraa of the Katopanishad: "Paraanchi khaani vyathrunath svayambhoo:| thasmaath paraang pasyathi na antharaathman| kaschiith dheera: prathyagaathmaanam aikshadh aavrutthachakshu: amruthathvam icchan" (II. i.1) – "The Lord destroyed the sense organs, by making them extrovert. Therefore, everyone perceives outside, not the inner Self. Desiring immortality, a rare discriminative one turns away his eyes and sees the inner Self".

न आत्मनि - and not with aathmaa, which is the real 'I', which is the wonderful sath-chithaanandhaa.

But, what about sruthi pramaanam or mahaa vaakyam? That is said in the second line of the verse, as "'thath sadh asi' ithi vacha: pratheecheyeva pravruttham"|

वच : - The mahaa vaakyam (says)

तत् सत् असि इति - that you are that pure 'Existence' Brahman,'Thath sath asi' is another form of the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi'.

This mahaa vaakyam does not deal with any anaathmaa. It does not talk of 'your body' or 'your mind'. It talks of 'you', the aathmaa.

प्रतीचि एव प्रवृत्तं अञ्जसा - clearly operating only in the field of 'I', the saakshi.

'pravruttham' means 'engaged in' or 'occupied with'. 'pratheechi' means 'prathyak aathmaa', as explained in the previous verse or in other words, 'I', the Saakshi, which Saakshi can never be objectified, at any time. It is always available only as the 'Subject'- as 'I', the Consciousness. This 'I' is what Sruthi mahaa vaakyam is talking about. 'anjasad' means 'clearly' / 'by very nature'.

Therefore, what is the conclusion? Ans: There is no contradiction between my experiences and mahaa vaakyam. Experiences may be terrible; but, that can never challenge my knowledge that "'I' am wonderful." In fact, it is a standard principle that "a valid knowledge received from / through a valid pramaanam/ source of knowledge can never be challenged by the opposite 'experience'".

The following two examples are given in support of this principle:

1. We know through the study of the science of Astronomy, that all the stars are very much bigger than the earth or even the sun. That 'all the stars are very huge' is the knowledge gained through valid sources. But, in the nights, my experience / prathyaksha anubhavaa is contradictory; every star appears only as a 'dot', though diamond-like. I have a counter experience. But, even as I experience the 'smallness' of the star, my knowledge that the star is huge, is not challenged.
2. Similar is my experience of the 'sunrise' or 'sunset'; every day, I see the sun 'rising' in the East and 'setting' in the West. But, these experiences can never challenge my knowledge from Astronomy, viz., that it is the earth that goes round the Sun, from West to East and not the sun that moves around the earth, 'rising' and 'setting'. This knowledge is never challenged. Earth is not a stationery entity. It spins around on its own axis at a speed of about 1000 miles per hour, at the same time, going around the sun at a speed of about 60,000 miles per hour. This 'knowledge' is never challenged through my 'experience' of a 'stationery' earth.

Therefore, what is the important principle? Ans: "Valid knowledge derived through valid pramaanam can never be challenged, by an opposite experience."

By this principle, when I learn "'I' am wonderful", through mahaa vaakyam, a valid pramaanam, that knowledge that "'I' am wonderful" cannot be challenged by any of the terrible experiences of my life. Even a jnaani may / will go through different experiences at different anaathmaa levels. As mentioned earlier, this applies even to Bhagavaan. Bhagavaan-s mind will have to identify with the sufferings of his bhakthaas, and, at that moment of suffering of the bhakthaas, Bhagavaan's vrutthi also cannot be aanandha vrutthi. But, if Bhagavaan does not have any samsaaraa problem, it is only because of His conviction "'I' am wonderful, not because of My experiences; but 'I' am wonderful in spite of different types of experiences".

Experiences have nothing to do with 'my' status. But, this does not mean that an aspirant can abandon anaathmaa to wallow in 'miserable' conditions ; if there are health problems, one can certainly do whatever is possible to contribute to the improvement of the health; 'Contribution' to anaathmaa is one aspect; the knowledge that "'I' am wonderful" is another. The two issues should not be mixed up.

The conclusion is: "There is no contradiction between mahaa vaakya pramaanam and other pramaanam-s".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 46:

तस्मात्प्रमातृप्रमाणप्रमेभ्यः हीयमानोपादीयमानेभ्यः अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां मुञ्जेषीकावत्
 अशेषबुद्धिविक्रियासाक्षितया आत्मानं निष्कृत्य तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्येभ्यः अपूर्वादिलक्षणं आत्मानं विजानीयात् ।
 तदेतदाह ।

Therefore, in the total world of experience consisting of the knower, knowing and the objects of knowledge, and the things to be appropriated and rejected, one must, through rational discrimination, distinguish the Self, that is the witness of all the modifications of the mind and understand through texts like 'That thou art', its nature of which time-sequences etc. are denied in the scripture. This is drawn out now:

"And, therefore" Sureswaraacharya implies, through this sambhandha gadhyam portion, "Oh! Student, co-operate with the sruthi and aacharya , when the mahaa vaakyam is employed or taught".

तस्मात् - Therefore,

What does this word 'therefore' signify? The elaboration of the word will be as follows: "Since mahaa vaakya pramaanam deals with aathmaa or saakshi and all the other pramaanams deal with anaathmaa, they cannot contradict among themselves. Therefore:"

आत्मानं - (at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam,) may you use the word 'I', for the saakshi chaithanyam,

Why should the word 'I' mean only the saakshi chaithanyam ? Ans: Because, the aspirant is going to claim "I am wonderful" and only aathmaa / saakshi chaithanyam can be wonderful and not the anaathmaa / ahamkaaraa.

And, what type of aathmaa?

- निष्कृष्य - which (aathmaa / saakshi chaithanyam) has been separated
- प्रमातृप्रमाणप्रमेभ्यः - from the pancha anaathmaa,

The use of the term 'pancha anaathma', to denote possessions, profession, family, body and mind, is not a conventional / traditional usage ; it is an expression 'coined' by Swamiji, for easier communication to his regular students. Pancha anaathmaa might mean pancha kosaas also, in other contexts.

Since, this 'pancha anaathma', consisting of possessions, profession, family, body and mind, is the main cause for mental obsession and preoccupation and consequently a major obstacle in assimilation of Vedhaanthaa, sanyaasa aashramaa is considered more conducive to Vedhaanthic study, though, of course, a grihastha is not disqualified from the pursuit of Vedhaathaa, if he has vairaaghyaa.

An aspirant without vairaaghyaa will not have the sthitha pragnya lakshanaa-s, the perfect parameters, listed by Lord Krishna in the second chapter (verses 54 to 72) of the Bhagavadh Githa. He will not be 'sukheshu vigathaspruha:' – 'one who is free from craving after pleasures' or 'dhu:khesu anudhvignamanaa:' – 'one whose mind is unperturbed in troubles' (Bhagavadh Githa – Ch. II – verse 56). On the other hand, he will be obsessed with worries all the time, about 'perfecting' anaathmaa. He will be 'stuck' with these thoughts and efforts. And, as long as one is 'stuck' with one of the pancha anaathmaa, one can never claim "I am muktha:", since he will always have one issue or another to be sorted out. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa exhorts 'pramaathru pramaana prameyebhya: nishkrushya', meaning 'extricating yourself from the pancha anaathma'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa presents the pancha anaathmaa using the compound term pramaathru-pramaana-prameyam. 'Prameyam' means 'object of knowledge' and in this context, stands for the external world, including possessions, profession and family. All these are included in 'prameyam'.

'Pramaanam' means 'instrument of knowledge', and, in this context, stands for 'physical body and sense organs (golakam-s and indriyam-s), another anaathmaa, which also will always have problems. As one advances in age, one's hearing faculty, eyesight, faculty of speech etc., will all gradually deteriorate. Therefore, pramaanam-s also will have problems, like prameyam-s.

The 'pramaatha', literally means 'knower', and, in this context, denotes the mind with chidhaabhaasaa or antha:karanam, which also will always have some issue or other. It is possible and it is nice and healthy to 'improve' or 'better' one's mind. But, a 'perfect' mind is only an ideal, similar to the 'perfect gas' in Chemistry.

Specialists in the science of Chemistry say that a 'perfect gas', fulfilling all conditions to be called 'gas', exists only on paper. Similarly, a 'perfect mind' or a 'perfect body' can exist only on paper. A discerning aspirant should have the realization that, while he can / should 'contribute' to the well-being of his body and mind, their 'total perfection' cannot be a condition for mokshaa. If it were so, no aspirant will ever be 'liberated'.

हीयमान उपादीयमानेभ्यः - which (pancha anaathmaa) are subject to arrival and departure,

The five features of anaathmaa have been discussed repeatedly earlier. They are (1) dhrusyathvam (2) bhoudhikathvam (3) sagunathvam (4) savikaaraathvam and (5) aagamaapaayithvam. Sureswaraacharya is referring to this fifth feature 'aagamaapaayithvam', by using the adjective 'heeyamaana upaadheeyamaanebhya:' to 'pramaathru pramaana prameyebhya:'|

The example of 'spectacles' given earlier, may be recollected . Mind is comparable to 'spectacles', something which one 'puts on' in jaagrath and svapna avasthaas and removes during sushupthi. One type of pramaathru-pramaana-prameyam thriputi arrives in jaagrath avasthaa; another type of thriputi arrives in svapna avasthaa ; but, thriputi dissolves in sushupthi avasthaa. That is why, jaagrath and svapna are called savikalpa avasthaa-s and sushupthi is called nirvikalpala avasthaa. From this, it is also very clear that: "I' am not the thriputi; all the thriputi-s come under anaathmaa only; therefore, detach from the problematic thriputi".

अन्वय व्यतिरेकाभ्यां - by applying anvaya vyathirkhaa logic, the argument of variables and in-variable,

मुञ्जा इषीकावत् - similar to separating the stalk from munja-grass,

This is an example borrowed from the Katopanishad (Chapter II – Section 3 – manthraa 17): "anghushtamaathra: purusha: antharaathmaa sadhaa janaanaanam hrudhaye sannivishtha: tham svaath sareeraath pravruheth munjaath iva isheekaam dhairyena tham vidhyaath chukram amrutham" – "Purushaa, the inner Self, which is of the size of the thumb, is ever seated in the heart of the people. One should separate that Self, from one's body, with diligence, like separating the stalk from the munja-grass. One should know that Self to be pure and immortal"

Munjaa is the name of a type of grass with very fine sharp, blade-like edges. If not handled carefully, it will hurt the hands. Within the munjaa grass, there is a very tender stalk, which is found useful for certain purposes. If one, therefore, desires to remove the tender stalk or pith within, from the outside grass, one has to carefully handle the grass, without hurting oneself.

Similarly, aathmaa is the inner Self, which is other than the annamaya sthoola sareeram, other than the praana maya- mano maya- vijnyaana maya sookshma sareeram and other than the aanandha-maya kaarana sareeram. Thaitheeya Upanishad – Brahnavalli explains this, step by step: "Thasmaath vaa ethasmaath annarasamayaath anyonthara aathmaa praanamaya:| ...Thasmaath vaa ethasmaath praanamayaath anyonthara aathmaa

manomaya: |... Thasmaath vaa ethasmaath manomayaath anyonthara aathmaa
 vijnyanamaya: |...Thasmaath vaa ethasmaath vijnyanamaayaath anyonthara aathmaa
 aanandhamaya: |...Aananda aathmaa| Brahma puccham prathishta " meaning "In fact, praanamaya is self, inner than that annamayaa..... In fact, manomayaa is self, inner than that praanamayaa.....In fact, vijnyanamayaa is the self, inner than that manomayaa.....In fact, aanandamayaa is the self, inner than that vijnyanamayaa....Aanandhaa is the Self.
 Brahman is the tail, which is the support".

Anaathmaa, the external shell, is like the munjaa grass, sharp-edged, which can be hurtful; and, aathmaa like the interior stalk, isheekaa, is tender, the wonderful sath-chith-aanandhaa.

Therefore, an aspirant should carefully separate the two, 'pramaathru-pramaanaprameyebhya: aathmaanam nishkrushya munja isheekaavath' - 'separating 'I', the aathmaa, from the anaathmaa, like the stalk from the munja grass'.

What is the meaning of aathmaa? The Aachaaryaa points out:

असेष बुद्धि विक्रिया साक्षितया - (understanding aathmaa) as the Witness of all the thought modifications of the mind, 'I' am not the mind, but the saakshi.

Saakshi of what? Ans: buddhi vikriyaa – the thought modifications of the mind.

What are 'thoughts' dependent on? Ans: This topic has been discussed earlier.

Thoughts are of three types: (i) world based (ii) will based and (iii) vaasanaa based.

When one is using one's sense organs and is observing the world outside, what thoughts one has, depend on what is around. For instance, while reading a newspaper, if the news is about burglary, the thought obviously will be 'burglary' and when the news read is about a helicopter crashing, the thought will be 'crash' thought. Such thoughts are 'world based'/ 'experience based'.

Some other thoughts are will based. When one wants to plan an action or an event, one deliberately entertains thoughts about the proposed action or event, based on one's own will. Even a Naishkarmya Siddhi 'class' is an instance of such will based thoughts. Both the guru and the students deliberately entertain thoughts on the subject studied, Naishkarmya Siddhi, for one hour. Their Naishkarmya Siddhi thoughts are based on their 'will'.

Next on the list of the types of thoughts, comes the third one, viz., vaasanaa based thoughts, which thoughts are totally beyond one's control. And, how many vaasanaas does one have? The quantity beats imagination. 'Anaadhi avidhyaa vaasanayaa' is a well known term, from the mahaa sankalpam of the Upaakarmaa ritual. Over innumerable earlier births, millions of vaasanaas have been accumulated; because of their sheer volume, the individual would not even be aware of most of them. That is the reason why, quite often, a dreamer is surprised by the dreams he gets. All kinds of unimaginable dreams are only results of vaasanaas.

Many of the thoughts are not 'world based' i.e. they are not based on experiences in the jaagrath avasthaa. Many of the thoughts are not deliberate or 'will based'. A very large number of thoughts are 'vaasanaa based'. And, nobody can remove all the vaasanaa-s, because vaasanaa-s being infinite, removal of all the vaasanaa-s will require infinite janmaas.

An interesting relevant fact: In Vedhaantha sashtraa, the scholars use a term, vaasana kshaya:| This term, very often, causes confusions in saadhakaa circles. Because of this term, vaasanaa kshayam, some saadhakaa-s wrongly believe that, by practicing certain sadhanaa-s, all the vaasanaa-s can be removed. But, it is not so; total vaasanaa kshayam is not possible at all.

The essence is that, the mind is always full of thoughts – either 'world based' or 'will based' or 'vaasanaa based' thoughts.

But, who am 'I'? The Aachaaryaa gives the answer as 'asesha buddhi vikriyaa saakshi – 'witness of all modifications of the mind'.

The Aachaaryaa says: "Saakshi aham asmi ithi aathmaanam nishkrishya" - "having segregated the aathmaa from the anaathmaa and understanding the aathmaa as only the Witness of anaathmaa".

When should the aspirant do this? Ans: When he is in the process of mahaa vaakyaa sravanam.

(Swamiji elaborates: "Before coming to the Vedhaanthic class, spend a few minutes contemplating 'I am going to Naishkarmya Siddhi class. Let me leave at home, the pancha anaathmaa, along with my children and grandchildren'. Or, at least, when you enter the hall, along with your footwear, may you remove all the anaathmaa. Then, you will find, that, there is no contradiction at all in mahaa vaakyam. That is why, Sureswaraachaaryaa wonders: 'Where is the blessed problem?' and says "It is you who are giving the problem.")

'Aathmaanam nishkrishya' means 'having segregated'. This advice can be, otherwise, expressed as 'bhaagathyagha lakshanam kruthvaa'. Having done this:

तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्येभ्यः - through mahaa vaakyam-s such as thath thvam asi,

'Thath thvam asi' is a mahaa vaakyam occurring in the Channdhogya Upanishad of Saama Veda; 'aham brahma asmi' occurs in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad of Yajur Veda, 'ayam aathmaa brahma' in the Maandookya Upanishad of Atharvana Veda and 'pragnyaanam Brahma' in the Aithrya Upanishad of Rig Veda.

While these four are the most important and well-known mahaa vaakyam-s, each representing a particular Veda, there are many other mahaa vaakyam-s such as ayaschaayam purushe yas chaassavaadhithye (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Bhrgu Valli-manthra 10), sa eka:, anyadeva thaadh vidhithaath atho avidhithaath adhi (Kenopanishad I-4), thadeva brahma thvam viddhi nedham yadhitham upaasathe (Kenopanishad 1-5) etc.

Through the millions of such mahaa vaakyaa-s,

आत्मानं विजानीयात् - may you claim aathmaa as 'my' self,

This claim can / must be made without any hesitation / without any reservation / without any jerk; also, not in later meditation, but, right during the sravanam itself. Sureswaraacharya's teaching is: "sravanam gives aparoksha jnaanam; not dhyaanam ; sravanam gives saakshaathkaara: not dhyaanam". This is the main thesis of Naishkarmya Siddhi.

And, what type of aathmaa? Aathmaa is none other than Brahman. This is stressed by the Aachaaryaa, at this juncture, since, by repeated use of the word aathmaa, the student may lose sight of this fact, that aathmaa is none other than Brahman.

The question "what type of aathmaa" can be reframed as: 'What is the definition of that Brahman?' So, Sureswaraacharya says:

अपूर्वादि लक्षणं - with features such as apoorvam etc.

Brahman is defined by the various Upanishads in different manners.

For instance, in the Chaandoghya Upanishad (VI.2.1), Brahman is defined as 'sath - 'Pure Existence', in the well known manthraa addressed by Sage Uddhaalaka Aaruni, to his son Svethakethu : "sadheva soumya idham agra aaaseeth"- "O good looking one, in the beginning this was Existence alone". .

In the same Upanishad, in Bhooma Vidhyaa (VII.23.1) Guru Sage Sanath Kumara declares to his disciple, Sage Narada: "Yo vai bhoomaa thathsukham"- "That which indeed is the Infinite, that is 'Pure Happiness'". Here, 'Pure Happiness', aanandhaa, is the definition of Brahman. What type of happiness? Not prathibhimbha aanandhaa. Prathibhimbha aanandhaa, also termed 'experiential aanandhaa' belongs to aanandha maya kosaa. 'Original aanandhaa / bhimbha aanandhaa does not belong to 'me'; it is 'me', myself. 'Experiential happiness' will come and go / arrive and depart. When the mind is conducive, it 'reflects' the original aanandhaa; when it is not conducive, it does not 'reflect' the aanandhaa. On the other hand, 'I' am the 'original aanandhaa', which does not 'come and go'. When one looks into a mirror one's reflected face appears or 'comes'; when the mirror is removed, the reflected face disappears or 'goes' away. But, even when the reflected face 'goes' away, the original face is available, though, of course, one cannot see the original face. Similarly original aanandhaa cannot be objectified, because it is 'I', myself.

Again, in Chaandoghya Upanishad (Chapter VIII), Brahman is defined as chith roopa: as 'aham thureeyam chaithanyam asmi'. Thus, Chaandoghya Upanishad gives sath , aanandham and chith, as Brahma lakshaanani.

In a similar manner, Brahadhaaaranyaka Upanishad also gives wonderful definitions of Brahman, in various manthraas.

Part of II.v.19 of the Brahadhaaaranyaka Upanishad, the last manthraa of Madhu Brahmanam, runs: "Thath ethadh brahma apoorvam aparam anantharam abaahyam ayam aathmaa brahma sarvaanubhoo:" – "That Brahman is without prior or posterior, without interior or exterior. This Self, the perceiver of everything, is Brahman".

Using this term 'apoorvaadhi lakshanam' (apoorvam, anaparam, ananthram, abhaahyam') from this manthraa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is reminding the student that aathmaa is none other than Brahman.

The import of this sambhandha gadhyam may be expressed in simple language, as follows:

"The anaathmaa consisting of this world, the physical body and the mind is of the nature of ever being subject to arrival and departure. Aathmaa, in contrast, is ever eternal- of the nature of 'Pure Existence, 'Pure Knowledge' and 'Pure Happiness'. Aathmaa should not be confused with the mind. Mind is always obsessed with different thoughts. But, aathmaa is only a Witness of the mind and its thought modifications. A Vedhaanthic seeker, therefore, as even as he listens to the Vedic Mahaa vaakyam, should diligently distinguish aathmaa from all anaathmaa, including his own mind, using the logic of anvaya-vyathirekha, as one would diligently remove the tender stalk from the munja grass. He should understand the word 'thvam' in the Mahaa Vaakyam 'thath thvam asi' as the saakshi – aathmaa, and not as the physical body or mind. He should further understand that aathmaa is none other than Brahman'.

153. Chapter III, Verse 45 to 48 (12-09-2009)

Sureswaraacharya points out that when the sruthi pramaanam, through the mahaa vaakyam reveals 'my' saakshi svaroopam, that teaching is not and cannot be contradicted by any experience received through other pramaanam-s.

The justification for this statement is as follows: All our experiences gained through various pramaanam-s other than sruthi or sabhdha pramaana, are dealing with anaathmaa only. All those pramaana-s deal only with anaathma prapanchaa; for instance, the saakshi prathyaksham deals with our mind and emotions. But, the saakshi itself is not an object of any pramaana and that saakshi is what is being talked about by mahaa vaakyam. In other words, mahaa vaakyam deals with saakshi, while other pramaanams deal with saakshyam. And, since the very fields of operation are thus different, there is no question of mahaa vaakyam contradicting our experiences or our experiences contradicting the mahaa vaakyam knowledge.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya advises (in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 46): "pramaathru pramaana prameyebhya: nishkrushya" which implies "when you say 'aham brahma asmi', the meaning of the word aham must be saakshi, which should be understood as distinct from pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam".

'Pramaathaa' refers to the ahamkaaraa, which is the mind. The mind does have its emotional problems; saasthraa is never challenging that statement.

Pramaathaa is a samsaari. Nobody is challenging that statement; mahaa vaakyam never says 'pramaathaa is nithya muktha.' | Mahaa vaakyam is not talking about pramaathaa, but is talking about the pramaathru saakshi, which is nithya muktha:/

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says 'nishkrushya saakshithayaa aathmaanam' meaning 'separating 'my'self as the saakshi of the mind and its emotions'.

He proceeds:

thathvamasyaadhi vaakyebhya: - with the help of all the maaha vaakyaa-s, apoorvaadhi lakshanam aathmaanam vijaaneeyaath - may you claim your aathmaaas Paramaathmaa, Which is defined as apoorvam, anaparam, anantharam, abhaahyam etc.

The reference by the Aachaaryaa is to the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad manthraa, II. v. 19, the last manthraa in Madhu Brahmanam.

We get the well known mahaa vaakyam, 'ayam aathma Brahma', in the concluding portion of this manthraa, "thadethadhbrahma apoorvam anaparam anantharam abhaahyam ayam aathmaa Brahma sarvaanubhoo:"

This mahaa vaakyam 'ayam aathmaa Brahma' occurs in both Maandookya Upanishad and Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad.

Thus, Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad has two famous mahaa vaakyam-s, viz., "aham Brahma asmi" and "ayam aathma Brahma".

What is that Brahman? Four descriptions are given in this Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad Manthraa - apoorvam, anaparam, anantharam and abhaahyam. The first two adjectives 'apoorvam - anaparam' together mean 'neither a cause nor an effect'. They aver that Brahman is 'kaarya kaarana vilakshana thureeyam'. The latter two adjectives 'anantharam-abhaahyam' together mean 'without anything inside or outside', which, in turn, means 'non-dual / without a second / adhvitheeyam'.

Thus, 'kaarya kaarana vilakshana adhvitheeyam brahma' is the definition derived from this Brahdhaaranyaka Manthraa.

And, Sureswaraachaaryaa exhorts 'apoorvaadhilakshanam aathmaanam vijaaneeyaath' – 'may you claim that Brahman as aathmaa / saakshi chaithanyam'.

When this equation is made, if the seeker takes 'thvam' or 'aham' as pramaathaa, the ahamkaaraa, the equation will not work. If he takes 'thvam' or 'aham' as the saakshi, there is no contradiction.

Thadethadaaha - That is being said in the following sloka.

Chapter III: Verse 46 –

अहं दुःखी सुखी चेति येनायं प्रत्ययोऽधुवः ।

अवगत्यन्त आभाति स म आत्मेति वाक्यधीः ॥ ४६ ॥

The scriptural proposition is to the effect 'He is my Self' referring to that, through whose light of consciousness, the fleeting experiences such as 'I am miserable', 'I am happy' etc. occur, culminating in definite cognitions.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about the method of differentiating the saakshi from the pramaathaa. He has already talked about this earlier. But, in this context, he is once again reminding the student of the method of this differentiation, because, the saakshi and pramaathaa are so integrally mixed together, that we always have difficulty in segregating, 'I', the saakshi. How to do that? The Aachaaryaa says:

- अहं दुखी सुखी: च इति प्रत्यय (अस्ति) :- At times, there is the thought "I am miserable", and , at times, the thought "I am happy/ wonderful",

'Prathyaya:' means 'thought'. It is common experience to have different types of thoughts at different times, more often, the thought 'aham dhu:khee asmi' - 'I am miserable' ; and now and then, because of some punya praarabhdhaa, 'aham sukhee asmi' - 'I am happy'. We do have this alternate experiences 'I am miserable' and 'I am happy'. So, how do we define 'thought'? Ans: fluctuating / changing.

- अधुवः - thus fluctuating / changing.

When we are referring to the 'fluctuating' / 'changing' experiences, whom are we referring to, as subject to the 'fluctuating' / 'changing' experiences?

When I say "I was unhappy previously; I am happy now", I am talking about fluctuating experiences. In addition, this statement is also referring to what I am or what type of I, I am. It is referring to a fluctuating I.

How does one say it is referring to a fluctuating I? Because previously I said "I am unhappy" and now I say "I am happy". Therefore, both these experiences "I am unhappy" and "I am happy" are referring not only to fluctuating experiences, but also to a fluctuating I.

In what way is it fluctuating? Previously it had unhappiness as its attribute; now it has happiness as its attribute. Thus, we are talking about a changing substance, I, which had unhappiness as its attribute before and has happiness as its attribute now. So, we are talking about a changing 'I'.

But, in turn, what is this changing 'I' referring to? Ans: We know it is referring to the mind only. Previously, the changing mind had unhappiness as its attribute; now we have got a changing mind which has happiness as its attribute.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "When I say 'I was unhappy' and 'I am happy' ", both these experiences are referring to a changing mind, which had unhappiness as its attribute earlier and which has happiness as its attribute now.

Since I am referring to this mind with unhappiness in the past and happiness in the present, in other words, since I am talking about the past unhappy mind and the present happy mind, both the minds are known to me. The word 'both' is used here to mean (i) the unhappy mind of the past and (ii) the happy mind of the present. Both are referred to, by the expression "I was unhappy and I am happy".

Sureswaraacharya says: "If you are referring to the unhappy mind and the happy mind, that reference must be possible because of its objectification; without objectifying the mind, you cannot refer to the unhappy mind which was in the past or the happy mind which is in the present. Both of them have to be objectified by another I. When you say 'aham dhu:khee', the word 'aham' refers to the mind ; when you say 'aham sukhee', there also, the word 'aham' refers to the mind. Both these aham-s must be objectified by another constant aham. In other words, both these aham-s, viz., the past aham, the changing mind and the present aham, which is also the changing mind, must be known because of another non-fluctuating aham, about which we have discussed before. At this moment, may you shift your attention to this third aham. First aham is 'dhu:khee aham', which refers to the mind (say mind no. 1) ; the second aham is the 'sukhee aham', which also refers to the mind only (say mind no. 2) . The third aham, because of which only, both these aham-s are known, is the saaksh'.

First aham is aham padha vaachyaartha; second aham also is the aham padha vaachyaartha; both refer to the fluctuating aham, the mind. Both are known because of the third aham, which is the aham padha lakshyaartha.

Mahaavaakyaa is not referring to aham no 1, which is temporary dhu:kee; nor is it referring to aham no. 2 which is temporary sukhee. These two aham-s are referring to temporary dhu:khee aham and temporary sukhee aham respectively, thus, to a fluctuating aham, which is the mind. But, both are known because of a non-fluctuating Consciousness, which Consciousness is not dhu:khee and which Consciousness is not sukhee also. In that case, what is it? Ans: It is 'Sukham'.

Consciousness is not sukhee; it is not happy; but, it is 'Happiness' itself, which is neither a substance possessing happiness; nor an attribute also; but 'Happiness' itself. That Consciousness / Happiness, is what the mahaa vaakyaa 'aham Brahma asm', referring to, by the word 'aham'.

And, what is the nature of that 'Happiness'? The 'five features' of Consciousness are to be remembered and applied to that 'Happiness' also:

(1) That 'Happiness' is not a part, product or property of the mind.

- (2) That 'Happiness' is an independent substance which pervades the mind and
 - (3) makes the mind 'now and then' happy.
 - (4) That 'Happiness' is not limited by the boundaries of the mind
 - (5) That 'Happiness' survives even after the mind has resolved
 - (6) But, that surviving 'Happiness' is not available for experience, since, there is no medium (mind), through which alone, it can be manifested or experienced.

'I', the saakshi, am that 'Happiness' Brahman. Where is the contradiction?

To repeat the essence: Mind is sukhee and dhu:khee; but, 'I' am the Consciousness, which is neither sukhee or dhu:khee, but Sukham itself, as declared by the Chaandhoghya Upanishad (VII.23.1) "Yo vai Bhoomaa thadh sukham".

'You' are not sukhee; but, 'you' are Sukham itself. Reverting to the text,

- येन - "That non-fluctuating Principle, because of which,
- अहं दुःखीः सुखी च इति अयं अध्रुवः प्रत्ययः - these two-fold fluctuating emotional experiences of mental pleasure and mental pain, अवगत्यन्तः - which go along with corresponding experiences,

'avagathantha.' is adjective to 'prathyaya.' | 'prathyaya.' refers to 'thoughts' and 'avagathi.' means 'experience'. 'Adhruva: avagathantha: prathyaya.' , therefore, means 'the fluctuating thoughts, which go with fluctuating experiences'.

In both these fluctuating emotional thoughts, 'I am unhappy' and 'I am happy', which go along with corresponding experiences, the word 'I' refers to the 'changing' mind. But, both of them, viz., the fluctuating emotional thoughts and the fluctuating mind are known / revealed because of the non-fluctuating Consciousness. The adjective 'non-fluctuating', to Consciousness, is very important.

- आभाति - are known / are revealed
- सः मे आत्मा - is my real nature".
- इति वाक्यधीः - This is the proposition / declaration of the scriptures.

Then, what about ahamkaaraa ? That is a vesham, which I have to use for all the transactions. Even to claim "'I' am the saakshi", I require the mind. I use the mind for all the transactions, including the transaction of Vedhaanthic study.

Sureswaraacharya says "Use the mind; but never claim the mind as 'I am'".

In fact, the greatest use of the miserable mind is to claim "'I' am not the miserable mind".

An interesting question: Is mind a 'curse' or a 'blessing'? Mind appears to be a 'curse', because it is miserable very often. But, in spite of the mind being miserable, the greatest irony, is that, the miserable mind alone can claim "'I' am not the miserable mind".

So, is mind required or not? Ans: It is required. The seeker can never afford to say "I want to escape from the world", because, he requires the world, he requires the body, and, he requires the miserable mind, to claim "I am using the miserable mind. But, 'I' am not the miserable mind".

So, if 'I' am not the miserable mind, who am 'I'? Ans: 'I' am the user of the miserable mind, different from the miserable mind, the unparalleled aathmaa.

Therefore, mind is a great blessing.

Another interesting fact: Let us imagine a hypothetical situation. Assume, that, because the mind is miserable, you decide to 'remove' the mind (by some means, say, deep sleep or samaadh). There is an advantage in removing the mind. What is the advantage? Misery is gone. Because mind is gone, misery is gone. But, there is a very big disadvantage also, which disadvantage has to be carefully noted. What is that big disadvantage? Ans: Mind is gone ; misery is gone; I am there as aanandha svaroop; but, unfortunately, even though I exist as aanandha svaroop, in the absence of the mind, I cannot claim 'I am aanandha svaroop.' | Dhu:kham is gone, because mind is gone ; but, sukham: is also gone, because, I am not able to claim the aanandha ; and, if I cannot claim the aanandha, as in 'deep sleep' state, what is the use of remaining aanandha permanently , without being able to claim 'I am aanandha? Likewise, when I want to claim 'I am sacchidhaananda Brahman', I do need the mind. What type of mind? Ans: Ironically, very often miserable.

Vedhaanthaa understands the utility of the miserable mind and therefore advises "Stop complaining about the miserable mind". Physical pains also are experienced in the mind only. Despite this fact, a knowledgeable Vedhaanthin says: "I am blessed to have a mind; even though it is miserable, it does not matter, because I have to use only that mind to claim 'I am the adhishtanam Brahman'. I have no problem in letting the mind continue, because I know that, that mind is mithyaa. Let me possess the mithyaa mind to claim 'aham sacchidhaanandha svaroop: brahma asmi'.

A jnaani, therefore, has no complaint against his mind / has no desire to get rid of his mind , just as, in the mundane world, the owner of a car does not desire to get rid of his car, even though the car gives him several problems. He finds the car essential to carry out all his activities, in spite of the problems it gives. The same is true about one's family also. The family gives umpteen problems, in spite of which, most people do not desire to give up the family and take to sanyaasaa.

Vedhaantha points out : "Mind gives several problems; still, I have to hold on to the mind, because, however miserable it has made me, that is the only blessed instrument with which, I can claim 'I am not the mind; but, aham sacchindhaanadham Brahma asmi."

Pure Brahman without mind, can never claim "I am pure Brahman". That is why jeevan mukthi is considered wonderful.

'Escape from the world' is a wrong approach. Let body be there; let mind be there; but, may you always remember aham brahma asmi.

Remember the 5th capsule of Vedhaantha : "By forgetting 'my' real nature, I convert life into a burden; by remembering 'my' real nature, viz., that, " 'I' am not the miserable mind but sukahasvaroopa aathmaa", I convert life into entertainment".

'Making the miserable mind into the wonderful mind' is what Vedhaantha does. What is that 'wonderfulness' of the mind? It helps claim "aham sukha roopam Brahma asmi – not sukhee"|

The anavaya of verse 46 is: "Yena aham dhukhee sukhee cha ithi avagathantha: adhruva: prathyaya: aabhaathi sa: me aathmaa" ithi vaakyadhee:|.

'Prathyaya:' means 'thought' ; 'adhruva:' means 'temporary'; 'avagathantha:' means 'leading to fluctuating experiences' ; 'avagathi:' means 'anubhava:'.

The meaning of the verse, in simple English, is: "All fluctuating experiences are because of the non-fluctuating saakshi, which 'I' am" is the declaration of the saasthraas.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 47 & 48 : (Part)

प्रमाणान्तरानवष्टब्धं निरस्त अशेष कार्यकारणात्मक द्वैतप्रपञ्चं सत्यजानानन्दलक्षणमात्मानं 'तत्त्वमसि,' 'अहंब्रह्मास्मि' इत्यादिवाक्यं संशयित मिथ्याज्ञान अज्ञान प्रध्वंसमुखेन साक्षात् अपरोक्षात्
करतलन्यस्तामलकवत् प्रतिपादयति एव इति असकृत् अभिहितम् ।

The ultimate Self goes beyond the other modes of knowledge and is divested of the whole world of plurality consisting of cause and effect. It's essential nature is constituted of reality, knowledge and bliss. It is this Self that texts like 'That Thou art' and 'I am Brahman' reveal by destroying doubt, false understanding and ignorance and present to direct apprehension, as if it were a fruit in one's own hand. All this has been stated by us over and over again.

This is a long sentence with long words. In this long sentence, Sureswaraachaaryaa is consolidating what he has established until now, with the intention to introduce a very big objection by another philosopher. Before introducing that objection or challenge, Sureswaraachaaryaa is consolidating what he has established till now. His teaching is going to be challenged by a group of meemaasakaa philosophers, who also accept Veda as a pramaanam and who also interpret the Veda Pramaanam. Those Meemaamsaka poorva paksha is to be introduced by Sureswaraachaaryaa, before which, he consolidates what he has taught .

- 'तत्त्वमसि 'अहंब्रह्मास्मि' , ' इत्यादिवाक्यं - The mahaa vaakyam-s such as 'thatthvam asi', ' aham Brahma asmi' etc.,
- प्रतिपादयति एव - definitely reveal

The mahaa vaakyam-s definitely reveal a liberating fact. When does it do the job of 'liberating'? Ans: As even as we 'grasp' the teaching / At the very moment of our 'grasping' the teaching.

This is similar to a dreamer waking up from his dream. When a dreamer wakes up from his dream, at the very waking moment, he shakes off all the problems of the dream together , not one by one. Dream is falsified instantaneously on waking up; and, all the dream problems also instantaneously go away; the individual, who wakes up from the dream, need not put in any special effort to 'gradually' remove the dream problems.

In the same manner, the mahaa vaakyam awakens the aspirant to a Paaramaarthikaa order of reality, reducing the pramaathru – pramaana- prameyaani / the entire world, to a lower order of reality. Even a successful aspirant is not solving the problems of the world; he is only converting the problems into a lower order of reality. This is called 'waking up', in the context of mahaa vaakyam. 'Waking up' is 'conversion of the order of reality' .

Just as (i) the dream is real until the dreamer wakes up and (ii) when the dreamer wakes up the contents of his dream have not changed, but only their 'order of reality' has changed, in the same manner, when the aspirant wakes up to his saakshi svaroopam, the content of the world is not changed, but, the 'order of reality' of the content is changed. The aspirant's physical body is the same, probably old and diseased. The aspirant's family still has got its problems. Mahaa vaakyam does not change any of the 'content' of the world. Mahaa vaakyam only changes the order of reality. The 'waking up' is 'waking up to another order of reality'.

There is, of course, a small difference, between waking up from the 'normal' dream and waking up from the 'worldly' dream. When one wakes up from the 'normal' dream, the dream world totally disappears from perception. Dream is falsified and the dream world disappears; whereas, in the mahaa vaakya operation, while the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya world is 'falsified', it does not disappear. World appearance continues. Only its 'order of reality' is changed.

And, what is the benefit of this change in the 'order of reality'? Ans: Once the 'reality' of any substance / event is changed to a lower order, its importance/ seriousness comes down. A tragedy in a movie is called 'entertainment', while a tragedy in real life is not considered 'entertainment'. Mahaa vaakyam converts a tragedy in real life also, into a level similar to that in a movie.

We do not change the contents of the world, but, we change 'the order of reality' of the contents. This is the effect of mahaa vaakyam, if the student travels along with the teacher. This is implied by the Aachaaryaa's use of the word 'eva'. And, how do the mahaa vaakyam-s reveal? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

साक्षात् अपरोक्षात् - directly and immediately,

To quote the dream example again, a dreamer, immediately upon his waking, understands that he does not really suffer the problems in the dream. For instance, if he had dreamed that he had a limb amputated, immediately on waking, he realizes that the 'amputation' is false, by physically seeing his 'whole' limbs. That realization is 'aparokshaa' (immediate) knowledge. He instantly realizes "I am not a person with an amputated limb; I am a poorna purusha."| Just as this waker claims poornathvam in the very waking, the aspirant also gets the aparokshaa realization 'aham poorna.', as even as he grasps the import of the mahaa vaakyam.

- करतलन्यस्त आमलकवत् - as if it were a fruit in one's hand,

'aamalaka' is the fruit, berry, நெல்லிக்காய், in Tamil. 'karathala nyastha' means 'kept in the hand'. A fruit kept in the hand can be experienced with all the sense organs. All its attributes - sabdha, sparsa, roopa, rasa and gandha – will be known. This example is quoted by the Aachaaryaa to stress the 'immediacy' and 'doubtlessness' of the knowledge received through the mahaa vaakyam. The fact "aham aanandha svarooopa:" is clearly cognizable or recognizable, as a fruit on the palm of one's hand. And, how does the 'knowledge' rise?

- संशयित मिथ्याज्ञान अज्ञान प्रध्वंसमुखेन - and by the destruction of doubt, false knowledge and ignorance,

As even as the knowledge from the mahaa vaakyam is received and understood, that knowledge destroys three things instantaneously. What are they? Ans: (1) samsayitha jnaanam (doubtful knowledge) (2) mithyaa jnaanam (false idea / misconceptions) and (3) ajnaanam (ignorance). All the three are eliminated.

What does it mean?

Swamiji, addressing the students, explains: "Hereafter, whenever the thought 'aham dhu:kee' comes, if, as a Vedhaanthic student, you have understood this 46th verse clearly, during the rest of your life, whenever you are assessing your own life / whenever your mind is chattering on 'what am I, what is my life, is it a successful one or an unsuccessful one' etc. / whenever you are in autobiographical mood, and at that time, if you get the thought 'I am miserable', if you have grasped the 46th verse, immediately from that thought, this class should be remembered. When you say 'I am miserable', what 'I' are you referring to? That 'I' is referring to only the fluctuating mind. Mind is called 'fluctuating', because even though miserable experiences are there, you have also had wonderful experiences. You should understand that the fluctuating mind is only one of the components of this changing world. Mind is a material substance, which has got the five material qualities of dhrusyathvam, boudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaa paayithvam. That mind 'fluctuates' because of praarabhdhaa. Negative thoughts arise because of some old vaasanaa. Because of the vaasanaa, the fact that 'I am ever aanandhaa' is not reflecting in the mind and therefore, the mind is thinking 'I am dhu:khee'. Let the mind go through the fluctuating negative thoughts. But, even when the mind is going through the fluctuating dhu:khee thoughts, who am 'I'? 'I' am the Consciousness, blessing that fluctuating mind also.

"Body also has its own fluctuations because of praarabhdhaa; mind also has its fluctuations because of praarabhdha vaasanaa. Nobody can stop it.

"Lord Krishna, in the Bhagavadh Githa (verse 22- Chapter 14) , while talking of gunaatheetha lakshanaani, says 'Prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha mohameva cha Paandava na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaankshathi' – 'Oh Arjuna! He (a person beyond the three gunaa-s) does not hate brightness, activity and delusion as they arise; nor does he desire them, as they withdraw'. The Lord points out that a jnaani also can have prakaasaa, pravrutthi and mohaa. Even for a guna atheetha jnaani, mind goes through fluctuations. Mohaa is also a thought. For a jnaani, moha vrutthi will be less / very rare; but, he will not be totally free of it.

"So, even when that thought 'I am miserable' comes, a diligent student should remember this Naishkarmya Siddhi portion. And, he should watch the mind going through that 'miserable' thought also, remembering that a drama should have navarasaa. Dayaananda Swami, in a lighter vein, would say that a movie in which all the characters are portrayed as ever happy will not be a success, since the audience look forward to navarasaa-s in a movie. So also real life.

"Life should have miserable occasions also ; otherwise, the happy occasions cannot be enjoyed. Now and then, miserable occasions can come. This must be the nidhidhyaasanam, when depression arises / negative tendencies arise/ fears such as 'Who will take care of me, when I become old?' etc. arise. A Vedhaanthic student should let the 46th sloka of the 3rd chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi, run parallel in his mind along with aham dhu:khee thought, if any.

"Therefore, if he is questioned 'are you liberated or dhu:khee?', he should confidently reply 'In spite of my mind going through dhu:kha vrutthi, I will claim 'aham sukham aananandha: asmi'. Let this be the nidhidyaasanam all the time.

"This is the implied message of Sureswaraachaaryaa, in these portions".

'Samsayitha' denotes 'doubtful knowledge', indicated by doubts such as 'am I totally liberated?' There is no 'partial' liberation. Saakshi is always totally liberated. There is no possibility of partial liberation. Mind is miserable at times and happy at times. Mahaa vaakyam destroys 'samsayitha jnaanam'; it also destroys mithyaa jnaanam – misconceptions. What are misconceptions? Ans: For instance, the thought 'aham dhu:khee'. 'aham', in reality, means 'saakshi', which can never be dhu:khee. My mind can be dhu:khee or sukhee. But, 'I' am not dhu:khee or sukhee. Mahaa vaakyam destroys such misconceptions as 'aham dhu:khee'. Mahaa vaakyam also destroys ignorance or 'ajnaanam'. Mahaa vaakyam destroys all these three, viz., samsayitha jnaanam, mithyaa jnaanam and ajnaanam instantaneously. This is what the Aachaaryaa avers by the use of the complex term 'samsayitha mithyaa jnaana ajnaana pradhvamsamukhend'.

The Aachaaryaa says 'vaakyam ithi prathipaadhayathi eva', meaning 'mahaa vaakyam definitely reveals this'. What does the mahaa vaakyam reveal?

- सत्यं ज्ञानं आनन्दं लक्षणं आत्मानं - the ultimate Self, whose essential nature is constituted of reality, knowledge and bliss,

Mahaa vaakya reveals 'me', the aathmaa, not the mind, but the non-fluctuating Consciousness, which is of the nature of 'sathyam' (pure Existence), which is of the nature of jnaanam (pure Consciousness) and which is of the nature of aanandhaa (pure Happiness).

We are not talking about experiential happiness, which will be always temporary. 'My' pure aanandhaa, reflecting in the mind is the experiential happiness. Reflections will come and go. 'Original happiness' can never be experienced. The question 'How can I experience original aanandhaa?' can, therefore, be never asked. 'Original aanandhaa is 'myself'; 'I' am aanandhaa: | Mind becomes aanandhee, now and then, when the reflection (of the original aanandhaa) comes. For some people, mind becomes aanandhee quite often; for some people, mind becomes aanandhaa less often, the frequency depending on the individual praarabhdhaa. In contrast, 'I' never become aanandhee. I am aanandhaa: |

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "mahaa vaakyam sathya jnaana aanandha lakshnam aathmaanam prathipaadhayathi eva" and wonders: "When the mahaa vaakyam, thus, reveals that 'I', as 'aham aanandha: asmi', why cannot you accept it and claim your aanandha svaroopam?"

It is freely given.

And, even if there are a large number of aspirants, when the mahaa vaakyam gives the aanandhaa, it is not divided into parts. For worldly happiness, there is a problem. For instance, 'family happiness'. When the mother / father is with one member of a family, another member complains 'you do not seem to miss me'. Family happiness has to be shared, quite often resulting in sibling rivalry. When the younger child gets attention, the elder child misses it. Worldly aanandhaa is shared aanandhaa. Therefore, complaints are bound to be there. But this aanandhaa (of the Self) is undivided aanandhaa – akanda aanandhaa. You are also akanda aanandhaa; the other aspirants are also akanda aanandhaa. How many akanda aanandhaa-s are there? Ans: There is one akanda aanandhaa, poornathvayaa available for everyone.

- निरस्त अशेष कार्य कारणात्मक द्वैतप्रपञ्चं - which is divested of the whole world of plurality, consisting of causes and effects / in which the whole world is mithyaa, like a movie,

'nirastha' means 'adhyastha' rejected as mithyaa. This 'rejection' is essential, because without seeing the mithyaathvam of the world / without falsifying the world, world cannot be converted into an entertainment. World will become a movie, only when it is falsified. So, as even as the aspirant claims 'aham sathyam', 'jaganmithyaathvam' should be equally certainly ascertained. That is what the Aachaaryaa says here.

154. Chapter III, Verse 47 and 48 (19-09-2009)

With an intention to introduce a meemaasaka poorva pakshaa with regard to the mahaa vaakyam, Sureswaraachaaryaa is first consolidating what he has been teaching so far in this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, viz., that, (i) the mahaa vaakyam is the greatest pramaanam, which is capable of giving the liberating knowledge and (ii) the mahaa vaakyam is the most unique pramaanam also, which functions as the final pramaanam destroying the pramaathaa himself. 'Destroying', in this context, means 'falsification'.

When the mahaa vaakyam 'destroys' the pramaathaa himself, thereafter, no other pramaanam is relevant, because a pramaanam is needed for the use of a pramaathaa only and it is this fundamental pramaathaa himself that the mahaa vaakyam has 'destroyed' or falsified.

To repeat: Not only is the mahaa vaakyam great as a liberating vaakyam, but it is also an unique pramaanaam, which removes all pramaanams including itself. This is because, after the falsification of pramaathaa, there is no more pramaanam in the seeker's life, since pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi itself is falsified.

In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa also refers to this perspective in manthraa II.iv.14. He asks: "Yathra vaa asya sarvam aathmaiva abooth thath kena kam jigreth, thath kena kam pasyeth, thath kena kam srunyaath, thath kena kam abhivadeth, thath kena kam manveetha, thath kena kam vijaaneeyaath? Yena idham sarvam vijaanaathi tham kena vijaaneeyaath? Vignyaathaaram arey kena vijaaneeyath?" – "But, when to the knower of Brahman, everything has become the Self, then, what should one smell and through what, what should one see and through what, what should one hear and through what, what should one speak and through what, what should one think and through what, what should one know and through what? Through what should one know That, owing to which all this known? Through what, O Maithreyi, should one know the Knower?"

Once the mahaa vaakyam is assimilated, the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi is falsified and the successful aspirant remains as apramaathaa saakshi, in the cozy, comfortable 'binary' (aathma-anaathma) format. This goal can be achieved by the seeker, only with the help of mahaa vaakyam. Therefore, according to the Advaithin, mahaa vaakyam is the greatest statement in the entire cosmos. In contrast, the meemaamsakaa holds that, the mahaa vaakyam is the most apramaana vaakyam in the Vedas. Mahaa vaakyam is extremely important for the Advaitha vedhaanthin and mahaa vaakyam is absolutely useless for the Meemaasaka ekadesi.

Sureswaraachaarya wants to refute that meemamsakaa. Before commencing his refutation, he consolidates his stand, in this long, first sentence of the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 47. The most important portion of the sentence is "vaakyam aathmaanam prathpaadhayathi eva", where 'vaakyam' denotes 'mahaa vaakyam', 'aathmaanam' means 'the thureeya aathmaanam' and 'prathipadhayathi eva' means 'does reveal'. Therefore, mahaa vaakyam is a pramaanam, since the definition of a pramaanam is 'that which reveals something which is not known through any other pramaanam'. "Anadhigatha abhaadhitha asandhigdha vasthu vishayaka jnaana janakam pramaanam" is the definition, already explained in an earlier session.

To consolidate: Mahaa vaakyam does 'reveal' the Saakshi aathma. Whatever 'reveals' something new is a pramaanam. Mahaa vaakyam 'reveals' something new; therefore, it does enjoy a pramaanam status.

And, what type of aathmaa does it reveal? One adjective used by Aachaaryaa is:

- प्रमाणान्तर अनवष्टब्धं - not accessible to any pramaanam other than mahaa vaakyam,

'anavashtabhdam' means 'beyond the scope of' / 'not accessible' / anadhigatha vishayam.

The Aachaaryaa uses another adjective also (which was discussed in the earlier session), viz., "nirastha asesha kaaryakaaranaathmaka dvaitha prapancham", meaning "which is divested of the whole world of plurality, consisting of causes and effects".

'nirastha' means 'free from' ; 'dvaitha prapancham' means 'dualistic world'. 'nirastha dvaitha prapancham' means 'free from all this dualistic world'.

This term should remind the student of the seventh manthraa in the Maandookya Upanishad "prapanchopasamam saantham sivam advaitham" – "free from the world, tranquil, auspicious and non-dual".

The Aachaaryaa calls the world 'dvaitha prapancham'. What kind of dvaitha? The description given by the Aachaaryaa is 'kaarya kaaranaathmaka' meaning 'consisting of causes and effects'. Therefore, what does 'nirastha asesha kaaryakaaranaathmaka dvaitha prapancham' mean? Ans: Thureeyam is free from all the kaaryam-s and kaaranam-s / causes and effects. Thureeyam is kaarya kaarana vilakshanam ; it is also desa kaala atheethem.

When it is, thus, said "'I', the Thureeyam, am free from dvaitha prapancham", the student should not imagine a mystic state, in which 'I' alone will be there, without experiencing the dualistic universe. Vedhaanthee is not talking about a mystic state. Even in the waking stage, the successful aspirant understands himself to be free from the perceived universe. Perceiving the universe, he says "I am free from the perceived universe". How can he say so? Ans: Because of his firm understanding and conviction that the perceived universe is of a lower order of reality, while, 'I' am of a higher order of reality. Therefore, even while perceiving the world, he says the world is as good as 'not there'. The successful aspirant is in advaitam, not in nirvikalpaka samaadhi alone; he is in advaitam always – thrishu api kaaleshu, sarvaasu avasthaasu. Vedhaanthaa is talking about an advaitam, which is available in jaagrath avasthaa itself. That is the reason why Sureswaraacharya says : "Mahaa vaakyam produces advaita jnaanam on sravanam itself. You do not have to go to another so-called higher state".`

'I' am in advaitam even now, if I understand that the perceived universe is of a lower order. And, that non-dual 'I' is called 'nirastha asesha kaarya kaaranathmaka dvaita prapancham'. That is 'my' title. What a title? To remember the title is difficult. But 'I' have got this wonderful title, which every diligent seeker should claim.

"Nirastha: prapancha: yasmaath sa: advitheeya aathmaa aham asm'" ("I' am the non-dual aathmaa, from whom the whole universe is divested") is what is revealed by the mahaa vaakyam.

Sureswaraacharya gives a third definition (also discussed in the earlier session) to aathmaa, using the compound term "sathya jnaana aanandha lakshanam aathmaanam". Thaithreya Upanishad says: "'I' am sathyam jnaanam anantham". Sureswaraacharya makes a modification. Instead of using the word 'anantha', he uses the word 'aanandha'.

(Swamiji says in a lighter vein: The use of the term 'aanandha', by the Aacharya, is probably deliberate, since, he presumably wants more people to be attracted to the study of Vedhaanthaa. An "'anantha' aathmaa existing somewhere" may not interest people. But the possibility of achieving an "'aanandha' aathmaa" is bound to attract more people, human nature being what it is.)

And, Sureswaraacharya avers "Mahaa vaakyam prathipaadhayathi eva" meaning "Mahaa vaakyam does reveal such an aathmaa".

What else does the mahaa vaakyam do ? The Aacharya answers this, by the term "samsayitha mithyaa jnaana ajaana pradhvamsamukhena". By its revelation / by giving this knowledge about aathmaa (Self), mahaa vaakyam destroys three things: ajannam, mithyaa jnaanam and samsayitha jnaanam. 'Ajannam' means 'Self- ignorance'. 'Mithyaa jnaanam' means 'misconceptions (about the Self)'. 'Samsayitha jnaanam' means 'doubts (about the Self)'. Mahaa vaakyam destroys the ignorance, the misconceptions and the doubts, with regard to 'me', as a liberated person.

To clarify the distinction between jnaanam, mithyaa jnaanam, samsayitha jnaanam and ajnaanam, Swamiji talks of an 'experiment', that might be conducted. He says: "Suppose I conduct an experiment. I arrange two sets of chairs, one on my right and the other on my left. I tell you, that, the chairs on my right side are for 'liberated' people and the chairs on my left are for samsaari-s. I invite you to choose your seat on my right or on my left, as you deem suitable for you. I can visualize the result of my invitation. There will be some students who will choose to come and sit on the 'liberated person' chairs, making me happy. Another set of students will sit on the 'samsaari' chairs, arguing that 'liberation is far away'. A third group will stand wondering where to sit; and there will be a small, fourth group also, who will continue to sit in their present seats, without any reaction. This shows that there are (i) one set of people who have no ignorance about the true nature of their Selves (ii) one set of people who have the misconception that their Selves are not liberated (iii) a third group which is in doubt of the nature of their Selves and (iv) a fourth group which is totally ignorant of the concept of 'liberation'. If mahaa vaakyam is listened to properly, all the students without exception, should head for the asamsaari chairs and there must be no occupant of the samsaari chairs". Again in a lighter vein, Swamiji adds: "I am not conducting this experiment for the present, since I do not want to get disappointed. I am postponing the experiment to the last day of my life, assuming that I will continue to teach till my last day, when I will conduct the experiment, so that my 'disappointment' will last only for one day".

Sureswaraachaarya confidently avers that the mahaa vaakyam will give aathma jnaanam, totally destroying ignorance, doubt and misconceptions. How can he be so confident? Ans: Because, it has worked for him.

And, how does the mahaa vaakyam 'reveal'? Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the word 'saakshaath' meaning 'directly'. This word is very important, since, according to Sureswaraachaaryaa, 'aparoksha jnaanam' is in sravanam itself. 'Realization' has to take place in sravanam, in the form of clear understanding. 'Realization' is not in the form of a mystic experience in samaadhi. It is a clear understanding, during sravanam itself. That is why he uses the word saakshaath.

The Aachaaryaa gives an example for the 'clarity' of the revelation given by mahaa vaakyam. He says that the mahaa vaakyam 'directly' gives 'clear' knowledge, 'karathala nyastha aamalakavath' meaning 'like an aamalakaa fruit, kept on the palm of the hand'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa concludes the sentence with the statement "ithi asakruth abhihitham", meaning "This particular idea, I have said repeatedly".

He implies: "But, in spite of that, the poorva meemaasakaa or meemaamsaka ekadesi is challenging my statement and says: 'mahaa vaakyam is not a pramaanam. It does not give any knowledge. When it does not give any knowledge, where is the question of a 'liberating' knowledge? No knowledge takes place; no liberation takes place. The mahaa vaakyam is utterly useless; in fact, the entire Vedhaanthaa portion is a 'barren' part of Veda. Veda ooshaaraa: Vedhaanthaa | Just as in a country, there are fertile lands and there are barren lands also, the Veda also has got a fertile portion, as well as a barren portion. The fertile portion is the Veda Poorva or Karma Kaandaa portion, which talks of karmaa-s of all types - nithya, naimitthika, kaamyaa, praayaschittha and nishiddha karmaani. The Karma Kaandaa is the useful portion of Veda. Vedhaanthaa comes under the 'barren' portion of Veda. The mahaa vaakyam, which comes in that portion, has no relevance at all".

This is the poorva pakshaa, that is going to be introduced. The Aachaaryaa says 'asakruth abhihitham' - 'I have repeatedly taught the importance of mahaa vaakyam'. And, seems to imply: "Now, look at the arrogance of the poorva meemaamsakaa".

(Further) Sambhandha Gadyam to Verses 47 & 48:

तत्र केचिदाहुः तत्त्वस्यादिवाक्यैः यथावस्थितवस्तुयाथात्म्यं अन्वाख्याननिष्ठैः न यथोक्तोऽर्थः प्रतिपत्तुं शक्यतेऽभिधाश्रुतित्वात् तेषाम् ।

In this connection, some raise the following objection: The texts like 'That thou art', purporting to expound reality as it actually is, cannot convey the meaning ascribed to them for they are existential in import.

- तत्र - This being so,

What does 'this being so' mean? Ans: It means "While the Advaitin's view is that mahaa vaakyam is the most productive vaakyam for a seeker",

The Aachaaryaa is introducing a counter-point given by the meemaamsaka ekadesi.

- केचित् - the meemaamsaka ekadesi
- आहुः - argues (as follows):

The quotation of the poorva pakshin's objections starts with the term 'thathvamasyaadhi' in this second sentence of this sambhandha gadhyam and continues up to the word 'niyogasya' in the fourth sentence of the same sambhandha gadhyam.

What does the meemaamsakaa say? This particular view of the meemaamsakaa is presented by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, and also refuted by him, in an elaborate analysis, while discussing the 4th soothraa - 'thath thu samanvayaathi' - in the Brahma Soothraa-s. There, Sankaraachaaryaa points out, that, the very word 'thu' is in refutation of the meemaamsaka poorva paksham and follows up with an elaborate analysis. A similar analysis is done here, by Sureswaraachaaryaa, but briefly.

To present the Meemaamsakaa's objection:

The meemaasakaa says that statements can be classified into two types – (i) siddha bodhaka vaakyani and (ii) kaarya bodhaka vaakyani. He claims that any statement uttered by anyone, can come only under one of these two types.

'Siddha bodhaka vaakyani' may be interpreted as 'statements of facts'. For instance, the statements "(i) There is a place called Gangodhri (ii) It is at an elevation of 10,000 ft., above sea level (iii) There is a temple for Ganga there (iv) River Ganga flows there etc." are 'statements of facts'. In 'statements of facts', there is no commandment / no prescription of any action. There is no direction to the listener to carry out something. 'Statements of existential facts' are called 'siddha bodhaka vaakyani'. Negatively expressed, 'non-action-prescribing' statements are called 'siddha bodhaka vaakyani'.

The second group of statements is 'kaarya bodhaka vaakyani', meaning 'statements of commandments'. Examples are: (i) Get up early in the morning (ii) Do soorya namsakaaraa (iii) Take bath (iv) Worship / do Puja to Bhagavaan (v) perform some japa etc. All the verbs in these sentences, viz., 'get up', 'do', 'take', 'worship', 'perform' etc. are commandments, termed 'imperative modes' in English grammar. The statements are not statements with present tense verbs but statements with 'imperative modes', where the listener is enjoined to do various actions. Karma kaandaa is full of statements directing an individual to do one action or another. Sathyam vadha, dharmam chara, svaadhyaayaath maa pramadha:, sathyaan na pramadhithavyam etc., are all 'imperative modes', otherwise called 'potential modes', in short, 'instructions'. All the instructive statements are called 'kaarya bodhaka vaakyani'. Karma Kaandaa is full of kaarya bodhaka vaakyani, while jnaana kaandaa contains mostly siddha bodhaka vaakyani.

What the poorva meemaamsakaa says is that, all siddha bodhaka vaakyani are apramaanam. According to him, they are not valid statements / not worth considering as pramaanam, whereas, all kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani are pramaana vaakyaani, because they enjoin new activities, which are not known through any other means. For instance, Sandhya Vandhanam can never be prescribed by a book on any other subject, say Physics or Chemistry.

Sandhya Vandhanam is a new 'action' prescribed, which we learn only from Veda Poorvaa, and through the 'action', we derive some benefit also. "Instructive' vaakyaam-s are pramaana vaakyaam-s. They are new and they are also useful, whereas siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are not pramaana vaakyaani" is the poorva meemaasakaa's statement. Later, the poorva meemaasakaa himself explains the reasons for his view.

Reverting to the text:

- तत्त्वमस्यादि वाक्यैः : - From the statements like thathvamasi etc.

The use of the term 'aadhI (etc.)' implies inclusion of other maaha vaakyams also.

- यथावस्थित वस्तु याथात्म्य अन्वाख्यान निष्ठैः - which are in the form of siddha bodhakam,

The whole compound 'yathaa vasthitha vasthu yaathaathmya anvaakyaana nishtai:', in simpler language means 'siddha bodhaka roopai:' |

'yathaa vasthitha vasthu yaathaathmyam' means 'nature of a thing as it is' and simply means 'siddham'.

'Yathaa vasthitha' means 'as it is'; 'vasthu' means 'thing'; 'yaathaathmyam' means 'nature'. 'Yaatha vasthitha vasthu yaathaathmyam', therefore, means 'nature of a thing as it is', exactly as in the statements 'there is a place called Gangodhri etc. The statements "(i) There is a place called Gangodhri (ii) It is at an elevation of 10,000 ft., above sea level (iii) There is a temple for Ganga there (iv) River Ganga flows there etc." are all statements of facts about Gangodhri, as Gangodhri is.

In simple language, 'yathaa vasthitha vasthu yaathaathmyam' means 'siddham'.

As for the term 'anvaakyaana nishtai:', the term literally means 'committed to reveal'. 'Nishtai:' means 'committed'. What are committed? Ans: The sentences are committed. What are the sentences committed to? Ans: 'anvaakyaanam', which means 'revelation'. 'anvaakyaana nishtai:' is adjective to 'vaakya:', meaning 'committed to reveal'. 'Yathaa vasthitha vasthu yaathaathmya anvaakyaana nishtai:', therefore, means 'sentences which are committed to reveal the nature of a thing as the thing is'. In simple English, it means 'statements of facts'. By such statements (the poorva meemaamasakaa holds):

- प्रतिपत्तुं न शक्यते - it is not possible to know 'prathipatthi.' means 'knowledge'; 'prathipatthum' means 'to know'.
- यथोक्त अर्थ : - any new fact,

"By such statements as 'thath thvam asi', it is not possible to know any new facts" is the essence of this sentence 'thathvamasyaadhi vaakyai: yathaavasthitha vasthuyaathaatmyaana anvaakhayaanaishtai: na yathokthortha: prathipatthum sakyathe'. To express in simple language "they are not pramaana vaakyams / they do not enjoy the status of pramaanam / they do not deserve the definition as pramaanam".

Why do they not deserve such a definition?

These are all technical portions which had been discussed earlier, while talking about four conditions of a pramaanaa, in verses 35, 36, 37 and 38 of this same chapter III. In that portion, four conditions were given for a vaakyam to enjoy the pramaanam status. The poorva meemaasakaa is questioning one of the four conditions stated as required for a statement to be valid. According to the poorva pakshin,

- तेषां अभिधा श्रुतित्वात् - because such statements are siddha bodhaka vaakyaani.

'abhithaa sruthi' is another word for 'siddha bodhaka vaakyam', translated as 'statement of facts, as they exist', also implying 'not statement of commandment'.

Having said this, hereafter the poorva pakshin has to explain as to why a siddha bodhaka vaakyam cannot be a pramaanam, because that is the vyaapthi.

'Mahaa vaakyam apramaanam siddha bodhaka vaakyathvaath' is the poorva pakshin's anumaanam (conclusion by inference). For this, he is using a vyaapthi jnaanam (an universal rule), viz. "yathra yathra siddha bodhakathvam thathra thathra aparamaanathvam" meaning "whatever statements are 'statements of facts', those statements are apramaana vaakyani". Now, he has to establish why. He has to answer the question "Why do you say this?" The poorva pakshin's justification follows.

(Further) Sambhandha Gadhyam to Verses 47 & 48:

न हि लोकेऽभिधाश्रुते :प्रमाणान्तरनिरपेक्षायाः नध्यास्तीरे फलानि सन्तीत्यादिकाया :प्रामाण्यभ्युपगतम्।

In ordinary life, existential statements like 'On the bank of the rivers, there are fruits', not supported by other corroborative evidence, are not accorded validity.

The poorva meemaamsaka's logic is to be studied carefully.

Going back to the examples of 'statements of facts', given earlier, viz., "There is a place called Gangodhri; it is at an elevation of 10,000 ft. above sea level; it is a very cold place; river Ganga is flowing there" etc., if the question "Are they pramaanam or not?" is asked, the poorva meemaamsaka would say "These statements do not enjoy pramaanam status. Though they are revealing facts, they do not enjoy pramaanam status".

He would justify his view in the following manner:

"Definition of pramanaam, is 'that which produces knowledge'. In other words: 'Producer of knowledge', is 'pramaanam'. Expressed in Sanskrit, 'Pramaa janakam Pramaanam'. Now, in these statements, how were the particular facts, viz.,

- (i) there is Gangodhri
- (ii) it is at an elevation of 10,000 ft.
- (iii) that place is very cold and
- (iv) that river Ganga is flowing there etc., known by the person making those statements? He might have read them in a book or heard them from someone. But, ultimately, this knowledge is derived from somebody, who had gone to Gangodhri, measured the elevation, observed the cold climate, the flowing of the Ganga etc.

"In other words, this knowledge about Gangodhri was generated by prathyaksha pramaanam alone, though it may not be known as to who visited Gangodhri and made these observations first.

"And, after prathyaksha pramaanam had revealed the facts about Gangodhri, the person who got that prathyaksha pramaana knowledge had transferred that knowledge through 'words'. Now, the question is: 'Are the words 'transferring' the knowledge or 'generating' the knowledge? i.e. Are they 'carriers' of knowledge or 'generators' of knowledge?' The answer to this, will have to be: 'The words do not have the power to produce the knowledge of Gangodhri. They are only 'carrying' / 'transferring' the knowledge which was generated by prathyaksha pramaanam'.

"The vaakyaani / statements are 'prathyaksha pramaana janya jnaana anuvaadhaka vaakyaani- 'sentences restating the knowledge which was and can only be gathered by prathyaksha pramaanam'. Therefore, it follows, that, there is no new knowledge generated by these vaakyaani.

“Pramaanam’ is defined as ‘anadhigatha, abhaadhitha, asandhighdha jnaana janakam pramaanam’. Something is a pramaanam, only when it reveals something which cannot be known through another pramaanam. A ‘source of knowledge’ is so called only because it reveals or produces a knowledge which is not generated by any other source.

“Knowledge on Gangodhri was gained only through prathyaksha pramaanam. The knowledge about the ‘coldness’ of Gangodhri can be gathered only through prathyaksha pramaanam and that prathyaksha jnaana is only re-stated or ‘carried’ by vaakyam. Therefore, it should be called anuvaadhaka vaakyam. All siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are pramanaanaanthara janya jnaana anuvaadhaka vaakyaani and an anuvaadhaka vaakyam can never be a pramaana vaakyam”.

In this sambhandha gadhyam, the poorva meemaamsakaa gives another example, in the place of Gangodhri:

नध्या तीरे पलानि सन्ति : - On the bank of the river there are many fruits strewn .

The poorva meemaamsakaa says: “Imagine that there is a fruit tree on a river bank and that, ripened fruits have fallen from the tree. Therefore there are many fruits on the bank. An onlooker makes a comment ‘nadhyaa: therey palaani santhi’ - ‘on the bank of the river there are many fruits strewn’. Can this vaakyam be taken as a pramaana vaakyam?” The poorva meemaamsakaa proceeds: “According to my logic it cannot be taken as pramaana vaakyam. ‘Siddha bodhavathkaathvath idham vakyam apramaanam’ – ‘being only a statement of an observed fact, this sentence is not a source of knowledge’. Prathyaksham alone is the pramaanam. This Vaakyam is only anuvaadhakam, since it is only revealing the observed fact of fruits being there, and not pramaanam. An anuvaadhaka vaakyam is a ‘transporter’ of knowledge, not a ‘producer’ of knowledge; therefore, it is apraamaanam. Now, what about your mahaa vaakyam? It is also only a siddha bodhaka vaakyam. My vyaapthi jnaanam / general knowledge, is ‘yathra yathra siddha bodhakathvam thathra thathra apramaanathvam’. What is my example? The vaakyam ‘nadhyaa: therey palaani santhi’. From that vaakyam, I get this vyaapthi jnaanam, that, any statement which is siddha bodhaka vaakyam is apraamaanam. I apply this vyaapthi jnaanam to mahaa vaakyam also. I make an anumanaam: ‘mahaa vaakyam apramannam siddha bodhakathvaath, nadhyaa: therey palaani santhi’ ithi vaakyavath”.

Addressing the Vedhaanthin, the poorva meemaamsakaa would say: “In the face of these facts, why are you harping on mahaa vaakya vichaaram, with all its emphasis on thath padha vichaaraa, thvam padha vichaaraa, saamaanaadhikaranya sambhandhaa, viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa, lakshana-lakshya-sambhandhaa etc.? It is a waste of time. What have you achieved by just saying aathmaa is the same as Brahman? Your physical and mental problems have not been solved in any manner. Therefore, instead of Veda anthaa, why do you not get interested in the Veda Poorvaa or Karma Kaandaa of the Vedas? May you take to performing rituals and parihaaram-s, as prescribed in the Karma Kaandaa, to tide over your worldly problems. Listening to 'jeevaathma - Paramaathma - aikyam' even for a length of time, has not helped you in your worldly problems. From this itself, it must be clear to you, that Vedhaanthaa is useless and that, Karma Kaandaa is useful. Therefore, drop Vedhaanthaa and move to Veda Poorvaa". Therefore, he says:

- लोके - In ordinary life,
- अभिधा श्रुतेः - siddha bodhaka vaakyam-s,
- 'नध्या इत्यादिकाया ' तीरे पलानि सन्ति : : - like the statement 'on the bank of the river, there are fruits strewn' etc.,
- प्रमाणान्तर निरपेक्षायः : - if not supported by another pramaanam like prathyakshaa / if not supported by other corroborative evidence ,

The term 'pramaanaanathara nirapekshayaa:' is adjective to 'abhidhaa sruthe:'. 'abidhaa sruthi:' means 'siddha bodhaka sruthi vaakyam'.

- प्रामाण्यं न अभ्युपगतम् - are not accorded validity at all.

If and when the statement "Gangodhri is cold" is made by someone, the normal tendency of the listener would be to question the speaker "Have you visited Gangodhri?" If the speaker replies in the affirmative "Yes, I have visited Gangodhri", then his word will be accepted and any statement made by him about Gangodhri will get better validity. Conversely, if a person describes some place eloquently without visiting that place, even his eloquent descriptions will not be treated with validity.

In the context of Vedhaanthaa also, the student is eager to know whether the guru has had directly experienced Brahman. If the guru is a Brahmanishta:, his statements are more readily accepted as valid; otherwise the guru is looked upon to be just a scholar.

These facts show that, any 'statement' is expected to be proved through another pramaanam.

A Sanskrit saying goes: "vidwan eva vijaanaathi vidvath jana parisramam; na hi vandhyaa vijaanaathi kurveem prasava vedhanaa" - "Only a jnaani knows what is jnaanam; a barren woman cannot talk about labour pain".

If a man gives 'labour pain' as example for some physical pain, the listener is bound to be amused and ask "How do you know about labour pain?" Such non-experienced examples will give only samsayitha jnaanam and not clear knowledge.

Thus, any eloquent description of some fact without experiencing the fact through another pramaanam – generally prathyaksha - will not get absolute validity.

The poorva meemaamsakaa applies these lokika experiences to the mahaa vaakyam also. He says "In the same manner, mahaa vaakyam also can never be valid by itself. If at all it should get validity, that must be a knowledge gathered through some other pramaanam".

That is why people think that the other pramaanam is samaadhi and believe that whoever had gone to samaadhi and had directly experienced Brahman, for them, this vaakyam is pramaanam.

The poorva meemaamsakaa firmly believes that a 'statement of fact' can never have validity, without the support of another pramaanam, which gives direct experience.

Therefore, what should the seeker do, according to him?

He says: "You should extend the same principle to Veda vakyam also. We do want to accept the entire Veda as pramaanam. All kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani are pramaanam. Therefore, we have no problems with the karma kaandaa of the Veda, which contains only kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani. But, siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are apramaanam, because of the logic 'yathra yathra siddha bodhakathvam thathra thathra apramaanathvam'. If any part of Veda contains any siddha bodhaka vaakyam, that part of Veda will become apramaanam. But, what we also want is, that, the entire Veda should be pramaanam. Therefore, a modification is needed to make the entire Veda a pramaanam. The needed modification, in such places, is to add the verb 'ithi upaaseetha'. 'Ithi upaaseetha' means 'thus may you meditate'. Once you add 'may you meditate' after the mahaa vaakyam, the siddha bodhaka vaakyam will be converted into a kaarya bodhaka vaakyam – a commandment or an injunction. The commandment is to do a saadhanaa - 'meditation saadhanaa'. The activity of 'meditation' is assigned to the seeker. Following the injunction, the seeker will do the karma called meditation; his samsaara will gradually fade as even he practices intense meditation round the clock; and, as a result of long meditation, will at last be destroyed totally. 'aham Brahma asmi upaasanaa dhyana karma will give the sadhakaa 'liberation' in the future. Therefore, convert mahaa vaakyam into dhyana kriyaa bodhaka vaakyam; do not say that mahaa vaakyam is 'revealing' a fact; if you say it is revealing a fact, it will become a siddha bodhaka vaakyam and if it is siddha bodhaka vaakyam, it will become apramaanam. Therefore, kindly listen to my words”.

That is what is said here, in the next sentence, by the Poorva Meemaamsakaa.

This conversion is called niyoga. Niyoga vaakyam, when used for mahaa vaakyam, means vidhi vaakyam or kaarya bodhaka vaakyam.

155. Chapter III, Verse 47 and 48 (26-09-2009)

In this introduction to verse 47, Sureswaraachaaryaa is presenting a poorva pakshaa from meemaamsaka ekadesi; 'ekadesi' refers to a particular group among poorva meemaasaka philosophers.

In the earlier session, two types of statements were discussed: siddha bodhaka vaakyaani and kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani. The meemaamsaka ekadesi uses another word 'abhithaa sruthi:', for the siddha bodhaka vaakyam. In this word, 'sruthi:' refers to 'sruthi vaakyam' and the word 'abhithaa' means 'naming' or 'revealing'.

According to the meemaamsaka ekadesi, the entire Veda Poorvaa is pramaanam, whereas the entire Vedhaanthaa is not, because, according to him, only kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani are pramaanam and Veda Poorva alone prescribes activities for attaining specific results. In Vedha Anthaa, there are only some sentences prescribing activities like upaasanaa. The meemaamsaka ekadesi holds, that, among Vedha Anthaa statements, only such statements which prescribe activities can be taken as pramaanam, while any statement which reveals only a fact cannot be accepted as a pramaanam. Therefore, according to him, the mahaa vaakyam 'thathvamas' also cannot be taken as a pramaanam as it is, because 'thathvamas' does not prescribe any action.

The meemaamsaka ekadesi gives the reason also for his view. He cites a sentence as an example: 'naddyaa: theerey palaani santhi'. The sentence means 'there are fruits on the bank of the rivers'. He points out that this statement cannot be considered a pramaanam, because, it does not satisfy one of the conditions to be a pramaanam, viz., the condition that 'a pramaanam should be revealing something which is not accessible to any other pramaanam'. This criterion is called 'anadhigathathvam' or 'apoorvathad'.

'Anadhigathathvam' or 'apoorvathad' is the status of a pramaanam and that status indicates that the pramaanam reveals something which is not available for any other pramaanam. Eyes are called pramaanam, because they reveal forms and colours, which cannot be revealed by any other sense organ, ear or nose or tongue. Similarly, each sense organ is a pramaanam in its own field, because each reveals an unique knowledge. This 'uniqueness' is a criterion for a pramaanam.

With regard to the sentence 'naddyaa: theerey palaani santhi', the vaakyam does not reveal anything unique, since that knowledge had already been gained by prathyaksha pramaanam. And, a person who had gained that knowledge through prathyakshaa is only conveying that already acquired knowledge through the sentence 'naddyaa: theerey' palaani santhi. Therefore, that vaakyam is only a 'knowledge-carrier' and not a 'knowledge-producer'.

Then, in that case, what produced the knowledge? Only the eyes revealed that there is a river, there is a riverbank and that there are fruits. And, importantly, even the receiver of the statement can understand the meaning of the sentence only if he had experienced a river before and only if he had experienced fruits before. Only a person who had already experienced nadhi, theeram, palaani etc., can receive the knowledge.

So, the receiver of the sentence (the listener) also must know nadhi, theeram, palaani etc., previously through prathyaksha pramaanam; and, the speaker also talks about them, only after employing prathyaksha pramaanam. In the absence of prathyaksha pramaanam, the speaker cannot talk about nadhi, theeram or palaani; nor can the receiver understand the sentence. A blind person cannot talk about them and a blind person cannot also understand this statement. Thus, the vaakyam depends on prathyaksha pramaanam for conveying the message and for receiving the message also. Since the knowledge had to be obtained by another pramaanam viz., prathyakshaa, it follows that, 'naddhyaa: theerey palaani santhi' is 'apraamaanam' – 'not a pramaanam', 'pramaananthara gamyathvaath'.

The meemaamsaka ekadesi extending the argument to mahaa vaakyam, says "thaththvamsi' apramaanam siddha bodhaka vaakyathvaath 'naddhyaa: theerey palaani santhi' vaakyavath" meaning "similar to this sentence 'there are fruits on the riverbank', 'that thou art' is also apraamaanam, since it is only a statement of a fact".

But the meemaamsakaa has a problem. He cannot totally reject the mahaa vaakyam 'thaththvam as', since it is a veda vaakyam and the meemaamsakaa also is a mahaa vaidhikaa (believer in Vedas). In fact, for him, Veda is 'pramaana moordhanya:', 'the greatest pramaanam'. Since Veda as a whole has been accepted as a pramaanam by the meemaamsakaa, he cannot throw away or totally reject the mahaa vaakyam. At the same time, he cannot also totally accept it as a pramaanam.

In Tamil, there is a saying "மெல்லவும் முடியவில்லை, முழுங்கவும்முடியவில்லை"- "impossible to chew and impossible to swallow also", to denote such dilemmas. There is a similar saying in Malayalam also. Therefore, the meemaamsakaa desires to manipulate the mahaa vaakyam and to 'raise' the apraamaana vaakyam into a pramaana vaakyam. How to do that? The meemaamsakaa's theory is that 'only siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are apraamaanam, while kaarya bodhaka vakkayaani are pramaanam'. 'Kaarya bodhaka vaakyam' means 'a statement of commandment', a statement which prescribes some action or other. Therefore, what does he do? He converts siddha bodhaka vaakyam into kaarya bodhaka vaakya, by adding a commandment. The meemaamsakaa resorts to this stratagem very often, in his Veda Poorva commentary also.

We have such cases in worldly affairs also. An example was discussed in an earlier session. Suppose somebody says "I am very, very thirsty" and a listener responds "There is water in that corner". Even though the listener's sentence is only a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, there is a suggestion implicit in the sentence, viz., "go and drink the water, so that, your thirst will be quenched". The suggestion / commandment is not directly given but is implied. Similarly, if the guru says "I am thirsty", the sishtyaa will immediately run and fetch some water, even though the guru had not issued any direct command. He had made only a statement of fact / a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, viz., "I am thirsty".

In a similar manner, the meemaamsaka ekadesi adds an implied command to the mahaa vaakyam also. What is that implied command? Ans: "Ithi upaaseetha". He does not stop merely with the statement 'thath thvam asi', but, modifies it as "'thath thvam asi' ithi upaaseetha".

This 'supplying' of the 'upaaseetha' verb is not totally unprecedented. In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, there is a famous saying 'aathmaa itheva upaaseetha' (I. iv. 7). The poorva pakshin (the meemaamsaka ekadesi) says "since a similar commandment is available in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, why not 'lift' that 'upaasanaa' and add it here to the mahaa vaakyam?"

So, according to the poorva pakshin, Vedhaanthaa's exhortation is: "O Student ! Do not stop with just listening to the guru stating the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi', assuming that the learning process is complete. You should listen to the vaakyam, understand it as a kaarya bodhaka vaakyam and then go on meditating 'aham brahma asmi'. Does not the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad also exhort 'aathmaa vaa arey dhrashtavya: , srothavya: , manthavya: , nidhidhyaasithavya:' (II.iv.5)? Does not that manthraa mean that 'aathmaa should be meditated upon?'".

The only difference between 'upaaseetha' and 'nidhidhyaasithavya:' is that 'upaaseetha' is in active voice and 'nidhidhyaasithavya:' is in passive voice. One is a direct commandment 'meditate upon (aathmaa)' and the other says '(aathmaa) should be meditated upon.

So, in the opinion of the poorva pakshin, Vedhaanthaa directs the seeker to do a saadhanaa – viz. 'meditation', for a length of time. He avers: "This commandment to 'meditate', is the meaning of mahaa vaakyam. Just 'understanding' the mahaa vaakyam is not enough".

This is poorva pakshaa. Unfortunately, many Vedhaanthic students find this poorva meemaamsakaa very appealing and tend to erroneously think "What is the use of saying 'aham brahma asmi'? My problems continue, as usual. I should engage in meditation. I have to do the saadhanaa, 'aham brahma asmi' meditation, for a length of time. And, as a result of this meditation, sometime in the future, mukthi: or mokshaa will result for me".

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verses 47 & 48:

अतो नियोगमुखेनैवाभिधाश्रुतेः प्रामाण्यं युक्तं प्रामाणान्तरनिरपेक्षत्वानिनियोगस्य ।

Hence such statements must be thought as valid by means of their connections with injunctive propositions, for injunctive propositions are independent of other sources of knowledge.

- अतः - Therefore,

'Therefore' means: 'siddha bodhaka vaakyam is not pramaanam; mahaa vaakyam is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam; therefore, mahaa vaakyam is not a pramaanam; and, therefore'.

- नियोगमुकेन एव - only by converting mahaa vaakyam into a commandment,

'niyoga.' means 'vidhi.' / 'aagnyaad / commandment. And, 'commandment' in the context of Vedas, always refers to some saadhanaa on the part of the seeker.

It is generally seen, that all spiritual seekers are anxious to take to some saadhanaa or other.

(Swamiji, from his own experience, says: "Whenever my students have a private meeting with me, they ask "Swamiji! Do you have some special advice for me?" That means that they want a secret, special commandment which I can give and which they can follow, so that mokshaa will come quickly".)

Every seeker is eager to receive advice on some 'action', so that mokshaa will be brought nearer. On the other hand, Sureswaraachaaryaa is struggling to convey "mokshaa need not be 'brought'; it is your svaroopam". The student nods his head, as if he has understood the teaching and is also in total agreement with it, but, wants to 'do' some saadhanaa, so that the process of 'mokshaa event' can be hastened.

With the same misconception, the poorva meemaamsakaa says "nyogamukhena eva" meaning "only by converting mahaa vaakyam into a commandment prescribing intense meditation, preferably culminating in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, by that process".

This is a school of thought which is now widely preached also: "You have to regularly practice samaadhi, because of which the mind will gradually 'melt away', like an ice block becoming smaller and smaller, while melting. Every time you sit in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, a percentage of 'mano naasaad' takes place; when sufficient nirvikalpaka samaadhi is practiced the 'mano naasaad' will be complete; and, when mind perishes, you are liberated 'aathmaad'. This is not the real teaching of Vedhaanthaa; but, is only one of the prevailing confusions in understanding Vedhaanthic teaching. This erroneous concept, viz., "regular practice of nirvikalpaka samaadhi results in 'mano naasaad', hastening the 'mokshaad' process" is a result of every seeker thinking "I should become muktha.". This 'becoming' tendency is so rampant and deep, that any saadhanaa prescribed, mystic or regular, is 'lapped up' by the aspirant.

Reverting to the text: The meemaamsakaa has said 'nyogamukhena eva', meaning 'by only converting to a commandment'. 'mukhena' means 'by means of'.

And, how to do that? It is not explicitly mentioned here; but, the poorva meemaamsakaa's suggestion is that, it is to be done by adding the commandment 'ithi upaaseetha' – 'thus, you meditate'.

- प्रामाण्यं - validity (and utility)
- युक्तं - can be ascribed
- अभिधाश्रुते : - to all siddha bodhaka vaakyam-s;

The poorva pakshin gives his reason also for this.

नियोगस्य प्रमाणान्तर निरपेक्षत्वात् - because, 'commandment' does not depend upon other pramaanam-s.

Whenever a fresh action is prescribed, it has not been known earlier, through other pramaanam-s i.e., it is not dependent on other pramaanam-s.

Up to this is the poorva pakshaa.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa has to negate the poorva pakshaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verses 47 & 48:

अस्य परिहारार्थं अशेषप्रत्यक्षादिप्रमेयत्व निराकरणद्वारेण अतीन्द्रियार्थविषयत्वात् अभिधाश्रुते :प्रामाण्यं सुप्तपुरुषप्रबोधकवाक्यस्य इव वक्तव्यं इत्ययमारम्भः। :

In order to rule out this objection, it has to be pointed out now that these existential texts of the sruthi relate to a theme, which being super sensuous, transcends all other means of knowledge like perception and hence are valid, like the words that wake up a man from sleep. For this purpose, the next phase of the argument is initiated:

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa discusses this topic very, very elaborately, in his bhaashyam for the fourth Brahma soothraa, 'thatthusamanvayaath'. The two varieties of meemaamsaka vaadhaa-s – Praabhaakara meemaamsaka vaadhaa and Bhaatta meemaamsaka vadhaa - are discussed and refuted by him there. Even among the Vedhaanthins, there is a group who are closer to the meemaamsakaa-s. They are called Vedhaantha eka desi-s or vrutthikaraa-s | Vrutthikaara madhaa is closer to meemaamsakaa in its beliefs. The views of the vrutthikaraa-s are also elaborately discussed and refuted by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in the context of the 4th soothraa of Brahma Soothraa-s.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is summing up those discussions here. One particular aspect discussed by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in the bhaashyam to the 'thatththu samanvayaath/soothraa', is not covered by Sureswaraachaaryaa here, but, is worth studying in this context.

The course of that argument is as follows: "Just for argument's sake, (this type of approach is called abhyupedhya vaadha), let us accept the meemaamsakaa's views. Let us assume (i) that, mahaa vaakyam is not a pramaanam (ii) that, we supply the words 'ithi upaaseetha' (iii) that, the mahaa vaakyam becomes a pramaanam, because of conversion into an upaasana kaarya bodhaka vaakyam, upaasanam being a maanasa karma (iv) that, a spiritual seeker practices mahaa vaakya upaasanam for several years and (v) that, as a result of long upaasanaa, he 'gets' mokshaa.

"Now, what is that mokshaa? It is upaasanaa palan. What is upaasanaa? Ans: It is 'maanasa karamaa'. As a result of meditation, a mental activity, that aspirant 'got' mokshaa on a particular date.

"Sankaraachaaryaa asks 'what will be the nature of that mukthi?' and answers himself : "That mukthi: will be anithya;, because it has a beginning and whatever has a 'date of manufacture' will have a 'date of expiry' also". So, that mokshaa will be anithyam.

"But, all the aasthika dharsanaas glorify mokshaa, only because of its nature of eternity. Mokshaa is distinguished from all other accomplishments as an unique goal, only because of its uniqueness of eternity. If mokshaa also is presented as anithya upaasanaa palan, the uniqueness of mokshaa will go.

"Gowda Paadhaachaaryaa says in the Maandookya Kaarika "ananthathaa chaadhimatha: mokshasya na bhavishyathi" – "for a mokshaa, which has a beginning, endlessness is not possible (Verse 31 – Alaathasaanthiprakaranam).

"If Mokshaa is sa adhi:, it will be sa antha: also.

"Further, if mokshaa also is another anithya karma palan, Veda need not be separated into Karma and Jnaana kaandaas. The whole Veda will become one Karma Kaandam. But, the fact is, karmaa is distinct from jnaanaa. Karmaa gives anithya palam and jnaanaa gives nithya palam. All these differentiations will become meaningless, if mahaa vaakyam is a matter for meditation".

It follows from the above arguments of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, that all diligent Vedhaanthic students should clearly note that mahaa vaakyam is not 'matter for meditation' for 'attaining' of mokshaa at a later date ; that, mahaa vaakyam is a statement to be understood; and, that, they have to 'claim' mokshaa as a fact.

Of course, nidhidhyaasanam is prescribed as an essential step in Vedhaantha vichaaraa; but, it should be clearly understood that 'nidhidhyaasanam' is not for 'attaining' mokshaa ; on the other hand, it is to drop the expectation of mokshaa. To repeat : Nidhidhyaasanam is never practiced for mokshaa ; nidhidhyaasanam is practiced for 'dropping' the expectation of mokshaa.

The orientation / the vaasanaa / the vipareetha bhavanaa viz. "I should become a jnaani and I should become a muktha:" should be dropped by a diligent Vedhaanthic seeker. 'Understanding' mahaa vaakyam is, to be convinced "I am a jnaani and I am a muktha: | Neither jnaanam nor mukthi: is a future event. This is the aim of mahaa vaakyam.

But, the meemaamsakaa converts mahaa vaakyam into a 'meditation exercise' which will produce mokshaa in future. The Vedhaanthin refutes this, because (as explained above) if mokshaa is a result of upaasanaa, it will be anithya mokshaa and anithya mokshaa will not be mokshaa. It will be like svargaa, which will come at a later date, as a result of long saadhanaa and will also end on a given day. About Svargaa, Lord Krishna points out in the Bhagavadh Githa (Ch. IX – Sloka 21): "They tham bhukthvaa svargalokam vishaalam ksheene punye marthyalokam visanthi" - Having enjoyed that vast heavenly world, they (the karmi-s and upaasakaa-s) come back to the world of mortals, when their Punyaa is exhausted". If Mokshaa is an Upaasanaa palan, as the Meemaamsaka ekadesi holds, Lord

Krishna's above verse can be applied to Mokshaa also, with minor modifications, as "they tham bhukthvaa mokshaa lokam visaalam ksheene punye samsaaralokam visanth'", which is absurd and untenable, Mokshaa being nithyam.

The above is one argument (among several arguments) given by Gowda Paadhaachaaryaa in Maandookya Kaarika and by Sankaraachaaryaa in his Brahma Soothra Bhashyam in the context of the 'thaththu samanvayaath' soothra. But, here, Sureswaraachaaryaa does not mention that argument.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is attacking the poorva pakshin's view. What is the poorva pakshin's view? It is, as already stated, "Any siddha bodhaka vaakyam is apraamaanam, similar to the statement 'nadhyaa: theerey palaani santh', which statement is apraamaanam, because that statement is revealing something which is known through other pramaanam, namely, prathyakshaa'".

The Vedhaanthir's answer to this view of the poorva pakshin would be on the following lines: "A siddha bodhaka vaakyam is apraamaanam only when it is a pourusheya, loukika vaakyam. In other words, any siddha bodhaka vaakyam coming from a common man is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam dependent on another pramaanam like prathyaksham. An example is news that we read in the newspapers, such as 'an earthquake happened in such and such a place; the intensity of the earthquake in the Richter scale is such and such' etc. This statement is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam which is dependent on some other pramaanam. Someone had experienced the earthquake i.e. learnt about it through prathyaksha pramaanam and has also measured its intensity with an instrument, which observation also is dependent on prathyaksha pramaanam. This applies to all loukika facts, including scientific facts. Scientists get 'knowledge' on scientific facts, through 'experimentation' prathyaksha, which is also based only on prathyaksha pramaanam. I do admit that all loukika siddha bodhaka vaakyam-s coming from human beings are vaakyam-s depending on some other pramaana, mostly prathyaksham. But, this law cannot be applied in the case of aloukika, apourusheya Veda vaakyaani'.

The Vedhaanthir's answer, briefly, is "Pourusheya siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are not pramaanam, because they reveal facts known through 'experimentation' or 'direct perception'; whereas, when Veda talks about something, that statement will not come under pramaananthara gamya vaakyan'".

The Vedhaanthin can establish his assertion, by an example, the topic of 'Heaven'.

Suppose, the Vedhaanthin asks the poorva meemaamsakaa: "Does Heaven exist or not?", the poorva meemaamsakaa would reply in the affirmative: "Svarga: asthi'".

The poorva meemaamsakaa accepts 'Heaven' as an existent fact.

According to the poorva meemaamsakaa, svargaa is not an imagination, but, a vyaavahaarika sathyam. This is true about the Vedhaanthin also, for whom also, svargaa is not an imagination; nor is it only a 'happy life' on earth, as some people wrongly believe. Both poorva meemaamsakaa and Vedhaanthin accept that there is a vyaavahaarika sathya svarga lokaa.

The difference is, that, according to the poorva meemaamsakaa, svarga is eternal, while for the Vedhaanthin, it is not eternal. Also, unlike the Vedhaanthin, the poorva meemaamsakaa believes that 'going to an eternal svargaa, as a result of performance of appropriate rituals , is alone mokshad. That is his philosophy.

Therefore, the Vedhaanthin asks the poorva meemaamsakaa the question "how do you know that there is a svargaa; and, also, that, by doing rituals, you go there? For you, svargaa is a fact, obtaining even now. But, how do you know this?"

The poorva meemaamsakaa would reply: "I know it from the Veda".

The Vedhaanthin pursues: "You say that you have come to know about svargaa from veda vaakyam, which reveals the nature of svargaa. I agree with that. For instance, Katopanishad declares 'svarge loke na bhayam kinchannaasthi na thathra thvam na jarayaa bibhethi ubhe theerthvaa asanaayaa piphaase sokaathiga: modhathe svargaloke' (I. 11. 12) – 'In the heavenly world, there is no fear at all, because, there you are not afraid of old age. Having crossed both hunger and thirst and having gone beyond grief, one always rejoices in the heavenly world'. But, tell me, what kind of vaakyam is that svarga bodhaka vaakyam? Since, it reveals a fact about the existence of svargaa, is it not a siddha bodhaka vaakyam? Then, is it pramaanam or apramaanam?"

The Vedhaanthin continues: "If you say it is apramaanam / not valid, that means there is no svarghaa. If there is no svarghaa, then, according to you, nobody can 'get' mokshaa, since you believe that eternal svarghaa alone is mokshaa. If, on the other hand, you say that the Vedic svarga bodhaka vaakyam is pramaanam, then, I will ask the you the question 'how do you accept that siddha bodhaka vaakyam as a pramaanam, since you strongly hold, that siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are apramaanam?"

Then, the poorva meemaamsakaa will have to answer: "Even though Vedic svarga bodhaka vaakyam is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, it is a different type of siddha bodhaka vaakyam. It reveals something which is not available for other pramaanam-s. It is a kind of siddha bodhaka vaakyam, which is different from statements such as 'naddhya: theerey palaani santhi'| It is true that 'naddhya: theerey palaani santhi' is also a siddha bodhaka vaakyam and the Vedic vaakyam 'svarga: asthi' is also a siddha bodhaka vaakyam. But, there is a difference between the two. 'Naddhya: theerey palaani santhi' is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, the contents of which is knowable through other pramaanam-s like prathyaksha pramaanam. Therefore, the statement 'Naddhya: theerey palaani santhi' is called 'pramaananthara ganya siddha bodhaka vaakyam'. But, svarghaa cannot be known through any other pramaanaa - prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthapatthi and anulpalabधि. Since the content of the vaakyam is not available for any other pramaanam, (expressed in Sanskrit, 'Pramaananthara agamyathvaath') it should be accepted as pramaanam".

(An interesting aside: Svarghaa is beyond the scope of all material sciences also; it is available only in the Vedas or other religious scriptures. That is the reason why the so-called rationalists do not accept Svarghaa.)

From the above dialogue, it is clear, that, the poorva meemaamsakaa accepts this siddha bodhaka vaakyam, viz., the svarga bodhaka vaakyam, as pramaanam because of the reason 'pramaananthara agamyathvaath'.

From the dialogue, we can also make a generalization. What is that? Ans: Loukika siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are apraamaanam, whereas vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyaani can be pramaanam, when they reveal facts not available for any other pramaanam.

There are some vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyaani which reveal facts which can be known by other pramaanam-s also. An example is the veda vaakyam 'agni: himasya beshajam', meaning 'when the climate is intensely cold, fire is a remedy'. 'agni: himasya beshajam' is a vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyam. Though it is a Vaidhika vaakyam, we will not say that this vaakyam is pramaanam, because, the import of the vaakyam is known from prathyaksha pramaanam. It is common knowledge, that, in regions with extremely cold climates, people have fireplaces in their homes and light up fires. Therefore, this vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyam, viz. 'agni: himasya beshajam' reveals only something known / knowable through other pramaanam-s. The rule is: Even vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyaani which state what is known by other pramaanam-s, are apraamaanam. But, when a vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyam reveals something not known through other pramaanam, then that siddha bodhaka vaakyam should be accepted as pramaanam.

The Vedhaanthin (continuing the dialogue) will confront the poorva meemaamsaka: "We have so many things which are revealed only through vaidhika siddha vaakyaani. We know the concept of punyam only through Veda pramaanam. Punyam is not available for scientific study. So is paapam. So are all the different lokaa-s; they are not available for prathyaksham or any other pramaanam or scientific study. It is only Veda that reveals all such things and therefore, such vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are to be accepted as pramaanam. If you do not do that, your own svargaa will be in trouble. When your svargaa is in trouble, your mokshaa will be in trouble, because your mokshaa is 'going to eternal svargaa'".

(One more aside: The poorva meemaamsaka's belief about svargaa, is similar to the belief of Christianity. Christians believe in an eternal Heaven; some of the poorva meemamsakaas also talk of an eternal Heaven and consider 'reaching that eternal Heaven' as mokshaa.)

To continue the Vedhaanthin's above response to the poorva memaamsakaa: "You accept the vaidhika svarga bodhaka vaakyam as pramaanam. Extending the same logic, mahaa vaakyam also is pramaananthra agamyam siddha bodhaka vaakyam. It is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, but, it reveals something which is not available for other pramaanam-s."

Veda need not reveal 'I am', since, 'I am' is a known fact. But the fact "'I' am Brahman, nithya muktha:, parichhedha rahitha:" (i.e., the Brahmathvam status of 'mine') is pramaananthara agamyam.

Also, Brahmathvam status is something not to be accomplished through meditation. It is a fact which should be understood through mahaa vaakyam. Until that understanding is achieved, the aspirant should continue to analyze the mahaa vaakyam. If, by the word 'meditation', the poorva meemaamsakaa means 'analysis', the Vedhaanthic teacher will not object. But, if 'mediation' is considered as "closing the eyes and going to nirvikalpaka samaadhi", the Vedhaanthin will protest that, that meditation is useless. Similarly, if meditation is considered as "just doing the japa`aham brahma asmi", that meditation is also not useful. Only if the word 'meditation' is used to mean 'analysis of mahaa vaakyam and consequent understanding that Brahmathvam is 'my' nature, which is the benefit of the siddha bodhaka vaakya vicharaad, the Vedhaanthin will accept the use of word in the context of mahaa vaakyam.

Reverting to the text:

- अस्य परिहारार्थ - For answering this poorva pakshaa,
- अभिताश्रुते : प्रामाण्यं - the validity of the vaidhika siddha bodhaka vaakyam
- वक्तव्यं - has to be established.

This is to be done by dividing siddha bodhaka vaakyaani into two types: (i) pramaanaanthara gamyā siddha bodhaka vaakyani and (ii) pramaanaanthara agamyā siddha bodhaka vaakyani. How ? By showing that the 'saakshi aathmaa' revealed by mahaa vaakyam, is not available to other pramaanam-s. That is said here.

- (अभिताश्रुतेः) अतीन्द्रियार्थ विषयत्वात् - Since mahaa vaakyam is dealing with a subject (aathmaa), which is not available for other pramaanam-s, 'atheendriyaartham' means 'beyond all sense organs'; 'vishayathvaath' means 'the subject being'.

The subject of the mahaa vaakyam, viz. 'aathmaad', is beyond all sense organs and beyond all other pramaanam-s, similar to svarghaa, which is also not available for any pramaanam other than sruthi. Whereas, the content of the sentence 'naddyaa: theerey palaani santh'' is available for other pramaanam-s and is therefore, very unlike the mahaa vaakya vishayam. Both the examples (i) the example for similarity viz., the vaidhika svarga bodhaka vaakyam and (ii) the example for dissimilarity viz., 'nadhi-theeram-palaani etc.' should be remembered by the student. He should understand, that, the poorva pakshin's quoting the sentence 'naddyaa: theerey palaani santh', as though it is similar to the mahaa vaakyam, is not right. It is what is termed 'vishamo dhrushtaantha.' /

But, how does the Vedhaanthin show that saakshi is 'atheendriyaartham' or 'super sensuous'? Sureswaraacharya says:

- प्रत्यक्षादि प्रमेयत्व निराकरणद्वारेण - by negating the idea that aathmaa is available for other pramaanam-s such as prathyaksham,

"By negating the idea that aathmaa is available for other pramaanams" is a circuitous manner of expression. It only means "by pointing out that aathmaa is not available for other pramaanam-s".

Thus, mahaa vaakyam is revealing an unique fact and it is waking 'me' up to 'my' own saakshi status. It is a wake-up call. And, therefore, the Aacharya gives the example of 'suptha purusha prabhodhaka vaakyam' meaning 'words used to waken up a sleeping person':

- सुप्तपुरुष प्रबोधकवाक्यस्य इव - similar to the words that wake up a man from sleep

'Utthishtatha jaagratha praapya varaan nibodhatha' – 'Arise, awake, having approached the great ones, know the aathmaa' is a well-known exhortation of the Katopanishad (I. iii. 14).

'suptha purusha:' means 'a sleeping person'; 'prabhodhaka' means 'awakening'; 'vaakyam' means 'a statement'.

This 'suptha purusha prabhodhaka vaakyam' is supposed to be an unique vaakyam by Vedhanthaa, with an 'achinthyaa sakthi:', which term means 'extraordinary power'. The vaakyam has been analyzed in a number Vedhaantha saasthraas. Exactly like that vaakyam, 'thaththvamas' is also an unique statement with an 'achinthyaa sakthi:'. Sureswaraachaaryaa will be discussing the achinthyaa sakthi: of suptha purusha bodhaka vaakyam and the achinthyaa sakthi of mahaa vaakyam later, in verses 105 and 106 in the same chapter.

A gist of that discussion is given below. The steps indicated here are important:

Who is a suptha purusha:? Suptha purusha: is a sleeper who has withdrawn from jaagrath avasthaa – the 'waking' state. He might be either in a dream (svapna avasthaa) or in 'deep sleep' (sushupthi avasthaa). In other words, he might be either a 'thyjasa:' or a 'praagnya:', but certainly not a 'viswa:' |

That means suptha purusha: has broken his link or connection with jaagrath avasthaa | In fact, that is the definition of suptha purusha: | A suptha purusha: has disconnected himself from all jaagrath avasthaa vyavahaaraa. He has separated from jaagrath avasthaa; he has de-linked from all the jaagrath avasthaa vyavahaaraa; that means that he is not a participant in jaagrath avasthaa vyavahaaraa.

What does a 'participant in jaagrath avasthaa' mean? A 'participant' should be either pramaathaa or pramaanam or prameyam. Suptha purusha: does not participate as a jaagrath pramaathaa by using jaagrath pramaanam. He is not a jaagrath prameyam also, since he is not an object of any jaagrath pramaanam. He is neither utilizing a jaagrath pramaanam nor is he an object of a jaagrath pramaanam. If he is an object of pramaanam, he will become premayem; if he is an 'user' of pramaanam, he will be a pramaathaa. Suptha Purusha: is neither jaagrath pramaathaa nor jaagrath pramaanam nor jaagrath prameyam. In short, he is jaagrath vyavahaara atheetha: | Again, this term is important.

Suptha purusha: cannot be accessed in jaagrath avasthaa; and, he does not access jaagrath avasthaa. He is totally apart from jaagrath avasthaa. When this is a fact, how can a 'wake-up' call, i.e., when the words 'wake up' are used, which 'wake-up' call is a jaagrath avasthaa vyavahaara vaakyam / a jaagrath sabdha pramaana vaakyam / a pramaana vaakyam in jaagrath vyavahaaraa, reach the 'jaagrath vyavahaara atheetha suptha purusha:' ? How can it reach, because it is supposed to function only on a person existing within the scope and range of jaagrath avastha. Pramaathru-pramaana-prameya vyavahaaraa belongs to jaagrath avastha. How can it reach a suptha purusha:? It is not logically possible. Still, it works in a mysterious manner and reaches the suptha purusha: and removes his nidhraa. Similarly, mahaa vaakyam functions in a peculiar manner and removes the spiritual nidhraa.

Just as suptha purusha prabodhaka vaakyam reaches suptha purusha: and removes loukika nidhraa, mahaa vaakyam reaches the saakshi peculiarly and removes the aadhyathmika nidhraa.

156. Chapter III, Verse 47 and 48 (03-10-2009)

The Advaita Vedhaanthin-s look upon mahaa vaakyam as the most important vaakyaa-s of the Upanishad and therefore devote a lot of time to analyze and assimilate the mahaa vaakyaa-s. A large number of texts, written by great aachaaryaa-s, exclusively for mahaa vaakya vicharaa, is available. In this Text, Naishkarmya Siddhi also, the subject of the 2nd and 3rd chapters is the analysis of the mahaa vaakyam only.

In contrast to the Advaitin, the poorva meemaamsaka., who is also a great vaidhika, i.e. one who also accepts Veda as apourusheya pramaanam, holds "mahaa vaakyam is not a pramaanam at all, and therefore is not worth studying", in spite of his being a believer in Veda. He generally gives two important objections, of which one objection is given here.

That first objection of the poorva meemaamsakaa, is, that, a vaakyam that only reveals a fact (such a vaakyam is termed siddha bodhaka vaakyam) cannot be taken as pramaana vaakyam. He gives his reason. He explains: "Before revealing the fact by the vaakyam, the speaker must have already learnt the fact, by using prathyaksha pramaanam and since the knowledge has been gained through the prathyaksha pramaanam itself, the siddha bodhaka vaakyam is not the 'producer' of the knowledge; but, is only 'carrying' / 'conveying' the knowledge, which has been already gathered by prathyaksha pramaanam, and, therefore, cannot be considered as a pramaanam."

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this poorva pakshaa. He argues: "This perception of the poorva meemaamsakaa holds good in the case of only loukika sabdhaa. When human beings use words for revealing a fact, they would have already gathered the knowledge about the fact, through prathyaksha pramaanam. Loukika knowledge can be and are gained through prathyakshaa. Therefore, it is true, that, loukika sabdhaas are not 'producers' of knowledge, but, are only 'carriers' of knowledge, already produced by other pramaanam-s. We agree that pourusheya loukika sabdha-s are not pramaanam, because of the above reason. But, vaidhika sabdhaa is different. The facts revealed by vaidhika sabdha cannot be known by any other pramaanaam. The veda poorva bhaaghaa itself talks about paralokaa, punar janmaa, punyam, paapam etc., all of which also are knowable only through vaidhika sabdhaa and never through any other pramaanam; the poorva meemaasakaa has no reservation in accepting these as facts. He should, therefore, accept, that, Vedas are not just 'carriers' of information gleaned through other pramaanam-s. Vedas do give new facts. Hence, vaidhika vaakyaa-s are pramaanam".

Loukika, pourusheya vaakyaani cannot be considered as pramaanam, since they are not themselves 'producers' of the 'knowledge' conveyed by them. The 'knowledge' has been gathered earlier, generally through prathyaksha pramaanam and only presented through the loukika vaakyaani. This is true about scientific knowledge also, since scientific knowledge has been produced by 'experimentation', which also uses only prathyaksha pramaanam. That is why, even if all the Science books are destroyed by an accident, it need not be a cause for concern, since scientists can experiment again and come to the same conclusions again. The Science books are not 'producers' but only 'containers' of knowledge produced by other pramaanams.

But, vaidhika vaakyaani are different from loukika, pourusheya vaakyaani. The vaidhika vaakyaani are aloukika sabdhaa / apourusheya sabdhaa. It is said about the Veda: "prathyakshena anumithyaa vaa yasthupaaayo na vidhyathe yenam vidhanthi vedena thasmaath vedasya vedasaa"

With regard to new 'knowledge', Veda is a distinct pramaanam, similar to the five sense organs. Just as each sense organ reveals something which cannot be known through any of the other sense organs, Veda also reveals facts which cannot be known by any sense organ. Veda-s may verily be called the 6th sense organ.

Veda should not be deemed to be similar to books written by human beings. Since Veda is in the form of a book, human tendency is to equate Veda to other books, which is a blunder that is committed. Veda can never be equated to any book written by any human author. Instead, Veda should be equated only to the five sense organs. Veda is 'chakshu:' | That is why, in Brahma Soothraa, Vyaasaachaaryaa replaces the word 'Veda', by the word 'Prathyaksha', in several places. Just as every sense organ is valid by itself and does not require further proof or validity, Veda is 'svatha: pramaanam' | 'independently valid'.

Mahaa vaakyam also is revealing something not revealed by any other instrument. In karma kaaandaa, when poorva meemaamsaka learns about rituals leading to svarghaa, the knowledge about svarghaa is acquired only through Veda pramanaam. Even though vaidhika svarga bodhaka vaakyam is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, its contents are not knowable through any other pramaana. Therefore, the poorva meemaamsakaa's vyaapthi (general conclusion), namely, "yathra yathra siddhathvam thathra thathra pramaanaantheragamyathvam" – "whatever sentence is revealing a fact, it is revealing something known through other pramaanam" is proved wrong. That vyaapthi cannot be accepted. What is the example? Ans: "Svarga bodhaka vaakyam is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam. Still, svarghaa cannot be known through other pramaanaa".

"In the same manner" the Advaitin argues "though jeevathma-Paramaathma-eikyaa vaakyam is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, it is not pramaanaanthera gamyam".

The poorva meemaamsakaa's anumaanaa was "mahaa vaakyam apramaanam pramaanaanharagamyathvaath 'naddyaa: theerey palaani santhi' ithi siddha bodhaka vaakyavath"- "mahaa vaakyam is not a pramaanam, since, similar to the statement 'there are fruits on the river bank', the mahaa vaakyam is only stating a fact, which can be gained through some other pramaanam." The Advaita Vedhaanthin strongly refutes this. He finds a 'dhoshaa' / defect in this anumaanaa, pointing out that the poorva meemaamsakaa himself does not apply this anumaanaa to the svarga bodhaka vaakyam.

The poorva meemaamsakaa's first objection is, thus, refuted by the Vedhaanthin, by giving the example of Heaven and pointing out that the poorva meemaamsakaa's law "yathra yathra siddhathvam thathra thathra pramaanaanharagamyathvam" cannot be applied in relation to apourusheya pramaana vishayaani.

Thereafter, the poorva meemaamsakaa comes up with a second objection, which is not discussed by Sureswaraacharya, in this context. It is discussed very elaborately by Sankaraacharya in his Bhaashyam for Brahma Soothra-s, in the 4th soothraa, which soothraa starts as "thaththusamanvayaath". Those details are worth studying here.

What is that second objection of the poorva meemaamsakaa? He says: "I am willing to accept svarga bodhaka vaakyam as a pramaanam, even though it is only a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, revealing a fact. The knowledge given by the content of the vaakyam "naddyaa: theerey palaani santhi " is not generated by the vaakyam itself, but, by prathyaksha pramaanam earlier; whereas, in contrast, 'svargha' is a new knowledge given by the svargha bodhaka vaakyam, which knowledge cannot be revealed by prathyaksha or any other pramaanaa. Therefore, the pramaanathvam of that veda vaakya is acceptable to me. But, even if I accept svargha bodhaka vaakyam as a pramaana vaakyam, I will not accept it as an useful vaakyam. Even though it is a giving a new knowledge / a new fact, still the vaakyam is an useless vaakyam, since it does not serve a purpose; because, just knowing about svarghaa will not give me any benefit. Learning the fact 'svargha: asthi' is not going to solve my problems in this mundane existence. The svargha bodhaka vaakyam may be a pramaanam, because, it reveals a new fact, namely 'svarghaa'; still, it is an useless vaakyam, prayojana abhaavaath".

Thus, the poorva meemaamsakaa's new argument is "Svargha bodhaka vaakye thaathparyam naasthi; it is arthavaadha vakyam, because there is no prayojanam derived from the vaakyam. Merely knowing that there is svarghaa is of no use. Svargha bodhaka vaakyam will be valid only if it is connected with a ritual or a saadhanaa, because, when I do the prescribed ritual, I can reach Heaven and will get some benefit. In the same manner, any siddha bodhaka vakyam will be valid only when it is connected with a kaarya bodhaka vaakyam".

To go back to the example quoted in an earlier session, if an individual is thirsty and is given the information that there is water available, the mere knowledge of the availability of water will be of no use. The knowledge should be followed up with the action of getting the water and drinking it. Kaaryam should follow jnaanam, if jnaanam is to be of any use.

The poorva meemaamsakaa's second argument is, therefore, "siddha bodhaka vaakyam, by itself, will not give any benefit; it should be followed by a kaarya bodhaka vaakyam, based on which, an action can be done to acquire benefit. Mahaa vaakyam is also a siddha bodhaka vaakyam; it may be revealing a great fact; but, mere knowledge of the fact is of no use; you have to do something to tap the benefit from that fact."

To repeat: the poorva meemaamsakaa's theory is: "aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam asadharthaanaam; any amount of knowledge will be of no use; it should be followed by some saadhanaa, by which the seeker actualizes the fact and taps the benefit. Similarly, 'aham brahma asmi' may also be a fact; but the seeker has to 'actualize' the fact by doing some saadhanaa."

The poorva meemaamsakaa continues: "Therefore, you should prescribe some action to follow the siddha bodhaka mahaa vaakam. 'Meditation' is an ideal action to follow the mahaa vaakya sravanam. You should ask the seeker to 'meditate'. He has to do the 'action' of meditating. Action produces result. Knowledge, by itself, does not produce any result. The knowledge 'Aham brahma asmi', by itself, is useless. The seeker has to 'apply' the knowledge, do some action and make mokshaa a reality".

There are some mundane examples seemingly in support of this poorva pakshaa theory: (i) Pure Science is useless; only applied science is useful. (ii) 'Knowing how to cook' is of no use. Only the action of 'cooking' will result in the benefit of 'eating' (iii) 'Knowing how to use a treadmill' is of no use, by itself; only the action of 'using' the treadmill in the prescribed manner, will give the benefit of staying fit. From such examples, it appears that 'mere knowledge' will not be useful; 'corresponding action' alone will be useful.

Sankaraacharya, in his Brahma Sootra Baashyam, strongly refutes this theory of the poorva meemaamsakaa in the context of Sruthi vaakyaani. He answers the poorva meemaamsakaa in a very elaborate manner.

In this context also, he points out that what is applicable to loukikaa contexts, need not be applicable to Vedic statements. He tells the poorva meemaamsakaa: "Your view, namely, 'knowledge cannot give any benefit; it has to be followed by an action', is a general rule, applicable in most of the cases. But every general rule has an exception. The general rule should not be blindly and thoughtlessly used in all the cases. You say 'the knowledge 'aham brahma asmi' is useless; the seeker should 'know' and then 'meditate' ; only thereafter, he will attain mokshaad'. It means that you are applying the general rule to the mahaa vaakyam also.

"But, this general rule is not applicable in the context of the mahaa vaakyam. Kindly think a little bit. When a problem is caused by ignorance, 'removal of the ignorance' will naturally result in 'removal of the problem'. And, you cannot dispute the fact that 'knowledge' is capable of removing 'ignorance'. That means 'knowledge', by removing the ignorance, will remove the problem also. That means 'knowledge' is an end in itself. 'Removal of the ignorance' and 'removal of the problem' are both achieved by acquisition of 'knowledge'. The 'removals' do not require even an iota of saadhanaa.

"Up to gaining knowledge, the seeker may require saadhanaa; in fact, mahaa vaakya vicharaa itself is a saadhanaa. And, when it produces 'knowledge', that 'knowledge' removes the ignorance and since ignorance has caused the problem, then 'removal of ignorance' gives the seeker the benefit of 'removal of problem' also. The end has been attained. Then what more saadhanaa is required after gaining knowledge?"

An example will make the Aachaaryaa's reasoning clearer: "Assume that an individual finds a tumor in some part of his body. It is an innocent, problem-free, benign tumor. The person would not require treatment for cancer, since the tumor is not malignant. But, he does not know that the tumor is benign. His doctor, on seeing the tumor, talks about a biopsy. The very suggestion of a 'biopsy' causes panic and anxiety in the patient, entirely because of ignorance of the benign nature of the tumor. After receipt of the results of the biopsy arrive, the doctor says 'it is a benign tumor and no treatment is required'. Under the circumstances, if the patient replies 'I have understood; I have the jnaanam that I do not have a disease; but, please tell me what treatment should I take?', would it not be a ridiculous response?"

Sankaraachaaryaa points out that when the problem is caused by 'ignorance', 'knowledge' has to be sought to remove the 'ignorance' and once the 'ignorance' is removed, 'knowledge' need not be followed by any action at all.

Vedhaanthic meditation, otherwise called 'nididhyaasanam', is not to attain mokshaa; vedhaanthic meditation is for removal of the seeker's orientation "I have to get mokshaa". To repeat: Vedhaanthic meditation, after mahaa vaakya vicharaa, is not a saadhanaa for mokshaa; it is only to remove the expectation of mokshaa i.e., to remove the orientation 'I have to get mokshaa'.

Therefore, after jnaanam, no saadhanaa is required; mahaa vaakyaa will give fulfillment directly. "Aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam asadharthaanam" is applicable with regard to svarghaa, because, mere knowledge of the existence of svarghaa will not give any benefit. It has to be followed by the prescribed ritual to attain svarghaa. But, in the context of mahaa vaakyam, the resulting 'knowledge' / 'understanding' is: "'I' was, 'I' am and 'I' ever will be free". This 'understanding' is an end, in itself. Other than that 'understanding', nothing else is required. Therefore, mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is pramaanam; it gives the 'knowledge' and also the message, that, 'understanding' is the end in itself.

That is why, the seeker has to study a lot; first, he has to study Vedhaantha to understand the mahaa vaakyam; then, he has to continue to study Vedhaantha, to understand that 'understanding' is enough. Many students have not understood that the first understanding alone, namely, the import of the mahaa vaakyam, is not enough; that is why, they say "I have only understanding". The term 'only' in this statement shows that they feel that, 'other than 'understanding' something else is required'. Such students will have to resort to sravanam for some more time to understand that 'nothing else is required other than 'understanding' ".

Thus, there are two steps: (i) understanding the mahaa vaakyam and (ii) understanding that 'understanding' is enough. Until the seeker can say "I have the 'understanding'; therefore, I am 'jnaan!'; therefore, I am free", only mahaa vaakya vichaaraa should be employed. 'Meditation' is certainly not the appropriate saadhanaa. "Only repeated sravanam is required. No meditation is required" is the stand of Sankaraacharya, in his Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam, in reply to the poorva meemamsakaa's second objection. Sureswaraacharya also will express this view later, though he does not refer to the poorva pakshin's second objection, in this context.

In dealing with the first objection, Sureswaraacharya concludes with the assertion "abhidhaa sruthe: praamaanyam" - "Mahaa vaakyam is pramaanam".

Like what?

He gives an example: "Suptha purusha prabodha vaakyavath"- "similar to a statement which wakes up a sleeping person in a mysterious manner". The Aachaaryaa discusses this topic of suptha bodha vaakyam later, in verses 105 and 106 of the same chapter. A more detailed analysis will be done there.

Reverting to the text (last line of sambhandha gadhyam to verse 47):

इति अयं आरम्भः - For this purpose the next phase of the argument is initiated.

Chapter III: Verse 47 –

नित्यावगतिरूपत्वादन्यमानानपेक्षणात् ।

शब्दादिगुणहीनत्वात्संशयानवतारत ॥ ४७ ॥ :

Because of the nature of eternal awareness, not needing any other proof, without physical qualities like sound, about whose existence doubts can never arise...

Here, Sureswaraacharya is refuting the view expressed by the poorva meemaamsakaa, who used the sentence 'naddyastheerey palaani santhi' as an example for his view. The poorva meemaamsakaa had said "Similar to this sentence 'naddyastheerey palaani santhi', whenever sabdha pramaanam is talking about a fact, that fact is available for prathyaksha pramaanam". Of course, this is a general rule in loukika sabbdhaa. Even when one reads the newspaper, every item of news that is talked about in the newspaper, is available elsewhere for prathyaksha pramaanaa.

Sureswaraacharya is only disputing this general rule being applied by the poorva meemaamsakaa to vaidhika sabdhaa also. He says: "aathmaa cannot be compared to the objects in the sentence 'nadhyaastheerey palaani santhi', because while theeram and palaani are available for prathyaksham, aathmaa is not available for any pramaanam for objectification. Aathmaa aprameya:" | 'Aathmaa aprameya:' means 'aathmaa sarva pramaana agochara:'- 'not available to any instrument of knowledge'.

Why is aathma not available for objectification? Sureswaraacharya answers this by giving several reasons.

The first reason he gives is: "All pramaanaa-s are dealing with jada or achethana padhaartha-s. The five sense organs are dealing with sabda, sparsa, roopa, rasa, gandhaa etc., all belonging to matter only. The physical body, available for sense organs, is also 'matter'. And, the brain, which is available for prathyakshaa, is nothing but matter. According to saasthra-s, the mind is also born out of matter – sookshma boothani. All instruments of knowledge are analyzing / can analyze matter only; science is also dealing only with 'matter'. 'Matter' is anaathmaa, whereas 'I', the aathmaa, am non-material Consciousness principle. How can that chethana aathmaa be vishayaa of any pramaanma?"

Therefore, he says:

- नित्य अवगति रूपत्वात् - Because of the nature of eternal awareness,

'Avagathi' means 'chaithanyam' or 'awareness'; 'nithya' mean 'eternal' and 'roopam' (in this context) means 'nature'.

Consciousness is not Matter; Consciousness is not a part of Matter; Consciousness is not a product of Matter; Consciousness is not a property of Matter. No scientist has yet proved Consciousness is any one of these four. They have not proved that Consciousness is Matter; they have not proved it is a part, product or property of Matter. It is undisputed that Consciousness is a non-material Principle.

All pramaanaa-s (apart from vaidhika sabdhaa) can deal only with Matter ; aathmaa is non-material ; therefore, it is not available for any instrument of knowledge, including the mind. That is why it is said "Even in meditation, do not try to experience aathmaa or Brahman / aathma anubhavaa or Brahma anubhavaa."

