1. Introduction: 25-02-2006

As is well known, the final parts of the Vedas, is known as Vedhaanthaa – Vedasya antha bhaaga: - Vedaanthaa - which is also known as Upanishad.

The word "Upanishad", is interpreted, in several ways.

One manner of interpretation is as below:

- 'upa' refers to 'aathma'. 'upa' literally means 'something close by'. Many objects may be physically located close to one. Travelling inwards, from the external objects, going through the pancha kosaas-s, one finds one's aathmaa, as the closest. Hence, 'upa' can be interpreted as 'aathma'.
- 'ni' means 'nischaya jnaanam' - 'firm knowledge'.
- 'shad' means 'destroyer of sorrow/samsaaraa'; samsaaram avasaadhayathi / samsaaram naasayathi ithi shad.

'Upanishad' would, therefore, mean 'samsaaraa – destroying self-knowledge'.

Of course, the words and verses of Vedhaanthaa or Upanishad, are themselves not 'knowledge'; but, since they generate knowledge, the sabdapramaanam itself is called Upanishad. In other words, 'Upanishad' thus, has two meanings :

- (1) Knowledge - vritthi roopena.
- (2) Knowledge generating works – sabda roopena.

In any pursuit of knowledge, four factors are involved:

- (1) The subject i.e. the one that seeks the knowledge – called pramaatha,
- (2) the instrument used to acquire the knowledge – called pramaanam,
- (3) the object of knowledge – called prameyam, and
- (4) the resulting knowledge – pramaa or vidhyaa or jnaanam.

An example can make this clear. When one's eyes view objects, the result is the knowledge of forms and colours. In this instance, the eyes are the pramaanam, the forms and colours are the prameyam, the mind is the pramaatha and the pramaa is the "knowledge of forms and colours".

In the study of Upanishads, Upanishad is the pramaanam (the instrument of knowledge), the study covered by the Upanishad being aathmaa, aathmaa is the prameyam (the object of knowledge), the student is the pramaathaa (the knower or enquirer) and the pramaa (the resulting knowledge) is aathmajnaanam.

But, very often, it is found, that, the expected result, aathmajnaanam, is not achieved even after years of study of the Upanishads. In a study of any subject, when the three factors, the pramaathaa, the pramaanam and the prameyam (collectively referred to as thriputi) come together, prama should be the natural result. When this does not happen, one has to conclude that there must be an obstacle – prathibandha: - or deficiency, with regard to at least one of these three factors. An analysis has to be done, the deficiency should be diagnosed and remedial measures have to be taken, to make the assemblage of the thriputi effective. It has to be seen whether there is a prameyadosham or pramaanadosham or pramaathrudosham.

In the case of Upanishadic study, the prameyam, aathmaa, is ever available as “svayam prakasa chaithanya thathvaa - the self evident Consciousness”. It is available in all the three avasthaas – “jaagarthsvapanasushupthishu sputatharaa yaa samvidh vijrumpathe” (Maneeshaa Panchakam – sloka 1). There can, thus, be no doshaa in aathmaa; it is nithya upalabdha svaroopam. There is, therefore, no prameyadhoshaa.

As for the pramaanaaa, the Vedas are teachings given out by the Lord Himself and therefore, there can certainly be no deficiency in them. Pramaanadoshaa also is not there.

If, therefore, ‘knowledge’ does not result from the study of the Upanishads, the doshaa should be only of the pramaathaa – the student. The pramaathrudoshaa should be identified and rectified, so that vedhaantha vichaaraa will give the desired result of aathmajnaanam, since resort to any means other than vedhaantha vichaaraa – such as japaa, paaraayanaa, dhyaanam or samaadhi - will not help the seeker acquire knowledge. In his treatise, Panchadasi (Ch. IX), Vidhyaaranyaa stresses this: “Keep applying Vedhaanthic knowledge, till you get jnaana”.

In the venture of acquiring aathma jnaanam, the most common pramaathrudoshaa is “lack of saadhana chathushtaya sampaaith”.

The second major deficiency is samsayaa - doubt regarding the Vedic teachings. The nature of thathpadhaartham (Paramaathmaa) and the nature of thvampadhaartham (Jeevaathmaa) have confused even scholars, who have discussed, at length, on the subjects. Saguna Paramaathmaa and saguna jeevaathmaa are not identical. Only when the world is understood as mithyaa and the aathmaa is understood as the only sathyam, advaita siddhi can be achieved. But, acceptance of mithyaathvam – even in the standards example of the rajjusarppa, leave alone of the jagath – is a major problem for most seekers. Such lack of conviction with regard to the nirguna vasthu and the unreality of the world is an intellectual problem.

A more fundamental problem, is, when one gets the doubt, as to whether Veda itself can be accepted as a valid source of knowledge. Science or sense organs cannot prove the authenticity of the Vedas. The seeker gets the doubt, whether, the statement "aham brahma asmi" is just a belief or a proven fact.

Such intellectual doubts are clubbed as "purusha buddhi doshaa". Traditional aachaaryaas had to handle all these dhoshaa-s in the minds of their students and help to rectify these dhoshaa-s.

As already pointed out, other saadhanaas, such as paaraayanaa, dhyaanam etc., cannot remove intellectual problems. Only intellectual discussions can remove the intellectual problems. With this purpose, the aachaaryaas have authored a number of treatises, known as prakarana granthaa-s, which do not generate knowledge (which is the work of the Vedas), but, remove doubts. In short, the prakaranaa-s are useful and necessary for purusha dosha nivritthi.

Anubhoothi Prakaasaa points out "Intellects are many; doubts, therefore, are also many. Innumerable granthaa-s are required to remove the innumerable doubts". The problem is more so, now. Scientific knowledge is expanding and fresh objections to Vedic teachings are being raised. New prakarana granthaa-s will have to be continuously written to counter the new poorva pakshin-s (opponents).

The available prakarana granthaa-s are of three types.

- Type (1) granthaa-s: Give a bird's eye view of the saasthraa-s. They are comprehensive and preliminary in nature. Thathva Bodhaa and Viveka Choodaamani belong to this category.
- Type (2) granthaa-s: Take a particular aspect of the Vedic teachings, analyze all possible doubts that can arise on that particular aspect and clear the doubts. In the prakaranaa "sarva vedhaantha siddhaantha saara sangrahaa", Adi Sankara has compiled 250 verses on the subject of saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi alone, while in his "dhrukh dhurusya vivekaa", he talks about only thvampadhaartha. "Saasthra eka desa sambhandham / saasthra kaaryaanthare sthitham" are the functions of such prakaranaa-s. "Samsaya nivritthi" (removal of doubts) is their purpose.

- Type (3) grantha-s: Primarily concentrate on refuting philosophies other than Vedhaantha and on defending Vedhaanthic teachings. Paramatha dushtathva dharsanam is their main function, as in Chapter II – Paadha 2, of Brahma Soothra-s. 'Siddhi grantha' is the name given to such prakaranaa-s, which negate other philosophies, wherein, siddhi means "defending Vedhaanthic teachings".

Brahma Siddhi, Ishta Siddhi, Advaita Siddhi and Naishkarmya siddhi, are a few of the Siddhi grantha-s, defending Vedhaanthic teachings and refuting other philosophies.

Naishkarmya Siddhi is believed to be authored by Sureswaraachaaryaa, a direct disciple of Adi Sankara. He is also famed as Vaarthikakkaaraa, since he has written several vaarthika-s. A Vaarthika is "analysis in verse form of some other text, which text may be an original text (moolam) or a bhaashyam". Thaithreeya Bhaashya Vaarthika, consisting of about 4, 000 verses, on the Sankara Thaithreeya Bhaashyam and Brahadhaaranyaka Bhaashya Vaarthika, consisting of about 10,000 verses, on the Sankara Brahadhaaranyaka Bhaashyam, are the better known vaarthika-s of Sureswaraachaaryaa.

Legend also has it, that, Sureswaraachaaryaa was a Poorva Meemaamsakaa initially, known as Mandana Misra and after losing a debate with Adi Sankara, converted into an Utthara Meemaamsakaa, took sanyaasaa and assumed the name Sureswara. Another prakaranaa, by name Brahma Siddhi, is also credited to a Mandana Misra. Opinions differ as to whether the two treatises, Naishkarmya Siddhi and Brahma Siddhi, were authored by the same Mandana Misra or by two different people of the same name. It is more likely that the two are different, since the styles of the two are different and certain views expressed in the two treatises are also different.

'Naishkarmya' means 'actionless'. Since aathmaa is karma rahitha: (without action), in the term Naishkarmya Siddhi, 'naishkarmya' means 'aathmasvaroopam' and 'siddhi' means 'attainment / accomplishment / praapthi'. The term Naishkarmya Siddhi, therefore, means 'aathma svaroopam siddhi' – 'attaining my own nature'.

The term appears contradictory. 'Svaroopam' means 'intrinsic nature'. Then, where is the need to 'attain' it? The answer: Though aathmaa is available always. One does not realize it because of 'ignorance'. When 'ignorance', which makes aathmaa seemingly unattainable, is removed, the svarooopam is seemingly attained.

“Accomplishment of the ever accomplished aathmasvaroopam through knowledge” is Naishkarmya Siddhi. Since this is the subject matter of the treatise, the treatise is also called Naishkarmya Siddhi.

2. Introduction & Avadharika to Chapter I: (04-03-2006)

Vedhaantha Saasthraas or the Upanishads are the pramaana granthaa-s (main sources) of aathma jnaanam. For the seeker, they directly produce 'knowledge', similar to the sense organs, the 'eyes', which produce 'knowledge' of the objects perceived. The 'eyes' are pramaanam for anaathma vishayaa and Vedhaantha Saasthraas are pramaanam for aathma vishayaa. Both do not require further validation by any other pramaanam. They have self-validity. Vedhaantha is, therefore, referred to as saasthra chakshu: and in the Brahma Soothraa-s, as prathyaksham.

But, even though Vedhaantha is capable of giving the 'knowledge', the 'knowledge' does not take root in us, because of our buddhi doshaa-s. In other words, we do not accept the 'knowledge', because of deficiencies in intellect. This problem can be understood by considering the following: There is a common saying 'seeing is believing', meaning that 'seeing' is the ultimate validation. Despite this, a comment "I could not believe my own eyes" is very often heard i.e., even though the eyes have generated the knowledge, what is 'seen' is not taken as 'fact', because of certain obstacles in the mind. Likewise, even after obtaining vitthi knowledge "aham Brahma asmi", we are unable to accept this as 'knowledge', because of our intellectual problems.

It, therefore, becomes imperative to eliminate the intellectual problems. Great aaachaaryaa-s have authored secondary scriptures to help eliminate the purusha buddhi doshaa: - also called purusha aparaadhaa: - the obstacles in the intellect. Once the doshaa-s are eliminated, we will be willing to accept the vitthi "aham Brahma asmi" as 'knowledge'. Only then 'liberation' becomes a fact. As long as the vitthi is not looked upon as 'knowledge', 'liberation' is only an information. The seeker's effort is to convert the 'information' into a 'fact'.

This 'conversion of information into fact', through removal of purusha buddhi doshaa-s, is undeniably a struggle. The various prakarana granthaa-s made by great aachaaryaa-s help the seeker in this struggle.

In short, while the Vedhaanthic Mahaa vaakyaa-s give the 'knowledge', the prakarana granthaa-s remove the intellectual obstacles to the 'knowledge', and thus, make the function of the mahaa vaakyaa-s easy and effective.

The intellectual obstacles or doubts can be with regard to any particular aspect of the mahaa vaakyaa-s, the jeevaa or Isvaraa or the aijyam. A prakarana granthaa need not discuss the whole. It can specifically discuss a particular aspect; the available prakarana granthaa-s generally concentrate on one of the above aspects.

Naishkarmya Siddhi is a prakarana granthaa, attempting to remove the intellectual obstacle with regard to the thvampadhaartha; i.e., the focus in this prakaranaa, is on 'I', the word 'thvam', in the mahaa vaakyaa 'thath thvam as!'. Sureswaraacharya, presumably, feels that more seekers have problems with regard to 'thvam' than with 'thatH'.

In this aspect, Sureswaraacharya is influenced by his guru, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, one of whose prakarana granthaa-s is the "Upadesa Saahasri", a forceful prakaranaa, partly in prose – gadhyam – and partly in verse – padhyam. The focus of Upadesa Saahasri is also 'thvampadhaartha viveka:', especially Chapter XVIII, titled 'thathvamasii prakaranam'. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa remarks in the Upadesa Saahasri, "thvampadhaartha vivekaaya sanyaasa: sarva karamanaam", indicating that, sanyaasa aasramaa should be resorted to for the reduction of the 'ego', which, naturally is stronger in other aashramaa-s, because of vyavahaaraa. He avers, that, for mahaa vaakyaa-s to be properly understood, the ahamkaaraa 'I' should be converted into saakshi 'I' - the vyavahaaraa 'I' into paaramaarthika 'I'. Sureswaraacharya inspired by Upadesa Saahasri, closely follows the same style in Naishkarmya Siddhi, especially of the Chapter XVIII of Upadesa Saahasri. He has even borrowed or lifted many verses from the Upadesa Saahasri. Naishkarmya Siddhi is almost another version of Upadesa Saahasri.

Naishkarmya Siddhi is a padhya grantha: I a text primarily in verse form, consisting of 423 verses. A unique feature of this prakaranaa, is that the 'sambhandha ukthi:', meaning 'linking of the verses', has been done by Sureswaraacharya himself. In majority of the other texts, this 'linking of verses' has not been done by the authors, but, by their commentators. Obviously, Sureswaraacharya considered the 'linking process' essential for progressive teaching. He uses prose form for the purpose of 'linking'. Padhya roopa prakaranam and gadhya roopa sambhandha ukthi:, together make this treatise.

The text is divided into four chapters, as follows:

- Chapter I, consisting of 100 verses, analyze mokasha saadhanam, i.e. as to what is the means of 'liberation', the ultimate goal of every human being. The roles of karmaa i.e. saasthreeya karma of the karma kaandaa of Veda and of jnaana i.e. saasthreeya jnaana of the jnaana kaandaa of Veda are discussed. "Which one has a direct role in the seeker attaining mokshaa" is discussed. Opinions of other philosophies, including 'jnaana karma samucchaya vaadha:', a powerful philosophy of those days, are also considered. In short, 'roles of karmaa and jnaanaa as moksha saadhanam' is the subject of Chapter I.
- Chapter II, consisting of 119 verses, deals in 'thvampadhavichaara:', the meaning of 'I'. Sureswaraacharya points out, that, if the word 'I' is not properly understood, the mahaa vaakyam`aham brahma asmi` will appear absurd and even sacrilegious. Hence the importance of analysis of `thvampadhaa`. In other words, `aathma-anaathma-vivekaa` is the subject of Chapter II.

- In Chapter III, consisting of 126 verses, Sureswaraacharya discusses how the mahaa vaakyaa-s operate in the minds of listeners and how they generate 'knowledge'. He avers that study of mahaa vaakyam can and will directly give liberating knowledge. Once the mahaavaakyaa-s are understood, no other improvement will be needed. But, for this to happen, buddhi doshaa-s should not be there.

Sureswaraacharya also establishes in this chapter that '*sravanam` is the most important Vedhaanthic discipline – more important than mananam and nidhidhyaasanam, since it generates the jnaanam, which is the direct cause for 'liberation', expressed as '*sravanasya moksha saadhana jnaana janakathvaath`.

Another subject discussed in Chapter III, is the nature of ignorance – ajaana svaroopam - a technical subject, debated on, in many philosophical systems. Sureswaraacharya attempts to remove the 'ignorance of ignorance' and to give 'knowledge of ignorance'.

- Chapter IV consists of 78 verses, wherein, Sureswaraacharya first summarizes the contents of the first three chapters, the practice known as upasamhaara: or samskshepa: - consolidation. Later, he talks about jeevan mukthi:, the state of freedom or liberation of a jnaani even when he is alive exhausting his praarabhdhaa`.

So much about the background of the prakaranaa, Naishkarmya Siddhi`.

The Text begins with an introduction - avadhaarikaa - in prose form. (While the gadhyaa portions in the text, are generally sambhandha yukthi:, as explained earlier, this starting gadhyaa baagha: cannot obviously be termed so, since there is nothing prior to it, to be linked with later teachings.)

In this powerful, famous and charming avadhaarika gadhya bhaagha:, the Aachaaryaa lays emphasis on two points:

- (1) All human beings have one goal, consisting of two aspects. This goal is instinctive, not based on choice or even thinking. The first aspect of the goal is dhu:kha nivrutthi - the natural tendency to get rid of any pain – physical, emotional or intellectual. (Doubt and ignorance cause intellectual pain). Dhu:kha nivrutthi:, is , in fact, a natural goal for all living beings, not only humans. The Aachaaryaa , therefore, terms it svabhaava

pravrutthi: | The second aspect of the human goal is sukha praapthi:, the aspiration to attain all pleasures and entertainments.

(2) Total dhu:kha nivritthi is impossible without self-knowledge. All forms of sorrow – adhyaathmika, aadhiboudhika and aadhidaivika - are caused by self-ignorance (aathma ajnaanam) alone. If, therefore, dhu:kham has to be permanently got rid of, ajnaanam should be got rid of. Ajnaanam will go away, obviously, by acquisition of jnaanam. In short, aathma jnaanena ajnaana nivrutthi: and ajnaana nivrutthiyaa sarva dhu:kha nivrutthi: |

But, the human intellect does not accept this theory easily. The Aachaaryaa recognizes this problem; and, in this avadhaarikaa, shows that dhu:kham is not directly produced by ignorance, but is an indirect 7th generation product, as explained below:

- (1) Self-ignorance leads to dvaitha dharsanam – duality and multiplicity.
- (2) Dvaitha dharsanam results in sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa: - i.e. the tendency to consider certain things / situations / people as favourable and certain others as unfavourable. Sobanaa means ishta and asobanaa means anishta.
- (3) The 'sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa:' creates raagha dveshaa – attachment and hatred.
- (4) Raagha dveshaa-s propel a person to karmaani – vihitha and nishiddha karmaani.
- (5) Karmaa generates karma palaani – in the form of punyaa and paapaa.
- (6) The punya papa palaani produce the body again (punar janamaa) and consequent deha abhimaanaa.
- (7) The deha abhimaanaa causes dhu:kham – both physical and mental.

It follows, therefore, that, to get rid of dhu:kham, one should get rid of deha abhimaanaa, therefore punya papa palaani, therefore karmaa, therefore raagha dveshaa, therefore sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa:, therefore dvaitha dharsanam and therefore aathma ajnaanam. Elimination of aathma ajnaanam is achieved by acquisition of 'knowledge'. Sureswaraachaaryaa, in the avadhaarikaa, journeys through the seven stages, in this order, from effect to cause.

Without 'self-knowledge', all other remedies for pain are only temporary. The Aachaaryaa, therefore, concludes that aathma jnaanam is essential for everyone and declares that he is writing this prakaranaa for those who have recognized the cause of grief as ajnaanam.

Entering the Text:

Avadhaarika gadhyam (part):

आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तैः सर्वप्राणिभिः सर्वप्रकारस्यापि दुःखस्य स्वरसत एव जिहासितत्वात्तन्निवृत्त्यर्था
प्रवृत्तिरस्ति स्वरसत एव ।

As all creatures from Brahmaa down to the lowest species desire to avoid every kind of pain by the law of their nature, there is an equally natural effort on their part to effect its termination.

- सर्वप्राणिभिः - For all creatures,
- आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तैः - starting with the chathurmuka Brahmaaji up to a blade of grass, 'sthambha' means 'blade of grass'.
- जिहासितत्वात् - because the desire to get rid of
- सर्वप्रकारस्य दुःखस्य अपिः - all types of grief
- स्वरसत एवः - is instinctive ,
- तन्निवृत्त्यर्था प्रवृत्तिः- the effort to effect the termination of the grief
- स्वरसत एव अस्तिः - is also natural.

3. Avadhaarika Gadhyam to Chapter I (11-03-2006)

Sureswaraacharya is introducing his treatise Naishkarmya Siddhi, in this avadhaarikaa, in prose form. He first established that all living beings instinctively try to get rid of all types of pain – physical, mental and intellectual (doubt and ignorance being the causes of intellectual pain). This desire for dhu:kha nivrutthi – elimination of pain – is universal and, therefore, one has to find out the cause for the pain and eliminate the cause. Kaarana nivrutthiyaa kaarya nivrutthi.

The Aachaaryaa explores and arrives at the cause of dhu:kham as avidhyaa. From avidhyaa alone, dhu:kham results, through seven stages:

- avidhyaa leads to dvaitha dharsanam |
- dvaitha dharsanam to sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa: |
- sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa: to raaghadveshaa: |
- raaghadveshaa: to pravrutthi and nivrutthi i.e. karma |
- karma to karma palaani (referred to by the Aachaaryaa as dharmadharmau) |
- karma palaani to deha and deha abhimaanam |
- deha abhimaanam to dhu:kham |

Dhu:kham is an inevitable result of deha abhimaanam, since the body is subject to old age, ill health and death (jaraa, vyaadhi and maranam). Dhu:kham is, thus, the 7th generation product of avidhyaa. To eliminate dhu:kham totally, therefore, the root cause, avidhyaa or ajnaanam has to be eliminated. If any intermediate remedy is resorted to, elimination of grief, if at all, will be only temporary.

Removal of self-ignorance, can, of course, be achieved only by aathma jnaanam. Aathma jnaanaath eva ajnaana nivrutthi: - ajnaana nivrutthiyaa eva dhu:kha nivrutthi.

Sloka 12 – Dvitheeya valli – Dvitheeya adhyaaya: of Katopanishad, declares “there is lasting happiness for the discriminative ones, who see the Self dwelling in the body; not for others” – तमात्मस्थं येऽनुपश्यन्ति धीराः तेषां सुखं शाश्वतं नेतरेषाम् ॥१२॥ tamātmastham yē:'nupaśyanti dhirāḥ tēṣāṃ sukham śāśvatam nētarēṣām ॥

The conclusion of Sureswaraacharya also, in this avadhaarikaa, is that, aathma jnaanam is a “must” for every human being and therefore, aathma vidhyaa or paraa vidhyaa, is also a “must”. “Hence” says the Aachaaryaa “this work, the treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, is undertaken by me, to set forth the epitome of the essence of the entire Vedaantha.”

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

दुःखस्य च देहोपादानैकहेतुत्वात् देहस्य च पूर्वोपचितधर्माधर्ममूलत्वात् अनुच्छित्तिः । :

But, pain originates solely through the fact of embodiment and as embodiment is brought about by merit and demerit accumulated in the past, pain does not cease.

“What is the direct cause of pain” is explained in this sentence.

- दुःखस्य चः - For the pain (grief)
- देह उपादान एक हेतुत्वात् - the only cause is association with a body;

'Upaadhaanam' means 'association' / 'sambhandha:'. Ahamkaara, mamakaara sambhandha: is deha upaadhaanam. The body is under the grip of jaraa, vyaadhi and maranam – old age, disease and death. The word deha is, itself, derived as 'thrividha thaapai: dahyathe ithi deha:' – 'that, which suffers from three types of inflictions'. The other word, sareeram, used to denote the body, is derived as 'seeryamaanam svabhaavam' – 'that, which gradually decays and disintegrates'. It follows, therefore, that, as long as there is association with the body, grief or pain is inevitable. There is another very obvious proof of this fact: when in deep sleep, the individual has no deha abhimaanaa and is, therefore, not aware of any grief or pain.

Deha sambhandha bhaave dhu:kha bhaava: and, therefore, deha sambhandham eva dhu:kha hethu: Then a doubt may arise: “Since deha sambhandham is the cause of grief and since the sambhandhaa ceases at death, does mokshaa automatically follow death?”

Sureswaraacharya clears this doubt by his next remark in the same sentence.

- देहस्य पूर्व उपचित धर्माधर्म मूलत्वात् - the cause for the body being the punyams and paapams of earlier lives, If one loses one's present body, one acquires a new body depending on one's fructified sanchitha karmaa – the praarabhdha karmaa of the next birth.
- अनुच्छित्तिः - the destruction of grief / pain does not result (on death).

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

तयोश्च विहितप्रतिषिद्धकर्ममूलत्वात् अनिवृत्तिः।

Merit and demerit, in their turn, arise from good and bad and therefore, do not cease.

One can never end the punya papa palaani, since they are continuously being produced by further and further performance of karmaani. In effect, one has two problems: (1) One has a huge bundle of sanchitha karmaa, only a portion of which is exhausted in any one life, by way of praarabhdha karmaa; and (2) even while the praarabhdha karmaa is being exhausted, one is adding aagaami karmaa to the unexhausted bundle of sanchitha karmaa. Karmapalan will continue as long as karmaa continues. In this context, verse 2 of the Upadesa Saaram of Sri Ramana Maharishi, is very relevant: “krutimahodadhau pathanakaaranam palam asaasvatham gathinirodhakam” meaning “Action is the cause for one to fall in the vast ocean of further action. The result of action is limited and hence an obstruction to ‘knowledge’, which is the direct means of liberation”.

- तयोचः - For the punya paapa palaani
- विहित प्रतिषिद्ध कर्म मूलत्वात् - the prescribed good and prohibited bad actions (karmaani) being the cause,
- अनिवृत्तिः - there is continuation of grief.

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

| | | |
|---|--------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| कर्मणश्च | रागद्वेषास्पदत्वाद्ग्राह्यद्वेषयोश्च | शोभनासोभनाध्यासनिबन्धनत्वादद्यासस्य |
| चाविचारितसिद्धद्वैतवस्तुनिमित्तत्वादद्वैतस्य | च | शुक्तिकारजतादिवत् सर्वस्यापि |
| स्वत्स्निह्याद्वितीयात्मान्वबोधमात्रोपादानत्वादव्यावृत्तिः। | | |

Those deeds themselves spring from desire and aversion; desire and aversion are due to the ascription of goodness and badness (to external objects and situations); such ascription is caused by the presentation of duality, which presentation occurs owing to the absence of due inquiry ; and, as all duality arises out of the Ignorance of the self-established and secondless aathman, even as silver presents itself owing to the non-observation of the shell in the shell-silver illusion, it (the grief) does not cease.

Cessation of karma, therefore, would seem to be the solution. But, this cessation is not possible, because of some power/force whipping up the humans into activity. What is that force?

- कर्मणश्च रागद्वेष आस्पदत्वात् - The actions themselves spring from desire and hatred.

In verse 37, Chapter III, of the Bhagavadh Githa, Lord Krishna, in answer to Arjuna's question in the earlier verse, viz. “What prompts this person to commit sin, even though unwilling, as though he is forcibly persuaded?”, answers, “It is anger; it is desire”. The Lord's answer is relevant here.

It would, therefore, appear that one should get rid of raaghaa and dveshaa. But, this will not be possible, as long as one categorizes the world into two (i) favourable (people and situations, in the presence of whom / which life is considered pleasurable) and (ii) unfavourable (people and situations, in the presence of whom / which life is considered painful).

- रागद्वेषयोच शोभना अशोभना अध्यास निबन्धनत्वात् : - The 'desire' and 'hatred' result from the misconception of things as favourable and unfavourable. 'sobhanaad' means 'favourable'; 'asobhanaad' means 'unfavorable'; 'adhyasam' means 'misconception/erroneous impression'; 'nibhandhanam' means 'cause'.

The conviction "aham poorna: asmI" is wisdom. My svabhaavam is poornam and it cannot be increased or decreased by anything in creation. The notion that it can be increased or decreased is adhyasaa: | Sobhanaa asobhanaa adhyasam is the second generation product of avidhya and because of this adhyasam, one pursues efforts to acquire or to get rid of things and situations.

- अध्यासस्य च - For this two-fold (favourable or unfavourable) erroneous impression
- द्वैत वस्तु निमित्तत्वात् - dvaita dharsanam is the cause.

The Aacharyaa points out that as long as one has dvaita dharsanam (duality in perception) one is subject to viewing things as favourable and unfavourable. Lord Krishna declares in the Bhagavadh Githa (Ch. IV.- verse 24)" brahmaarpanam brahma havi: brahmaagnau brahmanaa hutham brahmaiva thena ganthavyam brahmakarmasamaadhinaa" – "The ladle is Brahman; the offering is Brahman; it is offered into the fire of Brahman, by Brahman. Brahman alone is to be reached by him who sees Brahman in every action". Only in advaitic perception, one sees Brahman or Isvara in every object perceived by him. Only this sarvathra Brahma dharsanam or sarvathra Isvara dharasanam can help in not dividing the world into favourables and unfavourables.

- अविचारित सिद्ध द्वैतस्य च - The dvaita dharsanam is the result of non- enquiry,
- शुक्तिका रजतादिवत् - similar to the 'shell-silver' and 'rope-snake'.

The "unreal" will continue as long as one does not enquire about the "real". Vidhyarany Swami, elsewhere, comments "non-enquiry is nourishment for 'unreality'". Hence, the Aacharyaa avers that dvaitam is avicharitha siddham.

The 'snake-rope' example, though not explicit here, is implied by the use of 'aadhivath'. The use of the 'shell-silver' and 'rope-snake' examples is common in Vedhaantha. The subtle difference in the examples, is, that, while the misconceived silver in the shell causes raaghaa and consequent pravrutthi (running after), the unreal snake in the rope causes dveshaa and consequent nivrutthi (running away). Vedhaantha holds that the whole world is like shell-silver and rope-snake, causing raaghaa and dveshaa and consequent pravrutthi and nivrutthi. Proper enquiry will eliminate the misconceptions. "Sarvam brahmamayam jagath'" should become a firm conviction. Alternately, the whole Creation should be looked upon as 'Isvara Svaroopam'', as Lord Krishna declares in the Bhagavadh Githa (Cha. VII – verse 7), "mattha: paratharam na anyath kinchith asth'" – "There is nothing other than Me".