When an individual works for any new anubhavaa and succeeds in getting it, it arrives only as an object of a sense organ. In 'meditation', mind is the instrument of knowledge. If Brahman is experienced through a meditating mind, Brahman will become an object of experience, which it is not. 'Brahma anubhavaa' does not exist as an event, because Brahman happens to be the Consciousness, who is ever available as "I am"; it is never available as an 'object of experience', at a particular moment.

These are fundamental facts; if they are not clear, the seeker will say: "I have understood Brahman; I am waiting for that anubhavaa". Unfortunately, hundreds of Vedhaanthic students are committing this blunder and eternally waiting for the so-called Brahma anubhavaa and consequently postponing mokshaa. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya points out that Consciousness is of non-material nature and consequently cannot be revealed by any instrument of knowledge

Then he gives the second reason, another powerful argument:

अन्यमान अनपेक्षणात् - because any pramaana is not required,

'Consciousness cannot be revealed through any instrument of knowledge' was the first argument. The second argument, equally important, is 'Consciousness need not be revealed through any instrument of knowledge'; this is because Consciousness is always revealed as "I am a Conscious being"..... " I am a Conscious being". It is an undisputed fact that, as a conscious being, Consciousness is always available as "I am".... "I am"... "I am"... "I am".

Thus, Consciousness being ever revealed as "I am", it need not be revealed by any other instrument of knowledge.

What is the first argument? Ans: 'Consciousness cannot be revealed'. What is the second argument? Ans: It is a very important argument. 'It need not be revealed. It is always available'

In jaagrath avasthaa, I am a conscious being; that is why I am conscious of all my surroundings. In svapna avasthaa, I am a conscious being; that is why I am conscious of the svapnaa. In the sushupthi avasthaa also, even when the mind is resolved and even when the body is not functioning, I am a conscious being, because of which alone, the 'nothingness' of sushupthi is revealed. 'I' am the ever revealed Consciousness. Unfortunately, there is a prevalent wrong notion, that, 'nirvikalpaka samaadhī is the thureeya (fourth) avasthaa, during which avasthaa alone, the Consciousness is revealed. This is a misconceived notion. Adi Sankara in his Maneeshaa Panchakam refers to Consciousness as "jaagrath svapana sushupthishu sputatharaa yaa samvidh ujjrumbhathe" – "That which clearly shines forth as a crystal in all the three states of waking, dream and deep sleep"; and, again, in his Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram as "baalyaadhishvapi jaagradhaadhisu thathaa sarvaavasthaasvapi vyaavrutthaasu" – "that which constantly manifests in all stages of life, like boyhood etc. and also in all states, like waking etc."

When any individual says "I am".." I am", that 'I' is the ever revealed Consciousness. Body gets revealed by Consciousness, now and then; body comes and goes; mind gets revealed by Consciousness ; mind comes and goes ; thoughts get revealed by Consciousness; thoughts come and go. They are all dhrusyam, baudhikam, sagunam, savikaaram and aagamaapaayee. In contrast, 'I' am the non-arriving, non-departing Conscious principle. This being the fact, why should 'I' use a pramaanam to 'prove' myself? In fact, to use a pramaanam, 'I' should be there. The 'authenticator' of everything need not be authenticated. Consciousness does not require a pramaanam, because, even before the operation of the pramaanam, Consciousness is there, desirous of operation.

'Anya maana' means 'anya pramaana'; 'anapekshanaa' means 'not required'. It might be noted that in the Lalitha Sahasranaama Sthothram, the name 'Aprameya' is immediately followed by the name 'Svapraakaasa'. 'Nithya avagathi roopathvaath' indicates the 'svapraakaasa' nature and 'anyamaana apekshanaath' indicates the 'aprameya' nature of aathmaa.

Then follows the third argument:

- शब्दादि गुण हीनत्वात् - because of the absence of physical qualities like sound etc.,

Scientists identify every entity by analyzing its physical and chemical properties. The very scientific analysis to identify a new object, is by discovering its unique properties, As is common knowledge, the science of Chemistry has, what is known as a 'Periodic Table', in which, numerous elements, with their properties are tabulated. Over the years, new elements are also being added to the Table. Why is it done? Ans: Because, scientists identify newer and newer elements, by observing unique properties, which differentiate the new entity from all the earlier known entities. It follows from this, that, it is 'unique properties', which identify an object. This is how we use the pramaanam. No scientist can ever identify Brahman/ aathmaa / Consciousness as a new element, because Brahman / aathmaa / Consciousness does not have any physical or chemical properties. All properties belong to micro and macro matter. Consciousness accommodates 'matter'; but, is, itself, not 'matter'.

Even space is 'matter' with certain unique attributes. Consciousness accommodates space and reveals space; but Consciousness itself is non material, without any property. It cannot be identified with the use of any pramaanaa. It is free from sabdhaa, sparsaa, roopaa, rasaa and gandhaa. That is why, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "sabdhaadhi guna heenathvaath".

Quite often, people come up with an absurd question: "If Consciousness can never be proved by any pramaanam, how do I know it is there" ? The question is absurd, because that very question is possible only because of Consciousness. Consciousness need not be proved, because it is self evident / self revealed ; therefore this question should not arise at all. In fact, everything else is proved because of Consciousness. "That because of which everything else is proved, need not be proved at all" is an indisputable maxim.

The statement "sabdhaadhi guna heenathvaath" should remind the student of the famous manthraa in Katopanishad (I.iii.15), which runs "asabhdam asparsam aroopam avyayam thathaa arasam nithyam agandhavath cha yath anaadhyam anantham mahatha: param dhruvam nichaaya thanmruthyumukaath pramuchyathe" -"This (Brahman) is soundless, not available for touch, colorless, tasteless, smell-less, without a beginning, endless, free from decay, deathless, changeless and beyond mahath. Having clearly known that (Brahman), one is totally freed from the jaws of death".

(An aside : When a study of advanced texts like Naishkarmya Siddhi is taken up by a student, the assumption of the traditional Aachaaryaa-s is, that, the student is already thoroughly conversant with the popular Dasopanishad-s.

If the student is conversant with the Upanishad-s and is able to recollect this manthraa, when he hears the statement "sabdhaadhi guna heenathvaath", he can effortlessly chant the manthraa to himself, assure himself that his mundane problems are really not his and thus remember 'his' own glory.

"The mundane problems are 'appearing and disappearing'/ 'coming and going'; let me not get disturbed; let me enjoy the navarasa naatakam, that this life is. I am only the accomodater and witness of all these happenings. I am not affected by any one of them" would be the joyous conviction of the student, if he assimilates and remembers this manthraa and other similar Upanishadic manthraa-s.

A diligent seeker should, early in the morning, first invoke aathmaa, which is free, before getting into mundane affairs. After invoking aathmaa first, he can invoke any of the pancha anaathmaa thereafter; then the involvement with pancha anaathmaa will not cause any problem. But, if the seeker fails to invoke aathmaa first, life will be a 'meaningless, burdensome, boring, struggle', from which, the seeker would want to escape as soon as possible. If he invokes only the anaathmaa, life is a tragedy; if, on the other hand, he takes effort to invoke aathmaa, life would be entertainment. He would not mind being re-born. In fact, he should let the mind get reborn any number of times, because only through the mind, he can claim 'aham brahma asmI'. If the mind is lost, aathmaa cannot be claimed.

If mahaa vaakyam is internalized, life will become the most fantastic leelaa; a 'sampoornam jagadeva nanadanavanam' attitude will result; life will not be cursed.)

Then the fourth argument is presented:

- संशय अनवतारत : - because no doubts can arise about its existence,

One can never have a doubt regarding the existence of aathmaa. 'Samasaya,' means 'doubt'; 'anavathaaratha:' means 'can never come'.

Why not? Ans: Because aathmaa is 'I', the Conscious being. The following situation will make this idea clearer: "During the course of the Naishkarmya Siddhi class, a student suddenly remembers a friend who regularly comes to the class, but whose usual seat, he finds, is vacant. Then the student may get the doubt as to whether the friend is absent from the class or whether he has come to the class but is seated somewhere else. This will be a legitimate doubt, that may arise about someone else. But, not about one's own self. One can doubt the presence in the class of anyone else, except oneself. 'Have I come to-day to the class?' is a question which no one will ever ask himself. Enquiry is required only where there is a doubt."

In a similar manner, aathmaa can never be doubted; therefore no pramaanaa is required, since it is not relevant, in the absence of doubt.

Ironically, this statement may create a different doubt, as follows: "If there is no doubt regarding aathmaa and therefore no aathma vichaara or self enquiry is required, then why should Sureswaraachaaryaa write this treatise and a serious study of this and similar treatises be made?"

The answer to this doubt will be on the following lines: "There is no doubt about the fact 'I am'; there is no doubt about the fact 'I am a conscious being'; there is no doubt about the fact 'I am an existent being'. In fact, in the term 'conscious being', the word 'conscious' reveals the 'chith' aspect and the word 'being' reveals the 'sath' aspect. There is no doubt on the fact that 'I am 'sath chith'. The doubt is 'what type of Conscious being am I? Am I a limited Conscious being or limitless Conscious being?' The confusion arises on this aspect alone, because along with 'me', the body - mind complex is also available. 'I', the 'sath-chith' is self evidently revealed; but, along with 'me', the body-mind complex also is revealed. And, people successfully commit the blunder of 'throwing' the limitation of 'matter' – the body-mind complex upon 'me', the non-material Self. Enquiry is only to 'knock off' that wrongly transferred limitation. Enquiry is not to prove the aathmaa or to experience aathmaa, because aathmaa is ever experienced. The seeker is not working for 'my' experience. The, what is he working for? After saying " 'I' am", a diligent seeker should not add any limiting factor such as 'I am a man', 'I am a woman', 'I am a Brahmir', 'I am a kshakthiyaa', 'I am fifty years old', 'I am miserable' etc. All adjectives are to be removed. They belong to the 'matter'. The adjectives of the 'matter' are wrongly transferred to the non-material 'I'. The seeker should transfer them back to the body-mind complex and remain as Aanandha Saakshi. Adi Sankara says this in his Upadesa Saahasri (Ch. XVIII verse 3): "siddhath eva aham ithi asmaath yushmadhdharmo nishidhyathe/ rajjvaam iva ahidheer yukthyaa tathvamithyaadhisaasanai:"- "Just as the idea of a snake is negated from a rope, everything of the nature of the non-Self is negated from the eternally existing Self implied by the word 'I', on the evidence of the mahaa vaakyam-s, such as, 'Thou art That' etc., in which the implied meanings of the words have been ascertained by reasoning and scriptures".

Therefore, mahaa vaakyam is useful for being what 'I' am, namely, Aananda: |

157. Chapter III, Verse 47 and 48 (10-10-2009)

Sureswaraacharya is refuting the objection raised by the poorva meemaamsakaa, viz. "mahaa vaakyam is not a pramaanam at all, because it is only stating a known fact", which view he had based on his principle, "yathra yathra siddha bodhakathvam thathra thathra pramaanaanthara gamyathvam", meaning "whenever a statement is talking about a fact, that fact should have already been known through some other pramaanam". The poorva meemaamsakaa had cited an example: "as in the case of 'nadhyaa: theerey palaani santhi' "

This was the poorva meemaamsakaa's objection, for which the Aachaaryaa is giving his answer: "I concede, that, in the case of loukika / pourusheya vishayaa-s, 'words' reveal only something known / knowable through other pramaanam-s. This is because whenever a human being talks or writes about something, even before he uses the language or words, he had known about it through some other pramaanam. Having learnt the fact through some other pramaanam, he only transmits it through words. His words do not 'generate' the knowledge; they only 'carry' the knowledge. (On this aspect, words can be likened to the modern 'water pipes' which do not produce water, but, only 'carry' water which has been produced elsewhere.) In the case of pourusheya vishayaa, I agree, that, sabda is not at all a pramaanam; it is only a 'carrier'. But, in the case of apourusheya vishayaa-s, the words do generate 'knowledge', since that 'knowledge' cannot be acquired through any other method, simple examples being svargaa, narakaa, punyam, paapam etc. The Vedic words are not mere 'carriers' of knowledge; they are the very 'producers' of knowledge".

Thus, there is a difference between loukika granthaa: and vaidhika granthaa: A vedic granthaa should never be compared or equated to books authored by humans, on different worldly subjects such as Physics, Chemistry, Astronomy and the like. This is a very important rule. If at all a Vedic granthaa is to be compared to or equated to something, it can be compared / equated to the human sense organs. Vedaa may verily be looked upon as the sixth sense organ. This is because, just as whatever is revealed by one sense organ can never be contradicted nor confirmed by any one of the other four sense organs, the 'knowledge' revealed by the Vedaa-s also can never be confirmed nor contradicted by any other pramaanam or method, including modern science.

Science cannot confirm or contradict what the eyes reveal. It cannot confirm or contradict what the ears reveal. Science can, of course, build further, based on the data received from the sense organs and that is what it does. Science does not question the data revealed by the sense organs. Science only works on the data. Science does not question the data received from the sense organs, because science has no method of verifying or negating that data. Similarly, the entire Veda is like a sense organ and it reveals something that is apourusheya; it reveals something which is pramaananthara agamyam.

That is why the definition of Veda is "prathyakshena anumithyaa vaa yasthu upaayena vidhyathe enam vidhanthi vedena thasmaath vedasya vedasaa". Vedaa is a pramaanam which reveals things, which can neither be confirmed nor be contradicted by any other instrument of knowledge, modern or old.

And, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that Veda Poorva bhaagaa also deals with apourusheya vishayaa-s and veda antha baagaha also deals with apourusheya vishayaa-s.

The apourusheya vishaaya-s of veda poorva bhaaghaa are paralokaa, punarjanmaa, punyam, paapam etc. These are some of the super-sensuous topics belonging to Veda Poorva, which vishayaa-s, science can neither prove nor disprove. Veda antha baaghaa deals with aathmaa, which aathmaa is also not available for any other pramaanam. 'Aathmana: aprameyathvaath', it is 'pramaananthara agamyam'.

Vedaa is the only pramaanam with regard to aathmaa, which is not available for any other instrument of knowledge. This is what being said, in verses 47 and 48 .

In the 47th verse, four arguments were given in support of this:

(1) 'nithya avagathi roopathvaath' – 'because aathmaa is chaithanya roopam'.

All the worldly pramaanam-s can deal only with jada padhaartha-s. Aathmaa is chethana::; therefore, those pramaanam-s cannot access aathmaa.

(2) 'anyamaana apekshanaath' – 'because aathmaa need not be proved by other pramaanam'.

Since 'Consciousness' is self-revealed, it does not require proof; on the contrary, to 'prove' anything, we require Consciousness. The 'prover' Consciousness need not be proved / revealed by any other pramaanam. 'Svapraakasathvaath anyamaana apekshanaath'- 'because it is self-revealed, it does not need any other proof'.

(3) 'Sabdhaadhiguna heenathvaath' – 'because aathmaa does not have any of the pancha gunaa-s required for sensory operation'.

Sabdhaa is required for ears to operate; sparsaa is required for skin to operate and so on. At least one of the Pancha gunaa-s is required for the corresponding jnaanendriyam to function. 'Aathmana: sabdhaadhi guna heenathvaath' – 'because aathmaa does not have any of the pancha gunaa-s required by the pancha jnaanendriyaa-s' - the pancha jnaaendriyaa-s will 'come back' without 'accessing' aathmaa. Manthraa 1.3 of the Kenopanishad may be recollected, in this context. The manthraa runs : "Na thathra chakshur gacchathi na vaak gacchathi no mana: na vidmo na vijaaneema: yathaa ethadh anusishyaath" meaning "The eyes do not objectify Brahman ; the organ of speech does not ; the mind also does not. We do not know that Brahman. We also do not know how anyone would reveal this Brahman".

(4) 'Samsaya anavathaarata:' – 'because of the absence of any doubt' (regarding the existence of the aathmaa).

Since aathmaa happens to be your 'Self', you will never doubt whether you are there are not. No one doubts the existence of oneself. A pramaanam is required only where there is doubt or where there is ignorance. When neither ignorance is there with regard to 'my' existence nor is there a doubt regarding 'my' existence, why do 'I' require a pramaanam to prove 'my' satthaa? The term 'anavathara:' literally means 'non-arrival'. 'Samsaya anavataarata:' means 'because of non-arrival of doubt' or 'because of absence of doubt'.

The slokaa (verse 47) is incomplete; it has to be connected to the next slokaa; or, it can be completed, by adding 'Thasmaath aathmaa na prameeyathe' - 'Therefore, aathmaa is not available for any instrument of knowledge'.

Chapter II: Verse 48 –

तृष्णानिष्ठीवनैर्नात्मा प्रत्यक्षाद्यैः प्रमीयते ।

प्रत्यगात्मत्वहेतोश्च स्वार्थत्वादप्रमेयतः ॥ ४८ ॥

....as it is the inmost Self, as it is an end to itself in itself, as it is not an object of knowledge, it is not cognized through ways of knowing, like perception etc., which are all 'products' of desire.

Sureswaraachaaryaa continues with the same topic in this verse also, viz., "Though aathmaa is siddha vasthu, you cannot say that it is 'pramaanaanthara gamyam'. In other words, Sureswaraachaaryaa is 'demolishing' the poorva meemasakaa's generalization. What is the poorva meemasakaa's generalization? Ans: "Yathra yathra siddhathvam thathra thathra pramaanaanthara gamyathvam" meaning "whatever is an already existing entity, that entity must be knowable / must have been known through some pramaanam other than sabdha pramanaam". This is the poorva meemasakaa's principle. Sureswaraachaaryaa is 'demolishing' this principle, by averring "aathmaa is, of course, an already existing entity; but, that already existing entity called aathmaa is not knowable through any pramaanam other than (vaidhika) sabdha pramaanam". That is the topic which he is continuing.

He says:

प्रत्यक्षाध्यै :आत्मा न प्रमीयते - Aathmaa, the Self, is not perceptible through any pramaanam like prathyakshaa etc.,

It is an irony that 'aathmaa', the Self, which is the most intimate thing in the world (the most intimately available thing to me, is 'myself') is not 'knowable' by me, through any pramaanam, other than Veda or Sabdha Pramaanam.

The term 'prathyakshaadhyai:' means 'through various pramaanam-s like prathyakshaa etc.:'; and, by the use of 'aadhyai:', the other pramaanam-s indicated are: anumaanaa, upamaana, arthaapatthi, anupalabdhi and loukika sabdhaa-s (not vaidhika sabdhaa).

'Na prameeyathe' means 'na jnaayathe' / 'unobjectifiable' / 'incapable of being objectified'. What is the reason?

Sureswaraachaaryaa indicates one of the reasons by a brief, but, pregnant term:

तृष्णा निष्ठीवनै : - which pramaanam-s are 'products' of 'desire',

The Aachaaryaa calls the six pramaanam-s, viz., prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi, anupalabdhi and loukika sabdhaa-s (not vaidhika sabdhaa), as 'thrusnaa nishteevanaani'.

This term 'thrusnaa nishteevanai:' is a peculiar expression, which is an adjective to 'prathyakshaadhyai:'| The term conveys a perception or insight, unique to this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, not to be found in other prakaranaa-s. And, it calls for a detailed explanation.

The word 'nishteevanam' literally means 'saliva'. It is derived from the Sanskrit root 'shtiv', meaning 'to spit'. Its abstract noun is 'shteevanam', meaning 'saliva' or 'spittle'. 'ni' is upasargaa. 'nishteevanam' means 'that, which is spit out' .

Here, the Aachaaryaa uses this word 'nishteevanam', in the meaning of 'product', since the saliva, which we spit out, is a product produced by the mouth. The final meaning of 'nishteevanam', in this context, is 'kaaryam'/ product.

Sureswaraacharya says that the six pramaanam-s, prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi, anupalabdhi and loukika sabdhaa-s (not vaidhika sabdhaa) are 'products', which come to existence at a particular time. If they are products, who is the 'producer'? The Aachaaryaa says the 'producer' is 'thrushnaa', which means 'desire'. These six pramaanam-s are products of our 'thrushnaa', which word means 'kaamaa' / desire. In effect, he says, 'kaama kaaryam pramaanam' meaning 'pramaanam-s are products of desire'.

Now, the questions are (i) how does he say so? and (ii) what is 'desire', in this context?

The following analysis answers these questions :

By whom is a pramaanam operated? A pramaanam is operated by a pramaatha. Who is a pramaatha? The knowing individual or the 'knower' individual is called pramaatha. And, that knower alone operates a pramaanam. Why does the pramaatha operate the pramaanam? Ans: Because, he desires to know a prameyam. To consolidate: Pramaatha operates a pramaanam, only when he desires to know a prameyam. Therefore 'prameya pramaa icchaa' – 'desire for the knowledge of a prameyam' is the desire which makes a pramaanam come into operation. In other words, 'jignyaasaa' or 'desire for knowledge' is the condition for the operation of a pramaanam. And, if that desire is not there, even though the pramaanam exists, the pramaanam is not functional. The following mundane example will make this clearer : Assume that the phone rings, when an individual is reading a book . The individual immediately turns his attention away from the book to the phone. In other words, he stops using the pramaanam of the 'eye' and starts using the pramaanam of the 'ear'. What does this show? Even though the 'ear' (instrument) was already existent, the 'ear' pramaanam is brought into operation, only because of the individual's desire to 'listen'. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "pramaanam-s are born because of the 'desire' of pramaatha". Before the desire of the pramaatha, the instruments of pramaanam may be there, but they are not pramaanam-s, because they are not operated. Again, in the example, as soon as the individual turns his attention from 'reading' to 'listening', even though his eye balls are still there, they cease to be 'pramaanam', since he has ceased to use them. Hence the conclusion: "pramaanam-s are born out of the desire of the pramaatha".

Granting this, why does the Aachaaryaa say that the pramaanam-s born out of desire, such as prathyakshaa, do not reveal the Self? It is answered as below:

The above analysis showed, that, even before the birth and function of pramaanam, the 'desire to know' exists. Whom does this desire belong to? It belongs to the pramaatha.

Therefore, it follows, that, even before the 'arrival' of the pramaanam, both the pramaathaa and 'his desire to know' exist.

And, not only do they exist, the pramaathaa also 'knows' about their existence. When? Even before the operation of the pramaanam.

In other words, the pramaathaa's existence and his 'desire to know' stand 'revealed', even before he starts operating the pramaanam. What does this mean? Ans: 'My' existence is revealed even before the operation of the pramaanam. In that case, why do 'I' require the operation of any pramaanam for proving 'me', the pramaathaa?

To repeat : Even before the operation of the pramaanam, 'I' know, that, 'I', the pramaathaa am existent, that I have a 'desire to know' and that only because of the 'desire to know', 'I' am going to operate the pramaanam. In fact, the very pramaana operation is because I am revealed and my 'desire to know' is revealed. Because of that alone, I start using the pramaanam. Thus, when even before the arrival and operation of pramaanam, pramaathaa and the 'desire to know' (termed jignyaasaa or pramithsaa) are revealed, why should I use any pramaanam to prove either myself and / or my 'desire to know'?

When pramaathaa itself need not be revealed, what to talk of saakshi which is the very Consciousness in the pramaathaa? Expressed in Sanskrit: pramithsaa kaaryabhoothai: / jignyaasaa kaaryabhoothai: / vividishaa kaarya bhoothai: prathyakshaadhyai: pramaathaa eva na prameeyathe | kaimuthika nyaayena kim vakthavyam saakshi pramaanai: na prameeyathe ithi?

The significant and terse adjective 'thrushnaa nishteevanai:', encompasses all the above detailed arguments.

Proceeding further to the second line of verse 48:

प्रत्यगात्मत्वहेतोः च - also because that pramaathaa or saakshi happens to be the innermost Self of mine, which is always available as aham,

The saakshi is always available as the 'innermost' Self. Why does the Aachaaryaa say the 'innermost' Self? The contents of Thaithreeya Upanishad should be recollected, in this context.

Every individual has got two types of Self; one is the inner Self; the other is the outer self.

'Consciousness' is the inner Self.

What is the outer self? Ans: Physical body or the 'annamayaa' forms part of the outer self; 'praanamayaa' is part of outer self; 'manomayaa' is part of outer self; 'vijnaana mayaa' is part of outer self ; 'aanandha mayaa' is also part of outer self.

Why do we say that 'annamayaa', 'praana mayaa' etc., are 'self'? Ans: Because of the simple reason that everyone uses the word 'I' (i) for the physical body, (ii) for the praanaa, (iii) for the mind and also (iv) for the intellect.

Whatever is denoted by the word 'I' (aham), is called 'self'. 'aham sabdha prathyaya vishayathvam aathmathvam' is a fundamental definition. For example, when an individual says 'I was born in 1927', it is his body that he is denoting by the word 'I'. Therefore, the body is also called 'self'.

But, why is it called 'outer' self? Ans: Because it is 'removable' / because it 'can be discarded'. When does one 'remove' one's physical body? Ans: During svapna avasthaa. The 'dreamer' drops the jaagrath physical body on the couch and assumes another physical body in svapnaa, which is again 'dropped' in sushupthi avasthaa.

The physical body (anna mayaa) is removable and therefore it is called 'outer' self. To recap: Body is called 'self' because it is referred to by the word 'aham' and it is called 'outer' self, because it is removed in svapnaa and sushupthi. Similarly, praanamayaa is also removable; so are manomayaa, vijnaana mayaa and aanandha mayaa. In sushupthi, the individual does not have 'aathmathva abhimaanaa' in any one of them. During sushupthi, he does not even say "I am ignorant". Only after he wakes up, when he is in jaagrath avasthaa, he says "I was ignorant during sushupthi"; i.e., during sushupthi, he does not have even 'ignorance abhimaanaa'. This shows, that, during sushupthi, he is 'sarva abhimaana rahitha:'| All the five kosaa-s are constituents of the 'outer' self.

Then, what is the inner or innermost self? Ans: Consciousness is what is 'innermost'. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa uses the adjective 'prathyak' and refers to it as 'prathyak aathmaa', meaning 'innermost Self'. And, prathyak aathmaa continues through all the three avasthaa-s, without interruption. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa starts his Maneeshaa Panchakam with a reference to this fact, as "jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa yaa samvidujrumbhathe" – "That, which clearly shines forth in the waking, dream and deep sleep states". Therefore, 'I' am ever revealed as 'aham' and, therefore, no pramaanam need reveal me.

Reverting to the text,

स्वार्थत्वात् - and since the 'knowledge' is sought for oneself,

This is another unique insight, which the students have to 'meditate' on (In this context, by the word 'meditate', the formal 'dhyaanam', consisting of 'sitting in padmaasanam, with the body kept erect' is not meant. The word is used in the sense of 'deep and concentrated reflection' on the idea conveyed). All the ideas expressed by Sureswaraacharya in these two verses are subtle, but, profound. More and more these concepts become clear to the seeker, more and more will the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi' become significant and convincing to him. Therefore, the purpose of all these text books of the great Aachaaryaa-s is 'Clarity'. The prakarana granthaa-s and Aachaaryaa-s do not teach anything new. Their intention is to give clarity and more clarity with regard to the already known ideas given in the Vedaa-s.

Sureswaraacharya has used this another profound expression 'svarthathvaath', which also needs detailed explanation:

When a seeker puts in effort to 'know' something, for what purpose or for whose benefit does he do it? The answer is obvious. One wants to 'know' things for one's own benefit only, just as all 'actions' also are carried out for one's own benefit only. Sage Yaagnyavalkya eloquently expresses this in the Maithreyi Brahmanam of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad "na vaa are sarvasya kaamaaya sarvam priyam bhavathi aathmanasthu kaamaaya sarvam priyam bhavathi" meaning "It is not for the sake of all, my dear, that all is loved, but for one's own sake that it is loved".

This is true even of an individual who claims loftily "I work for others". If closely questioned as to why he should 'work for others', the reply will mostly be "I find joy in it". He works for others, because he enjoys it. The moment work becomes a burden, he drops it.

This shows, that, whatever we do is for our own benefit. This is called 'svartham', the term used here, by Sureswaraacharya.

The Aachaaryaa implies "Whatever knowledge you acquire through different pramaanam-s, is intended by you, to serve your own benefit. If you want to know something for your own benefit, it is obvious, that even before 'knowing', you are available as the seeker of the benefit. What does that mean? You are already 'revealed' even before seeking any knowledge; therefore, you need not be revealed through any particular knowledge. No pramaanaa is required to prove the seeker, since, to use a pramaanaa, the individual should seek a knowledge, to seek the knowledge he must be there as 'seeker' of that knowledge and the 'seeker' of the knowledge need not be proved through that knowledge.

The seeker of self-knowledge through a 'pramaanam', need not be proved by the 'pramaanam'.

Even as one says "I want to know myself", 'I' am revealed. Even before the operation of the pramaanaa, 'I' am there.

The conclusion: "jnaanam svaarthathvaath aham sarva pramaana avishaya:" – "Since, the very 'seeking of knowledge' is only for 'my' own benefit, which proves 'my' existence, 'I' am not the object of any pramaanam'.

Because of all these reasons,

अप्रमेयत : - 'I' am not proved through a 'pramaanam'.

Because of all these reasons, viz. (1) nithya avagathi roopathvaath (2) anyamaana apekshanaath (3) sabdhaadhi guna heenathvaath (4) samsaya anavathaaratha: (5) prathyakshaadhi pramaanaani thrushnaa nishteevanathvaath (6) prathyagathmathva hetho: and (7) svaarthathvaath, 'I' am not proved through a pramaanam - 'aham aprameyatha:'.

"Aathmaa aprameytha:" means "aathmaa is not available for objectification. It is not available for 'experience' in any particular state. It is not a mysterious thing, 'arising' and 'departing' in meditation". No pramaanam in the world can study aathmaa and no pramaanam in the world need study aathmaa.

"Aham asmi sadhaabhaavi " – " 'I' am always available". The only problem is, that, this knowledge happens to be partial. We are not lacking knowledge; but, we are lacking 'complete' knowledge. I know 'I am'; but I do not know that I am limitless. Because of ignorance, I superimpose limitations on 'me'. Vedhaantha is only scraping off / rubbing off these superimposed limitations . So, the seeker should continue with Vedhaanthic study (sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani), until he is able to say "I am", without adding any limitation, with the conviction, that 'I' means 'Consciousness' and 'am' means 'Existence' and that, everything else is mithyaa anaathmaa. All the struggles are meant for this 'understanding' only.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 49:

श्रुतिरपीममर्थं निर्वदति ।

The sruthi also says the same thing.

- श्रुति :अपि - The Sruthi also
- निर्वदति - nischayena vadhaathi / very clearly declares
- इमं अर्थ - this same idea.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "I have logically established that `aathmaa is aprameyatha:| This fact is not only logically established ; but, Upanishad-s also clearly support this".

One of the Sruthi supports that can be quoted, is the popular manthraa from the Brahadhaarananyaka Upanishad (Ushastha Brahmanam III.iv.1 and Kahola Brahmanam III.v.1) which refers to Brahman / aathmaa in the following manner: "Yadh saakshaath aparokshaath Brahma ya aathmaa sarvaanthara:" – "The Brahman that is immediate and direct – the Self that is within all".

Dayananda Swamiji, very often, says: "If there is one anubhavaa for which I need not work, it is aathma anubhavaa (since aathmaa is ever experienced). Aathma anubhavaa being Brahma anubhavaa, I need not work for Brahma anubhavaa also".

In that case, what is a seeker expected to work for? Ans: He should work for 'removal of limitations' from the ever experienced 'I'.

Addition of 'limitation' is an intellectual mistake, a misconception resulting from intellectual confusions. Since it is a cognitive error, 'removal of limitation' also has to be a cognitive process and not an experiential process.

What we require is neither aathma anubhavaa nor Brahma anubhavaa; but, an intellectual conclusion, that, the ever available 'I' does not have any physical limitation. The seeker has to gain this knowledge intellectually, by saying "'I' am; but, all my physical limitations belong to the outer self / the physical body and not to 'me'". He has to say this using the buddhi. Therefore, this is not a matter of experience; but it is a matter of understanding.

Similarly "praanic limitations also belong to praana maya and not to 'me'" is a question of understanding; "emotional limitations belong to 'my' mind and not to 'me'" is also a question of understanding. What the seeker requires is not a new anubhavaa; what he requires is a new understanding. "aham aathma eva " jnaanam is required, which is a cognitive process and not an experiential process.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "Sruthi is teaching this fact" and warns the seeker "Enough of your samaadhi and similar saadhanaa-s. Listen properly to the Sruthi teaching and also understand it properly. Other than this understanding, nothing is required for mokshaa, because you are already a muktha: |”

Chapter II: Verse 49 –

दिदुक्षित परिच्छिन परायूपादिसंश्रयात् ।

विपरीतमतो दृष्टया स्वतोबुद्धं न पश्यति ॥ ४९ ॥

This is contrary in nature, to things limited and external, about which ordinary investigation is undertaken. It is self-revealed and hence, through ordinary apprehension, it is not to be revealed.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa is keeping in mind, a Brahadhaaranyaka vaakyam, which he will refer to, in the next slokaa; keeping that slokaa in mind, he is paraphrasing the idea in this slokaa. What he says is: “Aathmaa is not like anaathmaa. Therefore, do not imagine or conceive aathmaa like any other anaathmaa and try to ‘experience’ it, in a mystic state, through a mysterious experience”.

A seeker should not attempt to ‘experience’ aathmaa in meditation. He should realize, that, even if he continues his attempt over a long period – even for a few janmaa-s, his attempt will be futile. He will never succeed in ‘experiencing’ aathmaa. Some mysterious ‘experiences’ might result when the mind is subjected to a lot of pressure, but those ‘experiences’ will not come under ‘aathma anubhavaad’.

(Here, Swamiji quoted a claim made by a person to him, that, when that person was once in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, he saw a white light arrive and go round the picture of his ‘guru’. Then, it spread further and further, lasting for about 3 to 4 minutes, before disappearing. The person claimed that it was ‘brahma anubhavaad’.

Swamiji continued on this incident : “The person might have got the experience. That need not be denied. But, unfortunately, the ‘white light’ that came, is certainly not Brahmar’. A Kenopanishad manthraa (1-6) specifically warns: “Yanmanasaa na manuthe yena aahur mano matham / Thadeva Brahma thvam viddhi nedham yadhidham upaasathe” – “Brahman is that very Consciousness which people do not know with the mind, and, by which Consciousness, they say, the mind is known” – Thus you understand. This, which people meditate upon is not Brahmar’)

Any object of experience is only anaathmaa . Any peculiar experience is a mental condition. A mental condition also belongs to anaathmaa, because mind also is anaathmaa. Any fluctuating mental experience has nothing to do with aathma anubhavam or Brahma anubhavam.

Then, what is aathmaa? 'I', 'the ever witnessing Consciousness was Brahman, is Brahman and will be Brahman, which is always available. Why should anyone 'look for' it?

Therefore, what is the lesson? Aathmaa is unlike anaathmaa. How?

Anaathmaa has got five features:

- (1) dhrusyathvam – being an object of experience
- (2) baudhikathvam – made up of matter or material
- (3) sagunathvam - endowed with attributes
- (4) savikaarathvam - subject to change and
- (5) aagamaapaaytivam – subject to 'arrival and 'departure'. The mysterious experiences 'coming and going' are, therefore, anaathmaa.

'I', the aathmaa, have got the opposite five features, viz.:

- (1) adhruyathvam - never to be experienced, as an object. (A seeker, therefore, should never complain 'Brahma anubhavam never came'. It will never come; it need not come.)
- (2) abaudhikathvam - non- material. ('I' am non-material Consciousness', should be the conviction of a diligent seeker)
- (3) agunathvam - free from attributes.
- (4) avikaarathvam - not subject to change and
- (5) anaagamaapaayithvam – not subject to 'arrival' and 'departure'.

'I', the aathmaa, is, therefore different from anaathmaa.

'I' will not 'come' and 'go'. There is no question of 'my' escaping from this world, even in the name of videha mukthi.

'I' am always the adhishtaanam. In 'me', the matter and the material world will come and go. Kaivalyopanishad (manthraa 19) declares : "Mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathishtitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi thadh brahma advayamasmyaham"- "Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything is resolved in me alone. I am that non-dual Brahman.

Sureswaraacharya wonders: "All these are crystal clear; but, why do you not understand them?"

Reverting to the text, verse 49, 'Dhidhrukshitha parichchina paraag roopaadhi samsrayaath' is the description of anaathmaa, the dhrusya prapancha: | The five features of anaathmaa mentioned earlier, is presented by Sureswaraachaaryaa in another language.

- दिदुक्षित - Desired to be experienced

This is a beautiful expression, arrived from 'Dhrashtum ishtam'. It is desiderative form of the root 'dhrus', meaning 'that, which is desired to be experienced'. This is an adjective applied by the Aachaaryaa to Anaathmaa.

From this expression describing anaathmaa, what is conveyed by him, is: "You can desire only for the experience of anaathmaa', whereas aathmaa is something, which you can never desire for 'experience'. Aathmaa is adhidhrukshitham'."

Why should you not desire to experience aathmaa'? Ans: Because, even before desiring to experience it, aathmaa is available as the Consciousness, which desires to experience everything.

158. Chapter III, Verse 49 to 51 (24-10-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is answering a 'poorva pakshaa', an objection raised by a group of poorva meemaamsakaa-s, who hold, that, aathmaa need not be revealed by the scriptures.

By applying a false principle, 'yathra yathra siddhathvam thathra thathra pramaanaanthara gamyathvam', the poorva meemaamsakaa-s believe: "Aathmaa is an existent entity; whatever is an existent entity can be revealed by pramaanam-s, other than sruthi. Therefore, it is not necessary for sruthi to reveal the aathmaa".

Then, when asked "What is the job of the sruthi?", the poorva meemaamsakaa-s reply: "The entire Vedic scripture is meant to reveal only karmaa - in one form or another; either in the form of kaayika karmaa, the rituals, or maanasa karmaa, viz., upaasanaa. Aathmaa is not revealed by the scriptures. 'Aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam' – 'Since Vedaa-s are meant to specify only actions to be done, their statements which do not inculcate actions are of no significance or value".

'Aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam' is the most important poorva meemaamsaa soothraa, which forcefully asserts that the entire Veda is meant to prescribe varieties of action only.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the poorvapakshaa here. He says: "We concede this theory of yours in the context of karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s. In karma kaandaa, karmaa-s have to be taught. The very purpose of karma kaandaa is 'revealing karmaa'. That is why it is called karma kaandaa. Therefore, you may apply your pet soothraa, 'aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam', in the context of karma kaandaa. But, when you come to jnaana kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, you cannot apply that principle. As the very word 'jnaana kaandaa' shows, it is meant to give us only jnaanam; not to commend any action. And, what is the 'knowledge' that it gives? It gives 'knowledge of aathmaa'".

The poorva meemamsakaa asks: "But, why should jnaana kaandaa give us the knowledge of aathmaa? Aathmaa, being an existent entity, can be known through other methods".

In reply, Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts: "No, Aathmaa can never be known by any instrument of knowledge; all the instruments are designed to know only the anaathmaa; anaathmaa has got five attributes: (1) dhrusyathvam – being an object of experience (2) boudhikathvam - material in nature (3) sagunathvam – endowed with properties (4) savikaarathvam – subject to modifications and (5) aagamaapaayithvam – subject to arrival and departure. Because of these five attributes, anaathmaa can be revealed by the pramaanam-s other than scriptures – viz., prathyaksham , anumaanam, upamaanam , arthaapatthi and anupalabdhi. But, none of these five pramaanam-s is ever capable of revealing aathmaa, since aathmaa has none of the above attributes of anaathmaa. In contrast to anaathmaa, aathmaa is (1) adhrusyam - not an object of experience (2) aboudhikam – not a material entity (3) nirgunam – not endowed with properties (4) nirvikaaram – not subject to modifications and (5) nithyam – not subject to arrival and departure.

"How can a pramaanam meant for anaathmaa, function in the field of aathmaa, when aathmaa has none of the attributes of anaathmaa, because of which attributes only, the pramaanam is able to reveal anaathmaa?"

The Aachaaryaa continues: "Therefore, Vedhaanthaa alone can reveal the nature of aathmaa. And, in Vedhaanthaa too, the mahaa vaakyani. It is mahaa vaakyam, which is meant to reveal the nature of aathmaa".

And, what is the anaathmaa? The Aachaaryaa uses a huge compound in the first line of the verse 49 to describe anaathmaa and differentiate it from aathmaa. He says: "dhiddhakshitha parichchinna paraag roopaadhi samsrayaath vipareethamatha."| The two words 'aathmaa' and 'anaathmaa' have to be supplied in conjunction with 'vipareethamatha.', the message being 'aathmaa is vipareetham to anaathmaa' meaning 'aathmaa is diagonally opposite to anaathmaa |

- दिदुक्षित - (Since anaathmaa is an) object of experience ,

Mind also will come under anaathmaa, since it is also only an object of our experience. Thoughts also will come under anaathmaa. They are also objects of experience. Ignorance also will come under anaathmaa, since it is also an object of experience. How do we say that? During sushupthi, we 'experience' ignorance and, in fact, only ignorance, which, therefore, is solid anaathmaa. This ignorance is otherwise called kaarana sareeram, which is otherwise called moolaavidhyaa. Therefore, the conclusion is: sthoala sareeram is an object; sookshma sareeram is an object; kaarana sareeram is an object. All of them are, therefore, anaathmaa. Any pramaanam, other than the sruthi mahaa vaakyani, is meant to deal with only anaathmaa.

- परिच्छिन्न - (since anaathmaa is) limited / subject to limitation,

This is the second description of anaathmaa. Any anaathmaa is subject to limitation – either of 'desa' (space) or 'kaala' (time) or 'desa-kaala' (both space and time).

- पराग् - (since anaathmaa is) external,

Paraag means 'baahyam'; the external world is baahyam; the physical body is also baahyam. What about the mind? Is mind external or internal? Our general tendency will be to say that mind is internal ; but, it should be carefully noted, that, from the standpoint of the body, mind is internal; but, from the standpoint of 'I', the observer, mind is also an object away from 'me' or outside of 'me'. Therefore, mind is also a paraag vasthu or baahya vasthu. It is also paraag or baahya anaathmaa.

- पराग् - (and since anaathmaa is) endowed with attributes,

'Roopam' means 'form' / 'appearance'; 'aadh' means 'etc.'; 'samsraya:' literally means 'a resting place' and, in this context, means 'endowed with'. 'Roopaadhi samsraya:', therefore, means 'endowed with various attributes like form etc.'; in short, it means, 'sagunam'.

To consolidate, the meaning of the first line of the verse (which is incomplete) is: "Since anaathmaa is an object of experience, is limited, is 'external' and is endowed with attributes",

This anaathmaa can be revealed by an instrument of knowledge other than mahaa vaakya pramaanam.

What about aathmaa?

- अत) :आत्मन (:विपरीतं - that, which is other than this anaathmaa, and which is of the opposite nature, viz.,

'atha:' means 'other than'; 'anaathmana:' is supplied and 'atha: anaathmana:' means 'other than this anaathmaa'; 'vipareetham' means 'opposite', 'atha: vipareetham', therefore, implies the aathmaa / the 'observer' / the saakshi.

What is the proof that the saakshi is existing? Ans: The very fact that anaathmaa is observed / the very observation of the anaathmaa is the proof for the existence of the 'Observer of anaathmaa'. The very observation of anaathmaa / that the world is observed / that the body is observed / that the mind is observed / that the thoughts are observed / that the silence is observed, every 'observation' proves the presence of saakshi, the 'observer'.

And, therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- स्वतोबुद्धं - the ever-evident (saakshi),

'svathobuddham' means 'ever-evident' ; the saakshi is ever-evident as the observer of anaathmaa . But, there is a problem. And, what is that problem? Ans: Saaksh/s existence is evident but saaksh/s nature is not known. The seeker knows that there is a saakshi, but, does not know whether that saakshi is finite or infinite; does not know whether the saakshi is sagunam or nirgunam.

The existence of the saakshi itself is evident; but the nature of the saakshi is not evident; and, to know the nature of the saakshi, the seeker cannot use the worldly pramaanam-s. He has to use the mahaa vaakya pramaanam alone.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

In this context, 'dhrushti' means 'loukika pramaanam' or 'loukika pramaana janya jnaanam'. The nature of the saakshi cannot be known through 'loukika pramaanam' or 'loukika pramaana janya jnaanam'.

Existence of 'saakshi' is evident; but, we have to know the nature of the saakshi, only through the mahaa vaakya pramaanam. Therefore, mahaa vaakyam is very, very important - not to reveal the saakshi but to reveal the nature of the saakshi. This distinction is very important. Saakshi need not be revealed, because it is evident as 'observer' of everything, but, the nature of the saakshi has to be revealed by mahaa vaakyam alone.

Chapter III: Verse 50 –

न्यायसिद्धमतो वक्ति दृष्टेर्द्रष्टारमात्मनः ।

न पश्येत्प्रत्यगात्मानं प्रमाणं श्रुतिरादरात् ॥ ५० ॥

The authoritative Sruthi declares with keen interest what is eminently logical, when it says 'You cannot see your inner Self, the seer of everything'.

Here, Sureswaraacharya says, that, this unique fact is mentioned by the Upanishad also.

What is the unique fact? Ans : "Consciousness / saakshi is evident to all the people; but, the nature of the saakshi is not knowable through any pramaanam other than Sruthi". 'Existence' is different from 'nature'. To express in another language: "Consciousness is evident to all; but, the nature of Consciousness is not evident to all ; it is not knowable through any pramaanam other than sruthi".

Saasthraa-s reveal five features of Consciousness, viz.,

1. Consciousness is not a part, product or property of the body;
2. Consciousness is an independent entity which pervades and enlivens the body;
3. Consciousness is not limited by the boundaries of the body;
4. Consciousness continues to survive / exist even after the destruction of the body; and,
5. The surviving Consciousness is not accessible because of the absence of the body medium.

All these five facts about Consciousness are known to the seeker only through and because of saasthraa-s. No other instrument of knowledge, including scientific experiments, can reveal these facts. That is why Consciousness is a mystery even to sciences like neurology etc.

The scientists do not even know which branch of science Consciousness should fall under, because, no branch of science is able to understand the nature of Consciousness. The Upanishad itself clearly declares this fact, that, facts about Consciousness are known to the seeker only through saasthraa-s.

- अतः श्रुतिः प्रमाणं वक्ति - The Sruthi pramaanam itself declares
- न्यायसिद्धं - this fact which is made very evident by the reasoning given in the previous slokaa.

What was the fact made evident in the previous slokaa? Ans: "Pramaanam-s can reveal anaathmaa / matter; they cannot reveal aathmaa / Consciousness". Sureswaraacharya calls this fact as 'nyaaya siddham' – 'a fact established by reasoning'. What was the reasoning? "Aathmaa does not have any one of the five features of anaathmaa, by which features only, pramaanam-s reveal anaathmaa".

And, where does the sruthi declare this fact? Sureswaraacharya refers to the very often quoted Brahadhaaranyaka Vaakyam of the 2nd manthraa of the 4th Brahmanam of the 3rd Chapter of the Upanishad (III.iv.2).

Part of this manthraa (B.U. III. iv. 2) runs: " Na dhruhter dhrashtaaram pasye:, na sruthersrothaaram srunyaath , na mathermanthaaram manveethaa:, na vijnyaather vijnyaathaaram vijaaneeyaa:" meaning "You cannot see that which is the witness of vision; you cannot hear that which is the hearer of hearing; you cannot know by thought, that which is the thinker of thought; you cannot know that which is the knower of knowledge".

Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to that manthraa here. In the term 'dhrushter dhrashtaaram', the word 'dhrushti:' means a thought / a vrutthi: / a dharsana vrutthi:, a thought because of which, one sees the external forms and colours.

Similarly, 'sruthi:' (in this manthraa) means 'sravana vrutthi:'; 'sravana vrutthi:' means a thought which experiences sound and similarly 'graana vrutthi:' would mean a thought which experiences smell.

The Upanishad says, that, thoughts are, thus, perceivers of the external world. And, the thoughts themselves are 'arising and departing'. When 'dharsana vrutthi:' arises, the external forms are known. When 'dharsana vrutthi:' goes away, forms and colours also go away. Likewise, when 'sravana vrutthi:' comes, sounds are known and when 'sravana vrutthi:' goes away, sounds also go away. The thoughts are 'arriving and departing'. Each thought is 'seeing' / perceiving an external object.

The Upanishad further says: "Thoughts are 'seeing' the world, by the five functions of the five sense organs – namely, by sight, by hearing, by smell, by taste and by touch ; but, the thoughts themselves are, in turn, 'seen' by an 'observer', who is also aware of the 'arriving and departing' thoughts."

The Upanishad refers to that 'Observer' as 'the seer of the seeing thought' - 'dhrushter dhrashtaad', 'hearer of the hearing thought' - 'sruther srothaad', 'thinker of the thinking thought' - 'mather manthaa' and 'knower of the knowledge' - 'vignyaather vignyaathaad'.

The Upanishad proceeds: "Thus, there is a seer of the seeing thought, hearing thought, smelling thought, tasting thought and touching thought. Five types of thoughts are there and there is one witness saakshi / the observer saakshi. But, the saakshi itself cannot be objectified / revealed / illumined by any one of the thoughts. The seer of the seeing thought cannot be seen by the seeing thought. The seer of the hearing thought cannot be heard by the hearing thought. The seer of the smelling thought cannot be smelt by the smelling thought. Thoughts are revealed by the saakshi, but saakshi cannot be revealed by thoughts".

Thoughts are revealed by the saakshi; but, the saakshi cannot be objectified by the thoughts. All the pramaanam-s are capable of generating thoughts only. And, thoughts are useless in revealing the nature of saakshi.

This is a wonderful development of an important fact, by the Brahadhaarnyaka Upanishad, which should be properly grasped by the student.

To repeat, for clarity: All the pramaanam-s are capable of generating thoughts. When one uses the eyes, what do the eyes do? Ans: They generate a thought, which thought sees the object in front. Likewise, when one operates the ears, the ears generate a thought in the mind and that thought reveals the sound.

Thus, all pramaanam-s are capable of generating thoughts and the thoughts reveal the objects. But, the thoughts can never reveal the saakshi, because the thoughts themselves are revealed by the saakshi only.

What applies to the 'thoughts' applies to the mind also. Mind is revealed by the saakshi but the saakshi itself is not revealed by the mind. No pramaanam, no physical body, no mind and no thought can reveal the saakshi, because they are all revealed by the saakshi only.

If one wants to know the nature of saakshi, one cannot employ the pramaanam-s or the mind. One has to use mahaa vaakya pramaanam alone, to know the nature of the saakshi.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says (quoting from the Upanishad):

- न पश्येत् - One can never know, through a thought,
- आत्मनः द्रष्टारं - the seer of one's own thought / the 'saakshi',

'aathmana:' means 'one's own' (aathmaa does not refer to the sacchidhaanaanda aathmaa, in this context); 'dhrushti:', in this context, means 'thought'; 'dhrashtaa' means 'seer'. What is the seer of one's own thought? Ans: 'Aathma:', the 'saakshi'; the 'saakshi' is the 'seer of one's own thought'.

One can never know the seer of one's own thought, viz., the saakshi, through a thought. And, by extension, through a pramaanam. You can never know the 'saakshi' with the help of any thought or with the help of any pramaanam, which is the generator of the thought, because the thought itself is objectified only by the saakshi.

And, what is that saakshi called?

- प्रत्यक् आत्मानं - which is the inner Self.

'Prathyak aathma:' is adjective to 'dhrashtaa', in this sentence. The final meaning of the statement is "One can never know the saakshi, the prathyak aathmaa, which is the knower of the thought, with the help of any thought or with the help of any pramaanam, which is the generator of thoughts only". Therefore, if you want to know the nature of saakshi, you have to take the help of mahaa vaakya pramaanam only.

- (इति श्रुतिः प्रमाणं) आदरात् (वक्ति) - Thus (that saakshi can never be known by worldly pramaanam-s) declares the sruthi pramaanam with keen interest.

'Pramaanam sruthi:' (in the verse) should be read as 'sruthi: pramaanam'. And, the 'sruthi: pramaanam' referred to, here, is the Brahadhaaranyaka Sruthi Pramaanam. 'aadhara:' means 'respect' / 'care' / 'desire' / 'keen interest'.

Therefore, the student should remember, that, whenever one is experiencing one's own mind, that experience is taking place because of the glory of saakshi ; saakshi alone with the help of its own Consciousness , the original Chith, is revealing the mind. Mind is revealed by the chith saakshi only.

This fact needs to be repeatedly highlighted, because, quite often, there is a doubt in the mind of the student - a very, very subtle doubt, as to whether the 'mind' is known by 'chith' or 'chidhaabhaasaad'. If a question "Is the mind known by 'chith' or by 'chidhaabhaasaad'?" is asked, the general tendency is to answer "mind is known by 'chidhaabhaasaad' ". This perspective is erroneous. The student should know, that, the mind is known / revealed only by the 'chith'. Of course, the student can happily say that the external world is known by the chidhaabhaasaa, which is in the mind; but, the mind is known only by 'chith'.

World is known by chidhaabhaasa in the mind; the mind is known by the chith. This distinction must be clear. Therefore, whenever I am experiencing the world, I am experiencing the glory of chidhaabhaasaa and whenever I am experiencing the mind, I am experiencing the glory of chith alone. And, also, when I say "I perceive the world", the word 'I' means the 'chidhaabhaasaad', and whenever I say "I know the mind", the word 'I' means the 'chith' only.

The following example will make the distinction very clear:

"Assume, that, on a full-moon night, there are no clouds and there is a bright moon. Because of the bright moon, the earth is clearly illumined / revealed. I ask a question 'What is the earth illumined by?' The answer is simple, viz., 'The earth is illumined by moonlight'. Suppose, I ask the next question 'What is the moon illumined by?' and suppose, someone replies 'The moon is also illumined by the moonlight'. Is the answer right or wrong? Though there is a tendency to give this reply 'moon is illumined / revealed by the moonlight', this answer is wrong, since it will mean 'moon is self-luminous'. But, it is common knowledge that moon is not self-luminous and, that, moon gets its illumination from sunlight.

"Whenever you are experiencing the moon, you are experiencing the glory of sunlight, because of which sunlight only, there is moonlight. When you are experiencing the bright earth on a full-moon light, you are, of course, experiencing the glory of moonlight and you can boldly say 'I am experiencing the glory of moonlight'; whereas, when you are looking at the moon and experiencing the moon, you are experiencing the glory of sunlight, because the moon is revealed by sun. When the sun illumines the moon, moonlight is formed and that moonlight illumines the earth.

"In the context of the triad of (i) the saakshi (ii) the mind and (iii) the perceived world, the saakshi is similar to the sun in the example, the mind is similar to the moon in the example and the perceived world is similar to the 'earth' in the example. Whenever you are experiencing your mind, you are experiencing the glory of 'chith', the 'saakshi'; you should not say 'I am experiencing the glory of chidhaabhaasaa'. I am the saakshi chith, whenever I am experiencing the mind. 'Mind experience' is 'experiencing the glory of saakshi'. And, whenever I talk about the external world, the experience of the external world is because of 'chidhaabhaasaa'".

To recap: When am I experiencing the saakshi? Ans: Whenever I am experiencing the mind, I am the saakshi, who is the 'objectifier' of the mind. Having objectified the mind as the saakshi, thereafter, I join the mind and experience the world. By experiencing the world, I am experiencing the glory of 'chidhaabhaasaa' and by experiencing the mind, I am experiencing the glory of 'chith'. 'Mind experience' is 'chith experience'; 'world experience' is 'chidhaabhaasaa' experience. In the example given above, 'moon experience' is 'sunlight experience'; 'earth experience' is 'moonlight experience'

Unfortunately, chith and chidhaabhaasaa are often mixed up, resulting in confusions. What Sureswaraachaaryaa says is: "As the experiencer of the mind, chith-saakshi is always available ; it is only the nature of the chith, whether it is paricchinnam or aparicchinnam etc., which is not known. For knowing the nature of chith, mahaa vaakyam is required".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 51:

अनुमानाविषयत्वेऽन्यदपि कारणमुच्यते ।

I shall now give the reason for aathmaa / saakshi not being an object of inference also:

The central topic of this portion must be clearly understood. The central theme is: "All the pramaanam-s generate thoughts; and thoughts are meant to reveal anaathmaa. Therefore, all the pramaanam-s can talk about anaathmaa only. If one wants to know about chith, one has to resort only to mahaa vaakyam".

The term 'all the pramaanam-s', in the above statement refer to the five pramaanam-s other than sruthi, viz., prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi and anupalabdhi. The Brahadhaaranyaka Manthraa quoted by the Aachaaryaa, in the previous verse, categorically stated that prathyaksha pramaanam cannot reveal the dimension of saakshi / the measurements of saakshi.

Now in this portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say that anumaana pramaanam also cannot reveal the dimensions / measurements of the saakshi.

- अनुमान अविषयत्वे - With regard to the inability of anumaana pramaanam to reveal aathmaa,

What does this 'inability of anumaanaa to reveal aathmaa' mean? Ans: It means "Anumaanam cannot reveal the dimensions (not the existence) of aathmaa". The existence of aathmaa need not be revealed, because, in the form of mind-experience, chaithanyam is always evident. Nothing / nobody need ever reveal 'existence' of aathmaa. But, what about the 'nature' / dimensions of aathmaa? Only mahaa vaakyam can reveal 'nature' / dimensions of aathmaa. Anumaanam also cannot reveal that. With regard to this fact,

- अन्यदपि कारणं उच्यते - reason is given (to show that anumaanam cannot help).

All these discussions ultimately establish the glory of mahaa vaakyam. A perceptive student would find his respect for mahaa vaakyam multiply many times, when he listens to these arguments of the Aachaaryaa. He would also realize how disturbed Sureswaraachaaryaa must have been, by the poorva meemaamsaka's remark on the mahaa vaakyam, "Siddha bodhaka vaakyathvaath mahaa vaakyam artha vaadham" - "Since the mahaa vaakyam only talks of an already known existing entity viz., the aathmaa, the vaakyam is meaningless / useless". Because of his intense emotion, which can be imagined by a discerning student, the Aachaaryaa is going on and on, on this topic, all his sayings meant for establishing the glory of mahaa vaakyam.

There is no other method except mahaa vaakyam, by which you will know the fact "aham Brahma asmi". Meditation also is totally ruled out as a means to self-knowledge. 'Meditation' is nothing but generation of thoughts in the mind or cessation of thoughts; i.e., in meditation, the practitioner does only one of two things (i) either stop all the thoughts or (ii) produce and dwell on a thought. Either he remains totally thoughtless or concentrates on a specific thought. Obviously, 'thoughtlessness' cannot generate a new knowledge. And, when thoughts also cannot reveal the dimensions of aathmaa, how can meditation help in achieving 'self-knowledge'? Dayananda Swamiji jocularly remarks on this: "Either you are quietly ignorant or you are agitatedly ignorant".

Therefore, it should be remembered, that, meditation, by itself, can never do anything with regard to acquiring knowledge - any type of knowledge. After gaining the knowledge of the Self, from mahaa vaakyam, meditation in the form of manana-nidhidyaasanaani can be used, but, that too, only to 'internalize' the knowledge already gained through mahaa vaakyam.

No new knowledge can be generated by meditation, because meditation is not even a pramaanam. Even if it is considered a pramaanam, it can only reveal one or another anaathmaa. During meditation, one may get a mystic experience, which experience will reveal a mystic anaathmaa only.

Many seekers are not clear about these limitations of meditation. They wrongly think that, aathma jnaanam / realization 'comes' in meditation. Sureswaraacharya is struggling to knock off that misconception. Clear understanding of mahaa vaakyam is realization. Other than that, no other realization is possible. Therefore, all these sloka-s should boost the value of mahaa vaakyam.

The Aachaaryaa gives the reason to show that anumaanam cannot help, in the verse.

Chapter III: Verse 51 –

प्रत्यक्षस्य पराक्त्वान्न संबन्धग्रहणं यतः।

आत्मनोऽतोऽनुमित्यास्यानुभवो न कथंचन ॥ ५१ ॥

Perception is directed to external objects. It is in perception, that the connection between 'ground' and 'consequence', necessary for inference is to be established. Therefore, in relation to the Self, such connection cannot be grasped. Therefore, no experience of Self can be acquired through inference.

Anumaanam cannot help in the field of aathma jnaanam. Anumaanam means 'logical reasoning'. And, in the word anumaanam, all the modern experimental sciences are included, because all forms of modern science are using only the method of anumaana in their experimentations.

How do we say that? What is that method of anumaanaa, used by science? Ans: The first step is to collect data with the help of prathyaksha pramaanam, using advanced gadgets or instruments like microscope, telescope etc. Of course, the microscopes and telescopes are getting more and more refined. Based on that data, the scientists are only 'projecting' some other conclusions.

If a question "During scientific experimentations, do the pramaanam-s collect data from aathmaa or anaathmaa?" is raised, the inevitable answer will be that all data are collected only from anaathmaa - either micro - anaathmaa or macro- anaathmaa. For instance, the science of Astronomy deals with the macro, through telescopes ; the sciences of microbiology or quantum physics deal with atoms and the like, through microscopes. But, all of them are collecting data only from anaathmaa and through anaathmaa; and, whatever conclusion are arrived at, based on that data, will also be dealing with anaathmaa only. Anaathmaa data will give more knowledge about anaathmaa only.

Therefore, even if billions of newer and newer books are written, dealing with either the internal world of mind, neurons etc., or with the stars and galaxies, none of them will ever 'touch' aathmaa. When can modern science be expected to know about aathmaa ? Never. It will never be possible. The scientists can conduct their studies to know more and more about anaathmaa, through prathyakshaa and anumaanaa; but, if they want to know aathmaa, even the scientists have to resort to mahaa vaakya vichaaraa only.

At the same time, a discerning Vedhaanthin will never condemn science, because life requires anaathma jnaanam also; life requires aathma jnaanam also. Science is required for anaathma jnaanam and mahaa vaakyam is required for aathma jnaanam. An intelligent person would, therefore, use both science and Vedhaantha. Unfortunately, quite a few spiritual people condemn science, without realizing that they are committing a blunder. Science and scientific experiments are very, very important since they are making life more and more wonderful. Even a modern Vedhaanthic class, where large crowds are addressed by the teacher, is possible only because of modern science, which has made available the 'amplifiers'. If the electrical power fails during a class and the modern UPS is also not functional, even the Vedhaanthic class, in its present form, will have to be called off, for want of the 'amplifying system'.

Aparaa vidhyaa is also, therefore, important. But, what Vedhaantha stresses is that one's life will be 'complete' or the purpose of one's life will be fulfilled only when aathma jnaanam is acquired. An individual with only anaathma jnaanam / aparaa vidhyaa and indifferent to aathma jnaanam will be eternally in the triangular format of jeeva, jagath and Isvara, with its consequent samsaarivam. Only 'understanding' and 'assimilating' mahaa vaakyam will lead to the 'aathma-anaathma' binary format.

159. Chapter III, Verses 51 to 53 (31-10-2009)

In these verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the poorva meemaamsakaa's views, on the mahaa vaakyaa-s. The poorva meemaamsakaa's views are: "mahaa vakyam does not have any role to play at all; mahaa vaakyam is not at all relevant; mahaa vaakyam is totally unimportant".

These are the poorva meemaamsakaa's contentions. Sureswaraachaaryaa will have to counter these views, because the entire 'Naishkarmya Siddhi' text is an analysis of mahaa vaakyam only and if mahaa vaakyam is irrelevant, mahaavaakya vichaaraa will become irrelevant and the very 'Naishkarmya Siddhi' text will also become irrelevant. Therefore, if only to establish the validity of the 'Naishkarmya Siddhi' text, Sureswaraachaaryaa has to refute the poorva meemaamsakaa's views.

In that process, Sureswaraachaaryaa said: "There is something called aathmaa / saakshi; we are desirous of knowing the nature of that aathmaa / saakshi. Mahaa vaakyam is the only pramaanam, which can and which does reveal the nature of aathmaa / saakshi or its oneness with Brahman. No worldly pramaanam can ever do that. We require a pramaanam for any knowledge; and, in the context of knowing the nature of aathmaa, that crucial role can be taken only by the mahaa vaakya pramaanam".

As a first step of establishing this crucial role of the mahaa vaakyam, Sureswaraachaarya asserted that aathmaa cannot be revealed by prathyaksha pramaanam. This is because, prathyakshaa is turned extrovert, whereas Aathma is the inner Reality. Also, prathyakshaa can reveal only anaathmaa / material in nature, since anaathmaa has different attributes, because of which attributes only, prathyaksha pramaanam is able to do its function of 'revealing'. Whereas, Aathmaa is devoid of any attribute.

Now, in the 51st slokaa, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "anumaana pramaanam also cannot reveal the aathmaa".

Why cannot anumaanam reveal the aathmaa? The Aachaaryaa gives a technical explanation for that, based on the nyaayaa or tharkaa approach, an interesting and nice approach, discussed below:

What is 'anumaanam'? It is translated as 'inference'. A well-known example given for 'inference', is 'inference of fire based on perception of smoke'. On seeing smoke emanating from the top of a hill, the 'seer' is able to infer the existence of fire on the hill, even if he does not see the fire, the source of the smoke. But, how does he infer the existence of fire?

Tharka saasthraa thoroughly analyses this question. If an individual has to infer fire, he should have one particular knowledge. What is that knowledge? Ans : He has to know "Wherever there is smoke, there is fire". He has to know this invariable relationship between smoke and fire. This invariable relationship is called 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha:', where, the word 'vyaapya' is the technical term for the 'perceived factor' and the word 'vyaapaka' is the technical term for the 'non-perceived factor'. And, the knowledge is called 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam' or simply 'vyaapthi jnaanam'.

In all contexts of 'inference', 'Vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam' means 'knowledge of the invariable relationship between vyaapya and vyaapaka'.

In the above example of 'inference of fire', smoke is the 'vyaapya' / the 'perceived factor' and fire is the 'vyaapaka' / the 'non-perceived factor'.

Now, 'Vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha:' was translated above, as 'the invariable relationship between the perceived and the non-perceived factors'. But, why is the adjective 'invariable' used for 'relationship'? To explain this, going back to the example, if smoke and fire are not always together, no 'inference' of fire can be made by the mere 'perception' of smoke. If an individual has to 'infer' fire from smoke, he must be certain that wherever there is smoke, there has to be fire, without any exception. This 'certainty' / 'definiteness' is denoted by the word 'invariable'. If the 'definiteness' is not there, the perceiver of the smoke can only make a guess "there may be fire"; but, not firmly conclude "there is fire". If he has to boldly conclude "there is fire", the 'definite relationship', viz., 'wherever there is smoke, there definitely is fire' must be there. This definite relationship between the perceived smoke and the non-perceived fire, is called 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha:' or simply 'vyaapthi'. This 'vyaapthi jnaanam' is a necessary knowledge required for inferring fire, in the example. To consolidate, in brief: "Inference' or 'anumaanam' requires 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam' or 'vyaapthi jnaanam'.

Then, the next question raised in the tharka saasthraa, is: "How do I get this vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam?"; in other words, "How do I know the vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha?"

For that, the thaarkikaa-s give the explanation as follows: "Earlier, I have seen perceptually, the co-existence of fire with the smoke several times. Prathyakshatha: i.e. through prathyaksha pramaanam, I have observed the co-existence of fire with smoke. Not once; but, several times. By repeated perceptual observation, I have come to know of the un-failing sambhandha / relationship between the smoke and the fire; i.e., I got this knowledge of the un-failing / non-variable relationship between fire and smoke, by prathyaksha pramaanam. This non-variable sambhandha is called 'vyaapya vyaapaka' sambhandha:' | I got the knowledge of this non-variable sambhandha not through anumaana pramaanaa but through prathyaksha pramaanaa. In other words, initially, the prathyaksha pramaanaa was in operation, through which, later, I acquired 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam'. In the example, the 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha' is between smoke and fire".

Now, moving over to the 'inferential context', the thaarkikaa explains: "In the 'inferential context', I am seeing only the 'vyaapyam' part; I am not seeing the 'vyaapakam' part. But, what type of 'vyaapakam'? Ans: A 'vyaapakam' which I have experienced before, first through prathyakshaa and later, endowed with 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam', acquired through repeated perceptions or observations. During prathyakshaa and during 'vyaapthi jnaanam', I have experienced both 'vyaapyam' and 'vyaapakam' together; and, now, in the 'inferential' context, I am experiencing only the 'vyaapyam' and not the 'vyaapakam'. But, the 'vyaapaka' which was experienced earlier, during 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaana kaalam', can now be 'inferred' through perception of the 'vyaapyam' alone, with the aid of the 'vyaapthi jnaanam'. Expressing the same, in a slightly different manner: 'during vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha kaalam, I have experienced vyaapaka and I am inferring that experienced vyaapaka now'".

In the example given, the perceiver of the smoke has objectified fire earlier and therefore, he is able to 'infer' the non-perceived fire from the perceived smoke.

From all these detailed explanations, it should be very clear that, only what has been experienced before, is inferable later i.e. an entity which can be objectified alone is an inferable entity.

The following purely hypothetical situation will make this clearer, viz. "if a particular individual who had never experienced fire in his life, is subjected to the experience of smoke alone, he will not be able to 'infer' fire". Such an individual, who has never 'objectified' fire, even if he had experienced smoke, can never 'infer' fire at any time.

To consolidate in simple English, without going through the technical tharkaa jargon, it can be stated "Whatever is perceptible alone can be inferred".

All the above detailed reasoning is implied by Sureswaraacharya, when he succinctly says (in verse 51): "A saakshi which is never objectified at any time – either through prathyakshaa or during 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha grahana kaalam' – can never be known through anumaanaa". This is the significance of his using the term 'sambhandha grahanam'

'Sambhandha grahanam' means 'vyaapthi jnaana kaale prathyaksha pramaanena vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandhasya grahanam' | Only where such a 'grahanam' is possible, anumaanaa pramaanam can 'reveal' anything. In other words, (as seen before) only where a 'vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha jnaanam' or 'vyaapthi jnaanam' is possible, anumaana pramaanam can help reveal anything.

Reverting to the text:

- प्रत्यक्षस्य पराक्त्वात् - Since prathyaksham can deal with only external anaathmaa, which can only be objectified,
- न संबन्धग्रहणं - aathmaa is never available for vyaapya vyaapaka sambhandha grahanam / vyaapthi jnaanam , through prathyaksha pramaanam;
- यतः अतः - because of this reason
- अस्य आत्मनः अनुभवः - the knowledge ('aparoksha jnaanam') of the nature of aathmaa
- अनुमित्या कथंचन न (संभवति) - is at no time possible through anumaanam.

In this context, a fundamental 'rule of knowledge' is to be noted. While enumerating the six pramaanaa-s, including loukika sabdhaa as a pramaanaa (leaving the Vedaa-s aside), we enumerate prathyakshaa as the first pramaanaa, the others, viz., anumaanaa , upamaanaa, arthaapaththi, anupalabdhi and loukika sabdha pramaanaa, following prathyakshaa. By enumerating the six pramaanaa-s in this order, we are communicating a very significant principle. That principle is: "The later five pramaanaa-s can work only where the first pramaanaa can work". If there is an object which is beyond the scope of the first pramaanaa, viz., prathyakshaa, then, automatically, the object is beyond the scope of the other five pramaanaa-s also. This is an interesting fact to be clearly noted by the student.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 52:

एवमयं प्रमातृप्रमाणप्रमेयव्यवहारः सर्व एव पराचीनविषय एव न प्रतीचीनं आत्मानमवगाहयितुमलम् । एवं च सत्यनेनैव यथोक्तोऽर्थोऽवसातुं शक्यत इत्याह ।

Thus, this whole world of the 'knower', 'knowing' and 'the object of knowing' falls within the external world and so it cannot fathom the inner reality of the Self. This being so, it (the Self) can be approached only in the manner specified by us:

Sureswaraachaaryaa is concluding the refutation of poorva meemamsakaa, to establish the relevance of mahaa vaakyaa. Here, he declares, that, aathmaa can never be known by the conventional pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-vyavahaaraa, because all these knowing processes are directed outwards; in other words, they are 'matter-centric'. All our conventional knowing processes are 'matter-centric' and are never 'consciousness-centric'; therefore, all conventional knowing processes including all the modern scientific experimentation, can all deal only with matter; they can never access Consciousness, to know the nature of Consciousness.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says: (a very, very important conclusion):

अयं प्रमातृ प्रमाण प्रमेय व्यवहारः सर्वः - All these knowing processes,

'Pramaathru pramaana prameya vyavahaara:' means 'jnaana vyavahaara:' or 'knowing processes'. We divide all our processes, into two ; one is 'doing' process and the other is 'knowing' process. In 'doing' process, knowledge does not take place; in 'knowing' process, action does not take place.

When the karmendriyaa-s are used, it is a 'doing' process; during that process, no new 'knowledge' takes place. To understand this statement, as a simple example, a situation of an individual taking a soap and involved in washing one object after another, may be imagined. The continuous washing action of the individual is obviously a 'doing' process. He may continue this 'washing' action for a length of time; but, even if he continues this 'doing' process for decades or even janmaa-s, no new knowledge takes place.

During 'doing' process, 'knowledge' does not take place and during 'knowing' process, 'action' does not take place. Therefore, conventionally, all the processes are broadly classified into the two - (1) 'doing process', called 'karma vyavahaaraa' and (2) the 'knowing process' or 'jnaana vyavahaaraa'.

'Vyavahaara:, in this context (in the sambhandha gadhyam portion under study), means jnaana vyavahaara:, indicated by the use of the term, 'pramaathru pramaana prameya', since, all the 'knowing processes' done by humanity, consist of a pramaathaa, a pramaanaa and a prameyaa. 'Pramaathaa' means 'mind'. 'Pramaanaa', in this context, means the 'thought generated by all the six conventional pramaanaa-s'; in other words, 'pramaana vrutthi:' is the translation of the word 'pramaanaa', in this context. 'Pramaathaa' is the mind or 'mana:' and 'pramaanam' is 'manovrutthi:'; and, 'prameyaa' means the object. | All the knowing processes consist of (1) 'mind' (2) 'thought' and (3) the 'object'.

'Ayam pramaathru pramaana prameya vyavahaara: sarva:' means 'all these knowing processes consisting of the thriputi – mind, thought and object'.

Why is the Achaaryaa using the prefix 'ayam' ('these'), before the word 'vyavahaara'? Ans: Because we are always involved in 'jnaana vyavahaaraa' throughout the day, when we are not in 'karma vyavahaaraa'. The word 'ayam', implies 'which we are generally engaged in'. Even during simple actions, such as 'reading a newspaper in the morning', 'watching the television' or 'switching on the cell phone to find out the missed calls', we are involved in 'jnaana vyavaharaa'.

And, Sureswaraacharyaa avers "None of our worldly 'knowing' processes deals with Saakshi. We have no way of knowing the saakshi, in any of these vyavahaaraa-s". The Achaaryaa uses the word 'sarva', to emphasize this view.

पराचीनविषय : एव - deal only with the external world;

They deal with the 'material' body or the 'material' mind or the 'material' world. Or, in short, with the material anaathmaa; they do not 'touch' the aathma, even by mistake.

Dayananda Swamiji jocularly, but meaningfully, remarks: "You can never 'stumble' upon aathmaa".

An interesting fact, is, that, many scientific discoveries are 'stumbled-upon' discoveries. In fact, a book has been published, dealing exclusively with 'stumbled-upon' discoveries. What does 'stumbled-upon' discovery mean? Ans: The scientist or researcher engages himself on the search for a particular object or fact; and, during his search for that particular fact / object, he arrives at something else by sheer accident. Such a discovery is called 'stumbled-upon' discovery.

Dayananda Swamiji asks the question: "Would any scientist, at anytime, 'stumble upon', 'aham brahma asmi in this manner?" And, avers, that, all 'stumbled-upon' discoveries also can deal only with anaathmaa. A scientist or researcher may go after one anaathmaa and inadvertently may stumble upon a new discovery, but dealing with only another anaathmaa. He may repeatedly stumble upon new discoveries, but, all dealing with only anaathmaa.

Deliberate discoveries also will deal with anaathmaa; 'stumbled-upon' discoveries also will deal with anaathmaa only. But, 'aathma', nobody can 'stumble upon'.

That is why, it is said, that, through intuition also, aathmaa cannot be known. Neither through prathyakshaadhi pramaanaa-s, nor through intuition, aathmaa can ever be 'stumbled upon'. There is a prevailing thought, among some people, that, rishis 'discovered' aathmaa through intuition. This is an erroneous thought. Intuition also can reveal only anaathmaa; aathmaa cannot be known through intuition also.

How then, can, aathmaa be known ? Ans: (Punning on the word) 'In Tuition' (study) alone aathmaa can be known. What tuition? Ans: The seeker has to go through mahaa vaakyaa tuition. He cannot 'stumble' upon 'aham Brahma asmi'.

This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa also conveys, by his declaration "sarva: pramaathru pramaanaa prameyavyavahaara: eva paraacheena vishaya: eva (bhavathi)" - "all those knowing processes which use the prathyakshaadhi pramaanaani or intuition are within the field of anaathmaa only". 'Paraacheena:' means 'external', and, 'external' , in this context, means 'anaathmaa'.

- न अलम् - (None of them) is capable of 'alam' means 'capable of' ; 'na alam' means 'not capable of'.
- अवगाहयितुं - revealing (the nature of) 'avagaahanam' literally means 'to fathom' and, in this context, means 'revealing';
- आत्मानं - that saakshi chaithanyam aathmaa ,

Why not? Because,

प्रतीचीनं - which aathmaa is not an external object, but, is eternally, the internal Subject / Observer (never the 'observed') .

None of the worldly 'knowing' processes can ever fathom the nature of Consciousness. That is the reason why Consciousness will be an eternal mystery to all materialistic sciences. Consciousness will be known only through one source, the mahaa vaakyam. Mahaa vaakyam alone can reveal the nature of Consciousness. As what? Ans: As the all-pervading 'Existence' principle.

A doubt may arise. The student might ask "If mahaa vaakyam alone can reveal Consciousness, then why is it that the Vedaantha is voluminous, containing many other statements? Vedaantha should be the single sentence 'thathvamas' only". The answer is "Yes, It is true, that, 'thathvamas' alone is Vedaantha. But, all the other parts of what is referred to as Vedaantha portions, are essential for understanding this 'thathvamas'. 'Anyonthara aathmaa, praanamaya:, manomaya:' etc. are all necessary props to understand the mahaa vaakyam".

But, it is Mahaa vaakyam alone which will tell the seeker that (1) Consciousness is not a part, product or property of matter (2) Consciousness is an independent principle (3)

Consciousness lends life to matter, inclusive of the mind (4) Consciousness survives even after the destruction of all matter and (5) the surviving Consciousness is not accessible for transaction, not because it is not there, but because the mediums of transactions are resolved. Mahaa vaakyam alone can reveal these unique natures of Consciousness to the seeker.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says 'sarva: vyavahaara: avagaayithum na alam', stressing that, 'pramaanam-s other than mahaa vaakyam cannot reveal',

The unobservable 'observer' cannot be known through observing instruments. Sruthi teaches "Do not try to observe 'aathmaa'; instead, claim "I, the Observer, am the aathmaa, limitless Existence".

The seeker should learn to claim this, through the help of mahaa vaakyam. After listening to mahaa vaakyam, he should not ask the question "how to prove Consciousness?", because, once he asks the question "how to prove Consciousness?", it shows, that, he wants to use an instrument to prove it and the moment he attempts to use an instrument to prove it, he is dealing with anaathmaa / paraacheena. The saakshi chaithanyam aathmaa is not something to be 'proved', by any instrument of knowledge; after listening to mahaa vaakyam it is to be 'claimed'. The very attempt to 'prove' it, is the negation of aathmaa.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya continues:

- एवं च सति - This being so,
- अनेन एव - by this much understanding (that aathmaa cannot be known through pramaanam-s other than mahaa vaakyam),
- यथोक्तः अर्थः - the idea that I want to convey / I am struggling to convey
- अवसातुं शक्यते - can be clearly arrived at.

The Aacharya says "By this much reasoning, the idea that I want to convey is clear". The student might wonder 'what is the idea?'

Sureswaraacharya says:

- इति आह - I shall tell you.

He says: "I will reiterate the idea that I have been telling you all the time". The 'reiteration' follows in the sloka.

Chapter III: Verse 52 –

प्रमाणव्यवहारोऽयं सर्व एव पराग्यत : ।

सुविचार्याप्यतोऽनेन युष्मध्येव दिद्भक्षते ॥५२॥

As this entire mechanism of knowledge relates to the external world, however far we may examine, the ordinary modes of knowledge are only for gaining knowledge of external objects.

It is our common experience, that, when an important letter or an essay is written, if the writer is anxious that his reader should take specific note of his most important message, he uses either italics or a colour highlighter to mark that important message. Likewise, having talked of several topics, Sureswaraachaarya, desires to 'highlight' his important message. In the place of the italics or the highlighter, he re-states, for emphasis, that important message, which he had already given.

What is that idea that Sureswaraachaarya is highlighting, the idea that he has already talked about repeatedly? What is that image? Ans: "Pramaanam-s other than the mahaa vaakyam can never reveal the nature of aathmaa; therefore, mahaa vaakyam becomes extremely important. Do not ignore it". To create an imagery: "The poorva pakshin is about to throw away the mahaa vaakyam into the garbage can and Sureswaraachaaryaa rushes to snatch and retrieve it from the poorva pakshin".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

अयं सर्वः प्रमाण व्यवहारः - All the other conventional knowing processes

पराग् एव)भवति(- deal with only matter / anaathmaa .

This is the point repeatedly highlighted by the Aachaaryaa, to be registered deeply; the deeper the student registers this message, the more value will he attach to the mahaa vaakyam.

This can be understood more clearly by imagining the following situation: "An individual is afflicted by a serious ailment. He tries different systems of medical treatment, none of which cures or remedies his ailment. In desperation, he turns to God. Even though he had always been a believer in God, his devotion becomes more intense, when he finds that all the other doors are closed for him and even the doctors tell him, that prayer is the only solution".

In a similar manner, a seeker might have always held the mahaa vaakyam in high esteem. But, when he learns through Sureswaraachaaryaa and other Advaithic Aachaaryaa-s, that all routes other than mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, are futile in his endeavour to 'know' aathmaa, his respect for the mahaa vaakyam will multiply many times. The 'other routes' include meditation also.

There are quite some people who wrongly think, that, the saadhanaa of meditation, through intuition, will reveal 'aham brahma asmi'. They believe that, the repeated question 'Who am I?', in meditation, will reveal 'aham brahma asmi' and that, Saasthra vichaaraa is not required. This line of thinking is erroneous. It will lead the misguided seeker, only to drop the saasthraa-s and try to find out, through meditation, what is the source of ahamkaaraa or the answer to the question 'Who am I?'; he will sit in meditation and ask himself repeatedly "from where does aham come?", with the fond hope, that, when he keeps on asking this question, one day, the ahamkaaraa will 'fall' and the real 'I' arrive, declaring 'aham Brahma asmi.' The mistake of such people is that, they think, that, other than mahaa vaakyam there is an alternative method, viz., meditation, for the realization 'aham brahma asmi'; therefore, they have very little respect for saasthraa. They deliberately discourage saasthra vichaaraa and encourage independent 'who am I?' enquiry, sitting in meditation. Some of them even negate saasthraa.

But, Sureswaraachaaryaa and other Vedhaanthic Aachaaryaa-s firmly believe and point out, that such independent enquiry will not lead anywhere.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is, therefore, anxious that all those unfortunate people should first understand the futility of that 'independent' enquiry and then only, they will recognize the utility of mahaa vaakyam. Then alone they will not throw mahaa vaakyam away and instead, will resort to an enquiry / vichaaraa into mahaa vaakyam, which enquiry is very, very important. That is why, once again, he stresses, in the first sentence of the verse 'Ayam sarva pramaanam vyavahaara: paraag eva', forcefully conveying this important teaching, that, 'all pramaanam-s other than mahaa vaakyam, including meditation and intuition deal with anaathmaa only'.

- यतः अतः - Therefore,
- सुविचार्या अपि - even after thorough enquiry (into the nature of pramaanam-s other than mahaa vaakyam),

On a thorough enquiry of the nature of the other pramaanam-s (not mahaa vaakyam), the student will arrive at this conclusion, viz., that, "any pramaanam other than mahaa vaakyam, relates only to the external world or anaathmaa" He can enquire into the nature of the 'who am I? enquiry' also, by asking the question 'what else do I arrive at, by this enquiry?'

In this context, Swamiji recalled a conversation he had with one of his visitors, wherein, the visitor said that he practiced this 'who am I?' enquiry for 12 years and after this long practice, was able to become thoughtless; and, confessed, that having arrived at this thoughtlessness or silence of the mind, he did not know what to do next or how to proceed further.

Swamiji pointed out "This is only natural. This visitor had come to a dead end. His silent mind cannot be a pramaanam, to tell him that even that 'silence' is known / revealed by chaitanyam only. When he is experiencing the silence, he is experiencing the saakshi. But, his silent mind will not teach him that fact; nor the fact, that, that saakshi is limitless Existence. Silent mind can never teach that the Consciousness in that silence, is the all-pervading Existence; the silent mind cannot teach that, because the silent mind does not know".

To teach that ignorant mind, a guru must instruct the mind "In that silence which you are experiencing, is the Awareness, because of which only, the silence itself is revealed. Also, that Awareness is the all-pervading Existence". This teaching can be given only by a live guru or by the saasthraa-s.

Guru and saasthraa-s are, therefore, very important for a sincere seeker, who cannot afford to ignore either, by quoting the example of Ramana Maharishi. The Maharishi also should have received the teaching from an Aachaaryaa in his poorva janmaa. Therefore, dismissing saasthraa, quoting Ramana Maharishi as an example, is an unfortunate, unintelligent approach.

- अनेन - (you will know, that) by this conventional 'knowing' processes,
- दिद्रुक्षते - one can desire to know
- युषमदि एव - only anaathmaa.

Through all pramaanam-s, other than mahaa vaakyam, one can hope to know only anaathmaa; if one wants to know aathmaa, one has to come to the mahaa vaakyam.

A very disturbing state of affairs, is that some people have scant regard for saasthraa-s, disparagingly remarking in Tamil, "ஸாஸ்திரக் குப்பையை எல்லாம் தூக்கிப் போடு". Without flinching, they use the word 'garbage' for saasthraa-s. There are people, even among believers, who have not understood the importance of saasthraa and call it 'garbage'. Sureswaraachaaryaa admonishes such people: "Do not say that; saasthraa alone can reveal the aathmaa".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 53:

यस्माल्लौकिकप्रत्यक्षादिप्रमाणानधिगम्योऽहं ब्रह्मास्मीति वाक्यार्थस्तस्मात् ।

Because the import of 'I am Brahman' cannot be apprehended through ordinary modes of knowing, it follows:

In this sambhandha gadhyam, Sureswaraachaaryaa begins with "Since loukika pramaanaa-s cannot reveal the nature of aathmaa". This incomplete sambhandha gadhyam will be completed in the following slokaa.

- यस्मात् - Since ,
- 'अहं ब्रह्म अस्मि' इति वाक्यार्थः - the message of the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi'
- अनधिगम्यः - can never be grasped,
- प्रत्यक्षादि प्रमाणात् - through worldly pramaanaa-s, such as prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, arthaapatthi etc., (including intuition and independent 'Who am I?' enquiry),

(Here, Swamiji confesses that (i) intuition and (ii) independent 'who am I' enquiry', are his intentional additions, since he finds that the misconception that they could reveal the nature of aathmaa / Brahman is widely prevalent and also spreading and he is anxious to remove the misconception.)

- तस्मात् - therefore,

Therefore, what is the lesson? Ans: Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say "Mahaa vaakyam is important". He wants to conclude "Therefore, the seeker should understand the relevance of mahaa vaakyam and resort to the mahaa vaakyam enquiry earnestly". This is the final part of negating the poorva meemaamsakaa.

The students might wonder "We have already accepted the relevance or importance of the mahaa vaakyam. Why does the Aachaaryaa repeatedly stress this point?". The students should remember that this repeated stress of the Aachaaryaa is mainly for the poorva meemaamsakaa, who had argued that mahaa vaakyam is superfluous and not required at all.

But, even among regular Vedhaanthic students, there may be a few, without a firm conviction of the importance of mahaa vaakyam, because they think of the example of Ramana Maharishi. Such people might think and argue that, even without saasthra vichaaraa, this knowledge can be attained, as in the case of Ramana Maharishi. But, they should understand that, according to saasthraa-s, the view is, even the knowledge of great souls like Ramana Maharishi has been attained only because of their poorva janma mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, which knowledge continues in their present janmaa-s. And, such maharishi-s are exceptions ; and exceptions cannot be quoted as examples, for the obvious reason that they are exceptions.

Wrongly quoting exception as a rule, some people vehemently argue that, saasthra vichaaraa is not relevant. Keeping those people in mind, Sureswaraacharya repeatedly highlights the incapability of worldly pramaanam-s for revealing the nature of aathmaa and the consequent importance of mahaa vaakyam.

Chapter III: Verse 53 –

अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां निरस्याप्राणतो यते : ।

वीक्षापत्रस्य कोऽस्मीति तदसीति श्रुतिर्जगौ ॥५३ ॥

To the ascetic enquirer, who, after rejecting every phenomenon up to the vital breath as non-Self, asks 'Who am I?', the sruthi furnishes the answer 'You are That'.

Mahaa vaakyam is extremely relevant for the unique seeker, 'unique', because he must have discovered three facts even before approaching mahaa vaakyam. All the three facts are extremely important and only that seeker alone, who has grasped the three facts, will know the value of mahaa vaakyam. To re-quote the example given earlier, similar to a seriously sick person, whom all systems of medicine have failed to cure and who rushes to God as the ultimate resort, this 'unique' seeker, has suffered the samsaaraa sickness, has realized that nothing in the world has helped him out of his samsaaraa and therefore, approaches mahaa vaakyam. But, before making the approach, he must have discovered three important facts.

The first important fact is, that, he must have discovered the existence of the saakshi, as 'I', different from the body-mind complex / as 'I', the Observer of the body-mind complex. He must know, that, there is a saakshi existent. And, he must have segregated that saakshi through anvaya vyathirkhaa analysis.

He must know the existence of the saakshi as distinct from the pramaathaa, through anvaya vyathirekhaa method.

Who or what is the pramaathaa, the 'knower'? Ans: During jaagrath and svapnaa, 'I' am existing as a pramaathaa / as a 'knower', enjoying the 'knower' status, associated with the mind.

Whereas, in sushupthi avasthaa, 'I' dissociate with the mind; therefore, 'I' drop the knower status; and I am still existing but, without the 'knower-hood'. The knower-hood-less 'I', obtaining in sushupthi, is called saakshi.

'I' am always existent as saakshi who gets knower-hood in jaagrath avasthaa and who drops knower-hood in the sushupthi avasthaa. In other words, knower-hood is my incidental nature and saakshi-hood is my intrinsic nature.

Saakshi-hood is my intrinsic nature; knower-hood 'comes' when 'I' get associated with the mind; as a consequence, 'I' become of the knower of the world. When I dissociate from the mind, 'I' drop my knower-hood and the world is not known. Therefore knower-hood is an incidental status of mine; when I shed my knower-hood also, I exist as the saakshi.

Thus, the existence of 'I' as the saakshi, must be the first fact that should be known to the advanced seeker. He should know: "'I' am saakshi with incidental knower-hood, 'coming' and 'going'. When knower-hood comes, I know the world; knower-hood goes and I do not know the world".

160. Chapter III, Verses 53 to 54 (07-11-2009)

Sureswaraacharya points out that the message of mahaa vaakyam can be clearly understood, only when the seeker has gone through certain fundamental steps. Even the relevance and role of mahaa vaakyam will be clear to the seeker, only when he is aware of those important principles. What are these principles? They are as follow:

The first principle: Mahaa vaakyam is saying "thadh thvam as!"; i.e., it is communicating some information about the listener-student, by saying "thvam thadh as!". In this, 'Thvam' (you) is the subject and 'thadh' ('that') is the predicate.

A rule of communication is, that, in a sentence used for communication, the subject is already known to the listener and the predicate alone is the new information given to him. For instance, when a speaker says "Everest is 29, 000 ft. high", he is assuming that the listener already knows what Everest is. And, the information that the speaker wants to give, is, not what Everest is; but, only about the height of Everest. In this sentence, "Everest is 29000 ft. high", 'Everest' is the subject. And, that subject must already be known to the listener. If the listener does not know what Everest is, the predicate / the information becomes useless and the sentence does not communicate anything. Any sentence, therefore, must contain a known subject, if the sentence is to make any sense. Alternately, in situations where both the subject and the predicate are already known to the listener, the sentence becomes superfluous. To revert to the example, if the listener already knows Everest and also knows it is 29000 ft. high, the subject is known to him and the predicate also is known to him. In that case, the sentence becomes redundant and irrelevant.

The listener must know Everest; but must not know its height. Only then the sentence makes a purposeful communication. The speaker will be talking about the unknown height of the known Everest. (The known subject is called uddhesyam and the unknown predicate is called vidheyam).

Similarly, in the mahaa vaakyam "thvam thadh as!" also, the assumption is, that, 'thvam', the subject, is already known. What is unknown is the predicate 'thadh'.

To make this assumption true, before starting the analysis of the mahaa vaakyaa, the enquiry into and understanding of the Subject of the mahaa vaakyaa, viz., 'thvam', must have been completed by the seeker. In other words, 'thvam padha vicharaa' must take place before 'mahaa vaakya vicharaa', because 'thvam padhaa' is the Subject of the mahaa vaakyam. And, it is 'thadh', the unknown thing, which the sruthi wants to reveal through the mahaa vaakyam. The seeker who has completed the 'thvam padha vicharaa' is the ideal candidate to make the fullest use of mahaa vaakyam, because, mahaa vaakyam is giving information with regard to the 'thvam padha', which is the Subject of the vaakyam, already known through the 'thvam padha vichaara'.

The 'thvam padha vichaara' can be done with the help of the saasthraa or even without the help of the saasthraa. Sometimes, we make use of the saasthraa to do thvam padha vichaara; but, the thvam padha vichaara part can be completed by a student even without the help of saasthraa.

In this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi also, Sureswaraacharya's contention is, that, thvam padha vichaara can be done even without the help of saasthraa, by applying two methods (i) dhruk dhruasya vivekaa and (ii) avasthaathraya vivekaa, which together constitute anvaya vyathirekhaa. Using these two methods, even without the help of saasthraa, the seeker can arrive at 'thvam padha lakshyaartha', namely, saakshi.

Thus, the first principle is, that, the student should have already gone through 'anvaya vyathirekhaa', consisting of 'dhruk dhruasya vivekaa' and 'avasthaathraya vivekaa' and, should know "I am the saakshi". This is the first information a seeker should have, before using mahaa vaakyam.

To consolidate: What is the first principle? Ans: Through anvaya vyathirekhaa, (anvaya vyathirekhaa = dhruk dhruasya vivekaa + avasthaathraya vivekaa), what the seeker should know is: "I am the saakshi of the avasthaa thrayam".

He should have arrived at the conviction "I am the witness Consciousness, which is 'my' essential nature. In the jaagrath avasthaa, 'I' am aware of the world around 'me'. This 'knowing' or 'experiencing' gives 'me', what is called the pramaathaa status. But, my pramaathaa status, as the 'knower' of the world, is only an incidental status, obtaining only in jaagrath avasthaa. In jaagrath avasthaa, 'I' am 'putting on' one type of pramaathaa status, as 'knower of the jaagrath world'. Likewise, in svapna avasthaa, 'I' get another type of pramaathaa status, as 'knower of the dream world'. But, both the jaagrath pramaathaa and svapna pramaathaa statuses are only incidental statuses, which 'I' 'put on', during the respective avasthaa-s. In sushupti avasthaa, 'I' 'put off' both 'pramaatha' statuses. What is available, all the time, in all the avasthaa-s, is 'my' essential nature, the witness Consciousness. 'I' am, always, the saakshi, with temporary pramaathaa statuses, 'put on' and 'put off'. The core nature of 'me' is saakshi chaithanyam".

This conviction / knowledge is called 'saamaanya jnaanam', which the seeker should already have, before venturing into mahaa vaakya vichaara.

(Incidentally, these are all facts, not covered by any other text on Advaita. These are unique principles which Sureswaraachaaryaa is presenting in Naishkarmya Siddhi.)

The second information that the seeker should be aware of is: "I am existing as saakshi, but I do not have any visesha jnaanam of saakshi. I have the saamanya jnaanam, that, 'I am saakshi of avasthaa thrayam; I know that saakshi-hood is my core nature. But, I do not have any visesha jnaanam about the nature of that saakshi".

What is the visesha jnaanam? Ans: That, 'I am the jagath adhishtaanam Brahman, which is paaramaarthika sathyam.

"That I am paaramaarthikam Brahman, the jagath adhishtaanam" is the predicate or the visesha jnaanam, which mahaa vaakyam will give later. Before the employment of mahaa vaakyam, the seeker only knows "I am saakshi"; and, does not know "I am the jagadhadhishtaanam paaramaarthikam Brahman". But, when the seeker approaches mahaa vaakyam, he should be aware of this fact, viz., that, he is ignorant of his viseshaa status.

To recap the discussion so far: Information no. 1 is "saamanya jnaanam asthi" and Information no. 2 is "visesha jnaanam naasthi". A Vedhaanthic student must clearly have both these informations, even before employing mahaa vaakyam.

Then, the third principle: "The student must also know that he can never acquire the visesha jnaanam about the saakshi-chaithanyam, from any of the conventional pramaanam-s, namely prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi, anupalabdhi and loukika sabdhaa.

"He should also have realized that even anvaya vyathirekhaa, dhruk dhruya vivekaa and avasthaathraya vivekaa can give him only the saamaanya jnaanam, viz., "aham saakshi asmi"; but, they cannot give him visesha jnaanam; and, that, therefore, he needs a non-conventional pramaanam for acquisition of the visesha jnaanam, regarding 'me', the saakshi".

Having dismissed both the jaagrath pramaathaa status and the svapna pramaathaa status, as incidental, and having understood 'my' core nature as saakshi by avasthaa thraya vivekaa, i.e., having raised his level from ahamkaaraa to saakshi, which only is called saamaanya jnaanam, and also having realized that he cannot acquire visesha jnaanam through conventional pramaanam-s, the seeker now looks for a non-conventional pramaanam to give him that visesha jnaanam about saakshi.

What is that visesha jnaanam and, what is that non-conventional pramaanam? Ans: The visesha jnaanam is "The Saakshi 'I' is the jagath adhishtaanam Brahman, 'from whom indeed, all beings are born' (yatho vai imaani boothaani jaayanthe – Thaitheeya Upanishad – Bhrgu Valli – manthraa 1)"; in other words, visesha jnaanam is "'I' am no different from the jagath adhishtaanam Brahman and from 'me' alone, the universe is born". And, the non-conventional pramaanam, which gives this visesha jnaanam, is the sruthi mahaa vaakyam.

The sruthi declares "thvam thadh as' | By the word 'thvam', it refers to "'you', the saakshi", which the seeker already knows. This saamanya jnaanam he already has. Sruthi tells him "I want to give a new information about that 'you', through the mahaa vaakyam"; and, that new information is "'you' are jagadh adhishtaanam Brahman".

This new knowledge, which is given through the mahaa vaakyam, the non-conventional pramaanam, cannot even be verified through conventional pramaanaam-s, since they are all capable of dealing only with worldly objects.

And, after receiving this information, making the ahamkaaraa a neighbor, the seeker has to only change his mind-set to "'I', am the saakshi Brahman", (Swamiji makes use of the word 'neighbour' to imply that, just as one has the tendency to view a neighbour's problems objectively, without getting too involved, the informed seeker will view his own personal problems also objectively.)

'Neighbourising' the ahamkaaraa, the seeker has to change his mind-set to "'I' am the saakshi Brahman". This is 'arriving at the binary format'. (The 'binary format' is also a term specially coined by Swamiji and used by him to stress, that, the student should consider everything else other than the Self, as anaathmaa.)

Thus, before applying mahaa vaakyam, the student must have gone through three steps.

The first step is acquisition of 'saamanya jnaanam', namely, "'I' am saakshi - not ahamkaaraa".

The second step is the realization "I do not have visesha jnaanam of that saakshi" i.e. the seeker should know that he does not 'know' the viseshaa status of saakshi.

The third step is the realization "I can gather this visesha jnaanam only through mahaa vaakyam".

Meditation can never give that visesha jnaanam. In meditation, 'I' can remain as saakshi, shedding my pramaathaa status; but, I cannot know that, 'I', the saakshi, am 'jagadh adhishtaanam Brahmar'. Why cannot I know this, in meditation? Ans: Because there is no pramaanam available in meditation, to know that the 'saakshi 'I' am 'sarva aadhaaram Brahmar'. In meditation, there is neither any conventional pramaanam nor any non-conventional pramaanam. Thus, without any pramaanam in meditation, the most, that the seeker can look to achieve in meditation, is 'remaining as saaksh'. And, 'remaining as saaksh' is not 'ultimate knowledge'.

In this context, some facts about Yoga Saasthraa are relevant. Yoga Saasthraa defines nirvikalpaka samaadhi as 'thadhaa dhrashtu: svaroope avasthaanam'; i.e. it says "In nirvikalpaka samaadhi, you are abiding in svaroopam / in your essential saakshi nature". No doubt, this stage is wonderful; but, the seeker has to advance to the next more wonderful stage, namely, to know that, this saakshi 'I' is 'nirgunam advaitham Brahmar', which is never possible through nirvikalpaka samaadhi.

Yoga Saasthraa teaches nirvikalpaka samaadhi, in which the practitioner can abide as saakshi, but can never gain jeevaathma-paramaathma-eiykya jnaanam, because 'dhrashtu: svaroope avasthaanam' only means 'in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, I will abide as saakshi'. But, Yoga saasthraa does not talk about jeevathma-paramaathma-eiykyam, to give the knowledge "that saakshi is Brahman".

Vedhaanthaa, therefore, hastens to point out "Remaining in samaadhi is not the culmination of spiritual progress. It is not the same as jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eiyka jnaanam, which is the culmination. You may, of course, practice samaadhi for making the mind quiet, learning to abide as saakshi. It is a wonderful preliminary discipline that a Vedhaanthic seeker can practice; but he should not make the mistake of considering it as the culmination. The perspective that samaadhi is the culmination of Vedhaanthic study is a wrong perspective. In fact, Vedhaanthaa starts after samaadhi. Through, samaadhi abhyaasaa, you learn to claim "I am the silent witness'; but, after knowing that fact, through mahaa vaakyam, you should proceed to know that this 'saakshi aham' am 'jagadh adhishtaanam'. For a seeker, who has saamaanya jnaanam and who desires visesha jnaanam, mahaa vaakyam is most relevant. It is not useless artha vaadham". This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa is stressing in this verse

- यत्ते : - To the sanyaasi seeker,

Sankaraachaaryaa and Sureswaraachaaryaa are champions of sanyaasaa. In their teachings, very often, they insist upon sanyaasa aaasramaa as a necessary pre-requisite, for acquisition of jnaanam. Only now and then, they concede "if it is not possible also, it is acceptable". But, wherever opportunity arises, they strongly recommend sanyaasa aaasramaa as ideal for acquisition of jnaanam. Their reasoning is obvious. Non-sanyaasin-s are always pre-occupied with possessions, obligations, relationships and transactions, while a sanyaasi is free of the pre-occupation. But, it is possible for a viveki non-sanyaasi, to develop a sense of detachment from possessions and relationships, even while performing his duties diligently as a non-sanyaasi. This attitude is termed 'aanthara sanyaasam'. The word 'yathe:', can, therefore, be interpreted as 'to the seeker, who has succeeded in cultivating aanthara sanyaasam'.

- निरस्य आप्राणतः - who, after rejecting everything up to kaarana sareeram or aanandha maya kosaa, as anaathmaa,

The compound word 'nirasyaapraanatha:', in the verse, should be split as 'nirasya' + 'apraanatha:', meaning 'rejecting everything up to kaarana sareeram'.

The word 'praanaa', in this context, is a technical word to convey 'aanandha maya kosaa' or 'kaarana sareeram'. How is that interpretation possible, when 'praanaa' can, literally, mean only praana maya kosaa? The answer, in detail, is as follows: In sushupthi avasthaa, everything else, except the praanaa, stops functioning. The karmendriya-s are resolved; the jnaanendriya-s are resolved; the antha: karanam, consisting of mana:, buddhi, chittham and ahamkaaraa, is also resolved. The world, has, of course, resolved. After the resolution of everything else, 'praanaa' is the only thing that is still functioning. "The praanaa fire alone is burning" points out the Prasnopanishad (IV.2 and IV.3) – "Thena tharhi esha purusha: na srnothi, na pasyathi, na jigrathi, na rasayathe, na sprusathe, na abhivadathe, na aadhatthe, na aanandayathe, na visrujathe, na iyaayathe svapithi ithi aachakshathe | Praanaa agnaya: eva ethasmin pure jaagrath" – "Hence this (sleeping) person does not then hear, does not see, does not smell, does not taste, does not touch, does not speak, does not grasp, does not enjoy, does not eject, does not move. People say 'he is sleeping'. It is the fires (i.e. the functions resembling fire) of Pranaa that really keep awake in this city of the body." During sushupthi, all the functions are resolved; praanaa alone is awake. That means sushupthi avasthaa can be represented as praanaa.

And, a person in sushupthi avasthaa, is in kaarana sareeram or aanandha maya kosaa. Therefore, quite often, the word 'pranaa' is used as an indicator of kaarana sareeram or aanandha maya kosaa, Chaandoghya Upanishad (Ch. VI) being another instance.

- आलुरुरुिंप् – by using anvaya vyathirekhaa logic consisting of dhruk dhruya vivekaa and avasthaathraya vivekaa,

An intelligent student through anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise, consisting of dhruk dhruya vivekaa and avasthaathraya vivekaa and, if so inclined, by practicing samaadhi also, rejects / negates / eliminates everything, the pancha anaathmaa consisting of possessions, profession, family, body and mind and also all the pancha kosaa-s, up to aanandha maya kosaa, and learns to abide as saakshi.

Yoga saasthraa can be practiced at this stage, to learn to withdraw from all the sensory operations and to abide as saakshi. But, as pointed out earlier, it is not Veda anthaa. Samaadhi and 'abiding as saakshi' are only preparations for mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

By the application of anvaya vyathirekhaa logic and yoga abhyaasaa, the seeker acquires the saamaanya jnaanam`aham saakshi asmi. But, he is yet to acquire the visesha jnaanam`aham Brahma asmi, for which purpose, he needs mahaa vaakyam.

Advaita philosophy recognizes the usefulness of Yoga Saasthraa for the saamaanya jnaanam of 'thvam padhaa' in the mahaa vaakyam. But, it also firmly holds, that, Yoga Saasthraa can never give 'thvam-padha-thadh-padha-aiykya-jnaanam'- only mahaa vaakyam can.

From another perspective, Yoga Saasthraa need not be considered as the sole proponent of samaadhi abhyaasaa. Other scriptures also talk about samaadhi abhyaasaa. For instance, Katopanishad prescribes samaadhi abhyaasaa as an useful saadhanaa. Manthraa 13 – Sec. 3 – Chapter I of Katopanishad runs: "Yacchedh vaang manasee praagnya: thad yaccheth jnaane aathmani jnaanam aathmani mahathi niyaccheth thadh yaccheth saanthe aathmani" – "The discriminative one should resolve the speech into the mind. He should resolve that mind into the intellect. He should resolve the intellect into mahath. He should resolve that mahath into the tranquil aathmaad"; and, follows this up with a later manthraa (Manthraa 11 – Sec. 3 – Chapter II) running "thaam yogam ithi manyanthe sthiraam indriya dhaaranaam apramatthasthadhaa bhavathi yogo hi prabhavaapyayau" – "They consider the steady poise of the sense organs to be Yoga. One should be alert at that time, because Yoga is subject to rise and fall".

Lord Krishna also recommends samaadhi abhyaasaa, in the 6th chapter of Bhagavadh Githaa. Advaita does recognize samaadhi abhyaasaa as an useful saadhanaa (but, not the end in itself).

When the seeker learns to abide as saakshi, the mahaa vaakyam, viz. "'I', the saakshi am Brahma" will give him that visesha jnaanam.

ॐ - questions

'vaakshaapannasya' is adjective to 'yathe:'| Now, the seeker, after learning to abide as saakshi, is not satisfied with that skill. He has, now, got a new curiosity, as to the nature of that saakshi. He contemplates : " 'I' am the saakshi alright. But, is the saakshi sagunam or nirgunam? Is it paricchinnam or aparicchinnam? Is it jagadh adhishtitham or jagadh aadhaaram ? What is its nature? I am unable to know, because it is not available for 'objectification'. I can abide as saakshi; but, I can never objectify saakshi. If I cannot objectify the saakshi, how will I know its attributes? I know saakshi's existence; but, I do not know its nature. I am anxious for this visesha jnaanam of saakshi" etc.

Such a seeker, who has got saamaanya jnaanam and is eager for visesha jnaanam – i.e., 'saamaanya jnaanavaan, visesha jnaana icchu:' - is referred to, here, as veekshaapanna:, which is a loaded expression.

'Veekshaad, here, means 'visesha jnaanam', which is 'saakshi brahma eiykya jnaanam'. And, 'aapanna:' means 'one eager to gain (that knowledge)' / the seeker.

What is the doubt that this seeker has? Ans: He wonders: "I know I am the saakshi but, I do not know what the nature of that saakshi is, because, in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, I am able to abide as saakshi , but I am not able to objectify that saakshi. I know I am chaithanyam; but, I do not know whether that chaithanyam is finite or infinite; I do not know whether that chaithanyam is one or two or many".

According to Yoga saasthraa, chaithanyam-s are many. Diligent Yoga saasthraa practitioners are able to go to nirvikalpaka samadhi and abide as chaithanyam; but, they never come know that, chaithanyam is ekam. In Yoga philosophy, there are many chaithanyam-s and interestingly, according to Yoga philosophy, each chaithanyam is all-pervading. It should be very clearly understood and noted that, in nirvikalpaka saamdhi, the seeker may abide as chaithanyam ; but, can never know whether chaithanyam is ekam or anekam or whether chaithanyam is praathibhaasikam or vyaavahaarikam or paaramaarthikam. Samaadhi will never throw light on these aspects. Mahaa vaakyam alone can teach that chaithanyam is paaramaarthika sathyam and ekam.

In Yoga Saasthraa, paaramaarthika sathyam is not there. So also in Saamkyaa and Vaisheshikaa philosophies. Why so ? Ans: Because, they all missed mahaa vaakyam.

Reverting to the text, veekshaapanna: yathi: / the seeker who wants to know, asks:

- क : अस्मि' इति - 'who is the saakshi- I?',

When the curious, prepared student, thus, asks "Is that saakshi, which 'I' am, one or many? Is it sathyam or mithyaa?",

- श्रुति : जगौ - the mahaa vaakyam reveals
- 'तद् असि 'इति - that 'you are that adhishtaanam Brahman'.

The word 'sruthi:', here, refers to mahaa vaakyam and 'jagau' means 'reveals'.

The mahaa vaakyam says: "The saakshi is not just a limited consciousness located in your mind; but, it is the infinite Consciousness, in which, time and space are located". Instantaneously, on hearing the mahaa vaakyam, the student has to gather, "'I', the saakshi, am Brahman". The prepared student can gather this knowledge instantaneously, since, he has already dismissed ahamkaaraa / pramaathaa as mithyaa.

Once, thus, "'I', the saakshi am Brahman" is claimed by the seeker, when he further hears the sruthi statement "aanandho Brahmethi vijaanaath" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Bhrugu valli – manthraa 6) meaning "He (jnaani) concludes that aanandha is Brahman", the seeker will never look to see whether ahamkaaraa is happy or unhappy. Ahamkaaraa will have ups and downs, more often 'down' and complaining. But, when the seeker is listening to mahaa vaakyam, he has already dismissed ahamkaaraa along with avasthaathrayam and as a saakshi, when the sruthi says 'aham aanandhasvaroopaa:', it is a matter to be claimed instantaneously.

Thereafter, if and when ahamkaaraa experiences joy, the seeker will attribute that 'joy' neither to pramaathaa nor to pramaanam nor to prameyam; but, will attribute that joy as the reflection of 'me', the saakshi aanandhaa. Thus, liberation is instantaneous for the prepared student. This is the thesis of Sureswaraacharya.

To repeat a warning to the diligent student: Meditation is not after mahaa vaakyam; nor is it for 'liberation'. Meditation and samaadhi abhyaasaa are before mahaa vaakyam, to acquire samaanya jnaanam. Mahaa vaakyam gives instantaneous liberation, at the time of sravanam. And, the nidhidhyaasanam thereafter, is, also not for liberation; nidhidhyaasanam is to only remove the habit of expecting liberation. Liberation is claimed at the very time of mahaa vaakyam sravanam.

Samabhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 54:

सोऽयमन्वयव्यतिरेकन्याय एतावानेव यदवसानो वाक्यार्थस्तदभिजस्याहं ब्रह्मास्मीत्याविर्भवति ।

The rational discrimination stretches only up to this point. As it culminates here, there manifests the import of the proposition 'I am Brahman', to one who has followed it.

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say that mahaa vaakyam gives liberation at the time of sravanam itself, provided the student has completed thvam padha vichaaraa through anvaya vyathirekhaa and has 'neighbourized' ahamkaaraa; i.e. the student has already moved ahamkaaraa to anaathmaa list. He has learnt to abide as saakshi, by practicing upaasanaa or yoga. He has done this preparation through anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise. Therefore, he says:

- तद् अभिज्ञस्य - To the one, who has got saamaanya jnaanam of the saakshi, viz., that " 'I' am the saakshi " ,

'thadh abhignya:' means 'saakshi saamaanya jnaanavaan' / the one who has thoroughly acquired the realization " 'I' am saaksh' .

In the 6th chapter (verse 24) of the Bhagavadh Githaa, Lord Krishna says "sanai: sanai: upamedh budhyaa dhruthigruheethayaa aathmasamstham mana: kruthvaa na kinchidhapi chinthayeth' – "One should withdraw the mind gradually by the intellect which should be endowed with will. Having made the mind abide in the Self, one should not think of anything else". The Lord exhorts : "Gradually learn to see the body as anaathmaa, mind as anaathmaa and thought as anaathmaa ; learn to distance yourself from the pancha kosaa-s and learn to abide as the saakshi chaithanyam. May you practice this."

That aspirant who has achieved this knowledge and who is able to look at himself spontaneously as 'saaksh', is called here, 'thadh abhignya:'| And, how did he become thadh abhignya: / saamanaya jnaanavaan? Ans: Through anvaya vyathirekhaa method / by applying the anvaya vyathirekhaa logic.

Applying anvaya vyathirekhaa logic is part of 'thvam padha vichaaraa' and not part of 'mahaa vaakya vichaaraa'. But, the anvaya vyathirekha nyaayaa and acquisition of saamaanya jnaanam should not be taken casually by a diligent seeker. They are both very crucial. Without that preparation, the seeker is bound to fail in understanding Vedhaantha. This fact is highlighted by the Aachaaryaa here.

- अन्वयव्यतिरेकन्यायः एतावानेव - through anvaya vyathirekha nyaaya: , which is so significant, 'ethavaan' means 'so significant'
- यद् अवसानः - that its immediate consequence is

- वाक्यार्थः - 'eiykya jnaanam' of mahaa vaakyam,
- आविर्भवति - arises the conviction
- 'अहं ब्रह्म अस्मि' इति - that " 'I' am Brahman".

The consequence of saamaanya jnaanam is 'instantaneous claiming of visesha jnaanam'. Conversely, without saamaanya jnaanam, the visesha jnaanam is not possible, because, without saamaanya jnaanam, ahamkaaraa does not get 'neighbourised'. For a seeker without saamaanya jnaanam, ahamkaaraa is not 'neighbour'; but, saakshi is 'neighbour'. He continues as ahamkaaraa. Since saakshi is 'neighbourised' by him as some distant object, saakshi brahma eiykyam is of no consequence to him; it has no significance at all for him.

The gist is: If anvaya vyathirekha has been done properly, the seeker learns to abide as saakshi and if he has learnt that, the immediate consequence is, that, the mahaa vaakyam is meaningful at the time of sravanam itself.

The Vedhaanthic aachaaryaa-s cite the dhrushtaantha of the story of the 'dhasama purusha:', to emphasize this. When a guru and his nine disciples crossed a flooded river, the guru asked one of the disciples to check whether everyone had crossed over safely. The disciple, rather dull-witted, counted all the other nine people except himself, and was asking the question "Who is that 10th person, who is missing?". The guru told the disciple "you count once again", to make the disciple realize that the other nine are 'different from him'. So, the counting of the nine is important; only then, the nine will be dismissed by the disciple as 'not me' as anaathmaa. Similarly, at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam, the sthoora sareeram should have been dismissed as anaathmaa; the sookshma sareeram should have been dismissed as anaathmaa; the kaarana sareeram should have been dismissed and so also the pramaathaa, the pramaanam, the prameyam etc. Just as in the story, the disciple's search was over, after the nine others were removed, and the teacher pointed out 'you are that 10th person', in reply to the disciple's query 'who is the 10th?', the saamaanya jnaanavaan student's 'search' also is instantaneously completed on mahaa vaakya sravanam.

If, on the other hand, the saamaanya jnaanavaan student does not appreciate the relevance of mahaa vaakyam, and instead, looks for 'brahma anubhavaa' in meditation, he will be laboring under a misconception and will only fail in his efforts, since there is no such thing as brahma anubhavaa at all. 'Searching for brahma anubhavaa' is equivalent to 'trying to objectify Brahmar'. But, 'Brahmar' is not an 'object'. 'Claiming 'I' am Brahmar' is alone figuratively called 'Brahma anubhavaa'. And, at the very moment of mahaa vaakya sravanam, the saamaanya jnaanavaan seeker can claim "'I' am Brahmar", can 'claim' his freedom and can 'claim' mokshaa also. He will get the conviction "'I' am the saakshi chaithanyam Brahman, which is free all the time; vaasanaa-s, mana: etc. are all mithyaa; they have nothing to do with my mokshaa".

161. Chapter III, Verses 54 and 55 (14-11-2009)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 54:

सोऽयमन्वयव्यतिरेकन्याय एतावानेव यदवसानो वाक्यार्थः तदभिज्ञस्य अहंब्रह्मास्मीत्याविर्भवति ।
द्रष्टृद्रुश्यविभागेनागमापायिसाक्षिविभागेन च श्रुत्यभ्युपगमतः संक्षिप्योच्यते ।

The rational discrimination stretches only up to this point. As it culminates here, there manifests the import of the proposition 'I am Brahman', to one who has followed it. The distinction between the Self and the non-Self on the grounds, that one is the seer and the other is the 'seen' and that one is subject to origin and disappearance and the other is the witness thereof, is briefly presented here in accordance with the sruthi /

In these portions, we are going through a significant part of mahaa vaakyaa vichaaraa.

In the mahaa vaakyam`thadh thvam asl,`thvam` is the subject and `thad` is the predicate.

As already seen, a rule of communication is: "The subject in a sentence, known as `uddhesyam`, must already be known to the listener. `Yathra yathra uddhesyathvam thathra thathra anuvaadhathvam` is the principle, meaning 'whichever serves as the subject of a sentence, that subject is only the restatement of an already known thing'.

And, with regard to that known subject, an unknown information is given by the sentence. That unknown information is called predicate".

In short, the subject part of a sentence has to be known to the listener / reader and the predicate part of the sentence has to be unknown. Only then, the sentence is meaningful and purposeful.

With regard to the mahaa vaakyam, if we ask the questions (1) what is the subject, which is already known? (2) and, what is the predicate which is newly revealed?, we come to know, that, in `thath thvam asl,`thvam` is the subject.

How do we say that `thvam` is the subject of the mahaa vaakyam and not `thath`? Ans: That is known by the verb. The verb `asl` is `madhyama purusha:.` (in English, in 'second person'). Therefore, the subject also must be madhyama purusha: / in the second person. In Sanskrit grammar `thvam` is `madhyama purusha:.` and `thath` is not. Since the verb `asl` is `madhyama purusha:.` and, between the two words `thvam` and `thath`, `thvam` alone is madhyama purusha:, 'thvam' alone has to be the subject. And, it follows, therefore, that, 'that' must be the predicate and the new revelation of mahaa vaakyam.

This means, that, when the Upanishad is employing the mahaa vaakyam, the Upanishad assumes that the student knows the subject, i.e., 'thvam', as "I", the saakshi ". And, therefore, before listening to the mahaa vaakyam, the student must have 'prepared' himself sufficiently, by knowing the real meaning of 'thvam'. The real or target meaning of 'thvam' should be understood as 'saakshi'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says this preparation is to be done by anvaya vyathirekhaa vichaaraa. Anvaya vyathirekha gives the seeker, the knowledge 'aham saakshi asmI'.

This knowledge, viz., "I am saakshi" is called saamaanya jnaanam. The seeker must have this saamaanya jnaanam, before he takes to mahaa vaakya sravanam.

And, on mahaa vaakya sravanam, the seeker gets to know "I, the saakshi, am jagadh aadhaaram paaramaarthikam Brahman", which knowledge is termed visesha jnaanam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, in addition, asserts, that, this visesha jnaanam can be obtained only through mahaa vaakyam.

In essence: "Acquisition of saamaanya jnaanam is achieved through anvaya vyathirekaa and acquisition of visesha jnaanam is achieved through mahaa vaakyam".

In this context, it is worthwhile to recollect a few discussions of the earlier sessions. It was said that the samaadhi abhyaasaa, talked about in the Yoga Saasthraa, is also useful for gaining saamaanya jnaanam, similar to the anvaya vyathirekaa exercise. But, two important principles should be very clearly understood, even as this 'usefulness' of samaadhi abhyaasaa is recognized.

The first important principle: Samaadhi abhyaasaa is useful only for saamaanya jnaanam ; but, can never help in gaining visesha jnaanam. Visesha jnaanam can be gained only through mahaa vaakyam.

The second important principle: While it is conceded that samaadhi abhyaasaa is useful in gaining saamaanya jnaanam, Vedhaanthin-s never say that samaadhi abhyaasaa is absolutely necessary for gaining saamaanya jnaanam, since saamaanya jnaanam can be gained merely through anvaya vyathirekaa vichaaraa. From the Vedhaanthin's point of view, therefore, samaadhi abhyaasaa is not compulsory for a seeker.

Since samaadhi abhyaasaa is thus optional, Sureswaraacharya does not talk about samaadhi abhyaasaa, in this portion. It does not mean, that, he is totally against samaadhi abhyaasaa or Yoga Saasthraa.

Since samaadhi abhyaasaa is useful in the context of gaining saamaanya jnaanam, those seekers who want to, can practice samaadhi abhyaasaa, as an option. But, Vedhaanthic aacharyaas will never say that every seeker must necessarily go through samaadhi abhyaasaa, since saamaanya jnaanam can be gained through anvaya vyathirekaa vichaaraa, and also, since it is their firm view, that, while samaadhi abhyaasaa is useful for gaining saamaanya jnaanam, it is totally ineffective with regard to visesha jnaanam. On such reasoning, Vedhaanthic aacharyaas specify Anvaya vyathirekaa as compulsory for a seeker.

The aacharyaas hold that Anvaya vyathirekhaa is compulsory for saamaanya jnaanam since only after saamaanya jnaanam, mahaa vaakyam will be effective in gaining visesha jnaanam.

In the same manner as the other aacharyaas, Sureswaraacharya also says, in this introduction, that, anvaya vyathireka exercise is compulsory; it is the clinching determinant factor and is a pre-requisite for mahaa vaakyam to be effective. Anvaya vyathirkaa is pre-requisite as a provider of saamaanya jnaanam, so that mahaa vaakyam can effectively give visesha jnaanam.

Since, the first sentence in this sambhandha gadhyam is a tricky sentence, for easier understanding, it can be split into two portions, as (i) soyam anvaya vyathireka nyaaya: ethaavaaneva yadhavasaana: vaakyaaartha: (bhavathi) and (ii) thadhibignyasya aham brahma asmi ithi (vaakyaaartha:) aavirbhavathi |

- सोयं अन्वयव्यतिरेक न्यायः - This anvaya vyathirekaa exercise, discussed in the earlier chapter and being discussed now,

The use of the term 'soyam', split as 'sa: + ayam' is significant, indicating that this is not a new topic being talked about by the Aacharyaas. By 'Sa:' the Aacharyaas reminds the student "I have been 'drilling' this exercise earlier, in the second chapter"; and, by 'ayam', implies "I am 'drilling' the exercise in the third chapter also ; I am continuing to 'drill' it even now also". To indicate this, he says 'soyam', 'sa:', meaning 'dvitheeya adhyaaye uktha:' and 'ayam' meaning 'thrutheeya adhyaaye uchyamaana:'| But, why does the Aacharyaas resort to this 'drilling'? Ans: Because, the exercise is crucial for the mahaa vaakyam to function.