- सर्वस्य अपि - (Thus) for everyone,
- स्वतस्सिद्ध अद्वितीय आत्म अनवबोध मात्र उपादानत्वात् - ignorance of the self-evident, non-dual Self being the only cause,
- अव्यावृत्तिः -non-elimination of grief persists.

The Aachaaryaa uses two adjectives for the aathmaa: (1) 'adhvitheeya'' meaning 'non-dual' and (2) 'svatha: siddha'' meaning 'self-evident'/'self-established'.

Avadhaarika gadhyam(further):

अतः सर्व अनर्थ हेतुः आत्म अनवबोधः एव |

Therefore, the cause of all evil is non-apprehension of Self.

- अतः आत्म अनव बोधः एव - Therefore, 'self-ignorance' alone
- सर्व अनर्थ हेतु - is the cause of all problems.

The moral: One should dedicate oneself to self-knowledge, if one is intelligent.

4. Avadharika Gadyam to Chapter I cont'd (18-03-2006).

Sureswaraachaaryaa introduces his Naishkarmya Siddhi text, by pointing out that self-ignorance alone is the cause of all forms of human pain - sarva dhu:khasya kaaranam aathma anvabodha eva | The Aachaaryaa derives this conclusion in a few steps, as to how dhu:kham, though not the direct product of ignorance, is the 7th generation product; and, because of this fact, viz., that , grief is not the direct product of ignorance, we do not realize that "ignorance" is the cause of pain.

To eliminate grief, therefore, the root cause , "self- ignorance", has to be eliminated, since any intermediary solution will only be temporary.

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

सुखस्य च अनागमपायिनः अपरतन्त्रस्य आत्मस्वभावात् तस्य अनवबोधः पिधानम् |

Non-arrival, non-departure and non-dependence on external objects are parts of the very nature of original aanandham. 'Self-ignorance' veils that aanandham.

Until now, Sureswaraachaaryaa talked about "ignorance" as the creator or cause of sorrow. The vikshepa sakthi of avidhyaa was being highlighted. In this sentence, the Aachaaryaa talks about the aavarana sakthi of avidhyaa, because of which sakthi, it veils the aathma aanandha svaroopam. In other words, till now, the Aachaaryaa was pointing out that "ignorance causes sorrow"; now, he says "the very same ignorance does another mischief ; it also conceals the svaroopa aathma aanandha." |

According to Vedhaantha, there is only one source of aanandhaa - the aathmaa, the Infinite One. Everything else is finite – alpam – and cannot give happiness. The Chaandoghya Upanishad declares: "Yovai bhoomaa sukham na alpe sukham asthi" – "Infinite alone can give aanandhaa; the finite cannot". The fundamental law of Vedhaantha is "Yath alpam thath dhu:kham yath poornam thath sukham".

In our experience, the worldly objects also give pleasure. In contrast, Vedhaantha asserts "sense objects do not give even an iota of aanandhaa". How does one explain this contradiction between physical perception and scriptures? The explanation is given by Vedhaantha itself: "Some sense objects do have a power to make the mind quiet and relax it; i.e., saantha vrutthi results from some sense objects. In this quiet and relaxed mind, the svaroopa aanandhaa gets reflected and the individual temporarily enjoys this 'reflected' aanandhaa / prathibhimba sukham, which is mistaken by the individual as aanandhaa given by the sense object. But, the fact is that the sense object does not actually give the aanandhaa; it only appears to do so". In effect, Vedhaantha says: "sense objects are cheating you, by making you misconstrue that they are giving you aanandhaa, whereas the aanandhaa actually is your own aathma aanandha.

Sureswaraacharya also points this out: "ajnaanam makes one lose sight of the original source of aanandhaa and to run after the fragile and temporary sense objects".

The priya aanandhaa, modha aanandhaa and pramodha aanandhaa, mentioned in the Thaithreeya Upanishad belong to the aanandha maya kosaa and are temporary and fragile aanandhaa-s borrowed only from 'Me'. The world, by itself, does not have an iota of aanandhaa.

A relevant and well-known verse runs: "akaare kalu samsaare sukha: braanthir maneeshina: laalaa paana ivaam ghushte baalaanaam sthanya bhibhramaa" – "for human beings, there is the mistaken notion that sukham is from samsaaraa, similar to a baby sucking its thumb and mistaking its own saliva as the mother's milk".

Reverting to the text:

- अनागमपायिनः - Non-arrival , non-departure
- अपरतन्त्रस्य - and non-dependence (on external sources)
- आत्मस्वभावात् - being the very nature
- सुखस्य च - of the original aanandham (sukham, in this context, should be interpreted as original aanandham),
- अनवबोधः - it is ignorance of the Self
- तस्य पिधानम् - which 'veils' that aananda svaroopam

The adjective 'anaagamapaayina:' to 'sukhasya' stresses the nature of the original aanandhaa. All experiential pleasures 'come and go' and are not real aanandhaa. Even samaadhi janya aanandhaa is not aathma aanadhaa, but only aathma prathibhimbha aanandhaa, since it comes with samaadhi and disappears when the practitioner comes out of the samaadhi. Also, aathmaanandhaa is not an experiential aanandhaa; it is the very nature of 'I', who is behind all the arriving and departing experiences. The happiness of 'I', the continuous chaithanya thathvam is anaagamapaayina aanandha: - non-arriving and non-departing nithyaanandha: /

The second adjective 'aparathanthrasya' (to 'sukhasya') highlights the fact that aathma aanandhaa is not dependent on external factors, unlike experiential pleasures, which are conditional pleasures, dependent on external factors. Experiential pleasures are parathanthraa; aathma aanandhaa is apara thanthraa. It does not depend on time also. It is the knowledge of the poornathvam of the self.

The use of the word 'pidhaanam' meaning 'cover / veil' is only figurative and not literal. A cloth can physically cover a body, if large enough. But, aathmasvaroopam being infinite, how can it be covered? Also, aathmaa is experienced by all, at all times. Aathma is said to be svayam prakaasa: and nithya prakaasa: / Then how does avidhyaa 'cover' aathmaa? The explanation: By the word 'pidhaanam', 'physical' covering is not meant; but, when one is 'ignorant', it is 'as though' the aathmasvaroopam is covered. In other words, the 'non-availability' caused by 'ignorance' is figuratively termed 'pidhaanam / concealment'.

Thus, the two powers of avidhyaa, the vikshepa sakthi and the aavarana sakthi, create the two main problems of the human being. "Facing dhu:kham, because of ignorance" is one main problem. "Missing the svaroopaa aanandhaa and therefore, running after vishaya aanandhaa" is his second main problem. The two problems together constitute samsaaraa. Hence, the pressing need to tackle 'avidhyaa' - 'ignorance'.

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further) :

अतस्तस्यात्यन्तोच्छन्नावशेषपुरुषार्थपरिसमाप्ति | :

Therefore, the attainment of the summum bonum lies in the total destruction of this ignorance.

- अतः - Therefore, (ignorance being the cause of both problems (i) missing the original aanandhaa and (ii) facing dhu:kham)
- अशेष पुरुषार्थ परिसमाप्ति: - all the four purushaartha-s are achieved
- तस्य अत्यन्त उच्छित्तौ - by 'total elimination' of that ignorance.

'Thasya' means 'anavabodhasya', mentioned in the earlier sentence. 'Ucchedha.' means 'eradication / elimination'. And, what is 'total elimination'? Explanation: Ajnaanam has three aspects (i) aavaranam – ignorance (ii) samsaya: - doubtful understanding (partial understanding can only create doubts) and (iii) viparyaya: - wrong understanding. Removing all these three aspects is 'total elimination'. The use of the word 'athyantha' emphasizes this.

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

अज्ञाननिवृत्तेश्च सम्यग्ज्ञानस्वरूपलाभमात्रहेतुत्वान्तदुपादानम् ।

The destruction of ignorance is accomplished only by the attainment of perfect knowledge and hence such knowledge must be sought.

How does one remove 'ignorance'? How many methods are there for removal of 'ignorance'? A common example, in answer to this query, is the counter-query 'how many materials are there to remove darkness in a room?' and the answer 'only light'. Likewise, 'ignorance' can be removed only by 'jnaanam' – not by any of the other Yogaa-s, like bakthi yogaa, upaasanaa yoga, raja yogaa, hata yogaa etc. These are the many paths for purifying the mind; but, for removal of ignorance and therefore, for liberation, jnaanam is the only path.

अज्ञाननिवृत्तेः- For el i m i nat i on of i g n o r a n c e,

- सम्यग् ज्ञान स्वरूपलाभमात्र हेतुत्वात् - attainment of perfect knowledge being the only cause,
- तत् उपादानम् - that (knowledge) should be sought.

Even in kali yugaa, jnaanam is the only path for mokshaa. The oft-quoted 'kalau naama sangirthanam' should be understood only as: 'in kali yugaa, naama sangirthanam is the simplest saadhanaa which can help achieve chittha suddhi (not mokshaa).'

After realizing that 'knowledge' and 'ignorance' are mutually inimical – jnaana ajnaanayo: virodha: - and, that, therefore, 'knowledge' will destroy 'ignorance', how does one proceed to acquire 'knowledge'? Two conditions have to be satisfied – (1) samaana vishayathvam and (2) samaana aasrayathvam.

The term 'Samaana vishayathvam' means "subject matter of ignorance and subject matter of knowledge should be the same". As a simple example, "ignorance of the subject of Physics will be removed only by knowledge of Physics". Likewise, aathma ajnaanam will be removed only by aathma jnaanam – not even by Isvara jnaanam.

'Samaana aasrayathvam' means "locus of ignorance and locus of knowledge must be the same". Again, as a simple example, "Rama's knowledge of Physics will not remove Lakshmana's ignorance of Physics or vice versa". Since it is the seeker who suffers from aathma ajnaanam, he should seek and acquire aathma jnaanam. Jnaanam of his guru or of his father will not help.

And, aathma jnaanam can be gained only through a long term and consistent educational programme, covering the study of scriptures.

This is what is said by Sureswaraachaaryaa in the next part of this avadhaarikaa.

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

अशेषानर्थहेत्वात्मानवबोधविषयस्य च अनागमिकप्रत्यक्षादि लौकिकप्रमाण अविषयत्वात् वेदान्तागमवाक्यादेव सम्यग् ज्ञानम् ।

As the object to which ignorance of Self constituting the cause of all evil pertains, namely Self or aathmaa, does not fall within the range of ordinary modes of knowledge like sensory perception, perfect knowledge could be acquired only through the authority of statements in the scriptures of Vedhaantha.

This is a very terse statement by the Aachaaryaa. Any knowledge, whether spiritual or worldly, is generated in the mind, only by the operation or use of the appropriate or relevant tool of knowledge. Such a tool or instrument is termed pramaanam. 'Eye' is the pramaanam for knowledge of 'colour'. No other sense organ (ear, nose etc.) or method (like meditation etc.) can give knowledge of 'colour'. So also sound, smell or taste, which can be known only by the appropriate sense organ – ear, nose and tongue respectively. In essence, every type of knowledge requires the appropriate tool for acquiring that particular knowledge. Sureswaraachaaryaa asserts, in this statement, that, for aathmajnaanam, the only pramaanam is aagama / veda vaakyam – especially mahaa vaakyam.

Again, for acquiring of any knowledge, the appropriate pramaanam should not only be available, but, should also be operated or put into use. Mere presence or availability of the pramaanam is not sufficient. Likewise, aathma jnaanam also can be acquired or generated only by making use of the appropriate pramaanam – the Vedhaantha saasthraa-s.

अशेष अनर्थ हेतु आत्मानवबोध विषयस्य च - The object to which, 'self-ignorance', constituting the cause of all evil, pertains (namely aathmaa),

'Aathma anavabodham' (self-ignorance) is asesha anartha hethu (cause of all evil of samsaaraa). The 'object' of 'self-ignorance' is obviously the 'Self' or 'aathmaa'.

- अनागमिक प्रत्यक्षादि लौकिकप्रमाण अविषयत्वात् - not being the subject of non-traditional and non-Vedic worldly pramaanam-s like physical observation etc.,

'Anaagamika' means 'non-traditional / non-Vedic'; 'prathyakshaadhi' means 'physical observation etc.'; 'loukika' - 'worldly'; 'avishaya' means 'not a subject'.

Non-Vedic worldly pramaanam-s cannot give knowledge of the Self.

- सम्यग् ज्ञानम् - clear / perfect knowledge
- वेदान्त आगम वाक्यात् एव - can result only from Vedhaantha, aagama vaakyaas (especially mahaa vaakyam)

But, mere chanting of the mahaa vaakyaas will not help generate knowledge. Sabhda aavrutthi is not jnaana janakam. Mahaavaakya aavrutthi cannot produce aathma jnaanam. Chanting of mahaa vaakyam (like 'soham' etc.) can give only chittha suddhi. Mahaa vaakya vichaara: (thorough inquiry under the guidance of a guru) alone can produce the knowledge. The process may be long drawn; but, there is no other path to jnaanam.

Avadhaarika gadhyam (further):

अतोऽशेषवेदान्तसारसंग्रहप्रकरणमिदमारभ्यते । तत्र अभिलषित अर्थप्रचयाय प्रकरण अर्थ संसूत्रणाय च अयमाध्य :श्लोकः।

Therefore, this work, purporting to set for the epitome of the essence of the entire Vedhaanthaa, is undertaken. The first verse serves as a prayer for the fulfillment of the desire in the matter and to indicate in a nut-shell the theme of the work.

- अत :- Therefore (because only Vedhaantha vichaaraa will give knowledge)
- इदं प्रकरणं आरभ्यते - I am starting this Text,
- अशेष वेदान्त सार संग्रह - which is the essence of all Vedhaanthic scriptures.
- तत्र - Having made the decision,
- अभिलषित अर्थप्रचयाय - for the successful progress of the desired objective 'abhilashitha' - desired; artha – objective; prachayaaya – successful progress / unobstructed growth.
- प्रकरण अर्थ संसूत्रणाय - of presenting the subject in a nutshell,
- अयं आध्यःश्लोकः - this first verse of prayer.