- एतावानेव - is so extremely important,

What is the extent of the importance?

- यद् अवसान : वाक्यार्थ) : भवति(- that, the exercise is a pre-requisite factor for mahaa vaakya sravanam.

First portion of the text sentence can be stopped here, supplying the verb `bhavathf`.

'yadh' refers to anvaya vyathirekaa exercise; `avasaana:' means 'a pre-requisite factor'; a sub-commentator writes: "avasaana: is (grammatically) karana vyuthpaathi ; avaseeyathe mahaa vaakya: yena, sa: avasaana:" | Without going into the grammatical details, a simple translation of `yadhavasaana: (bhavathi)' will be "it is a pre-requisite factor"; anvaya vyathirekh nyaaya: is a pre-requisite factor. For what? Ans: `vaakyaaartha:', meaning 'for understanding the vaakya arthaa message' viz., the `vishesha jnaanam' message, viz., "'I am jagadh adhishtaanam". This vishesha jnaanam "'I am jagadh adhishtaanam" is the vaakyaaartha: |

Many Vedhaanthic students say "I am able to grasp, that 'I' am saakshi but, I do not have the courage to say I am jagadh adhishtaanam". But, they should understand, that, it is the vishesha jnaanam, viz., "'I am the support of the universe" which is compulsory for mokshaa. The mere knowledge "'I am saakshf" will not give mokshaa; the conviction "'I am jagadh adhishtaanam Brahman" alone will give mokshaa. The Aachaaryaa will be stressing on these aspects, later in the text.

To continue with the text (the second portion of the sentence):

- तद् अभिज्ञस्य - For the thus prepared student who has received the saamaanya jnaanam "'I am saakshf", through anvaya vyathirekhaa

The Aachaaryaa uses the term `abhignya:', to refer to that seeker who has gone through anvaya vyathireka vichaaraa and has gained the saamaanya jnaanam `aham saakshi asmi' i.e., who has arrived at the firm convictions : (1) "'I' am not pramaathaa; 'I' am saakshi (2) 'I' am not chidhaabhaasaa; 'I' am the `chith' (3) chidhaabhaasaa comes when the mind is active; chidhaabhaasaa goes away when the mind is passive; mind comes and goes; chidhabhaasaa comes and goes; I always remain as the chith saakshf" etc. By the term `abhignya:', he means `saamaanya jnaanavaar'.

In this context, it may be noted, that, the state of 'sushupthi' helps 'me' to remain as, 'I', the saakshi; the state of samaadhi also is helpful in remaining as saakshi. Sushupthi is natural samaadhi and samaadhi is artificial sushupthi. The result in both, is, that, 'I' abide as saakshi. In understanding Vedhaanthaa, both states are, therefore, useful for this purpose.

To such a 'saamaanya jnaanavaan',

अहं ब्रह्म अस्मि 'इति) वाक्यार्थः - the knowledge conveyed by the mahaa vaakyam, that, " 'I' am the jagad adhishtaanam paaramaarthika sathyam Brahman"

आविर्भवति - arises easily.

In front of this knowledge (visesha jnaanam), the whole world including the pancha anaathmaa is only mithyaa nama roopaa, 'dancing' in 'me', the paaramaarthikam Brahman.

After thus talking about the importance of anvaya vyathirekaa exercise, the Aachaaryaa proceeds to say, in the second sentence of this introduction, that, this anvaya vyathirekaa consists of dhruk dhurusya vivekaa and avasthaathraya vivekaa :|

द्रष्टृदृश्य विभागेन - Through the distinction of one as 'seer' and the other as 'seen'

'dhrashtru dhurusya vibhaaghaa' is another name for 'dhruk-dhurusya-vivekaa'. 'vibhaaghaa' means 'vivekaa'. 'Dhruk-dhurusya-vivekaa' is one component of anvaya vyathirekaa.

There is a second component also. What is that second component? It follows:

- आगमापायि साक्षि विभागेन च - and through the distinction that one is subject to origin and disappearance and the other is the witness thereof,

'aagamaapaayi' literally means 'whatever comes and goes'. Another word for 'aagamaapaayi' is 'saakshyam', which means 'the witnessed object'. The word 'saakshi' means 'the Witness'. Therefore, 'aagamaapaayi saakshi vibhaaghaa' means 'saakshya saakshi vibhaaghaa'. This 'saakshya saakshi vibhaaghaa' alone is otherwise called 'avasthaathraya vivekaa'.

Why is 'saakshya saakshi vibhaaghaa' called 'avasthaathraya vivekaa'? The explanation is as follows: In jaagrath and svapna avasthaa-s, the saakshya thriputi, consisting of the pramaathaa, the pramaanam and the prameyam is there; in sushupthi avasthaa, the thriputi totally resolves. But, 'I' remain. This indicates that 'I' am none of the thriputi. From this perspective, as already mentioned, sushupthi is a very important experience, as far as Vedhaanthaa is concerned. Sushupthi is very helpful for 'me' to claim that 'I' am the remainder 'saakshi', even after removal of the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi, otherwise called saakshyam. This 'claim' / conviction is called 'avasthaa thraya vivekaa'.

Thus, 'dhruk-dhrusya-vivekaa' is one component of 'anvaya vyathi rekaa' and 'avasthaa thraya vivekaa' is another component.

Sureswaraachaaryaa has already discussed all these earlier; but, he wants to re-emphasize them here, because of their importance. So, he says:

- संक्षिप्य उच्यते - I will briefly present

Why does the Aachaaryaa say 'briefly'? Ans: Because, he has discussed the topic several times in the 2nd chapter and several times in the third chapter also. But, 'anvaya vyathirekha vichaaraa' being a compulsory exercise for a Vedhaanthic seeker, he summarizes the idea once again.

On what does the Aachaaryaa base his ideas? The Aachaaryaa points out:

- श्रुत्भ्युपगमतः - the 'anvaya vyathirekhaa' accepted by sruthi .

"Since it is accepted by Sruthi, I will summarize this 'anvaya vyathirekhaa' " says the Aachaaryaa.

Chapter III: Verse 54 –

- दृश्यत्वात् घटवत् देहो देहवत् च इन्द्रियाण्यपि ।
- मनश्चेन्द्रियवत् ज्ञेयं मनोवन्निश्चयादिमत् ॥ ५४ ॥

As it is an object of perception, the body is like the jar (in being other than the Self). The senses are like the body in this respect. The mind is like the senses. The intellect, the determinative inner sense, is like the mind.

This is a beautiful verse which summarizes 'dhruk dhrusya vivekaa', otherwise called 'nethi nethi vivekaa'.

The idea behind 'dhruk dhrusya vivekaa' can be presented in English, as follows: "Whatever I experience, I am not; whatever I experience is anaathmaa saakshyam; 'I', the Experiencer, am saakshi'.

Unfortunately, even after listening to this explanation, there is a tendency to ask the absurd question "How do I experience Saakshi?" The student should remember the important principle: "Whatever I experience is saakshyam, while 'I', the Experiencer, am saakshi; and, the 'experiencer' saakshi is never an object of experience".

This is the principle viz., "whatever I experience, I am not; whatever I experience is anaathmaa saakshyam", which the student should apply, as the means of the 'dhruk dhrusya viveka'. He should ask himself: "Do I experience 'this'?" and, if the answer is "Yes", he should decide "Therefore, I am not 'this'".

And, where does the student start the analysis?

Sureswaraacharya says "start with the pot", the simple reason being, that, during the Aachaaryaa's period, pots were very commonly used in almost every worldly transaction (to think of it, even in music, as an accompaniment to the main musician). Therefore, the Aachaaryaa starts with 'ghata.' being 'saakshyam' or 'dhrusyam' and, therefore, 'anaathmaa'.

•)घट : अनात्मा दृश्यत्वात् (- (A pot, being an 'object of experience / perception ', is anaathmaa / not Self).

This is the first step. What is the second step?

• देह : दृश्यत्वात् घटवत्) अनात्मा(- The body is anaathmaa, being an object of experience, similar to the pot.

Pot is made of clay; the body is also made up of very, very fine clay. From earth, the body comes; to earth, this body goes. மண்ணிலிருந்து வந்து மண்ணுக்கே போகும்.

What is the next 'object' considered?

• इन्द्रियाणि अपि देहवत् (अनात्मा दृश्यत्वात्) - The sense organs also are anaathmaa, since they are also objects of experience, like the body.

When the Aachaaryaa talked about the physical body, he gave the example of a pot. Now, when he talks about sense organs, he gives the example of the physical body.

But, how do we say that 'sense organs' are 'dhrusyam? Ans: Naturally because, one will always know whether one's sense organs are functioning or not. A mundane example of this, is when spectacles are prescribed for defective vision, the eye-specialist, after placing the lenses in position, asks the patient "Are you now able to see better?" The patient replies either in the negative or in the affirmative. Such experiences show that 'I' am able to see whether my sense organs are functioning or not. 'I' am the 'seer' of the seeing and non-seeing eyes and the functioning and non-functioning sense organs. Therefore, 'I' am different from them. And, therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "indriyaani api (anaathmaa dhrusyathvaath) dehavath".

What is the next one?

मनः च इन्द्रियवत् अनात्मा ज्ञेयं - It should be known that the mind is also anaathmaa, like the sense organs. '

Then, what about buddhi?

निश्चयादिमत् मनोवत् अनात्मा ज्ञेयं - It should be known that intellect also is anaathmaa, like the mind.

'Nischaayaadhimath' means 'buddhi.' or 'vijnaana maya kosa.' | 'Nischayam' means 'conviction' and 'aadh' mean 'etc.' Discrimination, conviction etc. are the functions of the buddhi; therefore, the term 'nischaayaadhimath' refers to buddhi.

The word 'jnyeyam' is borrowed here from the earlier example and the word 'anaathmaa' is supplied. The reason, viz., 'dhrusyathvaath' meaning 'being an object of experience', given in the context of the pot, should be added to all the others also, viz., the physical body, the sense organs, the mind and the intellect.

When the intellect or buddhi is talked about, the Aachaaryaa gives 'mind' as the example, as 'nischayaadhithamath manovath (jnyeyam)'. Of course, 'pot' also can be given as an example; Sureswaraachaaryaa chooses to take 'mind' as example, when he talks of intellect.

'Buddhi' is also a 'dhrusyam' - an object of experience. How can you say this? Ans: Again, a simple example will explain this. If a student is asked "Do you understand this text, Naishkarmya Siddhi", he would either reply "Yes, I understand" or "No, I do not understand". What is the process, before he gives the reply? He 'looks' into his intellect or 'buddhi' and then gives his reply, since, both the 'understanding' and 'non-understanding' are faculties of the 'buddhi'. Thus, the student is able to 'objectify' both the understanding 'buddhi' and the non-understanding 'buddhi' and report to the teacher. In fact, when the student replies "I understand", the real meaning of his reply is "I am aware of my understanding buddhi and similarly, when the student replies "I do not understand", the real meaning of his reply is "I am aware of my non-understanding buddhi". This reasoning shows that 'buddhi' is an object of awareness or experience.

In this verse, four kosaa-s have been talked about. The 'dhruk dhrusya vicharaa' and 'dhruk dhrusya vivekaa' will take the seeker up to four kosaa-s.

The fifth kosaa is aanandha maya kosaa. Negation of the fifth kosaa cannot be done in the waking stage. For the objectification of fifth kosaa, the seeker should go to either samaadhi or to sushupthi. In samaadhi, he can objectify 'silence'. That silence is aanandha maya kosaa. In sushupthi, he can objectify 'ignorance', which is aanandha maya kosaa. In sushupthi, ignorance is aanandha maya kosaa and in samaadhi, the blankness is aanandha maya kosaa. The seeker should understand both of them as anaathmaa, because, they are also 'objects of experience'.

After understanding this, viz., that the 'ignorance in sushupthi' is 'aanandha maya kosaa object' and the 'silence in samaadhi' or 'blankness in samaadhi' is 'aanandha maya kosaa object', the seeker should use anvaya vyathirekaa method. How does one use anvaya vyathirekhaa, in this context? 'Silence' comes in samaadhi and the 'silence' goes away when the practitioner wakes up from samaadhi. In a like manner, 'ignorance' comes in sushupthi and goes away when the sleeper wakes up. If the seeker practices samaadhi, that samaadhi anubhavaa must be utilized in the jaagrath avasthaa, for anvaya vyathirekaa reasoning. Alternately, he can use sushupthi anubhavaa for anvaya vyathirekaa. Thus, both samaadhi and sushupthi are only 'datum' for doing anvaya vyathireka. They are not ends in themselves. This will be said now. In avasthaathraya vivekaa, we will deal with the aanandha maya kosaa.

To re-cap: Through dhruk-dhrusya-vivekaa, the seeker eliminates four kosaa-s. The 'dhruk-dhrusya-vivekaa' is one component of anvaya vyathirekaa. Hereafter, we go to avasthaathraya vivekaa, the second component, to negate the aanandha maya kosaa or kaarana sareeram. To negate kaarana sareeram also, the seeker has to take effort (in the form of vicharaa), because, even in samaadhi and sushupthi, a person does not negate kaarana sareeram, but, remains in kaarana sareeram.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 55 :

तथा सकलकार्यकारण आगमापायिविभाग साक्षित्वेन अपि ।

The Self is the witness of distinctions which arise and pass away and which consist of the causes and effects.

To once again recap the total picture of our current analysis : At this juncture, our aim is saamaanya jnaanam. With that purpose in mind, we are doing anvaya vyathireka vichaaraa. As part of anvaya vyathireka vichaaraa, dhruk-dhrusya-vichaaraa was done and has been completed with verse 54. Having completed the first component of anvaya vyathirekaa, we are proceeding towards the second component, avasthaathraya vivekaa, otherwise called saakshya-saakshi-vivekaa, otherwise called aagamaapayi-saakshi-vivekaa.

- साक्षित्वेन - As the avasthaathraya saakshi,

As the avasthaathraya saakshi, we have to know ourselves. As what?

- आगमापयिविभाग - different from saakshya prapanchaa, which is subject to arrival and departure,

'Vibhaagha', in this context, means 'different' or 'distinct'. 'Aagamaapayivibhaagha' is a compound word meaning 'different from that, which is subject to arrival and departure'. In this context, the term 'aagamaapay' refers to the saakshya prapanchaa, which is subject to arrival and departure.

Through avasthaathrayam, I get to know that 'I' am the saakshi, who is different from the saakshya prapancham, which is subject to arrival and departure.

What does the prapanchaa consist of? The Aachaaryaa elaborates:

Sakala kaarya kaarana - and which saakshya prapanchaa consists of the vyashti sareerathrayam and the samashti prapancha thrayam,

'Kaaryam' means 'kaarya sareeram', which denotes 'sthoola sareeram' and 'sookshma sareeram'. 'Kaaranam' means 'kaarana sareeram'. 'Kaarya kaarana', therefore, means 'sareerathrayam'. And, by the use of the term 'sakala', the Aachaaryaa does not stop with the sareera thrayam, but includes the 'prapancha thrayam' and the thriputi - 'knower-known-knowing process' also. The kaarya-kaarana prapanchaa, the sareerathrayam, the thriputi are all subject to arrival and departure. As the Maandookya Upanishad points out, 'viswaad' and 'viraat', 'thyjasaa' and 'hiranyagarbhaad', 'praagnyaa and (even) Isvaraad' are all aagamaapaayi. All of them are saakshyam and 'I' am the saakshi. How does the student know this? Ans: By studying avasthaathrayam.

The seeker has to arrive at these conclusions by avasthaathraya vichaaraa. All of them 'arrive' in jaagrath and svapnaa; all of them 'resolve' in sushupthi. Therefore, 'I' am not one of the thriputi; 'I' am thriputi vilakshana:/

The sentence of the gadhyam is incomplete. It can to be completed by adding:

-)आत्मा ज्ञातव्यः) - (one has to know oneself as the avasthaathraya saakshi.)

That is explained in the slokaa.

Chapter III: Verse 54 –

- प्रागसध्याति पश्चात्सत्सच्च यायादसत्तथा ।
- अनात्माभिजनं तत्स्याद्विपरीतः स्वयं दृशिः ॥

What is the non-existent before, acquires being afterwards and what is existent passes into non-being afterwards. This is the geneology of the non-self. But, the witnessing Consciousness is quite unlike this, in its intrinsic nature.

Here, avasthaathraya vivekaa is condensed beautifully, without naming that it is avasthaathraya vivekaa. When we study the three states of experience, we discover a fantastic fact, namely, that everything in the creation is subject to arrival and departure, while 'I' alone continue to be there as the constant factor, as the Witness of the arriving and departing factors. In jaagrath avasthaa, sareerathrayam comes and along with that, the world also arrives; in sushupthi, only karana sareeram remains; the world and the sthoola-sookshma- sareeraani resolve.

Even Isvara as Kaaranam, is acceptable only as long as the jagadh kaaryam is there. To elaborate on this statement: Isvara is considered to be Jagadh kaaranam. When is there 'relevance', for any kaaranam? Only as long as kaaryam is there. When the whole kaaryam is negated, the kaaranam also will get automatically negated. In jaagrath avasthaa, sareerathrayam and the universe 'arrive'. So, Isvara also arrives in jaagrath avasthaa, as the Creator of the universe; in sushupthi avasthaa, universe naasthi; therefore, Creator api naasthi. That is why, in sushupthi, you are neither a bakthaa nor an abakthaa. Thathra maatha amaatha bhavathi; pithaa apithaa bhavathi. When all of them are dismissed, where is the question of bakthaa-Bhagavaan duality in sushupthi or samaadhi? In contrast, 'I' am kaarya-kaarana-vilakshana: / Therefore, 'my' glory is, even after the dismissal of bakthaa-bhagavaan duality, 'I' continue to exist, as a witness of the advaita avasthaa. Sushupthi is advaita avasthaa; samaadhi is also advaita avasthaa. Samaadhi is nirvikalpaka avasthaa ; sushupthi is also nirvikalpaka avasthaa. In advaita / nirvikalpaka avasthaa-s, bakthaa is gone; Bhagavaan is gone. But, 'I', as the saakshi, remain.

-)यद् (प्राक् असत् - Duality (for example, bakthaa-Bhagavaan distinction) or the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya- thriputi, which was absent / non-existent in the previous state of sushupthi or samaadhi,

The word 'Yadh' is supplied, to denote 'duality' in any form, or 'thriputi'. In which state is thriputi absent? Ans: In sushupthi or samaadhi avasthaa. The word 'praak', therefore, refers to sushupthi or samaadhi avasthaa

- पश्चात् सत् याति - becomes existent when one wakes up to jaagrath avasthaa or moves to svapna avasthaa from sushupthi.

'Paschaath' means 'jaagrath avasthaayaam' or 'svapna avasthaayaam'. In both jaagrath and svapna states, thriputi arises. Not only thriputi ; even 'time' and 'space' arise only in jaagrath and svapna.

In sushupthi kaala: api naasthi . Time is also non-existent during deep sleep. This is shown by the fact, that people have to set an alarm, if they want to wake up from sleep, at a particular time. Even if somebody wants to complain of having overslept, the complaint cannot be made in sushupthi avasthaa, but only when the individual wakes up i.e. in jaagrath avasthaa. But, the glory is, even during the absence of 'Time', 'I' am there, as Witness, because, after waking up, he says "I overslept", i.e. 'I' am 'kaala abhaava: saakshi' - 'witness of absence of Time also'.

The first statement in the verse is, thus: " Yadh praak asath, thadh paschaath sath yaath' meaning "That which was non-existent in sushupthi or samaadhi avasthaa, attains existence later, in jaagrath and svapna avasthaa-s". In this first sentence, 'Praak' means 'sushupthi / samaadhi avasthaayaam' and 'paschaath' means 'jaagrath svapna avasthaayaam' | 'sath yaath' means 'arrives' or 'becomes existent'. The first sentence is completed thus.

The second sentence:

- तथा - In the same way,
-)इदानीं (सत् - whichever is existent as 'duality' or 'thriputi' now (in jaagrath)
-)पश्चात् (असत् यायात् - will again become non-existent later (during deep sleep).

The words 'idhaaneem' and 'paschaath' are supplied. Therefore, what is the sentence? "Yadh idhaaneem sath bhavathi, thadh paschaath asath yaayaath' | 'Yaayaath' means 'will become'. In the previous sleep, the `thriputi` was absent. In the future sleep also , it will be again absent.

`Thriputi` will come; `thriputi` will go. This means `my` own pramaathaa status is subject to arrival and departure. In jaagrath and svapnaa, I put on pramaathaa status and in sushupthi, I drop pramaathaa status. This, in turn, means that `I` am not a pramaathaa intrinsically. All designations as husband, wife etc. and all problems, financial constraints etc. are all only for the pramaathaa and not for the saakshi. One suffers all the problems, only when one puts on the `vesham` of `pramaathaa`; and when one removes that `vesham`, one is `apramaathaa` / saakshi. As saakshi, one does not suffer any problems. That is the reason, why in sushupthi, one is anaandhasvaroopa:|

In sushupthi any individual is happy. What is the proof? Swami Vidhyaaranaya answers this. In his Panchadasee (CH. XVI) he says: "In sushupthi, you are aanadhasvaroopa:| Your experience itself is proof for this. If you are not convinced by your experience, but, look for `logic` to prove this statement, I will give you the `logic`. Everybody loves to go to sleep. If, in sushupthi, I am dhu:khasvaroopa:, will I love to go to sleep?"

On the other hand, the pramaathaa status is a burden; the pramaathaa status results in responsibilities of getting up, going to work, facing mundane problems etc. Putting on pramaathaa status alone is baaram. Fortunately, that happens to be an incidental status. That is very clear through avasthaathraya vivekaa.

Therefore, what is the conclusion?

- तद् - That `thriputi` or `kaarya-kaarana prapanchaa`
- अनात्मा अभिजनं स्यात् - comes under anaathmaa category.

`Thadh` refers to `kaarya-kaarana jagath` or `thriputi jagath` and is the `subject` of the sentence. `Abhijanam` means class / category / jaathi: / species etc. `Anaathma abhijanam` which means `anaathmaa category`, is `subjective complement`. `Syaath` is the verb of the sentence.

Thus, the meaning of third sentence in the verse is: "This pramaathru pramaana-prameya-thriputi comes under anaathmaa category".

And, what about `I`, the Aathmaa? The fourth quarter, the most important sentence in the verse, answers this:

- दृशि : स्वयं विपरीत) : स्यात्(- 'I', the saakshi, am totally different.

'Dhrusi:' means 'saakshi' or 'aathma'. 'Vipareetha: syaath' means 'is diagonally opposite'. The fourth sentence, therefore, means "'I', the saakshi, am the diagonally opposite of the saakshya prapancha: (talked about in the earlier sentence).

Therefore, 'I' will have features diagonally opposite to whatever features, the saakshya prapanchaa has. If saakshya prapanchaa, regularly and unfailingly creates sorrow, as is only known too well, what is 'my' nature? Ans: "'I' am aanandhasvaroopa." |

Sureswaraachaarya is pointing out, that, like any other sentence, mahaa vaakyam is also a sentence, which has got a subject, as well as a predicate.

In any sentence, the subject has to be already known to the listener and with regard to the already-known subject, a new information is given by the sentence, through the predicate. An example was given in an earlier session. When the statement "Everest is 29, 000 ft. high" is made, the speaker is giving the unknown information of the height, with regard to Everest, which is already known to the listener, as a peak in the Himalayaas. If the listener does not even know what Everest is, obviously, this information on the height of Everest, will not be of any use at all. Alternately, if the listener knows both what Everest is and also its height, the sentence will become redundant and therefore, useless.

This shows that every purposeful sentence consists of a known factor, as well as an unknown factor. The known factor is called subject / uddhisyaamaanam and the unknown factor is called the predicate / vidheeyamaanam. Thus, in any sentence, amsa dhvayam – uddhisyaamaana amsa: and vidheeyamaanam amsa: - is involved. In the case of the mahaa vaakyam also, the Upanishad wants to give a new information regarding an already known factor, through the vaakyam. The known factor is 'thvam', the 'saakshi', which is predicated by the mahaa vaakyam, as 'that', the Brahman. The 'thvam' component is 'saakshi', the 'jeevaathma thathvam'. The 'that' component is Brahman, the 'Paramaathma thathvam'.

Thus, when the Upanishad is equating 'saakshi' to 'Brahman', the Upanishad assumes that the 'saakshi' component is already known to the student / that, the 'saakshi' component is 'uddhisyaamaanam'. As pointed out in the example of Everest and its height, if the saakshi itself is a factor unknown to the student, the predicative of Brahmathvam will be of no relevance at all. Therefore, before using the Upanishad mahaa vaakyam, the thvam amsaa / the saakshi amsaa should have been already analyzed and known by the student.

The analysis / enquiry is necessary because of the reason, that, even this fact, viz., "'I' am the saakshi" is not an already or naturally known fact. The Vedhaanthic student has to work for this knowledge also, to understand "'I' am not a pramaathaa / a knowing principle, but 'I' am saakshi, the Witness principle". And, this part of enquiry must have been completed already, through anvaya vyathirekhaa; i.e., the Vedhaanthic student must complete saakshi vichaaraa initially, before coming to mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. This statement should be carefully understood. It does not say that, the saakshi vichaaraa should be completed before coming to Vedhaanthee. It says "after coming to Vedhaanthee and before entering mahaa vaakya vichaaraa".

The student should have completed the anvaya vyathirekhaa enquiry and through that, should have come to know that his pramaathaa status is only incidental. "I am the ego, 'knower principle' " is only an incidental cloak, like a doctor's or a cook's apron. Similar to a surgeon putting on a cloak before he starts the surgery, one puts on the 'pramaathaad' cloak when one wakes up from sleep.

'I' 'put on' the 'pramaathaad' status in the jaagrath avasthaa. For what purpose? Ans: It is because 'I' need the pramaathaa ahamkaaraa overcoat for transactional purposes. But, 'pramaathaad' is only an overcoat; it is not 'my' intrinsic nature. Sureswaraachaarya himself, later in the text, uses the expression 'kanchukam' to describe pramaathaa. 'Kanchukam' means 'overcoat' or 'cloak'

This 'saakshi' realization is achieved through 'anvaya vyathirekha vicharaad', translated as 'variable - non-variable enquiry'. This enquiry consists of two parts, 'dhruk-dhrusya vivekaad' and 'avasthaathraya vivekaad'. The Aachaaryaa first talked about the 'dhruk-dhrusya vicharaad', the first part of anvaya vyathirekhaa, through which the student will know that, the entire prameya prapanchaa is only anaathmaa and aagamaapaayee. 'Aagamaapaayee' means 'the arriving – departing one'. Thereafter, the Aachaaryaa talked about the 'avasthaathraya vivekaad', the second part of 'anvaya vyathirekaad'. Through the 'avsthaathraya vicharaad', the student gets to know that even the thriputi is only incidental. All the three constituents of thriputi, the pramaathaa, the pramaanam and the prameyam are present, when one is in jaagrath avasthaa. These three are present in svapnaa avasthaa also. But, when I go to sushupthi, thriputi goes away. Only 'I' remain as the thriputi-saakshi.

The 'thriputi' also comes under what is termed as 'saakshyam' and, in contrast, 'I' am 'saakshi'. The 'thriputi saakshyam' is 'aagamaapaayee'. Again, in contrast, 'I', the 'thriputi saakshi', am 'anaagamaapaayee', 'the non-arriving and non-departing'.

It is this saakshi 'I' alone (not the pramaathaa 'I') which is equated to the 'nirgunam advaitam jagath adhishtaanam Brahmar', through the mahaa vaakyam. While listening to mahaa vaakyam, the student should recollect his 'saakshi svaroopam' and when the guru says 'thath thvam asi', the student should not equate 'pramaathaad' to Brahman, because pramaathaa is only an incidental cloak; the guru is equating 'you', the saakshi, which obtains in sushupthi avasthaa, as the 'non-arriving non-departing Witness Consciousness' to the 'nirgunam advaitam jagath adhishtaanam Brahmar'.

Of course, the student can listen to this mahaa vaakyam equation only in the jaagrath avasthaa (not in sushupthi) and, therefore, as a pramaathaa. But, at the time of listening, as mentioned above, he should recollect his saakshi svaroopam which obtains in sushupthi avasthaa, through the pramaathaa cloak, which he has put on for the transactions in the jaagrath avasthaa. To recollect 'my' 'saakshI' nature, 'I' use the pramaathaa cloak or kanchukam. 'I' recollect my saakshi svaroopam and 'I' have to claim "that saakshi is Brahman".

Thus, pramaathruthvam is an incidental instrument or status, which I am putting on, for Vedhaantha sravanam also. As saakshi, I cannot listen to Vedhaantha; only through the medium of pramaathaa status, I can listen. This is somewhat similar to elderly people putting on their denture before their meals. An individual who has lost all his teeth, can exist without denture also; but, when he starts eating, he needs to put on the denture. Likewise, 'I' exist as saakshi, without the pramaathaa denture ; but, for mahaa vaakyam sravanam I should put on the pramaathaa denture and listen to the vaakyam. But, at the same time, I should not make the mistake of taking the pramaathaa denture as Brahman. The pramaathaa 'denture' is only a temporary status.

All these discussions show that a Vedhaanthic student should do 'saakshi pramathru vicharaad' before coming to mahaa vaakyam. And, that vicharaa is what Sureswaraachaarya did, in the 55th slokaa, which was completed in the previous session. He pointed out that thriputi will come and go, by saying "(yadh) praak asath, (thadh) paschaath sath yaathi; thathaa (yadh idhaaneem) sath, thadh paschaath asath yaayaath" – "thriputi which was non-existent during sushupthi, acquires existence during jaagrath and again becomes non-existent when going back to sushupthi". As mentioned in the earlier session, the word 'yadh' is supplied, for completing the two sentences, the word indicating 'thriputi'. The Aachaaryaa followed this up by stating "dhrusi: svayam vipareetha:" – "chaithanya saakshi is the exact opposite of thriputi – i.e. it is not subject to arrival and departure / it is anaagamaapaayee"

And, again as pointed out earlier, even to say, "'I', the saakshi, am vipareetha:", I should put on the pramaathaa cloak. I do not require the pramaathaa status to 'be' a saakshi; but, to 'claim' my saakshi nature, I require pramaathaa status. To sleep, I do not require pramaathaa status; but, to claim "I slept well", I require the pramaathaa status.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 56 :

तत्र घटादीनां दृश्यानां अनात्मत्वं द्रष्टात्मपूर्वकं प्रत्यक्षेण एव प्रमाणेन उपलभ्य अनात्मनश्च असाधारणान् धर्मान् अवधार्य तैः दृश्यत्वागमापायादिभिः धर्मैः शरीरेन्द्रियमनोनिश्चयादिवृत्तीः अनात्मतया व्युदस्य अहंवृत्तिमतोऽपि दृश्यत्वविशेषात् द्रष्टृपूर्वकत्वं अवसीयते । तदेतदाह ।

By perception itself, it is ascertained that external objects like a jar are other than the Self, being objects of perception and that they presuppose the seeing Self. By these examples, the distinguishing characteristics of the non-Self are discerned. These characteristics like objectivity and subjection to origin and cessation are found in the body, the senses, the mind and the intellect. From this fact, it is determined that they are other than the Self. Even the ego shares the attribute of being objective and hence it is also classed as the non-Self and that it also presupposes the transcendent Witness is made out. This is pointed out now:

Here, Sureswarachaaryaa answers a possible doubt of the student, viz. "Why do we require to employ anvaya vyathirekaa in two stages ? You say that, I am expected to do the dhruk-dhrusya- vivekaa, in the first stage ; and, in the second stage, I am to do avasthaathraya vivekaa. Why do I require the anvaya vyathirekaa practice in two stages?"

The Aachaaryaa gives the reason as: "In the first anvaya vyathirekaa i.e. dhruk-dhrusya- vivekaa, the aspirant is in jaagrath avasthaa; and, in the jaagrath avasthaa, he can dismiss all the prameya prapanchaa as an object 'arriving and departing'; but, in jaagrath avasthaa, he will continue to have the pramaathaa status. His pramaathaa status will go away only in sushupthi avasthaa. In other words, in jaagrath avasthaa, when he is doing anvaya vyathirekaa, in the form of dhruk-dhrusya-vivekaa, he can dismiss only the prameya prapanchaa. He will not be able to dismiss his pramaathaa status.

"This means that, through the first stage of anvaya vyathirekaa, the maximum that the student can arrive at, is the conclusion "I am a pramaathaa and the prameya prapanchaa is aagamaapaayee". Remaining in jaagrath avasthaa, he can never know the fact, that, the pramaathaa is also subject to arrival and departure, because, throughout jaagrath avasthaa, the pramaathaa cloak is put on.

"To repeat: Through first stage of anvaya vyathirekaa, he will dismiss the entire external world, including family, as anaathmaa; he can achieve this part. But, it is only partial anaathmaa that is dismissed in dhruk-dhrusya- vivekaa. Total anaathmaa is not dismissed".

"To realize that the pramaathaa status is also aagamaapaayee, the student has to do avasthaa thraya vichaaraa, through which only, he will know that his pramaathaa status also will go away in sushupthi, and, further, that, what will never go away, is his saakshi svaroopam.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- तत्र - In the anvaya vyathirekaa procedure, through the first stage of anvaya vyathirekhaa called dhruk dhrusya vivekaa,

- उपलभ्य - having clearly discerned,
'upalabhya' means 'having clearly discerned / understood / jnaathvaa'
- प्रत्यक्षेण प्रमाणेन एव - by mere perception,
- दृश्यानां घटादीनां अनात्मत्वं - the objective / anaathmaa status of externally perceived objects like a pot,

'Pot' is only an example. The entire external world is 'dhrusyam'. And, who am I? Ans: I am the 'dhruk'. It should be carefully noted, that, though the answer given is 'dhruk', in the jaagrath avasthaa, the word 'dhruk' refers to 'pramaathaa' only. At this time, 'pramaathaa' is not negated. I only know that I am not a 'pot' or a similar object. But, I am not able to say I am not the mind. The external world is negated and with some mental effort, the negation of the body is also achieved, through the first stage of anvaya vyathirekhaa. But, negation of mind does not take place.

- द्रष्टृत्मपूर्वकं - and also the pre-existence of the pramaathaa (by consequent inference),

The 'consequent inference' is explained as follows: By mere perception, I know that the pot is an object – a prameyam. Whereas, mind, the pramaathaa, is not available for perception. At the same time, when I know anything as object or 'prameyam', I also know that every 'prameyam' presupposes a 'pramaathaa'; i.e., every time I note a 'prameyam', I understand the existence of the pramaathaa, though the pramaathaa itself is not objectified. Even though pramaathaa is not 'seen' as an object, it is 'discerned' as the Subject. An example will make this clear. When the eyes are perceiving people or objects around, the 'perceiver' knows that he has a pair of eyes, though he cannot and does not see his own eyes. But, he recognizes that the very perception of the people or objects, presupposes the presence of the eyes, even though the eyes themselves are not perceived by him. Similarly, recognition of 'prameyam' presupposes 'pramaathaa', even though pramaathaa itself is not one of the prameyam-s. I 'discern' / 'infer' the existence of the 'pramaathaa'. I know I have a 'mind', though, I do not 'see' the mind as one of the objects.

This fact is conveyed by the Aachaaryaa, by the use of 'poorvakam', in the term 'dhrashtraathmakapoorvakam'. Here, 'dhrastraathmaa' refers to 'pramaathaa'. I am a pramaathaa, because of which / whom, the whole world is objectified. 'Poorvakam' means 'pre-requisite'. 'Pramaathaa' is a pre-requisite for the experience of prameyam. 'Eyes' were given as example earlier. One more example can be given - the camera, which is a pre-requisite for every photograph. When one sees a photograph, even though one does not see the camera in the photograph, camera is 'known' through inference or pre-supposition.

Likewise, pramaathaa is not 'objectified' but it is 'discerned' / 'inferred', in the perception of every prameyam.

This is stage no. 1. And, thereafter what do we do? After studying prameya pot, what is the next stage that the student has to go through?

The Aachaaryaa says: "Anaathmana: cha asaadhaaranaan dharmaan avadhaarya"- "You have to notice the unique features of the prameyam, which is anaathmaa." Later, we have to extend it to saakshya prapanchaa. But, at this stage, we are to notice the unique features of the prameya prapanchaa. The beauty / significance of each point / stage, we will know, only when we go to the saakshi. Here, the picture is incomplete. The Aachaaryaa is proceeding step by step. The total picture is not clear now. That will become clear at the end.

So, what is the second stage? Ans: The student should notice the features of the 'anaathmaa' objects (like the pot), perceived by him.

What are the features of a pot? Ans: The features are five in number. They are (1) 'dhrusyathvam' – 'it is an object of knowledge' (2) 'baudhikathvam' – 'it is a material product' (3) 'sagunathvam' – 'it is endowed with attributes' (4) 'savikaarathvam' – 'it is subject to modification' and (5) 'aagamaapaayithvam' – 'it is subject to arrival and departure'.

The student should first notice / recognize all these five unique features in the pot, so that he can apply them later, to his mind also. They have to be applied to the mind ultimately, but, the student should first learn to apply them to the pot. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- अवधार्य - and having ascertained
- अनात्मन :असाधारणान् धर्मान् च - the unique features also of the perceived anaathmaa objects,

The term 'asaadhaaranaan dharmaan' refers to the five features detailed above. What is the next step of the student, after ascertaining the five anaathmaa features?

- तै : दृश्यत्व आगमापायादिभि : धर्मैः - with the help of those same five features consisting of dhrusyathvam, aagamaapaayithvam etc.,

Sureswaraachaaryaa mentions only 'dhrusyathvam' and 'aagamaapaayithvam', out of the five features. The other three features are indicated by the use of the word 'aadhi' meaning 'etc.'

What should the student do, using the features? Ans : He should extend them to the body, the sense organs, the mind and the intellect.

- अनात्मतया व्युदस्य - negating as anaathmaa
- शरीर इन्द्रिय मनोनिश्चयादिवृत्तीः - the body, the sense organs, the mind and the intellect

'Sareeram' refers to the physical body or the 'anaamaya kosaa'. "Just as I am not a pot, I am not the physical body also" should be the student's conclusion, based on these five features of the body anaathmaa.

Next, this is applied to the 'sense organs' also. The sense organs are available / functioning, only in the jaagrath avasthaa. When one goes to 'sushupthi', similar to one removing dentures or spectacles or wig, the sense organs are also set aside. What is the proof? The awareness of the world is not there, in sushupthi. Therefore, the indriyaa-s are also dhrusyam, baudhikam, sagunam, savikaaram and aagamaapaayee. 'Sense organs' are part of the praana maya kosaa.

Then, this has to be extended to the mind or the manomaya kosaa.

In fact, the student can practice elaborate 'Vedhaanthic meditation' on these lines. He should start with the pot, bringing in into 'meditation' and notice the five features in it. Then, he should bring the physical body into 'meditation' and see the same five features in the physical body ; follow it up with 'meditation' of the sense organs and the same five features in them and then bring the mind itself into the 'meditation' and notice the five features in the mind also. As even as he sees / notices the five features, he remains as the observer of the 'anaathmaa' features, claiming himself as 'different' from them - body, sense organs and mind – all.

Finally, the student should extend it to the vijnaana maya kosaa also, denoted by the word 'nischaya'.

The term 'vrutthee:' refers to 'these four viz., body, sense organs, mind and intellect', as a group. 'Anaathmathayaa vyudhasya' means 'negating / dismissing (them all) as anaathmaa'.

Once all these four kosaas have been dismissed as anaathmaa, the student has to apply an important logic. What is that? The logic / reasoning is on the following lines: "Only when I operate through the mind, I get the status of a pramaathaa. And, when the anaathmaa is set aside, as in sleep or in samaadhi, when I do not function through the mind, then my pramaathaa status is also gone. This shows that I am not pramaathaa intrinsically or essentially; that, the pramaathaa status is only a variable status, similar to a denture (given as example earlier). After removing the pramaathaa 'denture', when I remain in sushupthi, do 'I' exist or not? Ans: There can be no doubt at all regarding 'my' existence in sushupthi, proved by the simple logic, that if I cease to exist during sushupthi, I will never desire to go to sleep, because, naturally, I do not want to die. But, I do desire sleep. Therefore, I can be sure, that, I do exist in sushupthi also; and, what must be 'my' status in sushupthi? The saakshi must be my status".

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- अहंवृत्तिमतः अपि - the pramaathaa status also

'ahamvrutthimaan' means 'pramaathaa'. It is a title for the 'pramaathaa'. Why is 'pramaathaa' called 'ahamvrutthimaan'? Ans: Pramaathaa is the one, who entertains the thoughts such as 'I am an individual', 'I am a seer / hearer / smeller taster / male/ female / Brahmana / Kshathriyaa / Vaisyaa / Brahmachari / grihasthaal / Vaanaprasthaa / sanyaas / etc. All such thoughts belong to pramaathaa, the ahamkaaraa. Any individuality that is claimed belongs to pramaathaa.

Even the claim "I am a bhakthaa" belongs to ahamkaaraa only. In sushupthi, when you are not a pramaathaa, you are not even a bhakthaa. Even the claim "I am a Vishnu-bhakthaa" and the vehement refutation "I am not a Siva-bhakthaa" (i.e., even Vishnu-siva bedha) can be made only when there is the ego pramaathaa. Therefore, in sushupthi, even Bhagavaan, as an object of worship, is gone. It may sound blasphemous, but, how can even that Bhagavaan be the ultimate reality? What is 'capable of getting dismissed' cannot be the ultimate reality.

That is why Kenopanishad said "na idham yadhitham upaasathe" (I.5) – "This deity which people meditate upon, is not Brahman". What a devotee worships as Vishnu or Siva can also exist, only when the devotee puts on the pramaathaa cloak. When the pramaathaa cloak is gone, even that deity is gone. Even being a Vishnubhakthaa or Sivabhakthaa is only an incidental guna of the saguna ahamkaaraa. That status also is resolved in the sushupthi avasthaa.

- दृश्यत्व विशेषात् - having the attribute of being objective,

'Dhrusyathvam' means 'nature of being temporarily experienced'.

The pramaathaa / ahamkaaraa status is also only temporarily experienced during jaagrath avasthaa. The status 'arrives' in jaagrath avasthaa, while, in sushupthi, the status is 'dissolved'. But, it should be carefully noted, that, when it is said that there is no ahamkaaraa status in sushupthi, it does not mean that 'ahamkaaraa' is totally destroyed in sushupthi. If it is totally destroyed, the sleeper will never wake up again. The term 'dissolved' only indicates that 'ahamkaaraa' is not in an active form; that, it continues in potential form or in a dormant condition. But, that 'dissolved' condition of ahamkaaraa is also illumined by the saakshi only. Ironically, even to say that the ahamkaaraa was dissolved during sushupthi, the sleeper has to come to the 'waking' state. In other words, to say that the ahamkaaraa was in a dissolved condition during sushupthi, the ahamkaaraa has to be activated. Active ahamkaaraa alone can talk about the passive condition of ahamkaaraa, which was revealed by saakshi. And, both the facts, viz., "ahamkaaraa was in passive condition during sushupthi" and "ahamkaaraa is now in active condition, during jaagrath" are revealed only by the 'revealer' saakshi. If the 'arrival' and 'departure' of ahamkaaraa are to be revealed, you require an ever-present 'revealer', which is the saakshi. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says :

- द्रष्टृपूर्वकत्वं अवसीयते - the presence of a 'revealer' Saakshi, which reveals the active ahamkaaraa in jaagrath and svapnaa and the passive ahamkaaraa in sushupthi should be arrived at.

The verb 'avaseeyathe' means 'arrived at / ascertained'; and, conveys the message that the inevitable presence of a revealer saakshi which illumines the active ahamkaaraa in jaagrath and svapnaa and which reveals the passive ahamkaaraa in sushupthi has to be accepted.

When Vedhanthaa says 'thath thvam asi', it does not say pramaathaa is Brahman; it does not say the body is Brahman; it does not say that the mind is Brahman; it does not even say chidhabhaasaa is Brahman. Even chidhabhaasaa is temporary, when the mind is there; and, when the mind is resolved, chidhabhaasaa is also resolved. By the word 'thvam', Vedhanthaa talks about the Chith, because of which, the chidhaabhaasaa is temporarily formed in the temporary matter.

And, the very presence of chidhabhaasaa presupposes a Chith, because 'reflected Consciousness' requires Original Consciousness. An example can be given: "If I see my reflected face in the mirror, what does it presuppose?" Ans: The very perception of the reflected face is the proof for the original face.

Likewise, the very presence of chidhaabhaasaa in the mind presupposes the Chith and it is that Chith which is equated to Brahman later.

The essence of this compound sambhandha gadhyam sentence can be consolidated, in simpler language, as follows:

"In the anvaya vyatirekaa procedure, in the first stage of anvaya vyatirekhaa called dhruk dhrusya vichaaraa (1) the aspirant first physically perceives external objects like a pot and discerns their objective / anaathmaa status; (2) by consequent inference, he should discern the pre-existence of the pramaathaa; (3) then, the aspirant should observe and note the unique five features of the perceived anaathmaa objects, which are dhrusyathvam, baudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam; and (4) finally, noting the presence of these same five features, in the physical body, in the sense organs, in the mind and also in the intellect, he should negate them all also, as anaathmaa.

"Moving on to the second stage of anvaya vyatirekhaa, namely, avasthaathraya vichaaraa, he should realize that, the pramaathaa status also is only 'objective' and aagamaapaayee. As a consequence of this realization, the eternal presence of a 'revealer' Saakshi, which reveals the active ahamkaaraa in jaagrath and svapnaa and the passive ahamkaaraa in sushupthi, should be ascertained by him".

- तद् एतद् आह - That is being said in the following verse.

Chapter III: Verse 56 –

घटादयो यथा लिङ्गं स्युः परंपरयाहमः।

दृश्यत्वादहप्येवं लिङ्गं स्याद्द्रष्टात्मनः ॥ ५६ ॥

Just as the objects like a jar become ultimately inferential clues to the ego through the several links leading up to the latter, even the ego, being an object of experience, becomes an inferential clue to the witnessing Self.

What Sureswaraachaaryaa says here (this has been talked about earlier), in simple form, is:

"Mind is serving both as an object and an instrument. In the jaagrath avasthaa, mind is an instrument and the world is an object. At that time, since I am obsessed with the world as an object and the mind is serving as instrument, I do not take the mind as an object at all. An instrument is always associated with the user i.e. it always joins the Subject. And, since mind is serving as instrument in the jaagrath avasthaa, I see the world as object, but include the mind in 'me', as the Subject. And, once mind is included in 'me' as the Subject, I am called a pramaathaa and the world is called prameyam. I am the pramaathaa and, in this stage, mind has been included in the Subject. In the first stage, the Vedhaanthic guru asks the student to see the world as the object, and even though in that perception, mind has quietly joined the subject, the Vedhaanthic guru does not mind it. His approach is: 'First negate the world; we will talk about the mind later'.

"Thereafter, in the second stage, the guru tells the student "You have looked upon the world as object and you have looked upon your mind as yourself, the Subject. When you say I am happy / unhappy / disturbed etc., you have included the mind in yourself. Now, you have to ask yourself the question 'Is the mind the Subject or an object?'. For this purpose, you have to go to avasthaathraya vichaaraa or svapna-sushupthi-vichaaraa. This analysis of svapnaa and sushupthi is done to understand the mind also as an object. We saw that, in the jaagrath avasthaa, world becomes an object and the mind joins the Subject. But, when you analyze the svapnaa avasthaa, mind also becomes an object, for the simple reason, that, in svapnaa, the entire world that I experience, is my own mind only. When I say I experience the dream, dream is nothing but thoughts only ; when I say 'I experience the dream,' I am experiencing the thoughts. This means that I am clearly objectifying the mind in svapnaa. I understand my mind also as an object.

"And, when I push the mind away from 'me', as an object, obviously, 'I', as the Subject, exclude the mind. When the mind is excluded from 'I' and considered as an 'object', 'I' am no more called a pramaathaa.

"To repeat for clarity: 'I' am named pramaathaa only when the mind joins me as instrument. When the mind is excluded as an object, I am no more called a pramaathaa; I am called the saakshi"

A simple example (which has also been given in earlier contexts) will make this clearer - the example of the spectacles. When the owner of the spectacles takes out the spectacles from its case and merely looks at the spectacles in his hands, the spectacles is only an 'object' and is not included in 'me', the observer. But, when one puts on the spectacles to have a view of other objects, the spectacles has joined 'me' as the Subject, while whatever else is viewed with the assistance of the spectacles is 'object'. The spectacles, thus, can play two-fold role – instrument and object. Likewise, Mind can play two-fold role – instrument and object. When the mind is your instrument, you are pramaathaa; when the mind is an object, you are saakshi.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- यथा - Just as
- घटादयः - objects like a pot etc.,
- परंपरया - gradually / step by step,
- लिङ्गं स्युः - serve as clues
- अहम् - to understand myself as the pramaathaa,

'ahama.' means 'pramaathu.' . The pot serves as a clue to understand myself as a 'subject with the pramaathaa cloak'. I can understand myself as the Subject with regard to the pot, which is an object of knowledge.

- दृश्यत्वात् - because they are 'objects' of perception,

Every object presupposes the subject (this was already discussed earlier).

And, just as the pramaathaa subject is 'discerned' based on the perception of prameyam,

- एवं - in the same manner / similarly / likewise
- अहं अपि - the ahamkaaraa / mind also
-)दृश्यत्वात्(- when it becomes an object,

When the pot is an object, 'I' become the subject Pramaathaa and when the mind or pramaathaa is an object, then, that mind becomes the indicator of a different subject. What type of subject? Not pramaathaa subject; but, a different subject. What type of subject is it? A saakshi subject. Therefore the Aachaaryaa says :

- लिङ्गं स्यात् - becomes a clue
- द्रष्टुः आत्मनः - to the saakshi aathmaa.

When ahamkaaraa itself becomes an object, then that ahamkaaraa object becomes a clue to prove the presence of the 'objectifier' of ahamkaaraa ; and, who is that 'objectifier'? Ans: the saakshi aathmaa.

When pot is object, ahamkaaraa is subject; when ahamkaaraa is object, saakshi is the subject. That saakshi alone is revealed as Brahman. Before coming to the mahaa vaakyam, the aspirant should have come to the level of saakshi. If as ahamkaaraa, he listens to mahaa vaakyam, when the guru says "you are aanandhasvaroopa:", with all mundane problems as ahamkaaraa, he will certainly be not convinced. He will consider the statement as a cruel joke. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says that the ahamkaaraa cloak has to be set aside before employing mahaa vaakyaa; it is then, that, the mahaa vaakyaa will be the most meaningful statement, which gives liberation instantaneously. The Aachaaryaa, further, wants to say "no samaadhi is required for this. 'Sravana kaale eva' ('at the very instant of listening to the mahaa vaakyam'), you can claim 'aham Brahma asmI' and realize your liberation".

163. Chapter III, Verses 56 and 57 (28-11-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is pointing out that mahaa vaakyam will work, as it should, only when the thvam padhaartha is clearly discerned as saakshi. This thvam padhaartha vivekaa or arrival at the saakshi, is achieved by the anvaya vyathirekha method of analysis.

The anvaya vyathirekhaa analysis consists of a series of reasoning, which series the Aachaaryaa had already presented in verses 54 to 56.

In verse 54, he said : "First, you 'objectify' (i.e., observe the features of) an external object like a pot ; then, by comparing the anaathmaa features of the pot, to the same anaathmaa features in the physical body, you discern the body also as an 'object' of experience; by the same process, from the body, you discern the sense organs also, as 'objects'; and, from the sense organs, to the mind and its intellect, as 'objects'. Of course, at this stage, the mind has to serve as the 'Subject', or 'dhruk', with all the others as 'dhrusyam-s' ". This 'travel from the external object to the mind' is the first segment of the anvaya vyathirekhaa analysis, called 'dhruk dhrusya vicharaad'.

In the second segment of analysis, known as avasthaathraya vicharaa or saakshi saakshya vicharaa, the student should discern that the dhruk / pramaathaa mind itself is aagamaapaayee – subject to arrival and departure, from the well known fact, that, it is available only in the jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaa and goes away in the sushupthi avasthaa . In contrast, the Consciousness 'I' is available in all the three avasthaa-s, as Witness or the saakshi of the three avasthaa-s.

Thus, going through the two segments of anvaya vyathirekhaa analysis, first, we come to the mind from the external objects and later, we come to the saakshi from the mind. When the external world is the object, mind is the Subject; when the mind becomes the object, saakshi becomes the Subject.

Sureswaraachaaryaa consolidated his teachings on the anvaya vyathirekhaa process, in verse no. 56. In the first line, he said: "ghataadhaya: yathaa lingam syu: paramparayaa ahama:" – " Just as the objects like a pot, become clues to the ahamkaaraa, step by step". The word 'paramparaad' in the slokaa, refers to the series of arguments given in verse 54, i.e., 'paramparayaa' means 'through the series of reasoning'. Keeping the pot or any external object as the beginning stage, the student has to gradually arrive at the mind as the Subject-cum-object. And, the mind alone is called ahamkaara:; therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says 'ahama:'| The word 'ahama:' means 'ahamkaarasya'. And, ahamkaaraa, here, refers to the mind principle. 'Stepping' on the pot, we reach the mind, which is otherwise called ahamkaaraa.

Thereafter, 'stepping' on the mind or ahamkaaraa, we climb over to the next step which is saakshi. Sureswaraacharya stated this in the second line of the verse 56: "dhrusyathvaath aham api evam dhrashtur aathmana: lingam syaath" – "the ahamkaaraa, also being an object of experience, becomes a clue to the witnessing Self". In this line also, the word 'aham' refers to ahamkaaraa or the mind.

In the second stage, stepping on the mind, the student should catapult / throw himself, on to the lap of the saakshi, looking upon his own mind as an object of experience. The 'saakshi' is referred to as 'dhrashtaa aathmaa' | 'Dhrashtur aathmana:' means 'of the Witnessing Self'.

Thus, the word 'lingam', whose literal meaning is 'clue', can be understood, in this context, as a 'stepping stone' also. Using the world as a 'stepping stone', move to the mind; using mind as 'stepping stone', move to the 'dhrashtaa aathmaa'.

This is the 'anavaya vyathirekaa' process; and, the process is over, when the student has arrived at saakshi. This 'arriving at saakshi' is called 'thvam padhaartha vivekaa'.

But, 'arriving at the saakshi' is not the end of the spiritual journey. With 'arriving at the saakshi', one part of mahaa vaakyam alone is over. The student has only cleared 'thvam padhaa vivekaa' | The subsequent 'thath padha eikyam' is a major leap, which has not been discussed at all, so far. This is what the Aachaaryaa is saying in the following portions.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 57:

ननु द्रष्टृदर्शनदृश्यानां जाग्रत्स्वप्नसुषुप्तेष्वगमापायदर्शनाद्यत्साक्षिकौ तेषामगमापायौ स आगमपायविभागरहित
आत्मा यथा यः निबन्धनः जगतः प्रकाशाप्रकासौ स प्रकाशप्रकाशविभागरहितः सूर्य इति ।

The following objection may be raised: The sun illumines the world and the setting of the sun plunges the world in darkness. Still, in the sun itself, there is no transformation by way of losing luminosity or gaining it. In the same way, the objects of experience seen by the seer, appear and disappear in the course of the three states of waking, dream and sleep; but, he who witnesses their coming into being and cessation, does not undergo changes, by way of coming into being and cessation.

In this sambhandha gadhyam, the Aachaaryaa starts with a possible objection from a student or a poorva pakshin, who says : "With the help of the anvaya vyathirkhaa analysis itself, I have successfully landed on saakshi. I have understood that saakshi is different from mind; that, saakshi is different from chidhaabhaasaa; that, saakshi is different from thought; and, that, saakshi is different from the world. By arriving at the saakshi, I have acquired a lot of wisdom, viz., that, 'I' am different from the mind endowed with chidhaabhaasaa, different from the thoughts and different from the world. These three factors, put together, is called pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi. 'Pramaathaad' refers to the mind, endowed with chidhaabhaasaa; 'pramaanam' is the 'thoughts'; and, 'prameyam' refers to the world. The aathmaa / saakshi is different from all of them. By arriving at saakshi, I have differentiated myself from the 'thriputi'. I have further arrived at the wisdom, that, the 'thriputi' is 'aagamaapaayee' – subject to arrival and departure, whereas, in contrast, saakshi is anaagamaapaayae. That wisdom also I have got. I have also got the wisdom, that, saakshi is chaithanya svaroopaa:"

In other words, the student / poorva pakshin says: "I will consolidate what all I have learnt:

- (1) saakshi is different from thriputi
- (2) thriputi is subject to 'arrival and departure'; but, saakshi is not; i.e. thriputi is anithyam, while saakshi is nithya:
- (3) This saakshi is of the nature of Consciousness and
- (4) that saakshi is aathmaa.

All these mean that I have gained the knowledge about aathmaa, which, in turn means I have gained aathma jnaanam.

"And, I have also learnt to abide as that aathmaa. In sushupthi, I am abiding as the saakshi aathmaa".

This leads the student / poorva pakshin to ask: "Now that I have gained aathma jnaanam, through anvaya vyathirekaa itself, why do I require mahaa vaakyam?"

This is the poorva pakshin's question which is presented elaborately by Sureswaraachaaryaa in this portion. The subsequent portion covers the Aachaaryaa's answer.

The Aachaaryaa's answer to the poorva pakshin will be: "This aathma jnaanam that you have arrived at, through anvaya vyathirekhaa analysis, is only saamaanya aathma jnaanam. It is not visesha aathma jnaanam, which jnaanam is advaita jnaanam, details of which, I will elaborate to you later. At this stage, note that, that visesha aathma jnaanam can come only after mahaa vaakyam. Also, note, as importantly, that, as long as the aspirant has only saamaanya aathma jnaanam and not visesha aathma jnaanam, he will continue to be an ajnaani only. Even though, by completing anvaya vyathirekaa analysis, he has travelled a lot, getting to know (i) a saakshi, which is different from thriputi (ii) a saakshi, which is nithya: (iii) a saakshi, which is chaithanya svaroopaa: and (iv) ultimately, that, that saakshi is aathmaa (his own Self), he can still claim to have only saamaanya aathma jnaanam. He will continue to be an ajnaani, a dvaithin and a samsaari. Without mahaa vaakyam, the aspirant will remain in dvaitham only; and, as long as he is in dvaitham, he will be in samsaaraa.

“The saamkyaa philosopher had also arrived at an aathmaa, as saakshi, which is different from thriputi, which is nithya: and which is chaithanya svaroopaa:| But, he also has only this saamaanya aathma jnaanam; therefore, saamkyaa philosopher is a dvaithin. So also, the yoga philosopher, the Nyaayaa philosopher and the Vaiseshikaa philosopher. They have all arrived at the Self, as saakshi, which is different from thriputi, which is nithya: and which is chaithanya svaroopaa:| All these four philosophers have this saamaanya aathma jnaanam; but, they do not know that saakshi is advaitam, because they did not employ mahaa vaakyam. All four of them, therefore, are stuck in dvaitham and therefore, continue in samsaaraa. Even in the nirvikalpaka samaadhi of the Yoga philosophy, though the aspirant can abide as aathmaa, he will never know that, that aathmaa is advaitam. Even Samaadhi can never give advaita jnaanam. Only mahaa vaakyam, received in sravanam, can give advaita jnaanam and consequent liberation from samsaaraa. Therefore, if we have to realize our ‘liberation’, we have to travel to mahaa vaakyam; otherwise, the spiritual journey is incomplete”.

This is a very, very important topic that Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering now.

Reverting to the text, (the poorva pakshin's objection is presented first):

- ननु - But,
- आगमापायदर्शनात् - since I have learnt the fact of the ‘arrival and departure’
- द्रष्ट दर्शन दृश्यानां - of the thriputi, viz., (i) the pramaathaa mind (ii) the pramaanam thoughts and (iii) the prameyam objects
- जाग्रत्स्वप्नसुषुप्तेषु - based on the three states of experience,

The poorva pakshin, who is making this statement, is in the saamkyaa-yogaa-nyaayaa-vaiseshika group. He is planning to ask a question: “We have learnt many facts. Are they not enough? Why should we go to mahaa vaakyam?”. Before asking this question “Why mahaa vaakyam?”, he is giving a list of the facts he had learnt through anavaya vyathirekhaa.

This first part of the sentence given above, details the first fact learnt by the poorva pakshin. He says " By going through and studying the three states of experience, viz., waking, dream and deep sleep, I have learnt that the thriputi consisting of (i) the pramaathaa , which is the mind (ii) the pramaanam, which is the 'thoughts in the mind' and (iii) the prameyam, which are the 'objects' observed, is subject to 'arrival and departure'".

The other name for the 'thriputi' is 'saakshyam', which is different from 'saakshi'.

This knowledge that the thriputi 'arrives and departs' is knowledge no. (1), gained by the student or poorva pakshin. He proceeds: "Based on this first knowledge, I have learnt the second fact". What is that second fact?

यत् साक्षिकौ तेषाम् आगमापायौ - - and that which is 'witness' to their 'arrival and departure',

This term gives the clue to the second lesson / fact learnt by the student / poorva pakshin, which lesson is "the existence of a saakshi, witnessing the 'arrival and departure'". The very fact that the 'arrival and departure' of thriputi is noticed and realized , shows that, there must be a saakshi 'observing' and 'gaining the awareness' of their 'arrival and departure'. This is the second lesson, viz., that, "Only because of the existence of a saakshi, the 'arrival and departure' of the thriputi is known".

The word 'yath' means 'that' and 'Yath saakshikau' refers to the 'observer / saakshi'. The word 'saakshikau' is arrived at, as 'ya: saakshi yayo: thau aagamaapaayau'.

Then, what is the third lesson that the student has already learnt? He says:

- स :आत्मा - is the aathmaa ,

The student says: "The third lesson I have learnt is that, that observer / witness of the thriputi is the aathmaa" and seems to imply "That means I have gained aathma jnaanam. Aathma jnaanam is the means to liberation and since I have acquired aathma jnaanam, the study must be over".

Proceeding, the student says:

- आगम अपाय विभाग रहितः - is not subject to 'arrival and departure';

This is knowledge no. (4). The student says "Not only do I know that the 'observer' of the thriputi is aathmaa, but I also know that, that saakshi aathmaa is not 'subject to arrival and departure' i.e. 'he is nithya.' | Because he is the 'observer', I know that he is also 'chaithanya svaroopaa.'. The implication is again: "I have all this knowledge. Is that not enough? Is this not aathma jnaanam?"

The student gives an example also for the constant nature of aathmaa. What is the example?

- यथा - just as
- यः निबन्धनः जगत् प्रकाशाप्रकाशौ - that, which is the cause of 'days' and 'nights' of the earth, 'nibhandhana.' means 'cause'.
- सः सूर्यः - viz., the sun
- प्रकाश अप्रकाश विभागरहितः - is free of 'days' and 'nights';

The example given for 'aathmaa' is 'soorya.' | The student says: "The earth has got 'days' and 'nights' alternately. I know that this alternating 'day' and 'night' experience is because of the sun. I also know that, that sun which is the cause of 'days' and 'nights' on earth, is itself free of 'days' and 'nights'. In the same manner as I have observed these facts viz., (i) the earth experiences days and nights alternately because of the sun and (ii) the sun, though the cause of the days and nights of the earth, is itself free of days and nights, I also observe the 'arrival and 'departure' of the thriputi and the 'arrival-departure-less' aathmaa".

In this analogy, 'earth' is the upamaanaa for the 'thriputi'; the phenomenon of 'days' and 'nights' of the earth, is the upamaanaa for the 'aagama apaayaad' of the 'thriputi' and the 'sun' is the upamaanaa for 'aathmaa'.

The sentence concludes:

इति - In this way , I have arrived at aathma jnaanam.

"Why I do require mahaa vaakyam?" is the question of the student, that follows.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 57:

यदा चैवं तदा वाक्यावगम्यस्यार्थस्यानुदितानस्तमितविज्ञानमात्रस्वभावस्यानुमानेनैव प्रतिपन्नत्वात्पुनरपि वाक्यस्य निर्विषयत्वप्रसङ्गः ।

When this is comprehended, we realize, that the import of the Vedhaanthic propositions, namely, the Self of the nature of pure Consciousness, subject to no beginning and no termination, is understood by reasoning itself and there is no matter for the Vedhaanthic proposition to convey.

The questioner / poorva pakshin continues. From the word 'nanu', in the first line of this sambhandha gadhyam, up to the term 'nirvishayathvaprasangha:', the last term in this sentence , is the poorvapakshivaakyam.

This second sentence conveys the conclusion of the poorva pakshin. He had said: "I have already gained, by mere logical reasoning, whatever knowledge you want to give me through the mahaa vaakyam, namely, aathma jnaanam , which consists of the knowledge that, the aathmaa is chaithanya svaroopam and is not subject to arrival and departure / birth and death". Now he proceeds to state his viewpoint:

- यदा च एवं तदा - When the position is this,
- प्रतिपन्नत्वात् - namely, the acquisition having been achieved,
- वाक्य अवगम्यस्य अर्थस्य - of the 'aathma jnaanam' message that you want to give me through Mahaa Vaakyam,

'vaakya avagamyasya' means 'which is to be revealed through mahaa vaakyam'; 'arth' indicates 'aathma jnaanam' message, in this context.

What kind of aathma is it?

- अनुदित अनस्तमित - which 'athmaa' is not subject to arrival and departure / free from births and deaths
- विज्ञान मात्र स्वभावस्य - (and) which is of the nature of pure Consciousness,
- अनुमानेन एव - through mere reasoning,
'anumaanam' means 'logical reasoning'.
- निर्विषयत्व प्रसङ्गः - redundancy
'nirvishayam' literally means 'without any new message' and implies 'redundancy'.
- पुनरपि वाक्यस्य - of the repetition of mahaa vaakyam
-)भवति(- results.

What the poorva pakshin says is: "Without using mahaa vaakyam, but, using pure logic, in the form of anvaya vyathirekhaa process, I have already gained the knowledge about the Self, which you wanted to give me through mahaa vaakyam. I have understood an aathmaa, which is different from the body-mind complex, which is chaithanya svaroopam and which is without birth or death. I have already arrived at this knowledge, through logical reasoning (anumaanam), such as 'since changing experiences are observed, there must be a changeless Conscious 'observer' / nithya vijnaana svaroopam saakshi etc. Since this has been already achieved by reasoning, is not mahaa vaakyam redundant? Why do I require it?". His further implied assertions: "In fact, it would appear, that, I do not require any saasthraa or guru also for this purpose. Even the Upanishadic statement 'naishaa tharkena mathir aapaneyaa' (Katopanishad I.2.9) – 'This knowledge (athma jnaanam) cannot be attained by reasoning' does not sound convincing to me".

Up to this is the poorvapakshaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa gives his reply in a very casual manner. The poorva pakshi expended a lot of energy and effort to present his position and his question. The Aachaaryaa brushes aside the poorva pakshin's query.

What is the answer, that is kept in Aachaaryaa's mind? The gist is given below (though covered earlier, in this session, Swamiji repeats it, presumably for emphasis):

"If a philosopher does not focus on mahaa vaakyam, his philosophy would come under one of the following four – nyaayaa, vaiseshikaa, saamkhyaa and yoga. The first three philosophies in this group are 'tharka pradhaanaa' i.e., they swear by 'reasoning' or 'logic'. Yogaa philosophy lays emphasis on 'samaadhi' / 'meditation'.

"All those people who emphasize meditation or logic or both, to the exclusion of the sruthi mahaa vaakyaani will come under the saamkya-yoga-nyaaya-vaiseshika group. They may all acquire 'aathma jnaanam' – 'knowledge about aathmaa', but, only partially. They will get to know an aathmaa, which is chaithanya svaroopam: and nithya: / But, all of them will uniformly talk about 'dvaitha aathmaa' only. By 'logic', they will arrive at aathma chaithanyam and also at the nithyathvam of chaithanya aathmaa. But, they will not and cannot arrive at 'advaita aathma chaithanyam'. Even the yoga philosopher, who, in addition to 'reasoning', goes through 'nirvikalapaka samaadhi', never arrives at advaitam. In his philosophy also, there is only 'aathma bahuthvam' - there are many 'Consciousnesses' or 'aathmaa-s'. And, quite illogically, all aathmaa-s, according to Yogaa, are all-pervading.

"To believe that aathma jnaanam can be gained by mere reasoning or 'reasoning followed by meditation' is a misconception. Advaita aathma jnaanam can never be acquired through reasoning or samaadhi. It can come only through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa and it will come through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

There is another misconception also prevalent. Even many Vedhaanthic students / seekers are under the wrong impression that after completing Vedhaanthic study, they have to go into samaadhi for advaita anubhavaa. This belief is also wrong. Samaadhi also cannot give either advaita jnaanam or advaita anubhavam, just as 'reasoning' / 'logic' cannot.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya wants to say "As long as you emphasize logic or meditation, you will be in dvaita dharsanam only". He conveys that in a casual manner:

नैष दोषः - Your charge is not sustainable.

By the word 'dhosha:', the Aachaaryaa means 'your (poorva pakshin's) charge'. What was the poorva pakshin's charge? Ans : "Mahaa vaakyam does not have any new message to be taught".

The Aachaaryaa wants to tell the poorva pakshin: "Mahaa vaakyam alone teaches advaitam. Therefore, what you say, namely, that, 'mahaa vaakyam has nothing to teach' - that doshaa is not there at all". Why? The Aachaaryaa answers:

- तत्प्रतिपत्तेः - The understanding / knowledge of the Self, in the manner described by you, 'prathipatthi:' means 'jnaanam' / knowledge ; the word 'thath' means 'that you have arrived at'.
- लिङ्गव्यवधानेन - has been arrived at through the mediation of reasoning.
'vyavadhaanaa' means 'mediation' or 'instrumentality'; 'lingham', in this context, means 'reasoning' or 'logic'.

What the Aachaaryaa says is: "The aathma jnaanam which you have arrived at, is only saamaanya aathma jnaanam, because, you have arrived at it, through the mediation of reasoning only".

The implication of this cryptic statement is: " 'Reasoning' / anumaanaa can never give 'visesha jnaanam'; it can give only 'saamaanya jnaanam'". How do we say so? The Aachaaryaa does not elaborate; he assumes that, to the poorva pakshin, who has raised this question, this rule should already be known.

An analogy will make the rule clear and acceptable. In the common example of the inference of fire from smoke, we do discern the 'existence of fire', by anumaanam, because of the perceived smoke. But, this knowledge of the 'existence of fire' can be considered only as saamaanya jnaanam. The other details of the fire, such as the magnitude - whether it is a small one or a conflagration, the cause of the fire etc., will not be known / cannot be discerned through the smoke. They can be known only through physical perception of the fire i.e., by using prathyaksha pramaanam. In short, the saamaanya jnaanam "fire asthi" could be had through 'anumaanam', while the visesha jnaanam of the size of the fire, the reason for the fire etc., can be achieved only through prathyaksha pramaanam.

In a similar manner, in the case of 'aathma jnaanam', through anvaya vyathirekhaa reasoning, only saamaanya aathma jnaanam, in the form of dvaitha aathma jnaanam is achieved. But, there is a visesha aathma jnaanam, which is advaita aathma jnaanam/ knowledge of the 'non-dual nature of the Self'. 'Reasoning' or 'anumaana pramaanam' can never give this visesha aathma jnaanam. For that purpose, the aspirant needs another pramaanam and that is the mahaa vaakya pramaanam.

In the case of agni, visesha jnaanam of the agni comes through prathyaksha pramaanam. In the case of aathmaa, visesha jnaanam comes through mahaa vaakya pramaanam. In the case of fire, 'reasoning' must be followed by 'prathyakshaa'; in the case of aathma jnaanam, 'reasoning' must be followed by 'mahaa vaakyam'. Otherwise, the aspirant will continue to remain in dvaitham, like the saamkhyaa-yoga-nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosophers. They used 'reasoning'; they did not arrive at 'advaitam'; they used meditation; they did not arrive at 'advaitam'. Mahaavaakyam is the only source of Advaita jnaanam. Based on these facts, the Aachaaryaa briefly said "linghavyavadhaanena thathprathipatthe:" | Since, he did not elaborate, the poorva pakshin is puzzled. He wonders "What more do I have to know?" Therefore, the poorva pakshin restates the poorva pakshaa, more clearly.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 57:

ननु साक्षात्परोक्षादात्मस्वभावेनानात्मनो हानोपादानयोःसंबन्धग्रहणात्कमतिशयं वाक्यं कुर्यात् ।

But, the connection between the Self, which is of the nature of immediacy and the objects, which are appropriated and rejected, is directly and immediately grasped. What more can the mahaa vaakyam accomplish?

The poorva pakshin does not understand, because Sureswaraachaarya has not made the main difference between saamaanya jnaanam and visesha jnaanam clear, namely, that, in saamaanya jnaanam we are in dvaitham only and by visesha jnaanam alone, we move to advaitam. This he has not explicitly mentioned .

Therefore, the poorva pakshin is still in a confused state. He says : "I know I am the saakshi; I know I am chaithanya svaroopam; I know I am nithyam also; and I have practiced samaadhi also and through samaadhi, I am able to abide in my saakshi svaroopam also. Is this not enough? What else is to be acquired through mahaa vaakyam?" He still persists with this doubt.

- ननु - But,
- आत्मस्वभावेन - 'saakshi' in the form of the very Self / aathmaa

He says: "I have known the aathmaa / my Self as the Saakshi / the 'observer'"

- अनात्मनः हानोपादानयोः संबन्धग्रहणात् - and also 'my' relationship with the thriputi anaathmaa, having been understood by me, 'grahanam', in this context, mean 'jnaanam' / grasping/ knowledge / awareness.
- साक्षात् अपरोक्षात् - directly and intimately,

He says: "I have not only understood that I am the saakshi, but, I have also understood my relationship with the thriputi anaathmaa, namely, that 'I' am the 'changeless observer' of the 'changing thriputi ('I' am the 'changeless observer' of the 'changing' phenomena of the universe)".

This relationship is technically called 'saakshi-saakshya-sambhandhaa', the Self / aathmaa being the changeless 'observer' / saakshi and the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi being the changing saakshyam.

"Such being the case" the poorva pakshin asks:

- किं अतिशयं वाक्यं कुर्यात् - what more new knowledge can the mahaavaakyam add?

The poorva pakshin's contention is: "I have intellectually understood that, in reality, 'I' am not this body-mind complex, but 'I' am the aathmaa, which is eternal, which is changeless, which is of the nature of pure Consciousness and which is the observer / saakshi of the changing universe. Not only have I intellectually understood this fact; I am able to enter into nirvikalpaka samaadhi, I am able to dissolve the thriputi and abide as the nirvikalpaka aathmaa / Self without any division. Is this not enough? What else is required?"

Sureswaraacharya's viewpoint was already discussed, namely, that, neither logic nor samaadhi nor even a combination of both can give advaita jnaanam. At best, they can lead to an ever-existent, chaithanya svaroopaa saakshi aathmaa. Only the mahaa vaakyam can give advaita jnaanam or knowledge of the non-dual nature of aathmaa. He now wants to present this, as his answer to the poorva pakshir's doubt.

164. Chapter III, Verses 57 and (05-12-2009)

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse57 :

मैवं वोचः। लिङ्गाधीनत्वात्तत्प्रतिपत्तेः । न हि लिङ्गव्यवधानेनात्मप्रतिपत्तिः साक्षात्प्रतिपत्तिर्भवति" यमेवैष वृणते तेन लभ्यः" इति श्रुतेः । अत आह।

Do not argue in this manner. The apprehension of the Self by way of reasoning is dependent on the inferential ground. Apprehension through the mediation of the inferential ground is certainly not 'direct' apprehension. The sruthi avers 'It is attained only by him who seeks that apprehension' (Katopanishad I.ii.23). Therefore it follows:

Sureswaraachaaryaa first talks about the thvam padha vichaaraa, in which we employ the anvaya vyathirekhaa arguments or 'reasoning' to arrive at the saakshi svaroopam. In the first stage of anvaya vyathirekhaa, we use dhruk dhruasya vichaaraa and negate everything else and arrive at pramaathaa, the ahamkaaraa. Thereafter, we do avasthaathraya vichaaraa, otherwise called saakshi-saakshya-vichaaraa, and in this second stage, we negate ahamkaaraa also as an incidental object. Through dhruk dhruasya vivekaa, the world is negated. Through, saakshi-sakshya-vivekaa, the ahamkaaraa pramaathaa is differentiated from aathmaa, and I arrive at myself as the saakshi aathmaa. At this stage, not only do I know I am saakshisvaroopam; I also know I am chaithanyasvaroopam; since, if I have to witness the saakshya prapanchaa, I should be chaithanyam. I also know that the world and ahamkaaraa are subject to arrival and departure, whereas as a saakshi / witness, 'I' am not subject to arrival and departure. Haanopaadhaana varjitha: aham | That means that I know 'I' am nithya chaithanyam. To consolidate: "I know 'I' am saakshi; I know 'I' am aathmaa; I know 'I' am chaithanyasvaroopam; I know 'I' am haanopaadhaana varjitha: and therefore nithya." | And, this much, I can arrive at through thvam padha vichaaraa / through anvayavyathirekhaa. This Sureswaraachaaryaa elaborately established. And, goes on to say, that, having arrived at this saakshi aathmaa / having arrived at the conclusion 'saakshi nithya chaithanya aathmaa aham asmi', thereafter, we have to employ mahaa vaakyam, to continue the spiritual journey. When he says this, the student / poorva pakshin is surprised. What is his surprise due to? His questions explain. He asks : "By reasoning itself we have arrived at saakshi nithya chaithanya aathmaa. Is it not, by itself, the completion of our spiritual journey? Since we have reached the destination / arrived at nithya chaithanya saakshi aathmaa by tharkaa itself / by reasoning itself / by anvaya vyathirekhaa itself, why should we employ mahaa vaakyam?"

This viewpoint " Tharkaa itself will give aathma jnaanam" is the contention of certain other systems of philosophy also, viz., saamkyaa, yoga, nyaayaa and vaiseshikaa. They are all tharkapradhaanaa people. All of them arrive at the aathmaa, by using 'reasoning' and their question and conclusion are (similar to the poorva pakshirts): "Why are you clinging on to mahaa vaakyam ? It is not necessary". This is the question, which Sureswaraacharya is struggling to answer and to convince the student, that, what has been achieved by him by mere 'reasoning', is not enough and that, mahaa vaakyam must now be compulsorily employed.

Sureswaraacharya's answer, already discussed earlier, more than once, is given again briefly, as follows: " Tharkaa can, at best, give only aathma saamaanya jnaanam / a general preliminary knowledge of the aathmaa , which knowledge may be more appropriately called 'aathma asthithva jnaanam', which, literally means 'knowledge that there is an aathmaa existing'. But, we will never know the visesha svaroopam of aathmaa , through any form of reasoning".

To understand this assertion, an example was cited in the earlier session, viz., 'the inference of fire from smoke'. In this example, an individual perceives smoke emanating from the top of a hill; he does not physically perceive any fire. But, from the emanation of the smoke, he infers that there must be a fire on the other side of the hill, causing the smoke. When the individual infers the fire from smoke, he knows that there is fire; but, since he has not physically seen the fire, he does not know the svaroopam of the fire, i.e. the magnitude of the fire, the source of the fire etc. To know the svaroopam / to acquire the visesha jnaanam of the fire, the observer of the smoke, has to see the fire physically – i.e., he needs prathyaksha pramaanam. After using inference, from which he got the saamaanya jnaanam of the 'existence of the fire', he has to resort to prathyaksha pramaanam, if he desires to have visesha jnaanam of the agni. This is a common example, found in scriptures.

Another example from our mundane experiences, can be cited. When an individual is walking on the road, he hears the horn of a car from behind ; and consequently infers, that, there is a car behind him; but, he cannot infer from the horn, what type of car it is – the size of the car, the make, the colour etc. He has to physically see the car to know these details; in other words, he gets the visesha jnaanam of the car, only by prathyaksha pramaanam.

In the above two examples, it is seen, that, saamaanya jnaanam can be acquired by 'reasoning' or 'inference', while acquisition of visesha jnaanam compulsorily needs another pramaanam. In a similar manner, in the case of aathmaa, 'tharkaa' can give aathma saamaanya jnaanam, whereas aathma visesha jnaanam will come only through another pramaanam. But, unlike as in the above two examples, in the context of aathma jnaanam, the other pramaanam that can be used, is not 'prathyaksha', because, aathmaa is not prathyaksha vishayaa. The other pramaanam needed, is the mahaavaakya pramaanam, which alone can give aathma visesha jnaanam or aathma svarooopa jnaanam or aathma saakshaathkaara: | This is the topic that is being discussed in the present portion.

To go through the student's vehement question again: "nanu saakshaath aparokshaath aathmasvabhaavena anaathmana: haanaopaadhaanayo: sambhandha grahanaath kamathisayam vaakyam kuryaath" – "But, (through anvaya vyathirekhaa / 'reasoning' itself), I am clearly and intimately arriving at the aathmaa, as saakshi. Not only do I now know that 'I' am saakshi; but, I also know that the mind, the thoughts and the world - in short, the entire thriputi is subject to arrival and departure. Another term for anaathmaa, is saakshyam. Thus, I know what is saakshi and what is saakshyam. I also know the relationship between the saakshi and the saakshyam. I have this much clear knowledge. What more knowledge do I require? What is the extraordinary knowledge that mahaa vaakyam is expected to bestow on me?"

This is the poorva pakshin's question. What is Sureswaraachaaryaa's answer ?

- मैवं वोच : - Do not argue in this manner.

The actual word is 'avocho:' (अवोच:); the letter 'अ' is dropped because of a special grammar rule. 'Maa avocha:' means 'do not argue' and 'evam' means 'in this manner'. Why? The reason is given by the Aachaaryaa, in a terse statement:

- तत् प्रतिपत्ते : लिङ्ग अधीनत्वात् - Since that aathma jnaanam was derived through reasoning.

'Prathipatthi:' means 'jnaanam' / knowledge. 'Thath prathipatthi:' means 'the aathma jnaanam that we gain in this manner', 'thath' implying 'that we gain in this manner'. 'Lingha adheenathvaath' means 'since derived from reasoning'. 'Lingham' refers to 'anumaanam' ; 'anumaanam' refers to 'tharkhaa' or 'yukthi' or 'nyaayaa'. All these terms are synonymous. Tharkaa = yukthi = nyaaya = logic = reasoning.

The sentence literally means "Since it is knowledge derived only through reasoning" and the Aachaaryaa's implication is "It is, therefore, saamaanya jnaanam or 'incomplete knowledge' ". That is explained further.

- लिङ्ग व्यवधानेन आत्मप्रतिपत्तिः - The aathma jnaanam derived 'through the instrument of reasoning' / 'by means of reasoning',

'aathma prathipatthi.' means 'aathma jnaanam' ; 'lingham' means 'reasoning'; 'vyavadhaanam' means 'instrument or tool' and may be interpreted here, as 'means'.

- साक्षात् प्रतिपत्तिः न हि भवति - is certainly not visesha jnaanam / saakshaathkaaraa / complete knowledge.

"Knowledge received from mere reasoning is not aathma visesha jnaanam. It is not complete knowledge" declares the Aachaaryaa.

Under such circumstances, what should the aspirant do? Ans: He has to seek that further knowledge through the effort of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

And, who says this? Ans: The Upanishad itself says that.

Where is it said? In reply, Sureswaraachaaryaa quotes from Katopanishad (I.ii.23):

- साक्षात् प्रतिपत्तिः भवति - Visesha jnaanam / saakshaathkaaraa / complete knowledge results,
- श्रुतेः - in line with the sruthi vaakyam
- "यं एव एष वृणते तेन लभ्य " इति - viz., "(saakshaathkaara:) is attained only by that aspirant who seeks it".

'vrnunthe' means 'seeks'.

Only that aspirant, who has already got saamaanya aathma jnaanam and who desires visesha jnaanam, and, therefore seeks it, by approaching a guru, for analyzing the mahaa vaakyam – that student alone can attain the aathma visesha jnaanam.

Now, a student has to clearly understand the difference between aathma saamaanya jnaanam and aathma visesha jnaanam. Only then he will be able to appreciate Sureswaraachaaryaa's vehement stand on this issue.

Through reasoning, the seeker may and will get to know that there is an aathmaa, which is different from the body, different from the mind and different from the sense organs. This is called aathma asthithva jnaanam or aathma saamaanya jnaanam. And, this aathmaa is talked about, by all the philosophers, even other than Advaitin-s. The Saamkyaa philosopher accepts an aathmaa, which is different from body, mind, sense organs, intellect etc. He also accepts the nithyathvam of the aathmaa. The Yoga philosopher also talks about nithya aathmaa, arrived at, through logic, without employing mahaa vaakyam. The Saamkhyaa philosopher does not employ mahaa vaakyam; the yoga philosopher also does not employ mahaa vaakyam. They have logically arrived at a nithya aathmaa, different from body-mind-sense organs. The Nyaayaa philosopher also talks about nithya aathmaa, different from body-mind-sense complex. The Vaiseshikaa philosopher also does.

Then, what is the difference between the aathmaa, arrived at by those four systems of philosophy and the aathmaa arrived at by the Advaitin, by employing mahaa vaakyam? What is the uniqueness of the aathmaa, talked about, by the Advaitin?

Ans: The other philosophers talk of only aathma asthithvam; but, the Advaitin, in addition, talks of aathma ekathvam.

What is the difference between aathma asthithvam and aathma ekathvam?

Ans: Aathma asthithvam means there is aathmaa also. And, aathma ekathvam means there is aathmaa only.

On the face of it, the difference may not sound big or important and may bring forth the question from the student "Is that all?" But, these terms, viz. 'aathmaa also' and 'aathmaa only' are loaded terms in Vedhaantha saathraa. The student has to capture the full significance of these loaded terms. Sureswaraachaaryaa assumes that his readers know the significance of these words; therefore, he does not dwell at length on them. It is up to the student to analyze and understand the significance of the terms.

When the statement 'aathmaa also is there', it means that aathmaa is sajaatheeya vijaatheeya svagatha bedhaa sahitha: / 'Bedhaa' means 'division'. Three types of 'division' are talked about, in the saasthraa-s : (i) sajaatheeya (ii) vijaatheeya and (iii) svagatha.

In all dharsanam-s / systems of philosophy, other than Advaita dharsanam, aathmaa has got all these three types of 'division'.

Of these, 'sajaatheeya bedhaa', in the context of aathmaa, means 'the division existing among many aathmaa-s'. All the four dharsanam-s (saamkhyaa, yoga, nyaayaa and vaiseshikaa) talk about 'many' eternal aathmaa-s, which are all different from one another.

Not only do they talk about jeevaathma-jeevaathma-bedhaa, they talk about jeevaathma-Paramaathma-bedhaa also. Not only these four dharsanaa-s, but, even Visishtadvaitam, a school considered to be of Vedhaanthic thoughts, which, therefore, is supposed to take its essence from the Upanishad-s, believes in both jeevaathma-jeevaathma-bedhaa and jeevaathma-Paramaathma-bedhaa. In Visishtaadvaitam, therefore, even during mokshaa, which is a special lokaa, called Vaikunta Lokaa, many eternal jeevaathmaa-s will be there, in the presence of one eternal Paramaathmaa – viz., Vishnu; and, all the jeevaathmaa-s will be vying with one another, to do kaimkaryam to Paramaathmaa. This jeevaathma-jeevaathma-bedhaa and jeevaathma-Paramaathma bedhaa is termed sajaatheeya bedhaa.

And, then, these philosophies, again including Visishtaadvaitam, talk about an aathmaa, which has got vijaatheeya bedhaa also. According to them, even in mokshaa, there is aathmaa and there is anaathmaa. Difference between one aathmaa and another aathmaa is sajaatheeya bedhaa; difference between aathmaa and non-aathmaa or anaathmaa, the matter, is called vijaatheeya bedhaa. And, the vijaatheeya bedhaa also is eternal, according to these philosophies.

Then, there is the third bedhaa, viz., svagatha bedhaa. What is that? Within one aathmaa itself, there are internal differences. According to these philosophies, both Jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa have got internal differences also. The 'difference' may be in the form of 'various limbs' or in the form of 'substance and attribute'.

When they talk about Paramaathmaa as Maha Vishnu, that Paramaathmaa form has different limbs – beautiful eyes, beautiful hands etc., which, as is well known, are extolled for their grace and beauty. The Tamil poet, Kambar, in his Tamil version of Ramayana, sings about Rama's handsome looks, an oft-quoted line being “தோள் கண்டார் தோளே கண்டார்”. Even after attaining mokshaa, the successful aspirant will be devotedly admiring the various limbs of the Lord, without even blinking his eyes. The happiness resulting from the divine 'dharsanam' is considered as a part of mokshaa, by the Visishtaadvaitin.

The second type of svagatha bedhaa, in the context of aathmaa, is that of 'substance and attribute'. These philosophies talk about aathmaa - whether jeevaathmaa or Paramaathmaa - as a 'substance' with attributes like jnaanam, iccha, sankalapa: etc. Maha Vishnu is considered as ashtaguna visishta Paramaathmaa / anantha kalyaana gunaganaika visishta Paramaathmaa. For Paramaathma lakshanam, they tirelessly quote the Chaandoghya Upanishad manthraa “ya aathmaa apahatha paapmaa vijara: vimruthyu: visoka: vijighathsa: apipaasa: sathyakaama: sathyasamkalpa: sa: anveshtavya.” (VIII.7.1) – “That Self, which has no sin, no decrepitude, no death, no sorrow, no hunger, no thirst, has unfailing desires and unfailing will, has to be known”. This 'difference' in the form of 'substance' and its 'attributes' is called svagatha bedhaa.

By mere logic one can arrive only at a sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-svagatha-bedha-sahitha-aathmaa. And, even a student of the Vedaa-s, if he ignores mahaa vaakyam, will also arrive at only such a misconceived aathmaa.

Sureswaraacharya stresses on this fact and says " Only when you employ mahaa vaakyam and understand the full significance of the vaakyam, you will understand aathma ekathvam".

What is the meaning of "aathma ekathvam" ? Ans: "Sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-svagatha-bedha-rahithathvam" |

'Sajaatheeya-bedha-rahitha aathmaa' means, that, there is no possibility of 'many' jeevaathmaa-s. The saamkhyaa philosopher never arrives at this fact. His logic helps him to arrive at aathmaa ; but, he believes in 'many' aathmaa-s and thus, never arrives at 'one' sajaatheeya bedha rahitha aathmaa. Visishtaadvaitam also arrives at aathmaa, but, at 'many' aathmaa-s again. In addition, it believes in jeevaathma-Paramaathma bedhaa also, which will also come under sajaatheeya bedhaa. But, what does mahaa vaakyam say ? Ans: It firmly avers 'aathmaa eka.' | 'aathmaa is bereft of sajaatheeya bedhaa | This is not a meaningless statement to be trifled with. It is very profound teaching.

The second revelation through mahaa vaakyam is that 'aathmaa' does not have svagatha bedhaa / internal differences also. It is not a substance, with 'consciousness' as its 'attribute'; but, it is Consciousness itself, without substance-attribute division. Consciousness is not the attribute of 'me'; Consciousness is 'me'.

Aathmaa is not only sajaatheeya svagatha bedha rahitha: | Aathmaa is free from the division in the form of vijaatheeya bedhaa also. This is because there is no anaathmaa existing separate from aathmaa. There is no material universe / saakshya prapanchaa existing separate from aathmaa . Saakshya prapanchaa only 'appears'; it is only 'seemingly' existent, not 'really' existent. Whatever 'appears' without 'really existing', is called 'mithyaa'. Since there is no anaathmaa different from 'me', the aathmaa, i.e. since anaathmaa is mithyaa, there is no question of vijaatheeya bedhaa also. Only when an aathmaa and an anaathmaa which is different from aathmaa, are both 'really existent', there can be vijaatheeya bedhaa. "There is no 'aathmaa and anaathmaa'; there is only aathmaa" is the teaching of the mahaa vaakyam.

Kaivalyopanishad (16) declares: "Yathparam brahma sarvaathmaa visvasya aayathanam mahath sookshmaathsookshmatharam nithyam thath thvameva thvameva thath" – " You alone are that infinite, eternal, supreme Brahman, which is the Self of all, which is the abode of all and which is subtler than the subtle, that Brahman alone is you". And, again (22 and 23) : "Vedai: anekai: aham eva vedhya:| vedaanthkruth vedavith eva cha aham| na punyapaape mama| naasthi naasa:| na janmadehendriyabuddhirasthi | na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha | evam vidhithvaa paramaathmaroopam guhaasayam nishkalam advitheeyam samasthaasaakshim sadhasadviheenam prayaathi suddham paramaathmaroopam" –" 'I' alone am to be known through all the Vedaa-s; 'I' am the initiator of the Vedhaanthat; 'I' alone am the knower of the Vedaa-s ; punya and paapa are not there for 'me'; death is not there for 'me'; birth, body, sense organs and intellect are not there for 'me'; earth, water, fire, air and space are not there for 'me'. Having known this nature of the supreme Self which is located in the heart, which is without parts, non-dual , the witness of all, without cause and effect, and pure, one attains the nature of the supreme Self".

This sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-svagatha-bedha-rahitha-aathma- ekathva jnaanam is aathma visesha jnaanam ; it can never be got through tharkaa or through nirvikalpaka samaadhi. It can be attained only through mahaa vaakyam.

That is the reason (i.e., since they did not use the mahaa vaakyam) that, all the other four dharsanam-s, arrived at aathmaa , but, never arrived at aathma ekathvam. For them, even in mokshaa, there is no advaitam.

Through mahaa vaakyam alone, 'aham brahma asmi' is made clear. Brahman is 'sajaatheeya vijaatheeya svagatha bedha rahitham' |

In the well-known Chaandoghya Upanishad manthraa (VI.2.1), Sage Uddhaalakaa declares to his son Svethakethu : " Sadheva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam" – "O good looking one, in the beginning, this was Existence alone, One only, without a second" and later points out (manthraa VI.8.7): "eithadhaathmyam idhagum sarvam thath sathyam sa aathmaa thathvamasi Svethaketho" – "All this has got That as the Self. That is the Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That, O Svetaketu".

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to ask the poorva pakshin : "Without that mahaa vaakyam, how will you claim that (i)'I' am the jagadh adhishtaanam (ii) in 'me', the world appears and disappears (iii) the world can never bind 'me' (iv) mokshaa is not escaping from the world in the name of videha mukthi ; but, mokshaa is converting life itself into a leelaa etc.? How can you achieve all these convictions, which are all essential for 'liberation', without mahaa vaakyam? How can you afford to brush aside the significance of mahaa vaakyam?"

- अत आह - Therefore, I say:

Incidentally, the quote 'yam eva esha vrunuthe thena labhya:' occurs in two Upanishad-s – in Mundakopanishad (III.ii.3) and in Katopanishad (I.ii.23).

Chapter III: Verse 57 –

लिङ्गमस्तित्वनिष्ठत्वान्न स्याद्वाक्यार्थबोधकम् ।
सदसध्व्युत्थितात्माऽयमतो वाक्यात्प्रतीयते ॥ ५७ ॥

As the inferential ground rests on empirical existence, it cannot convey the meaning of the mahaa vaakyam. This Self, going beyond existence and non-existence, is, therefore, grasped only through the mahaa vaakyam.

All above discussions are condensed by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in one simple slokaa.

- लिङ्गमस्तित्वनिष्ठत्वात् - Since 'reasoning' can result only in the knowledge of the 'mere existence of aathma,

'Lingam' means 'tharkhaa' or 'reasoning'; 'asthithvam' means 'existence'; and, 'nishtathvam' means 'knowledge'. What this portion conveys is : "Since 'reasoning' can lead you only to the basic knowledge of the existence of a sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-svagatha-bedha-sahitha aathmaa'. Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to this basic knowledge / saamaanya jnaanam as 'asthithva nishta'.

This saamaanya jnaanam is confined to realization of such an aathmaa only, viz., a 'sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-svagatha-bedha-sahitha aathmaa'. But, as long as 'I', the aathmaa is subject to such 'divisions' and , as a consequence, 'I' am only one of the many things in Creation, I will be miserable. There will be the tendency to compare and compete with others, resulting in raaghaa, dveshaa , superiority complex, inferiority complex etc.

Vedhaanthaa says: "I am not 'one of the things'. 'I' am the only thing". Without this knowledge and firm conviction, mokshaa is simply impossible. This is the contention of the Upanishad-s; this is the contention of Sankaraachaaryaa; and, this is the contention of Sureswaraachaaryaa also. In any knowledge, other than 'aathma ekathva jnaanam', you will not be 'free'. You will be a 'bonded' slave. Even as a devotee or even in mokshaa, instead of being a dhaasaa of local master, you will only be a dhaasaa, of course, of a greater master. But, is there any difference between an ordinary dhaasaa and an exalted dhaasaa?

Dayananda Swami humorously says : "You may be a driver of the President of India; so, the car you drive, may be an extraordinary, expensive car, which you cannot normally drive. The roads may be free of all traffic, when you drive the President's car. But, you are still only a driver. Your job might be a dhaasaa of an exalted person; but, you cannot be called 'free'. A 'free slave' is an oxymoron. It does not exist. As long as you have dhaasathvam, mokshaa is simply impossible. You should become a 'swam'. The term 'swam' does not mean a 'monk with kaashaaya vasthram'. It indicates a person with the conviction 'I' am the only Reality; everything else is of a lower order of reality' ".

Tharkaa will not give that ekathva jnaanam; therefore (the Aachaaryaa says):

- वाक्यार्थबोधकम् न स्यात् - it (reasoning) cannot be a revealer of the message of mahaa vaakyam.

The essence of the sentence is that 'reasoning' can never convey the message of the mahaa vaakyam. And, what is the message of the mahaa vaakyam? Ans: 'Aathma ekathvam'| 'Aathma ekathvam' means 'jagadh adhistaanathvam' meaning "'I' am the adhishtaanam of the entire universe".

It may be recollected here, that, the popular concept of "'jeevan mukthi', followed later by 'videha mukthi'" is also only a compromised concept of mokshaa. Many Vedhaanthic students have this compromised concept and think that every jnaani initially attains 'jeevan mukthi', which consists in 'continuing to survive in this world with a lot of patience and fortitude, to exhaust praarabhdhaa' and later attains 'videha mukthi', which is 'escaping from this world'. The 'escaping from the world' is from ahamkaaraa angle. Of course, Saasthraa-s do talk of this mokshaa.

But, this concept is allowed only in the initial stages of Vedhaanthic study. The Vedhaanthic student should gradually distance himself from this concept of 'jeevanmukthi-videhamukti mokshaa', since, this mokshaa is based on the idea "I am ahamkaaraa", and move to the ultimate concept of real mokshaa, which is the conviction : " 'I' am not ahamkaaraa; I do not have sanchithaa or aagaami or praarabhdhaa; then, where is the question of exhausting praarabhdhaa ? Where is the question of jeevanmukthi – videhamukthi division? 'I' am the 'jagadh adhishtaanam', in whom the whole universe is moving. Mayyeva sakalam jaatham".

This svaroopa avasthaanam is the real mokshaa; i.e., abiding in the fact "'I' am not the ahamkaaraa at all, to have to 'escape' from this world ; 'I' am the eka aathmaa " is real mokshaa.

Sankara Baghavadh Paadhaa's exhortation in his Upadesa Panchakam (verse 5) "Ekaanthesukham aasyathaam parathare chetha: samaadheeyathaam poornaathmaa susameekshyathaam jagadhidham thadhbaadhitham dhruvyathaam"— "Sit comfortably in a lonely (quiet) place, fix the mind on the Higher (Supreme) Self; seek the all-pervading aathmaa within; look upon the universe as negated / eliminated by the all-pervading aathmaa" is the height of Vedhaanthic vision. And, Sureswaraachaaryaa admonishes the poorva pakshin : " Why do you not recognize this? Why do you bleat like a lamb? Recognize your higher Self and roar like a lion". Reverting to the text:

- अतः - Therefore,
- अयं सदसद्व्युत्थित आत्मा - this advaita aathmaa, which transcends empirical existence and empirical non-existence
- वाक्यात् प्रतीयते - is knowable only through mahaa vaakyam.

The 'ayam' in 'ayam aathmaa' indicates 'aathma ekathvam' and 'aathma adhishtaanathvam'.

What is the nature of this 'advaita aathmaa'? Sureswaraacharya qualifies it as 'sadhasadhvyutthitha aathmaa'. 'Sath', in this context, means vyaavahaarika / empirical/ relative existence and 'asath' means vyaavahaarika / empirical/ relative non-existence. 'Relative existence + relative non-existence' is referred to, here, as 'sadhasadh'. Every object in this creation is subject to empirical existence during srushti kaalaa and empirical non-existence during pralaya kaalaa. Wherever vyaavahaarika sath is there, vyaavahaarika asath also will be there. And, who am 'I'? 'I' am sadhasadhvyutthitha aathmaa – an aathmaa which transcends relative existence and relative non-existence. That means 'I' am paaramaarthika sathyam. In another language, 'I' am of the higher order of reality. And, naturally, from 'my' standpoint, the entire world is of the lower order of reality / vyaavahaarika sathyam / mithyaa.

An aspirant can arrive at this conviction only through mahaa vaakyam. The Aacharya points this out by saying 'vaakyaath pratheeyathe'| Throughout this context 'vaakyam' should be understood as 'mahaa vaakyam'.

None of the other philosophies – Saamhkyaa, Yogaa, Nyaayaa, Vaiseshikaa, Dvaita Vedhaanthaa and even Visishtaadvaita Vedhaanthaa - arrives at these two orders of reality. Mahaa vaakyam alone can give me 'satthaabhedha:'| Then alone world will become mithyaa.

And, it should be remembered that the world can become an 'entertainment', only when it is understood to be of a lower order of reality. Even the severest problems met by characters in a movie, are 'entertainment' for the people who watch the movie, since they know that the movie is only make-believe. Problems can be reduced to entertainment, only when they are understood to be of a lower order of reality.

Life also can become an entertainment, when it is appreciated as of a lower order of reality ; and, that will become of a lower order, only when I elevate 'myself' into a higher order and .

This process of 'jacking up' is executed by the mahaa vaakyam. The Vedhaanthic guru struggles to elevate the disciple from the vyavahaarika level to the Paramaarthika level, using the the mahaa vaakyam`Thathvamasf.

Understandably the process is a long-drawn one, since the student is caught up in the pancha anaathmaa, consisting of possessions, profession, family, body and mind; and, as even as he manages to get elevated to the paaramaarthika level, quite often slips back. (Swamiji, in a lighter vein, refers here, to the irony of the students rushing to him, immediately after the intense Vedhaanthic lessons on the mithyaathvam of the world, seeking his special blessings to get out of their mundane problems.)

Mahaa vaakyaa is the lever which elevates the 'order of reality' of 'me'. The conviction "'I' am the only Reality and whatever I experience is of a lower order- mithyaa " has to be internalized. This conviction may be called 'binary' format. If the student fails to move into the 'binary' format and continues in the 'triangular' format of jeeva-jagath-Isvara, he will feel persecuted / harassed by the world and will 'run' to Bhagavaan repeatedly for succour.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, therefore, stresses on the importance of the mahaa vaakyam, assimilation of which will lead the aspirant to the Paaramaarthika level, by saying "ayam sadhasadh vyutthitha aathmaa vaakyaath pratheeyathe" – "The paaramaarthika aathmaa, which transcends empirical existence and empirical non-existence will be known only through the mahaa vaakyam".

Reverting to the text: The student / poorva pakshin does not give up, but, presents another argument to establish his view that mahaa vaakyam is not necessary:

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 58:

ननु यदि व्यावृत्तसदसद् विकल्पजालं वस्त्वभीष्टं वाक्याद्भवतस्तथापि तूत्सार्यते वाक्यविषया तृष्णा ।

If you desire to know the 'reality' bereft of all determinations of the form of existence and non-existence, through mahaa vaakyam, even then, the inclination to seek it through the mahaa vaakyam ought to cease.

This is the objection of the student / poorva pakshin who has not understood the significance of aathma ekathvam.

Whenever the term 'aathma ekathvam' is mentioned, the student should remember these two corollaries: (1) sajaatheeya- vijaatheeya-svagatha-bedha-rahithathvam of aathmaa and (2) satthaabedha: (the difference in the nature of 'existence' between 'I' and 'everything else' viz., that, 'I' am of a higher order of reality and everything else is of the lower order).

'Aathma ekathvam' term is a very significant, loaded term. Sankaraaacharya, in the introduction to his Brahmasoothra Bhaashyam, gives one of the most brilliant commentaries called 'Adhyaasa bhaashyam'. This is a very famous and important portion, on which a number of sub-commentators have written further annotations.

In fact, Sankaraacharya's original 'Adhyaasa Bhaashyam', compared to the subsequent commentaries, is a brief, cryptic, terse, encapsulated message.

In this Adhyaasa Bhaashyam, Sankaraacharya points out that the entire Vedhaanthee, especially the mahaa vaakyam, is to confer only one wisdom, viz., 'Liberating wisdom'. In conveying this important message, he uses this term 'aathma ekathvam'. He says: "Sarve Vedhaanthee: aarabhyanthe 'aatma ekathva vidhya' prathipatthaye"- "All Vedhaanthee portions are meant for conferring the 'aathma ekathva' knowledge".

What a loaded sentence is this "Aathma ekathva vidhya prathipatthaye"? All the Upanishad-s are meant only to raise the aspirants from the 'jeeva-jagath-Isvara' triangular format to the 'aathma-anaathma' binary format. All the Upanishad-s are struggling to achieve this purpose, using the 'lever' / 'jack' of mahaa vaakyam. A serious student should appreciate this, make proper use of the Upanishad-s and 'raise' himself from the Vyavahaarika level to the Paaramaarthika level. Otherwise the study of Vedhaanthee is futile. Sankaraacharya stresses on this aspect also in his Viveka Chooddamani (verse 59) - "avijnyaathe pare thathve saasthraadheethisthu nishpalaa" – "Study of the scriptures is fruitless, as long as Brahman has not been experienced".

Unfortunately, many students tend to consider Vedhaanthee study as 'time-pass' or an intellectual hobby, since they find it intellectually stimulating. And, they feel comfortable in the triangular format even after long periods of study, as if to say "The study of Upanishad, which, I am, no doubt, interested in, is one aspect; 'raising 'my' level' is an altogether different aspect, which, after all, is only optional".

165. Chapter III, Verses 58 (12-12-2009)Sambhandha gadhyam (Part) to Verse 58:

ननु यदि व्यावृत्तसदसद्विकल्पजालं वस्त्वभीष्टं वाक्यात्भवतस्तथापि तूत्सार्यते वाक्यविषया तृष्णा - यस्मादन्तरेणापि वाक्यश्रवणं निरस्त अशेष विकल्पं आगोपालाविपालपण्डितं सुषुप्ते वस्तु सिद्धमतो नार्थो वाक्यश्रवणेन ।

If you desire to know through the proposition (mahaa vaakyam) the reality, bereft of all determination of the form of existence and non-existence, even then, the inclination to seek it through the proposition ought to cease. Quite independent of all propositions, reality, bereft of all determinations, presents itself to everyone, be he a fool or a sage, in the state of dreamless sleep.

In the course of the discussion on the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, Sureswaraacharya pointed out, that, of the mahaa vaakyam, 'thath thvam asI', the 'thvam' padha vichaaraa part has to be completed first. For this purpose, we use the anvaya vyathirekhaa method, which is tharka pradhaanam. Through this tharka pramaanam itself, we arrive at the thvam padha lakshyaartha of saakshi. And, after arriving at the 'saakshi', which is the 'subject' in the mahaa vaakyam, we move over to the message of the mahaa vaakyam, namely, that, 'that saakshi (thvam) is Brahman (thath)'. 'Thath / Brahman' is, thus, the 'predicate' in the mahaa vaakyam.

As discussed already, whenever we use any sentence, the sentence must contain a known 'subject' and an unknown 'predicate'. In other words, in all the sentences, there should be a known part and an unknown part. If both the parts, viz., the 'subject' and the 'predicate' are already known to the listener, the sentence will become redundant. If, on the other hand, both the parts are unknown to the listener, i.e. if the 'subject' is also unknown to him, then the sentence will fail to communicate any message.

Therefore the conclusion, that, every purposeful sentence has got a known subject and an unknown predicate. In the mahaa vaakyam, 'thath thvam asI', the 'subject', the thvam padha, must be first understood by the aspirant, as saakshi, through anvaya vyathirekhaa or tharka pramaanaa. Only thereafter, the mahaa vaakyam will be useful in predicating this Brahma eikyam with regard to the known subject, viz., the thvam padha lakshyaartha saakshi.

In line with this conventional scheme, Sureswaraacharya first talked about the use of tharka pramaanaa in arriving at the saakshi and is now in the process of moving over to the 'predicate' of the mahaa vaakyam and its message of 'saakshi-Brahma-eikyam'. At this moment, some poorva pakshin-s enter the discussion; and, they argue that this much enquiry and consequent arriving at the saakshi itself are enough to complete the spiritual journey. They ask: "Why should we go to mahaa vaakyam at all?; why cannot we confine ourselves to thvam padha lakshyaartha saakshi jnaanam?" In other words, the poorva pakshin-s hold that tharkhaa itself gives complete aathma jnaanam and that mahaa vaakyam is not required at all. This is the contention of nyaayaa-vaisheshikaa philosophers, who arrived at aathmaa without using mahaa vaakyam.

In reply to this view, Sureswaraachaarya elaborately established in the previous slokaa, that, through tharkhaa or nyaayaa, the nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosopher can get only saamaanya aathma jnaanam, which consists of (i) 'aathma asthithva jnaanam', i.e. that, there is an aathmaa and (ii) 'aathma vyaapithva jnaanam', i.e., that, the aathmaa is all-pervading. The nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosopher does arrive at a vyaapaka aathmaa, different from the body-mind-sense complex.

"But" Sureswaraachaaryaa says "that vyaapaka aathma asthithva jnaanam, attained through logic, is only 'basic knowledge'. This knowledge is incomplete. The visesha jnaanam about aathmaa, the complete knowledge about aathmaa, cannot be attained by mere logic".

What is that visesha jnaanam, which the nyaaya-vaisheshikaa lacks? Ans: The 'Aathma visesha jnaanam' is 'aathma ekathva jnaanam'.

The nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosopher has got aathma asthithva jnaanam; he has got aathma vyaapithva jnaanam (vyaapithvam means 'pervasion'); but, he does not have aathma ekathva jnaanam. Consequently, his concept is that there are several all-pervading aathmaa-s, all subject to different types of 'divisions' also. Not only does the nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosopher not have aathma ekathva jnaanam, he does not have anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam also. These two components are extremely important; aathma asthithva jnaanam is not sufficient; aathma vyaapithva jnaanam is also not sufficient. To achieve 'liberation', we require aathma ekathva jnaanam and, in fact, more importantly, anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam.

The Nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosopher, through all his reasoning, is not able to arrive at aathma ekathvam and anaathma mithyaathvam. Without these two components, liberation is impossible. Advaitham insists that we cannot evade or gloss over anaathma mithyaathvam. A mumukshu should clearly be convinced of jagan mithyaathvam.

And, this jagan mithyaathvam is not just a theory floated by Sankaraachaaryaa. The Bhaagavadha Maha Puraanaa itself presents this elaborately, in its Uddhava Githa and Navayogi Samvaadhaa portions. In these portions, the svapna dhrushtaantha for the world i.e., 'equation of the world to svapnaa', was repeatedly given. The svapnaa example clearly points to jagan mithyaathvam.

No philosophy, including the nyaaya and vaiseshikaa philosophies, would ever be able to arrive at aathma ekathvam and anaathma mithyaathvam, using mere logic. To arrive at these two, what does an aspirant require? Ans: Mahaa vaakyam is a compulsory necessity for aathma ekathva jnaanam and anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam. And, therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa said, in verse 57: "Any amount of logic will give only saamaanya jnaanam ; the visesha jnaanam of aathmaa, transcending the vyavahaarika prapanchaa / going beyond the pairs of opposites, can never be achieved by mere reasoning; it can be attained only through mahaa vaakyam".

Aathmaa is defined by Katopanishad as "anyathra dharmath anyathra adharmaath anyathra asmaath kruthaakruthaath anyathra bhoothaascha bhavyaascha" (I.ii.14) – "different from dharma, different from adharma, different from this cause and effect and different from past and future".

Aathmaa is beyond dhurgunaa and sugunaa. It is beyond good, as well as evil attributes. It is beyond kaaryam and kaaranam; it is beyond relative existence and relative non-existence. In short, it is beyond all 'vikalpa' – meaning beyond 'all pairs of opposites'. And, a mumukshu, desirous of 'liberation', has to gather this 'nirvikalpaka aathma jnaanam'.

And, when this much was said, another poorva pakshin comes and says "But, this nirvikalpaka aathma jnaanam can be achieved by us, even without mahaa vaakyam". He argues: "If you want to get nirvikalpaka aathma jnaanam / awareness of an aathmaa which is beyond pairs of opposites / good and bad / small and big / healthy and sick / punyavaan and paapavaan , you can manage it without going to mahaa vaakyam. Not only can you 'know' it; you can also directly 'experience' the nirvikalpaka aathmaa". And, how? He replies: "Very simple. Go to sushupthi anubhavaa, where you experience nirvikalpaka aathmaa. And, after all, Bhagavaan has blessed every person with instinctive, natural and effortless sushupthi".

Of course, in sushupthi, dvaitham naasthi; thriputi naasthi; pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-vikalapa: naasthi; bokthru-boghya-vikalpa: naasthi; punya-paapa- vikalpa: naasthi | In 'deep sleep' state, all these vikalpa-s (divisions) are absent and we abide in our aathma svaroopam. What type of aathma svaroopam? Ans: Nirvikalpaka aathma svaroopam. "This being so, why do you require the mahaa vaakyam?" is the question of this interesting poorva pakshin.

Reverting to the text, the poorva pakshin addresses Sureswaraachaaryaa:

- ननु - To object to your conclusion:
- यदि - If,
- भवतः - for you,
- अभीष्टं - the object desired to be known (is)
- व्यावृत्त सदसद्विकल्पजालं वस्तु - the 'aathmaa', transcending all 'divisions' or 'pairs of opposites', like 'sath and asath',

'Sath' stands for 'relative existence' and 'asath' stands for 'relative non-existence'. The use of the term 'vikalpa jaalam' indicates that 'sadhaasth' is only one example of the numerous 'pairs of opposites'; and, that, all other pairs such as 'punyam-paapam', 'bokthaa-boghyam' etc., should also be included. In fact, it should be extended to 'thriputi-s' also, such as the 'pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi'. 'Thriputi' is also a form of 'vikalpa'. 'Vyaavrutthd' means 'free from'; what is desired to be known is 'aathmaa free from all 'vikalpa-s' / 'nirvikalpa aathma vasthu'.

- वाक्यात् - from the mahaa vaakyam,
- तथापि तु - in that case also,
- वाक्यविषया तृष्णा उत्सार्यते - your desire / keenness for mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is negated (by me).

'Uthsaryathe', literally means, 'thrown away' / 'swept aside' / 'brushed aside'.

The poorva pakshin wants to tell the siddhaanthin: " My view is that you are unnecessarily struggling / grappling with mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, which can cause only intellectual strain, instead of mokshaa. You are talking about three stages of analysis – saamaanaadhikaaranya sambhandha: , viseshana-viseshya-bhaava-sambhandha: and lakshya-lakshana-bhaava-sambhandha: | These are all difficult topics to be understood and even if understood, difficult to be remembered. In my opinion, mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is an exercise in futility, when there is an easier method". So, he started with this brief statement: "I negate your theory and I give you an easier option". This is his introduction. Now, he gives his argument. What is the argument and what is the easier method / option that he talks of?

The poorva pakshin says:

- यस्मात् - Because,

- वाक्यश्रवणं अन्तरेण अपि - even without engaging in mahaa vaakya Vichaaraa,
- सुषुप्ते - in the state of dreamless sleep,
- निरस्त अशेष विकल्पं वस्तु सिद्धं - an aathmaa, which is devoid of all sorts of 'divisions', is established

'vasthu', here, means 'aathmaa'. 'Nirastha asesha vikalpam' is adjective to 'vasthu' and means 'free from all forms of divisions'.

'Savikalpa aathmaa' is there in jaagrath avasthaa. 'Savikalpa aathmaa' is there in svapna avasthaa. Whereas, in sushupthi avasthaa, we are effortlessly abiding as 'nirvikalpa aathmaa'.

The Upanishad-s declare this fact. In the Chaandhogy Upanishad, Sage Uddhaalakaa tells his son Svethakethu: "Yathra ethath purusha: svapeethi naama sathaa soumya thadhaa sampanno bhavathi svam apeetho bhavathi | Thasmaath enam svapithi ithyaachakshathe" – "O good-looking one, when a man is spoken of as 'he sleeps', then he becomes merged in Existence; he attains his own Self and that is why he is called 'svapithi' " (VI.8.1). In sushupthi, we are one with Brahman. Prasnopanishad also says the same thing (IV. 1 & IV. 9). Several Upanishad-s say "In sushupthi, we are merged into Brahman". And, therefore, during deep-sleep state, jeevaathma-Paramaathma-bedhaa is not there; jeevaathma-jeevathma-bedhaa is not there.

Based on these, the poorva pakshin says "sushupthe nirastha asesha vikalpam vasthu siddham" – "In deep sleep state, an aathmaa which is devoid of all sorts of divisions, is established".

And, obviously, to go to 'deep sleep', one does not require saadhana chathushtaya sampaaathi; one does not require tharka jnaanam or vyaakarana jnaanam or meemaamsaa jnaanam. In the treatise, Viveka Choodaamani, a number of qualifications are mandated for venturing into mahaa vaakya vichaaraa: "medhaavee purusho vidvaan oohaapohavichakshana: adhikaari aathmaavidhyaayaam ukthalakshana lakshitha:" (verse 16) – "(the aspirant) should be intelligent and learned, with great powers of comprehension, and able to overcome doubts by the exercise of his reason. One who has these qualifications alone is fit for the knowledge of the Aathman".

"Whereas" the poorva pakshin claims: "without any of these qualifications, one can get nirvikalpaka aathma nishtaa (by going to 'deep sleep' state)". Therefore, who can experience that nirvikalpaka aathma, according to the poorva pakshin? He answers: "Every human being, whether literate or illiterate, of any varnaa – Braahmanaa, Kshakthriyaa, Vaisyaa or Soodhraa". He says:

- आगोपालाविपालपण्डितं - for everyone, whether illiterate or scholarly.

'gopaala.' means a 'cowherd boy'; 'avipaala.' means a 'shepherd boy'; 'aagopaalavipaala' indicates an 'uneducated' or 'illiterate' person. 'Panditha.' of course, refers to a scholar.

All persons experience one thing universally. What is that experience? Ans: sushupthi. And, in sushupthi, nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu is siddham. Nirvikalpaka aathma is experienced. The sentence, can be closed here, with the word 'siddham'.

It is the poorva pakshin who is saying all these. The siddhaanthin-s have to carefully listen to this line of argument, because, later, the siddhaanthins' answer to this argument, is to be extended to samaadhi also. Therefore, this discussion on sushupthi has to be carefully noted and understood. It is important, because many people question the necessity for 'Vedhaantha vichaaraa' and in its place, prescribe samaadhi abhyaasaa. This poorva pakshin, in the present portion, is prescribing sushupthi, for the 'knowledge' and 'experience' of a 'nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu'. There is another, stronger school of thought, which prescribes 'samaadhi' as the saadhanaa for achieving 'nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu jnaanam'. But, the Advaita siddhanthin-s say " Sushupthi can give neither aathma ekathva jnaanam nor anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam" ; and extending the same argument, hold " samaadhi also cannot give aathmaa ekathva jnaanam and anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam". Therefore, the Vedhaanthic student has to carefully study this portion.

The poorva pakshin continues:

अतः - Therefore,

वाक्यश्रवणेन न अर्थः - there is no benefit derived from mahaavaakya sravanam.

'Artha.' means 'prayojanam' / benefit.

This poorva pakshin tells the Vedhaanthin: "What you can learn through vaakya sravanam, we can know through sushupthi". As mentioned earlier, another group says "The knowledge you get through mahaa vaakya sravanam can be gathered by us, through samaadhi". Both groups hold "Therefore, mahaa vaakya sravanam is redundant. It is only an intellectual exercise and a waste of time".

Up to this is the poorva paksham. And, what is Sureswaraachaaryaa's answer?

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 58:

नैतदेवम् । किं कारणम् । सर्वानर्थबीजस्यात्मानवबोधस्य सुषुप्ते संभवात् ।

This objection cannot stand to reason. In sleep, there obtains the non-apprehension of the Self, which is the root-cause of all evil.

Sureswaraachaaryaa tells the poorva pakshin:

- एतद् एवं न भवति(- What you say is not acceptable in that manner.
- किं कारणम् - Why so?

Sureswaraachaaryaa himself raises this question 'why so?' and answers it. He says:

- सुषुप्ते आत्म अनवबोधस्य संभवात् - Since in the 'deep sleep' state, the 'self-ignorance' persists,

What type of 'self-ignorance'? The Aachaaryaa qualifies the 'self-ignorance' by an adjective.

- सर्व अनर्थ बीजस्य - which 'self-ignorance' is the seed / cause for all the problems of samsaaraa.

It is true, that, in sushupthi, we are in nirvikalpaka aathma anubhavaa. In sushupthi, there is no jeeva-jeeva-bedhaa; jeeva-Isvara-bedhaa is not there; jeeva-jagath-bedhaa is also not there. 'Pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi' is one type of division. Jeeva-jeeva-bedhaa (difference between one jeevaathmaa and another), jeeva-Isvara-bedhaa (difference between jeevaathmaa and Pramaathmaa) and jeeva-jagath-bedhaa (difference between jeevaathmaa and the world) are other types of division. In sushupthi, we do avoid all these divisions and do get nirvikalpaka-aathma-anubhavaa. But, there is a problem. What is that problem? Sureswaraachaaryaa points out: 'Aathma anavabodhasya sambhava:' – 'persistence of self-ignorance'. Self-ignorance persists in sushupthi. No doubt 'nirvikalapaka aathma anubhavaa' is there in sushupthi; but, along with nirvikalpaka aathma anubhavaa, there is the co-existence of aathmaa ajnaanam. 'Aathma anavabodhaa:' means 'aathma ajnaanam'. During sushupthi, we are very, very happy and comfortable. Then, what happens? We come out of sushupthi and as even as we come out, 'nirvikalpaa' is given up and 'savikalpaa' comes. Jeeva-jeeva-bedhaa comes; jeeva-jagath-bedhaa comes; jeeva-Isvara-bedhaa comes and samsaaraa also successfully comes back. 'Self-ignorance' cannot be permanently eliminated by going to sushupthi. The self-ignorance which persists / which has not been got rid of, is the seed for all the anarthaa – all problems of samsaaraa.

This is soothra vaakyam; hereafter is Sureswaraachaaryaa's vyaakyaanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 58 :

यदि हि सुषुप्तेऽज्ञानं नाभविष्यदन्तरेणापि वेदान्तवाक्यश्रवणमनननिदिध्यासनान्यहं
ब्रह्मास्मीत्यध्वसायात्सर्वप्राणभृतामपि स्वरसत एव सुषुप्तप्रतिपत्ते :सकलसंसारोच्छित्तिप्रसङ्गः ।

If there were no ignorance in sleep, then it should follow that the experience 'I am Brahman', must occur independent of the hearing of and reflection and meditation on Vedhaanthea; and, the bondage of all creatures must stand destroyed, since all creatures enjoy sleep as a matter of natural law.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "There is no doubt, that, in sushupthi avasthaa, I am abiding as nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu and I have the experience of the nirvikalpaka aathmaa | But, if this nirvikalpaka aathma anubhavaa itself is capable of removing ignorance, then that nirvikalpaka aathma anubhavaa in sushupthi itself, should give me mokshaa. That means that I should wake up not as a samsaari, but I should wake up as a muktha: | But, the situation is, unfortunately, different".

In other words : In sushupthi, everybody is abiding as nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu and if this abidance can remove ignorance, sushupthi should remove ignorance and if sushupthi removes ignorance, there must be mokshaa for everyone who goes to sleep. But, we know that this does not happen.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- यदि हि - Suppose,
- सुषुप्ते - in sushupthi avasthaa (in which one abides as nirvikalpaka aathmaa)
- अज्ञानं न अभविष्यत् - ignorance goes away,

'Na abhavishyath' is a grammatical form, conveying situations such as 'could have been' / 'should have been' etc.