5. Chapter I, verses 1 and 2 (25-03-2006)

In the comprehensive introduction to his text, Sureswaraachaaryaa establishes two points:

- (1) Aathma ajnaanam alone is the cause of samsaaraa / vividha dhu:kha praapthi: the experienced misery and pain; and, since aathma ajnaanam alone is the cause of samsaaraa, aathma jnaanam alone can be the cause of ajanaana nivrutthi: and mokshaa, as it is jnaanam alone which can destroy ajnaanam.
- (2) Proceeding to the second point, he explains that aathma jnaanam can be acquired only through the study of Veda antha baaghaa. Any knowledge / information can be acquired only by the use of the appropriate instrument, technically called pramaanam. The usage of the pramaanam is termed pramaana vyaapaara: | An indisputable rule is: "Pramaana vyaapaaram vinaa pramaa uthpaathi naiiva sambhavath'", meaning "without the use of a pramaanam, jnaanam can never be acquired". But, the choice of the pramaanam does not rest with the seeker of the knowledge. On the other hand, it depends on the 'knowledge' that is sought. For example, for 'knowledge of colour', one has to depend on one's eyes alone ; for 'hearing', one has to depend on one's ears alone ; and so on. In the case of aathma jnaanam, i.e. when aathmaa is the prameyam, none of the usual loukika pramaanaa-s, viz., prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi and anupalabdhi, will be found useful. These pramaanaa-s can be employed only for anaathma vishayaa-s. Even science cannot help aathma prameyam. Sureswaraachaarya points out this fact. By his emphatic statement "vedhaantha aagama vaakyaath eva'", he avers, that, the only pramaanam for aathma jnaanam is aagamika sabdha:, i.e. vaidhika sabdha: , that, too, not the Veda poorva baaghaa, but, the Veda antha baaghaa alone.

Later, the Aachaaryaa will rule out meditation also as a saadhanaa for acquiring aathma jnaanam. Only the study of mahaa vaakyam in a systematic manner, will result in aathma jnaanam, though such a study may be a long-drawn process. Swami Vidhyaaranayaa also says, in his Panchadasee : "Paroksha cha aparoksha chethi veda vidhyaa vichaarathaa'" meaning "whether parokshaa or aparokshaa, direct realization of aathmaa has to come through veda vaakya vicharaa only".

Sureswaraachaaryaa concludes his brief introduction and commences the text with a mangala slokaa, which he intends as a prayer for the fulfillment / accomplishment of his desired objective – abhilashitha artha prachayaaya - and for presenting the subject matter of his treatise briefly - prakarana artha samsoothranaaya.

Chapter I : Verse 1

खानिलाग्न्यब्धिरत्र्यन्तं स्रक्फणीवोद्गतं यतः ।

ध्वान्तच्छिदे नमस्तस्मै हरये बुद्धिसाक्षिणे ॥ १ ॥

I offer obeisance to that Hari, the Witness of the intellect, who annihilates darkness (of ignorance) and from whom arises the world consisting of ether, air, fire, water and earth, even as the illusory snake arises from the rope.

In this sloka, Sureswaraacharya offers namaskaaram-s to Lord Vishnu.

- हरये नमः - I offer prostrations to Lord Narayana,
'Hari:' means 'remover'; may be taken as remover of ignorance or as remover of paapaani or as remover of obstacles – harathy ajnaanam ithi Hari: - harathy paapaani ithi Hari: - harathy vighnaani ithi Hari: |

What type of Har? The Aachaaryaa uses different adjectives.

- ध्वान्तच्छिदे : - (who is) the destroyer of internal darkness (i.e. ignorance),
Guru removes the disciple's ignorance, with the help of saasthraa-s; but, the saasthraa-s have been given only by Isvara. It follows, therefore, that, it is Isvara, who removes ignorance through saasthra pramaanam. Hence, the Aachaaryaa refers to Hari, as "destroyer of darkness of ignorance".
- यत(जगत्) उद्गतं : - from whom has emerged the world,

In Thaithreeya Upanishad, Bhrugu Valli also, we find the usage of 'yatha:', meaning 'from whom', in the first manthraa, as, 'yatho vaa boothaani jaayanthe'.

- खा अनिल अग्नि अप् धरित्री अन्तं - which is of the nature of space, air, fire, water and earth, kham – space ; anila: – air ; agni: - fire ; ap – water ; dharithree – earth ; antham - of the nature of.

The whole world is made up of pancha bhoothaa-s only, the five elements, their combinations and the products of the five elements. The very word 'prapancha:', denoting the world, means "containing the five elements".

Though only srishti (udhgatham) is explicitly mentioned here, sthithi and layam also are to be understood as implied.

What type of creation (udhgatham)? Three different theories have been propounded by different philosophies, pertaining to creation.

- (1) "Bhagavaan created the universe" is the stand of some philosophies – Nyaayaa, Vaisheshikaa and Dvaitaa. This theory is termed nimittha kaarana vaadha: or thatastha Isvara vaadha: |
- (2) "Bhagavaan has become the universe" is the theory propounded by Visishtadvaitam and is termed parinaama upaadhaana kaarana vaadha: or Brahma parinaama vaadha: | The attitude "sarvam vishnumayam" results.
- (3) "Bhagavaan (or Brahman) 'appears' as the universe, without undergoing any change" is the stand of the Advaitin. This theory is termed brahma vivartha vaadha: |

The Advaitin firmly believes that there is a fallacy in the nimittha kaarana vaadha:, namely, that, Bhagavaan will become 'limited', based on this theory ; as for the parinaama upaadhaana vaadha:, according to the Advaitin, there is a fallacy in it also, viz., the notion that Bhagavaan is subject to change. Neither 'limitation' to the 'Infinite' nor 'change' to the 'nirvikaara:' is acceptable to the Advaitin.

Sureswaraacharya, being a strong advocate of Advaitam, refers to 'Creation' as equivalent to the well-known 'rajju-sarpa', using a different phrase 'sraak pane'. Brahman 'appears' as the world, just as a discarded garland lying on the ground in semi-darkness, falsely 'appears' as a snake.

- स्रक्फणीव - similar to a snake that 'appears' in a garland, 'sraak' means 'garland' ; 'panir' - 'फणिन्' - means 'snake'; 'iva' means 'like'.
- "I offer obeisance to Vishnu, who 'appears' as this world" says the Aacharya, implying the Advaitic theory "Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa".
- बुद्धि सक्षिणे - (and) Who is the Witness of the intellect.

'Buddhi saakshine' is another adjective to Hari. One does not have to 'travel' to see Lord Hari. He is available in one's own heart, as the very witness consciousness of one's mind. Thaitheeya Upanishad (manthraa 1- Brahmavalli) refers to Brahman or Iswara as "nihitham guhaayaam parame vyomar" – "residing in the supreme space within the cave of the heart". The Aacharya, by this adjective "buddhi saakshine" for Hari, implies that "Paramaathmaa Hari is none other than the jeevaathmaa"; and, by extension, implies "jeevo brahmaiva na apara:" | The Advaitic theme of the treatise Naishkarmya Siddhi viz., "brahma saathyam jagan mithyaa jeevo brahmaiva na apara:" has thus been briefly indicated in this verse, in keeping with the Aacharya's statement 'prakarana artha samsoothranaaya'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 2:

स्वसंप्रदायस्य चोदितप्रमाणपूर्वकत्वज्ञापनाय विशिष्टगुणसंबन्धसंकीर्तनपूर्विका गुरोर्नमस्कारक्रिया ।

To intimate that his (the author's) tradition proceeds from sound authority, as required by the scriptures, obeisance to the preceptor is recorded through a tribute to his exalted excellence.

After Isvara Namsakaaram, Sureswaraachaaryaa does Guru Namskaaram, to show that the knowledge he proposes to present in the treatise, has come from a very legitimate, valid and genuine source, namely, his Aachaaryaa.

- ज्ञापनाय - To reveal (that)
- स्व संप्रदायस्य - my teaching,

Anything that is properly handed over or transferred is referred to, as 'Sampradhaaya'. In this context, the use of the word means "the teaching has been handed over to me, by my guru, to whom it was handed over by his guru and so on. "Healthily transferred traditional teaching" is the meaning of 'sampradhaaya' here.

- पूर्वकत्व - (is) backed by
- प्रमाण - valid sources
- चोदित - prescribed in the saasthraa-s,

"My teaching is backed by valid sources prescribed by saasthraa-s" is the essence.

What is that valid source prescribed by the saasthraa-s?

Saasthraa-s themselves prescribe that, though they are valid sources of knowledge, they should not be studied direct, but, only under the guidance of a guru.

In Verse 34 – Chapter IV – Srimadh Bhagavadh Githaa, Lord Krishna exhorts "thadhviddhi pranipaathena sevayaa updekshyantii they jnaanam jnaanina: thathvadharsina:" - " may you gain knowledge by prostration and service to wise sages, who will impart that knowledge to you".

Manthraa 12 - Section II – Chapter I of the Mundaka Upanishad also prescribes:

तद्विज्ञानार्थं स गुरुमेवाभिगच्छेत् समित्पाणिः श्रोत्रियं ब्रह्मनिष्ठम् ॥ १२ ॥

"thadh vijnaartham sa gurum eva abhigaccheth samithpaani: srothriyam brahmanishtam" –

"to attain knowledge, he (the seeker) must necessarily approach, with samith in hand, a teacher learned in scriptures and established in Brahman".

So, according to scriptures a srothreeya, brahma nishta guru, is the valid source for "knowledge".

- नमस्कार क्रिया - obeisance
- संकीर्तनपूर्विका - accompanied by flowing tributes
- विशिष्टगुणसंबन्ध गुरोः - is offered to my guru, who is endowed with great values.

To emphasize that the teachings which he proposes to give in this treatise, were received by him, from his guru, Sureswaraachaaryaa offers obeisance to his guru, in the verse that follows.

He also intends to glorify his guru, in the verse.

Chapter I: Verse 2 –

अलब्ध्वातिशयं यस्माद्व्यावृत्तास्तमबादयः।

I bow down in reverence to the great preceptor who cuts the knot of ignorance and whose greatness is unsurpassed.

- तस्मै नमः - I bow down to him (my guru)
- अविध्या ग्रन्ति भेदिने - who has cut the knot of ignorance,

Self - ignorance is considered a 'knot', because it joins two things together – the sathya aathmaa and the mithyaa sareeram. (The mixture is called ahamkaara:). Alternately, it may be said, that, the Consciousness of aathmaa and the mortality of the body have been brought together by avidhyaa. "Chith jada granthi:" is the name for avidhyaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to his guru, Adi Sankara, as the one who has cut the knot of ignorance.

- गरीयसे - who is the greatest,

'Ghareeyase', meaning 'the greatest' is another adjective to the guru.

Sureswaraachaaryaa glorifies the greatness of his guru, in another poetic and eloquent manner, a detailed explanation of which is as follows. In Sanskrit grammar, degrees of comparison are expressed by the suffixes thara and thama. "Guruthara:" would mean "equal to guru', while "guruthama:" would mean "superior to guru". There are other suffixes also, used for the same purpose. Such groups of suffixes, used for comparison, are referred to, by the Aachaaryaa, in this verse as "thamabaadhaya:" | He says "the thamabaadhaya: went to other gurus to find out an equal or superior to his guru - a 'thara guru' or a 'thama guru'. Not finding anyone superior or even equal, they returned to the guru, from whom they had started (namely, Adi Sankara) and rested in him".

- यस्मात् - since
- तमबादयः - the degrees of comparison
- अतिशयं अलब्ध्वा - not finding any one superior or equal (to my guru)
- व्यावृत्ताः - returned from the others (and rested in him).

6. Chapter I, Verse 3 to 5 (01-04-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is offering namaskaaram-s to Lord Hari, as well as his guru, so that he can successfully complete his text book, in the 1st sloka to Lord Hari and in the second sloka to his guru. In the second sloka, he also talks about the glory of his guru. He avers that no other guru is greater than his guru; that, all comparative and superlative suffixes travelled throughout the world to find out whether there is any guru equal to or greater than his guru, Adi Sankara; and unable to do so, they returned and rested on his guru. He, thus, conveys that his guru is matchless.

Thamap + aadhaya: = thamabhaadhaya: / Suffixes of comparison are called athisayaana prathyayaa:, because they talk about the degrees of superiority.

The word guru is derived as below: "gukaara: thu anthakaaro vai rukaara: thath nivarthika: / anthakaara nivarthithvaath gurur ithi abhideeyathe" – "the letter 'gu' means 'darkness', the letter 'ru' means 'eliminator'; being the eliminator of 'darkness' (of ignorance) guru is the word used (for the preceptor).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 3 & Verse 3- Chapter I;

नमस्कारनिमित्तस्वाशयाविष्करणार्थः ।

वेदान्तोदरसंगूढं संसारोत्सारि वस्तुगम् ।

ज्ञानं व्याकृतमप्यन्यैर्वक्ष्ये गुर्वनुशिक्षया ॥ ३ ॥

The motive behind this reverence is brought out .In obedience to my preceptor's commandment, I expound here the knowledge revelatory of Reality, which is contained in the heart of Vedhaanthaa and which knowledge puts an end to the life of transmigration, though it has been explained by others also.

After offering namsakaaram-s, Sureswaraachaaryaa presents his objective or the purpose behind his treatise.

- स्व आशया अविष्करणार्थः - (The following verse is intended) to bring out my objective (avishkaranam - expressing / bringing out)
- नमस्कारनिमित्त - for which objective, the namaskaaram-s were offered. The objective of the Aachaaryaa is expressed in the verse.
- गुरु अनुशिक्षया - Because of my guru's commandment / order / injunction,
- ज्ञानं वक्ष्ये - I shall impart the knowledge
- वेदान्त उदरसंगूढं - which is hidden in the words of Vedhaanthaa,

'Udharam' literally means 'stomach'; should be understood, in this context, as 'words' 'Samgoodam' means 'hidden'.

The 'knowledge' proposed to be imparted is Vedhaanthic knowledge. But, the knowledge is not given by Vedhaanthaa, in an explicit manner. If it had been explicit, there would have been no confusion. The very fact that different philosophies like dvaithaa, visishtaadvaitaa, advaitaa, dvaithadvaitaa etc., have been expounded based on the same Vedhaanthic statements, shows that the meaning is 'hidden' and not explicit. Sureswaraacharya points out this fact, by the use of the word samgoodam.

What subject does this 'knowledge' deal with? The Aachaaryaa replies: "vasthugam". वस्तुगम् - which deals with the Absolute Reality,

The word 'vasthu' means 'absolute reality' or "that object which always exists, exists non-dually and exists independently". It is derived as "vasathi, sarvathra asthi swathanthrayaa asthi - ithi vasthu". By using this word, Sureswaraacharya indicates that everything else other than this "independent, Absolute Reality" is avasthu, not existing independently and not existing all the time. Avasthu-s are mithyaa.

What is the benefit of this knowledge? It destroys/eliminates samsaaraa.

- संसार उत्सारि - and which is the destroyer of samsaaraa. 'samsaara uthsaarl' is adjective to 'jnaanam'. 'Uthsaarayathi ithi uthsaari' / 'That which destroys/uproots is 'uthsaarl'. The meaning of 'samsaaraa' had already been dealt with, in the avadhaarikaa, with the chain of seven steps from avidhyaa to dhu:kham. This chakram is samsaaraa.
- व्याकृतं अपि - even though it (the knowledge) has been explained earlier by others (poorva aachaaryaa-s).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 4:

किंविषयं प्रकरणमिति चेतदुपान्यासः।

The theme of the work is enunciated as follows.

In the previous verse, Sureswaraacharya generally said that he was venturing to deal with the 'Absolute Reality'. He did not elaborate as to what that 'Absolute Reality' is. That explanation is covered in the ensuing verse.

- किंविषयं प्रकरणं - "What is the subject matter of the treatise?"
- इति चेत् - If so asked,

- तद् उपान्यास- I shall now explain.

Chapter I: Verse 4:

यत्सिद्धाविदमः सिद्धिर्यदसिद्धौ न किञ्चन ।

प्रत्यग्धर्मैकनिष्ठस्य याथात्म्यं वक्ष्यते स्पष्टम् ॥ ४ ॥

Herein will be expounded clearly the essential nature of the Self, which is the sole inmost Reality and whose presence is presupposed by the presentation of the objective world and whose non-manifestation would mean the non-presentation of everything.

Vedhaantha saasthraa-s first introduce the Absolute Reality as jagath kaaranam, the ultimate substance out of which the whole universe has come; and, also define that ultimate substance as Pure Existence. "Sadheva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekam eva advitheeyam" – "O good looking one! In the beginning this was Existence alone, One only, without a second" declares the Chaandhogya Upanishad (VI.ii.1). Absolute Reality is Pure Existence itself – not a product, part or property of any substance. The Pure Existence, which exists independent of matter, pervades the matter, lends existence to matter and survives even after disintegration of matter. That Pure Existence is the Absolute Reality. On hearing this, the student is curious to know what that Pure Existence is. The Upanishad elaborates, talks about Creation and finally says "Eithadhaatmyam idhagum sarvam thath sathyam sa aathmaa thath thvam as!" – "Pure Existence is nothing but you, the Consciousness Saakshi Thatthvam" (VI.ix.4). Thus, 'I', the observer of everything, am the Pure Existence and, therefore, 'I' am the Absolute Reality. Vedhaantha starts in Absolute Reality and culminates in 'I', the prathyak aathmaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the phrase 'prathyak dharmaa' here, to mean 'innermost aathmaa'. 'Dharmaa' generally means "values in life" prescribed in the scriptures, derived as 'dhaaranaath dharmaa', meaning 'because it (dharma) sustains the Creation'. In the Vedhaanthic context, with the same derivation, the word is used to mean 'aathmaa', since aathmaa is the substratum which sustains the whole Creation. In other words, 'relatively speaking' 'values' sustain 'Creation' and from the 'Absolute angle', the aathmaa sustains 'Creation'. To express in a different manner, vyaavahaara dhrushtyaa, dharmaa means 'values' and paaramaarthika dhrushtyaa, it means 'aathmaa'.

- प्रत्यक् धर्म एक निष्ठस्य - For the ultimate culmination of prathyak dharma.

The ultimate culmination is aathma aikyam. When the study of Vedhaantha is done, the stages are (i) first, paroksha Brahman (i.e. Brahman as a faraway object, in Vaikuntaa or Kailaasaa) (ii) then, prathyaksha Brahman (as a close-by object) and (iii) ultimately, the aparoksha Brahman (as 'I', myself).

- स्पुटम् वक्ष्यते - will be clearly propounded by me
 - तस्य याथात्म्यं - the real nature / svaroopam of that (aathmaa/Self)
 - यद् सिद्धौ इदमःसिद्धिः - in whose existence alone, the existence of the whole world is proved
 - यद् असिद्धौ न किंचन - and in whose absence, nothing exists.
- 'yadh' literally means 'who' or 'which' or 'what' and, in this context, indicates aathmaa/Self/'I', the Observer; 'idhama:' means 'all this'(the entire universe).

The observed universe depends on the observer 'I'; 'I' lend existence to the Creation i.e. Creation borrows existence from 'me'. Hence, 'creation' is mithyaa and 'I' am sathyam. The world is avasthu and 'I' am the only vasthu.

Sureswaraacharyaa says that, his treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, will deal with 'I', the Absolute Reality.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 5:

विवक्षित प्रकरणार्थं प्ररोचनाय अनुक्तदुरुक्त अप्रामाण्यकारण शङ्काव्युदासेन स्वगुरोः प्रमाण्योपवर्णनम् ।

With a view to create interest in the subject-matter of the work, the authoritativeness of the preceptor is brought out (in the following verse) by a repudiation of the possibility of there being any defect or omission or commission invalidating the system.

In the previous verse, Sureswaraacharyaa said "the real nature of aathmaa will be clearly propounded by me". Would it mean that teachings by the earlier Aachaaryas were not clear? Sureswaraacharyaa hastens to correct any such doubt or misunderstanding.

Any teaching can have two types of deficiencies, because of which, it can become non-reliable – apraamaanyam. One deficiency is 'anukthathvam' – omission or incompleteness. The other is 'dhurukthathvam' – expressing the teaching in a wrong or confusing manner, giving scope for misunderstanding. These two deficiencies are said to be apraamaanya kaaranaani – causes for the unreliability of the teaching.

Sureswaraacharyaa says that his guru's teaching does not have the two deficiencies.

- विवक्षित प्रकरणार्थं प्ररोचनाय - To generate interest in the content of the prakaranam to be taught, 'vivikshitha' - 'to be taught' ; 'prarochanaaya' – 'to generate interest' / 'to inspire'.
- स्वगुरोः प्रामाण्य उपवर्णनम्: - the validity of my guru is established (in the verse).

If his guru's teaching is deficient, Sureswaraachaaryaa's teaching will also be deficient. Validity of the disciple's teaching is based on the validity of the guru's teaching. If, therefore, the glory and praamaanyam of the guru is established, the disciple's praamaanyam is established, since it is derived from the guru. And, only if Sureswaraachaaryaa's validity is established, his treatise can have validity.

- अनुक्त दुरुक्त अप्रामाण्य कारण शङ्का उदासेन - by elimination of any doubt of there being any deficiency of anuktham (omission) or dhuruktham (wrong teaching).
'apraamaanyam' - 'non-validity'; 'kaarana' - cause; 'sankhad' - doubt; 'udaasena' - 'by eliminating'.

Chapter I: Verse 5:

गुरुक्तो वेदराद्धान्तस्तत्र नो वच्म्यशक्तिनः ।

On the philosophy of the Veda, presented by my preceptor, I say nothing because of my incompetence. What can a glowworm do towards illumining what has already been flooded by the light of a thousand-rayed Sun?

In this verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa glorifies Adi Sankara, by comparing him to the summer sun in the mid-day and comparing himself to a glowworm. He says: "My guru is like the powerful midday sun, whose bright light is already illuminating everything. In comparison, I am like a glowworm. I have no illusions that I can throw better light than my guru, on Vedhaanthee."

- वेदराद्धान्तः- The final conclusion of Veda (which is 'brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa; jeevo brahma eva na apara:')
- गुरु उक्तः has been taught by my guru (in his baashyam-s for Brahma soothraa, Upanishads and Bhagavadh Githa and in his prakaranam-s).
- तत्र - With regard to that
- नो वच्मि - I have nothing to say,
- अशक्तिनः- since I have no resources for that.
- सहस्रकिरणव्याप्ते (विषये)- (In the matter) illumined by the Sun,
- खद्योतः किं प्रकाशयेत् - what extra light can a glowworm throw?

"It cannot" is the implied message of the question.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 6:

गुरुणैव वेदार्थस्य परिसमापितत्वात्प्रकरणोक्तौ ख्यात्याध्यप्रामाण्यकारणशङ्केति चेत्युदासार्थमुपन्यासः ।

It may appear then, as the preceptor himself has completed the exposition of the import of the Veda-s , the work on hand proceeds from invalidating motives like love of fame. Such a supposition is ruled out in what follows:

Since Sureswaraachaaryaa himself had admitted that 'throwing further light' is not possible, he is concerned that people may suspect that he may have some other worldly motives, in writing this treatise.

'Kyaathi:' (name and fame), 'laabha:' (material gain) and 'pooja' (reverence from others) are the three common worldly motives or aspirations. If an exponent of Vedhaanthaa has such material motives, it will follow that he has no poornathvam and so cannot be a jnaani. In such a case, his Vedhaanthic teachings or treatises will not be worth studying, since they will have no praamaanyam.

In the previous verse, 'anukthathvam' and 'dhurukthathvam' were mentioned as apraamaanya kaaranaani - causes for non-validity. In this verse, desires for kyaathi:, laabha: and pooja are considered apraamaanya kaaranaani.

7. Chapter I, Verses 6 to 8 (08-04-2006)

In the first few verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa first offered Isvara Namskaaraa and Guru Namskaaraa, in the form of Mangalaacharanam, for removal of obstacles. Then he talked about the glory of his Guru, expressing his gurubhakthi. He pointed out that his guru's teaching is complete in itself and free of all deficiencies – anukthathva dhoshaa (deficiency of incompleteness) or dhurukthathva dhoshaa (deficiency of wrong teaching) etc. It would, therefore, appear that there was no reason at all for him to write this Naishkarmya Siddhi treatise.

The Aachaaryaa continue, in the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 6: "Then, what is the motive for my writing? People may attribute wrong motives to my venture – possibly three wrong motives (1) kyaathi – name and fame (2) laabha: - material return and (3) pujaa – honour / award / reward. But, if I have a desire for fame etc., it would follow that I have no poornathvam. That means Vedhaantha has not given me poornathvam. How can a work, authored by an apoorna:, give poornathvam to others? Therefore, if I have such a motive, I will become apramaanam. "Kyaathyaadhi icchaa granthasya apraamaanya kaaranam bhavathi" – "the desire for fame etc., would become the reason for the non-validity of my writing". If any of my readers has a doubt that I am after fame or material gain or honour, I would like to clear such a doubt, so that my readers will be assured of the validity of my treatise".

- गुरुणा एव वेदार्थस्य परिसमापितत्वात् - "As his guru has himself completely dealt with the import of the Vedas.
Vedhaartha: - import of the Vedas; parisamaapthithvam - complete exposition.
- प्रकरण उक्तौ - the writing of this prakaranam is done by Sureswaraachaaryaa,
- क्यात्यादि अप्रामाण्य कारण - because of desire for fame etc., which desire will be the cause of the non-validity of the teaching"
- इति आशंका चेत् - If such a doubt arises, Aasankaa – doubt / supposition.
- तद् उदासार्थं आह - to rule out such a doubt, I say the following:

Chapter I: Verse 6

न ख्यातिलाभपूजार्थं ग्रन्थोऽस्माभिरुदीर्यते ।

स्वबोधपरिशुद्ध्यर्थं ब्रह्मविन्निकषाशमसु ॥ ६ ॥

This work is not composed by me for the sake of fame, gain and reverential consideration ; it is for the purpose of purifying my own understanding by the judgment of those who know Brahman.

- ग्रन्थः - This book
- उदीर्यते - is written
- अस्माभिः - by me
- न ख्याति लाभ पूजार्थ - not for the sake of fame, material gain or honour.

The Aachaaryaa had already mentioned one reason for his writing this treatise, in verse 3, as his guru's commandment – 'guruanusiksha' | Now, after clearing a possible doubt about his being after fame or gain or honour, he gives his other intention in authoring the treatise.

- स्वबोध परिशुद्ध्यर्थ- (I venture into this treatise) to purify my own understanding.
- to clear my understanding of all misconceptions,
- ब्रह्मवित् निकष अश्मासु - on the touchstone of those who know Brahman.

The Aachaaryaa reasons: "How do I know that my understanding is clear? If I do not express myself, other persons (including mahaathmaa-s) will not be able to know whether I have proper 'understanding'. But, if I write my treatise, others will know my level of learning and by their responses and reactions will indicate to me, whether I have proper 'understanding' or not. I am, therefore, writing this book to test me knowledge using the wise people as 'touchstone'".

A 'touchstone' is used to test the purity of gold; the Brahmavith-s are compared to the touchstone by the Aachaaryaa.

Mahakavi Kalidasa also, in the introduction to one of his works, says: "I will not be satisfied by my knowledge of Sanskrit, until scholars appreciate my work; because, even if one learns under the best of teachers, self-confidence will not come, without appreciation by other scholars".

The implied statement of Sureswaraachaaryaa "I am not trying to improve others; I am writing this book, only to improve myself" reveals his humility.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 7 :

अनर्थ अनर्थहेतु पुरुषार्थ तद् हेतु प्रकरणार्थ संग्रहजापनाय उपन्यास :।

What follows aims at stating the burden of the work, concerning evil, the cause of evil, the goal of human life and the means to attain it.

In this verse and the next, Sureswaraachaaryaa presents the subject matter of the treatise. He mentions four topics in this sambhandha gadhyam.

- उपन्यासः - The following verse is presented
- प्रकरणार्थ संग्रह जापनाय - for revealing the essence of this prakaranam, (which are)
- अनर्थ - the human problem of samsaaraa. Problems may vary from person to person and from time to time. Vedhaantha considers all the different problems as only symptoms of the main human problem, samsaaraa.
- अनर्थहेतु - the cause of that human problem,
- पुरुषार्थ - the prime goal of human being (meaning mokshaa)
- तद् हेतु - and the means of attaining that goal. "anartha anarthahethu purushaartha thathhethu prakaranasangraha jnaanpanaayaa" is a compound word.

Chapter I: Verse 7:

ऐकात्म्याप्रतिपत्तिर्या स्वात्मानुभवसंश्रया ।

साऽविध्या संसृतेर्बीजं तन्नाशो मुक्तिरात्मनः॥ ७॥

Nescience, which consists of non-apprehensions of the unity of the Self and which is a matter of our direct experience, is the ultimate seed of samsaaraa. Annihilation of it, is the emancipation of the Self.

Of the four topics indicated in the sambhandha gadhyam, three are mentioned in this verse.

- या ऐकात्म्य अप्रतिपत्तिः- Which ignorance of the poorna aathmathvam (the completeness of one's Self)
'eka aathmaa' means 'poorna aathmaa/'Self, free of desires'.
- स्वात्म अनुभव संश्रया - located in one's saakshi chaithanyam
'samsrayaa' means 'located' ; 'svaathma anubhava' means 'one's saakshi chaithanyam'.
The witness of existence of one's ignorance is one's saakshi chaithanyam. All mental problems are revealed by saakshi chaithanyam, while all external conditions are revealed by chidhaabhaasaa. So, the Aachaaryaa describes 'ignorance of poorna aathmathvam' as 'located' in saakshi chaithanyam.
- सा अविध्या समसृतेः बीजं - that ignorance is the cause of samsruthi: /

'Samsruthi:' means 'constant movement from one place to another or from one condition to another'. The 'movement' is because of one's dissatisfaction with one's existing state of affairs. There is a constant endeavor on the part of human beings to improve their condition at the physical (baudhika), mental (aathmika) and surrounding (daivika) levels. This 'constant struggle caused by dissatisfaction of one's present position' is samsaaraa, referred to, by the Aachaaryaa, as 'anartham', in the sambhandha gadhyam to this verse.

What causes this samsruthi: or samsaaraa or anartham? The above statement of the Aachaaryaa answers: "Avidhyaa is the cause of samsruthi."