The Aachaaryaa is talking about a hypothetical situation: " In 'deep sleep' state, when one is abiding as nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu, if ignorance goes away because of this nirvikalpaka aathma nishtaa or nirvikalpaka aathma anubhavaa in sushupthi," |

What would have happened, if ignorance had disappeared, because of the nirvikalpaka aathma vasthu nishtaa of the 'deep sleep' state?

Aachaaryaa says:

- 'अहं ब्रह्म अस्मि' इति अध्यवसायात् - (in that case) because of the rise of the firm knowledge 'I am Brahman', (consequent to ignorance 'going away'),

'adhyavasaaya' means 'dhruda jnaanam' or 'firm knowledge'.

- अन्तरेण अपि - even without going through / even without taking resource to
- वेदान्तवाक्यश्रवणमनननिदिध्यासनानि - the 'sravanam ', 'mananam ' and 'nidhidhyaasanam' of the mahaa vaakyam,
- सर्व प्राणभृतामपि - for all the living beings,
- स्वरसत : एव सुषुप्तप्रतिपत्ते : - due to the natural / effortless experience of 'deep sleep',

'svarasatha:' means 'naturally' / 'effortlessly'; 'sushupthi prathipatthi:' means 'the experience of the deep sleep state'.

-)स्वरसत : एव (सकल संसार उच्छित्तिप्रसङ्गः - the destruction of samsaaraa will naturally and effortlessly result.

The term 'svarasatha: eva' should be read twice: once, in real sense, in the context of 'deep sleep', which state is a 'natural / effortless' phenomenon for everyone, as 'sarvapraanabhruthaam api svarasatha: eva sushupthi:'; the second time, in a hypothetical sense, along with 'ucchithi prasangha:', as sarvapraanabhruthaam svarasatha: eva samsaara ucchithi: , i.e. to mean 'destruction of samsaaraa 'would have been' a 'natural / effortless' consequence of the deep sleep state'; | 'ucchithi:' means 'naasa:' / destruction.

Sureswaraachaaryaa's argument (presentation of the poorva pakshin's fallacy-ridden stand) should be followed, step by step:

- You go to sushupthi;
- in sushupthi, you abide as nirvikalpaka aathmaa;
- nirvikalpaka aathma nishtaa will remove ignorance;

- 'disappearance of ignorance' means 'acquisition of knowledge';
- therefore, the moment you enter sushupthi, you get the clear knowledge 'aham Brahma asmi'
- And, to whom will this happen? Ans: To all the people, since the experience of sushupthi is natural for all living beings.

Therefore, 'destruction of samsaara' also happens to everyone, without any effort.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to verse 58:

न च कैवल्यात्पुनरुत्थानं न्याय्यमनिर्मोक्षप्रसङ्गात् ।

From the mokshaa, attained in sushupthi, arising as a samsaari is not logically possible, since the very concept of mokshaa will get falsified, if mokshaa is temporary.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out the fallacy in the poorva-pakshin's stand: "If a person gets mokshaa in sushupthi, samsaara should not come again at the time of waking, whereas it does". All systems of philosophy are agreed on one aspect, viz., that "mokshaa is always final". Any acquired goal, other than mokshaa, is subject to loss also. As Lord Krishna points out in the Bhagavadh Githaa (IX - 20 & 21), even the attainment of svargaa is only finite : "Thraividhyaa: maam somapaa: poothapaapaa: yagnyai: ishtvaa svargathim praarthayanthe / They punyam aasaadhya surendralokam asnanthi divyaan divi devabogaan / They tham bhukthvaa svargalokam visaalam ksheene punye marthyalokam visanthi" – " Those people who know the three Vedaa-s, who drink the soma-juice (in soma sacrifice) and who are thus purified of sins, pray for access to the heavens. Reaching the sacred world of Indra, they enjoy the celestial pleasures of gods in the heavens. Having enjoyed the vast heavenly world, when their punyaa is exhausted, they come back to the world of mortals".

But, mokshaa, by definition, is never subject to loss. Therefore, if sushupthi gives mokshaa, on waking up, the sleeper should never be a samsaari again, whereas, he is.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says :

- कैवल्यात् - From the mokshaa, attained in sushupthi
- पुनरुत्थानं - arising / waking up, as a samsaari
- न च न्याय्यं - is not logically possible,

Why not? Ans: Because, if a person considered to have got mokshaa during sushupthi, wakes up a samsaari after sushupthi, the very definition of mokshaa will be falsified. This is what is said:

- अनिर्मोक्ष प्रसङ्गात् - since the very concept of mokshaa will get falsified, as mokshaa will become temporary.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to verse 58:

न चान्य एव सुषुप्तोऽन्य एवोत्थित इति शक्यं वक्तुं नाद्राक्षमहं सुषुप्तेऽन्यत्किंचिदपीत्युत्थितस्य प्रत्यभिजादर्शनात् ।

It is also not possible to say that one person goes to sleep and another person wakes up, because, the man who wakes up, recognizes his identity with the subject of sleep, in the experience 'I saw nothing else, while asleep'.

Sureswaraacharya answers a possible question, which the poorva pakshin may rise. The poorva pakshin's possible question is not given in the text. But, the Aacharya is answering a hypothetical position of the poorva pakshin.

The poorva pakshin may argue: "Everybody in sushupthi is going through nirvikalpaka aathma avasthaanam / nishtaa / anubhavaa. And, every jeevaathmaa, during and through that anubhavaa, destroys ignorance and becomes muktha: | What happens thereafter, is, that, when that muktha purusha:, i.e. that man who becomes muktha: in sushupthi, wakes up, it is not the same jeevaa, who went to sleep, that is waking up. It is another samsaari, who is waking up". This is a funny and foolish argument. Sureswaraacharya, probably, wants to have some fun also while discussing the serious Naishkarmya Siddhi topics, and, probably, therefore, presents such an argument by a poorva pakshin.

To repeat the possible argument of the poorva pakshin: "Everybody who enters into sushupthi becomes liberated; and, then, who comes back from sushupthi, is not the same person, but another person. Why cannot you say so?"

Sureswaraacharya answers : "That is also not possible, because the one who comes out of sushupthi, clearly says 'I slept like a log of wood and now I have woken up'. In other words, there is prathyabhignya of soham".

The term 'soham prathyabhignya' means 'recognition of the identity of the past 'I' in sushupthi and the present 'I' in jaagrath'. In this context, it is worth recollecting the use of this term, in the 6th verse of Sri Dakshinamooorthy Sthothram of Sankara Bhagavdh

Paadhaa. The relevant portion is "Praag asvaapsam ithi prabodha samaye ya: prathyabhignyaayathe" – "He, Who on waking up, remembers to have slept well".

"Therefore" the Aachaaryaa continues "you cannot say sushupthi has given liberation to the sleeper and the waker is a different entity. The prathyabhignyaa disproves your stand".

Reverting to the text: The Aachaaryaa tells the poorva pakshin,

- न च वक्तुं शक्यं - You cannot also give the argument,
- "अन्य एव सुषुप्तः अन्य एव उत्थितः" इति - that "the one who went to sleep is different and the one who woke up is different",

The word 'sushuptha:' means 'the sleeper', and, in this context, 'sleep' refers to 'dreamless sleep', because, only in dreamless sleep, the sleeper is in nirvikalpaka aathma nishtaa.

According to this assumed poorva pakshaa, the one who went to 'deep, dreamless sleep' got mukthi / liberation and the one who wakes up from the 'deep sleep' state is a different samsaari. In other words, the one who went to sleep and the one who woke up are different. This is the statement of the poorva pakshi.

And, Sureswaraachaaryaa says that the poorva pakshin cannot make such a statement. Why not? The Aachaaryaa explains:

- प्रत्यभिज्ञादर्शनात् - because of the experience of prathyabhignyaa,

'Prathyabhignyaa' means 'recognition of the equation of the past 'I' and the present 'I''. Whenever there is 'recognition', there is an equation of past and present. This is, in fact, indicated by the very English word 'recognition'. When an object is seen the first time, it is 'cognized' and when it is seen subsequently, it is 're-cognized'.

- उत्थितस्य वचनेन (- (because of the statement) of the person who wakes up,
- "अहं सुषुप्ते अन्यत् किञ्चित् अपि न अद्राक्षं" इति - viz., that "In deep sleep, I did not experience anything".

'na adhraaksham' means 'na dharsanam kruthavaan' / 'did not experience'.

When a person wakes up from 'deep sleep' state and says "I had a sound sleep, during which I did not experience anything", through this statement, he is equating the waking 'I' and the sleeping 'I', indicating that both are one and the same. In other words, the statement "I did not experience anything at the time of sushupthi" means "I was there in sushupthi and now the same I have woken up". This proves that the 'sleeper' and the 'one who has woken up' are one and the same. Therefore, what is the conclusion?

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to verse 58:

तस्मादवश्यं सुषुप्तेऽज्ञानमभ्युपगन्तव्यम् ।

Therefore, the existence of ignorance in sleep must be necessarily admitted.

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- सुषुप्ते - in sushupthi avsthaa,
- अज्ञानं - the existence of ajnaanam
- अवश्यं अभ्युपगन्तव्यम् - should be definitely accepted.

A person is nirvikalpaka aathma nishta: in sushupthi; he is in nirvikalpaka avasthaa alright; his anubhavaa is nirvikalpaka anubhavaa alright; but, that nirvikalpaka anubhavaa does not remove ignorance. Ignorance continues in sushupthi. That is the reason, that, while waking up, he does not wake up as a muktha purusha:, but, only as a samsaari purusha: /

We have to extend this law to the nirvikalpaka samaadhi practiced through Yoga. Consider the case of a a person who (i) has mastered the yama-niyama-aasana-praanayama-prathyaaharaa-dharana-dhyanaa-samaadhi ashtaanghaa of Yoga saasthraa, (ii) has also successfully done savikalpka and nirvikalpaka samaddhi abhyassa and (iii) is able to go to nirvikalpaka samaadhi effortlessly, suspending all thoughts, removing thriputi and the world, but refuses to study Vedhaanthee and to do mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

If the questions "Can this nirvikalpaka samaadhi anubhavaa - which means nirvikalpaka aathma nishta in the state of wakeful samaadhi - not in deep-sleep state, give aathma jnaanam to such a person? Can that anubhavaa give him aathma ekathva jnaanam and anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam? Can that anubhavaa educate him that aathmaa is eka: and everything else is anaathmaa and mithyaa?" are raised, the answer can only be "No, nirvikalpaka samaadhi can never give him aathma visesha jnaanam / aathma ekathva jnaanam nor anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam, since without mahaa vaakyam, the Yoga aspirant has no pramaanam to give him that knowledge". The nirvikalpaka aathmaa also cannot tell him that aathmaa is eka: and the entire anaathmaa is mithyaa. It cannot / does not whisper into his ears "I, the nirvikalpaka aathmaa is eka: and not only am 'I' the only one, the entire universe is mithyaa".

What is the proof? Ans: Because, in the yoga saasthraa, they talk about nirvikalpaka samaadhi and svaroope avasthaanam. But, after going through nirvikalpaka samaadhi, their conclusion is that, there are many aathmaa-s. Samaadhi did not give them the knowledge of aathma ekathvam. And, it never gave them the knowledge of anaathma mithyaathvam also.

Samaadhi cannot give aathma ekathva jnaanam and anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam. To achieve the aathma ekathva jnaanam and anaathma mithyaathva jnaanam, study of Vedhaanthaa / mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is a 'must'.

166. Chapter III, Verses 58 (19-12-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa pointed out that anvaya vyathirekhaa reasoning is very important and very useful for thvam padha lakshyaartha jnaanam, otherwise called saakshi jnaanam, otherwise called aathma saamanya jnaanam. "But", he also pointed out "this aathma saamanya jnaanam is not at all sufficient for liberation". After gaining this aathma saamanya jnaanam, one has to necessarily go for mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, which alone gives aathma visesha jnaanam / aathma ekathva jnaanam / aathma advaita jnaanam, which alone is the 'liberating' knowledge. Thus, the necessity of employing mahaa vaakyam, after using anvaya vyathirekhaa is being highlighted by Sureswaraachaaryaa.

But, different objections are raised by different poorva pakshin-s, to Sureswaraachaaryaa's viewpoint. There are people who argue "Why should mahaa vaakyam be employed at all? Why cannot we manage to get the aathma jnaanam by the use of 'reasoning' itself?"

In this paragraph under study, another poorva pakshin is voicing an objection to mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, in another manner. This topic was introduced in the earlier session. This poorva pakshin asks: "After all, our aim is to gain the knowledge of division-less aathmaa / vikalpa rahitha aathmaa / nirvikalpaka aathmaa. Why should we go to mahaa vaakyam for this purpose? Bhagavaan Himself has provided us with a nirvikalpaka state, a state devoid of any division, namely, sushupthi, wherein, in fact, we even experience a nirvikalpaka aathmaa. That being so, are we not gaining nirvikalpaka aathma jnaanam, in that division-less state, called sushupthi? Since the nirvikalpaka aathmaa can thus be known through nirvikalpaka avasthaa of sushupthi, why do we require mahaa vaakyam?"

To this objection, Sureswaraachaaryaa is giving his answer. He says: "No doubt, sushupthi is a nirvikalpaka avasthaa; but, in that avasthaa, no knowledge is possible. Knowledge is not possible, because, in nirvikalpaka avasthaa, thriputi is resolved, which means there is no pramaathaa and there is no pramaanam. What knowledge can a person gain, in the absence of pramaanam? Therefore, nirvikalpaka avasthaa is not a state of knowledge; it is a state of ignorance only. When no knowledge at all is possible, where is the question of achieving aathma visesha jnaanam? I will show that your stand is fallacious, by another fact also. If, as you claim, the nirvikalpaka avasthaa of sushupthi is a state of nirvikalpaka aathma jnaanam, then everyone who enters sushupthi will become a jnaani and since everyone naturally gets into the state of sushupthi, everyone will also naturally ('svarasatha: eva') get aathma jnaanam and will come out of sushupthi, as a liberated person. Does this happen?"

(In a lighter vein, Swamiji adds: "If this were to happen, how wonderful it would be? In that case, every aachaaryaa need provide only an ideal condition for sushupthi. In fact, you may argue, that the study of Naishkarmya Siddhi itself provides the condition.")

Thus, Sureswaraachaaryaa's contention is, that, the nirvikalpaka sushupthi avasthaa is ajnaana avasthaa only.

As an extension of the above objection, another question, which is also very important, can arise: "I concede, that, sushupthi, as a nirvikalpaka avasthaa may be a state of ignorance. But, what about samaadhi as a nirvikalpaka avasthaa? The Yoga saasthraa of the revered Sage Pathanjali talks about nirvikalpaka samaadhi avasthaa. Why cannot you take that avasthaa, as a state of knowledge?"

For this question also, Advaithin-s have the same answer only: " It is true, that, nirvikalpaka samaadhi avasthaa is also a division-less state, which is deliberately entered into, by the Yoga practitioners, in contrast to nirvikalpaka sushupthi avasthaa, which is a naturally attained state. But, whether one 'naturally' enters nirvikalpaka sushupthi avasthaa or whether one 'deliberately' enters nirvikalpaka samaadhi avasthaa, as far as 'knowledge' is concerned, it does not make a difference. What does 'nirvikalpaka avasthaa' mean? It means a 'division-less state', which, in turn, means that there is no pramaathaa and more importantly, there is no pramaanam. When there is no pramaanam, how can there be any knowledge? In fact, when even available knowledge will be resolved during the nirvikalpaka avasthaa, where is the question of any new knowledge arising? Therefore, our firm opinion is, that, nirvikalpaka samaadhi avasthaa also is a state of ajnaanam only".

The poorva pakshin persists: "But in the yoga saasthraa, when they talk about nirvikalpaka samaadhi, they do talk about it, as a state of awareness and wisdom. The yoga philosophers say 'thadhaa dhrashtu: svaroope avasthaanam' meaning 'at the time of nirvikalpaka samaadhi, after practicing Yogaa and after dissolving all the vrutthi-s (Yoga: chittha vrutthi norodha:) the Yoga aspirant is abiding in aathma svaroopaa. Yoga Saasthraa does not stop with this statement. The Saasthraa further claims, by another powerful soothraa, that the state of samaadhi is a state of wisdom. That relevant powerful soothraa runs 'rhuthambharaa thathra pragnyaa' – meaning 'there, i.e., in that state of samaadhi, a wisdom which is latent with / which is saturated with 'truth', is attained".

The word 'rhuthum' (ऋतं) means 'truth' or 'sathyam' | 'Rhuthambharaa pragnyaa' means 'sathya vishaya yuktha pragnyaa' or 'sathya vishaya jnaanam', meaning 'a wisdom latent with 'truth' '.

Therefore, the poorva pakshin asks the Advaithin: "Thus, yoga soothraa clearly says that, in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, the knowledge of 'truth' is there; that, samaadhi is a state of the knowledge of 'truth'. What do you say to this?"

What is the Advaithin's response? He will, in return, ask a question of the poorva pakshin / Yoga aspirant "If, in the nirvikalpaka samaadhi, you have attained the knowledge of the 'truth', tell me what is that 'truth', which you have attained?"

In the opinion of the Advaithin, if the yogic practitioner has really attained knowledge of the 'truth', he must reply "I have attained the knowledge that Advaitham is sathyam". But, this yoga expert, after going through nirvikalpaka samaadhi and claiming that he has got the knowledge of the 'truth', when asked "What is the 'truth'?" does not give this reply. Instead, like a layman, he continues to believe in jeevaathma-jeevaathma-bedhaa, jeevaathma-Paramaathma-bedhaa and also aathma-anaathma-bedhaa.

What does this prove? Ans: It only shows that, if at all the nirvikalpaka samaadhi avasthaa had produced any knowledge, it has endowed the samaadhi practitioner with 'aathma dvaitha jnaanam' only.

The Advaithin's opinion is that a nirvikalpaka avasthaa cannot give any knowledge whatsoever. But, even if it is accepted for argument's sake, (as abhyupethya vaadhaa) that nirvikalpaka avasthaa produces some knowledge, it does not give advaitha jnaanam; it does not give abedha jnaanam; it gives only bedha / dvaitha aathma jnaanam. It should be noted, that, even this acceptance of some kind of knowledge in samaadhi, is only a concession to the yoga practitioner.

The Yogi may have aathma saamaanya jnaanam. But, he does not have aathma visesha / ekathva jnaanam. He does not know that aathmaa is eka: / He thinks and says that there are many, many aathmaa-s. More importantly, he also does not know that anaathmaa is mithyaa.

Thus, the Advatha Vedhaanthin's contention, is that, nirvikalpaka samaadhi can never give aathma visesha jnaanam and, that, it is a state of ignorance only. The Advatha Vedhaanthin qualifies 'samaadhi' as 'andha samaadhi'. The adjective 'andha' literally means 'blind' and implies 'ignorance'. The Advatha Vedhaanthin, thus, holds samaadhi as a 'state of ignorance'. Even if it is conceded to be a state of awareness, the resulting 'awareness' can only be aathma saamaanya jnaanam.

And, what should the aspirant do for aathma visesha jnaanam? Ans: (In a lighter vein). As a first step, he should get up from samaadhi. (Seriously) He should resort to Vedhaantha / mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

Swami Dayanandhaa says "Some Vedhaanthic students try to listen to Vedhanthaa class, in meditation. But, Vedhaantha is not to be listened to, in meditation. It should be listened to, in mahaa jaagrath avasthaa, when the mind is fully awake and alert". The aspirant can, of course, use samaadhi for saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, chittha ekaagrathaa and also for chittha saanthi. But, samaadhi will not help in acquiring aathma visesha jnaanam, for which purpose, the aspirant has to do mahaa vaakya sravanam, naturally, in jaagrath avasthaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa consistently gives enormous importance to mahaa vaakyam, pointing out that neither tharkaa (reasoning) nor samaadhi can give aathma visesha jnaanam and, that, mahaa vaakyaa alone can.

Another important note, at this juncture: As is known, Advaitha aachaaryaa-s advise, that, after mahaa vaakya sravanam and after gaining visesha jnaanam, the aspirant is to practice nidhidhyaasanam meditation. The student may get confused by this statement, assuming that the recommended meditation is the same as yogic samaadhi. But, he should carefully note, that, it is not. This nidhidhyaasanam meditation is not the same as the yogic meditation of nirvikalpaka samaadhi. In nirvikalpaka samaadhi all vrutthi-s are removed. In Vedhaanthic meditation, the aspirant does not remove vrutthi. In other words, Vedhaanthic Nidhidhyaasanam is not a thoughtless state. Vedhaanthic meditation is a state of invoking advaita aathma jnaana vrutthi. The aspirant practices "chidhaanandha roopa: sivo ham sivo ham" vrutthi.

And, if the question "Is visesha jnaanam there, in Vedhaanthic nidhidhyaasanam?" is asked, the answer will be "Yes. In Vedhaanthic nidhidhyaasanam, which is not a thoughtless state, 'rhithambaraa prangnyaa' can be accepted".

This is because, in that meditation, the aspirant is not remaining in 'silence of the mind'; he is not removing all the thoughts; he is invoking advaita aathma jnaana vrutthi: and therefore, it is not ajnaana state. Vedhaanthic meditation is a state of knowledge only, as different from yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi. Vedhaanthic meditation involves jnaana vrutthi.

Then the last important note: When it is said that Vedhaanthic meditation is associated with jnaana vrutthi / advaita jnaana vrutthi / aathma visesha jnaana vrutthi, another question may be asked: "What generates that jnaana vrutthi in the Vedhaanthic meditation?" The answer will be: "That jnaana vrutthi in Vedhaanthic meditation is not generated by or in the meditation. It has been already generated through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. That jnaana vrutthi which the aspirant acquired earlier during mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is only 'invoked' by him during meditation"

To repeat: When a Vedhaanthin is meditating, he has got jnaanam but the jnaanam is not generated in the meditation; the jnaanam has been generated during the earlier mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, through the mahaa vaakya pramaanam. The jnaana vrutthi of the aspirant, during meditation, is a re-collected jnaana vrutthi; not generated jnaana vrutthi. This distinction should be understood properly.

To sum up, meditation does not generate jnaanam, whether it is Yogic meditation or Vedhaanthic meditation. In Yogic meditation, jnaanam is never there. In Vedhaanthic meditation jnaanam is there, jnaanam not generated during meditation, but, which has been collected during sravanam. It is 'recollected' jnaanam.

When the aspirant invokes "mano buddhyahamkaara chitthani na aham", he has already heard it from his guru during sravanam; sravanam 're_lived' is vedhaanthic nidhidhyaasnam . It is not a thoughtless state.

In Vedhaanthic meditation, jnaanam is there; but in yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi, or in sushupthi, jnaanam is not there. Both are replete only with ajnaanam. Reverting to the text:

ॐ तस्मात् - therefore,

ॐ सुषुप्ते - in the state of 'sushupthi',

ॐ अज्ञानं - the presence of ignorance

ॐ अवश्यं उपगन्तव्यम्- should certainly be accepted.

This is true about yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi also.

What is the 'ignorance' talked about? Ans: 'Aathma visesha jnaana abhaava:'| And, to remove that ignorance, the aspirant should resort to mahaa vaakyam. This is the stand of Sureswaraacharya, all through these discussions.

(In a lighter vein : Just as in the modern election campaigns, the speakers conclude their election addresses with the fervent appeal "Vote for our candidate", Sureswaraacharya's bottom line is "Vote for mahaa vaakyam. Do not vote for samaadhi for knowledge. Do not get confused". This is the election campaign of Sureswaraacharya, for the mahaa vaakyam candidate).

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 58:

ननु यदि तत्र अज्ञानं अभविष्यत् राग द्वेष घटाज्ञानादिवत् प्रत्यक्षम् अभविष्यत् यथा इह लोके "घटं न जानामि " इति अज्ञानं अव्यवहितं प्रत्यक्षम् । अत्रोच्यते । न अभिव्यञ्जक अभावात्। कथं अभिव्यञ्जक अभावइति चेच्छृणु । :

"But" it may be argued "if there were ignorance in sleep, it should have been a matter of perception like the ignorance of desire, hatred and things like a jar in waking life. In ordinary experience, ignorance of the form 'I do not know the jar' is a case of immediate perception". To this, we reply that, there is no perception of ignorance in sleep itself, because, the conditions needed for manifesting perceptual experience are absent in sleep. If you ask how the conditions are absent then, we give the following explanation.

ॐ ननु - But,

'Nanu' means 'an objection'. In the Indian Parliament, it has become the practice of the opposition party, to create obstacles to the ruling party, in the conduct of the business of the House. In a similar manner, the poorva pakshin does not allow the Aachaaryaa to proceed further. He starts his objection with the word 'nanu'.

Before we commence to elaborate on the poorva pakshin's objection, it should be noted, that, when the term 'ajnaanam' is used, it should be understood, in this context, as 'aathma visesha ajnaanam' / 'advaita ajnaanam' / 'Ignorance of advaitam'.

To proceed with the poorva pakshin's question: "You say that, in sushupthi, jnaanam is not present; ajnaanam is present. If advaita ajnaanam is there, in sushupthi or in yogic samaadhi, how come, I am not able to clearly know the presence of that ignorance? How come, I do not clearly experience that ajnaanam? I should be saying, 'in sushupthi, I am experiencing ignorance'. Why cannot I say that? After all, aathmaa is there, in sushupthi also, to reveal the ajnaanam. How, then, do I not clearly and directly experience and also claim that I have ajnaana anubhava? In jaagrath avasthaa, when I have got ignorance of anything, I am able to clearly know that ignorance. Not only do I know and experience the ignorance, I directly express my 'ignorance' also. If somebody asks me whether I am aware of something of which I do not have any knowledge, I am able to admit, very clearly, 'No, I am ignorant of that'. There are many types of ignorance, which I have in jaagrath avasthaa. The ignorance is directly experienced by saakshi. Ignorance is saakshi prathyaksham. In jaagrath avasthaa, saakshi directly experiences ghata ajnaanam / pata ajnaanam etc. Not only do I experience the ignorance, I can directly express it also. For instance, if I do not know the language of Chinese, when someone asks me 'Do you know Chinese?', I am able to reply: 'No, I do not know Chinese'. Similarly, when I am walking on the street, if somebody asks 'Where is the house of such and such person?', and I do not know the house, I reply 'I do not know'. Whereas, in sushupthi, when saakshi is there, and advaita ajnaanam is there, how come I do not clearly experience that ajnaanam and also do not declare 'I do not know?' "

Proceeding with the text,

ॐ यदि अज्ञानं अभविष्यत् - if ajnaanam were there,

'Abhavishyath' (as discussed already, in an earlier session) is a special usage in Sanskrit grammar, indicating a 'conditional class' or a 'hypothetical situation'. According to the poorva pakshin, in sushupthi and samaadhi avasthaa-s, ajnaanam is not there. Therefore, he starts his question with this conditional class, 'if ajnaanam were there'.

ॐ तत्र in 'sushupthiavasthaa' (and 'yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi avsthaa')

Though Sureswaraachaaryaa does not include the yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi avasthaa, the word 'thathra', can be taken to mean 'yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi avsthaayaam' also.

ॐ प्रत्यक्षम् अभविश्यत् - it (that ajnaanam) should be a matter of perception,

The poorva pakshin again uses the special word 'abhavishyath', to indicate a hypothetical possibility 'I should have directly known that aathma ajnaanam'. His contention is that if aathma ajnaanam is there in sushupthi avasthaa, as held by the Vedhaanthin, the person in 'deep sleep', should be directly aware of that ignorance.

To support his contention, he gives an example:

ॐ राग द्वेष घट अज्ञानादिवत् - similar to emotions such as attachment or hatred or ignorance of things like a jar,

ॐ राग द्वेष घट अज्ञानादिवत्

He explains the example.

ॐ यथा इफ़ लोके - as in the world , during the jaagrath avasthaa

ॐ अज्ञानं अव्यवहितं प्रच्यक्षम् - ignorance is a matter of direct / immediate perception
'avyavahitham' means 'direct' or 'immediate'.

ॐ “घटं न जानामि” इति - in the form of 'I do not know the pot' etc.

The poorva pakshin asks: "In jaagrath avasthaa, when I have attachment or hatred or when I have ignorance of various objects in the world, they are all 'saakshi prathyaksham', different from 'indriya prathyaksham'. The external world is indriya prathyaksham. The internal world is saakshi prathyaksham. The internal raaghaa is saakshi prathyaksham, in jaagrath avasthaa. The internal dveshaa is saakshi prathyaksham, in jaagrath avasthaa. The internal ghata ajnaanam, pata ajnaanam etc., are saakshi prathyaksham in jaagrath avasthaa. Why is aathma ajnaanam in sushupthi, not saakshi prathyaksham, in a similar manner? Sushupthi avasthaayaam, aathma ajnaanam saakshi prathyakshathaayaa katham na anubhootham? How come it is not directly experienced? In jaagrath avasthaa, I am also able to admit to my 'ignorance' on many things. In sushupthi avasthaa, why do I not say 'I don't know aathmaa', in the same manner? How come a person in 'deep sleep', does not know and does not declare his ignorance?"

Up to this is the poorva pakshaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "I will tell you; listen to me".

ॐ अत्र - With regard to this question,

ॐ उच्यते - the answer is being given.

What is the answer?

ॐ न - There is no perception of ignorance (in sushupthi),

ॐ अभिव्यञ्जक अभावात् - because of the absence of the conditions needed for perceptual experience / because there is no medium available for manifestation of the ignorance.

What is the idea conveyed? This is a very important, subtle and technical idea, requiring a detailed explanation, which is given below:

There are certain things in the creation, which can be experienced directly, because of their very existence. But, there are certain other things, which cannot be experienced directly based on their mere existence, as they are of very subtle nature. Such subtle entities require a manifesting medium. Only in the presence of the medium, they will become manifest or available for experience. Their existence does not require a medium. But, their 'availability for experience' requires a medium.

An illustration for this fact, 'sunlight', has been discussed in earlier sessions, in different contexts. The sunlight may be spread over an entire hall; but, even though the light exists all over and the light is existent by itself, it is not 'experienced' all over. Because of its subtle nature, its very existence is lost sight of. 'Experience' of the sunlight requires a medium, for instance, the 'stretched palm of a hand', i.e., a palm, which is put out. When the palm is not there, the sunlight is not noticed; but, when the palm is stretched out in the light, the palm becomes the medium for turning the 'non-experienced' sunlight to 'experienced' sunlight. This shows that the 'existent' sunlight depends on a medium for its 'experience'. The hand depends upon sunlight for its 'illumination'. In turn, the sunlight also depends on the hand for its manifestation or for its 'availability for experience'. Therefore, there is a mutual dependence between the hand and the sunlight. Light is 'experienced' because of the hand; hand is 'experienced' because of the light. Each one is experienced because of the other. But their methods of mutual help are different. Sunlight helps the hand as an 'illuminator'. In Sanskrit, it is called prakaasakam. The hand helps the sunlight, not as an 'illuminator', but, as a 'manifesting medium'. In Sanskrit, it is called abhivyanjakam. Sunlight helps the hand as prakaasakam. Hand helps the sunlight as the abhivyanjakam. Prakaasakam depends on abhivyanjakam and abhivyanjakam depends on prakaasakam, for both of them to be experienced. If any one of them is not available, neither of them can be experienced.

'Sunlight' is only an example; this is true of Consciousness also. 'Consciousness' and 'matter' are dependent on each other for their 'availability for experience'. Consciousness 'illuminates' the matter, i.e., the 'matter' is 'experienced' because of Consciousness. Consciousness helps matter as prakaasakam, as a revealer or illuminator. In turn, matter also helps Consciousness, as abhivyanjakam. If body-matter or mind-matter is absent (abhivyanjaka abhaave), though Consciousness continues to exist, it cannot be experienced in the form "'I' am".

To consolidate: Consciousness depends on matter and matter depends on Consciousness for their 'availability for experience'. They are mutually dependent, but, in two different ways – one (viz., matter) requires prakaasakam and the other (viz., Consciousness) requires abhivyanjakam.

This fact is eloquently presented in Chapter VI, of the Prasnopanishad. The Upanishad says, that, before creation, aathmaa made a samkalpaa. What is that samkalpaa? Ans: "If I have to do vyavahaaraa in the world, in the forms, 'I am aathmaa / 'I am Brahman / 'I am saakshi etc., I require body, mind, praanaa etc." "Therefore" the Upanishad declares "sa: praanam asrujatha praanaath shraddhaam kham vaayurjyothiraapa: pruthiveendriyam mana: | annam annadveeryam thapo manthraaa: karma lokaa lokeshu cha naama cha" (VI.4) – meaning " Therefore, He (Purushaa) created praanaa; from praanaa, he created faith, space, air, fire, water, earth, organs, mind, food; from food, He created vigour, self-control, manthraa-s, rites, word and name in the worlds"| The Upanishad uses the term 'shodasa kalaa purusha:' – 'a Purushaa, in whom originate sixteen digits or limbs'. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa writes an elaborate Bhaashyaa for this portion.

All these show that there are many 'pairs', which are mutually dependent as prakaasakam and abhivyanjakam. The first example quoted above (for the pair) is "sunlight and object". 'Sunlight' is prakaasakam or 'revealer'; and 'object' is abhivyanjakam, called in English, as 'medium'. In the example, 'sunlight' and 'object' have 'prakaasaka-abhivyanjaka-sambhandha:' or 'revealer-medium-relationship'.

In the same manner, 'Consciousness' and 'mind' (or 'anaathmaa', in general) have got 'prakaasaka-abhivyanjaka-sambhandha:'|

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa introduces a third similar pair. What is that? Ans: 'Ajnaanam' and 'mind'. He says, that, they also have got that connection.

In sushupthi avasthaa, 'pure ignorance', called 'moolaavidhyaa' exists; but it is not manifest. (It may be recollected that the term 'moolaavidhyaa' was studied in great detail, in the introduction to this chapter).

In sushupthi, moolaavidhyaa does exist; but to 'experience' that moolaavidhyaa and to express that moolaavidhyaa, in the form "I do not know", an abhivyanjakam / medium is required.

And, what is the abhivyanjakam? Ans: Mind is that abhivyanjakam.

But, it should be carefully noted, that, in the context of the pair 'moolaavidhyaa' and 'mind', we do not say that 'moolaavidhyaa' is prakaasakam and 'mind' is 'abhivyanjakam', as we did in the two examples given above. We only say, that, 'moolaavidhyaa' is 'abhivyaktham' when the mind is there and that, 'moolaavidhyaa' is 'avyaktham', in the absence of the mind. To repeat: When the mind is not there, moolaavidhyaa is avyaktham; when the mind is there, moolaavidhyaa is abhivyaktham. ('Abhivyaktham' means 'available for experience' or 'manifest'. 'Avyaktham' means 'not available for experience' or 'not manifest').

It follows, therefore, that, in jaagrath avasthaa, because the mind (the abhivyanjaka medium) is available, one can admit "I do not know the fact 'Aham Brahma asmi". When such a statement is made, the 'moolaavidhyaa' is 'abhivyaktha moolaavidhyaa' i.e., 'manifest ignorance'.

In contrast, the 'moolaavidhyaa' in sushupthi, is 'avyaktha moolaavidhyaa', or 'non-manifested ignorance'. This is because of the absence of the mind, in sushupthi. Even though saakshi is present in sushupthi, saakshi, by itself, is incapable of converting avyaktha moolaavidhyaa into abhivyaktha moolaavidhyaa. In other words, in sushupthi, saakshi is there; moolaavidhyaa is there; and, still, moolaavidhyaa continues to be avyaktha moolaavidhyaa. For moolaavidhyaa to become abhivyaktham, mind is also required, in addition to saakshi. Saakshi, only along with the mind medium, can 'manifest' moolaavidhyaa. The mind being absent in sushupthi, though moolaavidhyaa is there, the person in sushupthi does not know that he suffers from moolaavidhyaa.

This is true of 'yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi' also. In yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi also, moolaavidhyaa is there. Even if an aspirant sits in samaadhi, for a length of time, when he gets up from samaadhi, he will not / cannot claim "aham brahma asmi" | Why not? Ans: Because moolaavidhyaa is there, in yogic samaadhi also.

Whereas, when the aspirant operates mahaa vaakyam, he attacks the moolaavidhyaa directly and gets rid of it.

Sureswaraacharya implies all the above details, when he succinctly gives the reason as 'abhivyanjaka abhaavaath', meaning 'since there is no manifesting medium for manifesting moolaavidhyaa'. This brief reply 'Abivyanjaka abhaavaath' should be understood as 'moolaavidhyaa abhivyanjaka antha: karana abhaavaath'.

When? Ans: Sushupthi avsthaayaam / in 'sushupthi' state.

Proceeding:

कथं अभिव्यञ्जक अभावः" - "How do you say that abhivyanjaka is not there?"

This may be taken as the next question by the poorva pakshin or as a preemptive question by the Aachaaryaa.

If it is assumed as the poorva pakshin's question, how do we understand his mind?
Ans: He thinks: "In sushupthi, saakshi is there. And, saakshi is a 'revealer'. Admitting that moolaavidhyaa is there in sushupthi, as the Vedhaanthin claims, I should clearly know and also say, "I do not know Brahman" because of the 'revealer' saakshi. But, I am not able to." This is the poorva pakshin's doubt.

The Aachaaryaa replies:

इति चेत् श्रुणु - If you are raising such a question, then, listen to me.

The Aachaaryaa's answer follows in the verse.

167. Chapter III, Verses 58 and 59 (26-12-2009)

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to point out that we have to first arrive at the saakshi with the help of anvaya vyathirekhaa reasoning and after arriving at the saakshi, we have to use the mahaa vaakyam, to gain saakshi brahma eikyam, which is the liberating knowledge. We can arrive at the saakshi without mahaa vaakyam; but we can never know the saakshi advaitham, without mahaa vaakyam. That knowledge has to be gained through mahaa vaakyam only.

At this juncture, different poorva pakshin-s are raising objections, to this viewpoint of Sureswaraachaaryaa. They argue that mahaa vaakyam is not a compulsory necessity for acquisition of saakshi svaroopaa jnaanam; that, even without going through mahaa vaakyam, using other means, it is possible to get the saakshi svaroopaa jnaanam and the consequent liberation.

One set of poorva pakshin-s talk about the experience of sushupthi. In sushupthi, saakshi alone is present as the advaitam, because all the dvaitham-s and thriputi-s are resolved in sushupthi. Nirvikalpaka advaita saakshi is available in sushupthi. "Therefore" this poorva pakshin says "It must be possible for a person to get the saakshi svaroopaa jnaanam or saakshi advaita jnaanam by going to sushupthi. And, for such people, the mahaa vaakya will not be required".

An identical argument is presented by another poorva pakshin, favouring samaadhi avasthaa, instead of sushupthi avasthaa.

When these arguments are presented by the poorva pakshin-s, Sureswaraachaaryaa replies: "No doubt when dvaitham and thriputi are resolved, there is only advaita or nirvikalpaka saakshi; but, even so, the saakshi svaroopaa jnaanam will not take place in sushupthi or samaadhi, because, there is no pramaanam in sushupthi and samaadhi, to remove the already existing ajnaanam. Since ajnaanam-removing pramaanam-s are absent both in sushupthi and in samaadhi, ajnaanam will continue to exist in those states. I do not say that ajnaanam 'comes' in sushupthi / samaadhi; ajnaanam need not 'come', for the simple reason that, we are already 'rich' with ajnaanam. But, I do hold and say, that, that the existing ajnaanam will continue in sushupthi and samaadhi. 'Ajnaana nivarthaka pramaanasya abhaavaath thathra -

'because of the absence of a pramaanam capable of removing ajnaanam, both in sushupthi and samaadhi, the ajnaanam will continue.

When this much was said by Sureswaraachaaryaa, the poorva pakshin is raising another question. He asks the Aachaaryaa: "How do you say, that, in sushupthi or samaadhi, ajnaanam is present? If ajnaanam were there in sushupthi, that ajnaanam must have been clearly experienced by the saakshi. In sushupthi, dvaithaa is absent; but, saakshi is present; thriputi is absent; but, thriputi-saakshi is present; and, saakshi is of the nature of chaithanyam / Consciousness. 'I' am there, as the saakshi in sushupthi; 'I' am of the nature of Consciousness and, therefore, 'I' should be able to experience the ajnaanam at that time. Not only should 'I' be able to experience, 'I' should be aware of that ajnaanam also; i.e. I should know that 'aham saakshi ajnaanam jaanaami'. If there were ajnaanam in sushupthi, I should have the experience of the ajnaanam and also the realization that I have that ajnaanam.

"You are talking about the presence of ignorance in sushupthi, but, after waking up. After waking up, you say, there must have been ignorance in sushupthi. In other words, you are proving 'ignorance in sushupthi only by inference, based on the 'anubhavaa in the waking'. Why should there be inference? Why cannot I directly experience ajnaanam, when the illuminator-saakshi is present? The fact, that, saakshi is capable of directly experiencing any ajnaanam, is proved in jaagrath avasthaa. In jaagrath avasthaa, when I am ignorant of different things (say, the Chinese language or a mathematical theorem), I am able realize that ajnaanam. In other words, during jaagrath avasthaa, saakshi is illumining ghata ajnaanam, pata ajnaanam etc. directly. I do not 'infer' ajnaanam. Not only do I realize my ignorance, but, I am also able to express that ignorance. I say 'I do not know Chinese, ghata: / pata: etc.'. Why cannot I directly 'know' my saakshi advaita ajnaanam in sushupthi, 'directly', in the same manner, and also say that I have got saakshi ajnaanam or 'ignorance'? "

The poorva pakshin uses the term 'raagha dvesha ghata ajnaanavath', to give (i) desire (ii) hatred and (iii) ignorance of 'objects', all in jaagrath avasthaa, as examples. He says: "In jaagrath avsthaa, ghata ajnaanam ('ghata is only an example) is directly experienced by me and I say 'aham ghatam na jaanaami'. In sushupthi, why cannot I experience the 'ignorance' and also say 'aham saakshinam na jaanaami', in the same manner? Since I do not experience 'ignorance' in sushupthi, I conclude 'ignorance' must not / cannot be there in sushupthi".

The answer to this question of the poorva pakshin is given by Sureswaraachaaryaa briefly as "na abhivyanjaka abhaavaath". What is the answer? "Even though ignorance is there in sushupthi, ignorance is not manifestly / clearly / directly available in sushupthi, because there is no medium to manifest the ignorance".

"'Ignorance' also requires a medium to manifest" is the information that the Aachaaryaa gives. He says: "For its existence, 'ignorance' does not require any medium other than saakshi. But, for the ignorance to be directly experienced, saakshi alone is not enough; in addition to the saakshi, a medium is required for manifestation of ignorance". 'Manifesting medium' is called abhivyanjakam.

This subtle and abstract fact was illustrated in the earlier session, by two examples. The first example was 'light'. Light in its pure form cannot be experienced, without the availability of an object; i.e., if light has to be experienced, one requires an object to manifest / reflect the light. In Swamiji's words : " When I am conducting the class, you experience the light on my body and you experience the light on the mike before me. But, though light exists also in the space between my body and the mike, that light is not manifest because an object- medium is not there in that space". 'Consciousness' was given as the second example. Consciousness is also manifested, only when there is a medium, namely, the body-mind complex.

In the same manner, ignorance also requires a medium. And, that 'medium' is the mind. Only in the jaagrath avasthaa, the mind is available and therefore, in jaagrath avasthaa, we can clearly experience and talk about not only ignorance of 'anaathmaa', but, about aathma ajnaanam also. We can talk about these, only when the mind is available", whereas in sushupthi, the mind-medium is dormant.

To establish this fact, Sureswaraachaaryaa gives his example in this slokaa.

Verse 58 – Chapter III :

बाह्यां वृत्तिमनुपाध्य व्यक्तिः स्यान्नाहमो यथा ।

न ऋते अन्तः करणं तद्वत् ध्वान्तस्य व्यक्तिराञ्जसी ॥ ५८ ॥

The ego does not manifest itself without generating the awareness of external objects. In the same way, in the absence of the internal sense, namely, the mind, ignorance does not enjoy the status of a perceptual object.

What is the example that Sureswaraacharya gives? The example is 'ahamkaaraa' and its non-perception / non-manifestation in deep sleep state.

Sureswaraacharya says: "Ahamkaaraa is existent in all the three periods of time / states of existence. Ahamkaaraa is there in jaagrath avasthaa; ahamkaaraa is there in svapnaa avasthaa. In sushupthi avasthaa also, ahamkaaraa is there. If anyone doubts the existence of ahamkaaraa in sushupthi, that doubt will be dispelled, if he considers the fact, that, if ahamkaaraa is 'destroyed' or 'gone' in sushupthi, a sleeper will not wake up at all. Ahamkaaraa, having been 'destroyed', will not 'come out'. The very fact that the 'sleeper' wakes up and ahamkaaraa 'comes out' in the next jaagrath avasthaa, shows that ahamkaaraa is very much there, in sushupthi avasthaa also.

"This statement may give rise to the questions: 'If ahamkaaraa is there in sushupthi, how come, I do not experience the ahamkaaraa? How come, I am comfortably sleeping, forgetting my individuality, worry etc? How come, I am not claiming that I am the ahamkaaraa?' etc. My answer to these questions is that, ahamkaaraa requires a medium for its manifestation. The 'I' notion / the 'I' thought requires a medium for its manifestation. And, that medium is the 'mind'. The mind-medium is required for the manifestation of ahamkaaraa. In sushupthi, the mind-medium is resolved / dormant / inactive / passive / nonfunctional. But it is not absent. Since the medium is not active, 'aham', the ahamkaaraa, is also not active. And, in the jaagrath avasthaa, only when the external world and the thoughts arise, then alone the ahamkaaraa gets manifested. In other words, the external world has to get activated and the world vrutthi / the idham vrutthi-s will have to arrive and only at that time, aham vrutthi will become evident. In the absence of idham vrutthi, aham vrutthi cannot become evident".

Reverting to the text,

ॐ यथा - Just as,

ॐ बाह्यां वृत्तिं अनुत्पाद्य - without the awareness of external objects,

'Baahya vrutthi' mean 'idham vrutthi', which, in turn, means 'world vrutthi', such as 'this is pot / this is cot / this is bedroom' etc.

Without the rise of this objective vrutthi,

ॐ अहमः व्यक्तिः न स्यात् - the 'ahamkaaraa' / 'aham vrutthi' cannot express / manifest itself,

'ahama:' means 'ahamkaarasya'/of ahamkaaraa. 'Vyakthi:' means 'manifestation'.

In sushupthi, ahamkaaraa is in non-manifested form. Only, in the jaagrath avasthaa, when 'idham vrutthi' rises, 'aham' also will rise.

Using ahamkaaraa as the example, the Aachaaryaa says "In a similar manner, 'ignorance' also does not manifest in sushupthi, in the absence of the medium of 'mind' ".

ॐ तद्वत् - in the same manner,

ॐ न ऋते अन्तकरणं - without the mind,

ॐ 'ruthe' (ऋते) is an indeclinable word, meaning vinaa /without.

ॐ ध्वान्तस्य व्यक्तिः (न स्यात्) - manifestation of 'ignorance' will not be there

ॐ आज्ञसी - directly.

The literal meaning of 'dhvaantham' is 'darkness'. In this context, the word implies 'ignorance' – 'darkness of ignorance'. 'Vyakthi:' means 'manifestation'.

The essence of the sentence: "In sushupthi, in the absence of the mind, direct manifestation of the ignorance will not be there, similar to the non-manifestation of ahamkaaraa, in the absence of the mind". And, since, thus, 'ignorance in sushupthi is not prathyaksha siddham, we are forced to 'infer' that ignorance.

To repeat: For the prathyaksha siddhi of ignorance, mind is required. In the absence of mind, ignorance will not be prathyaksha siddham. How it will become siddham? You have to only 'infer', that, in sushupthi, ignorance must have been there.

Therefore, what is the conclusion? Ans: In sushupthi and samaadhi, ajnaanam will continue to exist in a non-manifested condition.

And, if you want to remove that ajnaanam, what should you do? Ans: You will have to resort to Vedhaantha vichaaraa. You will have to come to mahaa vaakyam to remove the ignorance. Proceeding:

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 59:

कश्चिदतिक्रान्तं प्रतिस्मृत्य "दृश्यत्वादहमप्येवं लिङ्गं स्यादष्टरात्मनः" इति
निर्युक्तिकमभिहितमित्याह । किं कारणं । अहं तद् ज्ञात्रोः विवेक अप्रसिद्धेः । यथेह
घटदेवदत्तयोर्ग्राह्यग्राहकत्वेन स्फुटतरो विभागः प्रसिद्धो लोके न तथा अहंकार तद् ज्ञात्रोः विभागः
अस्तीति तस्मादसाध्वेतदभिहितमिति । अत्रोच्यते ।

Someone remembering what has been discussed before, objects to the statement that 'the ego also, being an object, becomes an inferential clue to the witnessing Self' (in verse 56) as illogical. On what grounds? He says: "Because the distinction between the ego and the knower of the ego is not a well known fact. We know clearly that the jar and Devadatta who knows the jar, are mutually different, one being the object seen and the other its seer. The same is not the case with the ego and its seer. Hence the statement referred to, is untrue". We say the following in reply:

Another abstract topic follows. In these portions, Sureswaraacharya has continuously discussing abstract topics. Dayananda Swamiji exclaims: "Our aacharyaas have got un-sagging / untiring intellects. Our (ordinary mortals') intellects' after studying just one abstract topic, will 'sag', just as our physical bodies get tired and sag. We will look for a break from the study, trying to spur our minds with cups of coffee. But, these aacharyaas have got such thorough-going intellects, that after discussing one abstract topic, they can effortlessly move to another abstract topic without a break, and with the same vigour shown, while discussing the earlier topic".

Now, the poorva pakshin comes again, raising another question, averring that the Aacharyaas anvaya vyathirekhaa argument itself has got certain defects. He tells the Aacharyaas: "You went through a series of vivekaa, called dhruk dhrusya vivekaa, through which vivekaa, you talked about arriving at the saakshi as the 'subject'. In the process of dhruk dhrusya vivekaa, you said, that, (i) when the external world is object, the sense organs are the subject (ii) when sense organs are the objects, mind is the subject and (iii) when mind is the object, saakshi is the subject. Thus, in your opinion, through a series of dhruk-dhrusya vivaadhaa or graahaka-graahya vivaadhaa, the ultimate stage, viz., 'I am the saakshi – dhruk; mind is dhrusyam / an 'object of experience' is reached. You said that, mind, otherwise called ahamkaaraa is dhrusyam and if the mind has to be a dhrusyam, it presupposes a dhruk, which is the saakshi. You also pointed out, that, saakshi never becomes dhrusyam, but is always dhruk. Thus, with the help of the mind as dhrusyam, you inferred or arrived at saakshi as the dhruk. But, I find this conclusion of yours illogical"

Before we proceed, the following should be noted: "When the mind is there, I use the word aham, meaning I. When the mind is not there, I do not use the word aham; therefore, mind is equal to ahamkaaraa; i.e. the mind is otherwise called ahamkaaraa or simply aham. The three words are synonymous. Aham = ahamkaaraa = mind".

Proceeding: The topic of saakshi-ahamkaara vivekaa was covered in verse 56, in which, Sureswaraacharya said "aham / ahamkaaraa / mind is dhrusyam, the 'object of experience'. If the mind is an object, there must be a subject. What is that subject? Ans: 'I', the saakshi. 'I', the saakshi / dhruk am different from ahamkaaraa, the dhrusyam". This was the argument given by Sureswaraacharya in verse 56.

The poorva pakshin is quoting this, from verse no. 56, here. He says:

ॐ "अहं अपि दृश्यत्वात् - "Ahamkaaraa also being an object of experience

ॐ द्रष्टुः आत्मनः लिङ्गं स्यात्" - becomes an indicator of the witnessing Self".

The ahamkaaraa-dhrusyam is an indicator of the dhrastaa-aathmaa. 'I' the saakshi, am different from the mind, the ahamkaaraa, which is saakshyam. Ahamkaaraa is saakshyam; 'I' am the saakshi. This 'saakshya-saakshi separation' was done by Sureswaraacharya using this sentence. What is the object of the poorva-pakshin in recollecting this sentence of the Aacharya?

The sambhandha gadyam has the explanation:

ॐ कश्चित् - Someone (a poorvapakshin),

ॐ प्रतिस्मृत्य - remembering / recollecting

ॐ अतिक्रान्तं - what has been said earlier, (referring to the statement above),

ॐ आह - says:

ॐ अभिहितं - "what has been averred by you (again, meaning the statement above), ॐ नित्युक्तिकं इति - is illogical / yukthirahitham / unreasonable".

The poorva pakshin tells Sureswaraacharya: "What was stated by you (in verse 56), namely, 'the ego also being an object of experience, becomes an inferential clue to the witnessing Self' is illogical".

Then, Sureswaraacharya asks the poorva pakshin:

ॐ किं कारणं - What is the cause (on which you find my statement illogical)?

The poorva pakshin replies:

ॐ अहं तद् ज्ञात्रोः विवेक अप्रसिद्धेः- Because the distinction between the ego and the knower of the ego is not a clearly understood fact.

The poorva pakshin's contention is: "We never experience saakshi and the mind as two distinct entities. I am not able to clearly / distinctly experience saakshi and the mind as two distinct entities. I am not able to say, with conviction: 'I am the saakshi and here is my mind'. Nor: 'I am the observer Consciousness and my mind is the observed object'. The observer / observed division between the Consciousness and the mind is not at all clear for me. You are making this division, which I am neither able to experience nor understand. When you say 'pot is an object observed and you are the different observer', I am able to clearly understand, that, I am the 'observer' and pot is the 'observed'; that, I am 'here' and pot is 'there'. The dhruk-dhrusya vivekaa is sputam (clear) when you are making that statement. I can clearly understand that statement; but, when you extend it as the example to the 'mind-Consciousness' pair, I am at a loss. I do not distinctly experience mind as the 'observed object' and Consciousness as the 'observer subject'. Therefore, in my opinion, the saakshi-ahamkaara differentiation / the chaitanya-mind differentiation is unnecessarily created by you. I am not willing to buy your argument.

Consciousness as something distinct from mind and as an 'observer of mind' is not convincing to me".

Therefore, the poorva pakshin gives this reply "aham thadh jnaathro: viveka aprasiddhe:" | In this statement, 'aham' means 'ahamkaara', which, in turn, means 'mind'. 'Thadh jnaathru' means 'the knower / observer of that mind'. And, what is that observer? Ans: Aathmaa / saakshi / the Consciousness. 'Viveka' means 'distinction' and 'aprasiddhi:' means 'not clearly understood'.

The poorva pakshin says: "The distinction between the 'mind' and the 'observer of the mind' is never clearly known, nor clearly experienced, nor clearly understood. Only in Vedhaanthaa, you say: 'Mind is an 'object' and 'you' are the 'subject' ' When it comes to a 'ghatam' and its 'observer', the distinction is very clear. But, not in the context of the 'mind' and its 'observer' ".

The poorva pakshin further argues: "I try to meditate on what you have stated ; I try to silence the mind; I try to see the mind; I try to remain as saakshi. But, nothing happens. Even in meditation, I am not able to distinctly experience / discern a saakshi separated from the mind, unlike the 'pot'. I am able to distinct the 'mind' from the 'pot; but not from the 'saakshi, however much I dwell or meditate on this".

'Aham thath jnaathro: (madhye)' means 'ahamkaara saakshino: (madhye)' / 'antha:karana chaithanyo: (madhye)' | In all the above three terms, 'Madhye' meaning 'between them', is supplied.

The cause of the poorva pakshin's suspecting the veracity of the Aachaaryaa's statement, is given in the sentence 'Aham thadh jnaathro: viveka aprasiddhe:', which is connected to the earlier term, in the text, 'abhihitham niryuktham', as below:

ॐ viveka aprasiddhe: - Since distinction is not evident

ॐ Aham thath jnaathro: (madhye) - between the mind and saakshi,

ॐ Abhihitham niryuktham - your statement is illogical.

The poorva pakshin explains his statement further:

ॐ घटदेवदत्तयोः विभागः - The distinction between a 'pot' and its 'observer',(say)
Devadhatthaa,

ॐ स्फुटतर : प्रसिद्धः - is very clearly known

ॐ ग्राह्य ग्राहकत्वेन - in the form of the 'observed' and the 'observer',

ॐ इह लोके - in our mundane experience,

(An aside: 'graahaka graahyam' is another term for 'dhruk dhrusyam'. Yet another term is 'bhaasaka bhaasyam'. It is interesting to note, that, in their treatises, the Aacharya-s use different Sanskrit terms to convey the same meaning. Their object is to add literary value even to their Vedhaanthic granthaa-s, though, such usage may be somewhat confusing to the students. But, the practice does have an advantage, viz., that, the granthaa becomes more attractive).

ॐ अहंकार तद् जात्रोः विभागः - The distinction between ahamkaaraa and saakshi / the mind and the Consciousness

ॐ (स्फुटतरः) न अस्ति - is not at all clear,

ॐ यथा तथा - in the same manner as the clear distinction between the 'pot' and its 'observer' Devadhatthaa.

It is because of this reason, that, we find it difficult to claim: "I am the Consciousness, different from the mind". If that fact is clear, we can understand and also implement the extortion "neighbourise the mind / ahamkaaraa".

'Neighbourise' is not a word in use in the English language, but conveys the meaning effectively. The word is used to convey "Mind is an object different from 'I', the Consciousness and 'I' am the Consciousness, separate from the mind". This 'distancing' is quite difficult to achieve, if not impossible. That is why when one's mind is depressed, one does not say "my mind is depressed" and instead says "I am depressed". The 'objectification' of the mind is more easily said than done.

ॐ इति तस्मात् - This being so,

ॐ एतद् अभिहितं - what you said, (viz., that 'saakshi is dhruk and mind is dhrusyam and therefore, they are distinct')
'abhihitham' means 'your statement'.

ॐ असाधु - is unreasonable and illogical.

ॐ इति - So argues the poorva pakshin.

And, if the aspirant cannot arrive at the saakshi itself, how can he go to mahaa vaakyam? Only after arriving at the saakshi, one can go to mahaa vaakyam.

"We are not able to arrive at saakshi; that is why mahaa vaakyam also fails" is the poorva pakshaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa answers:

अत्र उच्यते - With regard to the poorva pakshaa, answer is given .

Verse 59 – Chapter III:

दाह्यदाहकतैकत्र यथा स्याद्वह्निदारुणो : ।

जेयजातृकतैवं स्यादहंजात्रोः परस्परम् ॥ ५९ ॥

The object being burnt and the agency that burns co-exist in the fire and fuel. In the same way, the property of being the knower and that of being the object known, co-exist in the knower (Consciousness) and the ego.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives a very subtle and abstract answer. He says: "There are many 'subject-object' pairs, such as (i) the 'seer' and the 'seen' (ii) the 'hearer' and the 'heard' (iii) the 'lifter' and the 'lifted' (iv) the 'teacher' and the 'taught' etc. In every action, there is a subject and there is an object. In other words, every action links a subject and an object. And, therefore, in creation / in this world, there are many subject-object pairs. But, the 'subject-object' pairs are of two types. There is one group of 'subject-object' pairs, where the subject and object have got very clear distance and distinction. Whereas, there are certain other cases, where, though there is a subject-object pair, that pair does not exist with a distinct physical distance between the subject and object. Therefore, their distinction also (as subject and object) is not discernible ; it is not clearly visible. But, just because the distinction is not clear you cannot take them as one entity; you should understand them as 'subject-object' pair only, even though they are co-existing as if they are one entity.

"To repeat: In certain subject-object pairs, even though they are distinct as subject and object, they co-exist. But, even though they co-exist and appear as one unitary entity, you have to discern and understand that it is not one unit; it appears as one unit; but, it is a pair having subject-object relationship.

"There are examples, through which, you will clearly understand my view. You will have to extend those examples to 'Consciousness and mind' pair also, and discern them as one such pair. Mind and Consciousness together appear as one unit; but, they are two distinct units put together, appearing as one; and, they are related as 'subject - object' / 'illuminator-illuminated' pair".

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives an example in this verse.

Before entering the text, the example is explained by Swamiji: "Assume that a pot of rice is being cooked using an old-fashioned earthen stove. The pot of rice is placed on the stove. Under the pot, there is fire i.e. burning firewood. We say that, the firewood is cooking the rice. Between the firewood and rice, the distinction is very clear; firewood is underneath and rice is above; the division between the 'cooking' fire and the rice that is being 'cooked', is physically experienced.

"But, when you look at the firewood itself, what do we experience? We experience the fire and the firewood as one unitary entity. The fire principle and the wood are co-existing in one place, as though there is an unitary entity. You know that the 'fire' you experience is not one entity; it consists of the 'fire principle' and the fuel 'wood'. We use the word 'fire' , because we think that the fire principle and the wood put together is one entity; but, when you enquire into it , you realize, that, 'fire' is not one entity; there is co-existence of two things - the 'fire principle' and the wood. The 'fire principle' is the 'burner' and the wood is the 'burnt'. 'Fire principle' is dhaahakam; wood is dhaahyam. They are co-existing as one 'burning fire' and you also tend to treat them as one unitary entity. You are taking the pair as the 'burner' / 'cooker' and the rice as the 'cooked'. But, in the experience of 'fire' itself, how many things are there? There are two things. What are the two things? The wood and the fire principle You treat them as one 'fire'; but, it is not one 'fire' cooking the rice; the fire itself consists of the pair of 'subject' and 'object', appearing as one entity. 'Fire' is a pair consisting of 'subject' and 'object'. What is the 'subject'? The fire principle is the subject, the dhaahakam. And, the wood is dhaahyam. The dhaahya and dhaahaka are experienced together as one unit. Visibly you are not able to separate the fire and the wood. But, still you know that they are two separate entities. Why? Because the wood does not have burning power of its own. Therefore, there are two things (i) the wood and (ii) the non-separable 'fire principle' in and through the wood. 'Fire principle' is not a part or product or property of the wood; it is an independent all-pervading fire principle, which is in and through the firewood. There are two things, the fire principle and the wood. But, in this case, i.e., when the wood is 'burning' and 'cooking' the rice, this pair of 'fire and wood' cannot be physically separated; you will have to separate them only cognitively / intellectually.

"Another example is 'hot water'. When you experience hot water, when you say 'hot water burnt my hand', our experience is as though hot water is one entity; but, really speaking hot water is a mixture of non-hot water and the fire principle, which is pervading the water. When you say 'hot water burns my hand', actually, it is not the water that is burning; it is the fire principle, which is pervading the water which burns. In fact, the 'fire principle' burns the water first and through the water it burns the hand".

"Sureswaraachaaryaa's argument is, that, in a similar manner, in many cases of 'pairs', the 'subject' and the 'object' cannot be physically separated. They have to be intellectually separated. The Aachaaryaa points out, that, the 'saakshi' – 'ahamkaaraa' pair is also one such pair to be similarly discerned, though they (saakshi and ahamkaaraa) appear as one unitary entity".

Swamiji concludes his detailed explanation of the example, with the comment: "I will give you another example later".

Reverting to the text:

ॐ एकत्र - co-existing in one and the same locus,

ॐ दाह्य दाहकता स्यात् - there exists the relationship of the 'burner' and the 'burnt'

ॐ यथा - Just as,

ॐ वह्नि दारुणोः (मध्ये) - between the fire and the firewood (fuel)

'ekathra' means 'ekasmin sthale' / in one and the same place . The subject, 'burner fire' is there; in the very same place, the 'burnt wood' is also there. They are not physically separable. But, you understand and know that there are two principles.

ॐ एवं - in the same manner,

ॐ अहं जात्रोः (मध्ये) - between the ahamkaaraa and its knower 'saakshi' also / between the mind and Consciousness also

'aham' refers to 'ahamkaaraa', the mind ; '(thadh) jnaathru' means 'its knower', which denotes 'Consciousness', the saakshi.

ॐ परस्परम् ज्ञेयज्ञातृकता - a mutual relationship of the 'observed' and the 'observer'

ॐ स्यात् - exists.

Which is the 'observer'? Ans: 'Consciousness' is the 'observer'; but (to be carefully noted) 'not by doing the job of 'observing''. 'Fire' is not doing the job of 'burning the firewood'. Fire just 'is'; the firewood gets burnt. Similarly, in the presence of the Consciousness, the mind gets observed. From that standpoint only 'Consciousness' is called 'observer'.

Therefore, one cannot physically separate mind and Consciousness. One has to intellectually understand. How to do that? The explanation will follow.

168: Chapter III, Verses 59 and 60 (02-01-2010)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is clarifying a doubt raised by a poorva pakshin, with regard to the dhruk-dhrusya vivekaa. The poorva pakshin's doubt is: "When I try to differentiate the observer Consciousness and the observed objects of the world, the difference between the two, viz., the observer Consciousness and the observed objects like a pot etc., is very, very clear. But, when I try the same exercise with my physical 'body' as the 'observed' object, instead of the 'pot', the difference between the 'observer' and the 'observed' gets hazier. And, when I finally extend the exercise to my mind or ahamkaaraa, in the place of the pot and the body, the difference between the 'observer saakshi' and the 'observed mind / ahamkaaraa' is not at all clearly distinguishable. I can 'distance' the pot outside; but, I am not able to 'push' the mind away, like the pot; and, I am not able to exist as pure saakshi. In other words, I am not able to differentiate saakshi, as something in my close proximity, simultaneously visualizing the mind as an object, a few feet away. I am not able to say "here 'I' am, the saakshi and 'there' is the mind / ahamkaaraa' or conversely, "here' is the ahamkaaraa and 'there' is the saakshi. I am not able to physically distinguish saakshi from ahamkaaraa. Therefore, I am not able to clearly understand your dhruk-dhrusya vivekaa".

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "Yes, such a problem does exist. That is because, unfortunately, saakshi and mind cannot be physically separated. Therefore, let me explain. In mundane experiences, we come across many cases of 'subject-object' pair, where the 'subject' and 'object' are physically away from each other. But, we also find, that, in certain other cases, the 'subject' and 'object' pair are not physically away from each other. In other words, we have 'subject-object' pairs with a physical distance and we also have 'subject-object' pairs without a physical distance. There are many examples for 'pairs' with physical distance between the subject and object. For instance, when an individual sits on a chair for dining and the food is on the table, there is a clear distinction between the 'eater' on the chair and the 'food' on the table. The diner is the 'subject' and the food is the 'object'. There is a clear physical distance between the two. We can have several examples of such 'pairs'. But, there are a few rare cases, where there is no physical distance between the subject and the object."

The Aachaaryaa gives an example for such unique pairs. What is the example? Ans: The fire principle and the firewood which the fire is burning. When the fire is burning the wood, both the 'burnt wood' and the 'burning fire' are co-existing in one locus. And, we experience them as one single entity viz., as 'fire'; but, in that one experience, there is the 'subject-object' pair. The burning fire is the subject and the burnt wood is the object. They are co-existing and we experience them as a single entity. If the fire is separated from the wood, or from any fuel, whether the fuel is oil, gas or wood, the fire principle separated from the fuel, is not even visible. In other words, whenever you experience fire, it is invariably experienced only along with the burnt fuel. The 'saakshi-ahamkaaraa' or 'Consciousness-mind' pair is similar. Saakshi is like fire; mind is like the fuel. The saakshi fire and the mind fuel coexist in one locus. You cannot physically separate them and experience only the Consciousness or only the mind. 'Fire principle and firewood' is the example, that is given by the Aachaaryaa, in the slokaa, for the 'saakshi-ahamkaaraa' pair.

In Swamiji's words: "As promised in the earlier session, I will give you another example. This topic is a very important topic, since you can have many corollaries derived from it. It has to be, therefore, analyzed thoroughly and understood clearly.

"The example, which I want to give, is the example of the moonlight on a full moon night. I am planning to analyze the experience of the moonlight on a full moon night. The example will give us a lot of insight, with regard to saakshi and ahamkaaraa. When I experience moonlight on the full moon night, I generally refer to it as just 'moonlight', without a second thought. But, suppose I make a detailed analysis of the so-called 'moon-light', the first information I get / the first shocking discovery that I make, is, that, there can be no such thing called moonlight, since moon does not have light of its own. When moon does not have light, the very word moonlight is a loosely used expression, born out of misconception. In that case, what is actually there? Ans: There are two things co-existing there, both of which I am experiencing together. I am not experiencing moonlight; but, I am experiencing a pair of things which are co-existing in one locus. What is that pair? I am experiencing (i) the moon and (ii) the sunlight which is falling on the moon. I am not experiencing moonlight; in reality, I am experiencing moon plus sunlight. I am experiencing sunlight on the moon / sunlight spread over the moon / moon and sunlight mingled.

“And, what is the relationship between the sunlight and the moon, which pair I am experiencing ? Ans: Sunlight is the ‘illuminator’ principle and the moon is the ‘illuminated’ principle. I am experiencing the sunlight, the illuminator principle and the moon which is the illuminated principle. I am experiencing the ‘illuminator-illuminated’ pair as a mixture. The relationship between the moon and the sunlight is called ‘avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandha:’ | I am experiencing the avabhaasya-avabhaasakaa pair. Sunlight is the illuminator or avabhaasakaa; moon is the illuminated or avabhaasyam. The moon is non effulgent. It is illuminated and sunlight is the illuminator. (Swamiji cautions: Later, we are going to apply each of these points to ‘saakshi and mind’ pair, and at the time of application, you should remember every point.)

“Moon gets illumination from the sunlight. But, from where does sunlight gets illumination? Ans: Sunlight does not / need not get illumination from anywhere. Sun is self-effulgent. The self-effulgent sunlight illumines the non-effulgent moon. The self-effulgent sunlight is the illuminator and the non-effulgent moon is the illuminated. So, if the question ‘what do you experience on a full moon night?’ is asked and you reply ‘moonlight’, really speaking, it will not be the correct answer. ‘I am experiencing the illuminator sunlight and I am experiencing the illuminated moon’ will be the appropriate answer. Also, the moon being non-effulgent, if the sunlight is not there, the moon will not be illuminated, the moon cannot be revealed and the moon cannot be experienced.

“Now, suppose I get a desire ‘I am experiencing the sunlight along with the moon. But, I want to experience the pure sunlight alone’. And, suppose, to fulfill that desire, I remove the moon. Of course, the ‘removal’ can only be hypothetical. To experience the pure sunlight, hypothetically, I remove the moon. What will be left out? If the moon is abolished, in the sky where the moon was there before, in that place, the pure sunlight should be there.

“But, when there is pure sunlight without the moon, is it possible for me to experience the sunlight in that place of the moon? What will be the answer? The answer will be: ‘If the moon were absent, even though the sky is there, even though the sunlight is there, even though the sunlight is self-effulgent, the self-effulgent sunlight will not be revealed’.

“Therefore, the important lesson is, that, the self-effulgent sunlight also requires a medium for its revelation. Self-effulgent sunlight also, even though it is self effulgent, requires a medium. What is the medium here? Ans: The moon. Sunlight is revealed because of the moon. Earlier, it was said that moon is revealed because of the sunlight. Now, on analysis, we understand, that sunlight is revealed, only because of the moon. Therefore, each of them is revealed, because of the other. Moon will not be revealed without sunlight and sunlight will not be revealed without moon. In short, both of them mutually help each other in their revelation. And, any one of them will not be revealed, if the other one is absent.

“On further analysis, I realize, that, even though both of them depend on each other for their revelation, the nature of ‘dependence’ is of two different types. An analogy can be considered an ‘employer–employee’ pair. In this ‘employer – employee’ pair also, both the employer and the employee depend on each other and the natures of the ‘dependence’ are different. The employer depends on the employee for getting his work done; the employee depends on the employer for money. Obviously, a situation where each of them depending on the other, for the sake of money is not possible. They are dependent on each other for two different purposes. Similarly, though sunlight and moon depend on each other for the revelation of both, the natures of the dependence is different. How? Moon depends on sunlight for illumination ; as the ‘illuminator’, sunlight helps the moon. Their relationship (as already indicated) is called ‘avabhaasya ababhaasaka sambhandha:’| As the avabhaasaka (the ‘illuminator’), sunlight helps the moon and the moon is helped, as the avabhaasyam (the ‘illumined’). Now, how does the moon help the sunlight? Even though sunlight is self-effulgent, even that self-effulgent sunlight requires the assistance of the moon; the moon helps in the manifestation of the self-effulgent sunlight. Sunlight has to be manifested and only then, it will be revealed; therefore, moon helps the sunlight as the manifesting medium. In Sanskrit, the moon, in this context, is called abhivyanjakam, a very powerful role. The moon plays the role of abhivyanjakam, the ‘manifesting medium’. The sunlight helped by the moon is abhivyanjyam. Abhivyanjya-abhivyanjaka sambhandhaa is also there, between the sunlight and the moon. Moon helps the sunlight as abhivyanjakam; sunlight helps the moon as prakaasakam. Thus, mutually helping each other, both of them get revealed.

“If the moon is absent, self effulgent sunlight will not be revealed; the self effulgent sunlight will be anabhivyaktham or avyakthaam. It will be ‘unrevealed sunlight’ in the absence of moon; and, the unrevealed sunlight cannot be experienced by anyone. Therefore, both of them require each other for their revelation. Only when both of them are revealed, they can be experienced.

“Now, let us assume that the moonlight is experienced by two people on a full moon light, one an ‘informed’ person and the other an ‘uninformed’ person. When the uninformed person experiences moonlight he will say: ‘I am experiencing the moonlight’. And, when he thus says ‘I am experiencing the moonlight’, by using the word ‘moonlight’, what is the mistake he is committing? Ans: He thinks that he is experiencing the light belonging to the moon i.e. he thinks it is the ‘light’ for which moon is the source. Whereas, when an informed person experiences the moonlight and says ‘I am experiencing the moonlight’, even as he says that, in his mind, he will never think that he is experiencing the moonlight. What will be his understanding? It will be: ‘I am experiencing the sunlight, manifested by the moon’.

“Ignorant person thinks and says ‘I am experiencing the moonlight belonging to the moon’; the wise person understands ‘I am experiencing the sunlight manifested by the moon’. The experience of the light is the same; there is no difference in the experience. But one is experience backed by right understanding and the other is experience backed by wrong understanding. Experience backed by wrong understanding is ‘moonlight’ experience. Experience backed by right understanding is ‘sunlight’ experience.

“Now, let us apply this ‘sunlight-moon’ pair as analogy to the saakshi-mind pair. The mind is like the moon. And, saakshi is like the sunlight. And, we (in Vedhaanthaa) say that both of them depend on each other for their revelation. Both of them depend on each other for their revelation and if anyone of them is removed / if they are separated, neither will be revealed. The two of them are not dependent on each other for their existence. But, both of them do depend on each other for their revelation. Therefore, when they are separated, mind also will not be revealed; and, saakshi also will not be revealed. Both of them can be revealed only when both of them are there together.

“And, while, thus both of them depend on each other for their revelation, the dependence is of two different types, just as in the case of the ‘sunlight-moon’ pair. For what purpose is ‘mind’ dependent on the saakshi? Ans: For its illumination. Mind is dependent on the saakshi for its illumination, because mind is jadam. Therefore, what is the relationship between mind and saakshi, from this perspective? Ans: Avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandha: | Saakshi is the avabhaasakaa (the illuminator) and mind is the avabhaasyam (the illumined). Saakshi also depends on the mind for its revelation. For what purpose does saakshi depend on the mind?

Ans: Not for its illumination because saakshi is self-effulgent; but, that self-effulgent saakshi, even though it is self-effulgent (most important fact, to be noted very carefully), the self-effulgent saakshi depends on the mind for its manifestation. For its manifestation, saakshi depends on the mind. If the mind is removed, even though saakshi is self-effulgent, that self-effulgent saakshi, in the absence of the mind, will become non-manifest. And, the non-manifested saakshi will be unrevealed saakshi and unrevealed saakshi cannot be experienced. From this perspective, the relationship between saakshi and mind is abhivyanjya-abhivyanjaka sambhandha:, the mind being abhivyanjakam and saakshi being abhivyanjyam.

"Saakshi cannot be experienced if the mind is removed" is a very important fact to be known and registered, in order to remove a very big misconception that is prevalent among Vedhaanthic students. I will explain the misconception, since only then, you will know the intensity of the resulting problem.

"During the teaching of Advaita Vedhaanthee, the Aacharyaas say: 'Aathmaa is the Consciousness principle. And, Consciousness is experienced all the time. Kenopanishad (II.4) declares 'prathibodhavidhitham matham – 'Brahman is known, when it is discovered as the witness awareness in every thought'. Therefore, you need not work for aathma anubhavaa; Consciousness is experienced all the time. As is known, Maneesha Panchakam also points this out as 'jaagrath svapna sushupthishu spututhaaraa yaa samvidhujrumbathe – 'That Brahman, which shines forth brilliantly in all the three states of existence viz., waking, dream and deep sleep states'. Since Consciousness is thus experienced all the time, you do not have to sit in meditation for experiencing the Consciousness'.

"And, even though the teacher, thus, says 'Consciousness is experienced all the time', quite a few Vedhaanthic students are not satisfied. They think: 'I am experiencing Consciousness all the time; but, that is only chidhaabhaasaa. I want to experience chith. The guru says I am experiencing Consciousness all the time. No doubt I do. But, I am experiencing the chidhaabhaasaa Consciousness only. What I want to experience is chith.'

"In other words, such a student wants to experience chith, separated from chidhabhaasaa. He wants pure saakshi anubhavaa. His goal in life is pure saakshi anubhavaa, unadulterated with chidhaabhaasaa. What does one experience, in both jaagrath and svapnaa? Ans: Only chidhaabhaasaa is available. Therefore, this aspirant looks for an alternate state, where he can remove chidhaabhaasaa for experiencing pure saakshi. Chidhabhaasaa will be there, as long as mind is there. He has also heard the maxim: Mana eva manushyaanam kaaranam bhandha mokshayo | And, therefore, to remove chidhaabhaasaa, what does he think, he should do? Ans: He thinks 'Manonaasa: karthavaya:' | He thinks that he should abolish the mind; that, mind should be abolished. For what purpose? Ans: for experiencing pure saakshi. But, when can mind be abolished? Ans: Only when thoughts are removed. Therefore, what does he think, he should do, in meditation? Ans: He thinks, that, he has to abolish thought.

"To consolidate, in reverse order: This aspirant wants to remove the thought, so that mind is removed. He wants to remove the mind so that chidhaabhaasaa is removed. He wants to remove chidhaabhaasaa, so that he can come across pure chith. And, he wants to abide in nirvikalpka samaadhi as pure chith. And, he wants to experience pure chith.

"But, this 'waiting' for pure saakshi anubhavaa is futile; his attempt will miserably fail, because, pure saakshi can never be experienced; because, pure saakshi can never be revealed if the mind abhivyanjakam is abolished. Pure self-effulgent saakshi will be there; but, that saakshi will never be revealed. Why? Because the self-effulgent saakshi requires the mind for (not illumination) manifestation.

"For argument's sake, if, in meditation, an aspirant removes the mind and chidhaabhaasaa, what will be his condition? Let us imagine that a person removes the mind and chidhaabhaasaa, in meditation. What will be his condition? Ans: He will be dead. A state in which mind and chidhabhaasaa are absent is called the state of death. It is not the state of saakshi anubhavaa. If you go to a state where thoughts are eliminated / mind is eliminated / chidhabhaasaa is eliminated, it is not a state of saakshi anubhavaa. Only in the state of death, mind and chidhaabhaasaa are removed. Therefore, the notion, that 'removal of mind and chidhaabhaasaa will help in experiencing pure chith' will lead to the absurd position of all dead bodies having saakshi anubhavaa, because chidhabhaasaa and mind are not there in dead bodies, while the self-effulgent chith alone is there. All the dead bodies will be 'realized' dead bodies! This shows that this line of thinking, viz., 'to realize pure chith, remove chidhabhaasaa ; in order to remove chidhabhaasaa, remove the mind ; in order to remove the mind, remove thought' etc. is totally illogical.

"Unfortunately, there are misguided people who sit in meditation to experience pure saakshi. But, it should be clearly understood by a serious and informed aspirant, that pure saakshi is to be recognized not by abolishing the mind; that, pure saakshi should be discerned in the presence of the mind only and by the mind only; that, without going in to meditation, without removing the thought, without removing the mind, keeping the mind alert and using the mind as abhivyanjakam, the jnaani should claim (similar to the 'informed' person in the 'sunlight-moon' example, who firmly understands that it is not the moonlight that he experiences but the sunlight manifested by the moon): "I am not the chidhabhaasa; I am the chith saakshi, which is manifested by the mind".

"I am not the Consciousness belonging to the mind. If I mistake myself as the Consciousness belonging to the mind, I am called chidhabhaasaa. If I understand I am the Consciousness manifested by the mind, but, not belonging to the mind, who am I? Ans: The saakshi.

"And, when I am experiencing the saakshi? Ans: I am experiencing the saakshi (do not use the word chidhabhaasaa; just as the wise person looks at the moonlight but does not call it moonlight and calls it sunlight, similarly I experience the Consciousness and I do not call it chidhabhaasaa; I call it the saakshi) using the mind as abhivyanjakam. Not in meditation but as 'pasyan srunvan sprusan jigrant'.

"I am the Consciousness principle; mind does not have Consciousness; mind is only manifesting Consciousness.

"To consolidate: How do I get saakshi anubhavaa? Not by abolishing the mind; I get saakshi anubhavaa, by understanding the Consciousness; that, what I am experiencing all the time is not the Consciousness of the mind, but, it is the Consciousness manifested by the mind. This wisdom makes me shift the vision from chidhabhaasaa to chith. I shift the vision from chidhabhaasaa to chith, not by abolishing the mind but by changing my attitude towards the mind. When I look upon the mind as the source of Consciousness, then, I am experiencing chidhaabhaasaa. But, when I look upon the mind as the 'manifestor' of the Consciousness, I am experiencing the chith.

"Therefore, chidhaabhaasaa experience and chith experience are not two separate experiences. In the 'moonlight' example given, 'moonlight experience' and 'sunlight experience' are not two separate experiences; it is one light experience, which, the ignorant call 'moonlight experience' and the wise call 'sunlight experience'. In the same manner, the 'ignorant' and the 'wise' experience one Consciousness alone; the ignorant man calls it chidhabhaasaa ; the wise man understands it as chith.

"Thus, when am the saakshi? Ans: Even now / even when I am using the mind and using the thoughts also, I can say I am the saakshi ; and, even to say 'I am the saakshi' I am using the thought but even that thought is an abhivyanjakam to say that I am the saakshi. And, 'I' the saakshi am not destroyed when the mind goes away; but I become avyakthaa when the mind goes away. I am vyaktha: when the mind is operating.

"This comfort, born out of understanding, is called saakshi dharsanam. For this comfort also, I am using the mind. I am using the mind for the abhivyakthi.

"And, I am not limited by the dimensions of the mind, just as sunlight is not located in the moon but sunlight is manifested by the moon. Where is the sunlight located? Ans: Sunlight is not located. On the other hand, moon is located in the all-pervading sunlight. Similarly mind is located in 'me'; but, even though I am all-pervading, even though the mind is located in 'me', I am using the mind for claiming I am the saakshi. I am using the mind as abhivyanjakaa to claim I am the saakshi. To be the saakshi, I do not need the mind. But, to claim 'I am the saakshi', I need the mind.

"All these corollaries are involved in this slokaa.

"Therefore, for saakshi anubhavaa, never go to nirvikalpaka samaadhi and abolish the mind. If you abolish the mind, you will not have saakshi anubhavaa; you will be like a dead body, not because saakshi is absent, but because there is no manifesting / revealing medium. Unfortunately, there is a prevalent wrong notion, that, people in nirvikalpaka samaadhi are all experiencing saakshi. No such thing is possible. It is logically impossible. 'Saakshi' is claimed in the presence of the mind, with the mind.

"And, for the next step, viz., to learn that, 'that saakshi 'I' am Brahman', the aspirant requires mahaa vaakyam. That is the development of Sureswaraachaaryaa".

Reverting to the text:

Sambhandha gadhyam (Part) to Verse 60:

एवं तावदविध्योत्थस्यान्तःकरणस्य बाह्यविषयनिमित्तरूपावच्छेदायाहंवृत्तिर्याप्रियते ।

Thus, the modification of the nature of the ego comes into being, in the mind, which is a product of nescience, for determining the specific form of it induced by the external object.

Sureswaraachaaryaa tirelessly enters the next, a slightly different topic. What is the topic he is entering into? It is a known topic; the Aachaaryaa is presenting it in a nice form. The topic is briefly presented as follows:

(Before we proceed further, an important point has to be noted and remembered: Sureswaraachaaryaa calls the mind itself as ahamkaaraa, throughout this discussion. For Sureswaraachaaryaa (i) aham (ii) ahamkaaraa and (iii) mind are synonymous. Mind = ahamkaaraa= aham).

It has been seen that Saakshi illumines the mind. The saakshi illumines the mind and lends Consciousness to the mind. It was also seen, that, saakshi also takes the help of the mind to reveal itself as saakshi. Without mind, saakshi is there, but, in an unrevealed, non-manifested form, even though it is self effulgent. In the absence of mind, saakshi is (i) unrevealed (ii) non-experienced and (iii) non-manifest. (All the three words are to be noted and remembered). Only with the help of the mind, saakshi becomes manifest, revealed and experienced as saakshi.

Saakshi reveals the mind. But, who or what reveals all the other objects in the world? Ans: It is again Consciousness which reveals all the objects in the world also.

Consciousness reveals the mind and Consciousness reveals the objects of the world also.

And, mind and the objects of the world have got several common features, which have been studied in an earlier context. The most important common features are five, as listed below: (1) dhrusyathvam (2) baudhikathvam (3) sagunathvam (4) savikaarathvam and (5) aagamaapaayithvam. Incidentally, dhrusyathvam means avabhaasyathvam. These five are common features of the mind and the world.

And, both of them, with these common features, are revealed by Consciousness only, otherwise called saakshi. As Mundakopanishad (II.ii.11) declares: "Thameva bhaantham anubhaathi sarvam" – "Everything 'shines' because of that Self alone, which Self is itself self-effulgent".

But, there is a difference between the 'saakshi revealing the mind' and the 'saakshi revealing the objects in the world'. Saakshi can never illumine the objects of the world directly, whereas saakshi can illumine the mind directly. Therefore, what does the saakshi do? Ans: In the first stage, the saakshi illumines the mind, which is the same as 'arriving at the jaagrath avasthaa'. In sushupthi avasthaa also, saakshi was present, but, not illumining the mind and therefore not illumining the world also. What happens in jaagrath avasthaa? Ans: Saakshi illumines the mind directly. In the form of the two sambhandhaa-s, viz., avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa and abhivyanjya-abhivyanjaka sambhndhaa, both saakshi and ahamkaaraa get revealed, mutually helping each other. Thus, the word 'aham' comes to existence. During sushupthi, 'aham' itself did not exist; but, in jaagrath avasthaa, saakshi gets revealed because of the mind and mind gets revealed because of the saakshi.

Saakshi after revealing the ahamkaaraa, uses the ahamkaaraa as a medium After illumining the mind, saakshi uses the mind as 'illuminator' of the world and its objects; i.e. in the first stage, saakshi makes the mind an 'object' and in the second stage, that 'object mind' is used as an 'instrument'. In an earlier context, an example was given for this phenomenon. The example is quoted again below: An individual who is forced to use spectacles for clear vision, immediately on getting up in the morning, takes the spectacles out from the container in which it was placed for protection, before going to sleep. At that time, when the individual looks at the spectacles in his hand, the spectacle is an 'object'. Then what does he do? He takes the 'object spectacles', puts it on and makes it a medium or instrument; and thereafter, when he uses the word 'I', the word includes the spectacles also. Spectacles becomes one with the user. Similarly, saakshi 'objectifies' the mind first and, later, uses that mind, as the medium to perceive the world and its objects. The mind and saakshi put together becomes 'aham'. 'Aham' is a mixture of saakshi and mind. And, this aham reveals various objects. Are those objects directly revealed or indirectly revealed by Consciousness? Ans: They are indirectly revealed by Consciousness, through the mind. And, all those indirectly revealed, become 'mama'. 'Mama' means 'mine'. Saakshi joining the mind, 'aham' is born; 'aham', saakshi and mind together, illumining the world 'mama' is born. One is direct illumination; the other is indirect illumination.

And once 'aham' and 'mama' are born, the samsaaraa drama starts. That is going to be the discussion.

169: Chapter III, Verses 60 (16-01-2010)

Sambhandhagadhyam to Verse 60 :

एवं तावदविध्योत्थस्यान्तःकरणस्य बाह्यविषयनिमित्तरूपावच्छेदायाहंबुत्तिर्व्याप्रियते ।
 तयावच्छिन्नं सत्कूटस्थप्रत्यगात्मोपादान अवबोधरूपस्य अव्यवधानतया विषयभावं

 नान्यत्संबन्धान्तरमुपपद्यते । अहंन्तारूपं तु आत्मसात्कृत्वाऽहंकञ्चुकं परिधाय
 उपकार्यत्वोपकारकत्वक्षमः सन् बाह्यविषयेण उपकारिणापकारिणा वा अत्मात्मीयं संबन्धं
 प्रतिपद्यते । तदभिधीयते

Thus, the modification of the nature of the ego comes into being in the mind, which is a product of nescience, for determining the specific form of it induced by the external object. That modification of the mind becomes directly the object of an awareness which is a product of the eternal Self. Between the knowing Self and the ego, there can be no relation other than that of the 'illuminator' and the 'illuminated'. Appropriating the ego to itself and putting on the coat of the ego, the Self assumes the forms of the 'helped' and 'helper'. In connection with external objects, favourable and adverse, it attributes to itself appropriate relations towards them. This is brought out now:

The main topic under discussion is: "After anvayavyathirekhaa and consequent separation of the saakshi from all the anaathmaa, one will have to necessarily come to mahaa vaakyam, when alone 'aham brahma asmi' jnaanam is possible".

'Aham saaakshi asmi' jnaanam cannot liberate a person. The mere knowledge "'I' am saakshi " cannot liberate the aspirant, because when the aspirant understands himself to be saakshi, different from saakshya anaathmaa, he is accepting a duality in the form of 'saakshi and saakshyam' or 'dhruk and dhrusya'. Therefore, saakshi jnaanam does not reveal dvaitha mithyaathvam.

To repeat: Saakshi jnaanam gives the aspirant the knowledge that saakshi is chaithanyam, distinct from the saakshya prapanchaa, which prapanchaa includes the mind also. But, in this saakshya-saakshi viveka jnaanam, dvaitha mithyaathva nischayaa has not taken place.

Whereas, 'dvaitha mithyaathva nischaya jnaanam' is a necessary condition for liberation. We cannot hope to somehow manage to achieve liberation, avoiding dvaitha mithyaathva nischayaa.

Liberation is possible only through the conviction 'aham Brahma asmi'| And, this conviction 'aham Brahma asmi' also, should, as a corollary, include the conviction of dvaitha mithyaathvam. That is why, while summarizing Vedhaanthaa, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa succinctly declared: "Brahma sathyam; jagan mithyaa; jeevo Brahma eva na apara."| All these three components are equally necessary for liberation. Brahma sathyathva jnaanam is compulsory. Jagan mithyaathva jnaanam is equally or even more compulsory. And, 'jeevo brahmaiva naapara.' jnaanam is also equally or still more compulsory. All the three components are important for the culmination of the Vedhaanthic study.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya's main thesis is "saakshi saakshya vivekaa is only an intermediary stage and not the final stage of Vedhaanthic understanding, which is jeeva-Brahma aiykya vivekaa, attained only through mahaa vaakya vichaaraa".

In the previous slokaa, in the course of his discussions, Sureswarachaaryaa made the following point: "When the aspirant does saakshi-saakshya vivekaa, he can clearly see the distinction between the 'observer' saakshi and the 'observed' jagath as saakshyam, since the external world has got a physical distance from the saakshi; whereas, when he tries to do the same saakshi-saakshya vivekaa with the mind as saakshya-anaathmaa, in the place of the external world, he finds the separating of the saakshi and mind very difficult, since he will not be able to separate them physically." He had progressed in his thesis, up to this stage.

To re-cap: What is the Sureswaraacharya's main thesis? Ans: 'The route-map for the Advaita student is, (i) saakshi-saakshya vivekaa, through anvayavyathirekhaa, as the first step and (ii) thereafter, through mahaa vaakyam, saakshi brahma eiykyam. That is the topic under study.

Now, in three verses from the 60th verse (in verses 60, 61 and 62), Sureswaraacharya is taking a small diversion to reveal some important and useful points, even though the diversion is not directly connected with his thesis, the main topic under study. But, it is a useful and important digression. And, it is a subtle and technical topic. The topic has been discussed before, but, Sureswaraacharya has got his own method of conveying his ideas and therefore, the topic is broached again by him, in these three verses.

To continue in Swamiji's own words: "Since it is a subtle and technical topic, I will independently present this and thereafter we can go to the textual part. And, I will present this topic as five distinct points.

"The main idea that Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to discuss here, is this: The entire world is anaathmaa. Likewise, the mind is also anaathmaa. There are similarities between the world and the mind. What are they? One is that, both are anaathmaa and therefore, both have five common features, namely, dhrusyathvam, baudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam.

"Another similarity is, that, the anaathmaa-world is illumined by Consciousness and likewise, the mind is also illumined by Consciousness, which is otherwise called aathmaa or saakshi or chith. The terms aathmaa, saakshi, chith and Consciousness are synonymous. Aathmaa / saakshi / chith / Consciousness reveals the anaathmaa-world and also the anaathmaa-mind.

"But, even though, both of them, viz., world and mind, are equally anaathmaa, having the five common features, and even though both are illumined by Consciousness, there are certain differences in the method of the illumination of the two, which differences are to be noted.

"To repeat in other words: World is anaathmaa and the mind is also anaathmaa. World is saakshi bhaasyam; mind is also saakshi bhaasyam. Even though, thus, both are anaathmaa and both are illumined by chaithanyam only, there are certain distinctions or differences. We have to note those differences, as well as the corollaries derived from them.

"Sureswaraachaaryaa is presenting these in his way and introducing the corollaries also, all of which I want to present as five points.

"Point No. 1: Saakshi, as saakshi, illumines or reveals the mind directly. Thereafter, saakshi joins the mind as chidhaabhaasaa and illumines the world through the mind. Therefore, it is saakshi that reveals the mind and it is saakshi that reveals the world also; but, while revealing the world, saakshi has to join the mind, under the name of 'chidhaabhaasaa' and illumine the world. This is point no. 1.

"And, while assimilating this point, we have to note another subsidiary point, namely, that, Sureswaraachaaryaa does not want to treat chidhaabhaasaa as a separate entity; he wants to say that chidhaabhaasaa is the name of saakshi itself, when it has joined the mind. Do not think that saakshi is one Consciousness and chidhaabhaasaa is another Consciousness. Do not imagine there are two Consciousnesses. Saakshi itself, joining the mind, gets the name chidhaabhaasaa; and, gets the status of ahamkaaraa. Saakshi joins the mind and as chidhaabhaasaa or ahamkaaraa, illumines the world, through the mind. It is like the example given in the last class; I am, again, quoting that example. On a full moon night, we can say 'sunlight illumines the moon; moonlight illumines the earth'. The statement is not totally wrong; but, it may lead to a misconception. What is the misconception? Ans: 'That, there are two lights, sunlight being one and moonlight being another'. If I desire to avoid the misconception, I should make a re-presentation. I should say 'sunlight illumines the moon; then sunlight itself, in the name of moonlight / joining the moon, illumines the earth'. This is because there is no second light called moonlight, since moon does not have any light of its own. The term 'moonlight' is, in reality, a misnomer. Therefore, what do I say? Ans: 'Sunlight itself, in the name of moonlight – joining the moon - illumines the earth'. In a similar manner, Sureswaraacharya says 'saakshi itself, joining the mind as chidhaabhaasaa, gets the status of ahamkaaraa, and saakshi, with the status of ahamkaaraa, illumines the world, through the mind'.

"Saakshi itself reveals the mind also; saakshi itself reveals the world also. While revealing the mind it has got saakshi status; and, while revealing the world, it has assumed a new status, as ahamkaaraa or chidhabhaasaa. Therefore, do not imagine there is one separate saakshi and one separate chidhaabhaasaa and try to physically separate them. Saakshi is chidhabhaasaa. Chidhaabhaasaa is saakshi. Saakshi, associated with the mind, functions as chidhabhaasaa and gets the name ahamkaaraa.

"Condensing the first point: Saakshi, as saakshi, reveals the mind directly; saakshi as ahamkaaraa, the chidhaabhaasaa, reveals the world, through the mind".

(At this juncture, Swamiji explains as to why he wants to present Sureswaraacharya's concepts in Swamiji's own words, before entering the text. He says: "Once we enter the text, we have to face two struggles, struggle with the language and struggle with the concepts. The first struggle is 'understanding the language'/'un-knotting the Sanskrit compounds', especially because Sureswaraacharya has an unique method of communication. The second struggle is 'understanding the concepts'. Therefore, I am keeping the text aside, so that we can grapple with the concepts first. Thereafter, we can go to face the language struggle".)

"Now, let us go to the second point. The second point is, that, saakshi directly illumines the mind, as saakshi, in the medium of ajnaanam or kaarana sareeram. Sureswaraachaaryaa introduces the medium of ajnaanam here, to show that all the dualities are mithyaa in nature. Unless he brings in the ajnaanam medium, we will think that saakshi and mind have got the same order of reality. Therefore, he wants to caution us, that, mind is of lower order of reality and saakshi is of a higher order, and also that when the mind is abolished or negated, saakshi does not have even saakshi status itself. In other words, the mind is also mithyaa; the saakshi status is also mithyaa. To be carefully noted: Consciousness is not mithyaa; but, its saakshi status is. To remind us of that fact, Sureswaraachaaryaa says: 'In the ajnaanam medium, Consciousness, enjoying the saakshi status, directly reveals the mind, which is a mithyaa product of ajnaanam. This is a very subtle point, difficult to comprehend. To repeat the concept: 'Consciousness, in ajnaanam medium / maayaa medium / moolaavidhyaa medium / kaarana sareeram medium, gets the saakshi status and illumines / reveals the mind directly'. Whereas, the saakshi, joining the mind as chidhaabhaasaa, reveals the external world in the medium of the mind. That is why, if I want to experience this hall, I require the mind medium. What does this statement 'I require the mind medium' mean? Ans: It means 'I should be awake'. Only in the waking condition, saakshi in the medium of the waking mind / the active mind can reveal the external world.

"Therefore, what is the second point? Ans: 'Saakshi, in the ajnaanam medium, as the saakshi, reveals the mind directly, whereas, saakshi, in the mind-medium, joining the mind as chidhaabhaasaa, taking the status of ahamkaaraa, reveals the world. The moment mind-medium is gone, the world cannot be seen.

"To condense the point: Saakshi reveals the mind, in ajnaanam medium; saakshi reveals the world in the mind-medium or through the mind-medium". This is point No. 2.

"Now, let us proceed to the third point, which is: In the ajnaanam medium, when the saakshi, as saakshi, reveals the mind directly, saakshi does not require any modification to reveal the mind. By its mere presence, it reveals the mind. Mind is revealed directly, nirvikaarathayaa, i.e., without undergoing any modification action. It requires only ajnaanam medium for the mind to be revealed by the saakshi. No modification is required. Whereas saakshi, joining the mind as chidhaabhaasaa, taking the status of ahamkaaraa, reveals the world by undergoing thought modification. Without thought modification, external world cannot be revealed.

"So, if my words are to be revealed by the saakshi, what are all the things required?

Ans: (i) Saakshi should join the mind. (ii) They get the status of ahamkaara and then (iii) mind modification is required.

"Suppose, now, in the class, your mind is in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, i.e. your mind remains thoughtless. Under that circumstance, obviously, my words will not be revealed to you; they will not be heard by you. That is why Dayanadanda Swamiji used to say: 'Never learn Vedhaanthaa, in meditation. If you do so and remove all your thoughts, the poor teacher will be crying in wilderness'. So do not go to meditation, in class; let all your sense organs be bright. Every word I utter must enter your mind and, therefore, your mind should be alive and awake ; it should not be in samaadhi or meditation. And, 'modification of thought' is required, for the Consciousness to reveal the world.

"Therefore, what is the third point? Ans: 'Saakshi, as saakshi, reveals the mind, without requiring any change / modification, whereas, saakshi, as ahamkaaraa, reveals the world, requiring thought modification'.

"Then the fourth point: When saakshi, as saakshi, in the ajnaanam medium / moolaavidhyaa medium reveals the mind, they (the saakshi and the mind) have a relationship, namely, 'revealer-revealed relationship' or 'avabhaasaka-avabhaasya sambhandhaa'. What is the 'revealer' and what is the 'revealed'? Ans: 'Saakshi is the revealer. Mind is the revealed'. "And, they are related; there is 'avabhaasya avabhaasaka roopena sambhandha:' between the two.

"And, Sureswaraacharya says that, while this 'revealer-revealed sambhandhaa' is there between the two, both the 'the revealer saakshi' and 'the revealed mind' do not influence the nature of each other, during the process of revelation. Neither of them influences the nature of the other, either positively or negatively. That means, when saakshi reveals the mind and the mind gets revealed, during the process of revelation, the nature of the mind does not get improved nor worsened; it remains the same. Mind does not become better because of the revelation; nor does it become worse; an agitated mind remains agitated and a calm mind remains calm. The saakshi does not do anything good to the mind; nor anything bad also. Similarly, the mind also, while it is related to the avabhaasakaa - saakshi, as avabhaasyaa, does not do anything to the saakshi's nature. There is neither upakaaraa nor apakaaraa caused mutually. There is neither a positive influence, nor a negative influence, for either the saakshi or the mind because of the other. The asamsaari saakshi remains asamsaari; the samsaari mind remains samsaari."

(Swamiji digresses marginally. He says: "You may wonder why are we studying all these 'points'. Remember, all these points are connected to 'liberation'. At this stage, individually, they may look meaningless; but, later, you will have to join them all together, like pieces of a jig-saw puzzle. As you very well know, a piece of a jig-saw puzzle, by itself, will appear worthless; but, when all the pieces of the puzzle are joined together, you get a grand picture. And, you realize that every single piece is essential to form the full picture.

"All these 'points', now under discussion, are similar to pieces in a jig saw puzzle. We will know the value of each 'point', only when we combine them all together. Unfortunately, in the class, we can deal with only one 'point' at a time. But, later, we should combine all the 'points' and get the grand picture viz., 'Brahma sathyam; jagan mithyaa; jeevo Brahmaiva naapara'. Therefore, my request to you is: 'do not reject any of these topics as meaningless, since, if you do so, you will be the loser. When you grasp the significance of the topics, a grand view will evolve. Otherwise you will miss mokshaa'.)

"To get back to the fourth point: When saakshi reveals the mind, there is neither upakaaraa or apakaaraa done, either to saakshi or to the mind. Whereas, when the saakshi joins the mind as chidhaabhaasaa and takes the status of ahamkaaraa, and reveals the world, between the ahamkaaraa and the world (when I use the word ahamkaaraa, it is the name of saakshi itself, which is now named chidhaabhaasa and has taken ahamkaaraa status. To repeat: ahamkaaraa is the name of the saakshi. Sureswaraacharya uses the word 'kanchukam' or 'coat' for ahamkaaraa.), there is not only the 'revealer-revealed relationship' / 'avabhaasaka-avabhaasya sambhandhaa', as between saakshi and mind; but, not merely the avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa, an additional sambhandhaa also comes, in the second stage. I will clarify. When ahamkaaraa and the world come in contact, no doubt, the basic relationship is the 'revealer-revealed' relationship. In addition to that, they influence each other mutually also, either positively or negatively. Ahamkaaraa influences the world positively or negatively, doing good or doing bad; and, similarly, the world also influences the ahamkaaraa positively or negatively. Let us consider this class itself as an example. You are the ahamkaaraa student, the 'revealer'; Naishkarmya siddhi class is the 'revealed'. That sambhandhaa is there. But, it does not stop with that. The Naishkarmya Siddhi class is not only revealed by the ahamkaaraa; but, the class can do upakaaraa to you, if you understand the subject, smile and nod your head. Naishkarmya Siddhi is not only revealed by the ahamkaaraa; Naishkarmya Siddhi does upakaaraa to you. Not ordinary upakaaraa. If you understand and assimilate the subject, it does mahaa upakaaraa, called mokshaa itself. And, when? Ans: 'Now itself, it can do upakaaraa'. Let us imagine a different scenario: The Naishkarmya Siddhi Class is revealed; but, you do not understand the subject. The whole class 'goes above your head'; if you say so, the result is that, you are worried, disturbed and confused also. Under such a circumstance, what has the Class done to you? Ans: Apakaaraa .

"The example shows that, between the 'revealer' ahamkaaraa and the 'revealed' world, in the first stage, there is 'revealer-revealed relationship', i.e. 'avabhaasaka-avabhaasya sambhandhaa'. There is a second sambhandhaa also between ahamkaaraa and world, which is either 'upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa' or 'apakaarya apakaaraka sambhandhaa'. 'Upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa', indicates positive influence resulting in happiness ; 'apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa' indicates negative influence resulting in worry / samsaaraa . 'Worry' or 'unhappiness' does not come at saakshi level; but, at ahamkaaraa level; when the ahamkaaraa cloak is put on and 'I' interact with the world, ahamkaaraa says "I am worried' or "I am happy'. But, (again) who is ahamkaaraa? Ans: 'It is only saakshi'.

"I', the saakshi, put on the ahamkaaraa cloak. I reveal the world; not only I have got revealer-revealed relationship with the world; in addition to that, I am depressed or happy with the world. The world can be a 'burden' for me or the world can be 'sampoornam nandanavanam sarvethi kalpadhrumaa.' | When the world and I have got upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa, I call the world nandanavanam. But, when 'I', as ahamkaaraa, reveals the world and there is apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa, I say the world is a burden. I want to run away from the world in the name of videha mukthi and, as a consequence, pray 'O Lord! Take me away from the world at the earliest.' Which I? Ans: Saakshi 'I', who am ever free; but, putting on the ahamkaaraa cloak.

"Let us now condense the fourth point: When, saakshi as saakshi, illumines the mind, there is only one sambhandhaa, viz., 'revealer-revealed' or (in Sanskrit) 'avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa. Whereas, when saakshi, as ahamkaaraa, reveals the world, there are two sambhandhaa-s, (i) Avabhaasya-avabhaaska sambhandhaa and (ii) upakaarya-upakaarakaa sambhandhaa or apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa.

"The term 'upakaarya-upakaarakaa sambhandhaa' can be translated as 'beneficiary-benefactor relationship'; and, 'apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa' can be translated as 'victimized-victimizer relationship' or 'persecuted-persecutor relationship' or 'harassed-harasser relationship'. Naturally, both relationships, viz., the 'upakaarya-upakaarakaa sambhandhaa' and the 'apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa' cannot exist simultaneously.

"Now, what is the fifth point? It is this: When saakshi, as saakshi, in the ajnaanam medium, reveals the mind, I have got the mind awareness / I am aware of the mind. Thus, when I have the 'mind-awareness' because of the saakshi, Sureswaraachaarya gives that awareness / knowledge, a technical name. He calls the mind awareness as "'idham'- jnaanam". It is just a technical term, that he uses. He calls it "'idham' – jnaanam" / "this knowledge". And, what is 'this knowledge'? What is the concept of 'idham'- jnaanam? When you say 'idham'- jnaanam, what does it refer to? Ans: 'The mind-awareness caused by *saakshi'. The saakshi reveals the mind; and, therefore I am aware of the mind. In other words, the mind-awareness is caused by saakshi, because the mind is not self-revealer by itself. Mind is not 'revealed' / 'awared' by itself. Why? Ans: 'Because mind is jadam'. When I have got mind-awareness because of the saakshi, in the medium of moolavidhyaa, Sureswaraachaarya calls that mind-awareness "'idham'- jnaanam".

"At this stage, moolaavidhyaa carpet also has to be there; only at the end, we are going to remove this carpet. And, when the carpet is removed, the world is dismissed and mind is dismissed. What about saakshi? Ans: 'It should be carefully remembered, that saakshi is not dismissed. You cannot say saakshi is dismissed.

You would say saakshi status is also dismissed'. This is because Consciousness is a saakshi from the standpoint of the mind. After dismissing the mind, Consciousness alone remains without saakshi status.

"To retain the Consciousness as advaitam, we have to negate all the others – mind, world etc. - as mithyaa . Since all of them have to be negated later, by removing ignorance, we have to first spread the carpet of ignorance to introduce duality.

"Therefore, what is the first job, whenever duality discussion is there? Ans: 'Spread the carpet of ajnaanam. (In a lighter vein: Before all vaidhika rituals, we put an aasanam). The whole Vedhaanthic teaching should start with the moolaavidhyaa aasanam. That is why the medium of ajnaanam is introduced in the first stage. Finally remove the moolaavidhyaa. The word 'remove' means 'falsify'. 'Remove moolaavidhyaa' means 'falsify moolaavidhyaa'.

"In the Brahadharanyaka Upanishad (IV.v.14), Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa brings this fact out, by asking his wife and disciple Maithreyi – ' yathra thu asya sarvam aathmaiva abhooth thath kena kam pasyeth thath kena kim jigreth- 'but, when, to the knower of Brahman, everything has become the Self, then, what should one see and through what; what should one smell and through what?' In that advaita aathmaa, when you negate ajnaanam, where is the world/ Where is the mind?

"In the Kaivalyopanishad (manthraa 22) also the jnaani's understanding of his own glory as a jnaani, is given in the words 'na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambram cha – 'Earth and water are not there for me. Fire is not there for me. Air is not there for me. Space is also not there for me'.

"The Mundakopanishad (II.ii.12) declares: 'Brahmaivedam amrutam purasthaadh brahma paschaadh brahma dhakshinathascha uttharena adhascha oordhvam cha prasrutham brahmaivedham viswamidham varishtam' –'All this in front is the immortal Brahman alone. Brahman alone is behind. Brahman alone is on the right as well as on the left. Brahman pervades below and above also. This universe is this supreme Brahman alone'.

"Katopanishad (II. i. 11) declares 'Neha naanaasthi kinchana – 'There is no plurality at all here'.

"When the Upanishad-s make these declarations, how do all of them (viz. the duality and plurality) appear? Ans: 'Because of the moolaavidhyaa carpet'. In fact, this very class is going on, because of moolaavidhyaa carpet.

"Reverting to point no. 5: When the Consciousness reveals the mind in the medium of the moolaavidhyaa carpet, and I have got the 'mind awareness', Sureswaraachaaryaa calls this 'mind awareness' by the term 'idham-jnaanam'. And, thereafter, when the saakshi joins the mind as chidhabhaasaa, and takes the ahamkaaraa status and reveals the world, there is 'world-awareness' and I am aware of the world. Taking the ahamkaaraa status, I am aware of the world. Sureswaraachaaryaa calls this 'world awareness' as "'mama'- jnaanam". World awareness results in the claims "'My' house / 'my' wife / 'my' children / 'my' notebook / 'my' pen etc. All the 'world awareness' is "'mama'-jnaanam".

"Mind awareness' is called "'idham' – jnaanam". In "'idham' – jnaanam", there is one sambhandhaa, viz., 'avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandha'. In 'world awareness' or "'mama'- jnaanam", there are two sambhandhaa-s (i) avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandhaa and in addition to that (ii) upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandhaa or apakaarya apkaaraka sambhandha.

"An example, to explain the distinction between upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandhaa and apakaarya apkaaraka sambhandha: When you say 'this is my son' and you introduce him as 'married and happily settled', your face is all aglow. When you say 'my son, married and settled, working in TCS', it is not only 'revealer-revealed relationship'; the blooming face reveals that the 'mama-jnaanam' has got 'upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandhaa'; that, your wonderful son is making you happy. But, if, due to market recession, the son has lost his job and he has got two children, as even as you introduce the son, your face is writ with anxiety. In this case also, 'revealer-revealed sambhandhaa is there; but, in addition to that, your son is not a source of joy for you; but a source of anxiety. Therefore, what is the second sambhandhaa, in this situation? Ans: 'Apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa'. In essence, "yathra yathra eka sambhandha.; thathra thathra 'idham-jnaanam;; yathra yathra sambhandha dvhvayam, thathra thathra 'mama-jnaanam". This is the fifth point.

"Sureswaraachaaryaa gives all these five points, in these three verses, 60, 61 and 62. He builds up gradually. I gave you the total picture, so that each sentence in the text will make easier sense. We will enter the text in the next session"

170: Chapter III, Verses 60 (23-01-2010)

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 60:

एवं तावदविध्योत्थस्यान्तः करणस्य बाह्यविषयनिमित्तरूपावच्छेदायाहंवृत्तिर्व्याप्रियते ।
तयावच्छिन्नंसत् कूटस्थप्रत्यगात्मोपादान अवबोधरूपस्य अव्यवधानतया
विषयभावं प्रतिपद्यत इति ।

The main discussion, that we have at this moment is: "In the course of achieving liberation, aathma anaathma vichaaraa / vivekaa is a stepping stone and mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is the final saadhanaa."

And, while discussing aathma anaathma vivekaa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering into a brief diversion. This diversion is to reveal a small, internal difference within anaathmaa itself.

We use the term anaathmaa for everything which is an 'object' of Consciousness. Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say that within that anaathmaa itself, there is an internal difference.

The entire jada prapanchaa, which is revealed by Consciousness, is anaathmaa; and, this entire world comes under one type of anaathmaa. The mind is also anaathmaa; but, the mind comes under a different type of anaathmaa.

The anaathmaa status is common to the mind and to the world. As already discussed, the two have the five common features of anaathmaa, viz., dhrusyathvam, boudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam. Based on these five features, both mind and world come under anaathmaa category; still, there is an internal difference. Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to mention that internal difference here. And, what is that internal difference? Ans: "The mind can be directly illumined by Consciousness, whereas, the world cannot be directly illumined by Consciousness. The Consciousness / saakshi will have to reveal the mind first and thereafter, through the mind, the saakshi will have to reveal the world".

This idea itself is presented in two different ways, in different contexts. One method of presentation is "saakshi reveals the mind; mind reveals the world". This first method of presentation is similar to making the statement "On a pournami night, the sun illumines the moon and the moon illumines the earth". 'Saakshi' is akin to 'sun'; 'mind' is akin to 'moon'; and, 'world' is akin to 'earth'.

There is another way of presentation, which we are adopting here. What is that? Ans: "saakshi illumines the mind; and, joining the mind, and, through the mind, saakshi illumines the world".

Thus, in the second method of presentation, we are giving the credit for 'illumination', to the saakshi only; we do not want to give any credit to the mind, as an illuminator. Why do we not want to give credit to the mind? Ans: "Since mind does not have a consciousness of its own, why should we say 'mind illumines the world?'".

Therefore, what we say is: "Saakshi illumines / reveals the mind; thereafter, saakshi joins the mind; after joining the mind, saakshi itself gets re-named ahamkaaraa; and, saakshi, as ahamkaaraa, reveals the world also."

Going back to the example, instead of saying "Sun illumines the moon and moon illumines the earth" , it will be more appropriate to say "Sunlight illumines the moon ; and , after illumining the moon and joining the moon, with the help of the moon, the sunlight illumines the earth also"; i.e., to be more appropriate, we do not want to say "moon / moonlight illumines the earth". Why we are avoiding that statement is because of the fact, that moon is non-luminous and therefore, when we say "moon illumines the earth", we are actually making a compromise. If we want to avoid making that compromise, we do not want to say "moonlight illumines the earth", since the very word 'moonlight' is a misconception.

Therefore, we avoid the statement "moon / moonlight illumines the earth". What do we say? Ans: "Sunlight, with the help of the moon, through the medium of the moon, illumines the earth".

The approach to the 'revelations' made by saakshi is similar to this. We say : "Saakshi illumines the mind; joins the mind; gets the status of ahamkaaraa; and, reveals the world".

Sureswaraacharya presents this idea in the five points which were covered in the earlier session. And, therefore, it is very necessary for the student to remember these five points, when the textual portion is entered into.

Going to the text part:

ॐ एवं तावत् - This being so,

ॐ अहं वृत्तिः - antha: karana vrutthi / the thought of the mind / the mental thought

ॐ व्याप्रियते - functions / takes steps

ॐ बाह्य विषय निमित्त रूप अवच्छेदाय - to get associated with the external objects

The language used by the Aacharya is 'involved' / complicated. The essence of this statement is: "The mind acts in such a way as to get associated with thoughts relating to the external world". When I am looking 'out', the mind is functioning through the sense organs; and, what is the intention of the mind, when the mind goes out through the sense organs? Ans: "Mind wants to get 'thoughts', relating to external objects, such as sabda vrutthi, roopa vrutthi etc."

For instance, when the student is attending the Naishkarmya Siddhi class and keeps his ears alert, his mind wants Naishkarmya Siddhi sabdha vrutthi. And, if and when the student watches a programme on the television, his mind wants 'roopa vrutthi'. Hence the conclusion "vishaya aakaara vrutthi sambhandhayaa mana: vyaapriyathe" meaning "mind functions to get associated with vishaya aakaara vrutthi"

And, according to Vedhaanthic epistemology (theory of knowledge), while the antha: karana vrutthi is supposed to go outside, mind remains within the body.

The mind remains in the body; but, the thoughts of the mind can and do travel outside the body through the five sense organs. When a thought / vrutthi, thus, travels outside the body, that vrutthi / thought is called pramaana vrutthi; but, it is called pramaana vrutthi only until it gets associated with an object. Once it gets associated with an external object (vishayaa) it becomes what is termed 'vishaya aakaara vrutthi. For example, say, the pramanaa vrutthi goes out towards a pot. Until it reaches the pot, it is called pramaana vrutthi. Once it reaches the pot, the pramaana vrutthi, which does not have any specific shape until it reaches the pot, combines with the ghata vishayaa and the pramaana vrutthi becomes ghata aakaara vrutthi. In general terms, pramaana vrutthi travels out, to assume vishaya aakaara vrutthi.

Now, to whom or what does this pramaana vrutthi belong? The Aachaaryaa says:

अन्तःकरणस्य - belonging to the mind, which is within the body,

Here, Sureswaraachaarya refers to pramaana vrutthi as ahamvrutthi. Ahamvrutthi is pramaana vrutthi. Ahamvrutthi / pramaana vrutthi goes out. That pramaana vrutthi belongs to the mind, which is within the body.

Antha: karana vrutthi / aham vrutthi / pramaana vrutthi (the three names refer to one and the same vrutthi) goes out; antha:karanam remains inside ; similar to a torch carried in the hand. The torch remains in the holder's hand; but, the beam of the torch travels away from the holder. The beam of light can reach hundreds of feet away, the torch remaining in the hand of the holder. Similarly, antha:karanam remains within. The vrutthi travels. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa refers to this fact, in his 'Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram' (verse 4) : "Naanaacchithra ghatodhara sthitha mahaa deepa prabhaa bhaasvaram jnaanam yasya thu chakshuraadhikaranadvaaraa bahi: spandhathe" etc. - "Just like the bright light of a great lamp placed in a jar having many holes, He , whose intelligence flashes outside through eyes and other sense-organs" etc.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, having thus said that the pramaana vrutthi or ahamvrutthi belongs to antha:karanam, adds an adjective to the antha:karanam or mind: अविध्योत्थ - (which mind is) born out of moolaavidhyaa.

The term 'avidhyaa', in this context, means moolaavidhyaa, which is another name for maayaa, which is another name for kaarana sareeram. Moolaavidhyaa = kaarana sareeram = maayaa. Born out of that avidhyaa is this antha:karanam.

This may give rise to the question: "Why should Sureswaraachaaryaa say the mind is born out of moolaavidhyaa? Why should he add that specific adjective here? He has already mentioned that fact, in the introduction of moolaavidhyaa vichaara. Why should he repeat it here?" Ans: "There is a significance. Only when we say 'mind is born out of moolaavidhyaa', we will know that mind is matter. The material nature of the mind must be remembered throughout, when we are studying Vedhaanthic theory of knowledge. Vedhaanthic theory of knowledge can be fully comprehended, only if we remember that mind is matter and thought is matter. Mind does not have Consciousness of its own. This must be consistently remembered. That is why, the Aachaaryaa adds the adjective 'avidhyottha' |

Moolaavidhyaa is maayaa; maayaa is jadam; mind is born out of jadamaayaa; therefore, mind is also matter only. Thought is also matter. The difference is, that, they are subtle matter; not concrete matter. The inert thought goes out and contacts inert object. Mind is inert; thought is inert; external object is inert. Inert thought and inert object come together and vishaya aakaara vrutthi takes place.

But, since all these things happen on the inert plane, knowledge cannot take place ; saakshi will have to arrive, for converting all these into a knowing process. In other words, the phenomenon at the inert level can be called a cognitive process, only when the saakshi / Consciousness 'blesses' the phenomenon. This is similar to the fact, that, 'light' has to bless the classroom, for the guru and the students to have visual transactions.

The Aachaaryaa has said 'Aham vrutthi: baahya vishaya nimitttha roopa avacchedhaaya vyaapriyathe'. Then what? The saakshi comes.

तया अवच्छिन्नं सत् - When the vishaya aakaara vrutthi (i.e. the ahamvrutthi associated with the object), in turn, gets associated with the mind,

It was already mentioned, that, once the thought gets associated with the object and the thought assumes the form of the object, that thought is called vishaya aakaara vrutthi: | All vishaya aakaara vrutthi-s such as ghata aakaara vrutthi, pata aakaaravrutthi, sabdha aakaraa vrutthi, roopa aakaara vrutthi etc. are formed because of the contact between the antha:karana vrutthi / aham vrutthi / pramaana vrutthi and the respective vishayaa. That vishaya aakaara vrutthi, naturally, is associated with the mind. 'Thayaa' means 'vishayakaara vrutthiyaa'. 'avacchinaam sath' means ' when associated with the mind'.

विषयभावं प्रतिपद्यते - (that mind with the vishaya aakaara vrutthi) becomes an object,

'That mind with the vishaya aakaara vrutthi is to be supplied as 'subject' of the sentence. The Consciousness of the saakshi spreads over the mind. Just as the sunlight spreading over all objects, both the mind and vishaya vrutthi are spread over, by the Consciousness of the saakshi.

And, when it is, thus, spread over, what does the mind become? Ans: "Mind becomes an 'object'". 'Vishaya bhaavam prathipadhyathe' means 'becomes the object'. Of what? The Aachaaryaa answers:

ॐ कूटस्थ प्रत्यगात्म उपादान अवबोधरूपस्य - of the chaithanyam, whose source is the eternal inner Self,

ॐ अव्यवधानतया - directly / saakshaath.

The mind 'directly' becomes the object of the 'Consciousness'.

'Avabodha' means 'chaithanyam'. The Aachaaryaa adds an adjective to the 'chaithanyam' viz., 'kootastha prathyagaathma upaadhaana'; 'upaadhaana' means 'emerging from'; 'kootastha' means 'eternal'; 'prathyagaathmaa' means 'inner Self'. 'Kootastha prathyagaathma upaadhaana avabhodha roopasya' therefore means 'of the chaithanyam, whose source is the eternal inner Self'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa has said that, the chaithanyam comes from / emerges from the kootastha prathyagaathmaa. Why should the chaithanyam come from aathmaa?

Ans: 'Because the mind does not have chaithanyam of its own'. To recollect the example of the sun and the moonlight on a full moon night, the use of the word 'moonlight' causes confusion, since the moon is not self-luminous ; and, therefore, after using the word moonlight, we try to differentiate moonlight and sunlight. We use the word 'moonlight' and then we remember the sunlight and we take pains to separate moonlight and sunlight. Similarly, we use the word chidhaabhasaa and thereafter we use the word chith; then, ironically, we tend to differentiate chidhaabhasaa and chith. But, it should be understood and remembered that chidhaabhasaa is chith and chith is chidhaabhasaa. Chith obtaining in the mind is called chidhabhasaa. There should be no attempt to experience 'chith' separate from 'chidhaabhasaa'. Whenever you are experiencing chidhaabhasaa, you are experiencing chith only. Just as 'moonlight experience' is 'experience of the sunlight on the moon', 'chidhaabhaasaa experience' is 'experience of chith in the mind'.

Never work for separate chith anubhavaa. Whenever one says 'I am', it is experience of saakshi in the mind.

Reverting to the text: "(Vishaya aakaara vrutthi sahitha antha:karanam) kootastha prathyag aathma upaadhaana avabodha roopasya vishayabhaavam prathipadhyathe" which means "(the mind) becomes the object of saakshi".

Samabhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 60:

तत्र तयोर्जात्रहंतरूपयोरवभासकावभास्यसंबन्धव्यतिरेकेण नान्यत्संबन्धान्तरमुपपद्यते ।

Between the knowing Self and the ego, there can be no relation other than that of the 'illuminator' and the 'illuminated'.