What is Avidhyaa? The Aachaaryaa had explained "Avidhyaa is 'ignorance' of 'poornathvam' of oneself".

'Bheejam' literally means 'seed' and is to be interpreted as 'cause' here.

With this, the Aachaaryaa has covered two topics, viz., (i) samsruthi is samsaaraa and (2) the 'self-ignorance', revealed by saakshi, is the cause of that samsaaraa.

The 3rd topic, mokshaa or mukthi:, follows in the same verse.

- आत्मनःतन्नासःमुक्तिः - One's liberation results from the destruction of samsaaraa

In other words, 'freedom from constant struggle to be different' is mokshaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 8 :

पुरुषार्थ हेतोःअवशिष्टत्वात् तदभिव्याहारः ॥

Of the four factors, the means of the end of life remains to be specified and hence the following:

Sureswaraachaaryaa himself says: "Of the four topics, three have been mentioned (in verse 7). The 4th, 'means to mokshaa' remains and is covered in the following verse".

- पुरुषार्थ हेतोः- The 'means of mokshaa',
- अवशिष्टत्वात् - having been left out,
- तद् अभिव्याहारः - is to be specified now.

'abhivyaaharanam' means 'uttering/' 'speaking'. Bhoo:, Bhuva:, and Suva:, are called vyahurthi manthraas, since they were uttered by Brahmaji.

Chapter I: Verse 8 –

वेदावसान वाक्योत्थ सम्यग्ज्ञान अशुशुक्षणि : ।

The perfect knowledge that arises from the words of the closing portion of the Veda-s, is the fire that burns away the ignorance concerning the Self and not any action, because action is not opposed to ignorance.

In this verse, the Aachaaryaa says that 'moksha kaaranam is samyak jnaanam' - 'means to liberation is right knowledge'.

The use of the adjective 'right' is significant. The word jnaanam is used in Sanskrit, both for wrong and right cognitions. Misconception also can be referred to, as jnaanam, as in the case of the popular rajjusarpaa example, where the misconception as snake is termed sarpajnaanam.

Extending this (not relevant to the verse, but an interesting fact) subject, even 'wrong' knowledge can be of two types:

- (1) 'inadvertent' wrong perception and
- (2) 'deliberate' wrong perception.

The rope-snake is an example of inadvertent wrong perception. What is 'deliberate' wrong perception? Every upaasanaa is an example. In the sraadhaa ceremony, a priest is invited and the yajamaanaa 'invokes' his forefather on him 'deliberately', fully conscious that the forefather is deceased and the priest is not his forefather. In Devathaa aaradhanaa-s, the Ishta Devathaa is invoked on a prathimaa or a prathikaa – Vishnu on a saaligraamaa and Siva on a lingaa, being examples of the use of prathikaa-s. This 'deliberate' perception of an Ishta Devathaa on a prathimaa or prathikaa, is also jnaanam - but, not samyak jnaanam. Adi Sankaraachaaryaa, therefore, mentions, in one of his works "Pujaa, Upasanaa etc. cannot give mokshaa, since they are not based on samyak jnaanam. The conviction "aham brahma asmi" is samyak jnaanam and will, therefore, give mokshaa".

Reverting to the text,

- सम्यग् ज्ञान अशुशुक्षणि : - The fire of right knowledge
- 'अशुशुक्षणि is a rare word used for 'fire'.
- वेद अवसान वाक्य उत्थ - arising from the words of the closing portions of the Veda-s.
'avasaana' – final portions; 'vaakya – statement; 'uttha' - born out of / arising from.
- आत्मनमोहं दन्दहीति: - totally destroys self-ignorance.

'Moham', in this context means 'avidhya'. One's own knowledge only can destroy one's own ignorance – hence the qualification 'aathmana:' |

Arising from this, another interesting topic (though again not relevant to the text). In advanced Vedhaanthic granthaa-s, a question is raised and discussed : "You say that my knowledge destroys my ignorance and your knowledge destroys your ignorance. Then, tell me, is 'ignorance' one or many?". "Avidhya ekathva vaadha: avidhya nanaathva vaadha:" is an interesting debate in advanced Vedhaanthic scriptures.

- कर्म न (मोहम् दन्दहीति) - 'Karma' cannot destroy self-ignorance,
- अप्रतिकूलत : - since it is not opposed (to ignorance).

How does one acquire samyak jnaanam? Upanishad Vaakyaani – Vedhaantha sabda pramaanam – is the only source. This is made very clear by Sureswaraacharya, in this verse.

But, how to acquire the 'knowledge' from Vedhaantha? The only way is 'analysis'/ 'vicharaad', of the thadh padhaartham, thvam padhaartham and asipadhaartham, in the form of sravanam, mananam and nidhidhyaasanam. "A systematic, consistent study of the Vedhaanthic scriptures for a length of time, under the guidance of a live, competent preceptor" is the only way to acquire "self-knowledge".

9. Chapter I, Verses 9 to 12 (15-04-2006)

In the first six verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa presents a general introduction, offers mangalaacharanam and also indicates the purpose of writing his book, viz., "refining his own understanding". He does not claim that he is educating others. He says: "My guru, Sri Adi Sankaraachaaryaa, has already done this. My purpose is to refine my own understanding, on the touchstone of wise people".

In verses 7 and 8, the Aachaaryaa is giving in a nutshell, the topics he is planning to deal with in Naishkarmya Siddhi - the vishaya saara: |

He says: "I shall cover four topics, (1) samsaaraa – bondage (2) samsaara hethu – cause for bondage (3) moksha:- liberation and (4) moksha hethu – cause for liberation.

The first three topics have been defined in verse 7. Samsaaraa is nothing but travel between lokaa-s or from one body to another, in search of poornathvam. Samsaara hethu or samsaara kaaranam is ajnaanam, viz., ignorance of the fact that poornathvam cannot be and need not be attained, but, is only a matter to be claimed, because, poornathvam happens to be one's own nature. "Mokshaa is freedom from struggle for poornathvam" is the definition for mokshaa.

Moksha kaaranam - "means for liberation" is being covered in verse 8. Since poornathvam is one's own nature, but, one had disowned poornathvam because of one's self-ignorance, the solution is, naturally, "owning the poornathvam through self-knowledge"; in other words, aathma jnaanam alone is moksha kaaranam. Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the word samyak jnaanam – "right or perfect knowledge".

This is what the Aachaaryaa stresses upon by his statement: "samyak jnaana asusukshani: aathmana: moham dhandhaheethi na karma" – "The fire of perfect knowledge burns away ignorance of the Self; action does not".

In the saasthraa-s, 'ignorance' is often compared to darkness and 'knowledge' to fire. Verse 11 of Kaivalya Upanishad runs:

आत्मानमरणिं कृत्वा प्रणवं चोत्तरारणिम् ।

ज्ञाननिर्मथनाभ्यासात्पापं दहति पण्डितः ॥ ११ ॥

ātmānamaraṇim kṛtvā praṇavam cōttarāraṇim |

jñānanirmathanābhyāsātpāpam dahati paṇḍitaḥ || 11||

“Using the mind as the lower arani and Vedic teachings as the upper arani, and by the practice of churning, which is in the form of enquiry, the wise man burns down bondage”. In the Bhagavadh Githa also (verse 37 – Chap. IV), Lord Krishna states:

यथैधांसि समिद्धोऽग्निर्भस्मसात्कुरुतेऽर्जुन |
 ज्ञानाग्निः सर्वकर्माणि भस्मसात्कुरुते तथा ||४ -३७||
 yathaidhāṁsi samiddhō:'gnirbhasmasātkurutē:'rjuna |
 jñānāgniḥ sarvakarmāṇi bhasmasātkurutē tathā ||4- 37||

– “Oh Arjuna! The fire of knowledge reduces all karmaa-s to ashes, just as a well-kindled fire reduces the fuel to ashes”.

The comparison of jnaanam to fire, is based on two angles or perspectives:

(1) Fire is capable of illumining/lighting up things hidden by darkness. ‘Knowledge’ illumines aathmathathvam, hidden by ignorance, similar to fire illumining an object hidden by darkness. This is a constructive quality of fire.

(2) Fire is also capable of destroying / burning away. ‘Knowledge’ destroys samsaaraa, adhyaasaa, ahamkaaraa, karmaa etc.

The verse under discussion – verse 8 – compares “knowledge” to fire, from the angle of the second perspective, “destroying”. It destroys ignorance and samsaaraa totally – sarva naasanam karothi. The Aachaaryaa, therefore, uses the pre-fix dhan to dhaheethi. Dhan indicates that the destruction is total - athisyena (dahathi).

The use of this emphasis – dhan – is significant. Praayaschittha karmaa-s also destroy paapam. “Knowledge” is also paapa naasa kaaranam. But, the difference is that praayaschittha karmaa-s can destroy paapam only temporarily, while “knowledge” causes the destruction so decisively , that samsaaraa, karma etc. will never come back again.

But, how does one generate jnaana agni: - i.e. “kindle” this fire of “knowledge”? The adjective to samyak jnaanam, “Veda avasaana vaakya uttha”- “arising from the words of the closing portions of Vedas”, used by the Aachaaryaa, gives the answer: “Diligent vedhaantha vichaaraa will culminate in jnaanam”.

To compare with the Kaivalya Upanishad statement again: The lower arani is the mind, the upper arani is the Vedic teachings, the churning process is the sravana, manana, nidhidhyaasanaani and the spark of fire is jnaanam. But, the lower arani – the mind - should be stable for the fire of knowledge to be kindled.

The word 'asusukshani', used for 'fire' is also significant. The root 'sush' means 'to dry'. The use of the word 'soshanam' in the Guru Sthothram, as "soshanam bhava sindho: cha" may be recollected. "That which totally dries up everything" is the literal meaning of 'asusukshani.' | Jnaanam is 'Samsaara soshaka agni:' – 'the fire that dries up or destroys samsaara.'

Having completed the brief mention of the four topics - samsaara, samsaara hethu, mokshaa and moksha hethu - the Aachaaryaa introduces another topic in verse 8.

In Vedhaanthic discussions, for any text to be termed Siddhi, the text should not only reveal the Vedhaanthic teachings, but, should also negate counterviews. The author of the text should challenge other philosophies, invite their proponents for debate and refute their theories. This is termed "poorva paksha kandanam" – "refutation of differing views" and is a necessary part of a siddhi granthaa. This is the fifth topic of this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, and is introduced in this verse.

Among the numerous counterviews, Sureswaraachaaryaa takes the karmavaadhi / poorvameemaamsakaa as the main challenger. The karmavaadhi argues "Only karmaa is required for attainment of mokshaa. There is nothing like jnaanam". In other words "karmanaa moksha:" is the theory of the poorvameemaamsakaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa intends to challenge this philosophy and indicates his intention in this verse, by tersely stating "karmaa aathmana: moham na dhandahaethi aprathikoolatha:" – "Karmaa does not destroy ignorance, since it is not inimical to ignorance".

An example to jnaanam, is 'light', which, being inimical to darkness can alone eliminate darkness; nothing else can. Karmaa and ignorance can co-exist; every human being is 'proof' of this – steeped in action and successfully self-ignorant also.

Any amount of karmaa cannot destroy ajnaanam. But, karmaa is not useless. It is useful and, in fact, necessary in many respects; but, it cannot destroy self-ignorance and therefore, cannot give mokshaa. Karmanaa moksha: naiva bhavathi | The popular 4-path theory, that, there are four routes to mokshaa, viz., karmaa, bhakthi, yoga (raja / kundalini yoga) and jnaana, is a misconceived theory. Only jnaana can give mokshaa. Jnaana maathrena moksha: / Sureswaraachaaryaa intends to establish this view with the support of sruthi and yukthi.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 9 and 10:

प्रतिजातार्थसंशुद्ध्यर्थं पूर्वपक्षोक्तिः । तत्र ज्ञानमप्युपगम्य तावदुपन्यासः ।

Now with a view to establish firmly the position thus stated, prima facie views are brought forward. Among them, the one that admits knowledge is stated in what follows:

In the previous two verses, Sureswaraacharya had introduced five topics, the 5th topic being poorva paksha kandanam, negation of counterviews. The Aachaaryaa takes up this topic first; the entire first chapter focuses upon the condemnation of the poorvapakshaa. The aim is to first avoid obstruction in the travel to jnaanaa and, therefore, to establish 'karmana na moksha.'. The well-known manthraa, found both in the Kaivalya Upanishad and Mahaanaarayana Upanishad runs:

न कर्मणा न प्रजया धनेन त्यागेनैके अमृतत्वमानशुः ।

na karmaṇā na prajāyā dhanēna tyāgēnaikē amṛtatvamānaśuḥ |

"It is through renunciation, that a few seekers have attained immortality, not through ritual, nor through progeny, nor through wealth". Sureswaraacharya uses about 100 verses to establish this theory.

With the purpose to negate the poorva meemaamsakaa theory, he first introduces it.

- प्रतिज्ञातार्थसंशुद्ध्यर्थ - For cleansing / de-contaminating our view of "jnaanena eva moksha." (of the contaminating poorva pakshaa views)
- पूर्व पक्ष उक्तिः - the presentation of poorva pakshaa is done.

Even among the poorva meemaamsakaas, there are two views:

- (1) One view accepts aathma jnaanam; but, considers it useless, since, according to this view, karmaa itself can give mokshaa.
- (2) According to the second view, there is nothing as aathma jnaanam in the entire Veda saasthraas.

The first view, where aathma jnaanam is accepted, is taken up first:

- तत्र - Among the poorva meemaamsaa theories,
- ज्ञानं अभ्युगम्य तावत् - the view accepting jnaanam as a teaching of Vedhaanthaa (but, holding that karmaa alone is sufficient for mokshaa)
- उपन्यासः - is stated (in what follows).

Different poorva meemaamsaka matham-s are presented from verse 9 to verse 22. Among them, from verse 9 to 13, what is known as eka desee matham, is first presented.

Chapter I: Verse 9 –

मुक्ते :क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वाज्ज्ञानं तत्र करोति किम् ।

कथं चेच्छृणु तत्सर्वं प्रणिधाय मनो यथा ॥ ९ ॥

As release is effected by actions, what is there for knowledge to accomplish? How is that? Listen with an attentive mind.

It should be carefully noted, that, this address is by the poorva meemaamsakaa.

- मुक्तिसिद्धत्वात्: - Since attainment of mokshaa is achieved
- क्रियाभिः - by actions (vaidhika karmaa-s),
- तत्र - with regard to mokshaa,
- ज्ञानं किम् करोति - what can aathma jnaanam do?
- कथं चेत् - If you question how karmaa, by itself, gives liberation,
- तत्सर्वं शृणु - listen to all the explanations
- मनप्रणिधायः - with full mental concentration,
- यथा - exactly as they are made / without distortions.

Chapter I: Verse 10:

अकुर्वतः क्रियाः काम्या निषिद्धास्त्यजतस्तथा ।

नित्यनैमित्तिकं कर्म विधिवच्चानुतिष्ठितः ॥ १० ॥

One who abstains from actions proceeding from desires for earthly or heavenly happiness, discards actions prohibited in the scriptures and performs properly the actions unconditionally enjoined for daily and occasional observance. (continued in the next verse)

The ekadesi poorva meemaamsakaa argues: "Karmaa is the cause of samsaaraa. Travel from sareeraa to sareeraa is fuelled by paapa, punya karmaani. If, at the time of death, the seeker brings his karmaa account to 'zero', he can accomplish mokshaa. Karma abhaavaath results samsaara abhaava: and therefore, moksha bhaava: / The Vedhaanthin also says this. But, we, poorva meemaamsakaa-s, are presenting a different method, viz., "karmaa management", by adherence to which, at the time of death, the karmaa account will be 'zero' ". He says:

- काम्याः क्रियाः अकुर्वतः - For one who gives up all desire-based vaidhika karmaani (i.e. kaamyaa karmaani),

- तथा - similarly
- निषिद्धा :क्रिया :त्यजतः - abstains from all prohibited actions,
- नित्यनैमित्तिकं कर्म विधिवत् च अनुतिष्ठतः - and, who performs, as prescribed, all the regular compulsory and the occasional compulsory rituals, 'nithya' does not mean only 'daily', but, includes those prescribed to be done periodically – i.e. daily, monthly, yearly etc., and therefore, translated as 'regular'; 'naimitthikam' means 'occasional', for, example, 'grahana tharpanam'. 'vidhivath' means 'as prescribed'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 11:

किं अतः भवति ।

What consequences result from these?

The poorva meemaamsakaa himself raises the question "what is the consequence of these three exercises, viz., (1) giving up kaamyaa karmaani (2) abstention from nishiddha karmaani and (3) unfailing pursuit of nithya naimitthika karmaani?"

Chapter I: Verse 11

काम्यकर्मफलं तस्माद्देवादीमं न ढौकते ।

निषिद्धस्य निरस्तत्वान्नारकीं नैत्यधोजनिम् ॥ ११ ॥

...(continued from previous verse) does not attain states like heavenly existence, which are the fruits of the actions from desires and does not descend to low births or hell, which are the results of prohibited actions, as he has discarded them.

Kaamyaa karmaa-s produce punyam, which takes the performer to higher lokaa-s. So, if one does not perform kaamyaa karmaani, punyam will not accrue – the cause of higher lokaa-s is avoided. Urdhva loka gamana kaarana punya naasa: bhavathy

- तस्मात् - because of giving up of kaamyaa karmaani,
- काम्य कर्म फलं - the result of the kaamyaa karmaani, viz., punyam
- देवादि - (and) higher lokaa-s like Devalokaa etc.,
- न ढौकते - does not reach
- इमं - this person (the non-performer of kaamyaa karmaani).
- न एति - (The abstainer from prohibited actions) does not attain
- नारकीं - lokaa-s like naraka lokaa
- अधोजनिम् - (and) inferior births

- निषिद्धस्य निरस्तत्वात् - because of abstention from prohibited actions.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 12:

देहारम्भकयोश्च धर्माधर्मयोर्ज्ञानिना सह कर्मिणः समानौ चोध्यपरिहारौ ।

As for good and bad actions responsible for present embodiment the objection as well as the answer are common to both advocates of knowledge and action.

The poorva meemaamsaa himself foresees another question. "We can avoid punyam and paapam by abstaining from kaamyas and nishiddha karmaani respectively. But, what about the punya-paapam, already accrued and which have caused this birth – praarabdhaa?". The poorva meemaamsaka answers: "Our solution to the praarabdha karma naasanam is the same as that of the Vedhaanthin".

- धर्म अधर्मयोः - As for the good and bad actions
- देह आरम्भकयोः - which are responsible for the birth of this body
- चोध्यपरिहारौ समानौ - the objection as well as the answer are the same
- ज्ञानिना सह कर्मिणः - for both the Vedhaanthin and poorvameemaamsaka.

9. Chapter I, Verses 12 and 13 (03-06-2006)

Chapter I: Verse 12 –

वर्तमानमिदं याभ्यां शरीरं सुखदुःखदम्।

Those merits and demerits that have caused the present body, which give pleasure and pains to individual, are to be liquidated through the experience of their effects.

In the first six verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa introduced his text book and thereafter in verses 7 and 8, he gave Vedhaantha Saara: - pointing out, that,

- (1) Ajnaanam is the cause of samsaaraa
- (2) Ajnaananivritthi is the solution for mokshaa
- (3) Jnaanam can be attained only through Vedhaantha vichaaraa and
- (4) Jnaanam gives the moksha purushaartha.

A text discussing any one of these four topics will be called a Vedhaantha grantha: | If, apart from these topics, the text includes negation of any other philosophy, the text will be called a Vedhaantha Siddhi Grantha: |

Since Sureswaraachaaryaa intends this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, to be a Siddhi grantha., he includes, in the treatise, his arguments against one group of poorva pakshin-s, the poorva meemaamsakaa-s. In verse 8, he indicates his intention to refute poorva meemaamsaa, asserting “karmaa cannot give mokshaa”, by his explicit statement “karmaa aathmana: moham na dahath”| But, it is not as if karmaa does not give anything. It can give chittha suddhi, but, not mokshaa. This is where the Vedhaanthin differs from the poorva meemaamsakaa.

Poorva meemaamsaka poorva paksha niraasa: (refutation of poorva meemaamsaa philosophy) is the 5th topic of the treatise, apart from the four topics of Vedhaantha Saara: The Aachaaryaa takes up this topic of ‘rejecting poorva meemaamsaa’ first, in Chapter I. Vedhaanthic subject matter is covered in later chapters. In the Brahma Sootra Bhaashyaa also, refutation of poorva paksha philosophies, is done first, by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, followed later, by establishment of Vedhaantha. The same methodology is adopted by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in this text.

Sureswaraachaaryaa starts with first presenting the philosophy of poorva meemaamsaa / the tenets of karmavaadhin-s, in verses 9 to 22.

There are three sub-divisions even among the karmavaadhin-s.

Verses 9 to 13 cover the first group, who claim "Karmaa, by itself, gives mokshaa. The subject of Jnaanam, though discussed in the saasthraa-s, is not at all required. It can be ignored". This group can be called jnaana abhyupethya karma vaadhina:

Verses 14 to 19 cover the second group of poorvameemaamsakaa-s, who also hold "karma alone gives mokshaa", but, also maintain "there is no aathma jnaanam taught in the Veda-s, independent of karmaa". This group is referred to, as jnaana anabhyupedhya karma vaadhina:

Verses 20 to 22 cover the third group called samucchaya karma vaadhina:, who accept aathmajnaanam, but contend "jnaanam should be combined with karmaa to attain mokshaa".

After elaborating the tenets of these groups, Sureswaraachaaryaa condemns them, one by one.

The first group of karmavaadhin-s claims that by ingeniously editing the kaarmic way of life, one's karma balance can be brought to "nil", at the time of death. Since the cause of punar janmaa (punyam and paapam) is eliminated, re-birth is avoided. "Karma abhaavaath punar janma abhaava: and therefore, moksha:" is their stand.

The fallacy in this view, is, that, this group takes into consideration only two types of karmaa, (1) aagaami, which are earned during the course of the present janmaa and (2) praarabhdhaa, which, according to the Vedhaanthin is the cause for this birth, but, which is interpreted by the first group of karmavaadhin-s as "all past karmaa-s".

The Vedhaanthin-s believe in three types of karmaa-s:

- (1) aagaami- which are earned during the course of the present janmaa
- (2) praarabhdha - that part of the past karmaa, which had fructified to cause this janmaa and is exhausted during this janmaa and
- (3) sanchitha – that portion of the past karmaa, which is yet to fructify, but, has to be exhausted in further janmaa-s.

The first group of karmavaadhin-s do not talk of sanchitha karma at all. The non-consideration of the sanchitha karmaa is a major mistake committed by this group of karma vaadhin-s, who say "by avoiding aagaami karmaa and exhausting praarabhdha karmaa in this birth, the seeker can attain mokshaa". Adi Sankara discusses this failure, in detail, in his bhaashyam to the Bhagavadh Githa.

According to this group of karmavaadhin-s, the aagaami karmaa is avoided, by three exercises:

- (1) avoidance of all kaamyaa karmaa-s that produce punya palan, expressed in Sanskrit as "kaamyaa karma thyaagena aagaami punya abhaava.";
- (2) avoidance of all nishiddha karmaa-s that cause paapa palan, expressed in Sanskrit as "nishiddha karma thyaagena aagaami paapa abhaava.";
- (3) diligent performance of nithya, naimittika karmaa-s, because of which, prathyavaaya paapam is avoided, (Saasthraa-s warn that non-performance of the prescribed nithya, naimittika karmaani, produce a type of paapam, named by the saasthraa-s, as prathyavaaya paapam) in Sanskrit "Nithya naimittika karma anushtaanena prathyavaaya paapa abhaava.".

Thus, the three exercises, put together into action, avoid aagaami karma, according to the first group of karmavaadhin-s.

Having discussed kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaani in verses 9 to 11, the karmavaadhin digresses marginally and talks of praarabhdhaa, in verse 12. As indicated, according to the first group of karmavaadhin-s, praarabhdhaa includes sanchithaa also. How to avoid praarabhdhaa? The poorvameemaamsakaa answers: "With regard to praarabhdhaa (which, for him, includes sanchithaa) what the Vedhaanthin says, is acceptable to us also". The Vedhaanthin says "praarabhdhaa (but, sanchithaa is not included by him) cannot be destroyed by jnaanam; it will be destroyed only by experiencing the karmapalan"|

- याभ्यां पुण्यपापाभ्यां - Because of which merits and demerits
- इदं वर्तमानं शरीरं - this present body (sthoola sareeram)
- सुखदुःखदम् - that gives pleasure and pain (adjective to sareeram)
- आरब्धं - is born
- तयोःक्षयः - their (of the merits and demerits) destruction
- भोगात् एव - (results) only by experience (of their effects).

An interesting question regarding the Vedhaanthin's theory about destruction of praarabhdha karmaa, is worth noting, in this context: According to the Vedhaanthin, the jnaani also has to exhaust praarabhdhaa, only by anubhavaa; he may have to experience dhu:khaa palan also. Then, how is he called jeevan muktha; since mukthi is "freedom from grief?" The answer : moksha sukham and praarabhdha dhu:kham can co-exist in a jeevan muktha; since he sees the moksha sukham as paaramaarthika sathyam and praarabhdha dhu:kham as only vyaavahaarika sathyam or mithyaa and also considers the praarabhdha dhu:kham insignificant, in comparison to moksha aanandhaa. This is similar to the sun (comparable to moksha aanandhaa) overpowering the stars (comparable to praarabhdha dhu:kham) and making them invisible.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 13:

काम्यप्रतिषिद्धकर्मपलत्वात्संसारस्य तन्निरासेने एव अशेषानर्थनिरासस्य सिद्धत्वात् किं नित्यानुष्ठानेन इति चेत्तन्न । तदकारणादप्यनर्थप्रसक्तेः ।

If it be asked as to why the obligatory actions should be performed, as the transmigratory existence is due to the performance of actions through desire and prohibited actions and all evil ceases through the renunciation of those two types of action, we reply that evil can accrue from their (i.e. obligatory actions) non-performance also.

As indicated already, the poorvapakshaa tenets are being elaborated by Sureswaraachaaryaa here. Verse 11 talked of the effects of kaamyaa karma thyaagha: and nishiddha karma niraasa:. The third requirement for avoidance of aagaami karmaa, namely, nithya naimitthika karma anushtaanam, is being taken up.

Even according to the poorva meemaamsakaa, performance of nithya naimitthika karmaa will not give any result, including mokshaa. Then why does one have to perform them? The answer, is, that, while performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani will not give any punyam, the non-performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani will produce prathyavaaya paapam.

On this aspect, kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaani are in contrast to nithya-naimitthika karmaani. Performance of kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaani gives results and non-performance does not give any.

- काम्य प्रतिषिद्ध कर्मपलत्वात् संसारस्य - "Since samsaaraa is the result of kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaa-s,
- तद् निरासेन एव - and merely by renouncing them (kaamyaa and nishiddhakarmaani)
- अशेष अनर्थ निरासस्य सिद्धत्वात् - avoidance of punyam and paapam (and, therefore, of samsaaraa) is achieved, asesha anartha – both punyam and paapam; niraasa: - avoidance; siddhi – achievement.
- किं नित्य अनुष्ठानेन - what is to be achieved by performance of nithya karmaani?"
- इति चेत् - if such a doubt is raised,

This is again a question raised by the poorvameemaamsakaa himself, with the intention to clarify his views. He himself replies:

- तद् न - it is not so / the doubt is not well founded,

- अनर्थ प्रसक्तेः - since paapam (prathyavaaya paapam) results
- तद् अकरणात् अपि - because of non-performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani.

Chapter I: Verse 13

नित्यानुष्ठानतश्चैनं प्रत्यवायो न संस्पृशेत् ।

अनादृत्यमात्मविज्ञानमतः कर्माणि संश्रयेत् ॥ १३ ॥

By the performance of obligatory actions, the retribution due to their non-performance is averted. Therefore ignoring comprehension of the Self, let one resort to actions.

It should be remembered that this verse is also part of the poorvameemaamsakaas's enunciation of his views, wherein, he emphasizes the importance of the third exercise, namely, nithya naimitthika karma anushtaanam.

- नित्य अनुष्ठानतचः - By performance of nithya, naimitthika karmaani
- एनं प्रत्यवाय न संस्पृशेत्ः - prathyavaaya paapam will not touch him (the performer).
- अतः - Therefore,
- आत्मविज्ञानम् अनादृत्य - ignoring aathma jnaanam
- कर्माणि संश्रयेत् - the nithya, naimitthika karmaani should be done.

With this verse, the presentation of the arguments of the first group of poorvameemaamsakaas-s, is complete.

10. Chapter I, Verses 14 and 15 (10-06-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa has decided to convert the 1st chapter into a poorvapaksha matha niraasa pradhaanaa chapter – dedicated to the negation of poorva pakshaa. Vedhaantha siddhanthaa will follow in the next three chapters.

There are very many poorvapakshin-s to Advaithaa philosophy, i.e. people with faith in philosophies other than Advaithaa. Among them, Sureswaraachaaryaa takes three groups, in this treatise:

- (1) karmavaadhin-s, who claim “Karmaa, by itself, gives mokshaa. The subject of Jnaanam, though discussed in the saasthraa-s, is not at all required. It can be ignored”. This group can be called jnaana abhyupethya karma vaadhina: /
- (2) a second group of karmavaadhin-s, who also hold “karma alone gives mokshaa”, but, also maintain “there is no aathma jnaanam taught in the Veda-s, independent of karmaa”. This group is referred to, as jnaana anabhyupedhya karma vaadhina: /
- (3) the third group called samucchaya karma vaadhina: or Vedhaantha eka desi-s, who accept aathmajnaanam, but contend “jnaanam alone cannot give liberation, it has to go only with karma; jnaanam should be combined with karmaa for attainment of mokshaa”.