Now, we have got (1) the mind and (2) upon the mind is spread the saakshi chaithanyam. The mind and saakshi chaithanyam are co-existing. The saakshi chaithanyam is named chidhaabhaasa, when it is spread over the mind. But, as already stressed, it should be carefully remembered, that just because a new name has been given, the student should not think chidhaabhaasa is an entity different from chith. Chidhaabhaasaa is just another name for the saakshi chaithanyam itself, when it is spread over the mind. In one locus, there are two entities, the mind and the saakshi chaithanyam. Sureswaraacharya says that when they (the saakshi chaithanyam and the mind) are thus co-existing in one locus, they have got subject-object relationship / avabhaasaka avabhaasya sambhandhaa.

Swamiji gives an example. Referring to his dress, Swamiji says: "For example take this dress. The cloth and the orange colour are intimately present; what is the relationship between the cloth and the orange colour? Ans: 'Substance-attribute relationship is there'. Now, the sunlight also is falling on the cloth; sunlight is also intimately there with the cloth, as the colour is; but, what is the relationship between the sunlight and cloth? It is not substance-attribute relationship. What is it, then?

"Orange colour also is also close to the cloth; sunlight is also close to the cloth. But, there is a difference in the relationship between 'the cloth and its colour' and the relationship between 'the cloth and the sunlight that is falling on it'. What is that difference? Ans: 'The colour and cloth have guna-gunee sambhandhaa. Light and cloth have avabhaasaka-avabhaasya sambhandhaa'.

"Light is very close to the cloth, like an attribute. But, it is not an attribute; therefore, while, between the colour and the cloth, guna-gunee sambhandhaa is there, between the light and the cloth, the relationship is avabhaasaka avabhaasya sambhandhaa .

"Extending this example to the trio, (i) the mind (ii) its emotions and (iii) the Consciousness : the mind is like the cloth; emotions are like the colour; Consciousness is like the light. Between emotions and mind, the relationship is guna-gunee sambhandhaa. But, between the Consciousness and the mind, even though Consciousness is the saakshi chaithanyam in the mind and the mind is there closely, it is not guna-gunee sambhandhaa between the chaithanyam and the mind; it is avabhaasaka avabhaasya sambhandhaa.

"When you say 'I am aware of the mind', 'I am the 'awarer' and the mind is the 'aware'; 'I am the subject and the mind is the object; 'I' and the mind are intimately together. But, even though 'I' and the mind are intimately together, remember, 'I am not a gunaa of the mind.

"In this context, what is the meaning of the word 'I'? 'I am the saakshi chaithanyam. What type of saakshi chaithanyam? Ans: 'Saakshi chaithanyam intimately spreading over the mind'. Because 'I' spread over the mind, I am called chidhaabhaasaa. But, I am nothing but the saakshi obtaining in the mind, only named as chidhaabhaasaa. But, who am 'I'? Ans: "This saakshi only". Even if the mind is not there, 'I' will be there; but, at that time, 'I' will not be named chidhaabhaasaa.

"Remember chidhabhaasaa is a name of the saakshi; do not imagine there is a separate chidhaabhaasaa and there is a separate saakshi; and, also, that, you have to remove chidhaabhaasaa and retain saakshi. That is a wrong perception. 'I am called chidhaabhaasaa, when 'I am spread over the mind. When I say 'I am aware of the mind', 'I am myself the saakshi in the mind 'illuminating' or 'aware of' the mind. We have coined the two words, chidhaabhaasaa and chith for the sake of transaction. I am repeatedly stressing this fact, since some students mistake that they are two separate Consciousnesses, because of which, they struggle to experience the saakshi separately. We should never do that. Whenever I say "I am aware of the mind", 'I' am the saakshi, named chidhaabhaasaa. And, when the mind resolves also, 'I' continue to be the saakshi; but, I will not be named chidhaabhaasaa. When the mind comes, 'I' am named chidhaabhaasaa. When the mind is not there, 'my' name chidhaabhaasaa goes away. Do not imagine two separate types of consciousness, which are not there".

Reverting to the text, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

ॐ तत्र - Under this circumstance,

ॐ तयोः जात्रु अहंता रूपयोः - between the saakshi chaithanyam and the mind with vishaya vrutthi,

ॐ अवभासक अवभास्य संबन्धः (भवति) - there is the relationship of 'revealer-revealed'.

The word 'bhavathi' is supplied, to split the sentence, for easier comprehension.

'jnaathru' means 'saakshi chaithanyam' and 'ahanthaa' means 'the mind with vishaya vrutthi'. The relationship between the two is 'avabhaasaka-avabhaasya sambhandhaa' (revealer- revealed relationship) and not 'guna-gunee sambhandhaa'.

Proceeding:

ॐ (अवभासक अवभास्य संबन्ध) व्यतिरेकेण - Other than this 'revealer- revealed' relationship (between Consciousness and the mind)

ॐ अन्यत् संबन्धान्तरं न उपपद्यते - no other relationship is there.

When Sureswaraachaaryaa says 'there is no other relationship', what he is keeping in mind is, the 'second' relationship discussed in the earlier session, viz., 'upakaaraka-upakaarya sambhandhaa' or 'apakaaraka-apakaarya sambhandhaa'. The Aachaaryaa avers that, there is only avabhaasaka-avabhaasya sambhandhaa (between Consciousness and the mind).

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to verse 60 :

अहंन्तारूपं तु आत्मसात्कृत्वा अहंकञ्चुकं परिधाय उपकार्यत्व उपकारकत्वक्षमः सन् बाह्यविषयेण उपकारिणापकारिणा वात्मात्मीयं संबन्धं प्रतिपद्यते । तदभिधीयते ।

Appropriating the ego to itself and putting on the coat of ego, the Self assumes the forms of the helped and helper. In connection with external objects, favourable and adverse, it attributes to itself, appropriate relations towards them. This is brought out now:

Now, Sureswaraacharya goes to the revelation of the external world.

To recap our recent discussions: "I am the Consciousness / chaithanyam; when 'I' talk about any knowledge, emotion etc., 'I' am aware of my mind. And, when 'I' am aware of the mind, I am called saakshi; mind is the avabhaasyam / the object of illumination. When 'I' thus get associated with the mind, as the 'revealer' of the mind and 'I' am spread over the mind, 'I' am renamed chidhaabhaasaa, just as, on a full moon night, sunlight is re-named moonlight. Moonlight is not a new light. Moonlight is only the reflected sunlight. Similarly, 'I' have been re-named chidhaabhaasaa.

"And, thereafter, with the help of the mind (as already indicated, 'I' do not require the help of anything, to reveal the mind), i.e. after illumining the mind, when 'I' join the mind (this does not mean the job of 'joining' is explicitly carried out; when 'I' look at the world, I have already joined the mind), and through the mind, when 'I' reveal / experience the external world, the question 'who is experiencing the external world?' arises.

"To this question, the answer can be presented in two ways. One way is "Saakshi experiences the mind and chidhabhaasaa experiences the world", as though saakshi and chidhabhaasaa are two separate things. But, the more appropriate way of replying is: "Saakshi experiences the mind ; saakshi itself, having the status of chidhabhaasaa spread over the mind / saakshi itself, with the name chidhabhaasaa, through the thought spreading over the world, experiences the world".

This is what Sureswaraacharya also says here. He wants to say: "saakshi, with the new name ahamkaaraa" (as repeatedly seen earlier, as in the example, 'sunlight' is re-named 'moonlight', in a similar manner, saakshi is re-named chidhaabhaasaa or ahamkaaraa, when in association with the mind). And, that idea he presents as "saakshi wearing the overcoat called ahamkaaraa".

Reverting to the text,

ॐ (साक्षि) तु - Whereas (the Self),

The subject of the sentence 'saakshi' or 'Self' is supplied.

ॐ अहंन्तारूपं आत्मसात् कृत्वा - claiming this ahamkaaraa / chidhaabhaasaa status as its own,

'Ahanthaaroopam' means 'ahamkaaraa / chidhaabhaasaa status'. 'Aathmasaath kruthvaa' means 'claiming as its own'.

It should be carefully noted and remembered that the chidhaabhaasaa / ahamkaaraa status is not assumed by saakshi, through undergoing any modification; just as, in the example, when sunlight is re-named moonlight, no modification has taken place.

The very same saakshi, taking the status of chidhaabhaasaa and owning that status, अहंकञ्चुकं परिधाय - and wearing the cloak of ahamkaaraa,

'Kamchukam' means 'cloak / overcoat'. The effect of 'Saakshi wearing the cloak of ahamkaaraa' can be compared to a traffic policeman in his mandatory uniform. When the traffic policeman is in his uniform, he wields enormous power, with all the vehicles on the road, implicitly obeying his signals. But, once he removes the uniform and wears a civilian dress, that power is gone. Similarly, once that ahamkaaraa / chidhaabhaasaa status is assumed by the saakshi, it acquires the capacity to experience the external world. Without wearing the aham kanchukam / the chidhaabhaasaa status, it loses that capacity and cannot experience the world. How can this statement / concept be proved? Ans: "By contemplating on the sushupthi and jaagrath avasthaa-s. In sushupthi, the mind is resolved, the saakshi does not have chidhaabhaasaa status and therefore, does not experience the world. In jaagrath avasthaa, 'I' have the chidhaabhaasaa status. Therefore, 'I' experience the world".

What happens 'after wearing the cloak of ahamkaaraa' by Saakshi? Sureswaraacharya says "The moment 'I' get the chidhabhaasaa status, and 'I' am ready to experience the world as ahamkaaraa ('I' am now named ahamkaaraa), 'I' become qualified to be a beneficiary of the world or a benefactor of the world".

Once 'I' get the ahamkaaraa status, joining the mind, 'I' become either a beneficiary of the world or a benefactor of the world. But, how? How do 'I' become a beneficiary or benefactor of the world? Ans: "When favourable and wonderful things happen to 'me', 'I' become a beneficiary. And, when I become a karthaa and join the body and do some actions, I become the benefactor of the world".

The Saakshi, which has now become the ahamkaaraa, becomes either a beneficiary or a benefactor.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says, that, saakshi, after taking the ahamkaaraa status: उपकार्यत्व उपकारकत्वक्षमः (भवति) - becomes fit for being a beneficiary or a benefactor of the external world.

In the place of the word 'sar', in the text, the word 'bhavathi' can be supplied, as in the previous sentence, to split this long sentence into two smaller sentences for easier comprehension.

'kshama:' means 'fit for'. 'Upakaarayathvam' means 'nature of being a beneficiary' (of the external world) and 'upakaarakathvam' means 'nature of being a benefactor' (of the external world). All these happen to the saakshi only. But, we will have to carefully add the word 'seemingly', because the whole drama is conducted in the maayaa or moolaavidhya carpet. That is why, as already pointed out, the Aachaaryaa started the paragraph, with the adjective 'avidhyotthasya' to 'antha:karanasya'. Therefore, saakshi is 'seemingly' the beneficiary or saakshi is 'seemingly' the benefactor. To borrow from verse 8 of chapter V of the Bhagavadh Githaa: 'pasyan srnunvan sprusan jigran api saakshi naiva kinchith karothi – "Even while seeing, hearing, touching smelling etc. saakshi does not do anything at all". In reality, saakshi is neither a beneficiary nor a benefactor. Only 'seemingly', it gets the status of 'upakaaryathvam' (beneficiary status) or 'upakaarakathvam' (benefactor status).

And, that is why Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa said in his Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram (verse 8) 'viswam pasyathi kaarya kaaranathayaa svasswaami sambhandhatha: sishya aachaaryathayaa thathaa eva pithru puthraaadhyathmanaa bedatha: svapane jaagarathi vaa ya esha purusho maayaa paribrahmitha: etc." – "He, who is the Purushaa, under the delusion of maayaa, sees in himself, the world of cause-effect, diversely related as possessor and possession, as teacher and taught or as father and son, both in the state of waking and dreaming etc." Saakshi becomes pithaa and puthraa | There is a 'beneficiary-benefactor' relationship between them. Saakshi becomes guru: and sishyaa: Between them, 'beneficiary-benefactor' relationship is there. But, all these relationships are only naatakam – drama. All the sambhandhaa-s are mithyaa sambhandhaa: as forcefully conveyed by Sankara Bhagavdha Paadhaa, by the use of the term 'maayaa paribrahmitha:' – 'under the delusion of maayaa' |

What happens when these mithya sambhandhaa-s come? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:
बाह्य विषयेण - With the external objects,

आत्म आत्मीयं संबन्धं - the relationship of 'aham' (myself, as an individual) and 'mama' (mine)

In this context, 'aathmaa' means 'aham', the individual, and not the sacchidhaananda aathmaa. 'aathmeeyam' means 'mama' or 'mine'.

उपकारिणा (वा) अपकारिणा वा - either as source of sukham or as source of dhu:kham
'Upakaari' means 'sukha pradha:' / 'source of happiness' / 'positive influence' and 'apakaari' means 'dhu:kha pradha:' / 'source of unhappiness' / 'negative influence'.

प्रतिपद्यते - results.

As an example, to a father, the son can become a source of either happiness or unhappiness, depending on the son's character and behaviour and the father's expectations. When the son is a source of happiness and fulfillment for the father, he is an 'upakaari' to the father. Conversely, when he is a source of unhappiness and dissatisfaction to the father, he is an 'apakaari' to the father.

The very saakshi, which has now become the ahamkaaraa and named as chidhaabhaasaa, as chidhabhaasaa / ahamkaara, is 'seemingly' related to the baahya vishayaa – external objects. That relationship is called 'aathma-aathmeeyam sambhandham' by Sureswaraachaaryaa, meaning 'ahamkaara mamakaara sambhandha:' | 'Aathmaa' here, means 'aham'; 'aathmeeyam' means 'mama'.

'Ahamkaara mamakaara sambhandhaa' is developed; unfortunately, even though it is a maayaa sambhandhaa, the human being forgets the fact "I am the saakshi chaithanyam, who is only wearing a 'costume' as a father or a mother, for the sake of drama / entertainment".

The 5th capsule of Vedhaantha (as enunciated by Swamiji) is to be recollected here: "By forgetting my real saakshi svaroopam, I convert life into a burden. By remembering 'my' real nature, I convert life into a drama / an entertainment". Due to the 'forgetting' of 'my' real nature, maayaa relationships become real and family relationship becomes mahaa real. And, most of the time, one's worries are centered on one's family only, because of forgetting one's saakshi svaroopam.

The Aachaaryaa concludes this sentence with the averment 'aathma aathmeeyam sambhandham prathipadhyathe'. The second sambhandhaa between ahamkaaraa and the world can be looked upon as 'upakaarya – upakaaraka sambhandhaa' also, as discussed earlier.

Between saakshi and mind, there is only one sambhandhaa, viz., 'avabhaasaka avabhaasya sambhandhaa'. But, between ahamkaara and the world, there are two sambhandhaa-s, (1) 'avabhaasaka avabhasaya sambhandha' and (2) 'upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandhaa' or 'aathma aathmeeyam sambhandhaa'.

तद् अभिधीयते - (Sureswaraachaaryaa says) I want to present that alone in the slokaa (that follows).

Chapter III: Verse 60 –

इदं ज्ञानं भवेत्ज्ञातुर्ममज्ञानं तथाहमः ।

अज्ञानोपाधिनेदं स्याद्विक्रियातोऽहमो मम ॥ (६०)

The knowledge of 'This' arises in the knower and the knowledge of 'Mine' arises in the ego. 'This' is a product of ignorance and 'Mine' is a product of the modification of the nature of the ego thereof.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa gives two technical names for these two types of knowledge that 'I', the saakshi, have. The first knowledge is direct knowledge of my own mind, i.e., 'direct awareness of the mind', as saakshi. Sureswaraachaaryaa calls this 'mind awareness' that 'I' have, because of 'I', the saakshi, directly revealing the mind, as 'idham jnaanam'. It is a name given by the Aachaaryaa.

ॐ इदं ज्ञानं - 'Mind awareness'

ॐ ज्ञातुः भवेत् - is there for the saakshi (when saakshi, as saakshi, reveals the mind).

'jnaathu:' means 'saakshina:' |

To consolidate: When saakshi, as saakshi, reveals the mind, saakshi has got 'mind awareness', which 'awareness' is called 'idham jnaanam'.

How does one express that 'idham jnaanam'? Ans: "By saying, 'experientially, I am aware of the mind. I know I have got raagha dveshaa kaama krodhaa etc.' When one is distinctly describing the conditions of the mind, one has got 'mind awareness'.

ॐ तथा - In a similar manner,

ॐ अहमः - for the ahamkaaraa,

'Ahama:' means 'for the saakshi chaithanyam which has taken the chidhaabhaasaa / ahamkaaraa status upon the mind'.

The parallel in the example will be: "The sunlight itself, which has taken the moonlight status, when it is upon the moon".

What knowledge comes for that saakshi, which has taken the ahamkaaraa status?
मम ज्ञानं (भवति)- the awareness of the world 'comes'.

Once again, the verb 'bhavathi', is to be supplied.

The term 'mama jnaanam', used in the verse, means 'world awareness', in the form of 'my' house / 'my' wife / 'my' children / 'my' grandchildren etc.

'Mind awareness' is 'idham jnaanam'; 'world awareness' is 'mama jnaanam'. This is how Sureswaraachaaryaa is differentiating between 'mind awareness' and 'world awareness'.

Hereafter, the Aachaaryaa proceeds to talk about the 'medium', in which the 'revelations' are made. He is about to point out: "Saakshi, in ajnaanam medium, reveals the mind, whereas, saakshi, in the mind medium reveals the world".

171: Chapter III, Verses 60 to 62 (30-01-2010)

In this small portion of diversion from the main topic, Sureswaraachaaryaa is talking about two types of anaathmaa, in the form of (i) the mind and (ii) the external world. Mind is anaathmaa, having all the five features of anaathmaa, viz., dhrusyathvam, baudhikathvam, sagunathvam, savikaarathvam and aagamaapaayithvam. The world is also anaathmaa, having the same five features of anaathmaa; still, because of the unique status of the mind and the unique subtle nature of the mind, there is a difference between the mind anaathmaa and the world anaathmaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa is presenting that difference alone in these three verses, which we saw as five points at the commencement of this topic.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is developing that topic, viz., the difference, in these three verses. In this verse (verse 60), he is showing that mind is first directly illumined by the Consciousness and the world is illumined later. We get the awareness of the mind first, before getting the awareness of the world. We can never get the awareness of the world, without getting the awareness of the mind first.

In the sushupthi avasthaa, we have neither mind awareness nor world awareness. Only in the jaagrath avasthaa, both of them arise.

And, if you study how both of them arise, they do not arise simultaneously; we should have mind awareness first, which is accomplished by the direct illumination of the mind, by the saakshi, in the medium of ajnaanam or kaarana sareeram. The necessity to have this medium of ajnaanam for 'mind awareness' is because mind belongs to sookshma sareeram and sookshma sareeram can be reached only through kaarana sareeram. Saakshi can reach the sookshma sareeram only through kaarana sareeram; kaarana sareeram is called ajaana upaadhi or moolaavidhyaa medium. Only through the kaarana sareeram or only in the medium of ajnaanam, saakshi can illumine the mind. And, at that time of illumination, 'mind-awareness' is formed, which 'awareness', Sureswaraachaaryaa calls 'idham-jnanam'.

Thereafter, i.e. after getting the 'mind awareness', which Sureswaraachaaryaa calls 'idham jnaanam', saakshi puts on the mind as an overcoat (as it were) and becomes the 'revealer' of the external world, resulting in 'world-awareness'. Sureswaraachaaryaa calls 'world-awareness' as "mama-jnanam". And, only when saakshi gets the status of ahamkaaraa, the 'mama-jnaanam' arises. In contrast to mamakaaraa, 'I' am ahamkaaraa.

But, all these happen only after putting on the overcoat of the mind. There is a significance behind Sureswaraachaaryaa talking about mind-awareness as 'idham-jnaanam', rather than as 'aham-jnaanam'. Some students might have been wondering on this, i.e., as to why the Aaachaaryaa should call 'mind-awareness' as 'idham-jnaanam' and not 'aham-jnaanam'. The reason is this: "At the time when the 'mind-awareness' takes place, mind continues to be an 'object' of awareness, as 'this'. To indicate this fact, that, mind is an 'object' of awareness, he uses the term 'idham-jnaanam'. And, after knowing the mind as an object, only when the mind is put on, as an overcoat, only as the second step, the 'mind-awareness' gets converted into 'I awareness'".

To repeat: 'Mind-awareness' is 'idham-jnaanam'; that is the first step. Thereafter, in the second step, mind is put on, as the overcoat, by the saakshi; after putting on the mind as the overcoat, then alone, the idham-jnaanam (mind-awareness) is called 'I-awareness' or ahamkaaraa. In other words, a person talks about 'I-awareness', only after putting on the mind cloak. In the sushupthi avasthaa, when the mind cloak is set aside, there is no question of 'I-awareness'. It is not there.

Therefore, the first step is idham-jnaanam; after 'putting on' the mind as cloak, comes 'I-awareness', which alone is called ahamkaaraa. To repeat again (for emphasis): 'mind-awareness' is idham-jnaanam; after putting on the mind as cloak, the idham-jnaanam itself will be re-named aham-jnaanam.

As may be recollected, 'spectacles' has been quoted as an example for this, in earlier contexts. When I take my spectacles from its case and just look at the spectacles, before putting it on, it is only an 'object' of my awareness; at that time, it deserves the pronoun 'this' and is referred to as 'this spectacles'; it is not included in the word I. In 'this spectacles' knowledge, the spectacles is not included in I. But, when I put on the spectacles for the purpose of viewing things clearly, the spectacles is no more 'this'; it is part of 'me'. Once I put on the spectacles, it has lost the status of 'this'; it is part of 'me' and, thereafter, can be included in the word I.

Therefore, the first stage is 'idham-jnaanam'. Then, after putting on the mind cloak, the very 'idham-jnaanam' becomes 'aham-jnaanam'. And, once the 'mind-awareness' has been converted into I, the ahamkaara awareness, the world comes in front of me and is 'awared'. That is what Sureswaraachaaryaa says in this verse. He uses the term 'idham-jnaanam' for 'mind-awareness', which takes place to the saakshi first; later, 'world awareness', which Sureswaraachaarya calls 'mama-jnaanam' takes place to the saakshi itself, after the saakshi has acquired ahamkaara status. This is the idea of the slokaa.

The first line of the verse was seen in the earlier session. To recap the first line:

ॐ Jnaathu: - For jnaathaa, the saakshi

ॐ Idham-jnaanam bhaveth - 'mind-awareness' arises.

'Mind-awareness' means 'awareness of the mind'. For the saakshi, 'mind-awareness' takes place in the beginning, in the form of 'idham-jnaanam'. The term 'idham-jnaanam' is a compound word, preferably with a hyphen between 'idham' and 'jnaanam', which is missing in the text. The word is karmadhaaraya samaasam (of Sanskrit grammar), derived as 'idham ithi jnaanam' = 'idham jnaanam'.

ॐ Thathaa – (Thereafter / in the second stage). In a similar manner,

ॐ Ahama: - for the saakshi itself, which has taken the ahamkaara status, ॐ Mama jnaanam (bhaveth) - 'world-awareness' in the form of 'mama-jnaanam' (in the form of 'mine' knowledge) arises.

The verb 'bhaveth' is supplied. The term 'mama-jnaanam' is also karmadhaaraya samaasam, derived as 'mama ithi jnaanam' = 'mama-jnaanam'. And, what do you mean by 'mama-jnaanam'? Ans: "The 'awareness' is in the forms 'this is my son / my daughter / my wife / my house / my car / my key / my book' etc".

For whom does this 'mama-jnaanam' arise? The Aachaaryaa says 'ahama:' meaning 'for the saakshi itself, which has now taken ahamkaara status, with mind overcoat. 'Ahama:' means 'ahamkaara roopa saakshina:' |

After having said this in the first line, the Aachaaryaa talks about the mediums in which, the two types of 'awareness' arise, in the second line of the verse:

ॐ इदं स्यात् - (Of these two types of knowledge), 'idham-jnaanam' for the saakshi takes place,

Sureswaraacharya's expression is terse. The word 'idham' (in the second line of the verse) should be understood as 'idham-jnaanam' i.e. 'mind-awareness'.

ॐ अज्ञान उपाधिना - through the medium of ajnaanam.

The essence of the statement: "'Mind-awareness' takes place for the saakshi, through the medium of ajnaanam or kaarana sareeram or moolaavidhyaa". To elaborate: As already pointed out, sookshma sareeram can be 'seen' by saakshi, only through kaarana sareeram, since kaarana sareeram is 'interior' to sookshma sareeram. This can be understood by visualizing 'I', the saakshi, as wearing the kaarana sareeram as a vest, the sookshma sareeram as a shirt and the sthoola sareeram as a coat. Therefore, saakshi can 'reach' the sookshma sareeram only through kaarana sareeram; and, likewise, saakshi can 'reach' the sthoola sareeram through sookshma sareeram alone. Through kaarana sareeram alone, awareness can reach sookshma sareeram. Through sookshma sareeram alone, awareness can reach sthoola sareeram. And, only thereafter, is the 'awareness' of the world. Keeping these in mind, the Aacharya says "ajnaana upaadhinaa idham syaath".

Thereafter:

ॐ मम (स्यात्) - The mama-jnaanam or 'world awareness' can be there

Once again a terse term is used by Sureswaraacharya. The word 'mama' means 'mama-jnaanam'.

ॐ अहम्: - for the saakshi, which is in the form of ahamkaaraa, 'ahama:' (as before) means 'ahamkaara roopa saakshina:' |

Also, this 'world awareness', in the form of 'mama-jnaanam' can take place for the saakshi, which is in the form of ahamkaaraa, only through thought modifications. That is being said:

ॐ विक्रियात : - only through thought modifications.

'Vikriyaatha:' here means 'through thought modifications'. That, in turn, means: "Thoughts become the medium for the saakshi to know the world". Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa devotes a full chapter in his treatise 'Upadesa Saahasri' to convey this same idea very eloquently. As pointed out earlier, this treatise of Sureswaraachaaryaa, Naishkarmya Siddhi, is heavily based on the Upadesa Saahasri of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa. In that treatise, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in a chapter titled 'budhyarooda prakaranam', picturesquely avers: "To observe the world, the world has to be mounted on the frame 'mind'".

Only when the world is mounted on the 'mind' frame, you can see the world; somewhat similar to doctors mounting the X-rayed pictures, on a lighted frame, for reading them clearly. Saakshi has to mount the whole world on the 'mind' frame and then only 'world experience' is possible. The objective world can be never be experienced unless it is mounted on the frame called mind. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says 'vikriyaatha:' meaning 'through thought modifications'.

Incidentally, all these were covered by the 'five' points, discussed in the 'introduction' given before commencing this topic, in the text.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 61:

"एकस्यैव ज्ञातुः अन्तर्बाह्यनिमित्तभेदात् अभिन्नेऽपि विषय इदं ममेति ज्ञानं द्वैरूप्यं जायत" इत्युक्तम् । अत्र उपक्रियमाण अपक्रियमाणस्यैव ज्ञातुर्विषये ममप्रत्ययो भवति विपर्यये चेदंप्रत्यय इति कथमवगम्यते । अवगम्यतामन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्याम् । तत्कथमित्याह ।

In the same knower, two units of knowledge with regard to the object arise as 'This' and as 'mine', owing to the differences of causes internal and external. The object is known as 'Mine', in relation to the knower, supposed to be helped or injured by the object. In the absence of that relation of help or injury, it is simply felt as 'This'. How is this construed? It is construed by rational discrimination. It is this way:

Sureswaraachaaryaa is coming to the fourth point (among the five points) that was discussed during the introduction to these three verses; that fourth point being : "In the case of 'mind awareness', there is only one sambhandhaa between mind and saakshi, viz., avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa | In the case of world awareness, there are two sambhandhaa-s, between world and saakshi (in chidhaabhaasaa or ahamkaaraa form), viz., (1) avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa and (2) either upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa or apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa'. The second sambhandhaa, viz., 'upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa or apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa' can be combined and jointly referred to, as kaarya-kaaraka sambhandhaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is raising the questions as to why we insist that the 'world awareness' should have two sambhandhaa-s; i.e., why do we insist upon kaarya-kaaraka sambhandhaa also, in the case of world awareness, while we say that such a sambhandhaa is not required in the case of 'mind awareness'; in other words, the questions are: "Why do you insist that kaarya-kaaraka sambhandhaa is additionally required for 'world-awareness'? Why do you say kaarya-kaaraka sambhandhaa is not required in the case of 'mind awareness'?" The Aachaaryaa himself raises these questions and he wants to prove these views, by anvayavyathirekhaa logic. And, before asking the questions, the Aachaaryaa presents what had been discussed about the two types of 'awareness' in a consolidated form, in one sentence.

ॐ विषये अभिन्ने अपि - "Even though the 'mind' and the 'world' are both anaathmaa only / even though both 'mind' and 'world' enjoy the same anaathmaa status only,

ॐ एकस्य एव ज्ञातु : - for the one and the same saakshi

ॐ द्वैरूप्यं ज्ञानं जायते - two types of 'awareness' take place,

In what forms?

ॐ इदं मम इति - in the form of idham-jnaanam and in the form of mama-jnaanam,

This is only a repetition of what had already been discussed, viz., "two types of awareness take place for the saakshi, one awareness in the form of 'idham-jnaanam' and another awareness in the form of 'mama-jnaanam', first one with regard to the mind and the second one with regard to the world. This difference is there, even though both of them happen to be same anaathmaa only".

And, what is the reason given? The reason is:

ॐ अन्तर् बाह्य निमित्त भेदात् - because the mind happens to be within the body (antha:) i.e. closer to saakshi (as it were), and the world happens to be outside the body (baahyam)".

Because of the internality of the mind there is 'idham-jnaam' of the mind and because of the externality of the world, there is 'mama-jnaanam' of the world, even though saakshi is one.

ॐ इति उक्तम् - (Aachaaryaa says) "This has been said by me (in the previous paragraph)".

Now, he raises the questions (referred to earlier):

ॐ अत्र - This being so,

ॐ "विषये - "With regard to the external world,

ॐ ममप्रत्ययः भवति - 'mama-jnaanam' is possible

ॐ ज्ञातुः - for the saakshi,

ॐ उपक्रियमाण अपक्रियमाणस्य एव - only when there is additional relationship of kaarya-kaaraka sambhandhaa;

'Upakriyamaana apakriyamaanasya eva' has to be understood as 'only when there is an additional relationship in the form of upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa or apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa'. The Aachaaryaa does not mention this in explicit form. He conveys the concept in an indirect form, by giving the adjective 'upakriyamaana apakriyamaanasya' to 'jnaathu:' | 'Jnaatha' means 'saakshi', in this context. 'Jnaathu:' is the 'shashti vibhakthi' form of 'jnaatha'; the compound term 'upakriyamaana apakriyamaanasya' is also the same 'shashti vibhakthi' and is used as adjective to 'Jnaathu:' Through the use of this adjective, Sureswaraachaaryaa implicitly conveys the idea that the additional relationship of kaarya karaka sambhandhaa (between the world and saakshi) is required for 'mama-jnaanam'. He asserts "This is what my thesis is", by further stressing:

ॐ विपर्यये च - otherwise, i.e., if that additional sambhandhaa is not there

ॐ इदं प्रत्ययः (एव भवति) " - the 'awareness' will be only 'idham-jnaanam' and not 'mama-jnaanam'".

'Viparyaye cha' means 'otherwise'. What does 'otherwise' mean here ? Ans: "If that additional sambhandhaa is not there". If the second sambhandhaa is not there, it means there is only one sambhandhaa. And, what is that one sambhandhaa? Ans: 'avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandhaa'.

To condense and simplify this sentence, with its implication: "'mama- jnaanam' requires two sambhandhaa-s ; 'idham-jnaanam' requires only one sambhandhaa".

Having made the statement, Sureswaraachaaryaa asks:

इति कथं अवगम्यते - How can we logically arrive at this conclusion?

The concept, viz., "'mama- jnaanam' requires two sambhandhaa-s; 'idham-jnaanam' requires only one sambhandhaa" is so subtle, that even its mere comprehension is difficult. Now, Aachaaryaa wants to discuss "What is the logic to say this? How is this known? What is the source for such a perspective?" (which discussion is bound to be more involved).

He answers:

अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्याम् अवगम्यताम् - It can be easily understood through anvaya and vyathirekhaa.

Then, naturally the student's question will be: " Just by your saying 'anvaya-vyathirekhaa', how do I understand? You have to tell me how anvayavyathirekhaa reasoning must be employed, to know this fact, that idham-jnaanam requires one sambhandhaa and mama- jnaanam requires two sambhandhaa-s."

The Aachaaryaa says:

ॐ तत् क्तं इति आह - I will tell you how.

What Sureswaraachaaryaa is going to use are: (i) jaagrath avasthaa, where both aham- jnaanam and mama-jnaanam are present and (ii) sushupthi avasthaa, in which neither aham- jnaanam nor mama- jnaanam is there . That is going to be the study.

Chapter III: Verse 61 –

अनुपक्रियमाणत्वान्न जातुः स्यादहं मम ।

घटादिवदिदं तु स्यान्मोहमात्रव्यपाश्रयात् ॥ ६१ ॥

The ego never presents itself as 'Mine' to the knower, for the pure knower is neither helped nor injured by anything. Since he is covered by ignorance only, it appears as 'This'.

The Aachaaryaa says that the jaagrath avasthaa can be taken as a case study, to show that the ajnaanam medium is actively there and mind medium is also actively there, and we find idham-jnaanam taking place in the ajnaanam medium and we can see mama-jnaanam taking place in the mind medium, with regard to the world. And, we can also clearly experience, that, with regard to the mind, there is only one sambhandhaa and we can clearly see that, with regard to the world, two sambhandhaa-s are there. All these are prathyaksha anubhavaa in jaagrath avasthaa.

It was said, that, in the jaagrath avasthaa, ajnaanam medium is active. How do you say that ajnaanam medium is active? Ans: "In jaagrath avasthaa, we clearly say 'I do not know that I am saakshi'. This aathma ajnaanam is explicit and evident in jaagrath avasthaa. Therefore, active ajnaanam or active kaarana sareeram is available in jaagrath avasthaa".

Later, the Aachaaryaa is going to say "in sushupthi, ajnaanam is passive i.e. kaarana sareeram is inactive". This is because, at the time of sleep, one does not say "I do not know I am aathmaa". Such a statement cannot be made by any one in deep sleep. In other words, ignorance is not expressed in sushupthi avasthaa.

To sum up: Active ajnaanam is present in jaagrath avasthaa; active ajnaanam is absent in sushupthi avasthaa. The Aachaaryaa will be presenting this fundamental point.

Now, in jaagrath avasthaa, there is active ajnaanam. And:

ॐ अनुपक्रियमाणत्वात् - Since the mind does not add any positive value or negative value to the saakshi,

What does this statement "since the mind does not add any positive value to the saakshi or negative value to the saakshi" mean ? Ans: "Mind does not give happiness or unhappiness to the saakshi itself. That, in turn, means there is no upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa or apakaarya-apakaaraka sambhandhaa between the saakshi and mind". We experience this fact in jaagrath avasthaa. To repeat: 'Anukakriyamaanathvaath' means "since we do not experience any positive benefit to the saakshi or any negative harm to the saakshi from the mind". Mind does not do any good to the saakshi; mind does not do any harm to the saakshi. Therefore, what relationship is there? Ans: "Only one relationship, viz., avabhaasya-avabhaasaka relationship". Upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa is not there. But, on what is this conclusion based on? Ans: "Our own anubhavaa only".

Therefore:

ॐ अहं - the 'mind awareness'

ॐ जातु: - of the saakshi,

In this context, the word 'aham' refers to the 'mind awareness' or ahamkaaraa awareness. (At the moment, we are not getting into the logic behind this statement. The statement is to be taken by the student, on face value))

ॐ मम न स्यात् - will not come under 'mama-jnaanam,

Since upakaarya-upakaaraka sambhandhaa is not there between the mind and the saakshi, the 'mind awareness' for the saakshi will not come under mama-jnaanam. Expressed in a marginally different manner, since mind does not do any upakaaraa or apakaaraa to the saakshi, 'mind awareness' for the saakshi, will not come under mama-jnaanam.

ॐ गटादिवत् - as it happens in the case of a pot.

With regard to the objective world ('pot' is representative of the objective world), 'upakaaraka upakaarya sambhandhaa' comes, whereas, when there is 'mind-awareness' rising, 'upakaaraka upakaarya sambhandhaa' does not happen, unlike in the case of the 'pot' (objective world). Therefore it ('mind-awareness') is not 'mama-jnaanam'. That is the reason, why 'mind' is always referred to, as 'I'. Rarely does anybody refer to the mind as 'mama' / 'mine'. We refer to the mind mostly as 'I' only. When emotional turbulence is there, nobody says "my mind has got emotional problems"; instead, the tendency is to say "I am emotionally disturbed".

'Mind' is referred to only as 'I' and not 'mama', because mind is neither upakaarakam nor apakaarakam to the saakshi.

So, What is the anvayaa? Ans: "Anupakriyamaanathvaath 'aham' jnaathu: 'mama' na syaath ghataadhivath" – "Since mind does not add any positive or negative value to the saakshi, 'mind-awareness' of the saakshi will not come under 'mama-jnaanam', unlike awareness of objects like a pot".

In that case, what will be that knowledge? The Aachaaryaa says:

तु इदं स्यात् - On the other hand, 'mind-awareness' will be only 'idham-jnaanam,

Based on what ?

ॐ मोह मात्र व्यापाश्रयात् - which is based on the medium of ajnaanam only.

'Moha:' means ajnaanam / ajnaana upaadhi / kaarana sareera upaadhi / moolaavidhyaa upaadhi / mayaa upaadhi.

And, therefore, what? Ans: "Only one relationship is there, viz., avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandhaa." This is based on our own experience in jaagrath avasthaa. This is anvayaa reasoning.

Hereafter, the Aachaaryaa will give vyathirekhaa reasoning, pointing out: "In sushupthi, we do not find either happening".

He gives the introduction.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 62:

मोहतत्कार्याश्रयत्वत् जातृत्वविक्रिययोः पूर्वत्रेदंममज्ञानान्वयः प्रदर्शितः । अथाधुना तद्व्यतिरेकेण व्यतिरेकप्रदर्शनार्थमाह ।

It was shown earlier that the knower and the ego, owing to the ignorance and the resulting modifications came to be associated with 'This' and 'mine' respectively, in their knowledge. Now the contrary is pointed out:

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa first points out : "Of the anvaya-vyathirekhaa reasoning promised by me, I have given the anvayaa argument in the previous slokaa, namely, that, in the jaagrath avasthaa, we have got (i) 'mind-awareness' and only one relationship and (ii) 'world-awareness' and two relationships".

ॐ पूर्वत्र - In the earlier slokaa (slokaa 60),

ॐ इदं मम ज्ञान अन्वयः प्रदर्शितः - I have shown the presence of 'idham-jnaanam' and 'mama jnaanam',

Of the two, 'idham-jnaanam' is with regard to 'mind-awareness' and 'mama-jnaanam' is with regard to 'world-awareness'.

ॐ जातृत्व विक्रिययोः - for the saakshi and ahamkaaraa (respectively), ॐ मोह तत्कार्य आश्रयत्व - based on ajnaanam medium and mind medium (respectively).

'Moham' means 'ajnaanam'; 'thath kaaryam' means 'mind'; mind is a product of moolaavidhya and therefore, Aachaaryaa refers to it, as 'moha kaaryam'.

(The students should note that the essence of this sentence, is the second point out of the five points discussed while introducing the three verses, under study.)

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "This has been shown". This is the anvayaa argument, based on jaagrath avasthaa experience.

ॐ अत अधुना - Hereafter,

ॐ व्यतिरेक प्रदर्शनार्थ - to show that both 'idham-jnaanam' and 'mama - jnaanam' become absent,

ॐ तद् व्यतिरेकेण - in the absence of these two relationships (viz., avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa and kaarya karaka sambhandhaa), ॐ आह - the following verse is given.

When both avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandhaa and kaarya kaaraka sambhandhaa are absent, what will you find? Ans: "We find both 'idham-jnaanam' and 'mama jnaanam' becoming absent".

"When two sambhandhaa-s are there, two jnaanam-s are there" is anvayaa argument. "When two sambhandhaa-s are absent, both jnaanam-s are absent" is the vyathirekhaa reasoning. 'Two sambhandhaa-s' refer to (i) avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandhaa and (ii) upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandha. 'Two jnaanam-s' refer to 'idham-jnaanam' and 'mama jnaanam'.

"Sambhandhadvaya sathve jnaana dvaya sathvam ; sambhandhadvaya abhaave jnaana dvaya abhaava." | 'Sambhandhadvaya sathve jnaana dvaya sathvam' is anvayaa reasoning. 'Sambhandha dvaya abhaave jnaana dvaya abhaava.' is vyathirekhaa argument. "Thasmaath sambhandhadvayam eva jnaanadvayasya kaaranam bhavathi". A simple analogy for this : 'When sugar is added, milk is sweet'; this is 'co-presence' argument. And, 'without sugar, milk is not sweet' is 'co-absence' argument. The conclusion: Sugar is the cause of sweetness in the milk".

That is the idea that is going to be told through sushupthi experience in the slokaa.

Chapter III: Verse 62 –

विक्रियाज्ञानशून्यत्वान्नेदं न च ममात्मनः ।

उत्थितस्य सतोऽज्ञानं नाहमज्ञासिषं यतः ॥ ६२ ॥

In sleep, as the Self is without ignorance and modifications, there is neither 'This' nor 'Mine'. After one wakes up, he reasons out the presence of ignorance on the basis of the fact that he knew nothing in that state.

Now to show the co-absence of the two pairs, Sureswaraachaaryaa is taking the deep-sleep state as the case study.

In deep-sleep state, there is no avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa between the saakshi and mind. Why? Ans: "The reason is obvious and simple. In sushupthi, mind itself is resolved; and, when something is resolved, it is as good as non-existent. For example, when a person dies, it cannot be said that that person is potentially existent. Nobody will say: 'I do not grieve, because, after all, that person is potentially existent'. Even though the dead person's body is there, in the form of pancha boothaa, if the question 'Does he exist?' is raised, the obvious answer is 'No, He does not; he is not there'. Similarly, in sushupthi, mind is resolved into kaarana sareera avasthaa; therefore, mind itself is absent. While it is so, where is the question of avabhaasya avabhaasakna sambhandhaa between saakshi and mind?"

And, because of what reason, does this happen? Ans: "Because ajnaanam itself is in a passive state; ajnaana kaarana sareeram itself is in a passive state". What does this mean? Ans: "It is not active enough to project the mind. In sushupthi, kaarana sareeram is not active enough to activate the mind".

Therefore, ajnaanam is also as good as absent, since, non-functioning ajnaanam is as good as non-existing ajnaanam. Again an analogy : "Suppose you have got money in the form of bank deposits; but, it is not available for drawing, because of some reason or other; assume it is 'frozen'; under this circumstance, even though the money is in your account, for all practical purposes, you do not have money". In a similar manner, in sushupthi, ajnaanam is inactive; therefore it is as good as absent. "It is as good as absent" is the right usage; 'It is resolved' is not the right usage.

Ajnaanam is inactive; it is as good as absent. Therefore, mind is resolved. Therefore, there is no avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa between saakshi and mind. Therefore, sambhandhaa no. 1 (of the two sambhandhaa-s) is gone. Then, what about sambhandhaa no. 2? Is there upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandha between saakshi and the world? Ans: "It is not there. That sambhandhaa is also absent. In sushupthi, world is not experienced at all. Where is the question of it giving harm or benefit to ahamkaaraa?"

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya also says both the sambhandhaa-s are absent. What is the result? Ans: There is neither idham jnaanam in the form of mind-awareness; since avabhaasya-avabhaasaka sambhandhaa is not there (avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandasya abhaavath) ; there is no mama jnaanam with regard to the world also. Why? Ans: "Upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandha abhaavath". Therefore, you find the absence of both pairs in sushupthi.

So, the Aachaaryaa says:

ॐ (सुषुप्तौ) - (In sushupthi)

This condition, viz., 'Sushupthau' is supplied.

ॐ विक्रिया अज्ञान शून्यत्वात् - because of the absence of mental modifications and of active ignorance,

'vikriyaa' means 'the modifying mind' or 'mental modifications' ; 'ajnaanam', in this context, means 'active ignorance' or 'active karana sareeram'. 'soonyathvam' means 'absence'. 'Vikriyaaa ajnaana soonyathvaath', therefore, means 'because of the absence of functioning mind and active kaarana sareeram'. And, this should be understood as 'because of the absence of 'avabhaasya avabhaasaka sambhandhaa' and 'upakaarya upakaaraka sambhandhaa'.

आत्मनः - for the saakshi,

न इदं - there is no 'idham-jnaanam';

न च मम - nor is there the mama-jnaanam .

'Na idham na cha mama' means 'neither idham-jnaanam nor mama-jnaanam'. Because of the absence of active ignorance and functioning mind there is neither idham-jnaanam nor mama-jnaanam. There is neither sambhandha dvayam nor jnaana dvayam in sushupthi.

If at all you talk about idham-jnaanam in sushupthi, you do that that only after waking up.

After waking up, you talk about idham-jnaanam and mama-jnaanam; but, by the time you wake up, ajnaanam and functioning mind have become active.

In jaagrath avasthaa, the two will be there. In sushupthi, both are absent.

172: Chapter III, Verses 62 to 64 (06-02-2010)

In these three verses (verses 60, 61 and 62), Sureswaraacharya is dealing with the topic of the internal difference existing between two types of anaathmaa. This is a diversion topic, the main topic being the difference between anaathmaa and aathmaa. The diversion topic is to point out, that, within anaathmaa itself, there are two types of anaathmaa and, that, those two are (i) the mind and (ii) the external world.

We have to differentiate these two anaathmaa-s, because saakshi's / aathmaa's 'awareness' of these two anaathmaa-s, take place in two different ways.

Saakshi's awareness of the mind / the 'mind-awareness' caused by Saakshi, is a direct phenomenon, which takes place in the medium of kaarana sareeram or ajnaanam. And, therefore, the first thing that I am aware of, is my mind only. In the field of kaarana sareeram or ajnaanam, the first thing that I become aware of, is 'mind'. The 'mind-awareness' takes place first, which awareness, Sureswaraacharya calls 'idham-jnaanam'.

And, instantaneously after the mind-awareness, so instantaneously, that I do not even notice the time-gap, I look upon the mind as 'myself'. I become aware of the mind and instantaneously, the very same mind is superimposed on myself; the idham mind becomes aham mind. The transition between idham and aham is so instantaneous, that I cannot even know the gap. For instance, I become aware of 'my' happiness; but, the very next moment I say "I am happy". If and when I say "I am aware of my happiness", 'happiness' is an object of experience and, at that time, it is 'idham-jnaanam'. When I am aware of the priya- modha- pramodha-vrutthi in the mind, at the time of the awareness of the happiness, that experiential happiness is 'idham-jnaanam' only; but, instantaneously, instead of saying "I am aware of happiness", I throw the happiness on myself and I say "I am happy". When I thus say "I am happy", I have put the mind on as a kanchukam and 'I', the saakshi, become ahamkaaraa.

To repeat: In the statement "I know happiness", the 'awareness' is 'idham-jnaam'; the next moment, when I say " I am happy", 'I', the saakshi, have become ahamkaaraa, putting on the mind as an overcoat / kanchukam.

Again: In "I am aware of happiness", I am saakshi ; in "I am happy", I have become ahamkaaraa. The difference is to be perceived carefully.

Not only dharmi adhyaasaa has taken place; dharma adhyaasaa also has taken place simultaneously. Thus the mind-sambhandhaa converts "'me', the saakshi", into "'me', the ahamkaaraa".

And, before the mind-sambhandhaa takes place and before "'I', the saakshi" 'become' "'I', the ahamkaaraa", the sambhandhaa between 'me' and the mind is avabhaasya-avabhaasaka-sambhandhaa; and, at that time, the mind does not make any value addition to 'me', the saakshi.

When 'I' and the mind have avabhaasya-avabhaasaka-sambhandhaa, the emotions of the mind can never make a positive addition to 'me'; nor can it cause anything negative. Emotional disturbances cannot disturb 'me', the saakshi. Emotional excitements also cannot add anything positive to 'me'. Thus, when there is 'mind-awareness' / when only avabhaasya-avabhaasaka-sambhandhaa is there; saakshi can neither be improved by the superior thoughts of the mind; nor can it be degraded by the inferior thoughts of the mind. At the time of avabhaasya-avabhaasaka-sambhandhaa, there is no upakaarya-upakaaraka-sambhandhaa. Upakaarya-upakaaraka-sambhandhaa is absent, because mind cannot do any upakaaraa to 'me', the saakshi; mind cannot do any apakaaraa also to 'me', the saakshi, because saakshi, like aakaasaa , is asangha:| As the famous verses (Nirvaana shadgam) of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa declare "chidhaanandharoopa: sivoam".

When the mind is an 'object', there is only avabhaasya-avabhaasaka-sambhandhaa; there is no upakaarya-upakaaraka-sambhandhaa. 'I' remain as the asangha Saakshi. But, the moment 'I' 'join' the mind, which 'joining' is, in reality, an adhyaasa sambhandha; 'I' come down to the lower level of ahamkaaraa. | Why is it called adhyaasa sambhandhaa? Ans: "Because 'I' cannot actually 'join' the mind, since mind and 'I' (the aathmaa), are of two different orders of reality and also since one of the two, viz., the aathmaa, is asangham". No real sambhandhaa between the two is possible; therefore, it is said, 'I' 'join' the mind, through a sambhandhaa called sathya-anritha-mithunikarana-sambhandha: or adhyaasa-adhishtaana-sambhandha:| Just as the 'waker' 'joins' the false dream body, 'I', the sathya saakshi, join the mithyaa mind; and, by joining the mithyaa mind, 'I' have come down to the lower level of ahamkaaraa. I have taken an avathaaram, as it were.

Therefore, when saakshi joins the mithyaa mind and takes the role of ahamkaaraa, saakshi's ahamkaaraa is a 'descent' from paaramaarthika sathyam to vyaavahaarika sathyam.

And, after that 'descent', the paaramaarthika saakshi itself, as the vyavahaarika ahamkaaraa, reveals the universe. And, when the world is revealed, there is not only avabhaasya-avabhaasaka-sambhandhaa ; but, there is upakaarya-upakaaraka-sambhandhaa also, and then, arises 'mama-jnaanam', in the form, 'my' world , 'my' family, 'my' husband / wife, 'my' children etc.

Thus, what is the Aachaaryaa's thesis? Ans: "Yathra yathra sambhandhadvayam thathra thathra jnaanadvayam; sambhandha dvaya sathve jnaanadvaya sathvam; sambhandha dvaya abhaave jnaanadvaya abhaava:" |

Sureswaraachaaryaa proves this thesis through anvaya vyathirekhaa argument, using the two states of 'jaagrath' and 'sushupthi', by pointing out, "jaagrath avasthaayam sambhandha dvaya sathvam, jnaana dvaya sathvam cha | Sushupthi avasthaayam sambhandha dvaya abhaava:, jnaana dvaya abhaava: cha|"

As a reminder: What are the two sambhandhaa-s? Ans: "Avabhaasya-avabhaaska-sambhandhaa is one and upakaarya-upakaaraka or apakaarya-apakaaraka-sambhandhaa is the second". And, what are the two jnaanam-s? Ans: "Idham-jnaanam with regard to the mind and 'mama-jnaanam', with regard to the world".

Reverting to the text: slokaa 62 is the concluding slokaa of the diversion topic. From the next slokaa, Sureswaraachaarya goes back to his main discussion.

In the previous session, the study of the first line of the verse was concluded. To re-cap that study:

ॐ विक्रिय अज्ञान शून्यत्वात् - Because of absence of thought modifications and active ajnaanam,

ॐ न इत्म् - there is no idham-jnaanam or 'mind awareness'

ॐ न च मम - and, there is no mama-jnaanam or 'world awareness' also,

ॐ आत्मनः - for the saakshi.

In the sushupthi avasthaa, the 'active ajnaanam' is absent. What is the definition of 'active ajnaanam'? Ans: "Active ajnaanam' is that, in which mind is projected". In sushupthi avasthaa, ajnaanam is inactive and mind is resolved. Since the 'active ajnaanam' is not there (or to express in positive language 'since ajnaanam is passive'), the mind and thoughts are also resolved; when the mind and thoughts are thus resolved in the sushupthi avasthaa, there is neither the 'mind-awareness' nor the 'world-awareness' for the saakshi. 'Mind-awareness' means 'awareness of the mind'. 'There is no mind-awareness' means 'there is no awareness of the mind for 'me', the saakshi'. That, in turn, means 'idham jnaanam naasthi'. And, in sushupthi, there is no 'world-awareness' also. 'Mamajnaanam api nasthi'. There is no 'family' or 'possessions' in sushupthi. (In a lighter vein: I am paramahamsa sanyaasi, in sushupthi). This is what is said in the first line.

Proceeding to the second line of the verse:

ॐ उत्थितस्य सतः - Only for a person who has woken up

ॐ अज्ञानं (अस्ति) - the active ajnaanam is there,

ॐ यतः - because of which,

ॐ न अहं अज्ञासिषं - he says "during deep sleep, there was ignorance and therefore, I did not know I am saakshi at that time".

"Na aham ajnaasisham" is the statement of the 'waker', about the presence of ignorance, in his deep sleep state.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says here: "Only for a person who has woken up, i.e. only in jaagrath avasthaa, the active ajnaanam is there and therefore, only after waking up, he talks about the presence of ignorance, not only in the jaagrath avasthaa, but, the presence of ignorance in the sushupthi avasthaa also".

There is ignorance in sushupthi. But, when does anyone talk about that ignorance in sushupthi? Ans: "Only in jaagrath avasthaa". The topic of ignorance is available only in jaagrath avasthaa. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "utthithasya satha: ajnaanam (asthi)" meaning "active ajnaanam is there, only for a person who has woken up". This would mean that, in jaagrath avasthaa, mind is also there, and, therefore, the 'waker' says "na aham ajnaasisham" meaning "In deep sleep state, there was ignorance and therefore, I did not know that 'I', the saakshi, was there".

But, this he says only in jaagrath avasthaa. And, in jaagrath aavsthaa, when active ignorance comes, mind also comes. Once the mind comes, idham-jnaanam comes ; mama-jnaanam also comes.

With this statement, the diversion topic is over. If any student feels that this topic is too technical, suffice it for him to note only the essence of the diversion portion, which is as follows: "'I', the saakshi, know the mind directly and 'I' the saakshi, know the world indirectly, through the mind. And, also, that, both of them, the 'mind' and the 'world' are 'objects of knowledge' only and therefore, anaathmaa only".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 63:

आत्मानात्मविवेकस्य इयत्ता प्रदर्शनार्थमाह ।

The culmination of the discrimination between the Self and non-self is brought out:

The diversion topic is over. Now, Sureswaraachaarya comes to his main topic. What is the main topic?

The main topic consists of the following:

"Anvaya vyathirekhaa enquiry can lead only up to the knowledge "I' am the aathmaa, different from the world , the body and the mind'. But, I will never know whether that aathmaa is ekam or anekam, through Anvaya vyathirekhaa enquiry.

"To know that, viz., that, 'aathmaa is advaitam', that, "I' am the advaita adhishtaanam', we require mahaa vaakyam. Without mahaa vaakyam, anvaya vyathirekhaa will give only saamaanya aathma jnaanam. The saamaanya aathma jnaanam can be converted into visesha aathma jnaanam only through mahaa vaakya vichaara".

The terms 'saamaanya aathma jnaanam' and 'visesha aathma jnaanam' had been explained, in detail, in earlier sessions.

It was also pointed out earlier, that even yoga saasthra samaadhi / yogic samaadhi can help the aspirant only to 'abide' in aathmaa; but, the aspirant will never know in yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi, the crucial fact "'I', the aathmaa am advaitham". That is why, practitioners of yogic nirvikalpaka samaadhi, never arrived at advaitam. Advaita jnaanam can never come through nirvikalpaka samaadhi, proved easily by the fact, that Yoga people who practice nirvikalpaka samaadhi never come to advaitam. They talk about 'dvaita aathmaa' only.

Both anvaya vyathirekaa logic and nirvikalpaka samaadhi can give only saamaanya aathma jnaanam. Granted that, 'abiding in nirvikalpaka aathmaa', the result of 'nirvikalpaka samaadhi', is a wonderful saadhanaa, which will give saamaanya aathma jnaanam. But, if the aspirant desires visesha aathma jnaanam, namely, "advaita adhistana aathmaa aham asmi", he has to get out of the samaadhi and resort to mahaa vaakya vicharaa. Through mahaavaakyam alone, the saamaanya aathma jnaanam can be converted into visesha aathma jnaanam viz., "advaita adhishtana aathmaa aham asmi".

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

ॐ प्रदर्शनार्थ - To reveal

ॐ आत्म अनात्म विवेकस्य इयत्ता - (that) the result of aathma-anaathma enquiry, through anvaya vyathirekhaa logic is only this much / limited, ॐ आह - the following sloka is given.

The term 'iyatthaa' means 'this much' / 'so much' / 'fixed measure or quantity' / 'limitation' etc. By using this term, in the meaning 'this much only', the Aachaaryaa stresses that saamaanya aathma jnaanam alone is possible by logic and that, visesha aathma jnaanam cannot come through mere logic.

Verse 63 – Chapter III:

वाक्यप्रत्यक्षमानाभ्यां इयानर्थः प्रतीयते ।

अनर्थकृतमोहानिः वाक्यादेव सदात्मनः ॥ ६३ ॥

Through scriptural statements (not mahaavaakyaani) and perceptual evidence, this much is known. The Self is distinguished from all else. But, the ignorance of the real Self, which is the source of all evil, is destroyed only by the Vedhaanthic proposition.

ॐ वाक्य प्रत्यक्ष मानाभ्यां - With the help of saasthra vaakyam and anvaya vyathirekaa reasoning, Vaakyam refers to the relevant sruthi pramaanaa, which will help in differentiating aathmaa and anaathmaa. And, what are the relevant sruthi pramaanaa-s? Ans: The famous Thaithreeya Upanishad statements - : "anyonthara aathmaa praana maya:/ anyonthara aathmaa manomaya:/ anyonthara aathmaa vijnaana maya: / anyonthara aathmaa aanadamaya:" is an example. The pancha kosa vivekaa of this portion of Brahmavalli of Thaithreeyopanishad, helps in differentiating aathmaa from anaathmaa.

ॐ And, in this context, the word 'prathyaksha' refers to the anvaya vyathirekaa reasoning, since the anvaya vyathirekaa reasoning is based on avasthaathraya anubhavaa (prathyakshaa).

ॐ इयान् अर्थः प्रतीयते - this much information / knowledge alone is possible.

"This much knowledge" refers to what we have been terming "saamaanya aathma jnaanam", in our discussions. Through these two pramaanaa-s, namely (i) certain saasthra vaakyaani and (ii) anvaya vyathirekaa logic, the aspirant will get saamaanya aathma jnaanam, viz.: " 'I' am saakshi; 'I' am chaithanya svaroopaa.; 'I' am nithya.; 'I' am sarvagatha.; 'I' am different from the world, body and mind etc."

An aspirant can get to know all these with the help of certain saasthra vaakyaani (other than mahaavaakyaani) and anvaya vyathirekaa / avasthaa thraya vivekaa reasoning. But, the question is: "Is this much knowledge sufficient for liberation?" Sureswaraachaaryaa firmly answers: "No. It is not sufficient".

It is worthwhile to analyze independently also, as to why he says so.

The Yoga philosopher also has arrived at these facts, namely, that "'I' am saakshi; 'I' am chaithanya svaroopaa.; 'I' am nithya.; 'I' am sarvagatha.; 'I' am different from the world, body and mind etc." But, ironically, he holds that, the nithya-sarvagatha 'Consciousnesses-s' are many i.e. he is of the opinion that there is 'plurality'. 'Plurality' does not get negated by knowing "'I' am nithya sarvagatha chaithanyam". That this knowledge (saamaanya aathma jnaanam) will not eliminate 'plurality' is proved by the example of the yoga philosopher, who has this knowledge and yet believes in 'plurality'.

Further, in addition to this knowledge being incapable of elimination of the concept of 'plurality', this knowledge will also never tell the aspirant, that, 'I' am of a higher order of reality, while the prapanchaa is of a lower order of reality. That knowledge about the different orders of reality also, will never come through anvaya vyathirekhaa. The aspirant's wrong conclusion (based on mere anvaya vyathirekaa logic or yogic samaadhi) will be "saakshi is also sathyam; the prapanchaa is also equally sathyam; Purushaa is also sathyam; prakruthi is also sathyam". And, as long as this wrong notion of 'jagath sathyathvam' is there for the aspirant, he / she can never be liberated.

An interesting thought on this fact has been discussed in earlier sessions and other contexts also, namely, that, even God cannot be 'liberated' if He considers the world as 'real'. This is because God will be worried about the sufferings of his devotees, since, when the world is believed to be 'real', His devotees' sufferings will also be real. Therefore, Bhagavaan Himself will not be able to rest peacefully. Lord Vishnu may have all physical comforts in His abode, Vaikuntaa; He may not have any problem of His own. But, He cannot avoid worry, if His devotees' sufferings are 'real'. As long as the world and the sufferings are sathyam, there is no way of getting mokshaa for anyone, including Bhagavaan. Even in pralayam, the sathya dhu:kham will not go away. It will be waiting in a dormant state. And, Bhagavaan cannot stop creating the world also, because as long as the karmaa-s are there, Bhagavaan has to helplessly create the world, helplessly create sorrow also and helplessly watch His devotees suffer, with a heavy heart. Bhagavaan, being omniscient, will also intimately see all the sufferings of all His devotees and suffer samsaaraa.

So, it should be remembered that "mithyaathva jnaanam vinaa jeevasya api moksha: naasthi; Isvarasya api moksha: naathi". If Iswara is muktha:, it is because He knows "aham sathyam jagan mithyaa". As Kaivalyopanishad (manthraa 22) declares: "na punyapaape mama naasthi naasa: na janmadehendriya buddhirasthi | na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha" – "Punyaa and paapaa are not there for me; death is not there for me. Birth, body, sense organs and intellect are not there for me. Earth and water are not there for me. Fire is not there for me. Air is not there for me. Space is also not there for me".

The 'saamaanya aathma jnaanam' will not reveal 'jagan mithyaathvam' and 'advaita aathma adhistaanthvam'. Then, what is required for that? Ans: "Mahaa vaakyam is required to get the firm conviction 'aham sathyam Brahma asmi; jagath mithyaa asthi'".

'Jagath sathyathvam' is the cause of samsaaraa. And, as long as I am ignorant of that fact, that ignorance is the cause of all problems. Sureswaraachaaryaa, therefore, calls that ignorance 'anarthakruth thama:' |

ॐ अनर्थकृत् तमो हानिः - The destruction of the ignorance, which is the cause of all the problems,

'thama:' means 'ignorance' ; and, what type of ignorance ? Ans: 'anartha kruth'. 'Anartha kruth' means 'which is the cause of all the problems'. 'Anartha kruth thama:' means 'the ignorance which is the cause of all problems'.

What is that ignorance? Ans : "Ignorance of the fact, that 'I' am sathyam and the world is mithyaa". This ignorance is called by the Aachaaryaa as 'anartha krutthama:' | 'Thasya haani: (destruction)' is 'अनर्थकृत् तमो हानिः ' |

ॐ वाक्यादेव (भवति) - is possible only through mahaa vaakyam,

ॐ आत्मनः - for the aspirant

ॐ सदा - at all times / always.

Without destruction of this ignorance, I will say I am saakshi of the world, but, which world, I will look upon as sathyam. And, as long as I look upon the world as sathyam, what will be my concept of mokshaa? (We have repeatedly discussed this also). Ans: "As long as I look upon myself as saakshi and the world as sathyam, my concept of mokshaa will be 'somehow getting out of the world'".

Such a wrong notion (that the world is sathyam), will result in the aspirant trying to 'escape' from the world, to Vaikuntaa or Kailaasaa. Vedhaantha wants to advise such 'ignorant' aspirants: "With this notion, even if you 'escape' from the world to Vaikuntaa or Kailaasaa, there is no escaping 'anaathmaa', since anaathmaa is all over, even in Vaikuntaa and Kailaasaa. And, wherever anaathmaa is there, 'dvaitham' is there. And, the famous sruthi declaration is "dvitheeyath vai bhayam bhavathi" meaning "Indeed 'fear' results from 'duality'". 'Running away from anaathmaa' does not exist. Therefore, better be amidst anaathmaa; but, falsify anaathmaa. Drop the concept of running away from anaathmaa, but, 'falsify' it. Now you think the world is 'real', because of ignorance. That ignorance should go by mahaa vaakyam and you should say 'I am not afraid of the world even if I am going to live forever, or even if I am going to take another million births. The fact is "maayeva sakalam jaatham" – "Everything is born in 'me' alone" (Kaivalyopanishad – manthraa 19). Then, why should I think of running away or why should I be afraid of the world's continuity? This is the mokshaa and this mokshaa will 'come' only when you see the mithyathvam of the universe. You do not know jagath is mithyaa, because of 'ignorance'. That ignorance has to go away by mahaa vaakyam only".

This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa says in this verse "Anartha kruth thamo haani: vakaayadeva (bhavathi) aathmana: sadhaa" meaning "the elimination of the ignorance, which is the cause of all problems, always results only through mahaa vaakyam".

Even Bhagavaan has to enjoy 'freedom' only by seeing the mithyaathvam of the universe. That is why He said (Srimadh Bhagavadh Geetha – Ch. IV – verse 6) "ajopi san avyayaayaathmaa bhoothaanam Isvaro api san prakruthim svaam adhishtaaya sambhavaamyathmamaayayaa" – "Even though I have no birth and no death, even though I am the Lord of all beings, still, I come into being through My own Maayaa, by resorting to My own Prakruthi".

What Bhagavaan implies by using the contradictory terms 'aja: sar' (though I am birthless) and 'sambhavaam' (I come into being), is that His birth is very unreal. "Without being born, I am born" means "seemingly I am born". That means "My (Bhagavaan's) sareeram is mithyaa; avathaaram is mithyaa". Bhagavaan's own avatharaa would have become a serious problem for Bhagavaan, if it were real. Bhagavaan says "Since I know that my avathara sareeram is mithyaa and jagath is mithyaa, I do not mind appearing again and again".

If, thus, Bhagavaan is not afraid of His avathaaram because the avathaaram is mithyaa, why should we be afraid our own avathaaram-s (!)? They are also mithyaa.

(Swamiji comments in a lighter vein: "After listening to all this, at the end of the class, a student may walk up to me and ask me 'Swamiji! Will I ever get videha mukthi?' This is because Jeevan mukthi-videha mukthi division has become such an obsession with some students, that they are not able to get out of it. But, they should know that the 'Jeevan mukthi-videha mukthi division' is only a temporary / provisional concept in the Vedhaanthic study. Real 'mukthi is this, viz., 'I am not afraid of anaathmaa'").

"The elimination of ignorance" Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts "is through mahaa vaakyam".

Sureswaraachaaryaa proceeds to enter into another big discussion.

Samabhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 64:

द्वितीयाध्यायादौ श्रोतृचतुष्टयमुपन्यस्तम् । तत्र कृत्स्नानात्मनिवृत्तौ सत्यां यः
प्रत्यगात्मन्यवाक्यार्थतां प्रतिपद्यते स क्षपिताशेषान्तरयहेतुरिति न तं प्रति वक्तव्यं
किञ्चिदप्यवशिष्यते ।

At the commencement of the second chapter, four classes of pupils were mentioned. Among them, he who comprehends the inmost Self, the entire world of non-Self having disappeared for him, has no trace of the cause of evil still remaining. Nothing more need be said about him.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is giving a big introduction to a marginally different topic. Before entering the text, it is worthwhile to go through a gist of what he wants to discuss. He had already pointed out: "(i) Saamaanya jnaanam is "I am chaithanyam. (ii) Visesha jnaanam is "I am advaita-sathya-adhishtaana-chaithanyam. (iii) Mahaa vaakyam alone will give visesha jnaanam".

When it is said that visesha jnaanam is "I am advaita-sathya-adhishtaana-chaithanyam", the word 'adhistaanam' is a loaded word. The word indicates that 'I am like the screen in a movie, while the creation is like the movie. The concept presented by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram (verse 1), "Viswam dharpana-dhrusyamaana nagaree thulyam" – "The universe of names and forms, like a city seen in the mirror" is conveyed by the word adhishtaanam.

We talked of visesha jnaanam being the knowledge "'I' am advaita-sathya-adhishtaanam-chaithanyam". Conversely, the ignorance of this special fact, viz., "'I' am advaita-sathya-adhishtaanam-chaithanyam", is called visesha ajnaanam. And, this visesha ajnaanam is samsaaraa kaaranam. And, it is mahaa vaakyam, that attacks and destroys this visesha ajnaanam.

That means, after mahaa vaakya vicharaa, the aspirant will be able to claim confidently "I am the jagadh-adhishtaanam". He will be able to remember (what we have been referring to, as the 5th capsule of Vedhaanthaa, namely) "The whole world is a mithyaa entertainment, provided by 'me', by 'my' own maayaa. Therefore, whatever happens, 'I' am not going to be affected". This binary format can happen only through mahaa vaakyam. Thus, mahaa vaakyam is visesha ajnaana nivarthakam and 'binary format' praapakam.

Sureswaraacharya wants to talk about the visesha ajnaanam and its mysterious nature. He will do this later. But, before talking about visesha ajnaanam itself, since this mysterious visesha ajnaanam is going to be eliminated by mahaa vaakyam i.e., due to mahaa vaakya sarvanam, the Aacharya wants to talk about the mahaa vaakyam. Then, to talk about mahaa vaakyam, he wants to talk about the listener of the mahaa vaakyam. In talking about the listener of the mahaa vaakyam, he wants to talk about four types of students. Out of the four types, he starts with one type of student. This is the route map that the Aacharya plans to follow.

To trace the 'route map' in brief:

- ॐ Four types of seekers.
- ॐ Out of them, one type
- ॐ The first type of seeker listening to mahaa vaakyam.
- ॐ The fact of Mahaa vaakyam removing the visesha ajnaanam, and, finally,
- ॐ The mysterious nature of the visesha ajnaanam.

Reverting to the text, Sureswaraacharya says:

ॐ द्वितीय अध्याय आदौ - In the beginning of the second chapter,

ॐ श्रोतृ चतुष्टयम् उपन्यस्तम् - four types of students were introduced.

We are now in the third chapter of the treatise. In the beginning of the second chapter of the treatise (in verses 2, 3 and 4 of the second chapter) four types of students / seekers are introduced by a poorva pakshin.

And, when the poorva pakshin introduces the four types of seekers, his aim is to show that mahaa vaakyam is not compulsory for jnaanam and mokshaa. This poorva pakshin's view is that, even without mahaa vaakyam, jnaanam and mokshaa are possible. To establish his view, he introduces the four types of students.

The first type of student he talks about, is one who gets 'knowledge' by mere 'intuition'. This type of student, according to the poorva pakshin, gains the 'knowledge' by just silencing the mind, without mahaa vaakyam. Dayananda Swamiji jocularly refers to this, as the 'bodhi tree approach', since the founder of Buddhism, Shri Gauthama Buddhaa was supposed to have sat in meditation under a bodhi tree and got 'enlightenment'. There are several other examples also. The example given by the poorva pakshin is Brahmajji. In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (Chapter 1 – Brahmanam 4), and also in many Puraanaa-s, it is mentioned that Prajaapathi / Brahmaaji arose from the navel of Lord Maha Vishnu, and as soon as he appeared, Brahmaaji was frightened because of his 'loneliness'; and, he was also 'ignorant'. Thereafter, he 'meditated' and, through the meditation, got jnaanam. The poorva pakshin quotes this example of Brahmajji in the scriptures, for 'a person who silences the mind and gains the visesha jnaanam'. For the purpose of our study, this case may be called 'vaakya asravanena jnaanam', where 'asaravam' means 'not listening'.

The second type of student is a person who listens to mahaa vaakyam and gains 'knowledge'. We may refer to this case, as 'vaakya sravanena jnaanam'.

The third type of student is a person who listens to the vaakyam, but does not understand its import during the sravanam. But, he takes the trouble of repeatedly 'thinking' / 'ruminating' on what he has heard, and after a length of time – a few hours or a few days or few weeks - suddenly the import of the vaakyam 'flashes' and he 'understands' it. Swamiji, in a lighter vein, refers to this type of student as the 'tube light student', a common usage in mundane life. Quite often, tube lights do not work immediately on switching them on; but, take some time to 'light up'. We do come across people, who are slow on the intake, similar to the tube-lights . In Vedhaantha also, there are such students. This case may be referred to as 'vaakya smaranaath jnaanam'. For such a student, it is 'vaakya smaranam' that produces the knowledge – not the vaakyam. Smaranam produces the knowledge and not vaakyam, because, when this type of student 'understands' later, after a length of time - at that time of 'understanding', vaakya sravanam is not there. This 'smarenana jnaanam na thu vaakyaath' is the third case.

What is the fourth case? Ans: "'Vaakya smaaranam'. Such a student gets jnaanam, not by his own exercise of 'recapitulating' or 'repeated thinking', but, because of the 'drilling' that he receives from his guru, who literally 'dins' at him, with repeated exhortations of the 'thath thvam asi mahaa vaakyam'. The repeated reminders of the guru is termed 'smaaranam'. This is the 4th case".

For the 1st type of student 'Vaakya asravanena jnaanam', the poorva pakshin had already given the example of Prajapathy / Brahmaaji from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (Chapter 1–Brahmanam 4) and the Puraanaa-s.

For the second type of student 'vaakyasravanena jnaanam', we can have the example of the student in the Kenopanishad.

For the third type of student, viz., 'vaakya smaranena jnaanam, Advaita Aacharya-s give the example of Bhrigu, from the Thaithreeyopanishad. To recount the relevant episode in brief: "Bhrugurvai vaaruni varunam pitharam upasasaara/ adeehi bhagavo brahmethi" (T.U. Bhrugu Valli- manthraa-1) - "The great sage Bhrugu, the son of Varunaa, approached his father Varunaa and asked 'Oh, Lord ! Give me the knowledge of Brahman". He heard the vaakyam from Varunaa, and went away to 'enquire' independently on the lines given by Varunaa. He, himself, reflected repeatedly / over and over, and ultimately 'aanando Brahmethi vyajaanaath – 'concluded (got the 'knowledge') that Aaanandaa is Brahman'. Bhrigu is, thus, the example for 'vaakya smaranena jnaanam'.

For the fourth type of student, 'vaakya smaaranena jnaanam – "knowledge' through repeated reminders', the natural example is that of Svethakethu of the Chaandoghya

Upanishad. He was repeatedly assailed by his father Uddhaalaka Aaruni with the exhortation 'thath thvam asi'.

From these four cases, the poorva pakshin wanted to establish (in chapter 2 – verses 2 to 4) that vaakyam is not compulsory. But, Sureswaraacharya, did not yield ground. He forcefully pointed out: "Whether a person gains knowledge by sravanam or smaranam or smaaranam, what is common to all? It is Vaakyam that is involved. Even though you understand the import of the vaakyam only after many days, even though guru is not present at that time, to whom does the credit for your 'understanding' go? Obviously, the credit goes to the mahaa vaakya upadesaa only".

Thus, Sureswaraacharya answered (in the second chapter) that mahaa vaakyam alone gives the knowledge, whether the knowledge comes immediately or whether the knowledge comes later, or whether the knowledge comes in the next janmaa. He firmly asserted: "Even if someone obtained the knowledge under a bodhi tree, that knowledge could not have been gained except through vaakyam, received a day before, or five years earlier or even in the poorva janmaa. 'Intuition' cannot and does not give 'knowledge'. Knowledge arrives only 'in tuition'. The tuition may be in the poorva janmaa, whether it is Prajapaathy or whether it is Vamadevaa. Vamadeva got the knowledge in garbhaa (while in his mother's womb) but, through vaakya sravanam alone." Thus Sureswaraacharya's answer was "mahaa vaakyam alone gives knowledge, either at the time of sravanam or later smaranam or in smaaranam or in the next janmaa. Vaakyam is the source of knowledge".

This was the topic in verses 2 to 4, of the 2nd chapter. In that context, Sureswaraacharya, through a poorva pakshin, had introduced four types of students. Out of those four, he wants to refer to one particular student here - the one who listens to the mahaa vaakyam again and again i.e. the smaaranam type of student or the fourth type. This student listens to mahaa vaakyam repeatedly and it removes visesha ajnaanam. Sureswaraacharya wants to analyze as to how the 'removal' of the visesha ajnaanam is achieved and also the nature of that mysterious ignorance.

173: Chapter III, Verses 64 to 64 (13-02-2010)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 64:

द्वितीयाध्यायादौ श्रोतृचतुष्टयमुपन्यस्तम् । तत्र कृत्स्नानात्मनिवृत्तौ सत्यां यः प्रत्यगात्मन्यवाक्यार्थतां प्रतिपद्यते स क्षपिताशेषान्तरायहेतुरिति न तं प्रति वक्तव्यं किञ्चिदप्यवशिष्यते । योऽपि वाक्यश्रवणमात्रादेव प्रतिपद्यते तस्याप्यतीन्द्रियशक्तिमत्वान्न किञ्चिदप्यपेक्षितव्यमस्ति । यश्च श्रावित तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्यः स्वयमेवान्वयव्यतिरेकौ कृत्वा तदवसान एव वाक्यार्थं प्रतिपद्यतेऽसावपि यथार्थं प्रतिपन्न इति पूर्ववदेवोपेक्षितव्यः । यः पुनरन्वयव्यतिरेकौ कारयित्वापि पुनःपुनर्वाक्यं श्राव्यते यथाभूतार्थप्रतिपत्तये तस्य कृतान्वयव्यतिरेकस्य सतः कथं वाक्यं श्राव्यत इति । उच्यते ।

At the commencement of the second chapter, four classes of pupils were mentioned. Among them, he who comprehends the inmost Self, the entire world of non-Self having disappeared for him, has no trace of evil still remaining. Nothing more need be said about him. He, who, on hearing the scriptural statement, understands Reality at once, has supersensible power and therefore, is in need of nothing more. He, who is instructed by a preceptors in the texts like 'That thou art', and engages in rational discrimination by himself, understands the import of the proposition, as the discriminative process reaches its culmination in him. He understands it aright and there is no more concern about him. But, he, who is conducted through the discriminative process and is made to listen to the proposition again and again, for being induced to the apprehension of truth, occasions further enquiry. He has already gone through the rational process of discrimination. How is he taught the proposition? The question is answered:

With the 63rd sloka, Sureswaraachaaryaa has concluded the small diversion topic, in which he sub-divided anaathmaa itself into two, the 'mind' being one and the 'world' being the other. The 'mind' is directly illumined by the saakshi; the 'world' is indirectly illumined by the saakshi, through the mind. That topic is now over.

Now, from the 64th verse onwards, what the Aachaaryaa is emphasizing is: "mahaa vaakyam alone has the capacity to eliminate moolaavidhyaa".

Moolaavidhya can be eliminated only through mahaa vaakyam; anvaya vyathirekaa will only prepare the ground for that (i.e., elimination of moolavidhya); but, without mahaa vaakyam, avidhya nivrutthi will not take place. Actually, this was the topic that Sureswaraacharya was dealing with, before this diversion also; after the diversion, he comes back to the same topic, which he is going to emphasize through the example of the well-known 'tenth man' episode or 'dhasama dhrishtaanthaa'.

As an introduction to this topic, he is reminding us of four types of students of different levels of preparation. And, depending upon the levels of preparation, the jnaanam also will also take place in different modes. But, what Sureswaraacharya wants to emphasize is: "In all cases, mahaa vaakyam is the common underlying factor that can never be doubted or questioned".

Sureswaraacharya had talked about the four types of students in the beginning of the 2nd chapter. There, in verses 2, 3 and 4, he introduced the four types of students, details about whom were discussed in the earlier session.

To briefly recap those discussions: The first type of student is one, in whom 'knowledge' arises, even without his listening to mahaa vaakyam, the phenomenon, briefly referred to as 'vaakya asravanena jnaanam'. The process of acquiring knowledge by the second type of student was referred to as 'vaakya sravanena jnaanam', the process of acquiring knowledge by the third type of student as 'vaakya smaranena jnaanam' and that of the fourth type as 'vaakya smaaranena jnaanam'.

Examples were also given, for each type of student. For 'vaakya asravanena jnaanam', we discussed two saasthric examples. The first was Prajaapathy, in the Brahadhaaranyakaa Upanishad (Chapter I – Section 4), where, Prajaapathy is said to have gained 'knowledge', by meditation. The relevant manthraa (I.iv.2) runs: "Sa: abibheth / Thasmaadekaaki bibhethi / Sa haayameekshaam chakre yanmaadanyannaasthi kasmaanu bibhemeethi, thatha evaasya bhayam veeyaya, kasmaadbhayabheshyat? Dvitheeyaadvai bhayam bhavathi" – "He (Prajaapathy) was afraid. Therefore, still people are afraid to be alone. Then he reassured himself: 'If there is nothing else but me, what am I afraid of?'. From that alone, his fear was gone, for what was there to fear? It is from a second entity that fear comes". Prajaapathy himself saw the 'truth', that, "there is no second one, other than 'me'"; guru upadesaa is not mentioned here. So, Prajaapathy is one dhrushtaantha: |

The second dhrushtaantha for 'vaakya asravanena jnaanam' is Vaama Deva: , who , even as he was within the womb of his mother, without any sravanam, declared 'aham manurabhavam aham soorya: cha' (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – I. iv.10) – 'I am Manu and the sun'. He attained this 'sarvaathma bhaavaa', in his mother's womb itself, without undergoing any sravanam. Prajaapathy and Vamadeva are examples for 'vaakya asravanena jnaanam'.

The second type of student is the one who attains 'vaakya sravana maathrena jnaanam'. For this group of students, Sureswaraachaaryaa, in the second chapter, gave the example as 'Pisaachakaa'. This word used by him, 'Pisaasachakaa', does not mean a ghost. According to the commentators, 'Pisaachakaa' is the name of a person, who gained knowledge by casual sravanam of the mahaa vaakyam. The narration goes, that, the person, Pisaachakaa, was moving around in the forest, on some errand, when he chanced upon a Vedhaanthic guru and a student, discussing Vedhaantha. The teacher was addressing the student. 'Pisaachakaa' overheard the mahaa vaakyam 'thaththvamas!', addressed by the guru to his student and immediately grasped the import of the vaakyam, while the original student did not.

(Swamiji, in this context, referred to Dayaananda Swamiji once saying "I passed my examinations, by overhearing my neighbor reading aloud, while, my neighbor himself failed in the exams". In a similar manner 'Pisaachaka:, aranyam gatha:, thathvamas!' ithi sravana maathrena jnaanam avaapthavaari).

The third type of student is 'vaakya smaranena jnaanam aapthavaari'. This student does not achieve 'knowledge', at the time of sravanam. He repeatedly 'works' on the mahaa vaakyam and then, contemplating on the mahaa vaakyam, he himself arrives at 'knowledge', without the express help of the teacher.

The example for this type of student is Sage Bhrugu: of Thaithreeyopanishad – Bhruguvalli. Sage Bhrughu appealed to his father and guru, Varunaa, "Adeehi bhagavo Brahma" – "Oh Lord! Give me the knowledge of Brahman". In response, Varunaa "thasmai ethath provachaa | annam praanam chakshussrothram mano vaachamithi" - "taught the following, to that Bhrugu – annam, Praanaa, manas, eye, ear and speech" and further exhorted him : "Yatho vaa imaani bhoothaani jaayanthe , yena jaathaani jeevanthi, yathprayanthi abhisamvisanthe, thadh vijjaasvasva | Thadh Brahma" – "Seek to know That, from which, indeed, all beings are born, by which, all the born-beings exist and unto which they go back, while resolving. That is Brahman". Thereafter, Bhrugu "thapa: athapyatha" – "conducted 'enquiry' " and ultimately "Aanando Brahmethi vyajaanaath" – "Concluded that aanandhaa is Brahman". The guru, Varunaa, did not give this 'conclusion' to Bhrugu. Bhrugu himself arrived at it, by reflections over the 'thvam padha vaakyam' and also the 'thadh padha vaakyam', given by Varunaa. 'Thvam padha vaakyam' is 'annam praanam chakshusrothram mano vaachamithi' and the 'thadh padha vaakyam' is 'Yatho vaa imaani bhoothaani jaayanthe, yena jaathaani jeevanthi, yath prayanthi abhisamvisanthi thadh Brahma'| Varunaa, the teacher gave the student only thadh padhaa independently and thvam padhaa independently. Based on them, Bhrugu 'worked' and finally arrived at 'aanando Brahmethi'. This is the example of vaakya smaranena jnaanam.

Then comes the fourth case, namely, 'vaakya smaaranena jnanam'. In such cases, when the teacher gives the mahaa vaakyam to the disciple, the student is unable to comprehend the vaakyam, the first time. The guru realizes the student's problem and, therefore, repeats his teaching, with many dhrushtaantha-s. A typical example for such a student is Svethakethu, mentioned in the Chaandhogya Upanishad (Chapter VI). Svetakethu's father and guru, Uddhaalaka Aaruni, goes on and on with his teaching, giving madhu dhrishtaantha, vruksha dhrushtaantha, thaskara dhrushtaantha, lavana dhrushtaantha etc. Totally nine examples were given by him, and after each example, he says "eithadhaathmyam idhagum sarvam thathsathyam sa aathmaa thaththvmasi Svetaketho" – "All this has got That as the Self. That is the Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That, Oh Svetakethu!"| As could be seen, Svethakethu, the sishtyaa could not / did not contemplate on the teaching himself; therefore, the guru had to do the teaching repeatedly. This 'repeated teaching / reminding' by the guru is called 'smaaranam'. So, for the fourth type of student, 'Svethakethu' is a typical example.

Thus, four types of students were talked about, with examples for each type also - vaamadeva dhrushtaantha., Pisaachaka dhrushtaantha., Bhrugu dhrishtaantha., and svetakethu dhrishtaantha., respectively. In these four cases, 'knowledge' take place in different ways / modes.

And, Sureswaraacharya's contention is: "Whatever be the type of the 'rise of knowledge', the common factor in all the cases, is mahaa vaakyam. Mahaa vaakyam is involved in every case. Even in the case of Vaamadeva, granting that he did not do the sravanam in his mother's womb, he must have done the sravanam in his poorva janmaa and because of some obstacle in that janmaa, he did not achieve 'jnaanam', which he achieved as Vaamadevaa, even before he was born".

Verses 37 to 45 of the 6th Chapter of Srimadh Bhagavadh Geethaa are relevant here. Arjuna asks (Verse 37): "ayathi: sraddhayopetha: yogaacchalithamaanasa: apraapya yogasamsiddhim kaam gathim Krishna gacchathi" – "Oh Krishna! Suppose there is one, who is endowed with faith, but whose effort is insufficient and whose mind has strayed away from Dhyaanayogaa. Having not attained the result of Dhyaanayogaa, what goal does he attain?" His doubt is "The student listened to the gurus teaching and was practicing nidhidhyaasanam also. But, because of some obstacle, he could not complete the journey. He could not come to 'binary' format. When such a person dies, what will happen to him?" And, Krishna assures Arjuna: "With that condition, he will be re-born in circumstances more conducive to spirituality; and for him, only a casual sravanam will be required or sometimes even some other mild trigger will be more than enough, to achieve jnaanam".

Therefore, in the case of Vaamadeva, the Vedhaanthic Aachaaryaas' assertion is: "Mahaa vaakyam must have been involved in his case also, if not in the current janmaa, certainly, in his poorva janmaa".

Students of the type of Prajaapathy and Vamadevaa are very rare. But, the main message, even in such cases is: "Mahaa vaakyam alone will remove moolaavidhyaa. Moolaavidhyaa nivrutthi: mahaa vaakayaadeva". Reverting to the text:

ॐ द्वितीय अध्याय आदौ - In the beginning of the second chapter,

ॐ श्रोतृचतुष्टयं उपन्यस्तम् - four types of students were mentioned.

ॐ तत्र - Among the four,

ॐ यः - that extra-ordinary student (who),

'Ya:', here, refers to the first type of student, who has listened to the mahaa vaakyam in the previous janmaa (like Vaamadevaa) or even in the previous srushti (like Prajaapathy). In the case of Prajaapathy, what he 'realized', on appearing on a lotus from the navel of Maha Vishnu, was what he had already known in the previous srushti. When Brahmaaji comes on the lotus, out of the navel of Lord

Vishnu, he need not do sravanam or mananam. Lord Vishnu had already 'blessed' him with all the 'knowledge'. Manthraa 6.18, of the Svethaasvatharopanishad talks of this fact : "yo Brahmaanam vidadhaathi poorvam yo vai vedaamscha prahinothi thasmai tham ha devam aathmabuddhiprakaasam mumukshurvai saranam aham prapathye"- "He, Who, at the beginning of creation, projected Brahmaaji, Who delivered the Veda-s unto him, I go for refuge to that Effulgent One, whose light turns the understanding towards the Athman, while seeking liberation." Brahmaaji, the Hiranyagarbhaa, will automatically remember sarva veda jnaanam, based on his sarvajnathvam of the previous srushti. As for Vaamadevaa, who achieved 'jnaanam' before birth, it was because of the sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani of his poorva janmaa. 'Ya:', here, refers to such extraordinary or unique students.

ॐ अवाक्यार्थतां प्रतिपद्यते - attains the knowledge of non-duality,

The word 'avaakyarthataa' is a technical word, discussed in detail, in an earlier context and, therefore, not proposed to be discussed now. Suffice it to understand that the term means 'the knowledge of non-duality'. 'Prathipadhyathe' means 'attains'.

ॐ प्रत्यक् आत्मनि - with regard to the inner Self, the advaita aathmaa,

ॐ कृत्स्न अनात्मनिवृत्तौ सत्यां - when the entire anaathma prapanchaa / thriputi disappears for him,

For such extra-ordinary students, of the likes of Brahmaaji or Vaamdevaa, the entire anaathma prapanchaa 'disappears' in a moment of silence / thoughtlessness / quietude, because of their saadhanaa-s in poorva janmaa / srushti.

Who attains the knowledge of non-duality? Ans: "That extra-ordinary student".

ॐ स : - that extra-ordinary student

What is the glory of such a student? The Aachaaryaa says "He has exhausted all the obstacles in his path to the 'understanding' of the mahaa vaakyam":

क्षपित अशेष अन्तरायहेतु : - is free from all the obstacles / has exhausted all obstacles in his path to the 'understanding' of the mahaa vaakyam / has no trace of the cause of evil still remaining in him.

'Antharaaya:' means 'prathibandha:' | 'hethu:' means 'cause'. 'antharaaya hethu:' means 'prathibandha kaaranam'; 'prathibandha kaaranam' means 'paapam'; 'antharayaa hethu:', therefore, means 'paapam'. 'Asesha' means 'complete' / 'all'. 'Kshapitha' means 'free from'. And, it was this paapam, which was obstructing the knowledge at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam, in the poorva janmaa.

This (extra-ordinary) student was doing mahaa vaakya sravanam in the poorva janmaa and he received the knowledge; but, the knowledge remained only as academic knowledge. What is the proof? He remained in triangular format; he did not have the courage to come to binary format, even though 'knowledge' was crystal clear. What obstructed him from shifting to binary format ? There was no visible obstacle. When visible obstacles are not there, there must be invisible paapa prathibandha: | For exhausting the paapa prathibandha:, he required another janmaa. And, in the next janmaa, when the prathibandha: goes away, the mahaa vaakyam, which is in his own sub-conscious mind, suddenly 'flashes'. 'Kshapitha' means 'free from'. He has exhausted all the obstacles or is freed from all the obstacles, resulting in 'jnaanapraapthi:' |

Obviously, such students are 'exceptions' and, naturally, it is not given to every student to follow the path of such unique students.

ॐ इति तं प्रति किञ्चित् अपि वक्तव्यं न अवशिष्यते - Therefore, I do not want to say anything about him.

The Aachaaryaa says: "I do not want to say anything about that extraordinary first type of student", since his interest is in dealing with the fourth type.

So much for the first type of student. What about the second type? The Aachaaryaa says: "I do not want to comment anything on him also". And, who is the second student? Ans: "Vaakyasravanena jnaanam aapthavaan" – "One who attains instantaneous jnaanam through vaakya sravanam". Who is the example? Ans: Pisaachakaa /

Reverting to the text:

- ॐ यः अपि वाक्यश्रवणमात्रात् एव - He also, who, on just listening to the Mahaa Vaakyam, ॐ प्रत्पध्यते - understands the import of the vaakyam at once,
 ॐ तस्य अतीन्द्रिय शक्तिमत्वात् - because of his extraordinary / super-sensuous capacity,
 ॐ किञ्चित् अपि अपेक्षितव्यं अस्ति - is not in need of anything more.

(Swamiji remarks in amazement:

"What an extraordinary case? This student listens to the mahaa vaakyam 'thathvamasi' once from the teacher, grasps its import immediately, thanks the teacher and leaves. The word 'maathraath', in the term 'vaakya sravana maathraath', is significant. The teacher does not even broach to this student, any of the Vedhaanthic terms, such as jahathi lakshanaa, ajahathi lakshanaa, bhaagathyaagha lakshanaa etc. Nor of 'vaachyaarthaas and lakshyaarthaas. Nor of anvaya vyathirekhaa, anyonthara aathmaa praana maya: manao maya: etc.

"The teacher does not point out to the student, 'thadh padha lakshyaarthaas is pure Existence; thvam padha lakshyaarthaas is pure Consciousness ; and, pure Existence and pure Consciousness are one and the same'.

"The student comes; asks for Brahma Vidhyaa; the guru says 'thathvamasi'; sishyaa understands instantaneously, does namaskaaram and goes away!").

And, what is the cause for this sishyaa's immediate grasping of the vaakyam? The Aachaaryaa explains : 'atheendriya sakthimathvaath', meaning 'because of super-sensual capacity'. And, we should remember that this 'extraordinary / super-sensual capacity' is also not because of fluke or chance. Whenever we talk about any power in anyone, we should remind ourselves, that, nothing results without a legitimate cause. If Bhagavaan gives an extraordinary capacity to a student of Bhagavaan's choice, that Bhagavaan will be accused of a big dhoshaa. This is discussed in the Brahma Soothra-s. If Bhagavaan, of His own volition and choice, gives a special power to a few selected students, that Bhagavaan will be accused of a dhosha, termed 'Vaishamya naigrunya dhosha.' | Bhagavaan will be charged of 'partiality'. Therefore, it should be understood, that if a student has atheendriya sakthi, the student must have worked for it, in his poorva janmaa. Atheendriya sakthi: poorva janma prayathna siddham eva / That is why, it is said, that if an individual listens to Vedhaantha even in his 99th year, it is worth it, because it will be carried forward, to his next janmaa. Sravanam will not go waste, even if not understood now. Whatever be the student's current mental or intellectual condition, the 'exposure' will 'click' sometime in the future. That is the most encouraging note in Vedhaantha sravanam. Unfortunately, many students are not convinced about this.

Obviously, such students do not remember that Lord Krishna Himself gives the assurance in the Bhagavadh Geetha (chapter IV – verse 38): "Yogasamsiddha: kaalena aathmani vindhathi" – "Prepared through Yoga, the aspirant attains 'knowledge', in time".

Reverting to the text, talking of the second type of student, Sureswaraachaarya concludes: "kimchith api apekshithavyam asthi" - "Nothing is to be discussed".

He proceeds to the third type of student (exemplified by Bhrugu). He says:

ॐ यः च श्रावित तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्य : - That student also, who is instructed by a preceptor in the mahaa vaakyaani like 'That thou art',

'Sraavitha: thaththvamsyaadhi vaakya:' is a beautiful compound term, derived as 'sraavitham thaththvamsyaadhi vaakyam yasmal sa:', meaning 'that student who has been made to listen to the mahaa vaakyaani such as 'thathvamasl', by the teacher'.

The reference is to the third type of student. This is clear by the description about him that follows:

ॐ स्वयं एव अन्वयव्यतिरेकौ कृत्वा - then, engages in rational discrimination by himself,

This third type of student is not as great as the second student, who understood the import of the mahaa vaakyam instantaneously. In contrast, this third student requires repeated introspection. He has to ask himself: "How can I be Brahman? I am born on a given day, I undergo all sorts of changes (shadvikaaraani) and I am subject to positive death sooner or later, whereas Brahman is said to be changeless and eternal."

It may be recollected that Bhrugu was given as example for this type of student. As the Upanishad (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Bhruguvalli) narrates the episode, Bhrugu first tested the mahaa vaakyam with annamaya kosaa and found that, with regard to anna maya kosaa, the mahaa vaakyam will not apply. He went back to the guru, Varunaa, who only told him "You are moving in the right direction. Go back and continue your enquiry". Thereafter, Bhrugu, by himself, did anvaya vyathirekaa, eliminating praana mayaa, mano mayaa, vijnaana mayaa etc., one by one. Bhrugu, by himself, conducted the enquiry. What was the role of the guru, Varunaa? Ans: "He did not teach him directly. He only said 'Thapasaa Brahma vijijnaasasva. Thapo Brahma' – 'Seek to know Brahman through enquiry. Enquiry is Brahman'. The guru, Varunaa, said only that much. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says about such students: 'svayam eva anvayavyathirekau kruthvaa'.

ॐ तद् अवसान एव - and, at the end of the long enquiry,

'Avasaanam' means 'conclusion / termination'. 'Thad', in this context, means 'thasya anvayavyathirekasya'. 'Thasya anvayavyathirekasya avasaanam' is 'thadh avasaanam'.

ॐ वाक्यार्थं प्रतिपद्यते - understands the import of the mahaa vaakyam,

ॐ This third student also understands the 'eiikyam' without requiring the guru's teaching a second time. The Guru taught him only once; thereafter, 'teaching a second time' was not involved. But, 'knowledge' was achieved by the student, only after a thorough enquiry by himself. That is why, we call it, 'vaakya smaranena jnaana praapthi.' |

ॐ असौ अपि यथार्थं प्रतिपन्नः इति - because of his having understood the true import of the mahaa vaakyam,

This third student also is an extraordinary student, even though less endowed, than the previous two; but, still this student also must be great, since he underwent sravanam only once and achieved jnaanam by dint of his own hard work. 'Yathartham' means 'right import' and 'prathipanna:' means 'jnaathavaar'.

And, what does Sureswaraachaaryaa want to comment on him? He says "with regard to this third type of student, viz., 'vaakya smaranena jnaana aapthvaar' also, I have nothing to comment".

ॐ पूर्णवत् एव - similar to the previous two types of students,

ॐ उपेक्षितव्यः - can be ignored / need not be concerned about.

The Aachaaryaa says : "This student also has understood the mahaa vaakyam aright and therefore, there need not be any more concern about him".

The Aachaaryaa, thus, leaves out the first three types of students, without any comment, since he wants to focus on the fourth type of student, who has the need to undergo repeated sravanam for achieving jnaanam. This is what he is going to say.

ॐ यः पुनः अन्वयव्यतिरेकौ कारयित्वा अपि - But, he, who, though conducted through the discriminative process,

The current discussion is about the fourth type of student like Svethakethu, in the 6th chapter of the Chaandogya Upanishad. A revision of the concerned portion in the Upanishad, will show, that, the guru, of course, gives the mahaa vaakya upadesaa; but, starts it only in the 8th section . From the 8th section to the 16th section, the mahaa vaakyam is given 9 times. But, before the Upadesaa is given, in the first seven sections, the guru does anvaya vyathireka vichaaraa.

In this initial portion, the guru addressing the sishyaa (VI. 5. 4) says: "annamayagum hi saumya mana: aapomaya: praana: tejomayee vaak" – "O good-looking one ! Mind is purely made of food, vital force is made of water, speech is made of fire". The guru asks the sishyaa to give up food for fifteen days (he allows him plenty of water though) and to find out what happens. He commands: "pancha dhasa ahaani maa aasee." (VI. 7. 1) – "Do not eat for fifteen days". The sishtyaa, Svethakethu, obeys; and finds that, after fasting for fifteen days, his mind is not able to recollect the manthraa-s he had learnt earlier and was adept in. So, what was the purpose of this study? Ans: "To establish that food and mind have got relationship. Both are baudhikam and both are jadam. ('I' am chethanam; therefore, 'I' am not the mind) ".

This and similar 'anvaya vyathirekaa' discussions by the guru, are covered in the first seven sections of the 6th chapter of the Chaandoghya Upanishad, to arrive at "what is saakshh?" This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to by the term "anvayavyathirekau kaarayithvaa".

ॐ पुनः पुनः वाक्यं श्राव्यते - (thereafter) is made to listen to the mahaa vaakyam again and again,

In this portion of the Chaandoghya Upanishad, after anvaya vyathirekaa discussions up to the 7th section, the guru does a detailed analysis of the sushupthi avasthaa. Then follows the famous upadesaa: "Eithadhaathmyam idhagum sarvam sa aathmaa thath thvam asi Svetaketho" - "All this has got That as the Self. That is the Truth. That is the Self. Thou art That, O Svethakethu" (VI. 8. 7).

If Svethakethu had been like Bhrugu, the third type of student, the guru would have stopped with this and sent the sishtyaa away. If the student is of the 'extra-ordinary' type, a single teaching of 'thath thvam asi' would have been enough for him.. But, what do we find? The teaching is repeated by the guru, nine times. That is what is referred to, here, by the Aachaaryaa, by the term 'puna: puna: vaakyam sraavyathe'.

This statement "Eithadhaathmyam idhagum sarvam sa aathmaa thath thvam asi Svetaketho" containing the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi' is repeated by the guru nine times, with various dhrushtaantha-s. With what purpose? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

ॐ यथाभूतार्थं प्रतिपत्तये - for inducing the 'understanding' of 'Reality'.

'prathipatthi.' means 'understanding'. Of what? Ans: "'Yathaa boothaartha' meaning 'the right / exact message'". What is that right message? Ans: "'I' am Brahman and Brahman is 'me'. 'I' am of the higher order of 'reality' and the world is of a lower order of 'reality' ".

ॐ तस्य अन्वयव्यतिरेकस्य सतः - With regard to this student, who has gone through the rational process of 'anvaya vyathirekaa , ॐ कथं वाक्यं श्राव्यते इति - it has to be enquired as to why the teacher subjects him to repeated mahaa vaakyasravanam .

Sureswaraacharya asks himself: "With regard to this fourth category of student, why does the teacher make the student listen to the mahaa vaakyam, again and again? What is the purpose?"

The word 'katham' normally means 'kena prakaarena –'by what method?'. But, in this context, it means 'kasmaath hetho:' – 'for what purpose?'

ॐ उच्यते - This is being explained.

The Aacharya says: "Ithi uchyathe" – "For that, the answer is going to be given".

The idea is, that, in the case of the fourth student, his ajnaanam does not go away easily. Such ajnaanam is comparable to cancerous cells. For eradicating cancerous cells, different treatments are given, such as Chemotherapy, radiation etc. In certain cases of the dreaded disease, the cancerous cells are eradicated in a few sessions of treatment; but, in certain other cases, they are so recalcitrant / adamant, that, whatever is done, those cells refuse to disappear or if they disappear, they re-appear. In such case, the treatment has to be repeated over and over. Similarly, ajnaanam, like some cancerous cells, is so firmly rooted in this fourth type of student that the 'treatment' has to be repeated. What is the treatment in this case? Ans: "The teaching of 'thath thvam asi'". The redeeming factor is that, in the treatment of cancer, there might be side-effects for the various therapies and the 'repeated' sessions, whereas, in treating ajnaanam through repeated mahaa vaakya upadesam, there are no side-effects.

Ajnaanam is very, very strong in some cases because of several reasons. The reason can be dhrushta prathibandha: or adrushta prathibandha: | By the term "Ithi uchyathe", the Aachaaryaa says "that is going to be clarified". For the purpose of this clarification, he uses an example, the famous 'tenth man' example.

Chapter III: Verse 64 –

नवसंख्याहृतज्ञानो दशमो विभ्रमाध्यथा ।

न वेत्ति दशमोऽस्मीति वीक्षमाणोऽपि तान्नव ॥ ६४ ॥

It is similar to the case of the tenth man, who, counting only the other nine men, does not count himself as the tenth, in sheer delusion, though he is looking round carefully on the nine others.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa assumes that the story of the 'tenth man' is very well known to all people.

The story is, briefly, as follows:

Ten Brahmachari-s, students of a gurukulam, wanted to attend a function in a close-by town. Though the guru was initially not inclined to permit the students, they pleaded with him, got his permission and left the gurukulam for the town. They had to cross a river to reach the town. All the ten boys swam across. And, after crossing the river, the leader of the group wanted to make sure that all the ten have arrived at the other bank safely, since he was responsible for them and answerable to his guru, who, in turn, was answerable to the Brahmachari-s' parents. And, what did he do? He asked all the other boys to stand in a row and counted them. He counted only nine and started wondering "what happened to the 10th man?" He thought: "Perhaps I did not count properly; let me count from the other end of the row". But, he again counted only 'nine'. In whatever way he did the counting, he could arrive only at 'nine', since he failed to count himself every time. He was frantically looking / searching for the 10th man. None of the other Brahmachari-s also could spot the mistake of the leader. At that time, a stranger happened to pass by. Noticing the distraught state of the group because of the 'missing' tenth man and the failure of the leader in not counting himself, he told the leader "You will not find the 10th man, where you are looking, because that 10th man (dhasama:) is none other than you, yourself – 'thath thvam asi '".

But, even though that was the truth / even though the passer-by, who made the statement 'thath thvam asi' was giving a valid knowledge / even though that vaakyam is a pramaanam, the 10th man, the leader of the group, was not convinced. He did not get the 'knowledge', because of an obstacle.

The obstacle was, that, even as the 'passer-by' was giving him the right 'knowledge', his mind was not abiding in himself as the 10th man, because of his preoccupation or absorption in the 'nava samkyaa' – his 'counting of nine Brahmachari-s'. He received the stranger's message 'mechanically', because of this pre-occupation and, therefore, did not get the 'relief' that should have come with the identity of the 10th man.

He would, therefore, never claim "I am the 10th man" and achieve the consequent relief.

Sureswaraachaaryaa's fourth type of student is similar to this 'leader of the Brahmachari group' in this story. Even though the guru has taught him 'thath thvam asi', from the most valid source, the Sruthi, this type of student would still only say : "I have understood the mahaa vaakyam. But, I am yet to 'realize' it. I am yet to get 'enlightenment' / saakshaathkaaraa. I am, therefore, still only a mumukshu / a saadhakaa".

How come 'understanding' is there for him; but, 'relief' is not there? Ans: "Like the leader of the Brahmachari group in the story, losing sight of the fact mentioned by the passer-by, because of his pre-occupation with the nava samkyaa, the mind of this Vedhaanthic student also is pre-occupied or obsessed with the pancha anaathmaa, consisting of profession, possessions, family, body and mind. This student's mind is absorbed in these; 'aham Brahma asmi' appears to him, as a dummy or blank statement, because his mind is still preoccupied with / obsessed with / distracted by 'anaathmaa'. This is the first problem. There is a second problem also, in the case of this student.

What is that second problem? Mahaa vaakyam being a valid source of knowledge, and mahaa vaakyam alone being the valid source of knowledge , with no other pramaanam either to prove or contradict this fact, and, therefore, should be taken as the final source of knowledge, when the mahaa vaakyam says that 'I' am the adhishtaanam of the universe, as even as the aspirant receives its message, he should take it as the fact. After receiving this knowledge, he should accept it as the fact and should never look for proving that knowledge through some other means, such as sitting in meditation and looking for a mysterious experience in nirvikalpaka samaadhi etc. If he does so, he is 'testing' the message of mahaa vaakyam, through some other method. He thinks meditation is another pramaanam, which will validate his sravanam. But, there is no pramaanam, other than mahaa vaakyam, to prove 'thath thvam asi' or 'aham Brahma asmi'. Unfortunately, this aspirant, this fourth type of student, does not have sufficient sraddhaa in the mahaa vaakyam to instantaneously claim "'I' am muktha: is the fact".

In the Bhagavadh Geethaa, Lord Krishna refers to this unfortunate individual, using a strong term 'vinasyathi' (Verse 40 – Chapter IV): "Ajnascha asraddhadhaana: cha samsayaathmaa vinasyathi" – "The ignorant, who has no faith and who has a doubting mind 'is ruined'".

This asraddhaa with regard to mahaa vaakyam is the second obstacle. As it had been pointed out in an earlier session, when the Karma Kaandaa of the Sruthi proclaims "Bhagavaan is your savior", generally, the proclamation is accepted with sraddhaa. But, when Jnaana Kaanda of the same Sruthi declares "'You' do not require any savior", there is a lot of reluctance to accept it. In other words, we find, that, the amount of sraddhaa that Karma Kaandaa commands, the Jnaana Kaanda does not command, though, in reality, jnaana kaandaa is a superior pramaanam from the standpoint of karma kaandaa.

How do you say that jnaana kaandaa is a pramaanam superior to Karma Kaandaa?

Ans: "It is because the dvaitham talked about in karma kaandaa is negated by the advaitam of the jnaana kaandaa. Since thus jnaana kaandaa confidently negates karma kaandaa, it can be understood as the more powerful of the two".

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa asserts somewhere, that, jnaana kaandaa is a greater well-wisher than thousands of mothers and thousands of fathers. Vedhanthaa is the greatest well-wisher. But, somehow, the student feels 'understanding' is not enough. The day sraddhaa comes, he will take his 'understanding' as the final.

And, therefore, what is the problem with this fourth type of student? Ans: "Either 'distraction' with anaathmaa or lack of sraddhaa".

Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the dhrushtaanthaa of the well-known dhasama purusha:, to bring out this truth.

Reverting to the text:

ॐ दशमः - The 10th man,

ॐ वसंख्या आहतज्ञानः - with his mind distracted by the counting of (the other) nine,

'jnaanam', in this context, is to be taken to mean 'mind'/ antha:karanam / buddhi: / 'Samkya' means 'counting'. 'Nava' means 'nine'.

ॐ विभ्रमात् - because of that delusion and ignorance,

ॐ 'vibrahma:' means 'ignorance' and 'distraction' together.

ॐ 'दशमः अस्मि' इति न वेत्ति - does not claim 'I am the 10th man',

ॐ तान् नव वीक्षमाणः अपि - even though he is clearly observing the other nine Brahmacharin-s.

The very fact that he is observing 'nine' Brahmacharin-s is the proof for the existence of the 10th 'observer'. It should be evident to him. An analogy: "Whenever I look at the photograph of a group of people, I know there is a person, apart from the group, who is 'clicking' the photograph. Even though the 'clicker' is not 'clicked'/ the 'clicker' does not appear in the photograph, his existence will be understood". But, in this story, the 'evident observer' (himself) is missed by the 10th man.

174: Chapter III, Verses 64-66 (20-02-2010)

Sureswaraacharyaa, in these verses, wants to establish that mahaa vaakyam alone will eliminate the 'moolaavidhya' or 'self-ignorance'. By the word 'moolaavidhya', we mean 'the ignorance regarding the true nature of the saakshi', 'saakshi' being the 'adhistaanam' of the whole universe.

He wants to point out the following:

"By anvaya vyathirekaa method, the student can arrive at the saakshi. That is possible; i.e. the student can know 'I' am the Consciousness principle. That is possible. The student can know that 'I' am different from the pancha kosaa-s or sareerathrayam. That also he can know and he may perhaps even know that the Consciousness is all-pervading, because, the limitations belong to the 'observed' body and not to the observer 'I'. The student may also, therefore, arrive at the fact "I' am the limitless Consciousness; not only am 'I' free from spatial limitation; 'I' do not have limitations of time also". The student may arrive at even this fact, based on the experience that the time-wise limitations appear when he uses the physical body in the jaagrath avasthaa, while, in sushupthi, when he does not identify with the physical body, he does not experience even time. Thus, by using anvaya vyathirekaa method, the student can gather, "I' am desa pariccheda rahitha saakshi; kaala pariccheda rahitha saakshi; sarva gatha saakshi; nirguna saakshi"

"But, that 'knowledge' is not complete, because, the student will never get to know, whether this saakshi is ekam or anekam, if mahaa vaakyam is not there. Without the application of mahaa vaakyam, he will commit the blunder that the Yoga philosopher has committed. The Yoga philosopher also arrives at the 'eternal, all-pervading' Consciousness; but, wrongly considers it as 'pluralistic'; i.e. the Yoga philosopher says that there are many Consciousnesses, each Consciousness being eternal and each Consciousness being all-pervading. In the same manner, the student will never drop the 'pluralistic' idea, by the use of the anvaya vyathirekaa method alone.

"And, again, if the mahaa vaakyam is not used, the student will never know that, 'I', the Consciousness, am of a higher order of reality, in comparison to the entire universe. There is no way of knowing this fact also. By any amount of 'experience', the student will never get to know "I am of a higher order of reality, than the world". He can never know this, by logic. No modern science also can prove that Consciousness is of a higher order of reality. 'Awareness' or 'realization' of this fact will necessarily require the employment of mahaa vaakyaa.

" Without the mahaa vaakyam, the student will never get the knowledge " 'I am eka;; 'I am of the higher order of reality; and, the entire world, the anaathmaa, the matter, including the very body-mind complex itself, is of a lower order, termed mithyaa". We can never arrive at these three important facts, viz., (i) saakshina: ekathvam (ii) saakshina: paaramaarthika sathyathvam and (iii) anaathmana: mithyaathvam, by anvaya vyathirekaa or by logic or by modern science or by nirvikalapaka samaadhi anubhavaa. None of these four methods will help. This knowledge can be arrived at, only through mahaa vaakyam / "moolaavidhyaa nivarthaka mahaa vaakya pramaana moordhanyena eva jnaanam sambhavathy". "Pramaana moordhanyam" means the highest pramaanam".

We call the ignorance of these three basic facts, namely, (i) saakshi eka: (ii) saakshi paaramaarthika sathya: and (iii) jagath mithyaa, as 'self-ignorance' or moolaavidhyaa.

This moolaavidhyaa itself has got two components. One component is concealing the nature of saakshi, viz., the paaramaathika sathyathva nature and the adhvitheeyathva nature. This 'concealing' is one function / power of moolavidhyaa and is called the 'aavarana sakthi' of moolaavidhyaa.

The second function / power of moolaavidhyaa is 'distracting our attention towards anaathmaa and making us get obsessed with the mithyaa anaathmaa'. This 'obsession with anaathmaa' is of such a large magnitude, that the paaramaarthika sathyathvam of aathmaa is ignored. This 'distraction' is otherwise called 'vikshepaa', otherwise called 'moha:', otherwise called 'bhraanthi:' This vikshepa sakthi of moolaavidhyaa keeps us busy/ occupied with pancha anaathmaa, consisting of possessions, profession, family, body and mind

Thus, the two functions of moolaavidhyaa are (1) 'Concealment of 'my' paaramaarthika sathyathvam', termed 'aavaranaa' and (2) 'causing Obsession with anaathmaa', termed 'vikshepaa'.

Now, between this 'concealment' and 'obsession', it is very difficult to identify as to which is the cause and which is the consequence. In other words, the doubt is: "Is it because of my obsession with anaathmaa, that I am forgetting my Self or is it because I am forgetting my Self, I am obsessed with anaathmaa?"

Both are true. "Because of my self-ignorance, resulting from 'concealment', I am obsessed with the world" is correct. "Because I am obsessed with the world, I ignore my nature" is also correct, as eloquently brought out by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Bhaja Govindam (verse 7) : "Baalasthaavath kreedaasktha: ; tharunasthaavath tharunee saktha: vrudhasthaavath chinthaasaktha: pare Brahmani kopi na saktha: " – "Childhood passes away in play. Thoughts of love engage the youth. The old age is spent on worrying. At no stage, does a man turn his mind towards God". The 'concealment' of the true nature of the Self' and 'obsession with anaathmaa' are mutually cause and consequence.

Even though, technically, we say aavaranaa is cause for vikshepaa, on enquiry, we find that each one reinforces the other.

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to talk about this idea – this two-fold adverse consequences caused by moolaavidhya. For that purpose alone, he has introduced the dhasama dhrushthaantha, where the dhasama:, the 10th man, is ignoring himself because of his obsession with the other nine people. The obsession with the nine people is the cause of self-ignoring and, conversely, self-ignorance has caused the obsession with the nine people. Thus, both get reinforced mutually. What is the result? Ans: "Samsaara: is the result". That is said here.

Going back to the 64th slokaa (that was completed in the earlier session), the term "thaan nava veekshamaana: api" indicates, that, the very fact that the 10th man is observing the other nine people should be ample proof to convince him "I, the observer, am different from the nine and if I am different from the nine, I am the 10th person and I do not requires any other proof for that. The other nine members require proof; I have to 'observe' them; but, I, the 'observer' and the 'person doing the counting of nine' do not require any proof". But, even though the 10th man is thus evident, without the need for any proof, this 10th man manages to ignore himself as the 10th man, as he is 'lost' in the 'nine men'. As a consequence he worries and complains "I have not yet got what I wanted".

The plight of the 'self-ignorant' / moolaavidhyaa-afflicted individual is similar. The peace of mind that he is searching / looking for is 'his' svaroopam. But, that is missed, because of obsession with anaathmaa. And, that is the success of moolavidhyaa.

Moolaavidhyaa is laughing every time we are crying. Every time we cry, moolaavidhyaa is having a hearty, loud laughter, because we have managed to miss the most evident fact "Aham aanando Brahma asmi". It requires somebody (a guru) to come and tell us this message "aanando Brahma; thath thvam asi", similar to the passer-by in the story, telling the 10th man, "sa: dhasama: thvam asi".

But, the problem is, even when the guru is saying this, the student is so preoccupied with the pancha anaathmaa, that, he does not listen to the teaching, again, similar to the dhasama: in the story, who does not listen to the passer-by, since he is preoccupied with counting one or two or three or nine. The entire life is 'missed', missing the 'tenth'.

Just as the 10th man in the story , "nava samkyayaa aahruthajnaana: dhasama: asmi ithi na vetthi" - "with his mind distracted by the counting of (the other) nine, does not claim 'I am the 10th man' ", the moolavidhyaa-afflicted aspirant, obsessed by the pancha anaathmaa, misses the teaching 'thath thvam asi'.

What to say about the glory of maayaa? In his Maayaa Panchakam, Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa, glorifies the power of maayaa - "Tvadh agatitha ghatanaa pateeyasi maayaa" - "Oh! Maayaa! How adept you are, at making even impossible things happen!"

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 65 :

अथ द्रष्टान्तगतमर्थं दार्ष्टान्तिकार्थं समर्पयिष्यन्नाह ।

The point of the analogy is exhibited in the present case:

ॐ अथ - Now,

ॐ समर्पयिष्यन् - extending

ॐ द्रष्टान्तगतं अर्थं - the idea that we saw in the example

ॐ दार्शनिक अर्थ - to the 'original' case (namely, the Vedhaanthic student)

ॐ आह - the author gives the following slokaa.

'The idea that we saw in the example (dhrushtaanthagatham artham), the dhasama dhrushtaanthaa, was the two-fold problem of the dhasama;, consisting of (i) 'obsession with the other nine' and (ii) 'ignoring the 10th man or himself'. As can be recollected, the 'obsession' was termed 'vikshepa' and the 'ignoring' was termed 'aavaranam'. Sureswaraachaaryaa is attempting to show, how these two, 'vikshepa' and 'aavaranam', are mutually reinforcing each other, in the case of the mumukshu missing to see his Self, (which is Brahman all the time) as Brahman. 'Missing Brahman' is 'missing peace of mind' / 'missing aanandha.' / 'missing poornathvam' / 'missing saanthi.' | By missing Brahman, we miss all these things, which we consider important in life and which we are running after, all the time. The Aachaaryaa points out, that, the only solution to this problem is mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

Verse 65 – Chapter III:

अपविद्धयोऽप्येवं तत्त्वमस्यादिना विना ।

वेत्ति नैकलमात्मानं नान्वेष्यं चात्र कारणम् ॥ ६५ ॥

Though the Self is without a second, one does not understand this single Self, without the help of texts like 'That thou art'. There is no need to search for the cause of this situation.

All the people who ignore the Saakshi / Brahma thathvam, do so, because of the two problems that were discussed in detail. In the 'example' (dhasama dhrushtaanthaa), the first problem is the obsession with 'counting the nine'. In a similar manner, in the 'original' (dhaarshthaanthaa, namely, the mumukshu), 'obsession' with either the world or the body-mind anaathmaa is the first problem.

The Yogic people also rightly believe: "Because I am absorbed in the world, I am missing the true nature of myself". But, based on this right perspective, they wrongly conclude, that if (i) we negate the anaathmaa by anvaya vyathirekaa (ii) withdraw from all the thoughts (iii) withdraw from the sense organs also and (iv) abide in saakshi svaroopam, we can get advaita jnanam. They do not want to resort to mahaa vaakyam. Their philosophy is, that, if the entire anaathmaa is eliminated, by practicing aasanaa, praanaayaamaa, prathyaahaaraa, dharanaa and dhyaanam, the aspirant learns to abide as saakshi. Since saakshi is Self-evident (it is said to be svayam prakaasa chaithanyam), they think the svayam prakaasa chaithanyam will reveal itself, as paaramaarthika sathyam. They believe that the saakshi will reveal its nature by itself, without mahaa vaakyam.

Because of this line of thinking, they attempt to remove the duality of the world, by what they term samaadhi avasthaa, which they define as "thadhaa dhrashtu: svaroope avasthaanam". This is the definition given in Yoga saasthraa. Of course, in samaadhi, they are able to abide in saakshi svaroopam. But, the problem is, even while abiding in saakshi svaroopam, at best, they may discover "'I' am the saakshi; 'I' am the chaithanyam", the samaanya jnaanam of the saakshi; but, they will never get the visesha jnaanam. What is that visesha jnaanam? Ans: "That saakshi is ekam adhvitheeyam". Yoga saasthraa people never come to know this; they never know saakshi alone is the paaramaarthika sathya: and jagath is mithyaa. They will never know these three important facts about the saakshi and jagath, because no pramaanam is available in nirvikalpaka samaadhi.

It should be understood and remembered, that saakshi, by itself, can never serve as a pramaanam in revealing saakshi as paaramaarthika sathyam. In nirvikalpaka samaadhi, though the Yogic practitioner does manage to abide in saakshi, that saakshi can never serve as a pramaanam in revealing itself as paaramaarthika sathyam. Saakshi will not 'whisper' in the Yogic practitioner's ears: "This Consciousness, which is free from all the anaathmaa, is advitheeyam. It is jagath adhistaanam. From this alone, the whole mithyaa world has come".

Remember saakshi / Aathmaa / Chaithanyam is not a pramaanam. Chaithanyam can never give any knowledge. If chaithanyam can give knowledge, all of us would have gained 'knowledge', janmaa-s and janmaa-s before, since, all of us were blessed with chaithanyam in the past and are blessed with chaithanyam in the present. Especially during sushupthi, which we go through every day, the entire anaathmaa is resolved and the chaithanyam alone is there. If chaithanyam were a pramaanam, it would have told us "'I', chaithanyam, am paaramaarthika sathya:" |

Let it be very clear, that, no doubt, chaithanyam is self-evident, but that self-evident chaithanyam cannot give the knowledge, that, "the self-evident chaithanyam is paaramaarthika sathyam". Chaithanyam will never say this.

In that case, for getting that knowledge, what do we require? Ans: "Veda pramaanam is required" What Veda pramaanam? Ans: "Vedhaantha pramaanam". Which vedhanthaa pramaanam? Ans: "Mahaa vaakyam vedhaantha pramanam".

Sureswaraacharya wants to advise: "So, there is no use in 'sitting in samaadhi and waiting for advaita jnaanam'. Listen to mahaa vaakyam. Do not underestimate the importance of mahaa vaakyam. Some people say 'I have heard mahaa vaakyam sufficiently, let me go to samaadhi. What we, Vedhaanthin-s are saying is that, you have to reverse the statement, as 'Samaadhi is enough; let us come to mahaa vaakyam'. Samaadhi does not follow mahaa vaakyam. Samaadhi can only be a preliminary saadhanaa, to achieve poise of mind. Mahaa vaakyam is the ultimate liberating source of knowledge". Therefore, he says:

अपविद्धयः अपि - Even if a person sits in samaadhi, as pure saakshi, having eliminated the entire dvaita prapanchaa,

The term 'apaviddha' means 'thrown off / dismissed / rejected / freed from / devoid of'. The term is derived 'from the root 'vyadh', meaning 'to throw away / cast away / toss away' | 'Dhvaya:' means 'dvaita prapanchaa / anaathma prapanchaa / thriputi | 'Apaviddha dhvaya:', therefore, means 'after eliminating dvaita prapanchaa'.

The reference is to a person sitting in nirvikalpaka samaadhi as Saakshi. What type of Saakshi? Ans: "Self-effulgent Saakshi / chaithanya roopa Saakshi".

But, even if the person sits in samaadhi for a billion janmaa-s, he will not achieve 'jnaanam'. Dayananda Swamiji humorously says about this person, that the only difference is, that, this person was earlier 'turbulently' ignorant and now is 'quietly' ignorant.

The 'turbulence' and 'disturbances' in this practitioner's mind give way to 'peace' and 'quietude'. But, his 'ignorance' does not get eliminated, because saakshi is not a source of any knowledge. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says, that, even if a person sits in nirvikalpaka samaadhi:

ॐ तत्त्वमस्यादिना विना - without the employment of mahaa vaakyam from the mouth of an aacharya,

ॐ एकलं आत्मानं न वेत्ति - one cannot know the adhvitheeya, paaramaarthika sathyam aathmaa.

'Ekalam' means 'adhvitheeyam'. 'Ekala:' is the corresponding noun. 'Paaramaarthikam sathyam' has to be added, though it is not explicitly mentioned by the Aachaaryaa. So, according to Sureswaraachaaryaa, moolaavidhyaa can never go away without mahaa vaakyam.

It should be remembered here, that as discussed earlier, while talking about four types of students, the first type of students, like Prajaapathi and Vaama Devaa, are 'seemingly' exceptions to this rule. The relevant scriptures do relate that neither Prajaapathi nor Vaama Devaa underwent any sravanam; without sravanam, they gained 'knowledge'. But, Sureswaraachaaryaa's contention is, that, in their cases also, though sravanam did not take place in their current janmaa-s, they also underwent sravanam in their poorva janmaa-s and that, the mahaa vaakyam which was in their subconscious minds in the form of vaasanaa, got activated in the current janmaa-s. An example was given in our earlier discussions – the 'tube-light'. Some tube-lights do not get activated immediately on their being switched on; only after a few minutes they 'light up'. This does not mean 'switching on' is not required; it has been done earlier; it is the tube that did not get activated immediately. In a like manner, anybody gets 'knowledge' only through mahaa vaakyam, listened to, in this year or in the previous year or ten years before or ten janmaa-s before. Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts that, mahaavakyaa is common to all the jnaani-s.

In this context, it may be argued, that, Gouthama Buddha got 'enlightened' without mahaa vaakyam. While we are not sure whether Buddha's 'enlightenment' was 'advaita jnaanam' or not, we certainly know, that, the 'knowledge' of his followers, the Buddhists, is not 'advaita jnaanam'. None of the four forms of Buddhism now available and discussed by Goudapaadhaachaaryaa in his Maandookya Kaarika-s, believes in the maxim "Brahma Sathyam Jagan mithyaa Jeevo Brahmaiva naapara:" The four branches of Buddhism are (1) Southraanthikaa Buddhism (2) vaibhaashikaa Buddhism (3) Yogaachaaraa Buddhism and (4) Maadhyamikaa Buddhism. All the four consistently miss this truth. What is the reason? Ans: "They do not employ mahaa vaakyam". Without mahaa vaakyam, if an aspirant sits under a bodhi tree and gets 'enlightenment', that 'knowledge' will not be 'aham eva sathyamBrahma ; jagan mithyaa' | Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that, if that 'advaita jnaanam' knowledge has to come, the aspirant should realize the importance of mahaa vaakyam. He says, 'thaththvamasyaadhinaa vinaa ekalam aathmaanam na vetthi – 'without the help of the mahaa vaakyaani such as 'thath thvam asi', one cannot know adhvitheeya aathmaa'. He proceeds:

अत्र कारणम् न अन्वेष्यं - There is no need to look for the cause of this situation / Do not ask more about the cause of this ignorance.

The Aachaaryaa says: "Note this much, that, a person does not get 'knowledge' even after sitting in nirvikalpaka saamdhi. But, do not ask me too many questions regarding the cause for this".

'Athra' means 'ajnaane'; i.e., 'in missing the advaita aathmaa'. By 'kaaranam na anveshyam' he means 'do not ask about the cause'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa does elaborate on the cause later. But, now, he says 'do not ask me what is the cause'. He is making this statement, with the intention to convey a particular idea, in the next slokaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 66 :

नान्वेष्यं चात्र कारणमित्युक्तं तत्कस्मादिति चोदिते प्रत्याहन्वेषणासहिष्णुत्वात् । तत्कथमित्याह ।

That 'there is no need to search for the cause of this' has been asserted because the matter cannot bear investigation. How?

ॐ 'न अन्वेष्यं च अत्र कारणम्' - 'Do not ask me more questions with regard to this (i.e.

- with regard to why people do not gain knowledge
- without mahaa vaakyam),

ॐ इति युक्तं- is what was said by me.

Sureswaraachaaryaa quotes here, the fourth quarter of the previous slokaa.

तत् कस्मात् इति चोदिते - Suppose a student asks "why do you say that I should not ask for the cause?".

Presumably, this student's doubt is: "Why do you say that I should not ask for the cause? Is not there a cause at all, for that?"

Sureswaraacharya's answer will be: "There is a cause. What is that cause? Moolaavidhya is the cause for 'self-ignorance' and 'distraction'. But, still, I would say 'do not ask about the cause'".

Why? What is the idea? The idea is this: "There are certain things, which you can generally talk about and comment on. But, when you probe into them, you will get into problems. To convey this, we give an example. Imagine the night time. In the night, there is darkness and because of the darkness, we are not able to see things clearly. Suppose a person asks the question 'why are we not able to see things clearly in the night?' and somebody gives the answer 'it is because of darkness'. Generally, people nod their heads in acceptance, as if they have understood. But, suppose the questioner persists and asks the question 'what is darkness?'. And, suppose, this person wants to clearly 'see' what darkness is, with the help of his eyes. But, when he, thus, tries to 'see' the darkness with the help of eyes, he will not be able to do so, because darkness is that in which eyes do not function. What is the proof? If eyes were functioning in darkness, he would have seen the objects. Eyes do not function in darkness; eyes cannot understand darkness.

"And, suppose, therefore, this person decides 'since eyes do not function in darkness, I will bring lights to study the nature of darkness'. In other words, this person wants to do a research on darkness and he wants to do the research with the help of 'eyes'. But, he discovers that eyes do not function in the presence of darkness. Therefore, for 'functioning of eyes', he wants to bring in the lights. He thinks 'with the help of light, eyes will function. Therefore, using the lights, I will research darkness'; i.e., he wants to employ lights to research darkness. But, what happens? The moment he brings in the lights, the darkness disappears. All these show, that, darkness can never be probed into, either with light or without light. Without light, you cannot probe, because, without light, eyes do not function to do the probing; with the lights you cannot probe darkness, because when the lights come on, darkness goes away.

"Then, what is darkness? It is a mysterious entity which is responsible for non-perception of things, but which cannot be probed into and understood.

"In our tradition, there are books written on 'what is darkness?', and, what is their conclusion? Ans: 'We are still in darkness, regarding darkness' ".

At this juncture, Swamiji quotes Swami Chinmayanandhaaji. He says: "Swami Chinmayanandhaaji was a master story-teller. Whenever a topic sounds dry or is difficult to comprehend, he will invent a story and regale his students with the story. He nicely conveys our present topic also in the form of a story. His story is this: 'Somebody went and told the sun-god, that there is a beautiful girl called Nishaa / Miss Night. When he heard this, the sun-god wanted to meet her and marry her. Then he asked the question 'where is this girl, Miss Night?' He was answered 'She is on the other side of the earth'. The sun-god decided to seek and find her out and marry her; but, when, with this intention, he went to the other side of the earth, he found, that, Miss Night had moved to the first side. The sun-god, therefore, went to the first side, only to find that Miss Night had moved to the second side. Even now the sun-god is going round and round the earth for the purpose of meeting / dating/ marrying Miss Nisha'. In Sanskrit, the name 'Nishaa' is (akaaraantha:) sthree linga: or feminine gender. In contrast, the name 'Surya:' is (akaaraanatha:) pullinga: or masculine gender. So, Swami Chinmayaanadhaaji's story fits very appropriately."

Thus, what is darkness? Ans: "Darkness is a mysterious thing". You cannot probe it either with light or without light. Without light, you cannot probe, because the eyes cannot function; with light, you cannot probe, because once the light comes, darkness disappears.

In a similar manner, 'ignorance' is also a mysterious entity. Just like 'darkness', you cannot probe into 'ignorance' also. In the presence of ignorance, you cannot know things. In the presence of 'self-ignorance', you cannot know the Self. If you want to probe into 'self-ignorance' with a pramaanam (comparable to light, in the example), ignorance itself will not be there, because the moment pramaanam comes, knowledge comes and ignorance goes away, just as when light comes, darkness goes away. Without any pramaanam also you cannot know ignorance. Conclusion: "In the absence of pramaanam also you cannot know 'ignorance'; in the presence of pramaanam also you cannot know 'ignorance'". But, at the same time, you cannot say it is not there also. Therefore, 'self-ignorance' is a mysterious entity.

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Viveka Choodaamani (verse 109) says about maayaa or moolaavidhya (ignorance): "sannaapi asannaapi ubhayaathmikaa no bhinnaapi abhinnaapi ubhayaathmikaa no saanghaapi anangaa hyubhayaathmikaa no mahaa adhbhuthaa anirvachaneeyaropaa – "Mayaa cannot be said as real or non-existent or combination of real and non-existent. It is not separate nor non-separate from Brahman nor combined in nature of separate and non-separate; does not have parts nor is part-less, nor combined in nature. She is a great wonder and cannot be categorically explained".

Therefore, the advice is: "Do not probe into ignorance. Bring in and use the pramaanam and know the Self; ignorance goes away.

Based on these facts, Sureswaraachaaryaa himself asks: "Why do I say 'do not ask me more questions about moolaavidhyaa'?"; and, explains "If you ask more questions, I will not be giving you any clarity. The more questions you ask, the more, will I add to the confusion. By asking questions, therefore, you will be only adding to confusion.

"Never take a light and try to study 'darkness' with light. And, without light also, you cannot study darkness, because without lights eyes cannot function. When eyes do not function, how can you say 'I am seeing darkness?'"

Darkness is 'non-functioning of the eyes'. This was discussed in another context. In the Bhaashyam for the Bhagavadh Githaa verse "Yaa nisaa sarvabhoothaanaam thasyaam jaagrathi samyami yasyaam jaagrathi bhoothaani saa nisaa pasyatho mune." (Ch. II – Verse 69), 'darkness' was defined as 'a condition in which eyes do not function'. We can never say 'eyes are seeing darkness'. It is illogical, because, darkness is a state where eyes do not function; eyes can function only in the medium of light.

Exactly like darkness being anirvachaneeyam, ignorance is also anirvachaneeyam. It is bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam. It cannot be said to be bhaava roopam; nor abhaava roopam also. It is bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam like darkness. And, because it is bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam it is anirvachaneeyam. The term 'anirvachaneeyam' means 'indescribable' or 'mysterious'.

Human intellect can understand any object or situation only when it can categorize the object or situation; i.e. intellect understands only by 'categorization'. And, 'moolaavidhyaa' is not available for categorization as bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam. Therefore, the aspirant should not probe into moolaavidhyaa. Then what should he do? He should use the 'thathvamasi pramaanam' and eliminate the moolaavidhyaa. Instead of probing into moolaavidhyaa, it should be eliminated, by using mahaa vaakyam. That should be the aim / job of the aspirant.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "thath kasmaath ithi chodhithe" – "If a student asks "why do you say that I should not ask for the cause?", ॐ प्रति आह - I am giving the answer.

What is his answer?

ॐ अन्वेषण असहिष्णुत्वात् - 'Since moolaavidhyaa is not available for enquiry'.

Moolaavidhyaa is not available for probing, because it is not subject to categorization. 'Anveshanaa' means enquiry / probing. 'Asahishnuthvam' means 'nature of non-availability / non-endurance'. It does not allow itself to be enquired into. In Swami Vidyaaranyaa's Panchadasi, there is a very beautiful slokaa on this topic: "chodhyepi yadhi chodhyam syaath thath chodhye chodhyathe mayaa parihaaryam athathas chodhyam na puna: prathichodhyathaam" |

Swamiji says in a lighter vein: "Moolavidhyaa itself is a question mark. Do not put another question mark in front of moolaavidhyaa. If you put a question mark in front of moolaavidhyaa, what does it mean? It means 'I have put a question mark and you are putting another question mark, asking what is the first question mark'. Then, what will I do? I will put another question mark, in front of your question mark. Thus, we will go on and on. Therefore do not put a question mark in front of moolaavidhyaa, because moolaavidhyaa itself is a question mark". This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa says, by the term 'anveshana asahishnuthvaath'.

ॐ तत् क्तं इति आह - 'How it is', is being explained in the slokaa, that follows.

Chapter III: Verse 66 –

सेयं भ्रान्तिर्निरालम्बा सर्वन्यायविरोधिनी ।

सहते न विचारं सा तमो यद्वत् दिवाकरम् ॥ ६६ ।

This illusion is baseless and is opposed to all logic. It cannot endure enquiry even as darkness cannot endure the sun.

ॐ सा इयं भ्रान्तिः - That cause for 'self-ignorance' is called 'bhraanthi:' |

'Bhraanthi:' means 'moolaavidhyaa', which is eliminable by 'thathvamas' and 'thathvamas' alone. Mahaa vaakyam is the only 'detergent' which can tackle this intractable 'moolaavidhyaa' dirt.

And, what should be the aim of the mumukshu? Ans: "Bringing in mahaa vaakyam and removing moolaavidhyaa". We will only use the word moolaavidhyaa, utilize the mahaa vaakya pramaanam and get rid of moolaavidhyaa. We do not want to use a pramaanam to 'study' moolaavidhyaa It should be never done. Why? The reason:

ॐ निरालम्बा - Moolaavidhyaa 'exists' without having any clear feature of its own,

It does not clearly have even the feature of 'existence', because, if it has got a clear feature of existence, then there will be two things – Brahman and moolaavidhyaa. It exists in a mysterious manner, without having any clear features of its own. It means one cannot say 'it is sath'; one cannot say 'it is asath'; one cannot say 'it is bhaava roopam' or 'it is abhaavaroopam'. One cannot say 'it is saadhi (with beginning)'; one cannot say it is 'anaadhi (without a beginning)'. One cannot say 'it is sagunam'; one cannot say 'it is nirgunam'.

One cannot say 'moolaavidhyaa is saavayavam (with internal divisions)'; one cannot say 'it is niravayavam'. One cannot say 'it is part of Brahman'; one cannot say 'it is outside Brahman'. One cannot say 'it is located in Brahman'; one cannot say 'it is located outside Brahman'.

What is the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa? There was a detailed discussion on this, in the introduction to this chapter. One cannot firmly specify the aasrayaa of moolaavidhyaa. Sometimes, it is said to be the 'mind'; sometimes it is said to be aathmaa. Moolaavidhyaa's aasrayaa also is indefinable.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa terms moolavidhyaa as 'niraalambhaa', meaning that 'it cannot be defined' / 'it cannot be categorized' / 'mysterious'. But, we have to admit its existence. Why? Ans: "Because of that moolaavidhyaa alone, we have ignored the saakshi". Going back to the example, you cannot say 'darkness' is not there. Darkness cannot be defined. Darkness cannot be probed into. But, you cannot say darkness is not there; proved by the simple reason that we use the word 'darkness'. If there is no such thing as 'darkness', the very word will not be there. Darkness is as mysterious as moolaavidhyaa. Conversely, moolaavidhyaa is as mysterious as darkness.

The term 'niraalambhaa' means 'anirvachaneeyaa'.

ॐ सर्वन्यायविरोधिनी - and is averse to all logical categorization or classification.

'Nyaayaa', in this context, refers to 'logical categorization'.

Another meaning of 'sarva nyaaya virodhinee' is 'sarva pramaana virodhinee' / 'it is averse to all pramaanam-s'. How is it to be understood? Ans: "Without pramaanam, you will not be able to understand. With pramaanam also, you will not be able to understand, since, the moment pramaanam comes, moolaavidhyaa will disappear". Therefore:

ॐ सा विचारं न सहते - 'Moolaavidhyaa' does not endure / stand any enquiry, ॐ यद्वत् तमः दिवाकरम् (न सहते) - just as darkness cannot endure the sun.

There are three sentences in this verse. 'Saa iyam bhraanthi:|' is the first sentence. 'Saa bhraanthi: niraalambhaa sarva nyaaya virodhinee (bhavathi)' is the second sentence. 'saa vichaaram na sahathe yadhvath thama: dhivaakaram' is the third sentence.

This slokaa is one of the most famous slokaa-s of Naishkarmya Siddhi, since it establishes the 'anirvachaneeyam' status of moolaavidhyaa and is quoted very often by different aacharyaa-s, in their commentaries or sub-commentaries. The fantastic slokaa from the Viveka Choodaamani (verse 109), quoted earlier, "sannaapi asanaapi ubhayaathmikaa no bhinnapi abhinnaapi ubhayaathmikaa no saanghaapi anangaa hyubhayaathmikaa no mahaa adhbhuthaa anirvachaneeyaropaa" - "Mayaa cannot be said as real or non-existent or combination of real and non-existent. It is not separate nor non-separate from Brahman nor combined in nature of separate and non-separate; does not have parts nor is part-less, nor combined in nature. She is a great wonder and cannot be categorically explained" should be recollected again, in this context.

175: Chapter III, Verses 66-70 (27-02-2010)

In this portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that the moolaavidhyaa or self-ignorance will get eliminated only by the mahaa vaakya pramaanam; and, also, that, the aspirant should not try to probe deeply into moolaavidhyaa, because of a peculiar situation.

That 'peculiar' situation is this: If you have to probe into anything, you have to use the instrument of pramaanam; i.e. any probing / any enquiry is done with the help of a pramaanam only. If you want to probe into moolaavidhyaa or even any other avidhyaa, you have to bring in a pramaanam to probe into that. But, in the case of moolaavidhyaa / any avidyaa, there is a problem. The very job of the pramaanam is to produce the light of 'knowledge'; and naturally when pramaanam comes, the moment it is brought in, the 'light of knowledge' also will come; and, when 'light of knowledge' comes, avidhyaa will go away. In short, when pramaanam is absent, ignorance cannot be probed and when pramaanam is present, ignorance is not there at all for probing. This is the problem.

To repeat: Since any probing has to be done with a pramaanam only, when pramaanam is absent, ignorance cannot be probed into. But, when pramaanam is made available and present, ignorance will not be there for probing.

And, therefore, moolaavidhyaa will always remain inaccessible / unavailable for any probing or enquiry. It is 'experienced'; but, is not available for 'enquiry'. The consolation is, that, for achieving mokshaa or 'liberation', the aspirant / mumukshu does not have to know about or enquire into moolaavidhyaa. For mokshaa, he has to only negate moolaavidhyaa. And, even though moolaavidhyaa cannot be enquired into or probed into by any pramaanam, fortunately, it is not resistant to 'negation' by a suitable pramaanam. Thus, moolaavidhyaa (i) can be experienced (ii) cannot be enquired into (iii) but, can be negated.

In relation to pramaanam-s, this can be stated as (i) moolaavidhyaa can be 'experienced' in the absence of pramaanam (ii) moolaavidhyaa can be negated in the presence of pramaanam (iii) but, moolaavidhyaa cannot be enquired into, either in the absence of pramaanam or in the presence of pramaanam. To repeat the logic behind this statement: "In the absence of pramaanam, moolaavidhyaa cannot be enquired into, because, without pramaanam, nothing can be enquired into. In the presence of pramaanam, moolaavidhyaa cannot be probed into or enquired into, because it is not there at all, since, on the arrival of pramaanam, it disappears".

That is why, Sureswaraacharyaa says "saa vichaaram na sahathe" - "moolaavidhyaa does not stand enquiry". Since moolaavidhyaa is not available for enquiry, it is not available for any definition or description also – "saa anirvachaneeyam api" | It cannot be classified under sath category or asath category. It cannot be considered as different from Brahman or identical with Brahman. Thus, it is anirvachaneeyam also.

Therefore, the Vedhaanthic advice is: "Do not try to enquire into moolaavidhyaa; fortunately, the 'enquiry' is not required for mokshaa. Instead, negate moolaavidhyaa, by bringing in the suitable pramaanam".

To convey these ideas, Sureswaraacharyaa is quoting the famous example of Vedhaantha saasthra. What is that example? Ans: 'Thama:' / 'Darkness'.

Darkness is 'experienced' in the absence of light; darkness is 'negated' on the arrival of light. But, it is not possible to enquire or probe into the nature of darkness, either in the absence of light or in the presence of light.

Darkness cannot be enquired into, in the absence of light. Why? Ans: "Because for any 'enquiring', you require functioning eyes. To 'enquire' into anything, you have to use the enquiring instrument 'eye'. But, in darkness, eyes do not function for conducting the enquiry; eyes can function only in the presence of light. Darkness itself means 'absence of light'; and, 'absence of light' results in 'non-functioning' of eyes ; and, how can the non-functioning eyes enquire into 'darkness', which word itself means 'absence of light'?"

The Sanskrit word 'andhakaara:' for 'darkness' is a very, very significant word and relevant here. 'Andhakaara:' means 'that which makes the eyes blind', derived as 'andham karothi ithi andhakaara:' |

So, what is the definition of darkness? Ans: "That which makes the eyes blind". It is a principle that 'blinds'. How can you probe the 'blinding' darkness, with the help of the eyes, because, the moment 'darkness' is there, eyes become blind and how can anyone enquire with blind eyes ? The contradiction is obvious. Therefore, we arrive at the conclusion that darkness cannot be enquired into, in the absence of lights.

And, based on this observation, assume that someone reasons: "Eyes are blinded because of darkness / absence of light. With blinded eyes, I am not able to probe into darkness. So, let me bring lights, so that with the arrival of lights, eyes will start functioning and with functioning eyes, I will probe into darkness". But, he will find to his dismay, that, the moment any light is brought in, darkness goes away and is not there at all, for any enquiry.

To consolidate: (i) Darkness is available for 'experience' in the absence of light. (ii) Darkness is removable by bringing in light and, therefore, in the presence of light. (iii) But, darkness cannot be probed into, either in the absence of light or in the presence of light. Therefore, the statement 'vichaaram na sahathe' can be applied to darkness also.

The next point is: Just as moolaavidhyaa is sadhasadbhyaam anirvachaneeyam, andhakaara: is also sadhasadbhyaam anirvachaneeyam. You can never say it is existent or non-existent. You cannot say darkness is a non-existent entity, though, of course, tharkaa philosophers hold this view. The tharkaa philosophers define darkness as 'absence of light'; and, they say it is 'abhaava roopam'. But, though Vedhaanthaa also accepts that 'darkness is absence of light', Vedhaanthaa says 'darkness cannot be categorized into abhaava roopam'. Why not?

(Swamiji remarks: We have not discussed this topic in any other context earlier. Naishkarmya Siddhi has given us the opportunity / necessity to discuss the topic).

To continue with the discussion on darkness: You cannot say darkness is abhaava roopam or nothingness or void because, darkness seems to have several functions. What are the different functions of darkness?

Darkness envelopes / covers objects and makes them invisible. Expressed in Sanskrit: "Andhakaarena aavruttha padhaartha: dhrashtum na sakhyathe". Since andhakaaraa, thus, covers objects, this 'concealing' andhakaaraa cannot be a non-existent entity, because a non-existent thing cannot 'conceal'. Aavara thathvaath, 'darkness' cannot be abhaava: | The 'concealing' is one function of darkness.

Secondly, andhakaaraa or darkness obstructs one's eyes from perceiving the object; i.e., the second function of andhakaaraa is 'obstructing vision'. And, an obstructing factor also cannot be a non-existent factor, because, obviously, a non-existent entity cannot obstruct. How can a non-existent entity do the act of 'obstructing'? Andhakaaraa / darkness covers the object and it obstructs my vision. The 'obstruction of vision' is another function of darkness.

Apart from this reason, namely, the two 'functions of darkness', there is one more reason, as to why darkness cannot be considered abhaavaroopam. The reason is this:

When light comes, andhakaaraa goes away; whatever goes away cannot be abhaavaroopam, because, obviously, an abhaava padhartha cannot come or go.

To consolidate: darkness covers; darkness obstructs; darkness departs; a covering, an obstructing, a departing darkness cannot be abhaavaroopam or non-existent.

Then, can you say: "Therefore, 'darkness' is bhaava roopam; that, 'darkness' is a positive, material substance?" That also is not possible, because, if it is a material substance, when the light comes on, you must see the 'departing' darkness 'going' somewhere. We do not find it 'going' to some place. Alternately, if 'darkness' is considered 'destroyed', you do not also see any material remains / avasham of darkness. When an object is destroyed, you must be able to see the material of which it is made; for example, when a pot is destroyed, there is the material of potsherds, dust etc. But, when darkness is eliminated, you do not see bits of any material, that goes to make darkness. Therefore, you cannot call darkness bhaavaroopam, since it disappears into 'nothingness', when the light comes. A bhaava padhartha can never disappear into 'nothingness'. Andhakaaraa disappears into nothingness, when the light comes. Therefore, you cannot call it bhaava padhartham.

Therefore, the conclusion is: "andhakaara: bhaava roopam vaa abhaavaroopam vaa bhaavaabhavaabhyaam anirvachaneeyam". You cannot define darkness, in the form of positive entity or in the form of negative entity.

Similarly, moolaavidhyaa is also anirvachaneeyam. That is said here (in verse 66) , as "thama: yadvath divaakaram na sahathe" – " just as the nocturnal darkness cannot stand the arrival of sunlight for 'probing'", indicating, "similarly moolaavidhyaa cannot stand the arrival of pramaanam for 'probing'. "Therefore, do not ask too many questions about moolaavidhyaa" advises Sureswaraacharya.

As stated earlier, this is not only true with reference to moolaavidhyaa, but, is true about any other avidhyaa also, such as, ignorance of subjects like Physics, of languages and of any other ignorance. We 'experience' / we are aware of, the ignorance of Physics / Chemistry etc. But, if you try to probe into "what is that ignorance?", that 'ignorance' becomes a mystery. You just learn Physics and remove the ignorance of Physics. Do not ask questions as to what exactly is that ignorance. Do not ask questions such as "Is it bhaava: vaa abhaava: vaa?" (Swamiji says, in a lighter vein: "We have never been asking such questions. But, when Sureswaraacharya comes and tells us 'do not ask questions', we wake up to such doubts and get curious").

Reverting to the text:

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 67:

तस्याः खल्वस्याः अविध्यायाः भ्रान्तेः सम्यग्ज्ञानोत्पत्तिद्वारेण निवृत्तिः।

This illusion of the nature of nescience is put an end to, by the rise of perfect knowledge.

Moolaavidhyaa cannot be enquired into or probed into. We can only work for the elimination of moolaavidhyaa. And, we have to work for the elimination of moolaavidhyaa, because it is the cause of samsaraa. There are so many other forms of ignorance, which we need not eliminate. We do not know so many languages. We do not know many subjects – social or scientific. We can choose not to put in effort to remove such 'ignorance-s'. We hear that many corrupt acts are being indulged in, by responsible and powerful political leaders; but, we are not aware of the details. In fact, in such areas, 'ignorance is bliss'. And, if moolaavidhyaa also had been bliss, we need not work to eliminate it. But, since moolaavidhyaa is a problem, instead of being 'bliss', we have to eliminate it; we have to eliminate it, without enquiring into it. How to do it? Sureswaraacharya says:

ॐ निवृत्ति : - The removal / elimination

ॐ तस्या : अस्याः अविध्याया : - of that moolaavidhya, (which was described in the previous slokaa)

ॐ भ्रान्तेः - which moolaavidhya is otherwise called bhraanthi: ,

The Aachaaryaa calls moolaavidhya as bhraanthi: , in this context. Normally, bhraanthi: is avidhya kaaryam. But, in this context, he is using the word bhraanthi: for avidhya itself. "kaarya sabdha: kaaranaarthe upayuthyathe jahathi lakshanayaa".

ॐ सम्यग्ज्ञान उत्पत्तिद्वारेण खलु (भवति) - is possible only by the rise of right knowledge.

'Samyag jnaanam' means 'right knowledge'. What should that 'right knowledge' be about ? Ans: "Since moolaavidhya is about aathmaa, samyag jnaanam also must be about aathmaa only". What type of aathmaa? Ans: "sajaatheeya- vijaatheeya- svagatha-bedha rahitha aathmaa". Through what does that jnaanam come? Ans: "Through mahaa vaakya pramaanam alone". Therefore the conclusion / advice: "Do not avoid mahaa vaakyam". That is said here, in the verse that follows.

Chapter III: Verse 67

बुभुत्सोच्छेदिनी चास्य सदसीत्यादिना दृढम् ।

प्रतीचि प्रतिपत्ति : स्यान्नासौ मानान्तराद्भवेत् ॥ ६७ ॥

Concerning the inmost Self, knowledge arises firmly from the text "Thou art that Being", which extinguishes all further enquiry. This knowledge cannot come from other sources of knowledge.

ॐ 'सत् असि' इत्यादिना (महा वाक्येन) - With the help of the mahaa vaakyam such as 'sath asi' etc.,

'Sath asi' is another expression for 'thath thvam asi'. In the statement 'thath thvam asi', the word 'thath' means 'that'. The word 'that' is a pronoun. And, what is that pronoun standing for here? To answer this question, we have to look into the context of the statement, in the sixth chapter, of the Chaandhogyha Upanishad. The relevant teaching starts with the statement "sath eva soumya idham agra aaseeth" (VI.2.1) - "O good looking one! In the beginning, this was Existence alone". Going through the teaching, we will find, that, the pronoun 'Thath' stands for this noun 'sath', 'Pure Existence'. And, therefore, Sureswarachaaryaa replaces the word thath, by the 'pure Existence' / 'sath'. He also drops the word 'thvam', because, since the verb 'asi' is 'second person singular', thvam need not even be said, i.e. since, the verb is second person singular, the subject is understood, as 'you'. So, he eliminates the word 'thvam', considering it as redundant. In other words, the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi', shortened, is 'sadhasi'.

ॐ अस्य - for this student,

ॐ प्रतिपत्तिः स्यात् - the right knowledge / samyak jnaanam arises

'prathipatthi:' means 'samyak jnaanam' / 'right knowledge'. What is this 'right knowledge' about?

ॐ प्रतीचि - with regard to prathyak aathmaa / the inner Self,

'Prathyak' means 'inner self'. 'Pratheechi' is the saphthami vibhakthi of 'prathyak', and means 'with regard to the aathmaa'. And, what type of knowledge is it?

ॐ बुभुत्स्सा उच्छेदिनी - which 'knowledge' extinguishes the desire for self- knowledge,

It is the knowledge which fulfills the desire for self- knowledge. How long does the desire for any knowledge continue? Ans: "Naturally, only till that knowledge is achieved". The moment one gets any particular knowledge, desire for that particular knowledge goes away. Therefore, it can be also said, that, 'knowledge' is that which destroys the 'desire for knowledge'. This is similar to claiming "eating is that which destroys the desire for eating, because the moment one does the 'eating job', the desire for eating goes away". Therefore, jnaanam is called jignyaasaa nivarthakam / the eliminator of the 'hunger for knowledge'. 'Knowledge' will eliminate the 'hunger for knowledge'. Sureswaraachaaryaa, therefore, calls it 'bhubhuthsocchedhinee'. 'Bhubhuthsaa' means 'hunger / thirst / yearning for knowledge'. 'Ucchedhinee' means 'remover/ eliminator'.

Why does Sureswarachaaryaa use this expression 'bhubhuthsocchedhinee'? That expression is also important. In the '10th man story', the 10th man negated all the other nine people, by counting "this is number one. number two. number three.number four." etc. And, when he said 'number one', there was a 'nethi' taking place. What was that 'nethi'? When he said 'this is number one', he also meant 'it is not number ten / dhasama: na | Similarly, 'this is no. two' also meant 'dhasama: na | 'This is number three' meant 'dhasama: na | Thus, he had been saying 'dhasama: na, dhasama: na, dhasama: na' or 'nethi, nethi, nethi'. After he had completed all the nine, he got a 'hunger for knowledge'. What was that 'hunger'?

Ans: "If dhasama: is none of them, who is the dhasama: / dhasama: ka:"? When, thus, 'hunger for dhasama jnaanam' was there for the dhasama purusha:, the passer-by came and pointed out to him 'thath thvam asi', because of which statement, the dhasamaa's dhasama jignyaasaa subsided.

Similarly, in Vedhaanthaa, by anvaya vyathirekha vicharaa, the aspirant negates everything in creation, as 'changing matter'. Having negated everything as 'changing matter', he gets the curiosity to know what is that changeless Brahman. He wonders: "If everything has been negated as changing matter - the world has been negated, body has been negated, mind has been negated, thoughts have been negated, everything 'experienced' is 'changing matter' - is there a changeless principle? If there is, what is that changeless principle? " In other words, he gets Brahma Jignyaasaa and when the guru comes and tells him: "Do not 'look for' the changeless Brahman. The more you 'look for' Brahman, the more you are denying Brahman. The very 'looking for' is denial. Therefore, stop 'looking for', by claiming "I', the questioner am the changeless Brahman". When the aspirant understands the message properly, his 'hunger' to know Brahman ends. That is indicated by his breaking into music, singing "Ha vu ha vu ha vu aham annam aham annam aham annam aham annaadho aham annaadho aham annaadha:" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Bhruvuvalli) - "Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful. I am the food. I am the food. I am the food. I am the food-eater. I am the food-eater. I am the food-eater". His music indicates his 'hunger nivrutthi:' / Thus, it is 'knowledge' which satiates the 'desire for knowledge'. And, hence the adjective 'bubhuthocchedhinee' to 'prathipatthi:' / the 'right knowledge'.

And, what type of knowledge will it be?

ॐ दृढम् - and, which knowledge is 'firm'.

The knowledge will be firm knowledge, because there is no other pramaanam to challenge / negate this knowledge. All other *pramaanam-*s are about 'changing matter'. In contrast, the knowledge which the seeker gets from the mahaa vaakya pramaanam is about the 'changeless' observer. Since other pramaanam-s can and do deal with anaathmaa only and thathvamasī deals with aathmaa, the other pramaanam-s cannot challenge or negate this knowledge. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says 'dhrudam syaath'. 'Dhrudam' is adverbial.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 68:

कथं पुनर्वाक्यं प्रतिपादयत्येवेति चेद् द्रष्टान्तोक्तिः ।

How is it to be made out that the text positively beings about this knowledge? To explain this, an analogy is advanced.

ॐ "कथं पुनः - "How indeed

ॐ वाक्यं प्रतिपादयति एव " - the mahaa vaakyam definitely / doubtlessly produces knowledge?"

'Prathipaadhayathi' means 'reveals'; 'eva' means 'definitely / necessarily'

ॐ इति चेद् - If somebody asks this question,

ॐ द्रष्टान्त उक्तिः : - an example is given (to answer the question).

The dhasama dhrustaantha: / '10th man' example is extended here.

The answer is (in Swamiji's own words): "A pramaanam will produce knowledge, whether you like or not. There is no question of your 'will' involved here. When the eyes are open and you are all sitting in front of me, whether I like to perceive you or not is not the criterion; the perception takes place of its own accord. When, in the neighborhood, the loudspeaker is blaring, whether you like or not, that movie song will reach your ears; and, if it is a Tamil song, and you are conversant with Tamil, you cannot say 'I do not want to know the meaning', because sabdha is also a pramaanam, and whether you want to know the meaning or not, the meaning keeps on striking. This is because the function of the word is to generate the knowledge of the meaning. As long as the word does not fall in your ears, you are saved; but, once it has fallen, you understand the meaning of that, whether you want to know or not. Sabhdhaa is a pramaanam; and, a pramaanam is vasthu thanthram; it is not karthruthanthram. The functioning of a pramaanam does not depend upon the will of the pramaathaa. Therefore, when the mahaa vaakyam says 'you are That', the message "I am Brahman can never be avoided".

Chapter III: Verse 68

जिज्ञासोर्दशमं यद्वन्नवातिक्रम्य ताम्यतः ।

त्वमेव दशमोऽसीति कुर्यादेवं प्रमां वचः ॥६८ ॥

To one who, after counting nine persons, torments himself searching for the tenth man, the proposition 'you are yourself the tenth man' does bring correct understanding.

ॐ यद्वत् - As in the case of the 10th man example / dhasama dhrushtaanthaa,

ॐ (दसम) जिज्ञासोः - for the '10th man', who is desirous of knowing the 10th man,

He is 'dhasama jignyaasu: dhasama:' i.e. he is 'the 10th person who has the hunger to know the 10th person' (who, he does not know, is himself). Not only he has got this desire, he has already eliminated every other person. Every other person has been eliminated by him as " na ayam dhasama:, na ayam dhasama:, na ayam dhasama:" | As pointed out earlier, when he counts " ayam prathama:", it also means " na ayam dhasama:" / And, , when all the people are thus eliminated, there is only one person not eliminated, namely himself. Once he has eliminated all the other nine, who is left behind is only himself, the person who is doing the counting. Therefore, there is not even a scope for misunderstanding the situation. It is the most ideal situation for 'understanding'. The '10th man' wants to know the '10th man; he is very much there, without having been counted and eliminated. The other nine have been eliminated by counting. Therefore, the job of the passer-by, in pointing out 'you are the 10th person', has become very simple.

ॐ नव अतिक्रम्य - having already completed counting the nine,

'nava athikramya' literally means 'having crossed the nine'. 'Having crossed nine' means, 'having completed counting nine'

And, what does the counting indicate? Ans: It indicates 'Nethi nethi'. Everyone else has been negated and nobody else is there, except the person counting.

ॐ ताम्यतः - and mentally distressed,

The 10th man is distressed, because he has been struggling to find out the 10th man. The 'distress' indicates the samsaara. And, in a similar manner, the ill-informed aspirant also mistakenly takes to meditation looking for Brahma anubhavaa, which anubhavaa, unfortunately, he will never get. This is because Brahman is never an object of experience. But, this ill-informed aspirant 'yearns' for Brahma anubhavam and is, therefore, 'stressed' / 'mentally tired' / சோர்ந்து இருக்கிறான்' / 'தளர்ந்து இருக்கிறான்'.

In the example, as a last desperate attempt, dhasama: appeals to the passer-by, to help him find the dhasama: | In the same manner, the vedhaanthic aspirant also surrenders to the guru and pleads "Hey Guro ! I have fallen into the sea of the world. Save me. I am burning in the blaze of the samsaara forest, which no man can extinguish. (Dhurvaara samsaara daavaagni thaptham dhodhooyamaanam dhuradhrishtavaathai: bheetham prapannam paripaahi mruthyo: saranyam anyath yath aham na jaane) Kindly reveal to me as to how I can cross this ocean of samsaara, what should be my goal and the path I should take". (Viveka choodaamani – portions from verses 35, 36 and 40).

ॐ 'त्वं एव दशमः असि' इति वचः - the statement 'you are yourself the tenth man'

In the example, the passer-by tells the dhasama: "you are the 10th man". The only unobservable person is the observer. The passer-by says "You, the counting person are the '10th man'. Why cannot you claim it right now?" In the same manner, the guru, out of compassion for the student, who has surrendered to him, says: "O Soumya! dear disciple ! Please listen to me with all attention. Do not be 'at tension'. Have attention" and proceeds to elaborate on the message of the mahaa vaakyam.

ॐ प्रमां कुर्यात् - will definitely generate irrefutable knowledge (in the mind of the 10th man).

The words of the passer-by will definitely produce doubtless and irrefutable knowledge in the dhasama:, because the dhasama: knows the language spoken and he hears the spoken word. As mentioned earlier, when, through a blaring loudspeaker a Tamil song reaches and falls in the ears of a person knowing the language of Tamil, whether he wants it or not, the meaning is going to strike him. Similarly, if the 10th man has been addressed by the passer-by, in a language he knows, the realization "I am the 10th man" will helplessly arise. And, there can be no doubt also, because all the others have been eliminated. The only one left behind is the dhasama: |

Similarly, the Vedhaanthic student has eliminated everything through 'anvaya vyathirekhaa'. The only left behind is, 'I', the unobservable. Therefore, in his case also, the mahaa vaakyam pramaam kuryaath – the mahaa vaakyam has to generate knowledge. The Aachaaryaa conveys this by using the term 'evam':

ॐ एवं - In the same manner,

The sentence is incomplete and has to be completed by the student, as "evam mahaa vaakyam api pramaam kuryaath". He has to understand, that, " Similar to the dhasama: in the dhrushtaantaa, the Vedhaanthic student also , having completed anvaya vyathirekhaa / having completed nethi nethi / when he remains as Chith, Pure Consciousness, should understand that 'Sadeva chith. Chidheva sath' from the Upanishad, which says 'the Sath you are looking for, happens to be you, the Chith,' In the Upadesa Saahasri, Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa declares : "Satthayaa hi chith chitthaayaa hi aham" |

Sambhandha gadhyam to verses 69 & 70 :

सा च तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्यश्रवणजा प्रमोत्पन्नत्वादेव । न च नैवमिति प्रत्ययान्तरं जायते ।

तदेतदृष्टान्तेन प्रतिपादयति ।

Now this knowledge arising from 'That thou art' is valid merely by virtue of its origination. No knowledge arises afterwards to the effect 'It is not so'. This is explained through the analogy.

This is an important portion.

ॐ सा च - That knowledge

ॐ वाक्य श्रवणजा - which is born out of the Veda vaakyam,

'Ja' means 'born out of'; 'sravanam' means 'hearing'; 'vaakyam' means 'mahaa vaakyam', which is 'apourusheya pramaanam'. That knowledge itself i.e. the knowledge that rises in sravanam, is the 'final' knowledge. There is no question of getting a separate knowledge in meditation or by any other separate experience. There is no further corroborating experience required or possible. This knowledge is the final liberating aparokshajnaanam. This is a very, very important doctrine of advaita vedhaanthalaa. Sureswaraacharya also does not accept 'knowledge taking place later in meditation'. He says mahaa vaakyam alone is pramaanam and if this pramaanam does not give knowledge, nothing else can. The aspirant may do meditation for some other purpose, for instance, 'to remove the old habitual thinking', 'for a tranquil mindset' etc. That is a different thing. If the sravanam sounds inefficient, it is because the mind is not prepared. Then the seeker can do meditation to prepare the mind, and, then come back to sravanam. But, meditation is never meant for jnaana uthpathi. The final liberating knowledge has to come through proper sravanam only. At the cost of repetition, it has to be stressed that this is a very, very important view of Vedhaanthalaa, which Sureswaraacharya highlights here.

ॐ तत्त्वमस्यादि - like 'thath thvam asi' etc.,

ॐ प्रमा - is the final knowledge,

And, why do we call it 'final knowledge'?

ॐ उपपन्नत्वात् एव - because that 'understanding' has taken place in the mind itself.

The example given earlier, viz. that, 'a blaring Tamil song, falling in the ears of a person conversant with Tamil, will be understood by the person, even without his will' is to be recollected here. The 'understanding' of the meaning of the song takes place 'helplessly'. Similarly, in the context of the student listening to the mahaa vaakyam, the 'understanding' "I", the Consciousness principle, which is different from anna mayaa, praana mayaa etc. am the Existence principle, which is in and through the whole universe" takes place.

This understanding is final liberating knowledge. This understanding need not be and cannot be proved / corroborated / substantiated / revalidated by any other pramaanam.

And, why is it, that, it need not be validated by any other pramaanam? Ans: "Because of two reasons. The first reason is that Veda pramaanam is a primary pramaanam like the sense organs; by definition, a primary pramaanam produces a knowledge which is final and which cannot be challenged by any other pramaanam. The five sense organs are 'primary' pramaanam-s. What the eyes reveal, the ears cannot prove or disprove; what the ears reveal, the nose cannot prove or disprove and so on. So also, what the Veda pramaanam / apourusheya pramaanam reveals, no other pramaanam can prove or disprove. Veda pramaanam can be verily considered as the 6th sense organ. The second reason is that the other pramaanam-s like prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa etc., cannot prove disprove the mahaa vakyam, because they can function only in the field of anaathmaa".

Therefore, apoureshaya pramaanathvaath, the mahaa vaakyam has bestowed the seeker with a valid knowledge / an irrefutable fact.

This is true with regard to Bhagavaan also. We have accepted Isvara as a fact, based on Veda pramaanam only. There is no other pramaanam, which has proved God. Science has not proved; prathyaksham has not proved; anumaanam has not proved. Even though God has never been substantiated by any other pramaanam, God is a fact for us, revealed by Veda pramaanam. No other pramaanam has proved the existence of God and we, Vaidikhaa-s, do not expect them to or wait for their proof also. If at all, a Vaidhikaa will say "Let science disprove God; thereafter, I will reject God. In fact, the onus is not on the Veda; the onus is on Science. Until convincingly disproved, Bhagavaan is a fact for me".

Similarly, 'aham Brahma asmi' is a fact for an Advaitha Vedhaanthin until it is disproved by any other pramaanam; and, he is confident that no other pramaanam can disprove this fact. Why not? Ans: "Because they do not even have access to such subtle topics, exactly like they have no access to the existence or otherwise of Bhagavaan".

Swamiji commenced the class with some remarks, as follow (in his own words):

"Before entering into this portion I would like to clarify one or two points. The mithyaa concept of advaitam is a concept unique to advaitam only. It is not there, in any of the other systems of philosophy. Mithyaa is an unique concept and the definition of mithyaa is 'sadh asadbhyaam anirvachaneeyam' meaning 'that which cannot be clearly categorized as sath / existent and that which cannot be clearly categorized as asath / non-existent also'. This mysterious entity, which cannot be categorized, is called mithyaa. You cannot say it is bhaava roopam ; you cannot say it is abhaava roopam also. It is 'Bhaava abhaavaabhyaam anirvacheeniyam / vilakshanam'.

"And, because of this unique concept, we (the Advaitin-s) face certain difficulties, while handling other systems of philosophy. When they ask questions, we have to give an answer which they can understand; and, therefore, in our answer, we should not bring in the concept of mithyaa, because the word mithyaa is not there in their systems of philosophy.

"Therefore, advaitam has a double layer approach. For all questions, it gives one answer which is meant for the common people, as well as people of other systems of philosophy, i.e. for those who do not understand the concept of mithyaa ; and, after answering them, advaitaa calls the Advaitic students and says that, the answer given is only for others and there is a special answer for us, the Advaitin-s.

"Thus, we have got a temporary, provisional answer for people other than Advaitic students, and a special answer for the Advaitin-s "And, you should learn to understand both answers clearly.

"An example for this fact (that there are two separate answers): There is a big discussion in Brahma soothraa-s, in the entire first chapter, where, the question raised, is, whether jagath kaaranam is pradhaanam / the matter, or the jagath kaaranam is Brahman. Is the cause of the universe pradhaanam (pradhaanam means prakruthi or matter) or is the jagath kaaranam Brahman? And, in the entire first chapter, Vyaasaachaaryaa vehemently refutes the saamkhyaa philosopher, who claims prakruthi / matter is jagath kaaranam. He refutes that view and establishes that Brahman, the chethana thathvam, is jagath kaaranam, by quoting sruthi pramaanam, yukthi pramaanam and anubhava pramaanam. Nearly hundred and thirty four soothraa-s are dedicated to this topic and it is established by him, that Brahman, the chethana thathvam alone is jagath kaaranam and matter is not jagath kaaranam. A similar answer is given to the naiyaayikaa (Nyaayaa philosopher) also.

"The Nyaayaa philosopher says paramaanu is jagath kaaranam. Vyaasaachaaryaa refutes this 'paramaanu kaarana vaadhaa' also and establishes that Brahman is jagath kaaranam. Thus, the very beginning of Brahma Soothraa, is the view 'Brahman is the cause of the universe'. And, in the second chapter also, Vyaasaachaaryaa asserts that Brahman is jagath kaaranam and not matter.

"And, once this answer is given and our students are satisfied that saamkhyaa's pradhaanam and naiyaayikaa's paramaanu are both refuted, the teacher calls the students quietly to his gurukulam and whispers in their ears 'No doubt we said Brahman is kaaranam ; but, that is the general, provisional answer. The real answer is, 'Brahman is kaarya-kaarana-vilakshanam; Brahman is neither kaaryam nor kaaranam. 'Na jaayathe mriyathe vaa vipaschith naayam kuthaschinna bhabhoova kaschith (Katopanishad I.2.18) – 'This omniscient one does not originate or die. It did not originate from anything. It did not become anything'.

"In Maandookya Kaarika also, Goudapaadhaachaarya establishes that the thureeyam Brahman is neither kaaryam nor kaaranam.

"So, if somebody asks 'Is Brahman kaaranam or akaaranam?', what is our answer? It is a two-level answer. To the world and to all other systems of philosophy, we say, 'Brahman is kaaranam'. Once you (the Advaitic student) come near me, what will I whisper? Ans: 'Brahman is not kaaranam'.

"Then, naturally, the question 'how did the world come?' is raised. Then, I introduce the word mithyaa and answer that the world is mithyaa; that, the world is only seemingly existent / i.e., it is as good as non-existent and therefore, it does not require any kaaranam at all. Thus, we have two answers (i) Brahman is kaaranam and (ii) Brahman is not kaaranam.

"Similarly, if somebody asks 'what is mokshaa?', again, we have got two answers. The most popular answer is 'punar janma nivrutthi / 'freedom from re-birth'. This is the definition of mokshaa, which all the other dharsanam-s give; the advaitin also joins them and says 'punarjanma nivrutthi: is mokshaa'. And, once they all have been told so, the Advaitic Aacharya quietly calls his students and tells them 'There is no question of even eka janmaa. Where is the question of punar-janmaa? Understand that you never had any janmaa at any time. That 'understanding' alone is the real mokshaa. The other mokshaa is a temporary, provisional answer given, assuming the world is sathyam. Once the world is falsified, the talk about punar janmaa has no relevance. Punar janmaa is relevant, as long world comes under sathyam category. Once mithyaa is assimilated, what is mokshaa? Ans: The knowledge 'Mithyaa jagath adhishtaanam' is alone mokshaa.

"Thus, 'Brahman is kaaranam' is one answer. 'Brahman is akaaranam' is the second answer. 'Mokshaa is punarjanma nivrutthi' is the first answer.. 'Mokshaa is svaroopa avasthaanam' is the second answer.

"What I want to say is that Advaita Vedhaantha Aacharya-s have got two tier answers for many questions / doubts in philosophy.

"Similarly, very often, the question 'Does darkness come under bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam?' is raised. To this question also, we give two-tier answers.

"Lay people and non-advaitin-s have only two categories available - bhaavaa and abhaavaa; therefore, when we are discussing this topic with such people, our answer should be one of these two only. And, therefore, our first-level answer is: 'Andhakaara: bhaava roopam'. This is our first layer answer. This answer is given mainly to the naiyaayikaa. The naiyaayikaa says 'andhakaaraa is abhaava roopam'. To him, we say 'andhakaaraa is bhaava roopam'. And, once the naiyaayika is thus refuted, the Vedhaanthic teacher calls the Vedhaanthic student and says 'andhakaara: is not bhaava roopam'. Then, naturally, the student will ask the question 'If so, is it abhaavaroopam?' The teacher's answer will be: 'No, no; it is not abhaavaroopam also'. The Vedhaanthic teacher refutes abhaavaroopam also; bhaava roopam also. Then what is his answer? It is 'Bhaava abhaava vilakshanam'.

"So, if somebody asks me this question viz. 'Is andhakaaraa bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam?', I will ask a counter question, 'what type of student are you ?' For lay-people and for people of other systems of philosophy, I answer 'Andhakaaraa is bhaava roopam' and if the student is an Advaitic student, I will answer 'darkness is bhaava-abhaava-vilakshanam'.

"So also with Moolaavidhya. To the laypeople and people of other systems of philosophy, our answer will be 'moolaavidhya is bhaavaroopaa'. And, once they have been dismissed, then we will call the Advaitic student and tell him: 'moolaavidhya should not be bhaavaroopaa, because, if moolaavidhya is also bhaavaroopam and Brahman is also bhaavaroopam, there will be duality. Therefore, never say moolaavidhya is bhaava roopam'.

"Then, is it abhaava roopam? No, no; it is not abhaava roopam also. Then what is it? It is 'Bhaava abhaava vilakshanam'. Thus, to the questions "Is andakaaraa bhava roopam or abhaava roopam?' and 'Is moolaavidhya bhaavaroopam or abhaavaroopam?', the first layer answer is 'bhaavaroopam'; and, the real, final advaitic answer is 'bhaavaabhaava vilakshanam'.

"And, for this, viz., 'bhaavaabhaava vilakshanam'. we have a special idiom. In Vedhaantha saaraa, Sadhaanandhaa uses this idiom, which is 'yath kinchith bhaava roopam', adding an adjective 'yath kinchith' to 'bhaava roopam'.

"So, what does 'yath kinchith bhaava roopam' mean? Ans: 'Having some kind of an existence, which is bhaava abhaava vilakshanam, exactly similar to dreams'.

"If the question 'is dream bhaava roopam or abhaava roopam?' is asked, our answer is 'svapna: bhaava abhaava vilakshanam' or 'svapna: yath kinchith bhaava roopam' |

"Therefore, note this fact. In my classes also, I may sometimes say that moolaavidhya is 'bhaava roopam' and sometimes as 'bhaava abhaava vilakshnam'. I may do the same, with regard to 'darkness' and svapnaa also. Do not think I am confused ; it is not a result of my confusion; it is because of the conventional two layers of answers".

(Having made this detailed clarification, Swamiji referred to an 'omission' made by him, by oversight, in verse 67. He had not given the meaning of the fourth quarter of verse 67, which 'omission' had been subsequently pointed out by a student. Now, Swamiji 'rectifies' the 'omission').

Chapter III: Fourth quarter of Verse 67

नासौ मानान्तराद्भवेत् ।

This knowledge cannot come from other sources of knowledge.

ॐ असौ - This knowledge

'asau' means 'asau prathipatthi:' or 'this knowledge'. What is 'this knowledge'?

Ans: "'Jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eiykya-jnaanam' is, here, referred to, by the pronoun 'asau'.

ॐ न भवेत् - cannot arise

ॐ मान अन्तरात् - through any other pramaanam.

'maanam' means 'pramaanam'; 'maana antharam' means 'anyath maanam'. 'Maana antharam' or 'pramaana antharam' means 'other pramaanam-s, such as prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaana, arthaapathi, anupalabdhi, anubhava sabdhaa, karma kaanda sabdhaa etc. Even 'Veda karma kaanda sabdhaa' cannot give 'jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eiykya-jnaanam'. Only Vedhaantha mahaa vakyam can. Other than mahaa vaakyam, nothing else can give this knowledge.

Reverting to the sambhandha gadhyam portion of verses 69 and 70:

This is a very, very important portion, because, here, Sureswaraachaaryaa clearly says "direct knowledge or aparokshaa jnaanam takes place in sravanam itself and in sravanam only. Meditation is not the means of saakshaathkaaraa ; sravanam alone is saakshaathkaara kaaranam." We have to note that the Aachaaryaa is very firm on this view.

ॐ सा च - This understanding / prathipatthi:

ॐ तत्त्वमस्यादि वाक्य श्रवणजा - born out of the mahaa vaakyam like 'thaththvamas!'

ॐ प्रमा - is the final knowledge,

The word 'pramaa' means 'final knowledge' / 'direct knowledge' / 'aparoksha jnaanam'. No other separate mystic experience is required to corroborate or validate this knowledge. This understanding is saakshaathkaara: / pramaa. The student may get a doubt: "If it is so, what is the purpose of nidhidhyaasanam? Why is it prescribed for an aspirant?" Ans: "Nidhidhyaasanam is not meant for any new knowledge or any new experience; it is meant for internalization of this knowledge; more than that, meditation is meant for removing our habitual triangular format." That the triangular format does not go away easily, is our own personal experience. Whenever any problem crops up in mundane matters, we do not immediately switch over to the 'aham brahma asmi' jnaanam, to give us the strength to meet the problem. Instead, we rush to pray to Bhagavaan for immediate solution to the problem. This very fact, that we are rushing to Bhagavaan, indicates that we are refusing to drop the triangular format. 'Meditation' / 'nidhidhyaasanam' is meant for 'dropping' that format; not for any mystic experience or new knowledge. 'Knowledge' has to arise only through mahaa vaakyam. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya asserts: 'vaakya sravanajaa pramaa' – 'the understanding born out of mahaa vaakya sravanam is the final knowledge'.

And, why is it pramaa? The Aachaaryaa says:

ॐ उत्पन्नत्वात् एव - because the 'teaching' has been understood (by the aspirant).

On hearing the mahaa vaakyam from the guru, the disciples do say "Swamiji! We are 'understanding' (the import of the vaakyam)". That understanding alone is saakshaathkaara: | Other than that 'understanding', no other 'saakshaathkaaraa' exists. When it is Sureswaraacharya, the saakshaath sishyaa of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, who is emphasizing this 'uthpanaathvaadeva', the student can/ should have no hesitation in accepting this fact.

Sureswaraacharya further says that this knowledge born out of a valid source of knowledge, namely, the mahaa vaakyam, cannot be refuted in the form 'it is not so', by any other pramaanam.

It is our experience, that, any knowledge born out of a valid source of knowledge is initially accepted as final knowledge; but, only until it is refuted by some other source of knowledge. For instance, very often, people accept a scientific theory presented to them by a scientist, as final knowledge; they never question the theory, until another scientist arrives on the scene and proves the earlier theory as faulty.

The 'mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam' also, considered as 'final knowledge', may become invalid, if it is refuted / challenged by any other pramaanam. But, no other pramaanam can challenge this knowledge, the 'mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam'. Why not? Ans: "This has been explained earlier, by an analogy, namely, the human sense organs with different capabilities. For instance, once 'eyes' have revealed the colour of a particular object, 'ears' can never challenge that knowledge, for the simple and obvious reason, that, ears do not even have access to colours. How can ears challenge the knowledge produced by the eyes or how can eyes challenge knowledge produced by the ears, when their fields of action are entirely different ? Likewise, all pramaanam-s other than mahaa vaakyam deal only with matter and mahaa vaakyam alone deals with Consciousness. And, therefore, no other pramaanam can ever challenge this knowledge generated by mahaa vaakyam".

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

ॐ न च नैवमिति प्रत्ययान्तरं जायते - after 'aham brahma asmi jnaanam', another challenging knowledge never comes .

'Na evam' literally means 'it is not so' and, therefore, in this context, implies 'eiikyam is not true' ; 'ithi' means 'as/' 'in this form'; 'prathyayaanthram' means 'a contradictory knowledge'; 'na evam ithi prathyayaantharam' therefore, means 'a contradictory knowledge in the form 'eiikyam is not true"; 'na cha jaayathe' means 'is never produced'.

A knowledge negating advaitam is produced / can never be produced, by any other pramaanam, because no other pramaanam deals with Consciousness or Existence. Modern science is studying everything in creation except these two principles, viz., Consciousness and Existence. It does not study what Consciousness is or what Existence is. Other than these two, it studies everything else. How then can modern science challenge mahaa vaakyam? Proceeding:

ॐ तद् एतद् - This particular idea

While studying this portion, a diligent student has to revise an earlier portion in this same third chapter, verses 35 to 38. In these verses 35 to 38, this topic has been dealt with more elaborately by Sureswaraacharya, wherein, addressing the aspirants, he asked the questions: 'Why do you not accept 'aham Brahma asmi'? What stops you from accepting this fact?' He himself suggested four possible reasons and asked four questions 'Is it because of this (first) reason?' or 'Is it because of this (second) reason?' and so on. He suggested four possible reasons for an aspirant not accepting 'aham Brahma asmi'; but, pointed out, with irrefutable reasoning, that none of those four reasons could be valid. He concluded in these verses 34 to 38: "Therefore, you must be able to accept 'aham Brahma asmi'. Every diligent student should revise the portion (verses 34 to 38) repeatedly, because one's inability to enter binary format is only lack of faith in mahaa vaakyam. It is sheer lack of sraddhaa; if only one has sraddhaa in mahaa vaakyam, 'binary format' is the easiest and Sureswaraacharya asked the question 'Why don't you have that sraddhaa'?

ॐ प्रतिपादयति - is explained / clarified

ॐ द्रष्टान्तेन - through the 'tenth man' example.

Verse 69 – Chapter III:

दशमोऽसीति वाक्योत्था न धीरस्य विहन्यते ।

आदिमध्यावसानेषु न नवस्वस्य संशयः ॥ ६९ ॥

The understanding born out of the statement 'you are the tenth man' is not stultified. At no time, in the beginning, middle and end, is there any doubt that there are nine persons already.

Sureswaraacharya clarifies his statement "the knowledge arising from 'that thou art' is valid, merely by virtue of its origination and no knowledge arises afterwards to the effect 'it is not so' " by again resorting to the '10th man example'. The 10th man was deeply craving to know where the tenth man was. He had already counted the other nine members ; and, nobody else was in the area. The nine had already been negated by him as 'na dhasama: na dhasama:' | Why 'na dhasama:'? Ans: "He had said to himself 'ayam prathama: thasmaath na dhasama:' 'ayam dhvitheeya: thasmaath na dhasama:' and so on". Having thus confirmed 'this is the first; therefore, not the tenth; this is the second; and, therefore, not the 10th' etc., he wanted to know the tenth person. This 10th person, who was doing the 'counting', was very anxious to confirm that the 10th person was alive and had not drowned while crossing the river. The passer-by had assured him that the 10th man was alive. So, the 10th man was very curious to know the 10th man, since he had confirmed that none of the others was the 10th. The Vedhaanthic aspirant, who has completed the anvaya vyathirekha exercise (through which, he gets the conviction, that he is not his body, mind, senses or intellect) is in a similar ideal situation. His situation is ideal for mahaa vaakyam. In the example, the 10th man is there; he is not any one of the others and nobody else is there and the passer-by says 'dhasama: asthi' and also 'sa: dhasama: thvam asi'; and when the 10th man listens to that vaakyam, will it not produce the knowledge? Definitely it will produce the knowledge and that knowledge can also be never challenged by later perception. Imagine when the teaching 'thvam dhasamosi' is done, the 10th man closes his eyes for a moment and he internalizes with relief and tells himself "I thought 'dhasama: asthi' | Now, I know 'dhasama: asthi' is not the correct expression. 'dhasama: asmi' is the correct expression". When he says this, he closes his eyes with absolute relaxation. After internalizing this idea, when he looks at the nine people again, will he get the doubt again 'Where is the 10th man?' Ans: "No. No further doubt will arise, because valid knowledge is never challenged by any later knowledge that one may gather". Once again he may count 'ayam prathama'; 'ayam dhvitheeya.' etc. but will conclude with 'aham dhasama.'|

Likewise, in the context of the Vedhaanthic student, the guru had already talked about the existence of Brahman (similar to the passer-by's assurance that the tenth man is alive / 'Dhasama; asthi'). The resultant 'understanding' is called 'asthi ithi buddhi' by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Katopanishad bhaahsyam. The guru follows it up by the exhortation 'thath (Brahman) thvam asi'| Just like the 10th man in the example, the Vedhaanthic aspirant also, after understanding 'aham Brahma asmi', need not sit in meditation permanently . He can look at the world and continue to interact with the world. But 'world perception' can never challenge his knowledge, since (this has already been mentioned many times; but, since important, is repeated once again): "valid knowledge born out of a valid source of knowledge, cannot be challenged by even an opposite experience".

In earlier contexts, several analogies were given for this fact. The analogies are recollected and re-presented below:

Analogy (1): What is our valid knowledge with regard to the movement of the earth? Is earth stationery or 'moving'? Ans: We have unshaken / unshakable knowledge that earth is moving around on its own axis and also going around the sun. Scientists and astronomers say, that, at times, there are also minor changes caused by severe earthquakes to the manner in which the movements of the earth take place, as a consequence of which, 'days' are shortened. This means that, not only is there 'movement of the earth', also that 'movement of the earth' is affected by natural phenomena. We learn all these, through scientific and astronomical studies. But, what is our 'experience'? In contrast to our 'knowledge', our 'experience' is a 'stationery' earth. But, this 'experience' never challenges our 'knowledge' that earth is violently moving around its axis and also around the sun.

Analogy (2): Similarly, we know that it is not the sun that moves from East to West; but, it is the earth which is rotating from West to East. We know, therefore, that 'sunrise' is a myth and the term 'sunrise' is a misnomer. Still, we 'experience' sunrise and in fact, we conduct tours to go to places like Kanyaakumari, to enjoy the 'sunrise'. But, the 'experience' of 'sunrise' cannot challenge the 'knowledge' that sun does not 'rise' or 'set'.

Analogy (3): We experience the waters of the ocean as 'blue' waters. On the other hand, our 'knowledge' is, that, 'water is colourless'. And, that knowledge is never challenged by 'experience' of the 'blue waters'.

Analogy (4): So also, the 'experience' of 'blue skies' cannot challenge our firm knowledge that 'skies' are also colourless.

Analogy (5): What about stars? We 'experience' very 'small' stars. There is even a nursery rhyme running 'twinkle, twinkle little star'. But, the experience of the 'little' star does not challenge our knowledge that stars are really huge in size, quite a few of them even bigger than 'our' sun.

As in the above mundane examples, the knowledge "I am non-dual Brahman / advaita Brahman asmi" is born out of valid Vedhaantha pramaanam. Sruthi declares Brahman as 'ekam eva adhvitheeyam' (Chaandogya Upanishad – VI.2.1) and also that there is nothing else except Brahman 'neha naanaasthi kimchana' (Katopanishad – II.1.11). This advaita 'jnaanam' can never be challenged by dvaita 'anubhavaa'. Let it be very clear, that, by any amount of 'perception of duality', an Advaitin is never disturbed. He will stand firm in his conviction, that, 'experience' does not prove reality, just as the 'experience' of the 'rise' of the sun and the 'experience' of the 'smallness' of the stars, do not prove the 'realities', namely, that the sun actually does not 'rise' or 'set' and that the stars, in fact, are huge and not small. A valid Pramaanam alone will have to prove reality. And, through a valid pramaanam, namely, the mahaa vaakyam, the Advaitin has got his knowledge. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says 'valid knowledge is never challenged'.

ॐ अस्य धी : - The jnaanam of this 10th man,

The term 'dheerasya' appears to be shashti eka vachanam of the noun dheera:; but, it is not so. It is to be split as 'dhee: + asya' and interpreted as 'asya dhee:'/ 'his knowledge'.

What is that 'jnaanam' of the 10th man? Ans: 'aham dhasama: asmi' ithi jnaanam. What is that knowledge born out of?

ॐ 'दसम : असि' इति वाक्य उत्था - born out of the pramaana vaakyam 'thvam dhasama: asi' (the statement 'you are the 10th man'),

'Dhasama: asi' is equivalent to the mahaa vaakyam and the passer-by is equivalent to the Vedhaanthic guru.

ॐ न विहन्यते - is never obstructed / challenged;

In a similar manner, advaita is never disturbed by any other pramaanam. Not even by any amount of advancement in modern science. Let modern science advance still more; the Advaitin is not disturbed. This is because he is not negating the experience of the world. His teaching is "advaitam is the truth, in spite of dvaita anubhavaa". The Advaitin never questions 'dvaita anubhavaa'.

ॐ आदि मध्य अवसानेषु - in all the three periods of time,

What are the 'three' periods of time? Ans: (i) ajnaana kaalam, (ii) jnaana kaalam and (iii) jnaana anthara kaalam / (i) the period of ignorance (ii) the time when he gets the knowledge and (iii) the period after acquiring the knowledge.

ॐ अस्य नवसु संशयः न (अस्ति) - for him, there is no doubt regarding the status of the other nine people.

The 10th man does not have any doubt regarding the status of the other nine people. And, what is their status? Ans: The common status of all of them is dhasama bhinnathvam / not being the 10th man. None of them is the dhasama: | The 10th man knows this, without any doubt. Only if and when, at any time, he looks upon any one of the others as dhasama:, there will be a problem. His dhasamathvam will be challenged. But, during all the three periods of time, he knows the others as prathama:, dvitheeya: etc. and also as na dhasama: / that, none of them is dhasama: | Then, who is dhasama: ? Ans: (The 10th man can claim) I and I alone.

Similarly, in the Vedhaanthic context, everything that I experience is matter; and there is a Consciousness in the creation; there is something called Consciousness. (How can you say, that, there is something called Consciousness? Ans: "Otherwise one cannot even talk about matter").

And, if there is something called Consciousness, it can only be 'I' the 'experiencer'; i.e., "Other than 'I', the 'experiencer', no other conscious principle is possible, because, whatever I experience happens to be matter".

To repeat: World is matter. All our bodies are matter. All our minds are matter. And, if everything that is experienced is matter and Consciousness exists, that Consciousness has to be 'I' myself only. Where is any difficulty in claiming that?

The '10th man example' makes it easier to understand this fact. Sureswaraacharya implies this by stressing "aadhi madhya avasaaneshu navasu (nava puruhseshu) samsaya: na asthi" in the example.

'samsaya: na' should be understood as 'dhasamathva samsaya: naasthi'. The 10th man does not have any doubt regarding his dhasamathvam, i.e. he is convinced "I am the dhasama:."

Verse 70 – Chapter III:

एवं तत्त्वमसीत्यस्माद्वैतनुत्प्रत्यगात्मनि ।

सम्यग्ज्ञातत्वमर्थस्य जायेतैव प्रमा दृढा ॥७० ॥

Similarly, in one, who has perfectly understood already the import of "Thou", unshakable knowledge about the inmost Self positively arises from the proposition "That thou art", which dispels all doubts.

Sureswaraacharya says "Just as in the example, 'aham dhasama:' is the final knowledge, which knowledge does not require meditation or any other means for corroboration or confirmation / just as this final knowledge is directly generated, similarly, for a sincere and proper listener of mahaa vaakyam, the final / liberating knowledge 'aham Brahma asmi', does take place, doubtlessly. Generation after generation, Aacharya-s have gained this knowledge. What better proof do you want? Trust me; the knowledge does take place. If at all, it does not take place, it only means, that, you have not listened to the mahaa vaakyam properly".

One of the common basic assumption among students (of any subject) is, that, a 'class' gives only book-knowledge. The assumption is probably right, with regard to various other subjects in the world ; in many instances, 'class study' does give only 'book knowledge' and one requires exposure to the practical application of the subject studied, to gain 'final knowledge' of the subject. A common example given is, that, by reading a book on Maanasarovar, the reader will get only book knowledge and only if he visits Maanasarovar and physically sees the place, he gets 'direct' knowledge. Therefore, this orientation, namely, that "'study' gives only 'book-knowledge' and not 'experiential knowledge'" is very strong and is strongly entrenched among people. But, in the '10th man example', we have to understand and remember that, when the dhasama: is told 'you are dhasama:' he does not get 'book-knowledge' but the 'final knowledge'.

Maanasarovar is a place that is far away. In that instance, 'book knowledge' and 'experiential knowledge' may be different. But in the dhasama: case, the 10th man is not far away. Where is the question of a distinction between 'book knowledge' and 'experiential knowledge'? There is no such problem.

The mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam is similar. But, unfortunately, many Vedhaanthic students get a wrong idea that the Vedhaantha class gives mere 'book knowledge' / 'intellectual knowledge' / 'indirect knowledge' and not 'experiential knowledge'. If a Vedhaanthic student listens to the mahaa vaakyam, with this misguided orientation, even if he listens to the mahaa vaakyam for a billion janmaa-s, nothing will happen. 'Knowledge' cannot take place. He will be eternally looking at other options, like meditation etc., to acquire, what he considers, 'experiential knowledge'. A diligent student should drop this orientation forthwith. In the case of Maanasarovar, such an understanding or approach is permissible. But, not in the case of the dhasama: (in the example) or Brahman. Dhasama: is available at hand. Similarly, Brahman is also not far away. Sruthi (Katopanishad 1.2.20) refers to Brahman as 'nihitha: guhaayaam' – 'located in the heart'. It is the chaithanyam available in all the avasthaa-s - 'jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa vijrumbhathe' – 'that shines forth clearly, in all the three states of existence, waking, dream and deep sleep' as Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa declares in his Maneeshaa Panchakam. Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts: "Therefore, mahaa vaakyam does not give only 'book knowledge' or 'indirect knowledge' or mere 'intellectual knowledge'. It gives aparoksha saakshaathkaara:, if only you listen to it properly".

ॐ 'तत् त्वम् असि' इति अस्मात् (वाक्यात्) - from this mahaa vaakya pramaanaath / from the proposition 'That thou art',

ॐ दृढा प्रमा जायेत एव - unshakable / firm knowledge positively rises,

'pramaa' means 'jnaanam / knowledge'; 'dhrudaa' means 'firm' / 'unshakable'.

What is the 'knowledge' about?

ॐ प्रत्यक् आत्मनि - with regard to 'I, ' the innermost aathmaa, (which is in the form of chaithanyam, the Consciousness principle),

What type of Consciousness? Ans: "Which is not a part, product or property of the body; which pervades and enlivens the body; which is not limited by the boundaries of the body; which survives even in sleep, when the body and mind are resolved".

For whom does this knowledge arise?

ॐ सम्यग् ज्ञात त्वमर्थस्य - for the one who has clearly grasped the meaning of the word 'thvam' in 'thath thvam asi' (or the word 'aham' in 'aham Brahma asmi').

This is very important, because, if the aspirant includes the body-mind complex also, along with Consciousness, in the meaning of 'I', the mahaa vaakyam is guaranteed not to work. The guru says " 'you' are the all-pervading Brahman" - "thath thvam asi"; in assimilating this, the sishtyaa uses the word 'aham' or 'I', as 'aham Brahma asmi'; at that time, the words 'you' and 'I' should refer only to the Consciousness principle. By anvaya vyathirekhaa logic, the aspirant should have excluded the body and the mind - in fact, the entire pancha anaathmaa, consisting of profession, possessions, family, body and mind, from the meaning of 'I' or 'aham'.

In his introduction to the Geethaa Bhaashyam, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa warns 'Sanyaasa sahitha jnaanaath eva moksha:' – 'liberation is possible only through 'knowledge' coupled with sanyaasaa'. But, 'Sanyaasa' is not merely putting on the ochre robes or taking to similar external symbols. 'Sanyaasaa' consists in 'handing over' all personal concerns to the Viswaroopa Isvara; especially, the family, since 'family' is the greatest burden for a grihasthaa, who tends to say "I do not worry about myself. But, I cannot see my children / grandchildren suffer. I do not do any parihaaram for myself; but I have to do parihaaram-s for my children and grandchildren". Though such an approach cannot be totally faulted, ultimately, the aspirant himself should raise his level and drop this attitude. "'Clasp' (controllership and ownership) rejection and ahamkaara- mamakaara rejection is sanyaasa. That 'sanyaasa sahitha aham Brahma asmi jnaani' is referred to here, as 'samyag jnaatha thvam artha:' It should be noted that, in this compound term 'samyag jnaatha thvam arthasya', 'samyag jnaatha' is one part and 'thvam arthasya' is the second part, meaning 'for the one who has clearly grasped the meaning of the word 'I', as the Consciousness excluding the pancha anaathmaa – profession, possession, family, body and mind'. Only after mental renunciation of these five, 'aham Brahma asmi' can be a valid knowledge.

177: Chapter III, Verses 70 (13-03-2010)

In these portions, with the help of the dhasama dhrushtaantha / the 10th man example, Sureswaraacharyaa, points out that mahaa vaakya sravanam itself can give 'direct knowledge'. Mahaa vaakya sravana janya jnaanam is not an 'indirect knowledge', which has to be converted into 'direct knowledge' later, in meditation. Of course, some advaitin-s themselves do hold this view that it is only 'indirect knowledge' to be converted into 'direct knowledge' by meditation. This school of thought, among advaitin-s, claims that sravanam gives 'indirect knowledge' and later meditation alone can give 'direct knowledge'. This is the contention of some advaitin-s; Sureswaraacharyaa strongly disagrees with that view and asserts that sravanam itself can give 'direct knowledge'. Sravanam itself can give 'direct knowledge, because, in this instance, namely, the teaching of mahaa vaakyam, the words used are intended to reveal facts about something which is already experienced. More elaborately: At the time of receiving the knowledge conveyed through the words of the mahaa vaakyam, 'experience' is already included in the 'knowledge', because the words are talking only about an already experienced entity, namely Consciousness. Or, in other words: the knowledge born out of the words of mahaa vaakyam, includes the experience of the discussed object, namely Consciousness, and, hence that knowledge is 'direct knowledge'. To convey this idea, the dhasama episode is given by Sureswaraacharyaa as dhrushtaantha.

What is 'direct knowledge' and what is 'indirect knowledge'? This was explained in an earlier context, in a Viveka Choodamani class, when an expression "introducing words' give 'direct knowledge'; 'describing words' give 'indirect knowledge' " was used. To explain with examples : If the speaker of the words, is describing an object which is far away, the 'describing words' give only 'indirect knowledge', because the knowledge does not include the experience of the object, as it happens to be 'remote'. Therefore, however eloquently the speaker describes the object, the description will give 'knowledge', but, will not include 'experience' of the object.

In contrast, imagine a situation when someone is being introduced by one individual to another. The person being introduced is right in front of both the introducer and of the person to whom the introduction is made. The 'introducer' or the speaker is introducing that person, and while introducing, he gives details of the person being introduced, such as his name, his educational qualifications, his professional achievements etc. While the listener gets the descriptions of the person in front of both the speaker and listener, he need not wait for the experience part, since he is already experiencing the person.

The speaker is introducing the person and while introducing, he is describing the person. One may call it 'introductory description' or 'describing introduction'. But, those 'introducing words' include the experience of the person introduced. This 'experience-including-knowledge' is called 'direct knowledge'. No doubt, introducing words do not generate experience; but, introducing words need not also generate experience. Why? Ans: The listener is already having the 'experience'.

And, therefore, Vedhaantha says "whenever 'introducing words' are used, they will give aparoksha jnaanam. It (the jnaanam) does not require a separate effort at all".

Another example: "When I go into a herbal garden, I 'experience' several herbal plants, but, without knowing the names of those plants and their medicinal powers. In contrast, when I am taken on a conducted tour by someone conversant with the herbs and their powers, (in a lighter vein – an oshadhi nishta aachaaryaa) and he goes on naming and describing the herbs and their medicinal powers, I get 'knowledge' of the herbs. Is this knowledge aparoksha jnaanam or paroksha? Ans: I get aparoksha jnaanam. 'Knowledge' is generated by the word of the guide and 'experience' is already there, though not generated by the word."

In the dhasama dhrushtaanatha also, when 'dhasama: asi' is revealed, the words give aparoksha jnaanam, since the 'dhasama:' is available for 'experience'. In the same manner, when Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam talks about Brahman, its words are not 'describing words', but, 'introducing words', which only point out that 'Brahman is the already experienced Consciousness principle'. Consciousness need not be experienced in future meditation. It is experienced all the time – in all three states of existence, as quoted in the earlier session, "jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa yaa vijrumbhathe".

Of course, there is a difference in the 'experience'. What is that difference? Ans: Before the guru came, the aspirant was 'experiencing' the Consciousness, but, without 'knowing' that it was Brahman. After the guru's exhortation 'thath thvam asi' or 'pragnyaanam Brahma', the 'experience' of the Consciousness is accompanied by the 'knowledge' of 'identity with Brahman.' The example of the visits to the herbal garden may be recalled: "The first day, the guide was not there, when I visited the garden; the herbs were just 'experienced' by me. On the second day, there was the conducted tour of the same herbal garden with the guide; it was the same herbal garden. I did not get a new experience, because the experience was already there, but a I got a new knowledge about the names and powers of the herbs". That knowledge is aparoksha jnaanam.

Similarly, I have been experiencing Consciousness from ages. And, a srothriya Brahma nishta guru comes, and does not merely 'describe' Brahman, but also introduces Brahman (using the mahaa vaakyam 'Pragnyaanam Brahma') as Consciousness, which has been / is / will ever be experienced. 'Pragnyaanam Brahma' are 'introducing words' and, not 'describing words', introducing the available chaithanyam as Brahman, the jagadh adhistaanam.

And, therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, in verse 70, 'dhrudaa pramaa jaayetha eva. 'Dhruda praamaa' means 'dhruda jnaanam' / 'firm knowledge'. And, the 'knowledge' is about 'Brahman as 'chaithanyam'. This 'firm knowledge' will be definitely born, if only the student has been listening properly.

At this point, Swamiji desires to discuss one more technical point, before proceeding further. Again, using his own words:

"Before travelling further, I will discuss one more technical point and proceed further.

"Even though the guru keeps on saying that (i) chaithanyam is experienced all the time, (ii) that experienced chaithanyam is Brahman and (iii) it has to be claimed in the class itself etc., the student may have another question.

"This question may be raised especially by a senior student who is supposed to have more information.

"What is the question? The student might argue with the teacher: 'No doubt I am experiencing Consciousness all the time. But, you have yourself taught me, that, that Consciousness experienced in the body-mind complex is chidhaabhassa. Therefore, what I am experiencing all the time is Consciousness alright; but, I am having only chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa. And, you have taught me that chidhabhaasaa is only a pramaatha or ahamkaaraa; that, chith alone is the saakshi and saakshi alone is Brahman. That means, that, I am only experiencing the 'chidhabaasaa, the pramaatha' and that, I am not experiencing 'Brahman, the saakshi'. Therefore, you should tell me how to experience 'chith, the saakshi'. I always have pramaatha anubhavaa and since I have not experienced saakshi / chith / Brahman, the jnaanam I have, is only paroksha jnaanam.

"The student's question is 'I have chidhabhaasa anubhavaa; how can I have chith anubhavaa? As long as I have the body mind complex / as long as I have the mind , I will have only chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa. I want to experience chith.

"In short, the student wants to exclude the chidhaabhaasaa and experience 'pure chith'. And, to exclude the chidhabhaasaa, some students, based on misconceptions due to misunderstanding some scriptures, want to eliminate the mind and thoughts, by going into nirvikalpaka samaadhi. But, what will happen, if a student attempts this, in his noble pursuit of 'experience of chith' and the chidhaabhaasaa goes away in meditation? Ans: The only difference between life and death is the presence and absence of chidhaabhaasaa. This clip (referring to a clip on Swamiji's desk) is inert matter because it does not have chidhaabhaasaa. But, in the clip, is there chith or not? Chith, being all-pervading, must be there in the clip also and it is very much there. Still the clip is 'dead matter', because it lacks chidhaabhaasaa. Anything which lacks chidhabhaasaa, is 'dead'.

"Therefore, if you try to experience pure saakshi in meditation, by eliminating chidhaabhaasa / thoughts / mind etc., you are becoming akin to a dead body. If you remove mind and chidhaabhaasa, you cannot have any experience, because you become a dead individual. When there is no experience possible, how can you hope to experience the pure chith, the saakshi? If that is possible, all the clips must be liberated. All inert matter will be liberated, because they have chith anubhavaa and all living beings will be 'bound', because they can never have chith anubhavaa but only the chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa. Therefore, remember there is no separate chith anubhavaa and chidhabhaasa anubhavaa. A separate chidhabhaasa anubhavaa and a separate chith anubhavaa are logically impossible, because the moment you remove chidhabhaasaa, you become dead and you cannot have any experience.

"To repeat for stress: 'What should be remembered is, that, a separate chith anubhavaa and a separate chidhabhaasa anubhavaa are logically impossible. Therefore, working for pure chith anubhavaa in meditation is rank foolishness'.

"Even if you get some mystic experiences - which we admit are quite possible - they have nothing to do with saakshi anubhavaa. If mystics claim those mystic experiences as saakshi anubhavaa, we say that they have additional adhyaasaa. Earlier it was ordinary and normal adhyaasaa. Interpreting some mystic experience as pure saakshi anubhavaa is another added adhyaasaa, since saakshi anubhavaa in meditation is not possible according to saasthraa-s and also logically.

"So, never say 'I only have chidhabhaasa anubhavaa and not saakshi anubhavaa'. There is only one chaithanya anubhavaa, which is available at all times. Whether that anubhavaa is chith anubhavaa or chidhabhaasaa anubhavaa will depend upon the way you understand that experience.

"There is only one chaithanya anubhavaa; whether you call it chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa or chith anubhavaa will depend upon the way you perceive or understand that experience. Experience is already there. And, what is that experience? Ans: 'Chaithanya anubhavaa'. But, whether that experience is chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa or chith anubhavaa / (I will change the language) whether it is prathibhimba chaithanya anubhavaa or bhimba chaithanya anubhavaa depends on the way you take the experience. If you take the experience properly / 'edit' the experience properly, it is bhimba chaithanya anubhavaa. If you do not 'edit' it properly, it is prathibhimba chaithanya anubhavaa. It all depends upon the 'editing' process. – not on the 'experience'. There is no separate bhimba chaithanya anubhavam or separate prathibhimba chaithanya anubhavam. By proper 'editing', we take it as bhimba chaithanya anubhavaa and by improper 'editing', we mistake it as prathibhimba chaithanya anubhavaa. The anvaya vyathireka vichaara and thvam padha vichaaraa are only for proper editing of the chaithanya anubhavaa. With proper 'editing', the chaithanya anubhavaa can be understood as bhimba chaithanya anubhavaa.

"And, how is it done? This is analyzed in saasthraa-s. The analysis is called 'prathibhimba vaada prakriyaa'. I have not discussed this earlier. But, since this prathibhimba parakriyaa analysis is required to solve the unique problem of the senior students, who ask 'I have experienced chidhaabhaasaa. How to experience chith? To answer this question, prathibhimbha vaada prakriyaa has to be understood properly.

“What is that prathibhimbha vaada prakriyaa? This can be understood through an example. Let us take the example of a person standing in front of a mirror to shave his face. And, when he stands in front of the mirror, he gets the ‘experience’ of his face. So, we can say, he has got mukha anubhavaa | He has got mukha anubhavaa, when he stands in front of the mirror. Now the question is: ‘What mukha anubhavaa has he got? Is it bhimbha mukha anubhavaa (experience of his original face) or prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa (experience of the reflected face)?’ The answer, obviously, is ‘prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa’. This individual is in a hurry to get ready for his work and rushes to get in front of the mirror, for getting prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa. And, he wants to shave. But, which mukham will he shave? The answer is again obvious, namely, bhimbha mukham. Now, when a person wants to shave bhimbha mukham, why should he rush to a mirror, fully aware that he is going to get only prathibhimbha muka anubhavaa? Bhimbha mukam is not prathibhimbha mukham; and the prathibhimbha mukham is not bhimbha mukham. This being the fact, when the individual wants to shave the bhimbha mukham, why should he stand in front of the mirror and experience prathibhimbha mukham to shave bhimbha mukham? Logically speaking, shaving the bhimbha mukham by experiencing prathibhimbha mukham must be impossible, because prathibhimbha muka anubhavaa cannot help him shave the bhimbha mukham. But, even though it sounds logically impossible, it is found practically possible. The very fact that he has successfully shaved his bhimbha mukham for years, experiencing the prathibhimbha mukham and he will continue to do this in the future also, indicates that it is practically possible, though, logically, it seems to be impossible.

“How do we explain this? (Saasthraa analyses this phenomenon; of course, saasthraa does not use this example of shaving). What is this phenomenon? What is the answer?

“In the presence of the mirror, the individual has mukha anubhavaa. And, because of the presence of the mirror, certain incidental features are experienced in the face. These features are caused by the mirror; and, these features are only incidental features and not intrinsic features of the face. What are those features? What the person experiences are: ‘there is a face and the face is located on the mirror’. This 'seeming location of the face', namely, the mirror, is the first incidental feature. In reality, the face is located on the person's neck.

The face is located on his neck; but, now he experiences the 'location' on the mirror. The 'location' is an incidental feature caused by the mirror. Similarly, the face can be said to be supported by the mirror, because, the face is on the mirror. This 'seeming support' by the mirror, is also an incidental feature, experienced because of the mirror but is not an intrinsic feature of the face. 'Seemingly' the face is on the mirror; 'seemingly' it is supported by the mirror. Not only these two features; the face seems to have 'arrival' and 'departure' along with the mirror. The 'arrival' and 'departure' along with the mirror also are incidental features experienced, but not intrinsic features of the face, since before the 'arrival' also, the face was there and after the 'departure' also, the 'face' is there. But the 'arrival' and 'departure' of the face 'seem' to be there, because of the mirror.

"So, let us note these four incidental features (i) location on the mirror (ii) support by the mirror (iii) arrival because of the mirror and (iv) departure because of the mirror. There may be more incidental features also. But, these four will do for the purpose of the example.

"Now, if the person looking into the mirror, includes these four features as the intrinsic features of the face, then the mukha anubhavaa is called prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa. On the other hand, since the person is intelligent, which 'intelligence' is proved by his daily use of the mirror for shaving, he understands that these four features are only 'seeming' or 'incidental' features and do not intrinsically belong to the face. As a consequence, he excludes / ignores those four features. Then, the very same mukha anubhavaa becomes bhimbha mukha anubhavaa. In other words: Only because he is willing to ignore those four features, viz., (i) the face is on the mirror (ii) the face is supported by the mirror (iii) the face comes with the mirror and (iv) the face goes away with the mirror, he looks upon the face as bhimbha mukham. And, using that bhimbha mukha anubhavaa (his corrected perspective), he is able to shave the bhimbha mukham.

"By this bhimbha muka anubhavaa, he has ignored the location of the face on the mirror; it is not on the mirror. It is not supported by the mirror. It is on his neck only. The moment he ignores these incidental features - which is called 'editing' - the mukha anubhavaa for this discerning observer is bhimbha muka anubhavaa only.

Therefore, using that bhimbha mukha anubhavaa he is able to shave bhimbha mukam. Therefore, for him, 'looking into the mirror' works.

"In a nutshell: How do I convert the prathibhimbha muka anubhavaa to bhimbha muka anubhavaa? Ans: 'By ignoring the incidental features'. In the presence of mirror, there is one mukha anubhavaa; that mukha anubhavaa is called prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa if you include the incidental features; and the same anubhavaa becomes bhimbha mukha anubhavaa, if you use the mirror and ignore the incidental features. .

"Every time a person goes to the mirror, does he want to see bhimbha mukham or prathibhimbha mukham? Remember, he wants to see the bhimbha mukham alone. Nobody goes to the mirror to see the prathibhimbha mukham, because, by seeing the prathibhimbha mukham, the bhimbha mukham cannot be shaved or 'made up' in any other manner. Therefore everybody goes to the mirror to see the bhimbha mukham only, after editing the incidental features.

"We saw that, when you look into the mirror and include the incidental features caused by the mirror to the face, then the anubhavaa is called prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa. In saasthraa-s, the mirror, in such a situation, is called viseshanam. We also saw that, when you use the mirror and carefully ignore the incidental features caused by the mirror, the anubhavaa becomes bhimbha mukha anubhavaa. The mirror, in such a situation, is said to be used as 'upaadhi'. Thus, there is only one bhimbha mukha anubhavaa; when the mirror is used as viseshanam, the anubhavaa is called prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa; when the mirror is used as upaadhi, the mukha anubhavaa is called bhimbha mukha anubhavaa. There are technical terms for the two types of face also. The prathibhimbha mukham is called visishta mukham; bhimbha mukham is called upahitha mukham.

"One mirror itself can be used for bhimbha muka anubhavaa or prathibhimbha muka anubhavaa, depending upon how you use the mirror.

"This is called prathibhimbha vaada prakriyaa, which has to be deeply meditated upon, for thorough understanding. The champion of this prakriyaa is Padmapaadhaachaarya, a primary disciple of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa. Padmapadhaachaarya has refined this prakriyaa.

"Now, suppose a person says: 'I do not want prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa at all; I want only pure bhimbha mukha anubhavaa. If I use the mirror I will get only prathibhimbha mukaa anubhavaa. So, I will not use the mirror'. What will happen then? Ans: Obviously, if he refuses to use the mirror, he will get neither prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa nor bhimbha mukha anubhavaa. No anubhavaa will come. So, 'throwing away the mirror' is folly. You should not throw away the mirror. Use the mirror, delete the incidental features and get bhimbha mukha anubhavaa.

"Hoping that the example is understood by the aspirants, Padmapaadhaachaaryaa says: 'Mind is the mirror. Chaithanyam is the mukham. If you abolish the mind, you will get no chaithanya anubhavaa'.

"If you abolish / destroy the mind, you will be like the clip which has no mind. What does the clip experience? It does not experience anything. Therefore, the first lesson is: 'Have the mind. Do not try to destroy it'.

"Never think of 'mano naasam'. If you destroy the mind, you will be like a clip/ a dead body. What anubhavaa can take place to a dead body? Neither bhimbha chaithanya anubhavaa nor prathibhimbha chaithanya anubhavaa. No anubhavaa will take place, if you eliminate the thoughts and destroy the mind.

"If that term 'mano naasam' is found used in any Vedhaanthic context, it should be interpreted as mano mithyaathva jnaanam. Do not take the term mano naasam literally and try to go on eliminating thoughts and mind.

"Unfortunately, some Vedhaanthic students do misunderstand the term mano naasam, in its literal sense. They think that in every session of nirvikalpaka samaadhi, a portion of the mind will get dissolved and then will come a day of Brahma anubhavam, when the last trace of mind will get destroyed and pure aathmaa will be experienced. All these are misconceptions.

"Aathmaa, by itself, can never have the experience of itself, because, pure Consciousness cannot do any action and any experience is also an activity.

"Therefore, the term mano naasam should not be interpreted in its literal meaning; nor should attempts be made to 'destroy' the mind. Mano naasam means 'understanding manasa: mithyaathvam, keeping the mind'.

"Therefore Padmapaadhaachaarya says: 'The mind has to be kept. Mind is required to manifest the chaithanyam. In the presence of the mind alone chaithanya anubhavaa is possible'.

"Mind does not give chaithanyam to aathmaa. Mind manifests the chaithanyam.

"Lesson no. 1: Keep the mind. Lesson no. 2: In the presence of mind, all of us have chaithanya anubhavaa, which is called aham asmi. The first half of verse 7, of Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa refers to this, as, "baalyaadhisvapi jaagradhaadhisu thathaa sarvaasu avasthaasvapi vyaavruththaasu anuvarthamaanam aham ithi antha: spurantam thathaa" – "In all stages of life like boyhood , in all states of life like waking and in all other conditions also, (Consciousness) constantly manifests inwardly, as 'I'". In Maandookya kaaraikaa, Goudapaadhaachaaryaa uses a term 'ekaathma prathyaya saaram', which means 'aham aham ithi eka aham roopena'. That is chaithanya aubhavaa.

"This chaithanya anubhavaa can be called prathibhimbha chaithanya anubhavaa or bhimbha chaithanya anubhavaa, depending on the way you take it. Recollect the example of 'shaving the original face, experiencing the reflected face'. If you try to shave the mirror, instead of shaving your original face, it means that you are treating the mukha anubhavaa, as prathibhimbha mukha anubhavaa. You wrongly assume that the face is located on the mirror and keep on shaving the mirror. But, what do you actually do? You do not shave the mirror; you shave your original face. That is the indicator that you are ignoring the 'location' caused by the mirror. In a similar manner, you should ignore / remove the incidental features of Consciousness, caused by the 'mind-mirror'.

"What are the incidental features caused to the Consciousness, by the 'mind-mirror'?"

Ans: They are (similar to the example): (1) the seeming location of the Consciousness in the mind (2) the seeming support of the mind to the Consciousness (3) the seeming arrival of Consciousness with the arrival of the mind and (4) the seeming departure of the Consciousness with the departure of the mind.

"If you misunderstand that the Consciousness is located in the mind, that Consciousness will become prathibhimbha chaithanyam, the location being an incidental feature caused by the mind. If you misunderstand that Consciousness is supported by the mind i.e. Consciousness is an attribute of the mind, again the Consciousness will become prathibhimbha chaithanyam. Similarly if you think, that along with the arrival and departure of the mind, the Consciousness also suffers 'arrival' and 'departure' and consequently say that chaithanyam is traveling from one lokaa to another, then also, you attribute incidental features to the chaithanyam, which chaithanyam will, therefore, have to be deemed prathibhimbha chaithanyam.

"On the other hand, suppose you ignore these incidental features. How do you ignore? Ans: 'By understanding that all these features belong only to the mind; that, the location belongs to the mind, the supporting character also belongs to the mind and not to the chaithanyam and the arrival and departure also belong to the mind only'. Thus you carefully avoid superimposing the four incidental features on the Consciousness. This 'avoidance' / 'ignoring' is an intellectual job.

"If, thus, ignoring the four features you experience the Consciousness as 'aham aham' / if you understand 'I am the Consciousness, but not located in the mind; I am the Consciousness but not supported by the mind; I am the Consciousness, but I do not come with the mind; I am the Consciousness, I do not go with the mind' / if you can ignore these four features and assert that the Consciousness 'na jaayathe mriyathe vaa kadhaachith naayam bhoothvaa bhavitha vaa na bhooya: ajo nithya: saasvathoyam puraana: na hanyathe hanyamaane sareere' (Bhagavadh Githa – II.2) – 'This (Self) is neither born at any time, nor does it die. It will neither come into existence nor will it disappear again. It is birthless, eternal and free from decay as well as growth. It is not affected when the body is affected' / if you experience the Consciousness as 'I am', in the presence of the mind-mirror, diligently ignoring the seeming attributes caused by the mind-mirror and claim 'aham asmi sadhaa bhaavi sadhaachinnaham apriya: brahmaiva aham siddham sachhidhaanadha lakshanam', then you are experiencing bhimbha chaithanyaa, the saakshi only. When I include the four features; my experience is called prathibhimbha chiathanya anubhavaa. I exclude the four features; my experience is called bhimbha chaithny anubhavaa. Therefore, two separate anubhavaa-s are not there. Only two separate interpretations of one anubhavaa is there. There is only one experience of Consciousness and two separate interpretations.

"Let us again recollect the 'shaving' example. In the example, if my interpretation is 'the face is there on the mirror' and I shave the mirror, it is prathibhimba muka anubhavaa. If I experience the face and shave the original face here, the experience is bhimba muka anubhavaa only. And, do we all go to the mirror for prathibhimba muka anubhavaa or bhimba muka anubhavaa? Ans: Since we are all people who are capable of proper 'editing', we go to the mirror for bhimba muka anubhavaa only.

"This should be done in the context of Consciousness also. Visishta chaithanyam is prathibhimba chaithanyam and upahitha chaithanyam is bhimba chaithanyam. Visishta chaithanyam is pramaatha and upahitha chaithanyam is saakshi.

"And, when am I experiencing the saakshi? Ans: 'Whenever the mind is available, I am experiencing the saakshi; if the mind goes away from me, there can be no experience to me, similar to the clip which never experiences anything. But since the mind is always there with me, I will experience the saakshi either in active form in jaagrath and svapnaa or in passive form in sushupthi. I experience saakshi all the time, either in active or in passive form, because of the presence of the mind either in active form (in jaagrath and svapnaa) or in passive form (in sushupthi).

"And, mahaa vaakyam says this chaithanyam is Brahman, the Pure Existence, as Sage Uddhaalakaa tells his son Svetahakethu, in the Chaandoghya Upanishad 'sadheve soumya idham agra aaseeth jagatj kaaranam.

"Therefore, when the guru says 'thath thvam asi', the diligent sishyaa should use the mind as upaadhi – not as viseshanam. He should retain the chaithanya anubhavaa and exclude the location, travel etc., and claim "I' am the all-pervading, changeless and un-located bhimba chaithanyam saakshi. For such a diligent student, pramaa dhrudaa jaayathe eva".

177: Chapter III, Verses 70 and 71 (20-03-2010)

During the earlier session, it was seen that there are no two separate experiences in the forms of chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa and chith anubhavaa. There is only one chaithanya anubhavaa, which a discerning person understands as chith anubhavaa and other people misunderstand as chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa. Only one experience, if rightly understood is chith anubhavaa; and, if misunderstood, is chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa.

There is only one experience, because there is only one Consciousness. That Consciousness is never available for 'objectification'. But, that Consciousness, though not available for 'objectification', is available for all of us, in the form of 'I am' experience.

In this 'I am' experience, Consciousness is available as 'I am'. Therefore, the 'I am' experience is a 'self experience', which is without subject-object duality. Thus, Consciousness can be said to be available as 'I am' experience or 'self-experience' or 'subject-experience'. You may call it 'I am' experience; you may call it 'subject experience'; you may call it 'self experience';

And, contrary to popular belief, we need not work for this chaithanya anubhavaa; it is universally available, because is not the 'I am' realization / claim common to all the beings? Therefore, we need not do any separate exercise for this 'I am' anubhavaa.

But, this availability of Consciousness, as 'I am' experience, is possible only in the presence of the mind. In the absence of mind, Consciousness will be present, but, will not be available for 'I am' experience. This should be carefully understood and noted: Consciousness is available for 'I am' experience only in the proximity or presence of the mind. In the absence of the mind, Consciousness is very much present; but, is not available as 'I am' experience.

There is another problem also. When Consciousness is thus available in the presence of the mind as 'I am' experience, along with this 'I am' experience, a limitation also is experienced, because of the mind; which limitation is: A 'seeming' location.

Because of the presence of the mind, I do not experience / understand Consciousness as all-pervading, un-located Consciousness; but, I experience it with a 'seeming' location, namely, the mind. Unfortunately, this experience of 'seeming' location cannot be avoided, obviously because the mind is necessarily required for 'I am' experience. To consolidate: Only in the presence of the mind, Consciousness can be experienced as 'I am' and that experience of Consciousness includes the experience of a limitation also, viz., 'seeming' location, namely, the mind, and caused by the mind.

As long as the mind is there, the seeming location will result . If you, therefore, try to abolish the mind, what will happen? Ans: No doubt, the 'seeming location' will go away; but, the 'I am' experience also will go away. Soonyam alone will result.

To consolidate again: The mind has to be there to experience Consciousness. As a result of the presence of the mind, Consciousness can be experienced as 'I am', but that experience will include the seeming location caused by the mind.

If I mistake the seeming location, the mind, as the real location of Consciousness, then the experience is named chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa; but, if, with a discerning intellect, I exclude the seeming location, understanding that it is only seeming location, then that experience will be chith anubhavaa. In other words, one 'I am' anubhavaa itself, is called chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa, when I include the location and the very same experience is called chith anubhavaa, when I exclude the location.

How do I exclude the location? Ans: 'Merely by intellectually understanding that the location is only seeming location'. Non-discerning people have got the 'I anubhavaa' in the form of chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa because they include the location; and, discerning people have the 'I anubhavaa' in the form of chith anubhavaa, because they exclude the seeming location, by merely understanding that the 'location' is only 'seeming'. But, whether I include the seeming location or exclude the seeming location, experience of the seeming location cannot be avoided.

This also is to be noted carefully: Whether I include the seeming location or exclude the seeming location, the experience of the seeming location can never be avoided, because, chaithanya anubhavaa will require the mind and the mind will necessarily cause the seeming location. The only consolation is that the mind causes only a seeming location; the mind does not cause a real location.

In essence, a discerning person uses the mind for chaithanya anubhavaa and he experiences the chaithanyam, without 'objectifying' it, by claiming 'I am the Consciousness.' And, at the time of claiming 'I am the Consciousness', the 'seeming location' will be experienced by the discerning person also; but, even while experiencing the seeming location, he says 'I am un-located Consciousness'. This is similar to our seeing the 'blue' waters of the ocean, but understanding and maintaining that the oceanic water is colourless. As even as we say 'the water is colourless', what does the eye report? The eye continues to report the 'blue colour'; but, we say, the water is colourless.

Every discerning person experiences chaithanyam - not chidhaabhaasaa - all the time - 'jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa'. What type of chaithanyam? Ans: 'Seemingly located but really un-located Consciousness', as 'I am' ...'I am'....'I am'.

As already indicated, this experience is possible only in the proximity of the mind. When the mind is abolished 'I' will be there; but I will not say 'I am chaithanyam'. In the presence of mind, all the time, chithanya anubhavaa is there.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "The 'discerning' student is the one, who has completed the anvayavyathirekhaa vichaaraa and therefore claims 'I am the un-located Consciousness, not chidhaabhaasaa, but chith itself'. When such a 'discerning' aspirant listens to the mahaa vaakyam, using the word 'aham' to mean the chith and not the chidhaabhaasaa, 'aham Brahma asmi jnaanam will be instantaneous to him". Such a student will not argue: "Swamiji! I am experiencing only chidhaabhaasaa. Should I not resort to nirvikalpaka samaadhi for chith anubhavaa?"

Sureswaraachaaryaa conveys all these points, which we discussed elaborately, in the entire last session and till now in the present session also, tersely, in one compound word "samyag jnaatha thvam arthasya" (in verse 70) - meaning 'the one who has rightly understood the meaning of the word 'thvam' as 'I', the un-located Consciousness".

The compound word 'samyagjnaathathvamarthasya' should be carefully split, as 'samyag + jnaatha + thvam + arthasya' and not as 'samyag + jnaathathvam +

arthasya. According to Sanskrit grammar, the term will be considered as bahuvreehi samaasam, derived as 'samyag jnaatha: thvam artha: yena sa: purusha:'| It describes a particular type of student. What type of student? Ans: "The student, who says 'I am' and understands 'I' as chaithanyam and not chidhaabhaasaa". He has understood in this manner through anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise, has transferred all the attributes and locations to the body-mind complex and stands as un-located Consciousness principle, without any attribute'. For such a student, Sureswaraacharya says: 'dhrudaa pramaa jaayathe eva – 'clear knowledge has to take place / will take place'.

It is very important also to understand and note (though Sureswaraacharya does not mention it here), that this knowledge will take place, at the very time of sravanam itself – not separately in samaadhi or later meditation. As even as such a student 'listens' to the mahaa vaakyam, he can / will gain the final, liberating knowledge.

With regard to what? Sureswaraacharya says: 'prathyag aathmani' meaning 'with regard to the prathyag aathmaa / the real, inner self'. The term 'prathyag aathmani' is vishaya saphami, connected to pramaa. The knowledge gained is, with regard to the real 'I', prathyag aathmaa.

And, what is the knowledge? Ans: 'That 'I' am the jagadh adhishtaanam Brahman, and not one who tries to escape in the name of videha mukthi'.

A diligent Vedhaanthin should get rid of the idea of 'escaping from this world'. He should not want to 'escape' in the name of videha mukthi. When, 'I' am the jagadh adhishtaanam, in which adhishtaanam, galaxies rise and fall, where is the question of 'escaping'? 'Escaping' is neither possible nor required. It is not possible, because 'I' am everywhere and, therefore, where can I escape to? 'Escaping' is not required, because nothing in the universe can touch / affect 'me'.

The next question: What is the means through which this knowledge takes place? Sureswaraacharya says: 'thathavamasi ithi asmaath (vaakyaath)' meaning 'from this most profound mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi'.

All these portions of the verse were covered in an earlier session. But, there is a crucial word in the verse, which we missed to discuss earlier:

ॐ द्वैतनुत् - (which vaakyam is) the destroyer of all dualities.

This is a very important word, describing the mahaa vaakyam. 'Dvaitam' means 'duality' and 'nuth' means 'remover / eliminator / destroyer', derived from the root 'nudh' meaning 'to push off'.

Knowledge of Brahman automatically negates the pluralities / 'thriputi'-s in the forms of jeeva-jagath-Isvara, pramaathaa-pramaanam-prameyam etc. All forms of dualities and pluralities are instantaneously falsified / negated, just as, at the very moment of one waking up from a dream, the svapna duality goes away.

The only difference is: When I wake up from dream, not only is the dream world falsified, the dream world will also 'go away' from my experience; whereas, in advaita jnaanam, the jaagrath world will be only falsified but will not 'go away' from experience. It is like continuing a dream, with the knowledge that I am awake, which, of course, does not happen. The 'analogy' is only hypothetical: 'keeping awake, with the understanding that I am awake, but, with the dream continuing'.

And, therefore, i.e., after mahaa vaakyam also, while 'I' am of a 'higher order' of reality, the world will continue as of a 'lower order' of reality; all things will continue as they are. As Lord Krishna says in the Bhagavadh Githa (Chapter V – verses 8 & 9) "naiva kinchith karomeethi yuktho manyetha thathvavith pasyan srunvan sprusan jighran asnan gacchan svapan svasan pralapan visrujan gruhnan unmishan nimishannapi indriyaani indriyartheshu varthanthe ithi dhaarayan" – "Even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing, talking, evacuating, receiving, opening and closing the eyes, the disciplined knower of the Truth understands 'I do not do anything at all', bearing in mind that sense organs move among sense-objects'. Of Himself also (as Isvara), Lord Krishna says "thasya karthaaram api maam viddhi akarthaaram avyayam" - "I create also; but, really speaking, I do not create" (Chapter IV-Verse 13). And, again (Chapter IX – verses 4 & 5) "Mathsthaani sarva bhoothaani; na cha mathsthaani bhoothaani" – "All beings are in Me. In fact, beings are not in Me". The seeming world of duality will continue, but with the knowledge and conviction that it is seeming.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 71:

प्रत्यगात्मनि प्रमोपजायत इत्युक्तं तत्र चोद्यते । किं यथा घटादि प्रमेयविषया प्रमाकर्त्रादिकारकभेदानपह्वेन जायते तथैवोत अशेषकारकग्रामोपमर्देन कर्तुः प्रत्यगात्मनीति । उच्यते ।

That 'knowledge arises about the inmost Self' has been said. Does this knowledge arise like the 'knowledge about a jar' etc., without cancelling the diversity of factors involved in action? Or does it arise by destroying all such plurality of causal factors, in the agent i.e. the Self? The question is answered in the following verse:

The word 'dvaithanuth' of the previous slokaa is explained in this slokaa, following a question from a student, who asks: "What is the difference between this knowledge and any other knowledge? I know that, when I use any other worldly pramanaam, like prathyakshaa, anumaana etc., I stand as a pramaathaa, I operate a pramaanam and I get the knowledge of the prameyam. And, even after that knowledge (for example, I look at a pot and get the knowledge 'this is a pot'; and, after that ghata jnaanam also) I continue to be a pramaathaa, the pramaanam continues to be there and there are other prameyaa-s which also I can get to know.

"Thus, in all other pramaana vyaapaara, knowledge keeps on coming; and, the thriputi is sustained and continued. Even if I go to svarga lokaa, I will continue to be a pramaathaa, operating a pramaanam and experiencing a prameyam. Therefore, in all other jnaana vyavahaaraa-s, thriputi is protected and maintained. Now, what I want to know is: is there any difference between mahaa vaakya pramaana vyaapaara and anya pramaana vyapaaraa?"

'Vyaapaara' means 'operation'. The student's question is: "Is there any difference between operation of mahaa vaakya pramaanam and other pramaanam-s?" And, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say "Yes. There is a very big difference".

To explain (in Swamiji's words): "In dreams, we see several objects. Imagine that, in a particular dream of yours, a tiger appears. It chases you, catches up with you and pouncing on you, pushes you down. And, at that moment, because of the shock, you wake up. This experience of the tiger attacking you, is an unique experience. What is the uniqueness about it? It woke you up and removed the entire dream, including the tiger also. The tiger removed the dream world and the tiger removed the dreamer who was located in the dream world / the frightened individual in the dream. Both of them were negated; but, not only that. The uniqueness of the tiger is, that it woke you up and in the process, the tiger also got falsified. Therefore, from one perspective, even though it is a false tiger, it is a 'sacred' tiger, because it is a tiger which 'woke' you up from your nightmare. It may have caused you the nightmare; but, it rid you also of the nightmare". So, if a poorva pakshin asks an Advaitin "how can mithyaa (guru and saasthraa-s) lead you to sathyam (Brahman)?", Vedhaanthaa gives the example of the dream tiger and responds "If the dream tiger can help me wake up from dream, in the same manner, in the waking state, mahaa vaakyam, like the dream tiger, 'awakens' me to the thriputi rahitham Brahman. And, as even as I wake up, prameyam (this mithyaa jagath) goes away and I also, as a pramaathaa, a localized individual, get falsified. And, what about the mahaa vaakyam? Mahaa vaakyam also disappears as a pramaanam, again similar to the dream-tiger".

For a jnaani, mahaa vaakyam also is falsified. 'Athra vedaa: avedaa:' declares Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iii.22). And, Dhasaslokee (verse 7): "na saasthaa na saasthram na sishyo na sikshaa na cha thvam na chaaham na chaayam prapancha:| svaroopovabodho vikalpaasahishnu: thadekovasishta: siva:kevaloham" |

For this phenomenon, viz., 'the mahaa vaakya pramaanam disappearing as pramaanam after jnaanam, advaita aachaaryaa-s usually give the example of a powder, known as 'kataka renu', which was widely used in ancient times, for the purpose of cleaning turbid water. The powder is added to the water, to remove all suspended dust particles. Obviously, if the dust particles are removed by the powder, and, instead, the powder itself remains suspended, the object of cleaning the water will not be served. But, how does this particular powder 'kataka renu act? Ans: It gathers all the dust particles and, along with them, settles down at the bottom of the container making it possible for the clean water layers at the top to be collected carefully, for use. In a similar manner, the mahaa vaakya pramaanam removes duality and removes itself also. Thus, mahaavaakya pramaana vyaapaara is thriputi nivarthakam, while anya pramaana vyaapaaraa-s are thriputi pravarthakaa-s.

This is the difference between mahaa vaakya pramaana vyaapaaraa and anya pramaana vyaapaaraa-s. That is what is clarified here. First comes the question:

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मनि प्रमा - "This knowledge with regard to the real 'I' (that 'I' am Brahman')

ॐ उपजायते - is born instantaneously" -

The instantaneous 'birth' of this knowledge is similar to the 'dhasama jnaana' born in the dhasama dhrushtaantha. Another common example given is 'Karna dhrushtaantha', from the epic Mahaabhaaratha. As is popularly known, Karna was brought up from infancy by a charioteer, and was looking upon himself as the charioteer's son, as the others also did. But, from Kunti's vaakyam (akin to mahaa vaakyam), the realization that he was Kunti's son and not the charioteer's, dawned in him. Similarly, the knowledge "'I' am not jeevaa; but, Brahman" is born instantaneously, from mahaa vaakya sravanam.

ॐ इति उक्तं - Thus was mentioned (in the previous sloka).

ॐ तत्र - With regard to this knowledge / prama viashaye,

ॐ चोध्यते - the following question is asked (by someone).

And, what is that question? Ans: "Does this knowledge (aathma jnaanam) also retain duality, similar to other types of knowledge which do retain duality, or does this knowledge dismiss duality?"

In fact, the very word 'knowledge' brings into our minds, duality / plurality. This is because when the word 'knowledge' is mentioned, the ideas (i) 'there is a knower' (ii) 'there is something to be known' (iii) 'there is a 'revealing' instrument' and (iv) 'because of their coming together, knowledge is born', arise in the listener's mind. The very word 'knowledge' brings 'duality' to the mind. Hence the question, "Does this self-knowledge also retain duality?" Reverting to the text:

ॐ यथा - Just as

ॐ घटादि प्रमेयविषया प्रमा - the knowledge of any object like a pot

ॐ जायते - arises in our minds

ॐ कर्त्रादि कारक भेद अनपह्वेन - retaining the plurality, in the form of various accessories like the knower etc.,

'Pramaa' means knowledge. What knowledge is referred to here? Ans: 'ghataadhi prameya vishayaa' meaning 'of any object like a pot'. How does that knowledge rise in our minds? Ans: 'karthraadhi kaaraka bedha anapahnavena' meaning 'retaining the plurality, in the form of various accessories like the knower etc.' 'Kartha', in this context, should be taken as 'pramaathaa' or 'knower'. 'aadhi' means 'etc.', which, in this context, indicates pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. 'Kaarakaa' means 'accessory' and 'bedha:' means 'plurality'. 'apahnava:' means 'removal / elimination'; 'anapahnava:' (used here), therefore, means, 'non-elimination' or 'retention'. So, what is the essence of this part of the sentence? Ans: "The knowledge of objects like a pot, arises, maintaining / retaining the thriputi." Any knowledge other than self-knowledge, is, therefore, not a threat to 'thriputi'. What about self-knowledge?

ॐ किं कर्तुः प्रत्यगात्मनि (प्रमा) - does the knowledge with regard to the inner self of the listener

ॐ तथा एव (अनपह्वेन जायते) - arise in the same manner, without eliminating thriputi?

ॐ उत - Or else,

ॐ अशेष कारकग्राम उपमर्दन (जायते) - does the knowledge (Brahma jnaanam) rise, totally negating the thriputi?

For the sake of easier understanding, this involved sentence is split into two shorter sentences, also supplying the words within the brackets.

'Karthru:', in this context, should be understood as 'srothru:' i.e., as 'of the listener'. The word 'Utha' is indeclinable and (according to Sanskrit dictionary) is 'a particle expressing doubt / uncertainty / guess'. 'Graama' means 'group' and 'kaaraka graama' means 'group of accessories', viz., pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam (in this context of pramaa). 'Asesha' means 'totally'. 'Upamarda:' means 'destruction / elimination', same as 'apahnava:' The two words are synonyms.

The essence of this involved sentence, is the question: "Does Brahma jnaanam negate thriputi or does it not negate thriputi?" A diligent Vedhaanthic student will know the answer, viz., "It negates thriputi, not in terms of experience, but, in terms of 'reality'". Experiential plurality will continue. A diligent student of Advaita should carefully note this, because, many other systems of philosophy repeatedly criticize advaitam, without understanding this basic view. They derisively say "the Advaitic guru talks of advaitam, but conducts classes. If he is really an advaitin, how can he do so? According to his philosophy, there can be no duality / plurality of guru, sishyaa, saasthraa, sikshaa etc." Unfortunately, they ask the question and go away without caring to listen to the answer. The answer, which should be carefully remembered by the student, is, that, the advaitin never negates 'experiential duality'. He negates only 'factual duality'. This is similar to (as quoted already) our experiencing 'blue' waters and 'blue' sky and still maintaining the facts, that water is colourless and sky is colourless. It is experiential 'blue' water; not real 'blue' water. It is experiential 'blue' sky; not real blue sky.

The Advaitic guru can, therefore, happily continue to teach, with not just one student but with several students and keep on asserting " I am advaitam ; aham annam ; aham annadha; ; aham slokakrith" – " 'I' alone appear as annam, annaadha: slokakrith etc.", in the lines of Thaithreeya Upanishad (manthraa 6 of Bhrugu vall). Chaandoghya Upanishad declares (VII.25.2): "Aathmaa eva adhashtaath aathmaa uparishthaath aathmaa paschaath aathmaa purasthaath aathmaa dakshinatha: aathmaa uttharatha: athmaa eva idhagum sarvam" – "The Self indeed is below , the Self is above, the Self is behind, the Self is in the front, the Self is in the South, the Self is in the North, the Self indeed is all this". In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Maithreyi Brahmanam (II.iv.6), Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa declares to his wife and disciple Maithreyi: "ime lokaa: ime vedhaa: imaani bhoothaani, idhagum sarvam yadayam aathmaa" – "these worlds, these gods, these beings, all these are the Self"

Therefore, 'I' alone am; but appearing as plurality. This 'appearance' is the glory of 'my' maayaa; and, I should be grateful to maayaa for this possibility. That is why we are able to enjoy the Creation. If maayaa was not there, there will be no Creation and what will we enjoy? Therefore, let maayaa be there and let this drama go on.

In fact, if the question "what is the meaning and purpose of life?" is raised, the answer can very well be: "To understand 'my' glory". This is because, if maayaa is not there, life is not there. Without maaya, Brahman as Brahman, can never say "'I am Brahman". So, let us permit maayaa to continue as 'our' glory and let us enjoy the Creation. As an Advaitic axiom says "If you understand the true nature of your Self, life is entertainment provided by maayaa. If you miss the true nature of your Self, life turns into a burden", showing how crucial mithyaathva nischayaa is. The mithyaathva nischayaa is the benefit of this jnaanam. Reverting to the text:

ॐ उच्यते - The question is being replied.

Chapter III: Verse 71

प्रत्यक्तास्य स्वतोरूपं निष्क्रियाकारकाफलम् ।

अद्वितीयं तदिद्वा धीः प्रत्यगात्मेव लक्ष्यते ॥ ७१ ॥

Immediate self-awareness is the intrinsic nature of the Self. It is without action, the factors of action and fruits of action. It is without a second. This intellect ignited by it, as it were, appears as the inner Self.

ॐ अस्य स्वतोरूपं - The real nature of the aspirant (is)

The aspirant who has come to Vedhaanthaa is only a 'seeming' samsaari, which fact the guru knows well. But, generally, the sishyaa does not and therefore, does not say that he is a 'seeming' samsaari, and, would even proudly claim to be a mahaa samsaari. 'Asya' means 'samsaari jeevasya'. 'svathoroopam' means 'real nature'.

ॐ प्रत्यक्ता - the inner self, the chaithanyam,

'My' real nature is not chidhaabhaasa, but only 'appears' as chidhaabhaasaa, with the transferred attributes of the mind. With these attributes, I appear to be samsaari. The attribute-less Consciousness of the Self is the real nature of the aspirant. What type of inner self?

ॐ निष्क्रिया कारक अपलम् - which is always free from action, accessories to action and fruits of action,

'Kaarakam' means 'accessory to action'. The subject, object, instrument, beneficiary, benefactor, location etc. of an action are all called kaarakaas. 'Kriyaa' means 'action'. Action is always born from kaarakam. 'Kaaraka janyaa kriyaa' is the definition of 'kriyaa'. The moment the accessories come together, activities will start. Kaarakaa leads to kriyaa and kriyaa will lead to palam, whose definition is 'kriyaa janyam palam'. What is the palam? Ans: Punarjanmam. In the puarjanmaa also karakaa, kriyaa and palan are there. This cycle will go on and on and on, because the jeevaa's sanchitha karmaa is infinite.

But, what about the aathmaa? The Aachaaryaa says 'nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam' meaning 'free from all these three – action, accessories for action and results of action'. The term should be read as 'nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam', formed as 'Nishkriyaa kaarakam cha thath apalam cha'. 'nishkriyaa kaarakam' is bahuvreehi samaasam and 'apalam' is another bahuvreehi. Two bahuvreehi-s together become karmadhaarya samaasam. In this context, the term 'nish kriyaa kaaraka apalam' can be understood to mean the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi also. The term 'nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam' qualifies 'svathorooam'. Thus, 'I' am always advaitam Brahman. This is being said:

ॐ अद्वितीयं - and which is of non-dual nature.

How do we know that? Ans: "The Upanishad itself describes Brahman as 'ekam eva adhvitheeyam', that Brahman is second-less". If Brahman is second-less, you cannot accept a world separately, because if the world is accepted, there will be duality.

But then, this may be followed by the question: "Then, why can't you take the world as a part of Brahman? Then there will not be a second thing". Ans: "No, that is also not possible, because Upanishad also says Brahman is part-less".

Brahman is second-less; Brahman is part-less. Therefore, world cannot be separate from Brahman nor part of Brahman.

And, you cannot say the world is not there also, because we are experiencing it. Therefore, when Advaitin-s say that 'Brahman is second-less', they mean 'Brahman is without a real second one; a second real world is not there'. They do not say a second world is not there ; they only say, that, a second real world is not there, which means that the world is experientially available, but, cannot be counted, similar to our reflections in the mirror or similar to the dream world.

This is called mithyaathva nischaya: | And, according to the advaithin, without mithyaathva nischaya:, problems will never be solved, because the world and the events in the world will continue all the time. We have, in earlier contexts also, discussed an interesting thought: that, even Bhagavaan cannot be free, if the world is not mithyaa. If the world is sathyam / real, Bhagavaan will have to see the real sufferings of all His devotees. How can Bhagavaan comfortably relax on His ananthasayanam, when all His devotees are suffering? His job will be the most painful, because He has to regularly create the world, He has to regularly create the jeevaa-s, He has to regularly create sufferings, regularly distribute the sufferings and regularly watch the sufferings also. 'Sarva saakshithvaath' (being a Witness of everything) He cannot even turn His head away. He will have to constantly watch the suffering. How can Bhagavaan ever have peace of mind?

Bhagavaan also gets mukthi only because of that knowledge, mithyaathva nischaya jnaanam. This is proved by (as earlier quoted) Lord Krishna's seemingly contradictory declarations in the Bhagavadh Githa: "mathsthaanai sarva bhoothani Arjuna – na cha mathsthaani bhoothaani" implying "without really creating the world, I seem to create the world". These are all Isvara's leelaa-s / dramas.

There is a profound statement in the Purusha sooktham also: "Ajaayamaana: bahudhaa vijaayathe" meaning "(Isvara) though not subject to birth, appears as the many".

Bhagavaan is free because of jagan mithyaathva nischaya: | We can also be free by jagan mithyaathva nischaya: |

The first part of the verse can be taken as one complete sentence by providing the verb 'bhavathi' and read as "Asya svathorropaam nishkriyaa karaka apalam, adhvitheeyam prathyakthaa (bhavathi)" - "The real nature of any individual is the Chith (Consciousness) which is free of all thriputi-s and non-dual" |

The rest of the verse can be treated as a separate sentence.

ॐ तद् इद्म धीः - The mind which has been made sentient by that chaithanyam,

The pronoun 'thadh' refers to the 'thriputi-rahitha, advitheeya chaithanyam' | 'Iddhaa' means 'enlivened / made sentient', derived from the root 'indh' meaning 'to kindle'. (The student may remember that word is used in verse 37, Chapter IV, of the Bhagavadh Githaa – the relevant portion being "yathaa edhaamsi samiddogni: basmasaath kuruthe" – "Just as a well-kindled fire reduces the fuel to ashes"). 'Thadh iddhaa', therefore, means 'chaithanya iddhaa' / 'enlivened by chaithanyam'. This is adjective to 'dhee:', which word means 'mind'. What mind? Ans: The mithyaa and jada roopa mind. The mithyaa mind, which is intrinsically jadam, is made alive and sentient because of that Brahma advitheeya chiathanyam / because of the real non-dual Consciousness. But:

ॐ लक्ष्यते - is misunderstood (by the people),

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मा इव - as the inner Self.

The mithyaa, inert mind, enlivened by the real Consciousness is mistaken as the Self or 'I', by me. Instead of claiming I am the real Consciousness, I mistake the material mind, which is enlivened by the Consciousness as the 'I'. And, consequently 'mental' problems become 'my' problems. Therefore, whenever there is turbulence in the mind, I do not say I am the witness of the turbulent mind but say / am disturbed / / am depressed. (In a lighter vein: And subject myself to medical treatment. Of course the medicine is also mithyaa; and, therefore, I can use the mithyaa medicine to cure the mithyaa mind of the mithyaa sickness).

If only you can view all these as only a huge drama, you will never get depressed or disturbed.

178: Chapter III, Verse 71 (20-03-2010)

During the earlier session, it was seen that there are no two separate experiences in the forms of chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa and chith anubhavaa. There is only one chaithanya anubhavaa, which a discerning person understands as chith anubhavaa and other people misunderstand as chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa. Only one experience, if rightly understood is chith anubhavaa; and, if misunderstood, is chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa.

There is only one experience, because there is only one Consciousness. That Consciousness is never available for 'objectification'. But, that Consciousness, though not available for 'objectification', is available for all of us, in the form of 'I am' experience.

In this 'I am' experience, Consciousness is available as 'I am'. Therefore, the 'I am' experience is a 'self experience', which is without subject-object duality. Thus, Consciousness can be said to be available as 'I am' experience or 'self-experience' or 'subject-experience'. You may call it 'I am' experience; you may call it 'subject experience'; you may call it 'self experience';

And, contrary to popular belief, we need not work for this chaithanya anubhavaa; it is universally available, because is not the 'I am' realization / claim common to all the beings? Therefore, we need not do any separate exercise for this 'I am' anubhavaa.

But, this availability of Consciousness, as 'I am' experience, is possible only in the presence of the mind. In the absence of mind, Consciousness will be present, but, will not be available for 'I am' experience. This should be carefully understood and noted: Consciousness is available for 'I am' experience only in the proximity or presence of the mind. In the absence of the mind, Consciousness is very much present; but, is not available as 'I am' experience.

There is another problem also. When Consciousness is thus available in the presence of the mind as 'I am' experience, along with this 'I am' experience, a limitation also is experienced, because of the mind; which limitation is: A 'seeming' location.

Because of the presence of the mind, I do not experience / understand Consciousness as all-pervading, un-located Consciousness; but, I experience it with a 'seeming' location, namely, the mind. Unfortunately, this experience of 'seeming' location cannot be avoided, obviously because the mind is necessarily required for 'I am' experience. To consolidate: Only in the presence of the mind, Consciousness can be experienced as 'I am' and that experience of Consciousness includes the experience of a limitation also, viz., 'seeming' location, namely, the mind, and caused by the mind.

As long as the mind is there, the seeming location will result. If you, therefore, try to abolish the mind, what will happen? Ans: No doubt, the 'seeming location' will go away; but, the 'I am' experience also will go away. Soonyam alone will result.

To consolidate again: The mind has to be there to experience Consciousness. As a result of the presence of the mind, Consciousness can be experienced as 'I am', but that experience will include the seeming location caused by the mind.

If I mistake the seeming location, the mind, as the real location of Consciousness, then the experience is named chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa; but, if, with a discerning intellect, I exclude the seeming location, understanding that it is only seeming location, then that experience will be chith anubhavaa. In other words, one 'I am' anubhavaa itself, is called chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa, when I include the location and the very same experience is called chith anubhavaa, when I exclude the location.

How do I exclude the location? Ans: 'Merely by intellectually understanding that the location is only seeming location'. Non-discerning people have got the 'I anubhavaa' in the form of chidhaabhaasa anubhavaa because they include the location; and, discerning people have the 'I anubhavaa' in the form of chith anubhavaa, because they exclude the seeming location, by merely understanding that the 'location' is only 'seeming'. But, whether I include the seeming location or exclude the seeming location, experience of the seeming location cannot be avoided.

This also is to be noted carefully: Whether I include the seeming location or exclude the seeming location, the experience of the seeming location can never be avoided, because, chaithanya anubhavaa will require the mind and the mind will necessarily cause the seeming location. The only consolation is that the mind causes only a seeming location; the mind does not cause a real location.

In essence, a discerning person uses the mind for chaithanya anubhavaa and he experiences the chaithanyam, without 'objectifying' it, by claiming 'I am the Consciousness.' And, at the time of claiming 'I am the Consciousness', the 'seeming location' will be experienced by the discerning person also; but, even while experiencing the seeming location, he says 'I am un-located Consciousness'. This is similar to our seeing the 'blue' waters of the ocean, but understanding and maintaining that the oceanic water is colourless. As even as we say 'the water is colourless', what does the eye report? The eye continues to report the 'blue colour'; but, we say, the water is colourless.

Every discerning person experiences chaithanyam - not chidhaabhaasaa - all the time - 'jaagrath svapna sushupthishu sputatharaa'. What type of chaithanyam? Ans: 'Seemingly located but really un-located Consciousness', as 'I am' ...'I am'....'I am'.

As already indicated, this experience is possible only in the proximity of the mind. When the mind is abolished 'I' will be there; but I will not say 'I am chaithanyam'. In the presence of mind, all the time, chithanya anubhavaa is there.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "The 'discerning' student is the one, who has completed the anvayavyathirekhaa vichaaraa and therefore claims 'I am the un-located Consciousness, not chidhaabhaasaa, but chith itself'. When such a 'discerning' aspirant listens to the mahaa vaakyam, using the word 'aham' to mean the chith and not the chidhaabhaasaa, 'aham Brahma asmi jnaanam will be instantaneous to him". Such a student will not argue: "Swamiji! I am experiencing only chidhaabhaasaa. Should I not resort to nirvikalpaka samaadhi for chith anubhavaa?"

Sureswaraachaaryaa conveys all these points, which we discussed elaborately, in the entire last session and till now in the present session also, tersely, in one compound word "samyag jnaatha thvam arthasya" (in verse 70) - meaning 'the one who has rightly understood the meaning of the word 'thvam' as 'I', the un-located Consciousness".

The compound word 'samyagjnaathathvamarthasya' should be carefully split, as 'samyag + jnaatha + thvam + arthasya' and not as 'samyag + jnaathathvam +

arthasya. According to Sanskrit grammar, the term will be considered as bahuvreehi samaasam, derived as 'samyag jnaatha: thvam artha: yena sa: purusha:'| It describes a particular type of student. What type of student? Ans: "The student, who says 'I am' and understands 'I' as chaithanyam and not chidhaabhaasaa". He has understood in this manner through anvaya vyathirekhaa exercise, has transferred all the attributes and locations to the body-mind complex and stands as un-located Consciousness principle, without any attribute'. For such a student, Sureswaraacharya says: 'dhrudaa pramaa jaayathe eva – 'clear knowledge has to take place / will take place'.

It is very important also to understand and note (though Sureswaraacharya does not mention it here), that this knowledge will take place, at the very time of sravanam itself – not separately in samaadhi or later meditation. As even as such a student 'listens' to the mahaa vaakyam, he can / will gain the final, liberating knowledge.

With regard to what? Sureswaraacharya says: 'prathyag aathmani' meaning 'with regard to the prathyag aathmaa / the real, inner self'. The term 'prathyag aathmani' is vishaya saphami, connected to pramaa. The knowledge gained is, with regard to the real 'I', prathyag aathmaa.

And, what is the knowledge? Ans: 'That 'I' am the jagadh adhishtaanam Brahman, and not one who tries to escape in the name of videha mukthi'.

A diligent Vedhaanthin should get rid of the idea of 'escaping from this world'. He should not want to 'escape' in the name of videha mukthi. When, 'I' am the jagadh adhishtaanam, in which adhishtaanam, galaxies rise and fall, where is the question of 'escaping'? 'Escaping' is neither possible nor required. It is not possible, because 'I' am everywhere and, therefore, where can I escape to? 'Escaping' is not required, because nothing in the universe can touch / affect 'me'.

The next question: What is the means through which this knowledge takes place? Sureswaraacharya says: 'thathavamasi ithi asmaath (vaakyaath)' meaning 'from this most profound mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi'.

All these portions of the verse were covered in an earlier session. But, there is a crucial word in the verse, which we missed to discuss earlier:

द्वैतनुत् - (which vaakyam is) the destroyer of all dualities.

This is a very important word, describing the mahaa vaakyam. 'Dvaitam' means 'duality' and 'nuth' means 'remover / eliminator / destroyer', derived from the root 'nudh' meaning 'to push off'.

Knowledge of Brahman automatically negates the pluralities / 'thriputi'-s in the forms of jeeva-jagath-Isvara, pramaathaa-pramaanam-prameyam etc. All forms of dualities and pluralities are instantaneously falsified / negated, just as, at the very moment of one waking up from a dream, the svapna duality goes away.

The only difference is: When I wake up from dream, not only is the dream world falsified, the dream world will also 'go away' from my experience; whereas, in advaita jnaanam, the jaagrath world will be only falsified but will not 'go away' from experience. It is like continuing a dream, with the knowledge that I am awake, which, of course, does not happen. The 'analogy' is only hypothetical: 'keeping awake, with the understanding that I am awake, but, with the dream continuing'.

And, therefore, i.e., after mahaa vaakyam also, while 'I' am of a 'higher order' of reality, the world will continue as of a 'lower order' of reality; all things will continue as they are. As Lord Krishna says in the Bhagavadh Githa (Chapter V – verses 8 & 9) "naiva kinchith karomeethi yuktho manyetha thathvavith pasyan srunvan sprusan jighran asnan gacchan svapan svasan pralapan visrujan gruhnan unmishan nimishannapi indriyaani indriyartheshu varthanthe ithi dhaarayan" – "Even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing, talking, evacuating, receiving, opening and closing the eyes, the disciplined knower of the Truth understands 'I do not do anything at all', bearing in mind that sense organs move among sense-objects'. Of Himself also (as Isvara), Lord Krishna says "thasya karthaaram api maam viddhi akarthaaram avyayam" - "I create also; but, really speaking, I do not create" (Chapter IV-Verse 13). And, again (Chapter IX – verses 4 & 5) "Mathsthaani sarva bhoothaani; na cha mathsthaani bhoothaan" – "All beings are in Me. In fact, beings are not in Me". The seeming world of duality will continue, but with the knowledge and conviction that it is seeming.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 71:

प्रत्यगात्मनि प्रमोपजायत इत्युक्तं तत्र चोद्यते । किं यथा घटादि प्रमेयविषया प्रमा कर्त्रादिकारकभेदानपह्वेन जायते तथैवोक्त अशेषकारकग्रामोपमर्देन कर्तुः प्रत्यगात्मनीति । उच्यते ।

That ‘knowledge arises about the inmost Self’ has been said. Does this knowledge arise like the ‘knowledge about a jar’ etc., without cancelling the diversity of factors involved in action? Or does it arise by destroying all such plurality of causal factors, in the agent i.e. the Self? The question is answered in the following verse:

The word 'dvaithanuthi' of the previous slokaa is explained in this slokaa, following a question from a student, who asks: "What is the difference between this knowledge and any other knowledge? I know that, when I use any other worldly pramanaam, like prathyakshaa, anumaana etc., I stand as a pramaathaa, I operate a pramaanam and I get the knowledge of the prameyam. And, even after that knowledge (for example, I look at a pot and get the knowledge 'this is a pot'; and, after that ghata jnaanam also) I continue to be a pramaathaa, the pramaanam continues to be there and there are other prameyaa-s which also I can get to know.

"Thus, in all other pramaana vyaapaara, knowledge keeps on coming; and, the thriputi is sustained and continued. Even if I go to svarga lokaa, I will continue to be a pramaathaa, operating a pramaanam and experiencing a prameyam. Therefore, in all other jnaana vyavahaaraa-s, thriputi is protected and maintained. Now, what I want to know is: is there any difference between mahaa vaakya pramaana vyaapaara and anya pramaana vyapaaraa?"

'Vyaapaara' means 'operation'. The student's question is: "Is there any difference between operation of mahaa vaakya pramaanam and other pramaanam-s?" And, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say "Yes. There is a very big difference".

To explain (in Swamiji's words): "In dreams, we see several objects. Imagine that, in a particular dream of yours, a tiger appears. It chases you, catches up with you and pouncing on you, pushes you down. And, at that moment, because of the shock, you wake up. This experience of the tiger attacking you is an unique experience. What is the uniqueness about it? It woke you up and removed the entire dream, including the tiger also. The tiger removed the dream world and the tiger removed the dreamer who was located in the dream world / the frightened individual in the dream. Both of them were negated; but, not only that. The uniqueness of the tiger is, that it woke you up and in the process, the tiger also got falsified. Therefore, from one perspective, even though it is a false tiger, it is a 'sacred' tiger, because it is a tiger which 'woke' you up from your nightmare. It may have caused you the nightmare; but, it rid you also of the nightmare". So, if a poorva pakshin asks an Advaitin "how can mithyaa (guru and saasthraa-s) lead you to sathyam (Brahman)?", Vedhaantha gives the example of the dream tiger and responds "If the dream tiger can help me wake up from dream, in the same manner, in the waking state, mahaa vaakyam, like the dream tiger, 'awakens' me to the thriputi rahitham Brahman. And, as even as I wake up, prameyam (this mithyaa jagath) goes away and I also, as a pramaatha, a localized individual, get falsified. And, what about the mahaa vaakyam? Mahaa vaakyam also disappears as a pramaanam, again similar to the dream-tiger".

For a jnaani, mahaa vaakyam also is falsified. 'Athra vedaa: aavedaa:' declares Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iii.22). And, Dhasaslokee (verse 7) : "na saasthaa na saasthram na sishyo na sikshaa na cha thvam na chaaham na chaayam prapancha:| svaroopovabodho vikalpaasahishnu: thadekovasishta: siva:kevaloham"|

For this phenomenon, viz., 'the mahaa vaakya pramaanam disappearing as pramaanam after jnaanam', advaita aachaaryaa-s usually give the example of a powder, known as 'kataka renu', which was widely used in ancient times, for the purpose of cleaning turbid water. The powder is added to the water, to remove all suspended dust particles. Obviously, if the dust particles are removed by the powder, and, instead, the powder itself remains suspended, the object of cleaning the water will not be not served. But, how does this particular powder 'kataka renu' act? Ans: It gathers all the dust particles and, along with them, settles down at the bottom of the container making it possible for the clean water layers at the top to be collected carefully, for use. In a similar manner, the mahaa vaakya pramaanam removes duality and removes itself also. Thus, mahaavaakya pramaana vyaapaara is thriputi nivarthakam, while anya pramaana vyaapaaraa-s are thriputi pravarthakaa-s.

This is the difference between mahaa vaakya pramaana vyaapaaraa and anya pramaana vyaapaaraa-s. That is what is clarified here. First comes the question:

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मनि प्रमा - "This knowledge with regard to the real 'I' (that 'I' am Brahman')

ॐ उपजायते - is born instantaneously" -

The instantaneous 'birth' of this knowledge is similar to the 'dhasama jnaana' born in the dhasama dhrushtaantha. Another common example given is 'Karna dhrushtaantha', from the epic Mahaabhaaratha. As is popularly known, Karna was brought up from infancy by a charioteer, and was looking upon himself as the charioteer's son, as the others also did. But, from Kunt's vaakyam (akin to mahaa vaakyam), the realization that he was Kunt's son and not the charioteer's, dawned in him. Similarly, the knowledge "'I' am not jeevaa; but, Brahman" is born instantaneously, from mahaa vaakya sravanam.

ॐ इति उक्तं - Thus was mentioned (in the previous sloka).

ॐ तत्र - With regard to this knowledge / prama viashaye,

ॐ चोध्यते - the following question is asked (by someone).

And, what is that question? Ans: "Does this knowledge (aathma jnaanam) also retain duality, similar to other types of knowledge which do retain duality, or does this knowledge dismiss duality?"

In fact, the very word 'knowledge' brings into our minds, duality / plurality. This is because when the word 'knowledge' is mentioned, the ideas (i) 'there is a knower' (ii) 'there is something to be known' (iii) 'there is a 'revealing' instrument' and (iv) 'because of their coming together, knowledge is born', arise in the listener's mind. The very word 'knowledge' brings 'duality' to the mind. Hence the question, "Does this self-knowledge also retain duality?" Reverting to the text:

ॐ यथा - Just as

ॐ घटादि प्रमेयविषया प्रमा - the knowledge of any object like a pot

ॐ जायते - arises in our minds

ॐ कर्त्रादि कारक भेद अनपह्वेन - retaining the plurality, in the form of various accessories like the knower etc.,

'Pramaa' means knowledge. What knowledge is referred to here? Ans: 'ghataadhi prameya vishayaa' meaning 'of any object like a pot'. How does that knowledge rise in our minds? Ans: 'karthraadhi kaaraka bedha anapahnavena' meaning 'retaining the plurality, in the form of various accessories like the knower etc.' 'Kartha', in this context, should be taken as 'pramaathaa' or 'knower'. 'aadhi' means 'etc.', which, in this context, indicates pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. 'Kaarakaa' means 'accessory' and 'bedha:' means 'plurality'. 'apahnava:' means 'removal / elimination'; 'anapahnava:' (used here), therefore, means, 'non-elimination' or 'retention'. So, what is the essence of this part of the sentence? Ans: "The knowledge of objects like a pot, arises, maintaining / retaining the thriputi." Any knowledge other than self-knowledge, is, therefore, not a threat to 'thriputi'. What about self-knowledge?

- ॐ किं कर्तुः प्रत्यगात्मनि (प्रमा) - does the knowledge with regard to the inner self of the listener
- ॐ तथा एव (अनपह्वेन जायते) - arise in the same manner, without eliminating thriputi?
- ॐ उत - Or else,
- ॐ अशेष कारकग्राम उपमर्देन (जायते) - does the knowledge (Brahma jnaanam) rise, totally negating the thriputi?

For the sake of easier understanding, this involved sentence is split into two shorter sentences, also supplying the words within the brackets.

'Karthru:', in this context, should be understood as 'srothru:' i.e., as 'of the listener'. The word 'Utha' is indeclinable and (according to Sanskrit dictionary) is 'a particle expressing doubt / uncertainty / guess'. 'Graama' means 'group' and 'kaaraka graama' means 'group of accessories', viz., pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam (in this context of pramaa). 'Asesha' means 'totally'. 'Upamarda:' means 'destruction / elimination', same as 'apahnava:' The two words are synonyms.

The essence of this involved sentence, is the question: "Does Brahma jnaanam negate thriputi or does it not negate thriputi?" A diligent Vedhaanthic student will know the answer, viz., "It negates thriputi, not in terms of experience, but, in terms of 'reality'". Experiential plurality will continue. A diligent student of Advaita should carefully note this, because, many other systems of philosophy repeatedly criticize advaitam, without understanding this basic view. They derisively say "the Advaitic guru talks of advaitam, but conducts classes. If he is really an advaitin, how can he do so? According to his philosophy, there can be no duality / plurality of guru, sishyaa, saasthraa, sikshaa etc." Unfortunately, they ask the question and go away without caring to listen to the answer. The answer, which should be carefully remembered by the student, is, that, the advaitin never negates 'experiential duality'. He negates only 'factual duality'. This is similar to (as quoted already) our experiencing 'blue' waters and 'blue' sky and still maintaining the facts, that water is colourless and sky is colourless. It is experiential 'blue' water; not real 'blue' water. It is experiential 'blue' sky; not real blue sky.

The Advaitic guru can, therefore, happily continue to teach, with not just one student but with several students and keep on asserting "I am advaitam; aham annam; aham annadha; aham slokakrith" – " 'I' alone appear as annam, annaadha; slokakrith etc.", in the lines of Thaithreeya Upanishad (manthraa 6 of Bhrugu valli). Chaandoghya Upanishad declares (VII.25.2) : "Aathmaa eva adhashtaath aathmaa uparishtaath aathmaa paschaath aathmaa purasthaath aathmaa dakshinatha: aathmaa uttharatha: athmaa eva idhagum sarvam" – "The Self indeed is below , the Self is above, the Self is behind, the Self is in the front, the Self is in the South, the Self is in the North, the Self indeed is all this". In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Maithreyi Brahmanam (II.iv.6), Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa declares to his wife and disciple Maithreyi: "ime lokaa: ime vedhaa: imaani bhoothaani, idhagum sarvam yadayam aathmaa" – "these worlds, these gods, these beings, all these are the Self"

Therefore, 'I' alone am; but appearing as plurality. This 'appearance' is the glory of 'my' maayaa; and, I should be grateful to maayaa for this possibility. That is why we are able to enjoy the Creation. If maayaa was not there, there will be no Creation and what will we enjoy? Therefore, let maayaa be there and let this drama go on.

In fact, if the question "what is the meaning and purpose of life?" is raised, the answer can very well be: "To understand 'my' glory". This is because, if maayaa is not there, life is not there. Without maaya, Brahman as Brahman, can never say "'I' am Brahman". So, let us permit maayaa to continue as 'our' glory and let us enjoy the Creation. As an Advaitic axiom says "If you understand the true nature of your Self, life is entertainment provided by maayaa. If you miss the true nature of your Self, life turns into a burden", showing how crucial mithyaathva nischayaa is. The mithyaathva nischayaa is the benefit of this jnaanam. Reverting to the text:

ॐ उच्यते - The question is being replied.

Chapter III: Verse 71

प्रत्यक्तास्य स्वतोरूपं निष्क्रियाकारकाफलम् ।

अद्वितीयं तदिद्धा धीः प्रत्यगात्मैव लक्ष्यते ॥ ७१ ॥

Immediate self-awareness is the intrinsic nature of the Self. It is without action, the factors of action and fruits of action. It is without a second. This intellect ignited by it, as it were, appears as the inner Self.

ॐ अस्य स्वतोरूपं - The real nature of the aspirant (is)

The aspirant who has come to Vedhaantha is only a 'seeming' samsaari, which fact the guru knows well. But, generally, the sishtyaa does not and therefore, does not say that he is a 'seeming' samsaari, and, would even proudly claim to be a mahaa samsaari. 'Asya' means 'samsaari jeevasya'. 'svathorooam' means 'real nature'.

ॐ प्रत्यक्ता - the inner self, the chaithanyam ,

'My' real nature is not chidhaabhaasa, but only 'appears' as chidhaabhaasaa, with the transferred attributes of the mind. With these attributes, I appear to be samsaari. The attribute-less Consciousness of the Self is the real nature of the aspirant. What type of inner self?

निष्क्रिया कारक अपलम् - which is always free from action, accessories to action and fruits of action,

'Kaarakam' means 'accessory to action'. The subject, object, instrument, beneficiary, benefactor, location etc. of an action are all called kaaraka-s. 'Kriyaa' means 'action'. Action is always born from kaarakam. 'Kaaraka janyaa kriyaa' is the definition of 'kriyaa'. The moment the accessories come together, activities will start. Kaaraka leads to kriyaa and kriyaa will lead to palam, whose definition is 'kriyaa janyam palam'. What is the palam? Ans: Punarjanmam. In the puunarjanmaa also kaaraka, kriyaa and palam are there. This cycle will go on and on and on, because the jeeva's sanchitha karma is infinite.

But, what about the aathmaa? The Aachaaryaa says 'nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam' meaning 'free from all these three – action, accessories for action and results of action'. The term should be read as 'nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam', formed as 'Nishkriyaa kaarakam cha thath apalam cha'. 'nishkriyaa kaarakam' is bahuvreehi samaasam and 'apalam' is another bahuvreehi. Two bahuvreehi-s together become karmadhaarya samaasam. In this context, the term 'nish kriyaa kaaraka apalam' can be understood to mean the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi also. The term 'nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam' qualifies 'svathoroopam'. Thus, 'I' am always advaitam Brahman. This is being said:

ॐ अद्वितीयं - and which is of non-dual nature.

How do we know that? Ans: "The Upanishad itself describes Brahman as 'ekam eva adhvitheeyam', that Brahman is second-less". If Brahman is second-less, you cannot accept a world separately, because if the world is accepted, there will be duality.

But then, this may be followed by the question: "Then, why can't you take the world as a part of Brahman? Then there will not be a second thing". Ans: "No, that is also not possible, because Upanishad also says Brahman is part-less".

Brahman is second-less; Brahman is part-less. Therefore, world cannot be separate from Brahman nor part of Brahman.

And, you cannot say the world is not there also, because we are experiencing it. Therefore, when Advaitin-s say that 'Brahman is second-less', they mean 'Brahman is without a real second one; a second real world is not there'. They do not say a second world is not there ; they only say, that, a second real world is not there, which means that the world is experientially available, but, cannot be counted, similar to our reflections in the mirror or similar to the dream world.

This is called mithyaathva nischaya: | And, according to the advaitin, without mithyaathva nischaya:, problems will never be solved, because the world and the events in the world will continue all the time. We have, in earlier contexts also, discussed an interesting thought: that, even Bhagavaan cannot be free, if the world is not mithyaa. If the world is sathyam / real, Bhagavaan will have to see the real sufferings of all His devotees. How can Bhagavaan comfortably relax on His ananthasayanam, when all His devotees are suffering? His job will be the most painful, because He has to regularly create the world, He has to regularly create the jeevaa-s, He has to regularly create sufferings, regularly distribute the sufferings and regularly watch the sufferings also. 'Sarva saakshithvaath' (being a Witness of everything) He cannot even turn His head away. He will have to constantly watch the suffering. How can Bhagavaan ever have peace of mind?

Bhagavaan also gets mukthi only because of that knowledge, mithyaathva nischaya jnaanam. This is proved by (as earlier quoted) Lord Krishna's seemingly contradictory declarations in the Bhagavadh Githa: "mathsthaanai sarva bhoothani Arjuna – na cha mathsthaani bhoothaani" implying "without really creating the world, I seem to create the world". These are all Isvara's leelaa-s / dramas.

There is a profound statement in the Purusha sooktham also: "Ajaayamaana: bahudhaa vijaayathe" meaning "(Isvara) though not subject to birth, appears as the many".

Bhagavaan is free because of jagan mithyaathva nischaya: We can also be free by jagan mithyaathva nischaya: |

The first part of the verse can be taken as one complete sentence by providing the verb 'bhavathi' and read as "Asya svathorropaam nishkriyaa karaka apalam, advitheeyam prathyakthaa (bhavathi)" - "The real nature of any individual is the Chith (Consciousness) which is free of all thriputi-s and non-dual" |

The rest of the verse can be treated as a separate sentence.

ॐ तद् इद्वा धीः - The mind which has been made sentient by that chaithanyam,

The pronoun 'thadh' refers to the 'thriputi-rahitha, advitheeya chaithanyam' | 'Iddhaa' means 'enlivened / made sentient', derived from the root 'indh' meaning 'to kindle'. (The student may remember that word is used in verse 37, Chapter IV, of the Bhagavadh Githaa – the relevant portion being "yathaa edhaamsi samiddogni: basmasaath kuruthe" – "Just as a well-kindled fire reduces the fuel to ashes"). 'Thadh iddhaa', therefore, means 'chaithanya iddhaa' / 'enlivened by chaithanyam'. This is adjective to 'dhee;', which word means 'mind'. What mind? Ans: The mithyaa and jada roopa mind. The mithyaa mind, which is intrinsically jadam, is made alive and sentient because of that Brahma advitheeya chiathanyam / because of the real non-dual Consciousness. But:

ॐ लक्ष्यते - is misunderstood (by the people),

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मा इव - as the inner Self.

The mithyaa, inert mind, enlivened by the real Consciousness is mistaken as the Self or 'I', by me. Instead of claiming I am the real Consciousness, I mistake the material mind, which is enlivened by the Consciousness as the 'I'. And, consequently 'mental' problems become 'my' problems. Therefore, whenever there is turbulence in the mind, I do not say I am the witness of the turbulent mind but say / am disturbed / / am depressed. (In a lighter vein: And subject myself to medical treatment. Of course the medicine is also mithyaa; and, therefore, I can use the mithyaa medicine to cure the mithyaa mind of the mithyaa sickness).

If only you can view all these as only a huge drama, you will never get depressed or disturbed.

179: Chapter III, Verse 71 to 73 (27-03-2010)

In this verse (verse 71) Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about the difference between mahaa vaakya pramaanam and all the other pramaanam-s in the world.

All the other pramaanam-s also generate varieties of knowledge, regarding the prameya vasthu-s. But, while generating the knowledge, the pramaanam-s retain the thriputi, in the form of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. For example, when my eyes are revealing this hall, the eyes generate the knowledge of the hall ; hall is the prameyam; eyes are the pramaanam and I am the pramaathaa. And, while generating the knowledge of the hall, the eyes, as pramaanam, confine themselves only to the generation of knowledge, without causing any harm or damage to the thriputi. Even after the knowledge is generated, the thriputi will continue to exist. I continue to be the pramaathaa, the eyes continue to be the pramaanam and the hall will continue to be the prameyam. The additional knowledge generated by the pramaanam, viz., the eyes, does not do any harm to the thriputi. This is true with regard to all other pramaanam-s-, prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa etc. Even among the saasthraa-s, the veda karma kaanda pramaanam does not do any damage to dvaitham or thriputi.

But, mahaa vaakya pramaanam is different. How? Ans: By revealing the jeevaathma-Parmaathma- eikyam, it reveals Brahman as a fact, a Brahman which is advitheeyam. 'Brahma Advitheeyam' means there is no second thing other than Brahman and there is no internal difference within Brahman also. Sajaatheeya-vijaatheeya-svagatha bedha rahitham Brahma. And, once that Brahman knowledge is generated and the student understands 'Brahman is a fact' - here comes the difference - that knowledge cannot accommodate thriputi, because 'Brahman as a fact' can never co-exist with 'thriputi as a fact'. This, in turn, is because thriputi comes under duality / plurality and Brahman comes under non-duality / non-plurality. 'Advaitam Brahma' and 'dvaita thriputi' can never be both facts. If Brahman is a fact, thriputi cannot be a fact; if thriputi is a fact, Brahman cannot be a fact. Therefore, Brahman and thriputi will have a conflict, as it is said in Tamil. நீயா நானா ஒரு கை பாத்துடுவோம்'- 'let us see whether I survive or you survive'

Since mahaa vaakya pramaanam has revealed Brahma advaitham as a fact or truth, thriputi will not be able to survive as a truth. Of course, thriputi will continue to be experienced; but, thriputi would have lost its reality. This loss of reality of the thriputi is called 'upamardhanam', a technical word, very often used by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa. What is the meaning of the word upamardhanam? Ans: "Thriputi losing the reality status, the moment Brahman is understood as a fact". Thus, mahaa vaakya pramaanam is thriputi nivarthakam, while other pramaanaa-s are thriputi pravarthakaa-s.

If thriputi continues to be a fact for an aspirant, even after mahaa vaakyam, it only shows that he / she has not understood 'Brahman as advaitham'. 'Brahman understanding' and 'thriputi reality' cannot co-exist.

So, what is the proof to know whether mahaa vaakya pramaanam has generated 'Brahman understanding or not' in the aspirant? Ans: "The moment the pramaanam has generated 'Brahman understanding', the 'thriputi reality' is knocked off".

Conversely, if 'thriputi reality' continues, then 'Brahman understanding' has not been generated. 'Brahman understanding' and 'thriputi reality' cannot co-exist.

This is similar to someone waking up from one's dreams. The moment one wakes up, one's dreams and the dream-reality go away. 'Waking up' and 'dream reality' cannot co-exist. If dream continues to be real, 'waking up' has not taken place. If 'waking up' has taken place, 'dream reality' does not continue. In the same manner, if mahaa vaakya pramaanam has successfully done the job that it has to do on an aspirant, 'world-reality' will cease for that aspirant

This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa says in verse 71 (which though already covered in the earlier session, is now repeated for continuity):

ॐ अस्य स्वतः रूपं - The real nature of the listening student

ॐ प्रत्यक्ता - which is the inner Self, the chith

ॐ अद्वितीयं - is the non-dual Brahman ,

ॐ निष्क्रिया कारक अपलम् - which cannot accommodate any form of duality or plurality.

'Nishkriyaa kaaraka apalam' is a crucial term in this verse. It means, that, the non-dual Brahman does not have any plurality. In what form? Ans: 'kriyaa-kaaraka-pala roopena' / in the form of action, factors of action and results of action. This is one type of plurality, explicitly expressed in the verse. Another implied type of plurality is 'pramaathru-pramaana-prameya roopena' / in the form of 'knower', 'knowing instrument' and 'known'. Therefore, the 'rise of knowledge' and 'falsification of duality / plurality' take place simultaneously. 'Brahmasathyathvam' and 'jagan mithyaathvam' are two sides of the same coin. Even though they are presented as two separate facts, in reality, they are not. In Advaitaa philosophy, 'Brahma sathyam' means 'jagan mithyaa' and 'Jagan mithyaa' means 'Brahma sathyam'.

The other systems of philosophy want to have both Brahma sathyathvam and jagath sathyathvam (as the Tamil proverb goes, both koozhu and meesa). They want a 'peaceful co-existence' (as it were) of a 'real' Brahman, a 'real' jeevaa and a 'real' world. These are the thathva thrayaa of Visistaadhvaithaa, which philosophy looks at the thathvathrayaa, as having the same order of reality. Sureswaraachaaryaa says "Unfortunately, it is not possible". Continuing the verse 71,

ॐ तद् इद्वा धीः - The mind activated by that non-dual Brahman

'Thadh', in this context, refers to the 'adhvitheeyam prathyakthaal' 'sathyam Brahman'. 'iddhaa' means activated / blessed / graced. 'Thadh iddhaa' means 'blessed by the sathyam Brahman'.

The entire world comes into existence, blessed by sathyam Brahman. What type of world? Ans: The mithyaa world.

How? Ans: The inert objects of the world borrow 'Existence' from Brahman. The sentient bodies in the world borrow two things from Brahman – 'Existence' and 'Consciousness'. Aaanandha maya kosaa borrows three things from Brahman, 'Existence', 'Consciousness' and 'aanandhaa'.

External inert world borrows sath only; four kosaa-s borrow sath and chith; one kosaa, namely, aanandha maya kosaa, borrows three things sath, chith and aanandhaa. But, what is common to all? Ans: All of them are mithyaa. External world is mithyaa, borrowing one thing. Four kosaa-s are mithyaa, borrowing two things. The fifth kosaa is also mithyaa, borrowing three things.

Asthi bhaathi priyam roopam naama cheth amsa panchakam aajya thrayam Brahma roopam jagath roopam thado dvayam. The entire world is mithyaa, borrowing either sath only or sath and chith only or sath-chith-aanandhaa. And, in this borrowing spree, who is the 'lender'? Ans: "Brahman is the 'lender' ". Brahman lends to objects and beings, either sath or sath and chith or sath, chith and aanandhaa. The 'borrowers' include our minds also. The mind also is mithyaa, borrowing sath and chith from Brahman. And, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, that mind with the borrowed sath and chith, ॐ प्रत्यगात्मा इव लक्ष्यते - appears as the real Self.

Because of the presence of the borrowed sath and chith in the mind, the mind imitates the aathmaa. The mind resembles the aathmaa because of the presence of sath and chith. But, the mind has got only borrowed sath - chith and therefore, it becomes a fake aathmaa. Aathmaa / Brahman has got original sath-chith.

Thus, every individual has got a real aathmaa and a fake aathma. And, people are not able to differentiate between the fake aathmaa (the mind) and the original aathmaa (the Consciousness). We have got ahamkaaraa, the false self, and aathmaa, the real Self, which we are not able to differentiate. All other confusions follow only from this basic confusion.

Chapter III: Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 72 & Verse 72 –

यस्मादेवम् ।

विपश्चितोऽप्यतस्तस्यामात्मभावं वितन्वते ।

दवीयस्सु इन्द्रियार्थेषु क्षीयते ह्युत्तरोत्तरम् ॥ ७२ ॥

Hence: Even the wise man sometimes sees the Self in the intellect. For him, phenomena like the senses and their objects, remote in varying degrees from this inner sense, lose their claim to be the Self, in accordance with their distance from it.

ॐ यस्मात् एवम् - Because of this reason:

What reason? Ans: "The co-existence of one real Self and one fake self, in one and the same body, the real Self being the Consciousness, the fake self being the mind, with borrowed Consciousness".

- ॐ अतः - Therefore (because of the 'resemblance' between aathmaa and ahamkaaraa) विपश्चितः अपि - even learned people / scholars,
- ॐ वितन्वते - entertain
- ॐ आत्मभावं - 'I' notion
- ॐ तस्यां - upon the fake self called ahamkaaraa.

Even people who are learned in aparaa vidhyaa, i.e. karma kaandaa and upaasanaa kaandaa, and even many people who come to Upanishad-s, are not able to differentiate between aathmaa and ahamkaaraa.

This lack of capacity for discrimination between the real Self and fake self, may be likened to the incapacity of most people to differentiate between a real diamond and a fake diamond. That is why, as is commonly known, when any gem is to be valued, it is taken to a jeweler, who is well trained on gems, has developed an 'eye' for making the 'distinction' between the 'real' and the 'fake' and is also equipped to do some special tests . This expert opinion is necessitated when the 'original' and 'fake' are identical.

The mind with borrowed Consciousness is called ahamkaara / the ego / the fake self. Even well-read / well informed scholars entertain 'I' identification upon the ahamkaaraa. That is why they continue to say "I am a saadhakaa". The idea that "I am a saadhakaa" is also an obstacle (in the path to jnaanaa), because as long as I am a saadhakaa, I look upon myself as ahamkaara.

(At this point, Swamiji says: "Mahaa vaakyam's aim is to knock off the notion 'I am a saadhakaa'. The message of the Upanishad is 'I am the aathmaa, which is eternally siddhaa'. But, very often, a student comes to me and says 'Swamiji! Your teaching is wonderful. There is no teacher like you. Thanks to you, my saadhanaa is going well. You can be proud of me, because I am a good saadhakaa. Previously, I was doing meditation for half an hour; now, I have increased it to one hour'. In saying this, the student uses the word 'I', to mean ahamkaaraa. You can use the word 'I' to mean ahamkaaraa; but never claim 'I am the ahamkaaraa'. Remember, that, the essence of the Vedhaanthic teaching is: 'how can you be saadhakaa, when you are Brahman all the time?' Saadhakathva bhaava branthi nivritthi: is mokshaa. The definition of mokshaa is 'dropping the idea 'I am a saadhakaa. But, even educated Upanidhadic students miss this important message and continue to entertain 'I' notion in the ahamkaaraa.)

'Thasyaam' (in the verse) means 'ahamkaare / ahamkaara roopa buddhau. And, this identification in vijnaana maya kosaa buddhi, later, gets transferred to mano maya kosaa, which is slightly farther, then praana maya kosaa and then to anna maya kosaa, resulting in abhimaanam in oneself, then in one's family, community, country and so on. Interestingly, the abhimaanam extends even to an alien country and culture, if there is association with that country in some form or other, say, like a son or daughter living in that country. Abhimaan aathma bhaavaa extends to all the anaathmaa-s. Of course, it is also true, that, the farther the anaathmaa, lesser the abhimaanam and the closer the anaathmaa, greater the abhimaanam.

Sureswaraacharya, here, refers to this fact, viz., that aathma bhaavam and abhimaanaa weaken as anaathmaa gets farther and farther away:

ॐ (आत्मभावं) - (Aham abhimaanaa)

ॐ क्षीयते - becomes weaker and weaker

ॐ दवीयस्सु इन्द्रियार्थेषु - towards sense objects which are remote / farther away

ॐ उत्तरोत्तरम् - in proportion to their remoteness (from ahamkaaraa).

The verse has been divided by us, into two sentences, for easier understanding; the term 'aathma bhaavam' is re-used as 'subject' of the second sentence.

The reference, here, is to the baahya anaathmaa / the external anaathmaa, which are farther away from the individual, compared to buddhi and other kosaa-s. 'Dhaveeyassu' is adjective to 'indriyaartheshu', meaning 'remote', derived from 'dhooram'.

'Uththarottharam' is an indeclinable word and is, here, adverbial to the verb 'ksheeyathe'.

That means that I am ready to renounce the farther anaathmaa, in favour of closer anaathmaa. For the sake of family members, I will renounce other people. For my own sake , I will be ready to renounce everything else. Sage Yaagnyavalkya's declaration to his wife and disciple Maithreyi (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – II.iv.5 and IV.v.6) "Na vaa arey boothaanaam kaamaaya boothaani priyaani bhavanthi; aathmanasthu kaamaaya boothaani priyaani bhavanthi" – "It is not for the sake of beings, my dear, that they are loved, but, for one's own sake, that they are loved" may be recollected here.

Thus, all the people have identification with anaathmaa, which identification is called jeeva bhaava: | And, what is the aim of mahaa vaakyam? Ans: "Jeeva bhaava thyaagha: and Brahma Bhaava sveekaara: are the aims of mahaa vaakyam".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 73:

आह । यदि वाक्यमेव यथाभूतार्थावबोधकमथ कस्य हेतोरविध्योत्थापितस्य कर्तृत्वादेरुपदेशः इत्युक्ते प्रतिविधीयते ।

An objection is raised here: 'If the proposition itself teaches the truth, why, then, is the Self taught as having agency etc., which are all attributes brought about by nescience?' This is answered now.

Here, a poorva pakshin comes and raises a question. What is that question? He says: "Hey! Sureswaraa! From the Vedaa-s, you are taking only the mahaa vaakyam-s, also called abedha vaakyam-s, which talk about jeeva Brahma aikyam, and which mention that jeevaa is asamsaari / akartha and also jeevaa is *Brahma abhinna*m. But, the very same Vedaa-s are talking about bedha also. There are numerous sentences , in fact, much more numerous than the mahaa vaakyam-s, in the Vedaa-s, which very clearly say that jeevaa is different from Brahman, that Jeevaa is samsaari and jeevaa is a kartha-boktha. According to the Veda poorvaa, a Jeevaa has to do regular poojaa-s. The entire karma kaandaa is proposing various types of Pujaa-s. That means Jeevaa has to be a kartha. The entire upasanaa kaandaa of the Vedaa-s is proposing several upaasanaa-s to be followed. This also proves that jeevaa is a kartha. In fact, I can quote very many portions from the Vedaa-s, bulkier than the mahaa vaakyaa portions, which clearly say that jeevaa is kartha, jeevaa has to do karma, jeevaa is different from Isvara, jeevaa is different form Brahman, jeevaa should worship Brahman etc. When, thus, Jeeva-Brahma bedha and jeeva samsaaraa are also talked about in the Vedaa-s, why you are you selectively repeating the mahaa vaakyam-s alone, editing the rest of the Vedaa-s?"

The poorva pakshir's argument continues. He asks Sureswaraacharya "Why are you forgetting veda vaakyam-s other than mahaa vaakyaa-s? You cannot say that these Vedic sentences are results of bhraanthi or delusion. Delusion can be there for jeevaa, but, Vedaa-s can never be accused of any delusion. If jeevaa alone talks about bedhaa, you may say attribute it to 'delusion'; but, when Vedaa itself talks about bedhaa, you cannot do so. Whatever Veda says / declares has to be a fact and not a result of 'delusion'. Therefore, jeevaa is different from Brahman, jeevaa is a samsaari and jeevaa is a karthaa-bokthaa. Your wanton ignoring of many veda-vakkyam-s, explicitly and implicitly talking about jeeva-Brahma-bedhaa, amounts to partial rejection of the Vedaa-s, which is not acceptable to me".

Naturally a controversy arises. A third person may come and ask: "If Vedaa talks about bedhaa also in certain places and Vedaa talks about abedhaa also in certain other places, then the question will be, 'which is the truth?' You cannot say that both are true, since they are mutually exclusive. If bedhaa is a fact and I am a dhaasaa of Isvaraa, then I cannot be Isvaraa. And, if I am Isvaraa, I cannot be a dhaasaa of Isvaraa. Dhaasathvam and Isvarathvam cannot co-exist. Therefore, is Vedaa a dependable pramaanam at all?".

We, as Vaidhikaa-s, will have to analyze and see which one is the intention / verdict of the Vedaa? Am I Isvaraa or Isvara dhasaa? Am I Brahma bhinna: or Brahma abhinna:?

What are the bedha vaakyam-s in the Vedaa-s? Ans: "They are innumerable"

The most famous one is the Mundakopanishad "Dvaa suparnaa sayujaa sakhaayaa samaanam vruksham parishasvajaathe thayo: anya: pippalam svaad atthi anasnan anya: abhichaakaseethi" (III. i. 1) – "Two birds with beautiful wings, which are close friends, are perched on the same tree. Among them, one eats the fruits with relish. The other looks on without eating".

In this Mundakopanishad manthraa, it is very clearly said, that, upon the body-tree, jeevaathmaa -bird is seated and Paramaathmaa-bird is also seated. Jeevaathmaa is karthaa-bokthaa, experiencing the karmapalan (thayo: anya: pippalam atthi); whereas, Paramaathmaa does not have samsaaraa (anya: anasnan abhichaakaseethi).

The poorva pakshin says: "When Mundakopanishad is so explicitly talking about two distinct aathmaa-s, how can you ignore that? If you quote mahaa vaakyam, I will quote this vaakyam".

The bedha vaadhi / dhaasa vaadhi further tells the Advaithin: "In fact, my views have better support. Not only does the Vedaa say that I am different from Brahman and that I am samsaari, it is my own experience also that I am 'miserable'. Thus, bhedhaa has two pramaanam-s, viz., saasthra pramaanam and prathyaksha anubhava pramaanam. Whereas, for eiyyam, you do not have two pramaanam-s. You have only the mahaa vaakyam and that too in an insignificant corner of the Vedaa-s. Unfortunately, you are holding on to that". This is the poorva-pakshin's view.

Even a samsaari-advaitic student may tell his teacher: "Only you are saying that we are 'wonderful'. Of course, when we listen to your soothing words that we are wonderful, we forget our problems for a short while; but, at all other times, our feeling is that we are miserable. In fact, we are coming here to hear your nice words that we are wonderful, while we know that we are really miserable".

How are we going to answer the poorva pakshin? The Advaithin's responses are very interesting. He tells the poorva pakshin: You say "Bedhaa (jeevaa's difference from Brahman) and the samsaara of the jeevaa are revealed by prathyaksham and are also revealed by saasthraa. And, therefore, bedhaa and samsaraa must be facts. The abedhaa vaakyaani must be only some consoling words. You have to interpret the abedha vaakyam, 'you are Brahman' as 'you belong to Brahman'. Bedhaa is revealed by prathyaksha. So, saasthraa also must be revealing only bedhaa' etc. But, let me tell you, that this argument which you are quoting in your favour, really speaking, is the argument which is going to be in my favour.

Sureswaraacharya, here, does not explicitly say "The argument which you claim to be in your favour is actually in my favour"; but, that is implicit in his reply. What is that reply? Three arguments are presented.

The first argument: "If bedhaa and samsaara are already revealed by prathyaksha pramaanam, then saasthraa need not reveal them. If it does, saasthraa will become redundant. A pramaanam is not a pramaanam, if it cannot give a new piece of knowledge, which cannot be gained by other pramaanam-s. If Vedaa is also going to say, that I am different from Brahman and that I am a samsaari, which I already know, how can Vedaa be considered as pramaanam? For instance, when a student is attending a Vedhaanthic class and the teacher tells him 'We are all human beings. We are all Indians. India is a poor country. So, we are all in a poor country' and such ideas which the student already knows, then the class cannot be a pramaanam. One of the four conditions to be a pramaanam (as already discussed a few sessions back) is 'anadhigathathvam' – 'status of being the only / first source of a given knowledge', a very important criterion to be declared as a pramaanam. So, if prathyaksha pramaanam has already revealed bedhaa, then, since Vedaa is considered a pramaanam, it cannot also talk about bedhaa. The poorva pakshin himself says that prathyaksha pramaanam reveals bedhaa and therefore, Vedaa will be apramaanam if its message also is considered to be bedhaa. Whereas, jeeva-Brahma- eiykyam can be a teaching of Vedaa, since it is not known through any other pramaanam". This is argument no. 1.

The second argument is: "Suppose bedhaa and samsaaraa (that I am different from Brahman and that I am a samsaari) are proved by both prathyaksha pramaanam and saasthraa and, therefore, they become 'facts', in that case, samsaaraa can never be eliminated, since what is 'fact' or 'truth', cannot be changed by any amount of saadhanaa. A truth / fact cannot be eliminated / changed, because, the very definition of 'fact' is 'that which cannot be changed'. And, therefore, if samsaaraa is a fact, then study of saasthraa is not going to be of any use. Even saasthram cannot give mokshaa. Anirmoksha prasangha dhoshaa will result". This is the second problem, if bedhaa is the truth and if 'I am a dhaasaa of Brahman' is the fact.

Then, the third argument: "Suppose that samsaaraa is a fact, and I am a samsaari now, different from Brahman, and by some karma saadhanaa or upaasanaa saadhanaa, I am going to attain mokshaa later, at a particular time and in a particular place. In such a case, that mokshaa which is attained by saadhanaa, will be limited only; it will not be very different from svarghaa, in the sense, that, just as svargaa is a reversible result, mokshaa will also be 'reversible'. Bhagavadh Githaa (Verses 20 & 21 – Chapter IX) talks of the attainment of svargalokam as being finite: "thraividhya: maam somapaa: poothapaapaa: yagnyai: ishtvaa svargathim praarthayanthe ; they punyam aasaadhya surendralokam asnanthi ; divyaan divi devaboghaan they tham bukthvaa svargalokam visaalam ksheene punye marthyalokam visanthi" – "Some people who know the three Vedaa-s, who drink the somaa juice in somaa sacrifices and who are thus purified of sins, having worshipped Me through rituals, pray for access to the heavens. Having reached the sacred world of Indra, they enjoy the celestial pleasures of gods in the heavens. Having enjoyed that vast heavenly world, they come back to the world of mortals, when their punyaa is exhausted". A mokshaa attained by saadhanaa-s will also be a temporary palam achieved in time and place, similar to the 'surendralokam' mentioned in these Githa verses. As is well known, whichever has got a 'manufacturing date' will have a 'date of expiry' also. But, mokshaa, by definition, is nithyam.

"And, therefore, our conclusion is as follows: 'Bedhaa and samsaaraa are not prathyaksha siddham. They are not 'proved' / 'established' by prathyaksha pramaanaa, but are only 'appearing' due to prathyaksha aabhaasaa, which term means 'defective prathyaksham'. Bedhaa and samsaaraa are only prathyaksha aabhaasa siddham. And, therefore, bedhaa is a braanthi / 'delusion'. Vedaa wants to first talk about this 'delusion', first emphasizing 'you think you are different from Brahman and you think that you are a samsaari', but, later stressing 'you are not different from Brahman, nor are you a samsaari. Bedhaa and samsaaraa are not revealed by Vedaa; but, they are only quoted by Vedaa as 'delusions' resulting from prathyaksha aabhaasaa.

"In short, the development of the argument is: Through prathyaksha aabhaasaa / defective prathyaksham, we have 'delusions' of bedhaa and samsaaraa. Vedaa, through the Mundakopanishad manthraa - III.i.1, is only quoting this 'delusion' of bedhaa. This Mundakopanishad manthraa is not to teach 'jeeva Isvara bedhaa'; it only quotes our delusion. Having quoted the delusion, the Upanishad exhorts 'you have to negate that delusion', through the very next manthraa (Mundakopanishad - III.i.2) "samaane vruksho purusho nimagna: aneesayaa sochathi muhyamaana: jushtam yadhaa pasyati anyam eesaamasya mahimaanam ithi veethasoka:"- "Being deluded and lost in the tree and its fruits, the first bird helplessly suffers. But, when it recognizes the other free bird and joins it, the former one also becomes free and free from grief also". The delusions of bedhaa and samsaaraa are to be eliminated. How? Again, Mundakopanishad gives the answer (III.ii.9): "sa yo ha vai paramam brahma veda brahmaiva bhavathi" – "Indeed, he, who knows that supreme Brahman, becomes Brahman itself". One has to know "'I' am Brahman, by 'knowledge'".

"Therefore, all the bedha vaakyam-s amount to sruthi only quoting our delusion and all abedhaa vaakyam-s are sruthi teaching the eikyam. In other words: All the bedha vaakyaani are braanthi anuvaadhaka vaakyaani and all abedha vaakyaani are pramaana vaakyaani.

"An analogy will make this clear. Sruthi's reference to the delusion of jeevathma-Praramaathma-bedhaa and its final declaration or teaching of jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eiykyam jeeva-Brahma-eiykyam may be likened to the statement "that small star in the sky is very, very big". What does this statement mean? When I say 'the small star in the sky', the word 'small' is quoting only our delusion, caused by our prathyaksha aabhaasa pramaanam. The 'smallness' of the star is not a fact revealed by prathyaksha pramaanam. It is defective prathyaksham or prathyaksha aabhaasaa which makes the stars 'appear' small, when, in reality, the stars are huge. But, still, the prathyakshaa shows 'little' stars and I also use the word 'little' star; but, when I use the adjective 'little' or 'small', that adjective must be within 'quotes'. It is not revelation of the fact. It is a quotation of the delusion. Having quoted the delusion, what do I want to teach? I want to teach that the 'small' star is 'big' or 'huge'. Similarly, you, the 'samsaari jeevaa - the so-called 'samsaari jeevaa, where 'samsaari' is within 'quotes'- who was considered a dhaasaa, kartha and bokthaa in the 'dva suparnaa' slokaa, seemingly samsaari, because of prathyaksha aabhaasaa, is, in reality, Brahman. That is the teaching.

"Similarly, when I say thvam, the word, by itself, reveals limitation only, since the word 'thvam' literally means 'you', and excludes 'I', 'he', 'she', 'it' etc. That seemingly limited 'you', the seemingly limited samsaari jeevaa is Brahman, in which the differences 'you', 'he', 'she', 'it', 'I' are all absent".

That 'bedha vaakyaani are bhraanthi anuvaadhaka vaakyaani' is the topic of the following slokaa-s.

180: Chapter III, Verses 73 to 75 (03-04-2010)

In the Vedhaanthic scriptures, there are many statements which indicate 'difference' between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa. All those Vedhaanthic statements, which indicate jeevaathma-Paramaathma-bedhaa are called bedha vaakyaani. We also find several Vedhaanthic statements, which talk about the non-difference or oneness between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa. All such Vedhaanthic statements which talk about jeevaathma-Paramaathma-abadhaa are called abadha vaakyaani.

Thus, we find both bedha vaakyaani and abadha vaakyaani in the Vedic scriptures. Naturally, a student / seeker will be confused as to which one should be taken as the primary teaching of the Vedaa-s, whether jeevaathma-Paramaathma-bedhaa or jeevaathma-Paramaathma-abadhaa. The student, naturally, cannot accept both types of statements together, because they are mutually contradictory or exclusive. Acceptance of bedha vaakyaani will force him to reject abadha vaakyaani and, similarly, acceptance of abadha vaakyaani will mean rejection of bedha vaakyaani. At the same time, since a Vaidhikaa is to accept the whole Vedaa as pramaanam, he has no right to accept one portion of the Vedaa and reject another portion. Partial validity of the Vedaa is not proper for a Vaidhikaa. Such partial validity amounts to ardha jaratheeya nyaayaa, i.e., similar to saying one part of a person is seventy years old and another part of the same person is forty years old. Ardha jaratheeya nyaayaa, obviously, is not logical. It is not possible.

Therefore, all the aachaaryaa-s have grappled with the problem and have struggled to reconcile the bedha and abadha vaakyaani in such a manner, that while the central Vedic teaching is properly interpreted, the whole of Vedaa is also validated. Non-Advaithic aachaaryaa-s give more validity to bedha vaakyaani and without rejecting abadha vaakyaani, look at them as 'artha vaadam' or glorifying exaggerations/ exaggerated glorifications. Whereas, we, in Advaithaa, talk about abadha vaakyaani as the thaathparya vaakyaani; and, hold, that though there are bedhaa vaakyaani in the Vedaa-s, there is no thaathparyam in them.

Naturally, we will be expected to justify why we say there is thaathparyam only in abadha vaakyaani and no thaathparyam in bedha vaakyaani. In this context alone, we have to use the shadlinghaani, in line with the axiom, 'upakramo-upasamhaarau abhyaaso poorvathaa palam arthavaado upapaathi cha lingam thaathparya nirnaye. We heavily use many meemaamsaa arguments, to establish our contentions, 'abedha vaakye eva thaathparyam asthi; bedha vaakye thaathparyam naasthi'. Among many such arguments used, one important argument is discussed in the context of the samanvaya adhikaranam ('thaththu samanvayaath soothram) of Brahmasoothraa-s. (B.S.1.1.4). Goudapaadhaachaaryaa also expounds on this argument, in the third chapter of his Maandookya Kaarilaa.

The essence of this argument is: "Sruthi itself, in several places, condemns bedha dharsanam. In such places, bedha dharsanam is very strongly criticized by sruthi, pointing out that bedha dharsanam only reinforces samsaaraa. One example is Katopanishad manthraa II.i.10, which declares "Mruthyo: sa mruthyum aapnothi ya: iha naaneva pasyathi" – "One who sees here plurality, as it were, goes from death to death". There are hundreds of similar statements in the Vedaa, through which Vedaa itself criticizes bedha dharsanam / 'perception of difference'.

"If, thus, Vedaa itself criticizes bedha dharsanam, obviously, Veda cannot teach bedhaa. Simultaneously criticizing bedhaa and teaching bedhaa will only make Vedaa lose its credibility. Since, thus, Vedaa cannot afford to criticize bedhaa in one place and teach bedhaa in another place, we have to conclude, that bedhaa, though mentioned by Vedaa, is not the teaching of Vedaa. Therefore, wherever bedha vaakyaani are there, they should be understood as only making a reference to the prathyaksha siddha bedhaa (perceived differences) and not 'teaching' bedhaa. Statements expressing what are already known, are called 'anuvadhaka vaakyaani'.

"Advaitins' contention is that, all bedhaa vaakyam-s are anuvadhaka vaakyam-s, (meaning, that there is no thaathparyam / teaching in them) and that, only abedha vaakyam-s are the thaathparya vaakyam-s, which are meant for teaching".

Naturally the following questions arise: "Why should Vedaa do the anuvadaa of bedhaa? If it does not want to teach bedhaa, why should it talk of bedhaa at all?" In reply, several reasons are given. Out of them, two are given below:

The first reason is, that, Vedaa is fully aware that not all students / aspirants are ready to receive the teaching of abedhaa, in the initial stages of their Vedaanthic study; in fact, even after study of Vedhaanthaa for a long time, most students find it difficult to claim "I and God are one". They are more comfortable with dhaasabhaavaa than Swamibhaavaa. There are many such students / aspirants, who are not mentally prepared to accept abedhaa.

Further, Vedaa also recognizes, that, Bedha dharsanam has the utility of preparing the mind, through karma anushtaanam and upaasanaa-s; based on these two facts, with an intention to prepare the students, Vedaa allows bedhaa to continue for some time, in the initial stages of an aspirant's spiritual journey. Even though bedhaa is not the message of the Vedaa, Vedaa has to accept bedhaa initially for some time, because bedhaa is useful for making the necessary 'preparation' and acquiring the necessary qualification for abedha jnaanam. Until the students are ready, vedaa 'accepts' bedhaa, but not with an intention to 'teach' bedhaa.

The second reason is, that, Vedaa will have to talk about bedhaa, for negating the bedhaa. Naturally, A wrong notion will have to be cited / quoted, for pointing out that it is a wrong notion.

An analogy was given earlier. Any child has got the notion that stars are small. This is because that is how the child 'experiences' the stars. That 'stars are small' is prathyaksha anubhava siddhaa. Therefore, the child gets the thought / notion that the stars are small. Added to this, in the school also, the child is taught the popular English rhyme 'Twinkle, twinkle little star', by none other than the child's educated teacher, whom the child is expected to respect. Thus, for the child, the prathyaksha pramaanam is supported by sabdha or vaakya pramaanam also.

Therefore, with both sabda pramaanam and prathyaksha pramaanam, the child gets the wrong notion that the stars are small. How can this wrong notion be corrected? Obviously, there is only one way. The child has to be told: 'That small star you are talking about, is really a big star'. In this sentence, 'the small star is a big star', 'small star' is also mentioned and 'big star' is also mentioned; and, the two adjectives 'small' and 'big', are contradictory. Obviously, a 'small' star cannot be 'big' star and a 'big' star cannot be 'small' star. Because of this contradiction, it must be concluded that one adjective must be anuvaadhakam and the other, the bodhakam. When the teacher uses the word 'small', he does not intend to teach that the star is small. He is quoting that adjective 'small', only for the purpose of displacing the perceived 'smallness' with the factual 'bigness' of the star.

The mahaa vaakyam is similar. When the mahaa vaakyam 'thatthvamas' wants to say 'jeevaathmaa is Paramaathma', the upanishad uses the word 'thadh' for Paramaathmaa and the word 'thvam' to indicate jeevaathma. The pronoun 'thadh', meaning, 'that', reflects the 'seeming' remoteness of Paramaathmaa in Vaikuntam or Kailaasam. By the word 'thvam', the seemingly closer 'jeeva' is indicated. Since, both adjectives 'jeeva' and 'Parama' are there in the equation, one must be anuvadhakam and the other must be the bodhakam (teaching). Anuvadhakam is to be displaced and bodhakam is to be retained. Which one is to be known as anuvadhakaa? Ans: The 'jeeva' adjective should be taken as anuvadhakam. I am not jeevaathmaa. The 'jeeva' adjective is only 'quoted' by Vedaa, as anuvadhaa. Karthruthvam is anuvadhaa; bokthruthvam is anuvadhaa; samsaarithvam is anuvadhaa. The 'akarthruthvam' / 'abokthruthvam' / 'asamsaarithvam' taken from the 'Paramaa', should be brought on to 'myself'.

The poorva pakshin, not knowing these facts (the two reasons given above) raises the question "Why should the Vedaa talk about bedhaa at all?", in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 73 . In reply to him, that 'bedha vaakyaani are only anuvadhaka vaakyaani', is what is taught in the verses that follow.

- ॐ यदि वाक्यं एव यथा भूतार्थावबोधकं - "If the Vedaa is teaching the reality of non-duality / jeevaathma-Paraaathma-abadhaa,
- ॐ अथ: - then / in that case,
- ॐ कस्य हेतोः - for what purpose
- ॐ अविध्योत्थापितस्य कर्तृत्वादेः उपदेशः - does the Vedaa teach karthruthvam, bokthruthvam, samsaarithvam, jeevathvam and bedhaa etc., which are all attributes brought out by nescience?"

The suffix 'aadhi' (etc.) in 'karthruthvaadhi', refers to the five factors, karthruthvam, bokthruthvam, samsaarithvam, jeevathvam and bedhaa.

Where does the Vedaa talk of all these? Ans: The Mundaka manthraa 'dvaa suparnaa sayujaa sakhaayaa' etc (III. 3 .1) is a typical example.

According to this manthraa, two birds are perched on one and the same tree – the jeevaathmaa bird and the Paramaathmaa bird; and, they are talked of, as distinct from each other. Jeevaathmaa is a bokthaa; and, Paramaathmaa is abokthaa. 'Thayo: anya: pippalam svaadhu aathi' means 'among them, one (the jeevaathmaa bird) is bokthaa / 'anya: anasnan abhichaakaseethi' means 'the other one, being abokthaa, is only a witness'. The poorva pakshin asks: "This manthraa is in the Upanishad. You generally use the adjective 'avidhyotthaapithaani' for 'karthruthvaadhi' | The adjective means 'born out of and nurtured by confusion'. Then, do you want to say that the Upanishad is also confused? If 'bedhaa' is confusion, why should the Upanishad teach the 'confusion'?"

The crucial mistake the poorva pakshin commits, is the use of the word 'upadesa:'- 'teaching'. Our (Advaitins) answer is going to be: "It is not upadesa: | It is anuvaadhaa". Obviously, the poorva pakshin is unable to distinguish the difference between upadesa: and anuvaadha: The difference is very, very important, in Meemaamsaa.

ॐ इति उक्तेः (सति) - If such a question is raised,
ॐ प्रति विधीयते - the answer is given.

Chapter III: Verse 73 –

भ्रान्तिप्रसिद्धान्ध्यार्थं तत्तत्त्वं भ्रान्तिबाधया ।
अयं नेत्युपदिश्येत तथैवं तत्त्वमित्यपि ॥ ७३ ॥

When something is the object of an illusory apprehension, it is first of all referred to as it is known under the illusion and then its real nature is taught by the removal of the illusion by saying 'This is not so'. So is the case in 'That thou art' also.

Here, Sureswaraacharya points out that 'bedhaa' is not upadesa:; it is only anuvaadha:; i.e., 'quoting' or 'referring to' the mistaken notion of the student.

ॐ अनूध्य - Re-stating / quoting / anuvaadham krithvaa
ॐ भ्रान्ति प्रसिद्ध्य - an universally misconceived
ॐ अर्थ - idea,

The term 'prasiddhya' conveys that the bhraanthi / misconception is an universal misconception, similar to the 'smallness' of stars. The misconception of the 'smallness' of the stars is universal, whereas, in the well-known rope-snake example, 'mistaking the rope for a snake' need not happen to all the people. There are many misconceptions, which are individualistic or belonging to a small group of people. And, there are also many misconceptions which are 'universal', like the 'smallness' of the stars, which is a wrong perception not of one human being, but, of the entire humanity experiencing the stars as small. In the same manner, jeeva-Isvara-bedhaa is not a misconception of one person, but is an universal misconception.

तद् तत्त्वं उपदिश्येत - the reality is revealed

भ्रान्ति बाधया - by the removal of the misconception,

अयं न इति - by asserting 'this is not so'.

The essence of the verse should be grasped. It points out, that, for negating any wrong notion, the wrong notion will have to be necessarily quoted first, in clear terms, for the very purpose of negation. This is the general rule. In the same manner, the delusion of jeeva-Isvara-bedhaa can also be negated, only after quoting the 'delusion'.

Later, Sureswaraacharya himself gives the example of the 'stars' and their apparent 'smallness'. To proceed with the verse:

ॐ तथा एव - So is the case

ॐ तत्त्वमित्यपि - in 'thath thvam asi' mahaa vaakyam also.

In Swamiji's own words: "What does Sureswaraacharya mean by this? When it is clearly stated by the mahaa vaakyam, that jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa, it means that, the 'jeevaa' adjective is only a misconception. That, in turn, means none of us is a 'jeevaa'. All of us are none other than 'Brahman'".

Noting a titter going around, as he says this, Swamiji continues: "In fact, even as I say this, many of our students are laughing. Obviously, they think that I am joking; they are not willing to take my statements seriously. It is because our expectation generally is that we will 'reach' / 'become' Brahman, only sometime in the future. We are unable to give up this 'reaching' notion or 'becoming' notion. That's why Upaniishad is forced to assert repeatedly 'you are not jeevaa at all' ".

In the following slokaa-s, Sureswaraacharya explains the extension of the general rule 'for negating a delusion / wrong notion, the delusion has to be necessarily quoted or mentioned', to the mahaa vaakyam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 74 :

इममर्थं द्रष्टान्तेन बुद्धावारोहयति ।

This principle is brought home through an analogy:

ॐ इमं अर्थ - This particular method (of 'displacement of a wrong notion with the help of the right knowledge, by mentioning both the wrong notion and the right knowledge')

ॐ आरोहयति - is brought home

ॐ बुद्धौ - to the intellect of the student,

ॐ द्रष्टान्तेन - through an example

This is a well known example. The example comes in the slokaa that follows.

Chapter III: Verse 74

स्थाणुः स्थाणुरितीवोक्तिर्न नृबुद्धिं निरस्यति ।

व्यनुवादात्तथैवोक्तिर्भ्रान्तिं पुंसो न बाधते ॥ ७४ ॥

If a man merely repeats 'This is a post, this is a post', without reference to the fact that it has been mistaken for a man so far, he does not succeed in removing the illusion that it is a man. Similarly if it is simply said 'You are that', without referring to what the subject is taken to be in illusion, that illusion about the Self does not get removed.

Sthaanu: means a pillar. This is the well-known, often-quoted example of mistaking a post or a pillar as a man, generally taken as a thief, to indicate the reaction of 'fear'. 'Mistaking a pillar for a thief' is the example taken here.

A certain person sees a pillar in semi-darkness and mistakes it for a thief; and, another person, who has got the correct vision, sees the pillar. Suppose the second person wants to correct the mistake of the first person, what is the method of correcting the mistake? He has to say "the 'thief' that you are seeing, is nothing other than a pillar". He will have to necessarily quote the word 'thief', even though in his vision, the thief does not exist at all and therefore, he must not be using the word 'thief'. Still he is forced to use the word 'thief', for the sake of displacement of the wrong perception of the first person. Suppose this person who intends to correct the first person, wants to avoid the word 'thief', because he does not see a thief at all and therefore, without using the word 'thief', just says 'there is a pillar'. What will happen? The first person will now mistake that there are two things. He will now wrongly conclude: 'I see a thief; this man says there is a pillar. Now I have understood that there is a thief and there is a pillar also. Probably the thief is standing near a pillar, which I am not seeing'. Therefore, by saying merely 'there is a pillar', instead of saying 'the 'thief' you see, is, in reality, a pillar', the second person will not be able to correct the mistake of the first person.

In the same manner, many people studying Vedhaanthaa / mahaa vaakyaa conclude 'I have Paramaathmaa within me'. Getting this idea 'I have Paramaathmaa within me', is also a blunder. That only shows that the misconception 'I am only a jeevaathmaa' is still not getting eliminated. Instead, the revised conclusion is: "I am a jeevathmaa. I am a samsaari. Within me, there is Paramaathmaa, who is asamsaari". Unfortunately, this knowledge also is a misconception and is also of no use. If you believe that you are a jeevaathmaa, having a Paramaathmaa 'within' you, you will get no benefit at all, because, you will continue to be a samsaari.

(In a lighter vein): Instead of removing your pathetic condition, you may start sympathizing with Paramaathmaa also. That will be the case, if it is wrongly taught.

As we discussed earlier, in the example, 'mistaking a pillar for a thief', the second person who is trying to correct the mistake of the first person, cannot stop with saying 'there is a pillar'. That statement will not educate the first person. The only educating statement is 'the so-called 'thief' is none other than a pillar'. By this statement alone, the 'thief', which is a misperception, gets displaced by 'pillar', the right perception. Only in the displacement of the 'thief', the fear of the first person goes away. Similarly, jeevathvam will have to be eliminated; otherwise, any amount of Vedhanthic study, retaining the idea 'I am a jeevaa', will not solve the problem. The student with such an understanding may claim "I have understood Brahman very well"; but, will still say, "after death, I should not come back". Even after a long study of Vedhanthaa, the aim of some of the Vedhanthic students is not to be born again. They want to take themselves to be jeevaa-s; they want to continue in the triangular format; they want to die painlessly, never to come back. This idea of mokshaa, is a result of their not dropping the idea that they are jeevaa-s.

Even the term jeevan mukthi should be understood as a misnomer, by an advanced Advaitic seeker, for whom, there are no two different mukthi-s, as jivan mukthi and videha mukthi. There is only one mukthi, with the firm convictions “‘I’ was Brahman; ‘I’ am Brahman; ‘I’ will ever be Brahman. The world is a ‘drama’ staged by maayaa, which, I watch through this body for some time”.

Thus, the jeeva bhaavaa should be displaced. That will never happen, unless the teacher talks of the wrong concept of bedhaa first, for the very purpose of negating it, similar to the example, where the word ‘thief’ has to be quoted for correcting the wrong perception of ‘thief’, to the right understanding of ‘pillar’.

ॐ 'स्थाणुः स्थाणुः' इति उक्ति :- The statement ‘pillar is a pillar’

This is a statement addressed to the person shivering with the wrong perception of a thief in the pillar. Such a statement:

ॐ न निरस्यति - will not eliminate

ॐ नृबुद्धिं - the misperception of a man / thief (in the pillar),

The term ‘nrbuddhim’ can be replaced by the term ‘chorabuddhim’, meaning ‘the misperception of a thief (in the pillar)’.

ॐ व्यनुवादात् - since the wrong perception of the ‘thief’ is not specifically quoted .

‘Vi anuvaadhaath’ means ‘anuvaadha abhaavaath’ i.e., ‘because of the absence of a specific mention of / reference to the wrong perception’ . When ‘vi’ is used as a prefix to a noun, the compound word conveys the opposite meaning of the noun, much in the same way as ‘निर्’ or ‘अ’ .

How should the quotation / mention / anuvadhaa be done? The statement should be “The so-called ‘thief’ that you are seeing, is a pillar”. The misperception of the ‘thief’ must be specifically brought in, by the person who wants to correct the misperception. The anuvadhaa is extremely important. When it is not there, the misperception is not eliminated. Up to this is the example. Now, to mahaa vaakyam:

ॐ तथा एव उक्तिः - A similar statement without the bedha anuvaadhaa / bedha anuvaadha rahitha ukthi:

ॐ पुम्सः भ्रान्तिं न बाधते - will not eliminate the misconception (of jeevathvam) in an individual (the aspirant).

A statement without the specific bedha anuvaadhaa will not negate the misconception of bedhaa. Therefore, the sruthi has to say 'jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa', in order to negate 'jeevathvam'; and, in that statement, the word 'jeevaa' should be within quotes, since, it is only an anuvaadha and not an upadesaa and also, since, the ultimate reality is, that, we are not jeevaa-s.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 75:

यस्माच्छ्रोतृप्रसिद्धानुवाद्येव त्वमितिपदं तस्मादुद्दिश्यमानस्थत्वात् दुःखित्वादेरविवक्षितत्वमेव ।
विधीयमानत्वे हि सति विरोधप्रसङ्गो न तु विधीयमानानूध्यमानयोरिति । स्वप्रधानयोर्हि
पदयोर्विरोधाशङ्का सामान्यालिङ्गितत्वात्तयोर्न विपर्यये ।

Since the term 'Thou' merely recalls what the subject is ordinarily taken to be, the subjection to suffering etc. are parts of the connotation of the subject and they are not intended to be affirmed. Only if they also were predicated, there would be contradiction between them and the new predication embodied in 'Thou art that'. There can be no conflict between what is simply referred to as connotation of the subject and what is predicated anew. Only between principal factors, there could be a contradiction, as they are universal in their significance and not when they are not so:

Here, Sureswarachaaryaa says, that, if this fact, namely that, 'the reference to bedhaa is only a necessary anuvaadhaa', is not understood, mahaa vaakyam will be subject to misinterpretation. This misinterpretation is done by visishtaadvaitin-s and dvaitin-s. When the visishtaadvaitin-s read the mahaa vaakyam, the first thing they see is the obvious contradiction in the statement, exactly like the statement 'the 'small star' is a big star'. In this example, if you do not understand that the term 'small star' is only within quotes, i.e., it is only an anuvaadhaa and not a teaching, then the statement will certainly look like a contradiction and give rise to the question 'how can a small star be big star'? And, if you desire to 'resolve' this contradiction, you will tend to interpret the sentence to mean 'the small star is a part of the big star',

To repeat: If, instead of understanding 'smallness' as a misperception and, therefore, removing the 'smallness', you take the statement at face value, viz., 'the small star is a big star', it may lead to a misunderstanding that the small star is a part of a big star. The 'small star' misconception is retained and you make that misconceived small star, as a part of a big star.

In a similar manner, the visishtaadvaitin argues: "In the mahaa vaakyam, the word 'thvam' refers to 'jeevaathmaa', because it is addressed to the student. 'Jeevaathmaa' is evidently a samsaari. The word 'thadh' means 'that' and this very demonstrative pronoun 'thadh' denotes something far away / remote and, therefore, the seemingly remote Paramaathmaa. The Paramaathmaa, by nature, is asamsaari. 'You' are the 'samsaari jeevaathmaa' here, and 'that' ever-free Parmaathmaa is there in the remote Vaikuntaa. Therefore, it is impossible for the jeevaathmaa to be the Paramaathmaa. Since, thus, mahaa vaakyam contains a contradiction, the only way to resolve this contradiction is to understand that you are a part / sareeram / amsam of Paramaathmaa. You should understand 'Chidh achidh visishta: Vishnu:' | Every jeevaa is a small limb of the big Vishnu. You are like a minute insect, hanging on to one corner of Vishnu and every individual is a distinct small jeevaathmaa'. And, according to visishtaadvaitam, the size of jeevaathmaa, is that of an atom.

Earlier, the Visishtaadvaitin was under the impression that his aathmaa is as big as his body; but after a study of mahaa vaakyam, his concept of the size of the jeevaathmaa changes from madhyama parimaanaa, to anu parimaanaa. Instead of 'expanding' and understanding "I am limitless, nithya:, sarvagatha:, sthaanu:", he runs away with the idea that he is an anu / an atom. His interpretation is: "Every living individual is an anu jeevaathmaa; there is one infinite Paramaathmaa; all of us, 'jeevaathmaa-s', are 'sticking' to that infinite Paramaathmaa".

What is the cause of this misinterpretation of the Visishtaadvaitin-s? Ans: It is because, they see a permanent contradiction between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa; they do not realize that the contradiction is only because of the reason, that, while interpreting the mahaa vaakyam, they have retained the misconception that the word 'thvam' (in the mahaa vaakyam) is equal to jeevaa. The jeevaa adjective has been retained by them. Mahaa vaakyam is to be used not to retain the jeevathvam, but to displace the jeevathvam, similar to the 'smallness' of the star being displaced by 'vastness', in the example. If you retain the jeevathvam, the only conclusion you will come to, is, that, jeevaa-s are all parts of Paramaathmaa, as they have done. But, that conclusion is not going to save the jeevaa, because the 'miserable' adjective will continue. Previously, I was a 'miserable individual'; now, I know I am a 'miserable part of Paramaathmaa'. The only improvement is that the 'individual' becomes a 'part of Paramaathmaa'. But the 'miserable' adjective will not be replaced; it will go away, only when the jeevathvam is displaced. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says: "The 'seeming' contradiction, you have to know, how it is not".

The first sentence 'yasmaath srothru prasiddha anuvadhi eva thvamithi padahm thasmaath uddhisyaamaanasthathvaath dhu:khithvaadhe: avivakshithathvam eva', can be split into two short sentences, by removing the word 'yasmaath' and re-writing the sentence as: 'Srothru prasiddha thvamithi padham anuvaadhi eva (bhavathi) | Thasmaath uddhisyaamaanasthathvaath dhu:khithvaadhe: avivakshithathvam eva |'

ॐ श्रोतृप्रसिद्धं त्वं इति पदं अनुवादि एव (भवति) - When the mahaa vaakyam uses the word 'thvam', even though the word refers to the jeevaathmaa only, the use of the 'jeevaa' adjective is only 'quoting' our misconception. 'Srothruprasiddha anuvaadhi' is adjective to the word 'thvam'.

The implication of the sentence: "It is not a 'teaching' of 'my' jeevathvam"

ॐ तस्मात् - Therefore,

ॐ उद्दिश्यमानस्थत्वात् - since the word 'jeevaa' is used by the Vedaa for the sake of 'quoting' the misconception,

'uddhisyaamaanam' is a technical word and means 'quoting'. By the adjective 'jeevaa', sruthi is only 'quoting' the view / perception of the student.

ॐ दुःखित्वादेः अविवक्षितत्वं एव - the sorrow etc., connected with the jeevaa are not intended to be taught by the Vedaa.

'Dhu:kithvam' means 'sorrow' and includes karthruthvam, bokthruthvam, samsaaraa etc.; 'avivakshithathvam' means 'not intended to be part of the teaching'. The sruthi mahaa vaakyam does not intend to include dhu:kithvam, karthruthvam, bokthruthvam, samsaaraa etc. in the jeevaathmaa. This can be understood by recollecting the example statement 'the 'small' star is a big star', where the word 'small' is used by the teacher, but is not to be included in the nature of the star.

Then, why does the guru use it? Ans: As already explained, he is quoting the misconception of the student, for elimination and displacement, not for inclusion.

Visishtaadhvaithin-s do not note this point; so, they include / retain the dhu:kithvam in the thvam padha jeevaathmaa. What will happen? Ans: 'Jeevaathma-Paramaathma eikyam' will not be acceptable. How can the ever-sorrowful jeevaathmaa be equal to the nithya aanandha Paramaathmaa?

Therefore, (i.e. since the sorrowful jevaathmaa cannot be the joyous Paramaathmaa), they say that the sorrowful jeevaathmaa can be only a part of the joyous Paramaathmaa. But, in this approach, a big disservice is done by them. What is that? Ans: The joyous Paramaathmaa will be subject to misery. If, as a miserable individual you go to any lokaa, you will be samsaari and you will make all others around you also, including Paramaathmaa, samsaari-s.

Swamiji's exhortation to the students: "You should understand: "I' am asamsaari". When? Ans: Not by going to Vaikuntaa, without ever returning. You should have the convictions: 'I am asamsaari here and now. What are called sorrow, misery etc. are nothing but maayaa naama roopaani. Goudapaadhaacchaaryaa asserts in his Maandookya kaarika (vaithathyaprakaranam – verse 31) – 'svapnamaaye yathaa dhrushtey gandharvanagaram yathaa | Thathaa visvamidham dhrushtam vedhaantheshu vichakshanai:' – 'In Vedhaanthaa, this universe is seen by the wise in the same way as dream and magic are seen or the 'city in the sky' is seen'. All miseries are like dreams or magic shows. The world and events in the world will be seen by Vedhaanthin-s, only as real as the images formed by the clouds in the sky. As long as you are 'miserable' / a samsaari, wherever you go, even at the feet of Bhagavaan Vishnu, you will not be comfortable. 'Samsarithvam and 'jeevathvam' should be eliminated from the system. And, there is only one way, which is, that, the implied word 'jeevaa' in the mahaa vaakyam, should be understood as anuvadhaa and not 'teaching'".

Reverting to the text:

ॐ विधीयमानत्वे हि सति - If the 'jeevathvam' of 'thvam padhaartha' is taken as part of the 'teaching', ॐ विरोधप्रसङ्गः (भवति) - then there will be contradictions.

As a consequence, jeevaathma-Paramaathma-eiykyam will be unacceptable. That would mean that jeevaathmaa would remain jeevaathmaa and samssari. Wherever you go, you will continue to be a samsaari. Then, where is vimochanam?"

181: Chapter III, Verse 75 (10-04-2010)

A number of different branches of science will have to be applied while analyzing Mahaavaakyaa-s. In these portions, Sureswaraacharya is indicating the modes of application of those different branches of science, especially Meemaamsaa saasthram and Vyaakarana saasthram.

Meemaamsaa saasthram is the 'science of interpretation' in general and the 'science of Vedic interpretation' in particular. By applying the meemaamsaa saasthram, we have to first find out whether the 'thathvamsi' vaakyam is used by the saasthraa-s seriously (i.e., with thaathparyam / a teaching) or casually (without any thaathparyam) / whether it is a thaathparya vaakyam or an athaathparya vaakyam?

The following example for an athaathparya vaakyam was presented in earlier contexts: In a Mathematics text book for schools, a number of problems or sums are given. One particular sum goes "A pen costs Rs.37/50P. Then find out what will be the cost of 53 pens?" When this sum is given in the text book, what is the intention of the author? Ans: "He wants to find out whether the student knows how to multiply (37.50 x 53) and arrive at the right answer i.e., the questioner wants to know whether the student can do 'multiplication' properly or not". In other words, the focus of the author is on 'multiplication'. For that purpose, he requires some incidental data for the multiplication exercise; and, therefore, in a purely hypothetical manner, he states that a pen costs Rs.37/50P, which figure may not at all reflect the true prevalent market price of a pen. Therefore, we should not use the Mathematics text book to find out whether the current cost of a pen in the market is really Rs.37/50P. or more or less. Why do we not take the Mathematics text book as a pramaanam to find out the cost of a pen? Ans: "Because the Mathematics text book does not have the thaathparyam in 'teaching' the cost of a pen; i.e., the true cost of a pen is not the thaathparyam or the subject of the Mathematic text book". In meemaamsaa language, this statement in the text book, talking about the cost of a pen is an athaathparya vaakyam with regard to the price of the pen and not a pramaana vaakyam. In meemaamsaa saasthram, they present a general rule in similar situations, as 'thaathparya abhaavaath praamaanyam naasthi'.

Similarly, when Veda is studied, care should be taken to find out as to what are the Vedic statements that are thaathparya vaakyaani and what are the statements, which, even though they are veda vaakyaani, are not thaathparya vaakyaani. What is the intention of this extra care? Ans: "Just as, in the example of the Mathematic text book, the intention / thaathparyam is only multiplication and not the true cost of a pen, the thaathparyam of a given Vedic statement may, at times, be different from the literal text of the statement". For arriving at this thaathparyam alone, we have an elaborate method, consisting of six indicatory factors, viz., upakrama-upasamhaarau, abhyaasa:, apoorvathaa, palam, arthavaadha: and upapatthi: | By resorting to these six indicatory factors, which belong to meemaamsaa saasthraa, we aim to find out whether a particular statement is thaathparya vaakyam or not.

After such an analysis only, Advaitic Aachaaryaa-s have come to the conclusion that 'thathvamasī' is a thaathparya vaakyam and not an athaathparya vaakyam. 'Thathvamasī vaakye praamaanyam asthi' is the conclusion arrived at, by them, through application of meemaamsa saasthraa.

Thereafter, they enter into Vyaakarana saasthram or grammatical analysis, which alone, Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering into, in this portion.

This topic had been discussed by us, in earlier contexts also.

To elaborate on this grammatical analysis:

Every sentence has to have a 'subject'. Without a 'subject', a sentence is not possible. Similarly, any sentence should have a predicate also. An example was given in earlier discussions, viz., the sentence 'the Everest peak is 8844 meters high'. In this sentence, 'Everest' is the subject and '8844 meters' is the predicate.

In Vyaakaranaa, they make an analysis as to which one of the two, namely, the 'subject' and 'predicate' in a statement, is the information that is conveyed and which one is not the information conveyed. Suppose the person listening to the above sentence, does not know that there is a peak called Everest. In that case, i.e., when he does not know the subject itself, obviously, the predicate cannot have any relevance at all, since the listener does not even know that such a peak is existing. In that situation, what should be the speaker's approach? How should he frame his speech? Ans: "He should start with saying 'there is a mountain peak called Everest'". That will be the appropriate method.

If, therefore, a speaker just says 'Everest is 8844 meters high', obviously, his assumption is that Everest is a peak known to the listener. Such a 'known subject' is called 'uddhisyamaanam' in Sanskrit grammar. The 'uddhisyamaanam' has always to be a 'known factor' and not a 'revealed information'.

Rule no. 1 in Sanskrit grammar, is, thus, "The 'subject' of a sentence / the 'uddhisyamaanam' is not a 'revealed information'; it is only a 're-stated information'". In the example given, the listener already knows that there is a peak called Everest. Therefore, in the sentence given as example, the subject 'Everest' is 'uddhisyamaanam'.

To generalize: The subject in any sentence is only a re-statement of an already known factor. Using Sanskrit terms, this can be stated as "an uddhisyamaanam is always anuvadhakam", the term anuvadhakam meaning 're-statement of a known factor'.

Proceeding to the next step, since the 'subject' of a sentence is only a re-statement of an already 'known factor', it is not revealing any new thing. To use Sanskrit terms, since uddhisyamaanam is an anuvadhakam, it is not a pramaanam, since the very definition of a pramaanam is 'that which teaches you something new'. 'Pramaa janakam pramaanam' meaning 'Pramaanam is a producer of knowledge'.

To consolidate all these, in Sanskrit: "yathra yathra uddhisyamaanathvam thathra thathra anuvadhakathvam; yathra yathra anuvadhakathvam thathra thathra apramaanathvam".

Thus, in any statement, the 'subject' is always 'apraamaanam'. Uddhisyamaanam = anoodhyamaanam / anuvadhakam = apramaanam.

(There is a text called samkshepa saareerakam, authored by a disciple of Sureswaraacharya, called Sarvagnayaathmendra Saraswathi. Those who read this work will feel that he is literally a sarvagnya: | Sarvagnayaathmendra Saraswathi has written this work 'samkshepa saareerakam' in verse form, summarizing the Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa. In this text, he elaborately discusses this topic, viz. uddhisyamaanam = anoodhyamaanam = apraamaanam).

To go back to the example, when the statement 'Everest is 8844 meters high' is made, if the listener already happens to know that information, viz., the height of the peak also, then the sentence becomes redundant and purposeless, since both the 'subject' and 'predicate' are known to the listener. Therefore, when a speaker makes a statement, his assumption is that the 'predicate' in the sentence, is an unknown matter or a new information to the listener. This 'unknown' predicate is called 'vidheeyamaanam', which means a 'new information given to listener, which the listener does not know'. And, therefore, a vidheeyamaanam is pramaanam, i.e., the information that is being generated by the speaker.

To consolidate these facts: In any meaningful sentence, uddhisyaamaanam and vidheeyamaanam will be there. Uddhisyaamaanam is apraamaanam; vidheeyamaanam is always pramaanam.

Now, of these two, viz., 'apraamana-uddhisyaamaanam' and 'pramana-vidheeyamaanam', which one is stronger? This may appear to be a strange question, which will be explained later. The stranger answer, which is also explained later, is: "The vidheeyamaanam pramaanam part alone is stronger". And, therefore, if there is a contradiction between uddhisyaamaanam and vidheeyamaanam, the vidheeyamaanam, being pramaanam and stronger, should not be changed at all; uddhisyaamaanam alone, being apraamaanam and weaker, will have to be 'adjusted' to resolve the contradiction.

Sureswaraachaaryaa will be applying this principle in the context of the mahaa vaakyam and conclude, that, in the mahaa vaakyam 'thaththvamas', the word 'thvam' is 'uddhisyaamaanam' and therefore apraamaanam; and, that, 'thadh' is 'vidheeyamaanam' and therefore pramaanam.

Now, to explain this principle (the 'strange' question and the 'stranger' answer), applying it first to the example discussed in the earlier session will help.

The example given was: "The 'small star' in the sky is a 'big star'". As pointed out, for a primary-school-going child, the perceived 'smallness' of the star is a result of prathyaksha anubhava pramaanam and also of the popular nursery rhyme 'twinkle twinkle little star' which the child has been taught to recite. To correct this mistaken perception of the child, the child is to be told "That 'small star' in the sky is a 'big star'".

In this statement, viz., "That 'small star' in the sky is a 'big star'", what is the uddhisyaamaanam / the subject? Ans: "The 'small star', as known to the child, is the uddhisyaamaanam, anoodhyamaanam and apraamaanam". What is the 'vidheeyamaanam' in the statement? Ans: "The 'big star' is vidheeyamaanam". Out of the two adjectives, 'small' and 'big', one has to be false; otherwise, there will be contradiction. If you have to resolve the contradiction, viz., the 'smallness' and the 'bigness' of the star, you have to reject one as false and accept the other as right. Now, the question is, which one should be rejected as false? Will you correct the 'big star' in the vidheeyamaana portion as 'small star', or will you understand the 'small' adjective in the uddhisyaamaanaa portion as false?

You cannot simply choose to say "Falsify the 'bigness', to say, 'the small star is a small star' ", since another person may equally simply respond " Why do you not take 'small' as false, and say 'the big star is the big star?'". The contradiction will still not be solved. So, there has to be a rule acceptable to both; and, there is a grammar rule. What is that grammar rule? Ans: "The rule is 'vidheeyamaana viseshanam pramaanathvaath abhaadhyam; uddhisyaamaana viseshanam apramaanathvaath bhaadhyam', indicating that, uddhisyaamaanam is weaker". Therefore, the 'smallness' adjective belonging to the uddhisyaamaana padham has to be negated and the 'bigness' belonging to the vidheeyamaana padham has to be retained.

Now, in 'thatthvamas! mahaa vaakyam, we have got the statement 'jeevaathmaa' is equal to 'Paramaathmaa'. Jeevaathmaa has to have an adjective, 'samsaari', because jeevaathmaa is always associated with samsaaraa. Paramaathmaa is always associated with the adjective asamsaari. Therefore, what is the equation of the mahaa vaakyam? Ans: "Samsaari jeevaathmaa is asamsaari Paramaathmaa". This, seemingly, is the gist of the statement 'thatthvamas!'.

Now, this samsaari adjective and asamsaari adjective are diagonally opposite to each other. Therefore, it is a contradiction to say samsaari jeevaathmaa and asamsaari Paramaathmaa are identical. Obviously they cannot be. Therefore, one adjective will have to be falsified. The questions are: "Where we should make the change? Can we bring Paramaathmaa also to our fold, pull Him down and make Him join us and say 'The 'asamsaari' adjective is false'. If we do that, the equation will be: 'samsaari jeevaathmaa is samsaari Paramaathmaa'. Alternately, should we say that samsaarithvam of the jeevaathmaa is a mistaken notion and really speaking, jeevaathmaa is asamsaari? Should we make a correction in the adjective samsaari of the jeevaathmaa? Which one should be corrected? What rule do we apply to resolve this contradiction?" Ans: "This is where, the grammar rule (discussed above), viz., 'vidheeyamaana viseshanam pramaanathvaath abhaadhyam; uddhisyamaana viseshanam apramaanathvaath bhaadhyam' has to be applied. And, therefore, 'samsaarithvam', which is an adjective of the udhisyamaana 'thvam padhaartha' should be taken as adhyasa: / misconception. This is the essence of this paragraph, the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 75:

ॐ यस्मात् - Since

ॐ त्वम् इति पतम् - the word 'thvam', in the mahaa vaakyam

ॐ चोत्रु प्रसित अनुवाति एव - is only 'restating' the jeevaathmaa,

Who is the 'srothru or 'jeevaathmaa? Ans: "The word 'srothru refers to the student listening to the mahaa vaakyam. It is the student who is talked about by the word 'thvam', which word is only a re-statement, not teaching a new reality".

Why is 'thvam' not teaching a new reality? Ans: Would anyone say "Only after I heard the 'thvam padha in the vaakyam 'thath thvam asi, I realized I am there" or "Because the saasthraa-s say 'thvam', I have to be existing"? The answer, evidently, is 'no'. One does not need any external 'evidence' or 'reminder' to be 'aware' of one's own existence. Swami Dayaananda Saraswathi puts this message across, in his unique manner. He asks jocularly: "Do you ever tell yourself 'I must be existing, because I have a wife. No wife will marry a non-existing entity and since I am married, I must be existing?" We do not say 'I am existing, because mahaa vaakya pramaanam says 'thvam'. The word 'thvam' is not proving 'you'; it is only talking about the already existing jeevaathmaa. Therefore, it is apraamaanam.

ॐ तस्मात् उद्दिश्यमानस्थत्वात् - and, since it is the subject of the sentence,

The words 'uddhisyamaanam' and 'anoodhyamaanam' are synonymous. Both refer to the 'subject' of a sentence and therefore invariably 'apraamaanam', meaning 'they do not teach you anything new'. Therefore:

दुःखित्वादेः अविवक्षतत्वं एव - the 'sorrow' or 'samssarithvam' (belonging to the jeevaa) should not be taken as a 'revelation of fact' by the mahaa vaakyam.

'Dhu:khithvam' means sorrow or 'samsaarithvam'; 'avivakshitham' means 'not an information revealed'. 'avivakshithathvam' means 'it is not pramaanam'.

The sorrow belonging to the jeevaa should not be taken as a 'reality' / 'information' revealed by mahaavaakyam. What is the reason? "Because the samsaaram-endowed thvam padham is existing in uddhisyaamaanaa position, the samsaarithvam of 'thvam' is not intended to be conveyed as 'reality'". To understand this statement, the example should be recollected. When the father or the teacher of a child wants to correct the misconception of a child about the size of a star, he says "the 'small' star is a 'big' star". In this sentence, the word 'small' is, of course, used by the father/ teacher; but, the word is not intended by him for the sake of 'teaching'. Then why does he use it? "Because 'smallness' is the misconception of the child. That misconception is only 'quoted, not 'taught'". In a similar manner, the samsaarithvam of the jeevaa is quoted only for negation and not intended for 'teaching'.

ॐ विधीयमानत्वे हि सति - If 'thvam padham' also comes under vidheeyamaanam, ॐ विरोधप्रसङ्गः - there will be contradiction, invalidating the equation itself.

ॐ तु - But,

ॐ विधीयमान अनूध्यमानयोः - when one is vidheeyamaanam (therefore, pramaanam) and the other is anoodhyamaanam (and, therefore, apraamaanam), ॐ न (विरोधप्रसङ्गः) - there can be no contradiction.

If both thvam padham and thadh padham are vidheeyamaana pramaana padhaani, what will be the problem? Ans: "Thadh padhaa' is vidheeyamaanam; therefore, asamsaari adjective is pramaanaa and cannot be negated. If thvam padham also comes under vidheeyamaanam, thvam padhaa also will become pramaana padham; then, samsaari adjective also will become pramaanaa. If samsaari adjective becomes pramaanaa, it can also be not negated. Since, thus, both the adjectives, 'samsaari' and 'asamsaari' cannot be negated, they will stick to the jeevaathmaa and the Paramaathmaa respectively. Then the equation will become a contradiction and invalid".

This problem would have resulted, if thvam padhaa also is vidheeyamaanam and thadh padhaa also is vidheeyamaanam. But, fortunately, that is not the case.

The problem of 'contradiction' is not there, because thvam padhaa is not vidheeyamaana padham; it is only uddhisyaamaana padham.

(In a lighter vein: The Samsaarithvam part – not the chaithanyam part- is only very loosely attached to jeevaathmaa. A mundane example is a perforated receipt book, from which, it is easy to 'tear off' the receipt. The jeevaathmaa and its samsaarithvam are attached to each other with perforations at the 'joint'. Therefore, the guru, using the vidheeyamaana thadh padham, can tear off the samsaarithvam part of the jeevaathmaa with ease and discard it. Thus, he can easily validate the mahaa vaakyam.)

The same is re-stated in the next sentence of the sambhandha gadhyam.

ॐ स्वप्रधानयोः हि पदयोः - Only if both thvam padham and thadh padham become equally prominent (pramaanam),

If both thvam padham and thadh padham get vidheeyamaanathvam status and become pramaanam, then, both 'samsaarithvam' and 'asamsaarithvam' will be facts. Then the mahaa vaakyam will have a contradiction and become invalid, just as in the example of the star, if both the adjectives 'small' and 'big' are considered facts, the statement will become invalid.

ॐ विरोध आशङ्का (भवति) - the fear / possibility of contradiction (will result), ॐ तयोः सामान्य आलिङ्गितत्वात् - since, in that case, the primary meanings have to be applied for both thvam padhaa and thadh padhaa.

'Saamaanya', here, means 'primary meaning'. 'Aalingathathvam' means 'association with'. If primary meaning is applied for thvam padhaa, samsaarithvam will also come and there will be contradiction.

ॐ न विपर्यये - Not otherwise (i.e. if both thvam padham and thadh padham are not equally pramaanaa).

Chapter III: Verse 75 –

अनालिङ्गितसामान्यौ न जिहासितवादिनौ ।

व्युत्थितौ तत्त्वमौ तस्मादन्योन्याभिसमीक्षणौ ॥ ७५ ॥

Therefore, the terms ‘That’ and ‘Thou’ used appositely, in the proposition, give up their normal meanings and do not signify anything contrary to the intended unitary purport and thus are divested of their mutually conflicting general connotations, being mutually conditioned.

“Therefore” Sureswaraachaaryaa concludes “when mahaa vaakyam is studied, the student should not take the primary meanings of these two words; he has to take only the secondary or implied meanings”.

(Swamiji says: Though the topic has been discussed in earlier contexts, in view of its importance in this context, I will briefly deal with the topic of ‘primary and secondary meanings’ once again, now.)

‘Primary meaning’ of a word is called vaachyaartha: and ‘secondary meaning’ is called lakshyaartha: | ‘Primary meaning’ / ‘vaachyaartha:’, is the direct and obvious meaning which is generally / popularly taken. But, in certain contexts, an ‘implied meaning according to the given context’ is also possible for a word, which meaning is called ‘secondary meaning’ / ‘lakshyaartha:’.

‘Lakshyaartha:’ or the ‘secondary meaning’ can be of three types: (i) Jahathi lakshyaartha: or jahallakshyaartha: (ii) ajahathi lakshyaartha: or ajahallakshyaartha: and (iii) bhaagathyaga lakshyaartha: |

‘Jahathi lakshyaartha:’ or ‘jahallakshyaartha:’: If in a particular context, when the listener is expected to totally give up the primary or direct meaning and take another meaning which is closely connected to the primary meaning (the ‘closeness’ is important – obviously a totally unconnected meaning cannot be taken), that implied, intended meaning is called ‘jahathi lakshyaartha:’ | The word ‘jahathi’ indicates ‘total rejection of primary meaning’. To cite an example: Suppose a report in a newspaper reads “In the Rajya Sabha, to-day, the Chair objected to the remark of a member”. Obviously, chairs, made of inert materials, cannot even ‘speak’, much less ‘object’. However costly a chair may be, it can never respond to a situation. But it is a trustworthy newspaper which has made this report. So, if the sentence has to be made meaningful by the reader, he should totally give up the primary meaning of the ‘chair’ and should take another meaning, which is chethanam; that chethanam also cannot be any living being. It must be someone connected to / associated with the chair, obviously, the Chairperson. This example explains the jahathi lakshyaartha:, where the 'primary meaning' of the word used is totally given up and an implied meaning is given to the word.

There can be any number of examples. One more example is: "The context of a host offering a cup of coffee to the guest and the guest responding by saying 'I have already consumed three cups'". Obviously, the guest could not have consumed the 'cups', but has consumed 'cups of coffee'. Here, the word 'cup' means 'the contents of the cup'. This is also an example of jahathy lakshyaartha: |

'Ajahathi lakshyaartha:' or 'ajahal lakshyaartha:': This is when 'the primary meaning is totally retained and something more is also added'. If primary meaning alone is given for a word, the meaning is vaachyaartha: | When the 'primary meaning' is totally rejected and an implied secondary meaning is taken, that meaning is jahathi laksyaartha: | In ajahathi lakshyaartha:, the whole primary meaning should be there and in addition to that, something must be added in the understanding of the word.

Number of examples can be given for ajahathi lakshyaartha: also. One example is: "The context of someone saying 'I had idly for breakfast'. Here, the listener of the statement, since he is aware that idly cannot be eaten without a side-dish, will, as a matter of fact, understand that the speaker consumed idly with a suitable side-dish, even though the speaker did not specifically mention it . In this context, the 'side-dish' is added in the meaning of 'idly', retaining the primary meaning of 'idly'".

Another example is a person saying "I just had coffee". 'Coffee' cannot be consumed direct either in its seed or powder form. The coffee powder has to be boiled in water and the filtered decoction consumed either as 'black coffee' or as more commonly done, consumed with added milk and sugar. So, the word 'coffee' in the sentence "I just had coffee" does not mean 'mere coffee'. It means 'coffee + some other constituent'.

In such situations, when a word is understood not only with its primary meaning but with some additional meanings also, that resultant meaning is called 'ajahathi lakshyaartha:' or 'ajahal lakshyaartha:' | 'Total rejection of the primary meaning and attribution only of a secondary meaning' is 'jahathi laksyaartha:' and 'total retention of the primary meaning and addition of a secondary meaning' is 'ajahathi lakshyaartha:'|

Then, what is bhaagathyaagha lakshyaartha:? Ans: "It consists of 'partial rejection and partial retention of the primary meaning". When, of the primary meaning of the word, one part is rejected and another part alone is retained and accepted as the meaning (thaathparyam) of the word, that process is 'bhaagathyaagha lakshanaa' or 'jahathy-ajahathy- lakshanaa'.

An example for bhaagathyaagha lakshyaartha:: When someone says "I consumed a banana", the statement does not mean that the person consumed a banana wholly or totally, since the skin / peel of a banana is generally not consumed. (In a lighter vein: Elephants do; but, not humans. A jack fruit or a mango, as an example, will probably be a more appropriate example, since, the skin of a jack fruit or the seed of a mango can certainly be not consumed by any being). So, even though the speaker makes the statement "I consumed a banana", he refers only to the consumable part of the banana.

Another example for bhaagathyaagha lakshyaartha: is the statement: "I am in India". In this context, the speaker does not certainly pervade the whole of India. He is only in a part of India. When you say 'I consumed the fruit', the lakshyaartha: of the word 'fruit' is only the consumable part of the fruit and similarly, when you say 'I am in India', the lakshyaartha: of the word 'India', is only a part of India. Such a lakshyaartha: is bhaagathyaagha lakshyaartha:|

To consolidate: (1) If primary meaning alone is given for a word, the meaning is vaachyaartha: | (2) When the primary meaning is totally rejected and a closely associated secondary meaning is given to the word, it is jahathi lakshyaartha: | (3) When the primary meaning of the word is retained and one or more secondary meanings are also added in understanding the word, it is ajahathi lakshyaartha: | (4) When part of the primary meaning is rejected and part of the primary meaning is retained, it is bhaagathyaagha or jahathi-ajahathi lakshyaartha: | And, depending on the context, one has to take one of the four types of meanings.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out, that, in the context of the mahaa vaakyam, the 'primary meaning's of both 'thadh' and 'thvam' will not fit.

The primary meaning of 'thvam' or 'jeevathmaa' has five components; i.e., 'Jeevaathmaa' is a composite entity, consisting of five components, viz., (1) the physical or gross body, (2) the subtle body (3) the causal body (4) the reflected Consciousness or chidhaabhaasaa and (5) the Original Consciousness or chith. In the same manner, 'Thadh' or 'Paramaathmaa' also is a composite entity, consisting of (1) the physical universe (2) the subtle universe (3) the causal universe (maayaa) (4) reflected Consciousness (Isvara) and (5) Original Consciousness (Brahman.)

If you include all these five components in understanding 'thvam' and 'thadh', the resultant meanings will be called 'primary meanings' or vaachyaarthaa-s; i.e., the primary meaning of 'jeevathmaa' includes the five components mentioned above and, in the same manner, the primary meaning of 'Paramaathmaa' includes His five components mentioned above. And, if the vaachyaarthaa-s are equated, it will be a blunder, because the first four components of jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa are all different from one another. Physical body is different from physical universe, subtle body is different from subtle universe and causal body is different from causal universe. The fourth components, viz., the 'micro Reflected Consciousness' and 'macro Reflected Consciousness' are also different. In all these four levels, there is contradiction. The viswa-thyjasapraagnyaa are contradictory / diagonally opposite to the viraat-hiranyagarbha-antharyaami. Therefore, what should the student do? Ans: "He should not take vaachyaarthaa-s; he has to take only the lakshyaarthaa-s". But, once he decides to take the lakshyaarthaa-s for the sake of the equation, he will have the question, "which type?" Sureswaraacharya will answer: "The third type, viz., the bhaagathyaagha lakshyaarthaa-s". This would mean that the first four components of jeevaathmaa and the first four components of Paramaathmaa, which are mutually contradictory – physical body / physical universe, subtle body / subtle universe, causal body / causal universe, micro Reflected Consciousness / macro Reflected Consciousness - will all have to be rejected . What is left behind is the fifth component, namely, the Original Consciousness in both. And, very importantly, in the context of the Original Consciousness, there is no micro-and-macro divisions. At the levels of 'Reflected Consciousness' there is division, whereas the 'Original Consciousness' is indivisible akanda chaithanyam.

Therefore, there is only one ekaathmaa, which does not deserve either the jeevaa adjective or Paramaa adjective. 'Jeevaa' and 'Paramaa' adjectives are also 'torn off' and what is left behind is ekaathmaa. The equation 'Jeevathmaa = Paramaathmaa' means 'there is only ekaathmaa'.

Reverting to the text (verse 75):

ॐ तत्त्वमौ - The words 'thath' and 'thvam'

'Thaththvamau' is a compound word formed as "'thath cha thvam cha'='thaththvamau'" |

ॐ व्युत्थितौ - having rejected their primary meanings,

'Vyutthi:' means 'rejecting' / dropping. They have to give up their primary meanings, because, as long as they retain their primary meanings, the other four components will also join and the equation will not work.

ॐ अनालिङ्गित सामान्यौ - and, (therefore), not associated with their primary meanings,

'aalingitham' literally means 'embraced'. 'anaalingitham', would, therefore, literally mean 'not embraced' and in this context, implies 'not associated with'.

Since the words 'thath' and 'thvam' have given up their primary meanings, they are not associated with them. 'Saamaanyaau' means 'vaachyaarthau' or 'literal / primary meanings'. 'Anaalingithau saamaanya arthau yaabhyam thau' is 'anaalingitha saamaanyaau' | This is a bahuvreehi compound, qualifying 'thaththvamau'.

Therefore only, the words 'thath' and 'thvam' take up secondary meanings, in which secondary meanings, they reject parts of their primary meanings. Therefore, ॐ न जिहासितवादिनौ - do not desire to / intend to reveal irrelevant portions.

'Haathum ishtam' is 'jihaasitham', which means 'desired to be given up'. 'Na vaadhinau' means 'they do not reveal'. What do they not reveal? Ans: "The irrelevant portions".

And, what are the irrelevant portions to be given up? Ans: 'The eight components, viz., (1) sthoola sareeram, (2) sthoola prapancham, (3) sookshma sareeram, (4) sookshma prapancham, (5) kaarana sareeram, (6) kaarana prapancham, (7) vyashti chidhaabhaasaa and (8) samashti chidhaabhaasaa.

All these eight components are gone. What is left out is only the Original Consciousness – chith – in which there is no vyashti – samashti division.

ॐ तस्मात् - Therefore,

ॐ अन्योन्य अभिसमीक्षणौ - without any contradiction, they can have eiykyam.

182: Chapter III, Verses 75 and 76 (10-04-2010)

In this portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa is introducing the classical advaitic understanding of the mahaa vaakyam, by showing that, while studying the mahaa vaakyam, the words 'thath' and 'thvam' cannot be interpreted with their primary meanings. If their primary meanings are taken, the mahaa vaakyam will not convey any logical idea.

The primary meaning of the word 'thvam' is jeevaathmaa, which includes sareerathrayam and vyashti chidhaabhaasaa. The primary meaning of the word 'thath' is Paramaathmaa, which includes prapanchathrayam and samashti chidhaabhasaa. And, if these anaathmaa parts, sareerathrayam, prapanchathrayam and chidhaabhasaa, are included in the jeevaathmaa and the Paramaathmaa, certainly jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa cannot be identical.

Still, the Upanishad-s make repeated assertions of the mahaa vaakyam-s; and, through meemaamsa vichaaraa (consisting of the six factors, starting with upakrama-upasamhaarau), we come to know that mahaa vaakyam is not a casual statement and that, Upanishad-s seriously intend to convey something profound.

When we approach mahaa vaakyam with this awareness and conviction, we come to recollect the fact, that, very often, we have a lakshyaarthaa / target or implied meaning also, for many words, as quite commonly understood by the people. In all languages, the concept of 'implied meanings' / 'lakshyaarthaa-s' is there.

As discussed in the earlier session, the lakshyaarthaa-s are of three types - jahathi, ajahathi and bhaagathyaaaghaa. Detailed explanations of the three types were also given, in the earlier session.

Remembering them, in the context of mahaa vaakyam, what we have to apply is bhaagathyagha lakshanaa. A classical, oft-quoted example for bhaagathyagha lakshanaa is the statement 'sa: ayam devadhattha:', which means 'this Devadhatthaa whom you are seeing now, is that same Devadhatthaa, whom you have seen years before'. Superficially, the Devadhatta of the yore and the present Devadhatthaa cannot be 'equated', since their ages are different, their looks are different and their bodies are different. Even the complexion of Devadhatta's physical body would have changed. At the physical level, we do see differences, in all respects, between the former Devadhatthaa and the present Devadhatthaa and as such, they, cannot be equated. But, if we are still equating the two and accepting the equation, it is because of the 'person' inside the two different types of the physical body. The superficial bodily difference is ignored and the identity of Devadhatthaa is recognized, considering the inner person of the bodies.

The same principle is applied in the context of the mahaa vaakyam. Kaarana Paramaathmaa has got prapanchathrayam as the body and kaarya jeevaathmaa has got sareerathrayam as the body. The two bodies – sareerathrayam of jeevaathmaa and prapanchathrayam of Paramaathmaa – are to be removed . Both the adjectives 'Paramaa' and 'jeevaa' are to be detached and dropped. The vyashti chidhaabhaasaa and samashthi chidhaabhaasaa are also to be set aside. What is left behind is aathmaa ; that aathmaa is ekaathmaa only. This is the idea conveyed.

Reverting to the text (verse 75):

ॐ तत्त्वमौ - The 'thath padhaartha' and 'thvam padhaartha'
'thath' + 'thvam' = 'thatthvamau' (dhvandha samaasam).

ॐ व्युत्थितौ - going above their vaachyaartha-s or primary or direct meanings,

'व्युत्थयन्नम्' (व्युत्थानं) means 'rising up against' / 'going above'. An example of the use of this word can be found in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad in a popular manthraa, which runs "Etham vai tham aathmaanam vidhithvaa Braahmanaa: puthraishanaayaascha vitthaishanaayaascha lokaishanaayaascha vyuththaaya atha bhikshaacharyam charanthi" (III.v.1) – " Knowing this very Self, the Braahmanaa-s renouncing the desire for sons, for wealth and for the worlds, lead a mendicant's life". Though the word 'vyuthyaaya' literally means 'going above' , in this manthraa, it implies 'going above grahastha aasramaa' or 'renouncing'. In the context of this verse 75, of Naishkarmya Siddhi (CH. III), the term 'Vyutthithau' conveys, that, the two words 'thath' and 'thvam' go above or beyond their primary meanings. They drop their vaachyaartha-s and assume their lakshyaartha-s.

ॐ अनालिङ्गित सामान्यौ - and dropping their vaachyaartha-s,

'Saamaanyau' means 'vaachyaartha-s' or 'primary meanings'. 'aalingitha' means 'embracing' or 'adopting / taking' ; 'anaalingitha' means 'dropping'.

ॐ न जिहासित वादिनौ - do not convey the irrelevant portions like the 'superior' attributes of Paramaathmaa and inferior attributes of jeevathmaa.

Once their vaachyaartha-s are dropped, those two words do not communicate the sareerathrayam through thvam padhaartha and the prapanchathrayam through thath padhaartha. Sarvagnyathvam of Pramaathmaa is not communicated by the word 'thath' and alpathvam of jeevaathmaa is not communicated by 'thvam'. All these get communicated only when vaachyaartha-s are attributed to the words. When the vaachyaartha-s are dropped, along with the vaachyaartha-s, the superior attributes of Paramaathmaa and the inferior attributes of jeevaathmaa are also divested.

'Haathum ishtam' is 'jihaasitham', which means 'desired to be given up'. 'Jihaasitham vadhathi ithi jihaasitha vaadhin'. 'Na jihaasitha vaadhinau' means 'they desire to give up conveying the irrelevant portions of their vaachyaartha-s viz., the superior and inferior attributes of Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa respectively'. Once the words 'thath' and 'thvam' drop their vaachyaartha-s, their mutual antagonism or opposition will go away. They remain opposed to each other only as long as their vaachyaartha-s are taken. The moment the vaachyaartha-s are removed, the jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa can be equated. This is conveyed dramatically as : "The words 'thath' and 'thvam' who were looking at opposite directions, turn around towards each other, with a readiness for merger into one".

ॐ तस्मात् अन्योन्य अभिसमीक्षणौ - Therefore, they look at each other, with expectance.

That means they are no more opposed to each other. They are non-antagonistic terms now. 'Anyonya abhisameekshanam' means 'looking at each other'. 'abhi' means 'in the direction of the other'. 'Thath padhaa' is 'looking at' 'thvam padhaa' and 'thvam padhaa' is 'looking at' 'thath padhaa'. Once they are 'looking at' each other, the irritants are gone ; 'asi' will come and join each other.

The verb is not there in this verse. We have to supply the verb 'bhavatha.'| 'Thathvamau is the subject of the sentence and all other words in the verse are subjective complements. Each of them should be read with the verb 'bhavatha.', as 'vyutthithau bhavatha.', 'anaalingitha saamaanyau bhavatha.', 'jijaasitha vaadhinau bhavatha.' and '(thasmaath) anyonya abhi sameekshanau bhavatha.' |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 76 :

अपास्त सामान्यार्थत्वात् अनुवादस्थत्वात् विधीयमानेन च सह विरोधात् दुःखित्वादेः अस्तु कामं जिहासितार्थयोः असंसर्गः यथोपन्यस्त दोष विरहात्
तत्त्वमर्थयोः सम्सर्गः अस्तु नीलोत्पलवत् इति चेत् न एवम् उपपद्यते । तस्मात् ।

Let the terms 'That' and 'Thou' be interpreted this way as not meaning a complex of many items, for avoiding the difficulty specified, on the ground that they signify no universal as usual and that the connotation of 'subjection to misery' etc. carried by the term 'Thou' is simply for reference and is in conflict with what is predicated by the term 'That'. But the signification of a complex whole may still be admitted on the part of their implied meanings, as in the case of the term 'Blue Lotus'. If it is thus claimed, we reply that this is not tenable.

Now, a poorva pakshin who does not want to accept total eiikyam between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa comes for a compromise. His aim is to somehow reject the concept of total eiikyam. He says "Let us assume that vaachyaarthaa-s have contradiction; and, therefore let us remove vaachyaarthaa-s ; let us come to lakshyaarthaa-s. Jeevaathmaa has got thvam padha lakshyaarthaa; Paramaathmaa also has got a lakshyaarthaa. Now, I concede that the lakshyaarthaa-s do not have a contradiction. Therefore, let them come together. I am willing to bring the jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa together. Even so, I do not want to accept total identity between them. I want to say 'let jeevaathmaa be a viseshanam of Paramaathmaa or let Paramaathmaa be a viseshanam of jeevaathmaa".

'Viseshanam and viseshyam' mean 'attribute and substance'. Substance and attribute never become one. They exist only in proximity to each other. An example is 'cloth' and its 'colour'. The two exist in proximity to each other; but, they never have merger into oneness. Cloth does not become colour; colour does not become cloth. But, both of them are co-existing so intimately, that they are treated as one by the people. Cloth and colour are treated as one; but there is no total eiikyam, because colour happens to be viseshnam and cloth happens to be viseshyam.

This is the approach suggested by the poorva pakshin. This approach to have jeevaathmaa as a viseshanam of Paramaathmaa is called 'visishta advaitham'. 'Visishtaadvaitin-s' say "We are not totally against advaitam. We do accept advaitam partly; we reject dvaitam totally; but, not advaitam. At the same time, our acceptance of advaitam is also not total. Let jeevaathmaa be an adjective, dependent on Paramaathmaa."

The visishtaadvaitin-s want jeevaathmaa's perpetual dependence on Paramaathmaa. The bhakthaa should always supplicate Bhagavaan: "I am Yours; I am always dependent on You". They call this attitude 'naichchiya bhaava:', which is considered to be a virtue of a bakthaa. One of the virtues in Visishtaadvaitam is naichchiya bhaava:, which means 'attitude of belittling oneself to a subordinate position'. The devotee consistently considers himself inferior to Bhagavaan. He says to Bhagavaan : "I am useless; I am nothing by myself. If at all I am something, it is only because of Your grace. I am always at Your feet".

The chinmudhraa is ingeniously modified by the visishtaadvaitin-s to suit this attitude. In this modified mudhraa, the forefinger, representing jeevaathmaa, will not touch the top of the thumb, representing Paramaathmaa. Instead, it will touch the root of the thumb, meaning "Jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa's viseshanam; Paramaathmaa is the Viseshyam".

With this approach in mind, the visishtaadvaitin-s tell the advaitin-s: "Why do we not compromise? Let us have neither total dvaitam nor total advaitam. We will have a special relationship between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa - viseshana vishesya sambhandha:"

This is termed 'samsarga thaathaathmiyam' - 'merging into one, retaining separateness', like the cloth and its colour. The two have joined together; but, even after joining, they are distinct from each other. Colour is colour and cloth is cloth.

The technical word for the visishtaadvaitin's abedhaa is 'samsarga abedhaa'; advaitin's abedhaa is called adhyantha abedhaa.

This compromise is offered by a poorva pakshin in this sambhandha gadhyam. But, Sureswaraachaaryaa, being a ruthless advaitin, rejects this compromise. He says:

"No way; the eykyam / oneness between jaavaathmaa and Paramaathmaa is absolute. Jeevaathmaa is not a viseshanam. Jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa. Paramaathmaa is jeevathma. Words are different; but vasthu ekam eva"

Reverting to the text (the poorva pakshin's compromise offer):

ॐ अपास्त सामान्य अर्थत्वात् - Since the primary meanings (of 'thvam' padhaa and 'thath' padhaa) are dropped,

Through this term, the poorva pakshin indicates his willingness to compromise. Compromise means partial acceptance. He implies: "I have accepted your view partly. I agree to drop vaachyaartha's. This is acceptable".

ॐ अनुवादस्थत्वात् - and since 'thvam' padhaa is accepted as 'subject' of the mahaa vaakyam,

The poorva pakshin further concedes: "I do accept that the word thvam, meaning jeevaathmaa, is the subject / uddhisyaamaana padham of the mahaa vaakyam".

To recollect part of our earlier discussions: We saw, that, according to the Advaitin, in the mahaa vaakyam, thvam padhaa is uddhisyaamaana padham; therefore it is anoodhyamaanam / anuvaadham; it is a reference to a known thing; not a new teaching. Whatever is new will have more power. Therefore, thvam padhaa must be available for a compromise.

An example was also cited in this context, viz., 'the 'small' star is big star'; we saw, that, in that statement, the adjective 'small' should be knocked off, for removal of contradiction. What was the grammatical reason given? Ans: "The adjective 'small' belongs to the uddhisyaamaana padham / anoodhyamaana padham, while the adjective 'big' is adjective to the vidheeyamaana padham. The adjective to the uddhisyaamaana padham is anuvaadha padham and therefore the adjective 'small' should be knocked off for removal of contradiction. Whereas the adjective to the vidheeyamaana padham is pramaana padham and therefore, it should be retained". All these are based on the general rule, that the adjective of vidheeyamaanam is pramaanam and should not be dropped, while the adjective of uddhisyaamaana padham can be dropped.

Moving over to the mahaa vaakyam, 'samsaari' is adjective to the uddhisyaamaana jeevaathma thvam padhaarthaa. For Paramaathmaa, 'asamsaari' is the adjective. Since the two adjectives are contradictory in nature, when jeevaathmaa is equated to Paramaathmaa, one of the adjectives should be dropped to avoid the contradiction. Which one? Ans: 'Asamsaari' is the viseshanam of vidheeyamaana padham and should not be dropped ; 'Samsaari' is viseshanam of uddhisyaamaana padham and can be / should be dropped to validate the equation. This is the Advaithin's stand.

The poorva pakshin has understood this grammatical argument and is now willing to accept it. Therefore, he says 'anuvaadhasyathvaath', implying "I do know that thvam padhaa is anuvaadha padham; therefore, I am willing to drop the samsaari adjective of the uddhisyaamaana / anoodhyamaana / anuvaadha padham, 'thvam', referring to the jeevaathma, by bhaagathyaaga lakshanaa. I am willing to compromise. Now, after dropping samsaari adjective, there is no more contradiction. Only when the both the adjectives samsaari and asamsaari are there, there will be contradiction. Now that samsaari adjective has been taken from thvam padhaa, there is no contradiction". The Advaithin has obviously made some progress, in convincing the poorva pakshin, who concedes all these, for the sake of compromise. The poorva pakshin says:

ॐ विधीयमानेन च सह - with thath padham being the vidheeyamaana padham,

The English word for 'vidheeyamaanam' is 'predicate' and the English word for 'uddhisyaamaanam' is 'subject'. Subject is always weaker; predicate is always stronger, because predicate is the pramaanam.

ॐ (वाच्यार्थे) विरोधात् (लक्ष्यार्थे अविरोधात्) - and since contradiction will be there when primary meanings are given for the words 'thath' and 'thvam' , and there will be no contradiction when primary meanings are dropped and target meanings are given to the words,

Though the text contains only the word 'virodhaath', the student should supply the other words and read it as '(vaachyaarthe) virodhaath (lakshyaarthe avirodhaath)', since the implied statement of the poorva pakshin is 'poorvam vaachyaarthe virodhaath idhaaneem lakshyaarthe avirodhaath' meaning 'earlier with the primary meanings, there was contradiction; now, with the secondary meanings, the contradiction is not there'.

'Virodhaa' will be there, if samsaarithvaa of the jeevaathmaa is retained. The poorva pakshin says "There also, I am compromising and dropping samsaarithvam".

Because of these reasons,

ॐ दुःखित्वादेः असंसर्गः अस्तु - let there be the rejection of the unwanted attributes like sorrow etc. of the jeevaathmaa,

'Asamsargha:' means 'rejection'. 'dhu:kithvam' means 'sorrow' or 'misery'. 'Sorrow' does not belong to jeevaathmaa, if you take the lakshyaartha of the word jeevaathmaa. Therefore, 'dhu:kithvaadhe: asamsarga: asthu' |

ॐ कामं - as desired by you ;

The word 'kaamam', in this context, means 'as you like' / 'yatheshtam'. It is not a noun here; but, is 'indeclinable'. This word, in this context, indicates compromise, implying the opponent's response: "All right. You can maintain your view on this. I am willing to come down to your view half way".

ॐ जिहासित अर्थयोः (असंसर्गः अस्तु) - not only the irrelevant part of thvam padhaa; similarly, let there be rejection of the irrelevant part of the thath padhaa also;

'Jihaasitha arthayo:' is 'dual' in number, 'jihaasitha arthayo: (asamsargha: asthu)' implying 'let there be rejection of the irrelevant meanings of belonging to both 'thvam' padhaa and 'thath' padhaa.

'Dhu:kithvaadhe:' should be connected to 'virodhaath'. That should be taken as one clause and read as 'dhu:kithvaadhe: vidheeyamaanena saha virodhaath' | And, thereafter, 'jahasitha arthayo: asamsarga: asthu', should be read together, meaning 'let us drop / reject the irrelevant meanings of both of them, viz., the 'thvam' padhaa and 'thath' padhaa.

How much should be the 'rejection'? Ans: "Till the eiyyam can be brought in. Both Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa should keep on shedding weight, until their mutual 'repulsion' goes away and the 'repulsion' gives way to 'attraction'".

The sareerathrayam of the jeevaathmaa and the prapancha thrayam of the Paramaathmaa are both dropped, till the repulsion between them gives way to attraction. Now both of them are without any attribute. They have become nirguna jeevaathmaa and nirguna Paramaathmaa. Jeevathmaa has become nirguna chaithanyam and Paramaathmaa has become nirguna satthaa – Pure Existence.

The poorva pakshin says: "All these I accept. Jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa are attracted to each other and they are coming closer and closer. But, how close can they come? They should not become totally one. They should come and join like anjali mudhraa. Jeevaathmaa should come and join Paramaathmaa, but, without merging ; it should become an attribute of Paramaathmaa, because attribute is always intimate with the substance".

An attribute is never a separate substance; but, is always intimate with a substance. The substance and its attribute are inseparably intimate, just as the colour of the cloth cannot be isolated from the cloth. You can never see an adjective standing separate from the noun.

"Therefore" the poorva pakshin (visishtaadvaitin) suggests: "Let jeevaathmaa become an inseparable viseshanam of Paramaathmaa". He argues:

ॐ यथोपन्यस्त दोष विरहात् - since, now, (by taking lakshyarthaa-s), all the previously mentioned defects of 'contradiction' are gone, 'yatho upanaystham' means 'previously mentioned' and refers to the 'previously mentioned contradictions'. 'Virahaath' means 'since absent'.

ॐ संसर्गः अस्तु - let there be intimate contact (not eiykyam)

ॐ तत्त्वमर्थयो : - between thvam padhaartha jeevaathmaa and thadh padhaartha Paramaathmaa, ॐ नीलोत्पलवत् - like a blue lily flower.

In this term 'neelothpalam', denoting the flower 'blue lily', the word 'blue' and the word 'lily' are used in saamaanaadhikaranam. They are inseparable. They are intimate.

The poorva pakshin suggests to the Advaitin: "In a similar manner, why do you not choose to be intimately, but separately, in the presence of the Lord, always enjoying that mokshaa. Why are you so adamant about eiikyam? Let jeevaathmaa be the adjective and Paramaathmaa be the noun / substance. Let us compromise"

A common argument of the visishtaadvaitin, to stress this view: "Why do you want to become sugar? Why cannot you be separate from the sugar and enjoy the taste of sugar? In fact, between 'becoming' sugar and 'tasting' sugar, which is better? If you become sugar, somebody else will eat you. On the other hand, if you decide to taste sugar, it will be wonderful." The Advaitin's answer to this, will be: "Even if you decide to taste / take sugar, where will it culminate? Where will it end? When you take sugar, the sugar is going to become one with you. Even if you are separate before tasting, when you keep on tasting sugar, ultimately, it merges into you. Therefore, you are becoming sugar or sugar is becoming you ultimately".

Up to this is the visishtaadvaitin's question. Sureswaraacharya gives his answer.

ॐ इति चेत् - If you ask such a question,

ॐ न एवं अपि उपपद्यते - it is not possible / not logical / not scriptural.

ॐ तस्मात् - Therefore: (my answer is in the verse)

(Swamiji says: "Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa covers all these in a beautiful work called Vaakyaavritthi, a small text consisting of 53 verses, which text is purely an analysis of thvam padhaa, thadh padhaa and asi padhaa. In this text (verse 38), he nicely says 'Samsargo vaa visishto vaa vaakyartho naathra sammatha: / akanda eka rasathvena vaakyartho vidhushaam matha:' – 'What is meant by the sentence (viz., the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi') is not accepted either to be connected with or qualified by anything else. The meaning of the sentence, according to the wise, is an indivisible Being consisting of Bliss only'

"During an earlier study of this portion of the text, Vaakyaavrutthi, I have talked a lot on grammar. I mentioned, that, sentences are of three types, called (i) samsargaartha bodhaka vaakyam (ii) visishtaartha bodhaka vaakyam and (iii) akandaartha bodhaka vaakyam. I had analyzed and explained each type. In the context of the mahaa vaakyam, I had ruled out the first two and had shown how the mahaa vaakyam is akandaartha bodhaka vaakyam. I, therefore, do not intend to get into a detailed grammatical discussion now. That is explained by Sureswaraacharya here").

Chapter III: Verse 76 –

तदर्थयोस्तु निष्ठात्मा द्वयपारोक्ष्यवर्जितः ।

नाद्वितीयं विनात्मानं नात्मा नित्यदृशा विना ॥ ७६ ॥

The two terms have as their final import, the Self, which is at once without a second and is immediately revealed. To be without a second is not possible without identity with the Self and being the Self is impossible without identity with the eternal consciousness.

Sureswaraachaarya gives the answer: "Between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, viseshana-viseshya-sambhandhaa is never possible".

Viseshanam means 'attribute' or 'adjective'. Jeevaathmaa can never become a viseshanam of Paramaathmaa or Brahman. For that matter, nothing else also can. This is because Upanishad-s repeatedly declare that Brahman is nirgunam or nirviseshanam. Brahman does not accommodate any type of adjective or attribute. Mundakopnishad (manthraa I. 1 . 6) refers to Brahman as: "Yadh thath adhresyam agrahyam agothram avarnam achakshu:srothram thadh apaani paadham" – "That which cannot be perceived, which cannot be grasped, which is without a source, without properties, without eyes and ears, without hands and legs" etc. In Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – Akshara Brahmanam (III.viii.8), the most powerful definition of the Immutable Brahman is given, as "asthoolam ananu ahrasvam adheergam alohitham asneham acchaayam athamo avaayu anaakaasam asangham arasam agandham achakshushkam asrothram avaag amano athejaskam apraanam amukham amaathram anantharam abhaahyam" - " (It is) neither gross, nor minute, neither short nor long, neither red in colour, nor oily, neither shadow nor darkness, neither air nor ether, unattached, neither with savour nor with odour, without eyes or ears, without the vocal organ or mind, non-luminous, without the vital force or mouth, without any measurement, without interior or exterior." Twenty-three words are given in this manthraa, indicating that the absolute Brahman does not accommodate any type of adjective.

The moment Brahman accommodates any adjective, it will become savikaaram, because, when an attribute undergoes a change, it will affect the substance which is intimately connected to the attribute. Therefore, jeevaathmaa cannot join Paramaathmaa as a viseshanam. Jeevaathmaa . can join Paramaathmaa only as Paramaathmaa itself - not as viseshanam . Thus, the concept of jeevaathmaa being an 'adjective' of Paramaathmaa is not admissible, in jeevaathmaa-Paramaathmaa relationship, since Paramaathmaa does not accommodate any type of adjective.

The alternative, Paramaathmaa being a viseshanam of jeevaathmaa is also not possible. Why not? The explanation is as follows: The very definition of Paramaathmaa, the term 'thath' in the mahaa vaakyam, is 'sath'. The mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi' occurs in the sixth chapter of the Chaandoghya Upanishad. There, Uddhaalaka Aaruni, the guru and father of Svethakethu, begins his teaching with the statement 'sadeva soumya idham agra aaseetthi' (VI. 2.1) " O ! good looking one! In the beginning, this was Existence alone'. He, thus, defines Paramaathmaa / Brahman, as 'sath', the 'Existence' principle. And, 'sath' cannot be an adjective of any noun, including jeevaathmaa. Why not? Ans: "Suppose there is a substance, for which 'sath' has to be an adjective. Obviously, the substance has to be different from 'sath', since, only when a 'substance' and its 'adjective' are different, there can be 'noun-adjective' relationship between the two. Now, if there is a substance different from 'sath' / other than 'sath', what will be its nature? 'Other than sath' means 'asath'. If at all 'sath' is to be adjective to some substance, that substance has to be 'asath', and 'asath' means 'non-existent'. That means there is no such noun, for which 'sath' can be adjective. No substance is possible for which 'sath' can be adjective. Since the very definition of Paramaathmaa is 'sath', Paramaathmaa cannot be a viseshanam to anything, including jeevaathmaa.

To put in a nutshell: (1) Jeevaathmaa cannot be viseshanam of Paramaathmaa, because scriptures describe Paramaathmaa or Brahman as 'nirgunam' and 'nirviseshanam'. When Brahman cannot have any viseshanam, according to Vedic scriptures, jeevaathmaa also cannot be considered as viseshanam of Paramaathmaa. (2) Paramaathmaa cannot be viseshanam of jeevaathmaa, since, Paramaathmaa being 'sath', any substance to which it becomes adjective will have to be different from it / other than 'sath' / 'asath' / non-existent. Other than 'sath' nothing else can exist.

Therefore, jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa cannot have viseshana - viseshya-bhaava sambhandhaa, one because of logical reasoning and the other because of scriptural statements. Therefore, what can be the sambhandhaa between the two? 'Abedha sambhandhaa' can be the only answer, which means they are one and the same. Paramaathmaa can never be away from jeevaathmaa; Paramaathmaa has to be identical with jeevaathmaa. Therefore, neither dvaitham is acceptable nor visishtaadvaitam is acceptable. Nirvisesha advaitam alone is acceptable and that alone is revealed by mahaa vaakyam.

Therefore who am 'I'? Am 'I' different from Paramaathmaa or adjective of Paramaathmaa? Ans: 'I' am neither different nor a viseshanam; aham Brahma asmi.

Reverting to the slokaa (verse 76):

ॐ तदर्थयोः निष्ठा - The convergence of the meanings of the two words 'thath' and 'thvam'

'nishtaa' means 'convergence' / 'culmination' / 'destination'. Of what? 'thadharthayo: - 'thath padha thvam padhayo:' / 'of the meanings of the two words 'thath' and 'thvam'".

ॐ आत्मा भवति - is the one nirvisesha aathmaa.

Their convergence is in one single nirvisesha aathmaa; their convergence is neither jeevaathma-visishta-Paramaathmaa nor Paramaathma-visishta-jeevathmaa. And, what is the nature of that nirvisesha eka aathmaa?

ॐ द्वय वर्जितः - which ekaathmaa does not allow any type of duality,

'dhvaya varjitha:' means 'ekam eva adhvitheeyam'. The eka aathmaa does not stand or allow any type of duality – sajaatheeya bedhaa , vijaatheeya bedhaa or svagatha bedhaa.

'Sajaatheeyaa bedhaa' means 'difference between two members of one and the same species – such as , 'manushya-manushya-bedhaa' / the difference between one human and another.

'Vijaatheeya bedhaa' means 'difference between two members, each belonging to a different species' – for example, 'manushya-vruksha bedhaa' / the difference between a human and a tree.

The third type is 'svagath bedhaa', like 'differences existing within one member', like manushya avaanthara bedha: / differences between the head of a man, the hand of the same man etc.

Eka aathmaa does not allow sajaatheeya bedhaa or vijaatheeya bedhaa or svagatha bedhaa. That means that any bedhaa such as viseshana-viseshya-bedhaa, anga-angi-bedhaa, amsa-amsi-bedhaa, sareera-sareeri-bedhaa etc., is not acceptable. No form of bedhaa is acceptable. The teaching of Katopanishad (I.ii.22) is: "Asareeram sareereshu anavastheshu avasthitham mahaantham vibhum aathmaanam mathva dheera: na sochathi" – "Having known the aathmaa, which is bodiless, which is the permanent one in the impermanent bodies, which is big, and which is all-pervading, the discriminative one does not grieve". Eka aathmaa is asareeram; where is the question of sareera-sareeri-bhaava:? In the Chaandhoghya Upanishad also, the teaching in the 8th chapter (VIII.12.1) is "na vai sasareerasya satha: priyaapriyayo: apahathi: asthi asareeram vaava santham na priyaappriye sprusatha:" – "Surely, for that which remains embodied, there can be no elimination of the desirable and the undesirable. But, the desirable and the undesirable cannot surely touch (It) which has become un-embodied". It is also said "asareero vaa ayam aathmaa" – "This aathma, indeed, is bodiless" | Thus, where is the question of sareera-sareeri-sambhandha:? Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa avers "dhvaya varjitha:" | So visesha-viseshya concept is not acceptable. And, ॐ पारोक्ष्य (वर्जितः) - and, in that ekaathmaa there is no remoteness also.

'Paarokshyam' means 'distance' or 'remoteness'. Before the aspirant takes to mahaa vaakyam he can say 'that Paramaathmaa'; you can use the term 'that' to qualify Paramaathmaa and look up beyond the clouds, hoping to go 'there' through sukla gathi. But, all such approaches are only until the aspirant is exposed to mahaa vaakyam and imbibes its import. Thereafter, the adjective 'that' must be removed. No more should he say 'that' God. Therefore, distance is also removed. And, when the word 'that' is removed, the word 'this' also will become redundant, because there is only one aathmaa. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "dhvaya paaarokshya varjitha ekaathmaa nishtaa bhavathi" – "non-dual and non-remote ekaathmaa is the culmination of the understanding of the lakshyaartha-s of 'thadh' and 'thvam'.

And, this conclusion is arrived at also because,

ॐ आत्मानं विना न अद्वितीयं (भवति) - (Paramaathmaa) cannot become non-dual, without merger or identity with jeevaathmaa.

Unless the aspirant merges the jeevaathmaa into Paramaathmaa absolutely, Paramaathmaa cannot be non-dual or nirviseshanam, as declared in the scriptures. If he joins Paramaathmaa as an adjective to jeevaathmaa, then there will not be non-duality; if you join Paramaathmaa as viseshanam also, there will be duality. What type? Ans: Viseshana viseshya dhvayam / Therefore, if advaita siddhi should take place, as stipulated by scriptures, jeevaathmaa should not stand as viseshanam or viseshyam but should become one with Paramaathmaa. The 'anavayam' for this portion of the verse is 'aathmaanam vinaa (Brahma) adhvitheeyam na (bhavathi)'

Therefore jeevaathmaa should merge into Paramaathmaa totally and not like neelothpalam. Similarly, ॐ नित्यदृसा विना आत्मा न (अस्ति) - Without jeevaathmaa merging totally into Paramaathmaa, jeevaathmaa cannot even exist.

'Nityadhruk', here, refers to Paramaathmaa. Without Paramaathmaa merging into jeevaathmaa totally (that has to be supplied) aathmaa naasthi. Aathmaa cannot even exist . What is the reason? Because Paramaathmaa is the sath principle and if sath does not join jeevaathmaa, jeevaathmaa cannot have even existence.

In brief: Without jeevaathmaa merging into Paramaathmaa, Paramaathmaa cannot become non-dual and without Paramaathmaa merging into jeevaathmaa, jeevaathmaa cannot even exist. Therefore, the aspirant has to merge them totally, for the existence of jeevaathmaa and for the non-duality of Paramaathmaa. Then alone, scripture will be happy.

183: Chapter III, Verses 76 and 77 (05-06-2010)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is continuing to analyze the mahaa vaakyam.

In this 76th verse, he is answering a possible grammatical question. In Sanskrit language, sentences are classified into 3 types (1) samsargaartha bodhaka vaakyam (2) visishtaartha bodhaka vaakyam and (3) abedhaartha bodhaka vaakyam.

Sureswaraachaarya wants to establish that mahaa vaakyam is an abedhaartha bodhaka vaakyam and not the other two. This topic has been dealt with, in detail, during an earlier study of the text 'Vaakyaa vrutthi'. Those details should be remembered here.

A sentence, by definition, is a formation using different words. In the samsargaartha bodhaka vaakyam, the first type of sentences, the words in the sentence will reveal different objects and the relationship existing among the various objects.

An example of samsargaartha bodhaka vaakyam-s, is the sentence: "Rama cut the fruits with a knife". In this sentence, there are three nouns (1) Rama (2) fruits and (3) knife. 'Rama' is the 'subject' of the sentence; the word 'fruits' is the 'object'; and, 'knife' is the instrument. The word 'cut' is the verb of the sentence. The verb talks about an action, which involves an accessory or instrument, viz., the 'knife'. The relationship of the nouns with the instrument is revealed by the word 'with', which word, as is known, is called a 'preposition', in the English language. 'From', 'in', 'at', 'through', 'for', 'with', 'by', 'of' etc., are some of the different prepositions in English. The prepositions in a sentence will reveal the relationships existing between the different nouns in the sentence.

In Sanskrit, 'prepositions' are conveyed through what are called 'vibakthi' in Sanskrit grammar, translated as 'case endings or 'case terminations'. If this sentence, "Rama cut the fruits with a knife", is expressed in Sanskrit, 'thrutheeyaa vibakthi / 'third case ending' will be used for the 'knife', which use will show that 'knife' is the instrument; 'Dvithaayaa vibakthi / 'second case ending' will be used for the 'fruits', which vibakthi will show the word as the 'object'.

Now, in this sentence, several objects are talked about or revealed; in other words the sentence reveals 'plurality' – not advaitam. This is true of all such sentences; several words will be there, revealing several objects / revealing dvaitam or bahuthvam. And, the relationship among those objects, as already pointed out, will be indicated by various prepositions in the language. All such sentences revealing plurality, with internal relationships, are called samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyani.

The second type of sentence is 'visishta advaita bodhaka vaakyam', in which also, there are many nouns in the sentence, which nouns do not reveal many objects, but only one object with different qualifications, indicated by adjectives in the sentence.

The well-known Githaa Dhyana Slokam "Prapanna Paarijathaaya thothra vethraika paanaye jnaanmudhraaya Krishnaaya Geethamruthadhuhe nama:" is a classical example. In this sentence, several words are there: 'Prapanna paarijaatha:', 'thothra vetraika paani:', 'Jnaanamudra:', 'geethaamruthu dhuk" etc. Words are many; but, all of them reveal only one Krishna, with different qualifications. Therefore, the sentence can be said to reveal advaitam – i.e. one Krishna.

Since, thus, the words do not reveal different objects, but one Krishna, but, with various attributes of the one and same Krishna, we conclude that visishta advaitam is revealed by the sentence. The sentence reveals only one; but that one is qualified with various attributes. Such sentences are called visishta artha bodhaka vaakyani.

The third and last type of sentence is 'abedha artha bodhaka vaakyam', where also, the sentence will have several nouns, again revealing only one entity, but, without any qualifying adjectives. The usual example given for this type of sentence is "soyam Devadhattha:" – "That Devadhatthaa whom you met fifteen years before and who was your friend, is this Devadhatthaa". In this sentence, what is revealed is one Devadhatthaa, who is the common entity between the past and the present; and, while understanding that Devadhatthaa, we forget all his past physical features as well as all his present physical features. This is because if you remember his past features, you cannot equate with present Devadhatthaa and if you keep in mind his present features, you cannot equate with past Devadhatthaa. So, from the sentence "soyam devadhattha:", you understand a common Devadhatthaa, who is stripped of both the past features and the present features; the Devadhatthaa understood, is without the attributes of the past as well as the attributes of the present.

Devadhatthaa does have attributes; but, the 'understood Devadhatthaa' is nirvishesha Devadhatthaa. This sentence is, therefore, called 'nirvishesha advaita bodhaka vaakyam' or 'abedha artha bodhaka vaakyam'.

Thus, 'samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyam' reveals 'dvaitham' or 'bahuthvam'; 'visishta artha bodhaka vaakyam' reveals 'visishta advaitam'; 'abedha artha bodhaka vaakyam' reveals 'nirvishesha advaitam'.

Now, the debate or controversy is: "Under which category does mahaa vaakyam come?"

We can straightaway negate the first possibility, viz. samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyam. That possibility is not there, because, in whichever sentence samsargaathmakam is there, in that sentence, there must be 'case endings' or 'prepositions'. Whereas, in 'thatthvamas!', there are no case endings at all. 'Thatth' is a noun; so is 'thvam'. 'As!' is the verb. There is no preposition at all – 'from', 'with', 'for', 'in', 'at' etc. The mahaa vaakyam is not revealing 'jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa', because the preposition 'and' is not there. Nor does the mahaa vaakyam say 'jeevaathmaa is from Paramaathmaa'; nor, 'jeevaathmaa is with Paramaathmaa'; nor, 'jeevaathmaa is existing for Paramaathmaa'. As we saw already, prepositions alone will reveal two separate and different entities having a relationship. Therefore, mahaa vaakyam is not a 'samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyam'. In Sanskrit, this conclusion can be expressed as "saamaanaadhikaranya prayogaath mahaa vaakyam na samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyam" or as "vibhakthi abhaavaath mahaa vaakyam na samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyam". "Saamaanaadhikaaranya vaakyam" means 'a statement without any prepositions'.

Therefore, mahaa vaakyam does not reveal jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa as two separate entities having a relationship. It only says "jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa".

Having thus concluded that the first option is ruled out by the rule 'vibhakthi abhaavaath mahaa vaakyam na samsarga bodhaka vaakyam', what is the next or second possibility? Can you take it as visishta artha bodhaka vaakyam, like neelam uthpalam? That was the suggestion the poorva pakshin makes in the introduction to the 76th verse, now being discussed.

The poorvapakshin suggests "thaththvamarthayo: neelothpalavath samsarga: asthu" – "Let there be a relationship between Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa, similar to the 'blue' colour of a lotus and the lotus". In other words, he asks "Why cannot you take mahaa vaakyam as a visishta artha bodhaka vaakyam?" When you say 'blue lotus', there is no preposition between the two words, 'blue' and 'lotus'; there are two words, but, the two together reveal only one substance, viz., 'a blue lily'. The word 'blue' is an adjective to the substance 'lotus'. 'Blue' is not 'lotus'; it does not become a lotus. It is only an attribute of lotus. The poorvapakshin asks the question "Why cannot you take 'thaththvamasl' as a visishta artha bodhaka vaakyam, like the term 'neelothpalam'?" His suggestion is: "Similar to the 'blueness' not being the 'lotus', but is only an attribute of the lotus, Jeevaathmaa is not Paramaathmaa, but, is an attribute of Paramaathmaa. There is one Paramaathmaa and all the jeevaathmaa-s, as well as the entire universe are His viseshanam-s / attributes. This, in my opinion, fits in very well. I agree, that, there is only one Isvara - eka: Isvara: | World is an adjective of that eka Isvara: and all of us jeevaathmaa-s are also adjectives of that eka Isvara: | Both the world and the jeevaa-s are dependent on Paramaathmaa, because adjectives or attributes can never exist independent of the substance. Paramaathmaa is svathanthra: | Jeeva: is paranthanthra viseshanam to Paramaathmaa. Jagath is also paranthanthra viseshanam to Paramaathmaa. Why can't we take it that way? You should accept 'I am paranthanthra:' and supplicate Paramaathmaa '! Lord! I am dependent on you'. Why can't you do that?"

The Advaitin's reply to this would be: "I wish I could take it that way; but, if I do that, there will be several problems. If mahaa vaakyam is to be understood as a visishta artha bodhaka vaakyam, what are the two possibilities? We should either take Paramaathmaa as viseshanam to jeevaathmaa or take jeevaathmaa as viseshanam to Paramaathmaa. But, both are not possible. Why not? Ans: To suggest Paramaathmaa as viseshanam of jeevaathmaa is comical / laughable, because, it would mean Paramaathmaa is dependent on jeevaathmaa. Such a consideration is more in the nature of a 'joke'. When samsaari jeevaa himself is miserable, how can he accept Paramaathmaa as 'dependent' on him? So, that possibility is ruled out. Then, can we take jeevaathmaa as attribute or viseshanam of Paramaathmaa? I say that is also not possible, because of two reasons. (1) The first reason: If jeevaathmaa becomes an attribute of Paramaathmaa, samsaarithvam which is the attribute of jeevaathmaa, will become an indirect attribute of Paramaathmaa also. And, if all the jeevaa-s become attributes of Paramaathmaa, the samsaaraa of all the jeevaa-s will be the samsaaraa of Paramaathmaa also. And, since the jeevaa-s continue eternally, Paramaathmaa's samsaaraa will also continue eternally. Bhagavaan will be subject to constant worry, without any relief. This situation is not tenable. (2) The second and the more important reason: Upanishad-s declare Paramaathmaa as free from all attributes. Any number of Upanishad manthraa-s can be cited to show that Paramaathmaa is nirvishesham. That being the case, how can jeevaa or jagath be considered as viseshanam to Paramaathmaa?"

Therefore, what is the conclusion? Ans: "Mahaa vaakyam can neither be a samsarga artha bodhaka vaakyam nor a visishta artha bodhaka vaakyam. It has to be an abedhaartha bodhaka vaakyam only, similar to the statement 'soyam Devadhattha:'".

In the statement 'soyam Devadhattha:', one understands the single Devadhatthaa, who is common to the past and to the present, by removing from one's mind, the past features of Devadhatthaa and also his present features. In a similar manner, when the aspirant tries to understand the mahaa vaakyam, he should drop both the superior attributes of Paramaathmaa and the inferior attributes of jeevaathmaa. Both the superior attributes of Paramaathmaa and the inferior attributes of jeevaathmaa belong to maayaa and are therefore mithyaa. Advaita Vedhaanthee does not say that the attributes are never there. It only proclaims that both the superior attributes of Paramaathmaa and the inferior attributes of jeevaathmaa belong to vyaavahaarika sathyam / mithyaa and are, therefore, not inherent. What are left behind, when the aspirant, thus, drops the attributes? Ans: "Paramaathmaa minus superior attributes, remains as Sath / 'Pure Existence'. Chaandoghya Upanishad refers to Brahman as 'sath', in its declaration 'sadheva idham agra aaseeth'. Jeevaathmaa minus inferior attributes, remains as 'Chith / 'Pure Consciousness'".

And, Upanishad-s declare, that Sath and Chith are not two separate entities, that, "sadheva chith chideva sath". The teachings "'I', the chith, am non separate from Sath, in all the three periods of time", "that 'I', Brahman, alone am appearing as vyavahaarika jeevaa" and "that 'I' alone am appearing as vyavaharika Isvara also" are what Vedhaanthee reveals.

"'I', the attribute-less Brahman alone, am appearing in the empirical plane as the attributed jeevaa" is one statement of Vedhaanthee. And, the next mind- boggling / frightening statement is "I, the nirvishesham Brahman alone, am appearing as the savishesha Isvara also".

The first part of the 2nd verse of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa's Maneeshaa Panchakam runs: "Brahmaivaaham jagath cha sakalam chinmaathravisthaaritham sarvam cha ethadh avidhyayaa thrigunayaa asesham mayaa kalpitham" – "I am Brahman, the Pure Consciousness; it is 'Pure Consciousness' which 'appears' as this universe; all this / universe is only something conjured up by me, because of avidhyaa (nescience), which is composed of three gunaa-s (sattva, rajas and thamas)".

All the three, viz., savishesha-saguna jeevaa, savishesha - saguna jagath and savishesha - saguna Isvara are 'appearing' in 'me', the nirvishesham Brahman, because of maayaa.

Kaivalya Upanishad (manthraa 19) also declares : "Mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham, mayi sarvam layam yaathi, thadh brahma adhvayam asmi aham" – "Everything is born in 'me' alone; everything is based on 'me' alone; everything is resolved in 'me' alone. 'I' am that non-dual Brahman".

"This alone can be taken as the import of the mahaa vaakyam" points out Sureswaraachaaryaa, in this verse 76 (of Chapter III – Naishkarmya Siddhi).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 77:

अत्राह । किमिह जिहासितं किं वोपादित्सितमिति । उच्यते । प्रत्यगात्मार्थ अभिधायिनः त्वंपदादुभयं प्रतीयतेऽहं दुःखी प्रत्यगात्मा च । तत्र च प्रत्यगात्मनोऽहं दुःखीत्यनेनभिसंबन्ध आत्मयाथात्म्यानवबोधहेतुक एव । अतोऽहमर्थः अनर्थ उपस्पृष्टत्वात् अज्ञानोत्थत्वाच्च हेय इति प्रत्यक्षतः अवसीयते । तदर्थं किं हेयं किं वोपादेयमिति नावघ्नियते । तत इदमभिधीयते।

It is to be decided as to what aspects of the meanings of the two terms 'Thou' and 'That' are to be rejected and what are to be taken up. By the term 'Thou', reference is made to the fact that the subject is in misery and that it is the immediate Self. The connection of the immediate Self with misery, is only due to the non-apprehension of the real nature of the Self. Therefore, by perception itself, it is established that the ego must be discarded, as evil enters into its being and as it arises from ignorance. What is to be accepted and what is rejected in the import of 'That' is not determined. Hence the next statement:

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa explains how the mahaa vaakyam should be operated as abedha artha bodhaka vaakyam. It is exactly as in the case of the statement 'soyam Devadhattha:'| When Devadhattha, the person whom you had known years before, is brought before you and introduced by another person as 'this is that same Devadhattha, whom you had known years before', you recollect the past Devadhattha, which Devadhattha had a set of features, totally different from the features of the Devadhattha now in front. So, when the introducer equates them – the past and the present Devadhattha - what phenomenon happens in your mind? To understand both of them as one, what should you do? Ans: "Temporarily, you should forget both the past and present features, and understand the featureless Devadhattha, behind the past and present features. The term 'featureless Devadhattha', of course, does not mean that Devadhattha and his features are to be 'physically' separated. It cannot be done. You can do it only mentally / intellectually. This mental/ intellectual stripping of features which are different, is called bhaagathyaagha lakshanaa / Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, while interpreting mahaa vaakyam, this 'bhaagathyaagha' has to be done, with reference to both Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa, when they are 'equated'. First, he takes up the case of jeevaathmaa for this 'stripping off' exercise

The aspirant should strip jeevaathmaa of all its mithyaa features, which are irrelevant in the mahaa vaakyam context. In mundane existence, he can give an appropriate introduction of himself, as the situation demands. But, in the context of mahaa vaakyam, he should know what should be stripped off from the jeevaathmaa. That is what Sureswaraachaaryaa is explaining. In other words, 'Thvam padha bhaagathyaagha lakshanaa' is talked about, in this introduction.

ॐ अत्र - In this context of operating the mahaa vaakyam as abedha artha bodhaka vaakyam, ॐ आह - the following points are to be noted.

ॐ किं इह जिहासितं - - 'Which all features should be dropped?'

We should first ask the question "Which all features of 'mine' (the jeevaathmaa) should be dropped from 'me', for ejykyam with Paramaathmaa, for boldly claiming "I am Paramaathmaa", without any hesitation / reservation / fear? Which all features should I disclaim or de-identify with?" 'jihaasitham' is derived as 'haathum ishtam' meaning 'desired to be disclaimed/ rejected / handed over to the anaathmaa'.

But, in the process of 'rejection', the aspirant should not 'throw the baby away with the bathwater'; he has to retain certain other features. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

ॐ किं वा उपादित्सितं - (and) 'What are the features that are to be retained?';

'Upaaditsitham' means 'that, which should be retained'.

This 'partial rejection with partial acceptance' is termed 'bhaagathyaaghaa'.

ॐ इति - if these questions are asked,

ॐ उच्यते - I will answer in detail .

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मार्थं अभिधायिनः त्वंपदात् - When the aspirant listens to the word 'thvam', in 'thath thvam asi', from that word 'thvam', which is revealing the prathyag aathmaa primarily,

ॐ उभयं प्रतीयते - two components are grasped together, (viz.,)

When the teacher addresses the student as 'thvam', the student naturally has to understand the word as referring to him; i.e. as 'I'; and, there are two components belonging to that word 'I'. What are the two components? Ans: "One is aathmaa and the other is ahamkaara." | And, it is this aathmaa-ahamkaara mixture, which is listening to the teaching of the mahaa vaakyam. Aathmaa cannot listen to the vaakyam, by itself. Why not? Ans: "Because, it does not have the mind or the ears. Aathmaa by itself, cannot hear, because it does not have hearing instruments". Then, why not ahamkaara hear the mahaa vaakyam? Ans: "No, because, Ahamkaara, by itself, cannot even have existence or consciousness without aathmaa. Ahamkaara is a mithyaa jada padhaartha. This mithyaa jada ahamkaara borrows sath also from aathmaa and chith also from aathmaa. In other words, behind the ahamkaara, aathmaa is always there, lending it sath and chith". Since, thus, neither aathmaa alone nor ahamkaara alone can listen to mahaa vaakyam, who is listening? Ans: "It is the aathma-ahamkaara-misraa, which is listening to the teaching of mahaa vaakyam. When the teacher says 'thvam', the student converts that into 'aham' and that word 'aham' or 'I', is now aathma - ahamkaara - misra:" | That is what is conveyed by the term 'ubhayam pratheeyathe'. Both are grasped from the word 'thvam'. What type of 'thvam'? Ans: "Prathyagaathmaartha abhidhaayina:" - "which should be revealing the prathyag aathmaa primarily". Even so, both aathmaa and ahamkaaraa are understood from the word 'thvam'. That is what Sureswaraachaaryaa points out. He first refers to ahamkaaraa, since ahamkaaraa is dominant in any individual, because of which, the individual finds it almost impossible to get over his mundane worries.

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मा च - and the inner aathmaa.

'Dhu:khee' refers to ahamkaaraa. The phrase 'Prathyagaathmaa cha' conveys, that, behind the ahamkaaraa, prathyagaathmaa is also there.

(Really speaking, such words 'behind', 'inner' etc. should not be used in the context of the sarvagatha (omnipresent) aathmaa, since, if understood literally, they can be misleading. Nevertheless, their use is inevitable in particular contexts.)

Both the components, 'ahamkaaraa' and 'aathmaa', are understood from the word 'thvam', at the time of the student listening to the mahaa vaakyam. What should the student do, then? Ans: He should realize the following important fact.

ॐ तत्र च - While thus understanding (he should also understand, that),

ॐ प्रत्यगात्मनः - for 'me', the prathyak aathmaa,

ॐ अभिसम्बन्धः - identification

ॐ अहं दुःखी इति अनेन - with mithyaa ahamkaaraa, which is generally miserable,

ॐ आत्म याथात्म्य अनवबोध हेतुक एव - is caused only by ignorance of the nature of the Self, that it is the Reality.

'aathma yaathaathmyam' means 'nature of the Self, viz., that it is the only Reality'; 'anavabodham' means 'ignorance' and 'hethuka' means 'caused by'.

What is the idea? When I use the word 'I', in that word, the aathmaa part is also there; ahamkaaraa part is also there. Which one is the real 'I'? Is it aathmaa or ahamkaaraa? Veda wants to tell us (i) that, aathmaa is the real 'I' (ii) that, the ahamkaaraa part is the unreal / mithyaa 'I' and finally (iii) that, the mithyaa ahamkaaraa part cannot have any real relationship with the sathya aathmaa 'I'.

Why cannot mithyaa ahamkaaraa have any real relationship with the sathya aathmaa 'I'? Ans: "Because anything unreal can never have a relationship with reality. To understand this statement, imagine an individual who dreams of having a son in his sleep. When the dreamer wakes up, he obviously does not have any relationship with the 'dream son' and conversely the mithyaa 'dream son' also cannot have any 'father-son' relationship with the jaagrath individual. In a similar manner, the mithyaa ahamkaaraa cannot have any sambhandhaa with the real 'I'".

So, what is the aspirant's ultimate knowledge? Ans: "'I' do not have any sambhandhaa with the mithyaa ahamkaaraa". This is the knowledge which he has to gather. But, ironically, to make this statement, he will have to use mithyaa ahamkaaraa. Therefore, he can use the mithyaa ahamkaaraa; but, even while using the mithyaa ahamkaaraa, he should be aware of the fact, that, it is not his inherent part. A mundane example for this is the false dentures: "I use the mithyaa denture; but I also understand, that the mithyaa denture is not a part of me". Ahamkaaraa, similar to the denture, can be used for all transactions; but, by mahaa vaakyam, the aspirant should understand the mithyaathvam of ahamkaaraa and should desist from claiming the ahamkaaraa as his integral or inherent part. That is what Sureswaracharyaa conveys by this statement.

'Aathma yaathaathmyam' means 'the higher Self'. The 'anavabhodhakam' or 'ignorance' is of the fact that 'I', the aathmaa, am the only Reality and 'ahamkaaraa' is mithyaa / vyaavaharika sathyam / a lower order of reality. Also, because of the 'ignorance', the 'lower order of reality' will appear as of the 'higher order of reality', similar to the dream appearing as real at the time of dreaming.

Therefore, what should the aspirant do, after mahaa vaakyasravanam? Ans: "At the time of sravanam, for the purpose of sravanam, he has to have both the aathmaa and ahamkaaraa together only; but, instantaneously, he should peel off the ahamkaaraa part". An example from mundane existence is that when someone wants to eat a banana and, therefore, buys one, the 'bought' banana has two components in it, viz., (i) the edible fruit part and (ii) the inedible skin part, which the buyer cannot avoid at the time of buying. But, later, he peels off the skin, discards it and eats only the fruit. Similarly, the aathmaa fruit has to be kept and the ahamkaaraa skin will have to be 'peeled off', which is 'bhaagathyaagaa'.

'Ahamkaaraa' is not only the 'mithyaa' skin; it always creates problem also. There is no 'comfortable ahamkaaraa' possible. Why? Ans: "Because ahamkaaraa is always / doggedly attacked by karmaa. Even if the praarabhdha karma is exhausted, the sanchitham is waiting to take effect and give results. Therefore, the very term 'comfortable ahamkaaraa' is an oxymoron. 'Comfortable ahamkaaraa' does not exist. If at all there is a comfortable ahamkaaraa, it is only that ahamkaaraa which says "I am not ahamkaaraa but aathmaa; which disclaims ahamkaaraa and claims 'aham aathmaa'". Without claiming the aathmaa, ahamkaaraa per se can never exist as comfortable ahamkaaraa, because praarabhdha karmaa is continually chasing. This may be compared to the oft-quoted episode from Uddhava Githaa : A bird got hold of a piece of animal flesh and was holding it in its beak ; before, it could eat it, other birds crowded around it, each trying to snatch away the piece of flesh. The first bird tried to escape with the piece, flying from place to place, and, it was getting chased by all other birds. As it was flying, by accident, it dropped the piece of flesh. Upon which, the other birds gave up chasing the first bird and went instead after the piece of flesh. The first bird was left in peace. That is liberation. 'Ahamkaaraa' is similar to the 'piece of flesh' in the story and all the karmaa-s are similar to the chasing birds. The uninformed individual holds on to ahamkaaraa and then works for freedom from the chasing 'karmaa-s' / dhasaa-s. Sureswaraacharya says that it does not work, because 'comfortable ahamkaaraa' does not simply exist. This is true even for Bhagavaan. Even Bhagavaan, as 'Bahagvaan – with-ego', will not be comfortable as a Creator. He will also have complaints; He will regret "I created human beings; I taught them dharma saasthraa; but, nobody is listening to me". Even Bhagavaan's ahamkaaraa will have only complaints. If Bhagavaan is free, it is only because He knows "I am not the Creator ahamkaaraa; I am the sacchidhaanandha aathmaa; therefore, I am free". As ahamkaaraa, the cosmic ego, Bhagavaan's ahamkaaraa also will have maximum complaints. Therefore, the only way out, is to drop the ahamkaaraa from the meaning of the word 'I'. When you use the word 'I', make use of the ahamkaaraa, but, mentally exclude the mithyaa ahamkaaraa, which ahamkaaraa is 'assumed' because of ignorance.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

ॐ अतः - Therefore,

ॐ अहं अर्थः - this ahamkaaraa,

ॐ अनर्थ उपस्पृष्टत्वात् - because it is constantly afflicted by problems,

This is a very significant and important statement. 'anartham' means 'problems' and includes praarabhdha karmaa; 'upasrushtaa' means 'constantly afflicted / contaminated / polluted / chased' etc. Not only that; another very important reason follows:

ॐ अज्ञान उत्थत्वात् च - and, also because it is born out of ignorance,

The entire ahamkaaraa is born of and sustained by the ignorance of three facts., viz., that (i) it is 'mithyaa' (ii) it does not have an existence of its own and (iii) it is inessential naama and roopaa only. Katopanishad (II. i. 11) declares "Neha naanaasthi kichana" - "There is no plurality at all here" and Kaivalyopanishad (manthraa 22) declares "na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasi na caanilo mesti na chaambaram cha" – " For me, (the jnaani) earth and water are not there. Fire is not there. Air is not there. Space is also not there". Ahamkaaraa has got only an 'apparent', borrowed existence; it does not have a 'real' existence of its own. The more you enquire into that, the more it will disappear. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "ajnaana utthathvaath".

ॐ हेयः - (ahamkaaraa) has to be disclaimed / rejected.

'Heya:' is the most powerful word here, meaning 'to be disclaimed' / 'to be rejected'. The advice is "Never claim ahamkaaraa as 'I' or as 'mine'. Ahamkaaraa is neither me nor mine". In fact, this is the ultimate vedhaanthic saranaagathi. In Vedhaanthee, saranaagathi means offering ahamkaaraa to viswaroopa Isvara and telling Him "Whatever ahamkaaraa has to go through, according to your cosmic drama, let it go through. I am offering the ahamkaaraa to you and I want to abide as Brahman". That is called "aathma nivedana roopa sarva dharma parithyajyam". Here, the word 'dharmaa' represents ahamkaaraa, because both dharmaa and adharmaa belong to ahamkaaraa only. Therefore, 'dharmaan parithyajaya' means 'dharmam adharmam sahitha ahamkaaram parithyajaya' | Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa has dealt with this topic in his Bhaashyam to the well-known slokaa (Ch. XVIII- verse 66) 'sarva dharmaan parithyajya maamekam saranam vraja' |

'Dharmaan parithyajya' means 'ahamkaaram api praithyajya' | Rejecting 'ahamkaaraa', the aspirant should abide as aathmaa, which aathmaa is defined as 'anyathra dharmaath anyathra adharmaath' (Katopanishad I. ii. 14) | He should claim to be the 'aathmaa' which transcends both 'dharmaa' and 'adharmaa". This is the significance of the statement 'heya:' |

ॐ इति प्रत्यक्षतः अवसीयते - This should be clearly understood.

This is called 'thvam padha bhagathyaaga lakshanaa'. Then, what about 'thadh padhaa'? That also Sureswaraachaaryaa introduces in the gadhyaam.

Just as the ahamkaaraa part of jeevaathmaa has to be dropped, the ahamkaara part of Paramaathmaa also has to be dropped. What are the ahamkaaraa features of Paramaathmaa? Sureswaraachaaryaa says "I shall talk about them in the following verse".

ॐ तदर्थे - In the import of 'thath' (viz., Paramaathmaa),

ॐ किं हेयं - what are the mithyaa features to be given up

Isvara also has got a mithyaa part called aparaaprakruthi and a sathyam part called paraa prakruthi.

ॐ किं वा उपादेयं - and which part is to be retained,

ॐ इति न अवघ्नियते - have not yet been ascertained.

'Thvam padhaa' part had been discussed. 'Thadh padhaa' has not been discussed yet.

ॐ ततः इदं अभिधीयते - Therefore, I want to talk about it (in the following slokaa).

Sureswaraachaaryaa introduces the topic in this gadyam, with the details following in the verse.

184: Chapter III, Verses 77 and 78 (12-06-2010)

In these verses (verses 76 to 78), Sureswaraachaaryaa is explaining the well-known bhaagathyaghalakshanaa or jahadajahal lakshanaa, which is to be employed while studying the mahaa vaakyam.

The word 'thvam' / 'jeevaathmaa' has two components. One is aathmaa and the other is ahamkaara: | Both of them are directly revealed, by the word 'thvam'. Similarly, by the word 'thath', the Paramaathmaa, both aathmaa and macro ahamkaaraa of Isvara are revealed. Isvara also has got a macro ahamkaaraa. When He proclaims "aham srushti sthithi laya karthaa", it is macro ahamkaaraa.

Ahamkaaraa means 'anaathmaa + chidhaabhaasaa (Reflected Consciousness)'. 'Anaathma Sareerathrayam' + chidhaabhaasaa' is jeevaathmaa's ahamkaaraa. 'Anaathma Prapancha thrayam + 'chidhaabhaasaa' is Isvara's ahamkaaraa.

And, if you retain the ahamkaaraa of Isvara and the ahamkaaraa of jeevaa, in the meanings of 'thath' and 'thvam' respectively, while trying to understand the mahaa vaakyam, the eiyyam will not function. Therefore, we have to reject the ahamkaaraa from both jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, while equating them. And, since the rejection is partial, i.e. since we are to retain the aathmaa part of both, while rejecting the ahamkaaraa parts, the nature of the rejection is called 'bhaagathyaaagha lakshanaa', literally meaning 'partial rejection'. What is meant by 'rejection' is not any physical event. The 'rejection' is: 'Understanding the ahamkaaraa (of both jeevaa and Isvara) as vyaavahaarika sathyam and aathmaa as paaramaarthika sathyam'. This 'satthaa bedhaa' understanding alone is bhaagathyaaagha lakshanaa, which exercise should be done with respect to both 'thath' and 'thvam'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, is dealing with 'thvam padhaa bhaagathyaaagaa' in the sambhandha gadhyam of verse 77 and the 'thath padha bhaagathyaghaa' in the verse.

To recollect the discussion in the earlier session, on the latter portion of the sambhandha gadhyam: The phrase 'aham artha:' (in the text) refers to the ahamkaaraa of jeevaathmaa or of the 'thvam padhaa'. As mentioned, 'I' / 'aham' is a composite / mixed entity, consisting of Paaramaarthika chaithanyam and vyaavahaarika ahamkaaraa. But, here, Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the term 'aham artha:' to refer only to the ahamkaaraa portion, since that is the more popular meaning of 'aham'. And, he says : 'aham artha: heya:', meaning 'ahamkaaraa should be rejected as vyaavahaarika sathyam'. 'Heya:' means 'should be rejected'.

The ahamkaaraa will continue for experience and has utility also. But, it is mithyaa. 'Mithyaa' means that which is subject to experience, which has got utility, which has got orderliness, but, which does not have an existence of its own and therefore, cannot be counted.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says that 'ahamkaaraa' should be dropped as mithyaa. "But, why?" the layman student might wonder; and ask: "I love ahamkaaraa; as a father, I enjoy my children; as a grandfather, I enjoy my grandchildren. Ahamkaaraa is lovable and enjoyable. Why do you want me to drop it?"

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa gives reasons as to why the ahamkaaraa should be dropped. The reasons are very important. The first reason is:

ॐ अनर्थ उपस्पृष्टत्वात् - Because, ahamkaaraa is afflicted / tainted by the problems created by sanchitha-aagaami-praarabhda karmaa-s.

'Anartha' denotes 'the problems of sanchitha-aagaami-praarabhdaa. Ahamkaaraa is under the grip of karmaa. And, 'problems of praarabhdha karmaa' include the effect of the different jyothisha dhasaa-s like raahu, kethu, sani etc. This is one reason.

There is a second reason, which is equally or more important:

ॐ अज्ञान उत्थत्वात् - Because ahamkaaraa is born out of ajnaanam.

'Ajnaanam' means 'moolaavidhya' or 'maayaa'. Ahamkaaraa is a product of maayaa and therefore mithyaa. Therefore, the mithyaa-problematic ahamkaaraa should be discarded at the time of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

And, whenever we talk about discarding ahamkaaraa, we have to remember the corollary also (this was discussed earlier, but being important, is repeated):

“Dropping or falsifying ahamkaaraa looks like an ordinary, innocent job. But, it has got serious repercussions which the aspirants have to be aware of. To understand this, an example will help. Imagine a ‘tabular statement’, showing the temperatures on a given day, in different cities. There are two columns in the ‘Table’, with the titles of the columns shown on the top of the ‘Table’, as ‘City’ for the left column and ‘Temperature in Centigrade’, for the right column. Suppose you are making a correction in one line. The temperature in a particular City is shown as 38.40 and you correct it as 38.80. That correction does not cause any major change to the entire table; you have made a correction only against one City. But, suppose, instead, you make a correction to the title of the right column, from ‘Centigrade’ to ‘Fahrenheit’. Now, even though you have made a change again only in one line, there is a serious repercussion to this change. As a consequence of changing the title of the ‘temperature column’, the unit of measurement, you have to change the ‘temperatures’ shown for every city, i.e., in each line. Thus, there is a difference between ‘changing the temperature of one City’ and ‘changing the unit of the temperature’.

“Similarly in the bhaagathyaagha lakshanaa in mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, when we talk about discarding / falsifying ahamkaaraa of ‘thvam’, it is not an ordinary change, but a change with serious repercussions. This is because the definition of samsaaraa and the definition of mokshaa, are both based on the definition of ‘I’, since ‘I’ am the one who is samsaari or muktha: | Therefore, the definition of mokshaa will also have to be changed when the ahamkaaraa is dropped. In the beginning stage of Vedhaanthic teaching, the superimposition of ahamkaaraa on ‘I’, (termed adhyaaropa) is temporarily accepted. Therefore, at this stage, the concept of mokshaa is based on ‘I’, the ahamkaaraa. Mokshaa is defined, either based on karmaa, which is connected to ahamkaaraa or based on the state of the mind, which is also connected to ahamkaaraa or to events in life, like death etc., which are also based on the ahamkaaraa. As a consequence, we know mukthi as jeevan mukthi and videha mukthi. But, at the time of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, the ‘superimposition’ of ahamkaaraa should end and what is termed as apavaadha (negation of ahamkaaraa) should start.

"Thus, since during mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, the aspirant should discard ahamkaaraa, he should discard the ahamkaaraa based jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi format mokshaa also. At the time of this apavaadhaa (rejection of ahamkaara), the new definition of mokshaa is 'nithya mukthi:' or 'siddha mukthi:' or 'svaroopa mukthi:', i.e., the understanding, 'I' am of the nature of mokshaa itself. This is the new definition that we have to come to."

To consolidate: Adhyaaropaa (superimposition of ahamkaaraa on 'I' or 'aham') should be followed by apavaadhaa (negation of ahamkaaraa), at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam. This is baahghathyaaghaa, which consists not only of disclaiming ahamkaaraa, but also of discarding jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi concept of mokshaa and discovering, that, 'nithya mukthi' is 'my' very nature; that, Mokshaa is not a saadhyam ; that, mokshaa is not something to be accomplished ; that, it is not an event to happen; and that, Mokshaa is my very nature.

But, the problem with most students is that they refuse to change the mokshaa format, even at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam. They do not change the jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi concept of mokshaa, since it gets deeply entrenched in their minds, during their initial stages of Vedhaanthic study. If they do not drop this concept during sravanam, they should do so at least during subsequent mananam or at least during nidhidhyaasanam. Ironically, instead of discarding the jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi format during mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, most try to use mahaa vaakyam for getting jeevan mukthi and vidaha mukthi.

The application of mahaa vaakyaa should be for the purpose of discarding the old mokshaa format (jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi concept) and claiming the new mokshaa ('nithya mukthi:' or 'siddha mukthi:' or 'svaroopa mukthi:'). And, if an aspirant does not apply the mahaa vaakyam in this direction and instead tries to use mahaa vaakyam for jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi promotion, he will find that he is failing / that, it is not working at all.

As a result, he tends to think: 'I have been studying Vedhaanthaa for a number of years, without making any tangible progress towards mokshaa. Perhaps mere knowledge is not enough. Perhaps I require some mystic experience. Or, perhaps I have not got samaadhi or my samaadhi is not enough'. He tries to 'adjust' all the 'knobs'; but, miserably fails.

"A senior student, who has completed several Geethaa and Upanishad courses told me 'Swamiji! I have dropped the idea of achieving mukthi in this life. I think it is not possible for me. So, I have re-set the goal of my life as saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi. After 30 years of Vedhaanthic study, this student drops the idea of mukthi as his goal and decides that, instead, saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi will be his goal. Why? Ans: 'Because he has not understood that he has to do apavaadhaa, with regard to the definition of mokshaa'. This will happen to all such aspirants, who, in frustration after a long study, will shift their goal, thinking 'I am never able to hit the goal. So, let me change the goal post itself'".

So, what is the mahaa vaakyaa slogan? Ans: 'Disclaim ahamhaaraa; discard jeevan mukthi-vidaha mukthi concept of mokshaa; and, discover nithya mukthi as svaroopaa'. This is a very, very important corollary of bhaagathyaaga lakshanaa.

As Lord Krishna declares in the Bhagavadh Geethaa (Ch. V – 8 & 9): 'Naiva kinchith karomi ithi yuktho manyetha thathvavith pasyan srunvan sprusan jighran asnan gacchan svapan svasan pralapan visrujan gruhnan unmishan nimishannapi indriyaani indriyaartheshu varthanthe ithi dhaarayan'– 'Even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing, talking, evacuating, receiving, opening the eye and closing the eye, the disciplined knower of the Truth understands that he does not do anything at all, bearing in mind that sense organs remain in sense-objects'.

In (Ramana Mahrishi's) Sadh Dharsanam also, there is a beautiful slokaa (verse 40): "roopini aroopini ubhayaathmikaa cha mukthi: thriroopethi vidho vadhanthi | idham thrayam yaa vivinaktyhamdhee: thasyaa: praanasa: paramaatha mukthi:" - "Some people talk about roopini mukthi: (i.e., 'same people say I am interested only in jeevan mukthi: ; I do not care about videha mukthi:'); some people talk about aroopini mukthi: (which means 'some people say I care about videha mukthi: only; let there be jeevan mukthi: or not') ; some people talk about the mixture of the two as the mukthi: (meaning 'some people want both')| Thus, mukthi is looked upon in three different ways. But, the real mukthi / the paramaatha mukthi is the falsification of the ahamkaaraa, which is the basis for all these divisions". That mukthi: is siddha mukthi: / nithya mukthi:, with regard to which, there can be no failure. | With regard to 'saadhya mukthi', there can be failures, whereas 'siddha mukthi' cannot be a failure, because, whether one likes it or not - either fortunately or unfortunately- mukthi happens to be 'my' nature. And, even if an aspirant changes his mind and decides to forego his liberation, he cannot, because that is 'my' svaroopaa.

Mahaa vaakyaa is meant for claiming this nithya mukthi, forgetting jeevan mukthi- videha mukthi concept, by the dropping / rejection of ahamkaaraa. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says 'ahamartha: heya: eva'"

Having completed thvam padha bhaagathyagaa, we have to come to the thath padhaa, which is done in the verse that follows. Reverting to the text:

Chapter III: Verse 77

पारोक्ष्यं यत्तदर्थं स्यात् तद् हेयमहमर्थवत्।

प्रतीचेवाहमोऽभेदः पारोक्ष्येणात्मनोऽपि मे ॥ ७७ ॥

Ahamkaaraa is mixed up with aathmaa, when we use the word 'I'. In a similar manner, 'remoteness' is mixed up with 'thath / Paramaathmaa, which is really myself. That remoteness should be discarded from the meaning of 'thath', similar to discarding 'ahamkaaraa', while understanding 'thvam padhaa'.

The second line is to be taken up first.

ॐ अहमः प्रतीचा अभेदः (वर्तते) - Ahamkaaraa is mixed up with aathmaa, when we use the word 'I'.

This is something which we had discussed already. 'ahama:' means 'ahamkaarasya'; 'abedha:' means 'non-distinction / thaadhaathmyam / eiyaam / abhimaanam / 'mixing up'; 'pratheechee' means 'with prathyag aathmaa'; 'prathyang' is the noun. This is 'thaadhathmya adhyaasa:' | 'Ahamkaaraa' is mixed up with 'prathyag aathmaa'. The consequence is localization / limitation of aathmaa.

ॐ इव - In a similar manner,

ॐ आत्मनः मे अपि पारोक्ष्येण (अभेदः : वर्तते) - 'remoteness' is mixed up with Paramaathmaa, though Paramaathmaa is really myself.

'Aathmaa, in this context means 'Paramaathmaa / 'thath padhaartha'. 'Paramaathmaa' includes 'moksha', because the nature of Paramaathmaa is mokshaa. Paramaathmaa and mokshaa are identical. 'Paarokshyam' means 'remoteness, both in terms of time and space'. Mokshaa and Paramaathmaa are mixed up with remoteness. That is the reason that when the term Paramaathmaa is mentioned, a layman immediately thinks of Vaikuntaa, Kailaasaa etc. But, when we, thus, consider Paramaathmaa remote, we automatically make mokshaa also remote. We tend to think "I have to die and travel, go through sukla gathi and through Vaikunta vaasal, reach the Paramaathmaa there; and, when I reach and sit on the lap of the Lord, then I will get mokshaa".

The irony is that we say that Paramaathmaa is all-pervading and, at the same time, believe, that, that we should 'reach' that all pervading Paramaathmaa by travelling. Is this not a contradiction? Thus, jeevaathmaa is mixed up with an unwanted thing, 'ahamkaaraa' and Paramaathmaa is mixed up with an unwanted thing, 'remoteness'. Mahaa vaakyam should remove the unwanted ahamkaaraa from 'thvam padhaartha' and the unwanted remoteness from 'thath padhaartha'.

The 'discarding of remoteness' is called bhagathyaagha lakshanaa with regard to thadh padhaa. That is said in the first line.

ॐ यद् पारोक्ष्यं (तद्) That remoteness (which is associated with Paramaathmaa),

Spatial remoteness will cause time-wise remoteness also, because once Paramaathmaa is considered to be located in a higher lokaa, the aspirant has to travel to reach that Paramaathmaa, which travel is, obviously, time-consuming. Not only is the Paramaathmaa physically away; but, time-wise also Paramaathmaa and mokshaa are away. The aspirant believes "I should get jeevan mukthi by reaching Paramaathmaa". Therefore, the concept of 'remoteness' should be dropped.

ॐ तदर्थं हेयं स्यात् - should be discarded from the meaning of 'thath' (at the time of mahaa vaaky sravanam), ॐ अहं अर्थवत् - similar to discarding 'ahamkaaraa', while understanding 'thvam padhaa'.

Thus, spatial and time-wise remoteness (wrongly) associated with Paramaathmaa should be discarded and ahamkaaraa (wrongly) associated with 'aham' or 'jeevaathmaa' should be discarded.

Once ahamkaaraa is discarded from thvam padhaa and remoteness is discarded from thath padhaa, by the application of bhaagathyaaga lakshanaa, what is left behind is 'eka aathmaa' which is here and now. That conviction is nithya mukthi: / Therefore, I am liberated, not due to 'meditation' afterwards, but sravana kaale eva.

A significant point to be noted: Sureswaraachaarya has mischievously and quietly added an adjective 'mey' to 'aathmana:', meaning 'that Paramaathmaa is really 'myself'. He says "remove the remoteness from Paramaathmaa, which is really myself and claim "I' am Paramaathmaa' and be free. What is the difficulty?"

This is being elaborated in the following portions also.

Sambhandha gadhyam (Part) to Verse 78:

कथं पुनः तदर्थोऽद्वितीयलक्षणः प्रत्यगात्मोपाश्रयं सद्वितीयत्वं दुःखित्वं निरन्वयमपनुदतीति ।
उच्यते।

How can the idea of being without a second conveyed by the term 'Thou', cancel without residue, the connotation of having a second and being miserable, that is embodied in the term 'Thou'? It is explained this way.

The student looks for further clarity. He asks "Even though I claim 'aham brahma asmi', on listening to mahaa vaakyam, and also take care to continue to remember this fact, I am not able to avoid sorrow in my life, during my day-to-day transactions. Very often I experience sorrow, and, when I am, thus, solidly experiencing sorrow, how can I boldly claim I am aanaanda svaroopam? The idea is so jarring. It looks like a 'conditioning' that I am asked to practice. How can I get convinced about my nithya aanandha svaroopam? Simultaneously experiencing sorrow in life and claiming I am nithya aanandhaa - how is that possible?"

What is the answer? Ans: The statements 'I experience sorrow' and 'I am sorrowful' are not synonymous. If, to an aspirant, they appear synonymous, it is because bhaagathyaaga lakshanaa has not worked for him; he has not really understood or assimilated the message. When he says 'I experience sorrow', the meaning of the word I, is the aathmaa; but, 'sorrow' is an attribute which belongs to the anaathmaa mind, which anaathmaa mind will have the three gunaa-s and as a result of that, fluctuating emotions will be there. Vedhaantha never promises freedom from fluctuations, at the level of anaathmaa. Anaathmaa is subject to fluctuations. What Vedhaantha says is: "'I', who am the observer of the anaathmaa, am only observing the emotional fluctuations of the anaathmaa mind; 'I' am not subject to any fluctuations ; but, at the time when the emotional fluctuations are there, 'my' aanandha svaroopam will not be reflected in that mind". Experiential aanandha is prathibhimbhaa aanandhaa / reflected happiness. That aanandha will be fluctuating. 'Reflected happiness' will be fluctuating. Nobody can stop it. Even Bhagavaan, when He looks at the terrible sufferings of His devotees, will be subject to misery. Vedhaantha never talks about the permanence of experiential aanandha. What Vedhaantha. says is : "When experiential aanandha is there, I understand 'I' am aanandha manifested in the mind and when sorrow is there, 'I' am still aanandha, but, not manifested in the mind". The mind has got its own fluctuations just as the physical body has got its own fluctuations. At anaathmaa level, we can only try to maintain 'health', as best as possible'; but, there is no question of a perfect physical body; or a perfect mind reflecting aanandha all the time. As an instance, imagine that you try to be 'smiling' all the time, because you have been told that you are nithya aanandha svaroopam: / But, when you have to attend a condolence meeting, you cannot continue to smile. At that meeting, the mind has to take a different vrutthi. But, that vrutthi does not negate the Vedhaanthic teaching that 'I' am ever aanandha.

The student has failed to capture these subtle points , viz., (i) that 'I' am original aanandha (ii) that does not mean 'I' am eternal experiential aanandha (which, as we saw, is not possible even for Bhagavaan) (iii) experiential aanandha will have to be fluctuating; but, the teaching is that, that does not touch my svaroopam.

Because of this failure, the student asks the question "How can mahaa vaakyam remove my sorrow?" This student is not able to differentiate between bhimbha aanaadhaa and prathibimbha aanandhaa. When Vedhaantha talks about the permanence of bimbha aanandhaa, which is 'myself', this student, without properly comprehending this, looks for permanence in the prathibimbha aanandhaa, which does not exist. He works for the non-existent and when his attempt naturally fails, he criticizes maha vaakyam.

Referring to the text,

ॐ कथं पुनः - How (does)

ॐ अद्वितीय लक्षणः तदर्थः - the non-dual thadh padhaartha / Paramaathmaa

ॐ अपनुदति - eliminate

ॐ सद्वितीयत्वं - (my) limitations (and)

'sadvitheeyathvam' means 'limitation'; and the 'limitation' talked of, is one's inability to solve one's problems. The student's question is: "I have a number of problems in my day-to-day life. And, in spite of whatever I do to solve them, those problems continue. Thus, I have a limitation. How can that limitation, viz., my inability to solve my problems, be eliminated, by merely claiming 'aham Brahma asmi'?"

ॐ दुःखित्वं - the sorrow that I am experiencing intensely

'dhu:kithvam' means 'sorrow'. The samsaari student is always under the grip of sorrow, constantly working in his mind like the 'sruthi' of the 'thamburaa' in a musical concert. So, he wonders "How can this sorrow be eliminated, by my mere claim 'I am Parmaathmaa'?" And, even if he is able forget his sorrow, during the time of Vedhaanthic study, he fears that it will be only for that brief period and, therefore asks, ॐ निरन्वयं - without a trace?

The student's doubt is: "How can the mere belief in jeevaathma -Paramaathma-ejykyam, the import of the mahaa vaakyam, eliminate my inability to solve my problems and my sorrow, without a trace?"

This doubt may lead him to think that he is missing out on some other saadhanaa. He may even come to the conclusion that taking to sanyaasa aasramaa might help. All these wrong conclusions are because of the fact, that, he had not understood the true meaning of the word 'I'.

ॐ इति - If such a question is raised,

ॐ उच्यते - (Sureswaraacharya says) I will answer.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 78 of Chapter III:

न च एतयोः निवर्तकनिवर्त्यभावं वयं ब्रूमः । कथं तर्हि । त्वमर्थं प्रत्यगात्मनि प्रागनवबुद्धाद्वितीयता सानेनावबोध्यते । अतोऽनवबोधनिरासेन तद्व्यस्य सद्वितीयत्वस्य त्वमर्थस्थस्य परोक्षत्वस्य च तदर्थस्थस्य निरसनात् न वैयधिकरण्यादिचोध्यस्यावस्रोऽस्तीति । तदिदमभिधीयते ।

We do not assert that the meanings of the two terms stand in relation to the sublator and the sublated. How else then? In relation to the Self, signified by 'Thou', the term 'That' intimates that it is secondless, a fact not apprehended before. By this removal of the basal non-apprehension, the two consequences of that non-apprehension, namely, the sense of not being one without a second in the case of 'Thou' and of not being immediate in the case of 'That' stand negated. Hence objections like this one, urging diversity in the imports of the two terms, do not apply at all. This is explained:

The essence of Sureswaraacharya's answer to the student's question is as follows:

"Mahaa vaakyam never promises to totally eliminate the experiential sorrow of the mind. That is not the intention or promise of the mahaa vaakyam. The experiential sorrow of the mind is claimed as 'I am sorrowful'. This claim 'I am sorrowful', is a result 'my' adhyasa identification with the 'mind', which mind, in reality, is the one that is sorrowful. 'Mind' is part of ahamkaaraa. Because of the existence of ahamkaaraa, 'I' am identified with the mind; and, the experiential sorrow, which actually belongs to the mind is claimed as 'my' sorrow. When this wrong identification and consequent wrong perception are there, the direct and immediate aim of mahaa vaakyam is to correct the aspirant, by detaching 'I' from the mind and making the aspirant claim (i) 'I' am not the mind and (ii) the sorrow of the mind does not belong to 'me'. This is the first and direct purpose of mahaa vaakyam, viz., to point out that "Neither am 'I' the mind; nor is the experiential sorrow which belongs to the mind, 'mine'. On the other hand, 'I' am only the witness of both the mind and the sorrow belonging to the mind". This is the first aim of mahaa vaakyam.

"The second aim of mahaa vaakyam is to point out that this mind and the sorrow, both being the products of maayaa, are mithyaa i.e. they are only vyaavahaarika sathyam. The adjective 'ajnaana uththathvaath cha' (used by the Aachaaryaa, in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 76) is important. Ajnaanam means moolaavidhyaa which means maayaa. 'Maayaa uththathvaath' means 'mithyaathvaath'. Thus, 'objectification of mind and sorrow' is aim no.1 and 'falsification of mind and sorrow' is aim no. 2 of mahaa vaakyam.

"And, once we have done these two, two other things will happen as by-products. Even without any direct effort, the intensity and impact of sorrow will come down. And, because of the objectification, the solution also will become simpler. This is because; it is the 'subjectivity' which makes the problems complex. For instance, let us assume that a neighbor of ours runs into many problems. He is confused and unable to find solutions for them. But, since we are not directly affected by the problems, and are, therefore, in a position to view the problems more 'objectively', we find that we have many solutions for the neighbor's problems, which we are able to suggest to him.

"Conversely, we have no solution for ahamkaaraa's problems, if we do not neighborise / falsify / objectify ahamkaaraa. Therefore the impact of the sorrow / the problems is more and the solution also is complex or almost impossible.

"Mahaa vaakyam, therefore, tells us: 'Before trying any solution, before making any complaint, in any situation, remember 'I' am free, because 'I' am neither the mind nor the sorrow of the mind. 'I' am aathmaa; 'I' am the sathyam; 'I' I am aanandha svaroopaa: | Yes, the mind has got issues, which it will have; issue-less mind does not exist just as issue-less body does not exist. Therefore, objectify the mind / falsify the mind and enjoy the challenge of solving the problems - successfully or unsuccessfully- since, whatever happens, it does not affect the fact that 'I' am free'.

"An oft-discussed teaching of Vedhaanthic Aachaaryaa-s should be remembered in this context, viz., 'If I forget 'my' real nature, life becomes a burden; by remembering 'my' real nature, I convert life into an entertainment / a blessing/ an admirable and enjoyable viswa roop dharsanam / an interesting challenge'".

Thus, mahaa vaakyam's role is 'objectification' and 'falsification' of ahamkaaraa, by which you remove the word sorrow from 'I', the aathmaa.

"Dayaananda Swami often used to say 'Sorrow is not the problem. It is the statement 'I am sorrowful' which is the problem. The moment you say 'I am sorrowful'; you superimpose sorrow on 'I', the witness, making the whole situation complex'.

"Therefore, to put it in a nutshell: "'Objectivity' is what I get, by assimilation of mahaa vaakyam. The so-called problems of 'mine' become less worrisome, as if they were my neighbour's problems".

Sureswaraachaaryaa conveys all the above ideas, discussed by us in mundane language, in classical Vedhaanthic language.

185: Chapter III, Verse 78 (19-06-2010)

Analyzing the mahaa vaakyam, 'thatthvamasi', Sureswaraachaaryaa is pointing out how the proximity of 'thatth padhaa', revealing Paramaathmaa, is removing the limitations of jeevaathmaa. He holds, that, when Paramaathmaa is identified or equated with jeevaathmaa, the limitation belonging to jeevaathmaa is eliminated by this equation ; and, that, similarly, when jeevaathmaa is equated to Paramaathmaa, the remoteness attributed to Paramaathmaa is eliminated, because jeevaathmaa happens to be here itself. To sum up: The proximity of Paramaathmaa to jeevaathmaa removes the limitation and dhu:kithvam of jeevaathmaa and the proximity of jeevaathmaa to Paramaathmaa removes the remoteness or paarokshyam of Paramaathmaa. This is the idea that Sureswaraachaaryaa is presenting.

And, now, a student or poorva pakshin is raising a question: "How can, a mere equation of Paramaathmaa with jeevaathmaa eliminate this sorrowfulness and limitation of jeevaathmaa? My very experience that I continue to have sorrow and other problems, even after accepting the suggestion at face value, reveals that the mere equation of jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa will not solve the problem. How are you making such a promise?"

Quoting the question from the text (sambhandha gadhyam to verse 78): "katham thadhartha adhvitheeya lakshana: prathyagaathma upaasrayam sadhvitheeyathvam dhu:kithvam (cha) niranvayam apanudhathi?" - "How can jeevaathmaa being one with Paramaathmaa, eliminate without a trace, the limitation and sorrow of the jeevaathmaa?"

'Prathyagaathma upaasrayam' means 'belonging to the jeevaathmaa'; 'sadvitheeyathvam' literally means 'duality' and 'duality' implies 'limitation' / 'paricchedha:'; 'Dhu:kithvam' means 'sorrowfulness'; 'niranvayam' means 'without any residue or balance' ; 'apanudhathi' means 'eliminates'

"How can mahaa vaakyam or mahaa vaakya jnaanam totally eliminate the limitations and sorrowfulness of the jeevaathmaa?" is the question of the poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraacharya is giving his answer. He starts with: "Vayam ethayo: nivarthaka nivarthya bhaavam na cha bhrooma:"- "We do not say that the jeevaathma-Paramaathma- eikyam will eliminate the sorrow".

This statement would literally 'shock' the student / poorva pakshin, since, the Aacharya suddenly seems to withdraw from all vedhaanthic promises. Therefore, an explanation is in order. These are all technical subjects, which the student should very clearly understand. Mahaa vaakyam is pramaanam and pramaanam can generate jnaanam. But, no pramaanam or pramaana janya pramaa can ever physically eliminate something from any substance. An example is the annoying fact, that, the mere jnaanam / knowhow of a rigorous physical exercise cannot eliminate the excess weight from the body, by itself. The mahaa vaakya pramaanam and mahaa vaakya pramaana janya jnaanam also cannot eliminate sorrow from the mind.

Why not? Ans: 'Elimination of sorrow from the mind' will come under either 'transformation of the mind' or 'refinement of the mind', which is called 'samskaaraa' or 'vikaaraa', in Sanskrit. Will samskaaraa and vikaaraa come under karma palam or jnaana palam? The fundamentals of vedhanthaa should be remembered here. (A student of Naishkarmya Siddhi is expected to know these fundamentals). It was already seen in an earlier chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi, that it is karmaa alone, which can produce four types of results, viz., aapthi, uthpatthi, samskaaraa and vikaaraa. Any type of samskaaraa or any type of vikaaraa will come under karmapalan only. No jnaanam, however sacred it might be, can produce karmapalan. That being so, how can mahaa vaakyam or mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam bring about samskaaraa or vikaaraa in the mind? Therefore, knowledge cannot eliminate sorrow from the mind.

And, therefore, Sureswaraacharya warns: "Do not misunderstand Vedhaanthaa and have any false expectations and thereafter complain".

Jnaanam is not meant to transform the mind; nor the body. Jnaanam is not meant to transform any anaathmaa constituent. Jnaanam is only meant to educate the mind about a new fact. As a result of the 'jnaanam' / 'knowledge', ignorance can go away and ignorance-based misconceptions can go away. Removal of ignorance and ignorance-based misconception alone are, thus, the utilities or even aims of any pramaanam.

What is accomplished by equating Paramaathmaa with jeevaathmaa? In other words, what happens when the Upanishad-s convince the student "'Paramaathmaa', which is the sath and chith, is 'me' "? Ans: "A student with total faith in the Upanishad-s learns to claim the fact "'I' am the sath-chith- saakshi- chaithanyam", and, when he learns this fact "'I' am the sath-chith- saakshi- chaithanyam", three misconceptions go away".

What are the three misconceptions?

The first misconception is: "mind is 'me' ". Vedhaanthaa does not change the mind; but, Vedhanthaa tells me, that, mind is not 'me', that, 'I' am only the saakshi of the mind. By furnishing this clarity, Vedhaanthaa removes the misconception "mind is 'me' ". Vedhaanthaa neither improves the mind ; nor transforms the mind.

The second misconception which is removed, is : "mind belongs to 'me' ". The Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iii.15) declares "asangho hi ayam purusha:" – "This Infinite being (Brahman / aathmaa) is indeed unattached" and, again "ananvaagatham punyena ananvaagatham paapena theermo hi thadhaa sarvaan sokaan hrudayasaya bhavathi" (IV.iii.22) – "(Brahman / aathmaa) is indeed untouched by good actions and untouched by bad actions, for, he is then beyond all the woes of his heart (intellect)". By avasthaathraya vivekaa, the Upanishad-s reveal the fact that mind does not belong to 'me', since 'I' cannot be attached to or bound to anything.

The first misconception "'mind is 'me' " goes away; the second misconception "mind belongs to 'me' " also goes away, because of mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam.

The third misconception that goes away is: "mind is as real as 'me' ". The fact is otherwise – "mind is not as real as 'me' ". Vedhaanthaa gives the aspirant the crucial message: "Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa jeevo Brahmaiva na apara:". The serious student should study and understand the Vaitthithya Prakaranam and the Advaita Prakaranam of the Maandookya Kaarika. He should understand and experience the effect of 'adhyaaropa – apavaadhaa' implementation. When Vedhaanthaa convinces him of jagan mithyaathvam, through all these elaborate methods, he should carefully note and remember, that, 'jagan mithyaa' is not just a phrase for japaa, but a fact to be assimilated. At that time, he should understand that 'mind' is also included in the 'world' and therefore 'mind' is also mithyaa. In contrast to the mind, 'I' come under the maxim "Jeevo Bramaiva naapara:", and, therefore, 'I' belong to the sathyam category. Mind belongs to the mithyaa category. Therefore, mind is not / cannot be as 'real' as 'me'.

Thus, the misconceptions (i) "mind is 'me'" (ii) "mind belongs to 'me'" and (iii) "mind is as real as 'me'" are eliminated by mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam. And, that is all the job that mahaa vaakyam does. Mahaa vaakyaa does not promise to change or remove any conditions of the mind, since any refinement or transformation will come under karmaa and not jnaanam. But, once these misconceptions are eliminated, then, even when the mind gets different conditions / disturbances, the informed aspirant will never, never say "I am disturbed". A non Vedhaanthic student may say "I am disturbed", when the mind has got even some minor flutter. The benefit of Vedhaantha is, that, once Vedhaantha is assimilated, the aspirant, will never, never say "I am disturbed", whatever be the condition of the mind.

In other words, Vedhaantha does not remove sorrow from the mind; Vedhaantha removes the false conclusion "I am sorrowful". Vedhaantha never even promises to remove sorrow from the mind; it only promises to remove the false notion "I am sorrowful". No promise is made by Vedhaantha, at the level of anaathmaa - reformation, refinement or transformation.

Now, suppose a Vedhaanthic student says "I am not interested in that; I am interested in the transformation of the mind and not in educating the mind. I am interested only in the transformation of the mind". To such a student, the guru will say "In that case, your travel should be in a different direction. The Jnaana kaandam of the Vedaa-s, is a wrong place for attempting transformation of things. Jnaana Kaandam is useful for educating; but, jnaana kaandam will never bring about any transformation of the mind or the body. Any 'transformation' comes under karmapalan; and you can get any karama palan only from karma kaandaa. Only Karmaa can give results such as aapthi, uthpatthi, samskaaraa and vikaaraa etc." The guru will, therefore, advise this student: "Therefore, go back to karma kaandaa. But, practice karmya yogaa. Be a karma yogi and not a mere karmi. You will be able to transform the mind; but, I have to add a warning note, that, all karmapalan-s will have three dhoshaa-s, namely, dhu:kha misrithathvam, athrupthikarathvam and bhandhakathvam. The most important defect among them, is 'athrupthikarathvam'. You will be never satisfied with any amount of transformation. There will always be some residual worries / disturbance / problems". He will also add "Of course, you have the freedom to go after karma palan or jnaana palan".

The guru would further tell the student: "If, even after knowing (i) mind is mithyaa (ii) mind is not 'me' and (iii) mind does not belong to 'me', you say 'I want to change the mind', you are, of course, free to do try it. If you desire to shed some of your excess weight and make your body fitter, you can, of course, use the treadmill and achieve that. It is possible. But, do not hope to keep the body fit all the time; the body will have ups and downs; after a certain age, even walking may become difficult. In a like manner, the mind also will have ups and downs. Therefore, you can attempt transforming the anaathmaa, but, without expecting perfection; you can enjoy transforming the mind, but, without expecting perfection. You can attempt all these, after understanding (i) mind is not 'me' (ii) nor does it belong to 'me' and (iii) nor is it as real as 'me'. If you attempt to improve the anaathmaa mind after understanding these facts, you will have no stress. But, if you do not understand these, you will imagine a perfect mind as a future possibility and you will think that, that perfect mind is mokshaa; which will never, never, never happen. As you may be aware, Lord Krishna says in the Bhagavadh Geetha (Ch. XIV – verse 22) 'prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha mohameva cha Paandava na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaankshathi' - 'Oh! Arjuna! (The jnaani who transcends the three gunaa-s) does not hate 'brightness' (allegory for jnaanam / sathva gunaa), activity (indicating rajo gunaa) and delusion (result of thamo gunaa), as they arise ; nor, does he desire for them, as they withdraw', indicating that even a jnaani's mind will have these three gunaa-s. The gunaa-s will be fluctuating also, because the nature of the gunaa-s is to fluctuate. You can / should try to manage the fluctuations; but, you should also know, that, you can never perfectly maintain gunaa-s. They will keep on changing".

Then what is jnaanam? The above Bhagavadh Githaa verse gives the clue, in the statement 'na dveshti sampravrutthaani na kaankshathi nivrutthaani'. The jnaani's mind may not be free from thamo gunaa also ; but, the jnaani does not react to the gunaa fluctuations of the mind, because of his threefold understanding (i) mind is mithyaa (ii) mind is not 'me' and (iii) mind does not belong to 'me'. Of course, keeping the mind in reasonable health is useful and also necessary for transactions, just as keeping the physical body reasonably healthy is useful and necessary, both for the individual and the people around him. One should try to keep the mind reasonably fit, not for mokshaa, but for loka sangraham (harmony of the society).

'Mokhsaa' is freedom from the conclusion "'I' am sorrowful". This statement "'I' am sorrowful" is wrong, because, it is only the mind which is sorrowful, and, 'I' am not the mind. 'I' am only the witness of the conditions of the mind.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa warns: "Do not misunderstand or mix up the jnaana palam and karma palam".

The aspirant should be very clear that he should not have false expectations from Vedhaanthaa and suffer the consequent disappointments. If anyone complains "even after learning 'aham brahma asmi', I do not find any improvement at all", his problem is that he is mixing up the 'I' that Vedhaanthaa reveals and the I that he uses, when he talks about the non-improvement. He wrongly assumes that 'aham brahma asmi' will transform / refine the mind.

Sureswaraachaaryaa identifies this problem of the aspirant. Therefore, he proceeds:

ॐ कथं तर्हि - In that case, what does Vedhaanthaa do?

ॐ त्वमर्थे प्रत्यगात्मनि - With regard to the prathyag aathmaa, which is the meaning of the word 'thvam', ॐ (या) प्राग् अनवबुद्ध अद्वितीयता - the limitlessness or infinitude, which was not known before, 'adhvitheeyathaa' means 'limitlessness' or 'infinitude'; 'praag' means 'earlier' ; 'anavabuddha' means 'not known'.

ॐ सा (अद्वितीयता) - that unknown limitlessness

ॐ अनेन अवबोध्यते - is revealed by the equation of Paramaathmaa with jeevaathmaa, asserted by the mahaa vaakyam.

'anena' means 'by that' and refers to the 'mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam'.

The 'infinitude' of 'me', the aathmaa, which is not known to the aspirant before mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, is revealed by the import of the mahaa vaakyam. But, it should be carefully noted, that, even when the aspirant gets to know "'I' am infinite", that knowledge will not remove the finitude of the mind. The aspirant may think that after knowing "'I' am infinite", he will suddenly start experiencing happiness, because "'I' am infinite". (In a lighter vein: He might even think 'Being infinite, I will be everywhere; without going to Europe or America, I can experience the pleasures of travel' etc.) But, even as he claims 'I am infinite', Vedhaanthaa never removes the finitude of the mind. Mind will have only finite knowledge. If the mind has to enjoy, it has to travel. Vedhaanthaa removes only the 'finitude' that is superimposed on 'me', the aathmaa. Only that finitude is removed. At the anaathmaa level, all limitations will continue. There is no procedure by which the body or the mind can be made infinite. There is no infinite body or mind. When it is said 'saa adhvitheeyathaa avabodhyathe', it only means that 'that limitation / finitude that had been superimposed on 'me', the aathmaa, (because of which 'I' suffered 'apoornathaa' – 'a sense of want') will be removed'. That apoornathaa is removed and poornathvam claimed as 'aham poorna: asmi'.

ॐ अतः - Therefore,

ॐ अनवबोधनिरासेन - through the elimination of ignorance,

ॐ तदुत्थस्य सद्वितीयत्वस्य - the ignorance-caused misconception of the 'limitation',

'haduttham' means 'anavabodha uttham'/ 'that which is born out of ignorance'. Born out of the ignorance is the misconception 'sadvitheeyathvam', meaning 'mental limitation' or 'parichchedha.'"

What is 'mental limitation'? (Again in a lighter vein :) "The dissatisfaction 'I have visited only 15 countries' is an example. But, can you remove that mental limitation? Even if you are a tourist lifelong, you will never be able to exhaust all the countries. Also, it may happen, that, when you are visiting a particular place in a particular country, eagerly looking forward to attend a particular programme, it might get cancelled on that day. Your travel plans will be so tight, that you cannot extend your stay by another day to attend the programme on the next day. It may also happen that you suffer severe periodical migraine during your travels, preventing you from enjoying anything. And, you cannot repeat the tour, since costs are prohibitive.

"Therefore, where is the question of exhaustively enjoying all the places and all the events? Even on the television, you cannot enjoy all your preferred programmes, because of different causes and circumstances. 'Mental limitations' in terms of worldly experiences will continue. Therefore, remember that ahamkaaraa can never exhaust all the sense pleasures of the world and intellect can never exhaust all the branches of knowledge. Vedhaanthaa says 'Because their finitude can never be removed, accept their finitude without any reservation. You can never remove their limitations. Mokshaa is accepting limitations as they are, remaining as the 'limitless witness'.

"In fact, sometime, limitations are also enjoyable. For instance, the birth and growth of a child. At times, the parent may feel impatient about the gradual, slow growth of the child. But, that 'limitation' also has got its own beauty; watching the child grow is a pleasure.

"Therefore, accept anaathmaa as it is; enjoy whatever transformations you can make, but, without expecting the anaathmaa to be perfect. Not only that. When anaathmaa is in its best condition, do not also expect it to remain in that condition always. Do not expect that also. It will change. The astrologer might tell you, that, your planetary positions are in their best locations for the next few months. Enjoy those few months. But, remember, the planetary positions will change.

"Vedhaanthaa is meant to teach you to understand anaathmaa as anaathmaa and also to enjoy the anaathmaa with all its limitations. Vedhaanthaa teaches you to understand aathmaa also as it is and claim its glory. Aathmaa will not have varieties of colours or forms or smells, for you to enjoy them in aathmaa, because, aathmaa is, as the Katopanishad (I.iii.15) declares 'asabdham, asparsam, aroopam, arasam, agandham' etc. Therefore, enjoy anaathmaa as it is and enjoy aathmaa as it is. Anaathmaa is vyaavahaarikam (mithyaa) and aathmaa is paaramarthika nithyam (sathyam). Understand this and be relaxed. If you can do this, continue in jnaana kaandaa. Otherwise, go back to karma kaandaa and engage in action – move from parihaaraa to parihaaraa. The choice is yours".

Reverting to the text:

ॐ त्वमर्थस्थस्य - seemingly belonging to 'thvamarthaa' i.e., 'jeevaathmaa'

ॐ निरसनात् - having been eliminated,

The two words 'sadhvitheeyathvasya' and 'thvamarthasthasya' should be read together. The message is, that, the seeming 'limitation' of the jeevaathmaa, which is only a result of 'ignorance', is eliminated by the mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam. The notion "'I' am limited" is eliminated. "'I' am limited" is a misconception. But, what is meant by 'elimination', in this context? Ans: No physical transformation takes place.

Only the notion "I am limited" goes away. 'Elimination' of the thought "I am limited", is achieved.

It should again be carefully noted, that what is meant by the word 'I', is the aathmaa and not the mind. Mind cannot expand. So, neither the mind nor the aathmaa is 'made' limitless. Why not? Mind cannot be made limitless; aathmaa need not be made limitless. Then what do we achieve? Ans: We drop the notion "I am limited".

'Dropping the wrong notion' alone is achieved. You cannot expect anything else from the mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam.

And, similarly,

ॐ परोक्षत्वस्य च तदस्थस्य - and also the seeming 'remoteness' of 'that' , the Paramaathmaa

ॐ (निरसनात्) - having been eliminated,

Just as 'limitation' is a seeming feature of jeevaathmaa, 'Paarokshyam' or 'remoteness' is a 'seeming' feature of Paramaathmaa. Before 'jnaanam' is attained, Paramaathmaa is considered 'remote' and always referred to, as, 'That Paramaathmaa'. Even if the aspirant somehow attains Vaikuntaa, "That Paramaathmaa" may only change to "This Paramaathmaa". But, both 'that' and 'this' will be dropped / removed because of the mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam. Paramaathmaa is neither 'that' nor 'this'. Then, what is it ? Paramaathmaa is 'I'.

Both limitation of jeevaathmaa and paarokshyam of Paramaathmaa are removed by mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam. Therefore, I do not, any more, want to 'merge' into Paramaathmaa.

But, what is our general concept of mokshaa? (Swamiji says: The mistaken general concept is so strong, that I am repeatedly discussing this.) Ans: "We think 'I am in this cosmic world; the world is 'here'; Paramaathmaa is non-cosmic or supra-cosmic. I am trapped in the world, which gives me permanent sorrow. My aim, therefore, is to somehow 'escape' from this world and 'merge' with Paramaathmaa. And, thereafter, I should not have any more janmaa. And, that is mokshaa".

Unfortunately, this attitude is strongly entrenched even in students who have been studying Vedhaanthaa for more than 25 years. Of course, Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram (verse 3) does contain a reference to this understanding of mokshaa, in its statement "yath saakshathkaranaath bhaveth na punar aavrutthi: bhavaambhonidhau" – "after direct enlightenment, through the vedic commandment 'that thou art', there is no more return to the 'ocean' of worldly existence". But, an advanced aspirant should not forget that, this concept of mokshaa is mentioned only in the initial adhyaropa prakaranam. This adhyaropa-prakarana-mokshaa is only a provisional mokshaa and is not the mokshaa of advanced Vedhaanthic students of treatises like Naishkarmya Siddhi. They should forget the concept of 'punaraavrutthi' or 'return'. There is neither nivrutthi nor punaraavrutthi. 'I' neither 'go' nor 'come'. 'I' have been, 'I' am and 'I' ever will be the jagath adhishtaanam Brahman, in whom galaxies 'come' and 'go'. This is the teaching that maha vaakyaa wants to give. But, without realizing this, we want to use maha vaakyam to escape from the world and 'join' Brahman, similar to a wife 'joining' her spouse living abroad in mundane existence. An advanced aspirant should go beyond these ideas. His mokshaa is: "'I' do not go ; 'I' do not come. 'I' am the sathyam, in which the whole universe, including the mind, appears and disappears". As Kaivalya Upanishad (manthraa 19) puts it: 'mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathistitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi thadh brahmaadhvayam asmi aham' – 'Everything is born in 'me' alone; everything is based in 'me' alone; everything is resolved in 'me' alone. 'I' am that non-dual Brahman | Vedhaanthin's definition of mokshaa is not 'freedom from punarjanmam'; it is 'Svaroopaa avsathaanam'. As the student advances in his study and assimilation of Vedhaanthaa, he should reject the provisional definition of mokshaa and come to the real definition.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, therefore, says 'nirasanaath', meaning 'by eliminating these misconceptions, viz., 'limitation' of jeevaathmaa and 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa :

ॐ वैयधिकरण्यादि चोध्यस्य अवसरः न अस्ति - there cannot be objections urging diversity in the imports of the two terms ('thath' and 'thvam').

ॐ तदिदं अभिधीयते - That is being said in the following slokaa.

'Vaidikaranyam' means 'the state of being in different case-relations or positions', like 'the rich' and 'the poor' or 'the knowledgeable' and 'the ignorant'

If someone wonders and asks 'by knowing that Tata and Birla are rich, how will my poverty go?', that question may be logical. But, since, by removal of the 'upaadhi-s' of Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa, they have been shown to be the one and the same aathmaa, there is no 'vaidhikaranya chodhyasya avasara:', meaning 'there can be no objection that the meanings of the terms 'that' and 'thou' are different'. By this statement, 'Vaiadhikanyaaadhi chodhyasya avasara: na asthi', the Aachaaryaa avers "There is no scope for questions like 'how can I become free from sorrow, by knowing Paramaathmaa?' or 'by knowing something else, how can the problem belonging to 'me' will go?'" .

Mahaa vaakyam's aim is not to reveal an un-related, remote Paramaathmaa. It is to create the awareness in the student, " 'I am Paramaathmaa'".

The story of Karnaa, from the epic Mahaabhaarathaa is commonly given as an example, in such contexts. Karnaa is born to Kunthi, without the knowledge of her parents, when she is barely an adult. Kunthi , therefore, secretly abandons him as an infant; the abandoned infant is 'found' by a charioteer, who brings him up as his own child. No one else is aware of these happenings. Therefore, Karnaa also has the notion "I am Raadheya:" i.e. "I am the son of Radhaa", Radhaa being the wife of the charioteer. Radhaa's puthra: is Radehyaa. But, he is only a foster-son of Radhaa, though nobody is aware of it, except the charioteer and his wife, not even Kunthi, who also learns it later. Since, thus, he is known only as a charioteer's son and not a kshakthriyaa, he is not allowed to compete with Arjuna in warfare, because of which prohibition, Karnaa develops an inferiority complex. Karnaa gets to learn the truth of his birth, only much later, when Kunthi meets and tells him "You are not Radhaa's son. You are my son. You are not Raadheyaa. You are Kauntheyaa". Obviously, by Karnaa's getting to learn that he is not Raadheyaa, but, actually Kauntheyaa, no physical transformation takes place and cannot also take place. What does take place is that Karnaa only gets the conviction "I am not a charioteer's son; I am a kshakthriyaa". That 'Raadheyathva bhavanaa nivrutthi' makes a big difference, since, because of that, whatever inferiority complex Karnaa had developed, goes away. If Karnaa is overweight, his excess weight would not go away, merely by his awareness of his excess weight, since overweight is not because of ignorance, but because of overeating. Whereas, the emotional problem of Karnaa's inferiority complex was only due to the ignorance of the circumstances of his birth and that emotional problem was eliminated by the 'knowledge' given by Kunthi.

Whatever emotional problems are purely caused by ignorance, those ignorance-caused emotional problems can be eliminated by the right knowledge. It should also be very clear, that, knowledge will remove only ignorance and only the ignorance-caused problems. Knowledge cannot solve any other problem caused by any other reason.

Chapter III: Verse 78

तत्त्वमर्थेन संपृक्तो नानात्वं विनिवर्तयेत् ।
नापरित्यक्तपारोक्ष्यं त्वं तदर्थं सिंसृप्सति ॥ ७८ ॥

The word 'thath' in the mahaa vaakyam, used in proximity with the word 'thvam', the jeevathmaa, eliminates the idea of 'jeevathmaa's' plurality. Similarly, when the word 'thvam' (meaning jeevaathmaa) is used in proximity with 'thath' (meaning Paramaathmaa), the 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa gets eliminated.

So, only a type of education is taking place through the mahaa vaakyam; no other transformation in the mind can be expected. And, what is the education? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

ॐ तत् - The word 'thath' in the mahaa vaakyam

ॐ संपृक्तः - used in proximity

ॐ त्वमर्थेन - with the word 'thvam', the jeevathmaa,

ॐ विनिवर्तयेत् - eliminates / negates

ॐ नानात्वं - the idea of 'my' plurality

What will the mahaa vaakyam do? Ans: "It will educate me that 'I' am not the limited body; 'I' am not the limited mind; 'I' am not the limited intellect; 'I' am the saakshi / witness".

And, I can, by myself, never know the size of that witness, because that witness 'I' is not available for objectification. Therefore, I have to resort to Vedhaantha pramaanaa, which is talking about 'my' dimensions - not of the body, nor of the mind, nor of the intellect, but, of 'I', the, 'saakshi'. I can know 'my' measurements only through vedhaantha vaakyaani. Kenopanishad (I.3) points out this fact as "na thathra chakshurgacchathi na vaaggacchathi no mana: na vidhmo na vijaaneema:

yathaa ethadanusishyaath – “The eyes do not objectify that Brahman; the organ of speech does not objectify that Brahman; the mind also does not objectify that Brahman. We do not know that Brahman. We do not know how anyone would reveal this Brahman”. None of the other pramaanaa-s also, such as prathyakshaa, anumaanaa or upamaanaa can reveal that. I have to learn about ‘I’, the saakshi, only from the mahaa vaakyam, which tells me, that, ‘I’ am the unlimited Consciousness, without any association with anything, including the mithyaa mind.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, when the word ‘thath’, the Pramaathmaa, is used in proximity with the word ‘thvam’, the saakshi-jeevaathmaa, the idea of jeevaathmaa's limitation is eliminated. The idea that there are many jeevaathmaa-s (such as father jeevaathmaa, mother jeevaathmaa, husband jeevaathmaa, wife jeevaathmaa etc.) is a misconception. That means eka aathmaa alone is there.

So, eka athmaa alone is there and the apparent plurality belongs only to anaathmaa - neither to jeevaathmaa nor to Paramaathmaa. And, this plurality belonging to anaathmaa can never be eliminated or avoided. Even when Rama takes avatharaa as an individual body, he will be limited. Anaathmaa plurality is there. But, ‘I’ am ekaathmaa. In the Srimadh Bhagavadh Githaa, Lord Krishna says (Chapter V – verse 7) “Yogayuktho visuddhathmaa vijithaathmaa jithendriya: sarvabhoothaathma bhoothathmaa kurvannapi na lipyathe” – “ The pure-minded Karma Yogi, having mastered the body and sense organs, becomes the Self, which is the Self of all beings. At that stage, though engaged in action, he is not affected”. ‘I’ am neither a karthaa nor a bokthaa. So, an advanced aspirant or jnaani should not even look to exhaust his praarabhdhaa. He has no praarabhdhaa also to be exhausted. That being the case, where is the question of jeevan mukthi or videha mukthi? The continuation of praarabhdhaa after jnaanam, is called jeevan mukthi. The exhaustion of praarabhdhaa of a jnaani is called videha mukthi . Both are non relevant to the jnaani, who has no praarabhdhaa to be exhausted. . For him, only one mukthi is relevant and that is nithya mukthi. |

The effect of ‘thvam’ on ‘thath’ is stated in the second line:

ॐ त्वं तदर्थं सिंसृप्सति - As the jeevaathmaa approaches / joins Paramaathmaa

'srup' is the root for the word 'sisrupsathi'. 'srup' means 'go towards' / 'approach'.

As even as the jeevaathmaa approaches Paramaathmaa, as a result of the saamaanaadhikaranyam in the mahaa vaakyam, what does it do?

ॐ न अपरित्यक्त पारोक्ष्यं - the 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa gets eliminated.

In the phrase 'na aprithyaktham', double negative is used; 'na' is one negative and 'a' is another. They are used together and so they cancel each other. The final meaning of 'na aparithyaktha paarokshyam' is 'parithyaktha paarokshyam'. 'Na aparthyaktha' means 'not un-renounced' or 'renounced' or 'given up'

What is given up? Ans: "Remoteness of Paramaathmaa is given up". The consequence: 'I', myself, am Paramaathmaa.

When the aspirant claims "'I' am Paramathmaa", he has to claim jagath kaaranathvam also and jagath adhishtaanathvam also, without any reservation. Therefore, every morning he should practice claiming "'I' am jagath adhishtaanam" and when he makes the claim, he should not feel it is a joke, with the nagging doubts "Am I the jagath kaaranam? Am I nithya muktha? How can that be possible?" One corner of his mind should not mock at him. He should be able to make the claim and the claim should be a fact for him (Swamiji says: This is what I have been calling 'binary format').

Sureswaraachaarya warns: Do not expect any transformation at anaathmaa level. An attitudinal change alone is there. Of course, as a byproduct of this knowledge, there may be some reduction in the frequency and intensity of mental disturbances and also the recovery period from the mental disturbances. But, that reduction, at anaathmaa level, is only a byproduct. That is not the primary aim of Vedhaanthaa.

186: Chapter III, Verse 78 and 79 (26-06-2010)

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to clearly point out what the mahaa vaakyam and the mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam can do.

And, while knowing what the mahaa vaakyam and the mahaa vaakya janya jnaanam can do, the aspirant should know equally well what the vaakyam and jnaanam cannot do. In fact, he should know more clearly what they cannot do, so that he does not have wrong expectations and make a conclusion that he is a spiritual failure.

Reaching the conclusion "I am a spiritual failure", after studying Vedhaanthaa for quite some time and that too, caused by wrong expectations, is another form of samsaaraa, which uniquely belongs to Vedhaanthic students only. This may be called spiritual samsaaraa, which samsaaraa, the lay person need not confront.

And, when a Vedhaanthic student suffers this spiritual samsaaraa, his situation becomes worse, because, already there is the regular samsaaraa which he shares with his other family members and now, the spiritual samsaaraa born out of the conclusion "I am a spiritual failure" gets added.

And, often, this conclusion results, not because the aspirant is really a failure, but because of the wrong expectations of the aspirant. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to discuss this problem in detail. If we think samsaaraa is a particular undesirable condition or state of anaathmaa, (anaathmaa includes the body-mind complex), and if we conclude that mokshaa is 'changing that condition of anaathmaa and bringing about a fresh and wonderful condition of anaathmaa', then, our understanding of samsaaraa is unfortunately wrong and our understanding of mokshaa also is consequently wrong. This is because samsaaraa and mokshaa have nothing to do with the conditions of anaathmaa. Vedhaanthaa clearly says that a transformation or refinement at the level of anaathmaa, can never be accomplished through jnaanam, because transformation and refinement, otherwise called vikaaraa and samskaara, are both karmapalaani – the results of action. Expecting a karma palan through jnaanam is like going to an ornament shop and asking for footwear.

Therefore, it should be clearly understood, that transformation of anaathmaa can be only karma palam and cannot be jnaana palam.

Then, what exactly is the samsaaraa, which Vedhanthaa is promising or offering to remove? Vedhaanthaa says that, the anaathmaa, the body-mind complex, has several attributes which are natural to anaathmaa, and, are, therefore, called svaabhaavika dharmaa: of anaathmaa. Some of them are favorable attributes and some are unfavorable attributes. Also, some attributes can be changed and some cannot be changed. We call these anaathma dharmaa: as svaabhaavika dharmaa:.

In the proximity of anaathmaa, there is aathmaa, that is 'me', the saakshi chaithanyam, the observer, the awareness. And, that 'I', the aathmaa, happens to be, all the time, free from both favorable and unfavorable attributes. "Anyathra dharmaath anyathra adharmaath anyathra asmaath kruthaakruthaath" (Katopanishad – I.ii.14) - "Different from dharma, different from adharmaa, different from cause and effect" is 'my' nature i.e. 'I' am ever attribute-less.

But, because of the proximity between aathmaa and anaathmaa, the aathmaa 'appears' to borrow the attributes of anaathmaa. The language used in this sentence must be carefully noted. The statement is not 'aathmaa borrows the attributes of anaathmaa'. The expression used is 'aathmaa appears to borrow the attributes of anaathmaa'. The term 'appears to' is crucial. The consequences: aathmaa appears to be 'sick' aathmaa, because of any sickness in the body; aathmaa appears to be 'depressed' aathmaa, because of any depression of the mind; aathmaa appears to be 'deaf' aathmaa, because of the deafness of the hearing organ. Thus, we have another set of 'seeming' attributes, called 'transferred attributes'.

The set of attributes belonging to anaathmaa is known as 'original attributes'. The other set of attributes which seem to belong to the aathmaa, i.e. 'me', are 'transferred attributes', termed in Sanskrit 'aaropitha dharmaa:'. This 'transference' is indicated by my language in the statements "I am sick", "I have problems", "I am deaf", "I am old", "I have degenerated" etc. In all these expressions, the attributes are co-existing with the expression 'I am'. All these attributes which are co-existing with 'I am', will come under aaropitha dharmaa: and not svaabhaavika dharmaa: | To consolidate: All the attributes belonging to the body-mind complex are svaabhaavika dharmaa: / All the attributes which are seemingly associated with "I am" ("I am sorrowful", "I am angry", "I am krodhi'", ""I am lobhi'", "I am mohee'" etc.) are called aaropitha dharmaa: |

The word samsaaraa is the collective name of the 'transferred attributes' - (to be carefully noted) not of the attributes of anaathmaa - but, of the attributes which are falsely seen in the aathmaa ; i.e. those attributes for which we use the expression 'transferred attributes' in English and , the term 'aaropitha dharmaa:', in Sanskrit |

If we want to remove the svaabhaavika dharmaa from anaathmaa, no amount of jnaanam will help. If we want to remove the anaathma svaabhaavika dharmaa like asthi, jaayathe, vardhathe, viparanimathe, apaksheeyathe etc., any amount of jnaanam cannot eliminate them. As for karmaa, it can give some benefit or relief, in the field of svaabhaavika dharma-s ; but, karmaa also cannot totally eliminate all the unfavorable svaabhaavika attributes. Therefore, Vedhaantha never offers or promises to change the svaabhaavika dharmaa-s of anaathmaa - the body, the mind, the intellect, the sense organs etc. Vedhaantha promises to remove only the aaropitha dharmaa:, the attributes falsely transferred from anaathmaa to aathmaa.

The aaropitha dharmaa alone is called samsaaraa. And, in contrast to the svaabhaavika dharma of anaathmaa, we do not require any karmaa, to remove the aaropitha dharmaa. Nor can karmaa help in any manner. We only require the knowledge that aathmaa cannot really have any attribute at any time. This simple knowledge alone is required. Aathmaa means 'I'. (It is not enough to merely say aathmaa). Therefore, 'I' do not have any attribute, in all the three periods of time – past, present and future ; and, therefore, even if and when 'I' seem to have attributes, I need not remove the seeming attributes; I have to only understand those seeming attributes as only seeming attributes.

To repeat: I do not require any action to remove the favorable or unfavorable aaropitha dharma – 'the attributes falsely transferred' to aathmaa; what is required is only 'dropping the notion that 'I' have this set of attributes'. And, 'dropping this notion' alone is called samsaara nivrutthi: |

For this alone, the Aaacharya-s give the well known Vedhaanthic example of a colourless crystal placed in the proximity of a coloured piece of cloth. In this situation (of a crystal in the proximity of a coloured cloth), we experience two sets of colours - one set of original colours on the cloth and the other set of colours reflected on the crystal. The set of colours on the cloth is 'svaabhaavika dharma:' of the cloth. If we want to change or remove the colours of the cloth, mere jnaanam is not enough. We have to subject the cloth to a process, to change or remove the colours. Jnaana maathrena svaabhaavika dharma nivrutthi: na bhavathi | If we expect to the change in the colours of the cloth through jnaanam, the mistake is ours; it is our irrational expectation.

Now, we come to the second set of colours experienced, the one that is reflected on the crystal. In the proximity of the coloured cloth, we experience the same set of colours in the colourless crystal also. And, that set of colours in the crystal are not svaabhaavikam to the crystal i.e., that set of colours is not natural to the crystal, which, in reality, is colourless. The colours seen on the crystal are 'seemingly transferred' from the cloth, and are, therefore 'aaropitham'. If we do not understand this aaropitham as aaropitham, naturally, we will mistake that aaropitha dharmaa as svaabhaavika dharmaa of the crystal. On the other hand, let us assume that we do have the knowledge that the colours are not the svaabhaavika dharmaa of the crystal and also that, in reality, the crystal is ever colourless, in all the three periods of time. With this knowledge, if we desire to see the colourless crystal, what should we do? Obviously, we cannot try to remove the 'colours' of the crystal, since they are only an 'appearance' and so cannot be physically removed. But, should we remove the cloth from the vicinity of the crystal, to remove the colours from the crystal? This question has to be answered very carefully. Generally the reasoning will be "Because of the proximity of the cloth, the crystal is coloured. Therefore, to remove the colour of the crystal, remove the cloth". But, what Vedhaantha says is: "Even this is not required. To remove the colours from the crystal, you do not have to do any karmaa; you need not remove the cloth from the vicinity of the crystal. Let the cloth remain there. You need not even change the appearance of the crystal. Let it continue to appear as a coloured crystal. But, if you are an informed individual, even when you see the crystal as coloured because of the proximity of the cloth, you will say that the crystal was not coloured in the past, is not coloured now and will not ever be coloured".

So, to make the crystal colourless, what do you require? Ans: "The mere understanding that the crystal is ever colourless, even when it appears as coloured".

'I' am similar to the crystal. The phrase "suddha spatika sankasam" (dhyana sloka of Sri Rudram, used to describe Lord Siva) – "pure and colourless as crystal" will describe 'me' also very well. 'I' am always attribute-less.

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa presents this fact eloquently in his Nirvaana Shatkam (verse 3) - "Na mey dvesha ragau na mey lobha mohau madho naiva mey naiva maatsarya bhaava." - "'I' am free of hatred, attachment, greed, delusion, arrogance and jealousy". When? Vedhanthaa says 'I' was, 'I' am and 'I' ever will be suddha spatika: | Because of the ignorance of this fact (knowledge of which fact, is given by mahaa vaakyam) before the operation of the mahaa vaakyam, I have transferred the attributes of anaathmaa on to 'my'self. And, because of that, I say "I am sick", "I have problems", "I am old", "I am husband", "I am wife" and so on. All these are only apparent attributes of 'me' and with the apparent attributes taken as 'my' own attributes, I suffer samsaara. What does Vedhanthaa want to say? Ans: "It points out that the apparent attributes are only apparent attributes". And, to remove the apparent attributes from 'me', what should I do? Again Vedhanthaa answers: "To remove the apparent attributes from 'me', I need not do anything, other than dropping the notions that (i) the apparent attributes are 'my' attributes (ii) I am suffering from samsaara and (iii) I require a savior". These notions are to be dropped by mahaa vaakya vicharaa.

But, if a person says "I am not interested in removing the apparent attributes of aathmaa. I am interested in transforming the unfavourable attributes of anaathmaa", the Veda-s and the guru will tell him "In that case, the shop that you have to go to, is not the Veda anthaa shop. The Veda poorvaa shop is the shop for you. Vedha anthaa is addressing only those people who have exhausted their efforts in the Veda Poorava shop and have made an important discovery, that, 'straightening' anaathmaa is exactly like the proverbial 'straightening' of the dog's tail , in other words, 'impossible'".

'Exhausting the Veda Poorvaa shop' is what is conveyed by the Mundakopanishad, in the popular manthraa (I.ii.12) as "pareekshya lokaan karma chithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath"– "Having examined the worlds which are achieved through Karmaa, the viveki should come to dispassion". After trying the various karmaa-s prescribed by the Veda Poorvaa (Karma Kaandaa of the Veda-s), some people do discover the important fact that anaathmaa can never be perfected. Only those who make this discovery and therefore move over to the Veda anthaa will appreciate the value of Vedhaanthaa. For others, it will always appear that Karma Kaandaa is more useful. Unfortunately,, sometimes, even an advanced student of Vedhaanthaa expects Vedhaanthaa to transform the pancha anaathmaa, namely, possessions, profession, family, body and mind. But, Vedhanthaa's aim is only to establish the mithyaathvam of anaathmaa and samsaara abhaavaa of aathmaa. The Vedhaanthic student should know this and therefore, be wary of having wrong expectations. He should also understand that 'perfecting' the pancha anaathmaa is not possible.

Mahaa vaakyam is to teach him, that, 'I', the aathmaa, is without any attributes, similar to the crystal without colours. This is because Paramaathmaa is like colourless crystal and the mahaa vaakyam, by equating jeevaathmaa with Paramaathmaa, gives the important message that the ekaathmaa is free from all the samsaaraa attributes. Aathmaa is ever free from samsaaraa; anaathmaa is never free from samsaaraa, even if one goes to Brahma Lokaa. This understanding must be there, for a Vedhaanthic student, if he is to be free from complaints that, he has not improved in any manner, based on his observation of the imperfections of anaathmaa.

Vedhanthaa never promises any change in the body or sense organs. Even an avataara sareeram cannot escape from the six modifications – shad vikaaraa. Therefore, the maxims (i) 'aham sathyam jagan mithyaa' and (ii) 'Jagath is eternally sagunaa and 'I' am ever nirgunaa', should be very clearly understood and remembered always by an aspirant.

The Vedhaanthic advice, therefore, is: "Come to the 'binary' format. See the nature of anaathmaa as it is; with the limited control that we have over it, learn to 'manage anaathmaa'. Do not have too much of expectations, such as 'perfecting anaathmaa'. The consequence of wrong expectations (as already discussed) is the new samsaaraa, with the apt name, 'spiritual samsaaraa', which is unique to students of Vedhaanthaa, if they do not listen to and understand Vedhaanthaa properly".

Sambnahdga gadhyam to Verse 79:

कस्मात्पुनः कारणात्तदर्थोऽद्वितीयलक्षणस्त्वमर्थेन प्रत्यगात्मना अपृथगर्थः सन्नविध्योत्थं सद्वितीयत्वं निहन्तीति । उच्यते । विरोधात् । तदुच्यते ।

How does it happen that the significance of being one without a second carried by 'That', which is other than the Self, signified by 'Thou', puts an end to the appearance of having a second born of nescience? We reply it does so, because of contradiction. It is explained in the next verse.

Sureswaraacharyaa continues to explain the phenomenon of the mahaa vaakyam.

To go back to the example: When I know and say the crystal is ever colourless, the knowledge or statement does not remove the colour from the seemingly coloured crystal. Of course, the knowledge does not remove the colour in the cloth also. The colour in the cloth will continue, because it is svaabhavikam to the cloth. In the crystal also, the colour will continue to be visible to the eye. Because of the proximity to the coloured cloth, the crystal will continue to appear coloured. In other words, the original colour of the cloth is not removed and the seeming colour on the crystal also is not removed. The 'knowledge' does not remove any colour at all. This is what Sureswaraacharyaa said in the previous slokaa, as 'nivarthya nivarthaka bhaava: naasthi'. |

There is no question of physically removing the attribute of colour, by the knowledge 'the crystal is colourless'. The colour of the cloth cannot be removed by the knowledge, because it is svaabhaavika dharmaa of the cloth. The knowledge cannot remove the colour of the crystal also, because, the crystal does not have colours to be removed. Therefore, no external transformation takes place. Then what is the benefit of this knowledge? A transformation takes place in the intellect. What is that transformation? Knowing that the crystal is eternally colourless, the student gets to know, that the perception 'the crystal is coloured' is a misconception. Therefore, thereafter, he will not have the thought that the crystal is coloured. He removes from his inner thought, the expression 'coloured crystal'.

Similarly, the mahaa vaakyam, by equating the nirguna Paramaathmaa to 'me', the aathmaa, gives me the knowledge that 'I' am nithya nirguna svaroopaa: | This knowledge will not remove the gunaa-s of anaathmaa, because they cannot be removed; the knowledge need not remove the gunaa-s of aathmaa, since the gunaa-s are not there at all in the aathmaa, to be removed. The only transformation is, that, the thought "I' am a samsaari, seeking liberation" goes away from the aspirant's mind. And, that is supposed to be the benefit of mahaa vaakyaa sravanam/vichaaraa.

But, the irony is that even an advanced student of Vedhaanthaa, quite often, seeks (!) liberation by meditating on mahaa vaakyam. He seeks 'freedom from samsaaraa', through meditation, while the mahaa vaakyam keeps averring that he is ever free from samsaaraa. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa takes pains to point out, that, 'proper knowledge' and 'freedom from bondage' are simultaneous.

And, if, for an aspirant, knowledge and liberation are not simultaneous, in that case, even if the aspirant resorts to saadhanaa for any length of time, liberation will not come, because his attempt is to remove a samsaaraa, which is non-existent. That is why Vedhaanthaa repeatedly says: "Do not postpone mokshaa for any saadhanaa; learn to claim at the time of sravanam itself, that 'I' am nithya niranjana svaroopaa."| That is being explained in this portion.

Just as we say the crystal is colourless, the Upanishad wants to say that, the jeevathmaa is nirgunaa. And, how does the Upanishad accomplish that? Ans: "By bringing the nirguna Paramaathmaa in an equation with jeevaathmaa".

What will happen when the Paramaathmaa is brought to an equation with the jeevaathmaa? Ans: "The two will be reduced to eka aathmaa".

But, after bringing Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa together to an ekaathmaa, we will have a problem. What is that? Before bringing the Paramaathmaa near 'me', I had the thought "'I' am sagunaa". In other words, 'seeming attributes' were in 'me', before the equation. Paramaathmaa is known to be nirgunaa. Therefore, when I equate Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa, reducing them to an ekaathmaa, now, in the ekaathmaa, there must be two features or conditions. What are they? Ans: "Before bringing in Paramaathmaa, sagunathvam or paricchedhaa was there; when bringing in Paramaathmaa, aparicchinaam or nirgunathvam will also arrive. Now, ekaathmaa is associated with sagunathvam belonging to the former jeevaathmaa and nirgunathvam belonging to the former Paramaathmaa". How is that possible?

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out: "You are right. You cannot keep both sagunathvam belonging to the former jeevaathmaa and nirgunathvam belonging to the former Paramaathmaa, in the ekaathmaa, because opposite attributes cannot co-exist in one locus. Therefore, one of the two will have to be knocked off. And, it is the nirgunathvam of the former Paramaathmaa, which will knock off the sagunathvam of the former jeevaathmaa, and hand over the sagunathvam to anaathmaa, thus, making the ekaathmaa also nirgunam".

Swami Vidyaaranyaa's Panchadasa calls this elimination of seeming 'sagunathvam' from 'me', as 'anujvara nivrutthi'

Swamiji (in a lighter vein): "I call this phenomenon of 'Paramaathmaa' knocking off' the seeming sagunathvam of jeevaathmaa and throwing it on to the mithyaa anaathmaa' as 'neighbourising the problem'. 'Neighbourising' is my English. I have coined the word, based on the fact, that for any of us, a neighbour's problems do not cause much trauma or mental disturbance. We are jeevan mukthaa-s when a neighbor has got a problem. At best, we will extend lip sympathy. Transferring the sagunathvam from 'I' to the anaathmaa, is, therefore, nothing but 'neighbourising the problem of sagunathvam "

This 'Paramaathmaa knocking off the sagunathvam / paricchedhaa / sadvitheeyathvam of jeevaathmaa' is not a physical process; it is an intellectual exercise / a matter of understanding "'I' am ever free", similar to understanding (in the example) the crystal to be always pure.

And, a similar phenomenon also takes place with regard to Paramaathmaa. Paramaathmaa is generally considered to be 'remote'. Only, because of this perceived 'remoteness', called 'paarokshyam' in Sanskrit, the goal in life for a religious person, is to quit this world and join 'that' Paramaathmaa. All of us think Paramaathmaa is remote. Jeevaathmaa, on the other hand, is not 'remote', but, is most intimate. Therefore, when jeevaathmaa joins Paramaathmaa, and becomes ekaathmaa, what will happen? Ans: "The 'intimacy' of the former jeevaathmaa and the seeming 'remoteness' of the former Paramaathmaa will both become available to the eka aathmaa". This results in a problem as before. 'Remoteness' and 'intimacy' are mutually opposed to each other and therefore, cannot co-exist in one and the same ekaathmaa. Therefore, one of them will have to be 'knocked off'. Which one? Ans: "The 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa is knocked off by the intimacy, the aparokshathvam of the jeevaathmaa".

Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (manthra III.iv.1) gives a clear indication of this non-difference of jeevaathmaa with Paramaathmaa, based on this 'intimacy', as "Yath saakshaath aparokshaath Brahma ya aathmaa sarvaanthara:" – "the Brahman that is immediate and direct – the Self that is within all”. And, when the term Brahman is mentioned, the aspirant should not look around or even inside himself for that Brahman. His mind should ring with the knowledge “I am that intimate ekaathmaa, which was called jeevathmaa from one perspective and Paramaathmaa from another perspective”.

To recap: 'Nirgunathvam and 'sagunathvam' cannot co-exist in the eka aathmaa. 'Remoteness' and 'intimacy' also cannot co-exist in the eka aathmaa. . This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa, refers to, by the term 'virodhaathi', in this sambhandha gadhyam. As explained, 'intimacy' of jeevaathmaa knocks off 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa and 'nirgunathvam' of Paramaathmaa knocks off 'sagunathvam' of jeevaathmaa. Because of this two-fold 'knocking off', there is only one thing left behind, viz., 'I', the nirguna aparoksha nithya muktha ekaathmaa.

What about anaathmaa (firm in its refusal to be 'straightened', like the proverbial 'tail of a dog')? Ans: Anaathmaa will continue. As mentioned earlier, human efforts can only 'manage' (partially control) the anaathmaa. But, there is no question of permanent 'straightening' / 'perfecting' of anaathmaa.

An interesting thought: Vedhaanthetaa itself has arisen only because the 'straightening' of anaathmaa is found impossible. If karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s had succeeded in 'perfecting' anaathmaa, there would have been no need for the jnaana kaandaa at all. With diligent performance of the prescribed rituals, the performer would, ultimately, reach a stage, where he will have a perfect body, perfect sense organs, a perfect mind, a perfect spouse, perfect profession etc. If such is the case, Veda would be starting with karma kaandaa and ending with karma kaandaa. Unfortunately, it is not to be. The only option available is to understand anaathmaa as mithyaa and 'I' as the sathya nithya muktha ekaathmaa | Other than that, there is no solution.

Reverting to the text:

ॐ कस्मात् कारणात् - Because of what reason (does)

ॐ तदर्थः : - the Paramaathmaa,

ॐ अद्वितीय लक्षणः : - which has got 'limitlessness' as its nature,

'advitheeyam' literally means 'non-duality' and implies 'limitlessness' or 'poornathvam'. 'advitheeya lakshana: thadatha:', therefore, means 'poorna Paramaathmaa'.

ॐ त्वमर्थेन प्रत्यगात्मना अपृतगर्थः सन् - after joining jeevaathmaa,

'Prathyagaathmaa' means 'jeevaathmaa'. 'Jeevaathmaa' is the second component of the mahaa vaakyam.

What attribute does the jeevaathmaa have? Ans: "'apoornathvam' – 'sense of want / sense of inadequacy'. Of course, there is a popular song in which the devotee declares 'kurai onrum illai' – 'I have no complaint'. But, that attitude is found only in that song. In reality, the jeevaathmaa has got all kinds of apoornathvam. But, again, the redeeming fact is that the 'apoornathvam' is not original or svaabhaavikam. It is 'transferred' apornathvam that the jeevaathmaa has got, but, without knowing that it is only 'transferred'.

'apruthagartha:' means 'eiyyam praapya' / 'attaining identity' / 'after becoming ekaathmaa' | The 'becoming' is not a physical phenomenon. It is again 'dropping the notion' alone.

How do the Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa become eka aathmaa? Ans: 'Mahaa vaakya bhalaath' - "Because of the saamanaadhikaranyam of the mahaa vaakyam".

ॐ अविध्योत्थं सद्वितीयत्वं निहन्ति - eliminate the apoornathvam (of the jeevaathmaa) born out of ignorance?

'sadhvitheeyathvam' means 'apoornathvam / complaint / negative outlook on life'. Life is looked upon by a pessimist as a meaningless, burdensome, boring struggle. This negative attitude is called 'sadhvitheeyathvam'.

The question is: "Poornathvam of Paramaathmaa 'knocks off' the apoornathvam of jeevaathmaa, after becoming ekaathmaa. Why is it 'knocked off'? Why should it not be retained?"

ॐ इति - If such a question is raised,

The Aachaaryaa himself raises the question, as if asked by a student or a poorva pakshin.

What is the answer? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

ॐ उच्यते - I will give you the answer; listen carefully;

ॐ विरोधात् - it is because, poornathvam and apoornathvam being mutually contradictory, they cannot co-exist in the eka aathmaa after discerning the eiykyam.

And, the same logic will have to be applied for the phenomenon of the intimacy of jeevaathmaa knocking off the 'remoteness' of Paramaathmaa.

ॐ तदुच्यते - That is being said in the slokaa.