The philosophies of the poorvapakshin-s are presented elaborately, from verse 9 to verse 22.

From verse 9 to verse 13, is presented the theory of the 1st group of poorvameemaamsakaa-s: “One can get liberation without jnaanam, which can be totally ignored. By managing and following karmaa-s appropriately, one can attain mokshaa. The ‘management of karmaa-s’, according to this first group of poorvameemaamsakaa-s, consists in (1) renunciation of kaamyaa karmaa-s, resulting in avoidance of aagaami punyam (2) abstinence from nishiddha karmaa-s, resulting in avoidance of aagaami paapam and (3) strict and diligent observance nithya, naimitthika karmaa-s, resulting in avoidance of prathyavaaya paapam. As for praarabhdhaa, it is exhausted in this janmaa, by experiencing the palan. Thus, avoiding aagaami and praarabhdhaa, one avoids punarjanmaa and, therefore, attains mokshaa.

Since this poorvameemaamsakaa does not recognize sanchitha karma and all past accumulated karmaa-s are praarabhdhaa for him, by leading a life as indicated above, the seeker gets rid of all karmaa-s at the time of death, resulting in liberation.

This group of poorvapakshin-s are termed jnaanam abhyupedhya vaadhina: | “Karmanaa eva moksha:; ignore jnaanam, though, we agree, that, jnaanam is mentioned in the saasthraa-s”, is their stand. This viewpoint is refuted by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in later portions, in the same chapter, between verses 23 to 53.

The philosophy of the 2nd type of poorvapakshin-s, is now presented in verses 14 to 19.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 14 :

अभ्युपेत्यैवमुच्यते । न तु यथावस्थितात्मवस्तुविषयं ज्ञानमस्ति । तत्प्रतिपादकप्रमाणाभावात् ।

This has been said admitting knowledge. But, in reality, there is no such thing as knowledge about the real nature of the Self. There is no authority teaching the knowledge of the Self.

The arguments in the previous verses, 9 to 13, were presented by people who have accepted jnaanam as a subject of scriptures. From this verse 14, the views of the 2nd type of karmavaadhin-s are presented. They hold “there is no subject as jnaanam in scriptures and therefore, kevala karmaa will do for mokshaa”.

- एवं अभ्युपेत्य उच्यते - This has been said admitting knowledge;
- तु - but,
- यथावस्थित - in reality,
- आत्म वस्तु विषयं ज्ञानं - the subject of knowledge about / on the Self
- न अस्ति - is not there at all,
- तद् प्रतिपादक प्रमाण अभावात् - since there is no pramaana vaakyam in the Vedaa-s on aathma jnaanam.

Chapter I: Verse 14 –

यावत्यश्वेह विध्यन्ते श्रुतयस्स्मृतिभिस्सह ।

विदढत्युरुयत्नेन कर्मातो भूरिसाधनम् ॥ १४ ॥

Whatever sruthi-s are there, along with the smruthi-s, all of them enjoin with great effort, ‘action’. Hence, it (action) is productive of much, including liberation.

- यावत्यविध्यन्तेः च श्रुतयः - Whatever statements the sruthi-s make / all the sruthi vaakyaa-s,
- स्मृतिभिसहः - along with the smruthi-s / and, all the smruthi vaakyaa-s also,
- इह - in this context (of arriving at moksha saadhanam)
- विदधति कर्मा - teach karmaa
- उरुयत्नेन - with lots of effort;

- अतः - therefore,
- कर्मा - vaidhika nithya karmaa alone
- भूरिसाधनम् - is the instrument for achieving mokshaa.
'Bhoori' means 'big one'; in this context, means 'mokshaa'.

The portions very often quoted by the karmavaadhin-s, in support of their view, are:

(1) Verse 2 of Isaavaasya Upanishad, which runs

कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतः समाः ।

एवं त्वयि नान्यथेतोऽस्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥ २ ॥

kurvannēvēha karmāṇi jijīviṣēcchataḥ samāḥ ।

ēvaṁ tvayi nānyathētō:'sti na karma lipyatē narē || 2||

- "Live a hundred years, in this world, performing all the vaidhika karmaa-s; this is the only way, by which, the results of the karmaa-s will not bind you".

(2) Verse 5 – Chapter XVIII, of the Bhagavadh Githa, which says

यज्ञदानतपःकर्म न त्याज्यं कार्यमेव तत् ।

यज्ञो दानं तपश्चैव पावनानि मनीषिणाम् ॥ १८ - ५ ॥

yajñādānatapaḥkarma na tyājyaṁ kāryamēva tat ।

yajñō dānaṁ tapaścaiva pāvanāni maṇiṣiṇām ||18- 5||

"activity in the form of yagnyaa, charity and austerity should not be given up. It has to be performed necessarily. Yagnyaa, charity and austerity are the purifiers of the discriminate".

On the other hand, the Brahma Soothraa-s point out that "Brahman is the main purport of all Vedhaanthic texts" - "Thath thu samanvayaath" (Soothraa 4 – Section 1 – Chapter 1) and that "knowledge of Brahman is not subordinate to sacrificial acts" (in soothraa-s 1 to 17 – Section 4 – Chapter III – Purushaartha adhikaaraa).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 15 :

स्यात्प्रमाणासंभवो भवदपराधादिति चेत्तन्न । यतः ।

It may be contended that the absence of evidence for knowledge is due to our fault. We deny the contention for the following reason.

The poorvameemaamsakaaa continues. He foresees a statement from the Vedhaanthin and pre-emptly the possible statement.

- प्रमाण असंभवः - " The 'absence of evidence' (for knowledge)
- स्यात् - happens to you,
- भवद् अपराधात् - because of your fault (of not studying scriptures properly)"
- इति चेत् - If this be your (the Vedhaanthir's) contention,
- तद् न - it is not so,
- यतः - because of the following reason.

Chapter I: Verse 15 :

यत्नतो वीक्षमाणोऽपि विधिं ज्ञानस्य न क्वचित् ।

श्रुतौ स्मृतौ वा पश्यामि विश्वासो नान्यतोऽस्ति न ॥ १५ ॥

Neither in sruthi nor in smruthi, do I see anywhere, injunction with reference to knowledge, in spite of looking for it a great deal. We have no faith in any other authority.

The Vedhaanthin can quote any number of Vedhaanthic statements, in support of his views on the importance of aathma jnaanam – (1) Aithreya (2) Thaithreya and (3) Maithreya Upanishads, being only a few of them. But, the poorvameemamsakaa is either really ignorant or is wantonly in denial, of the existence of such passages.

The poorvameemaamsakaa's argument is: "Even though aathma jnaanam is presented in the Vedaa-s, it is not the 'teaching' of the Vedaa-s. The Vedaa-s are primarily meant to give the followers the methods to achieve purushaartha-s and only those statements given by the Vedaa-s, which will be of prayojanam (utility) for achieving the purushaartha-s, can be called the 'teaching' of the Vedaa-s. Whenever 'knowledge-giving statements' are found, they should be treated only as 'statements of fact'. For example, the statement 'there is a City, by name Chennai' is a 'statement of a fact', giving you knowledge of the existence of Chennai. But the 'knowledge' alone cannot give you any benefit; it should be followed by 'action'.

Another example is the statement 'there is water available in this container'. This mere knowledge of 'availability' of water will not satiate your thirst. You have to follow up with the action of 'procuring and drinking' of the water. A siddha vasthu bodhaka vaakyam (a statement revealing the fact) and siddha vasthu jnaanam (the knowledge of the fact), by themselves, do not give any benefit at all. They have to be followed by appropriate actions. In the above example 'jala jnaanam' (knowledge of availability of water) is dushprayojanam

In effect the poorvameemaamsakaa contends "jnaanam is necessary for karmaa; but, by itself, it cannot help. As such, it is only a part of karmaa". The poorva meemaamsaa justifies his contention, by arguing further: "When you are told of the 'availability' of water, the indirect suggestion is 'go and drink it'. Likewise, the siddha bodhaka vaakyaa-s in the scriptures also, ultimately, reveal only karmaa, in an indirect manner. In the example, though the statement is 'there is water available', the thaathparyam / message is 'drink the water'. Aathma jnaana, similarly, is a mere tool, for delivering the ultimate instruction to the seeker to follow karmaa."

In other words, "jnaanaa is not the ultimate or final teaching of the Vedaa-s; it is suggested only as an intermediate step. Karmaa is the final teaching" is the stand of the poorva meemaamsakaa. And, in his support, he often quotes a Chaandoghya Upanishad statement "Karmaa, done with Vidhyaa, will give more benefit".

Reverting to the text,

- यत्नतअपि :वीक्षमाणः - Even though I analyze thoroughly,
- जानस्य विधिं न पश्यामि - I do not find jnaanaa as the final teaching. 'vidhi', in this context, means 'final teaching' or 'injunction'. According to the karmavaadin, a siddha bodhaka vaakyaa is not final ; only the karma bodhaka vaakyaa is final.
- क्वचित् - anywhere
- श्रुतौ स्मृतौ वा (वा)- either in the Vedaa-s or in the smruthi-s.
- न :- For us,
- अन्यतन अस्ति :विश्वासः - there is no faith in any other authority.

The poorvameemaamsakaa is also an aasthikaa, i.e. one who considers Vedaa-s as pramaanam, like the Vedhaanthin.

11. Chapter I, Verses 16 to 18 (17-06-2006)

From verse 9 to verse 22, Sureswaraachaaryaa is elaborately presenting a poorvapakshaa (a view counter to the Vedhaanthir's) which claims that jnaanam alone can never liberate. This particular poorvapakshaa itself can be divided into three groups.

Of these, the philosophy of the first group, the 'jnaana abhyupethya karma vaadhina:' was covered between verses 9 to 13. This group claims: "Even though teachings on jnaanaa are found in the scriptures, jnaanaa is not required for mokshaa. By managing vaidhika karmaa-s properly, aagaami karma palan can be totally avoided, while Praarabhdhaa can be totally exhausted by experiencing the praarabhdha karma palan. The resulting 'nil' karma balance will lead to attainment of liberation".

The viewpoints of the second group, jnaanam anabhuyupethya karma vaadhina:, is presented by the Aachaaryaa in verses 14 to 19. This group holds: "Jnaanam is never the true teaching of the saasthraa-s, since jnaanam is only 'understanding' of certain facts and the 'understanding' cannot be put to any use directly. It can be put to use only as karmaa, which alone can produce results. Jnaanam is only an angaa and karmaa is the angi."

Siddha bodhaka vaakyaaani are about jnaanam and karma bodhaka vaakyaaani are about karmaa. The second group argues that the siddha bodhaka vaakyaaani should be linked to karma bodhaka vaakyaaani. As in the example earlier cited, mere knowledge about availability of water will not quench thirst. Only the action, viz., 'drinking the water' will help quench thirst. The suggestion to drink water may be explicit or implied – nevertheless, only 'drinking' will help. "Likewise" the poorvameemaamsakaa argues "Vedic siddha bodhaka vaakyaaani are also not helpful, unless followed by karma bodhaka vaakyaaani. The ritual has to be performed. Siddha bodhaka vaakyaaani are apraamaanam and only karma bodhaka vaakyaaani are pramaanam and the final teaching of the Vedaa-s".

"Every knowledge is useful for enhancing the results of the corresponding action" is a Vedic statement, which, this group of poorvameemaamsakaa-s quote in support.

In essence, this group holds "Facts are revealed only for the sake of action" or, in other words, " 'knowledge' is meant only for 'practice'; by itself, it is of no use" and advises "therefore, perform action all the time, either physically (karmaa) or mentally (upasanaa)". Reverting to the text:

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 16 :

स्यात्प्रवृत्तिरन्तरेणापि विधिं लोकवदिति चेत्तन्न यत :।

It may be said that there can be undertakings without any injunctions to that effect, as in ordinary life. We deny that possibility for the following reason:

The karmavaadhin is arguing against another possible suggestion from the Vedhaanthin. This possible suggestion, as foreseen by the karmavaadhin is: "Even if the statement 'jnaana maathrena prayojanam asthi' is not specific in the scriptures, why should we not go by worldly experiences, viz., examples of cases where knowledge directly produces benefit, without any action ?

"For instance, in the well known rajju sarpaa example, the 'rope knowledge' removes the misconception of the snake and the consequent fear, proving 'jnaana maathrena prayojanam asthi'. Based on such loukikaa experiences, why should we not accept, that, jnaanam can give benefits? In the rajju sarpaa example, a siddha bodhaka vaakyam gave 'knowledge' of the rope and served the purpose of 'removal of fear' without any 'action' being performed. Why cannot aathma jnaanam itself, in a similar manner, give liberation?"

The poorvameemaamsakaa counters this argument by saying "a loukikaa example will be valid only for loukikaa matters and not for apourusheya vishayaa-s. For instance, a destination on earth, can be reached by the use of a vehicle - a chariot or a cart. But, can svargaa be reached using the same vehicle? With regard to attainment of svargaa, only Vedic injunctions can be pramaanam. Vedaa-s declare that jyothishyoma (a kind of yagnyaa) can lead to svargaa and this statement may be accepted. Like svargaa, mokshaa is also apourusheya and aloukikaa. The example of the loukika rajjusarpaa cannot be relevant with regard to attainment of aloukika mokshaa. A Vedic statement, if there is any, that aathma jnaanam is the path to mokshaa, will be acceptable to me. But, I do not find such a clear-cut statement anywhere in the Vedaas".

विधिं अन्तरेण अपि - "Even without Vedic injunctions,

- प्रवृत्तिः - liberation
- लोकवत् - as in worldly life (as in the rajju sarpaa example)
- स्यात् - can take place".
- इति चेत् - If such a claim is made,
- तद् न - it is not so,
- यतः - because of the following reason (given in the following verse).

Chapter I: Verse 16 –

अन्तरेण विधिं मोहाद्यः कुर्यात्साम्परायिकम् ।

न तत्स्यादुपकाराय भस्मनीव हुतं हविः ॥ १६ ॥

He who undertakes anything through delusion, independent of scriptural injunctions, for securing spiritual objectives, gains no help thereby. His work is futile, like pouring oblations into ashes.

- यः - He, who
- साम्परायिकम् कूर्यात् - performs any ritual connected with life after death, 'saamparaayikam' means 'paraloka vishayam'. Heaven and other lokaa-s, pleasures in heaven and other lokaa-s, rituals connected with heaven and other lokaa-s etc. are all saamparaayikam.
- विधिं अन्तरेण - without support of Vedaa-s / without Vedic guidance,
- मोहात् - because of delusion,

What is the 'mohaad' or 'delusion' mentioned here? For saamparaayika vishayaani, scriptural guidance is essential. If one does not recognize or understand this fact, one is under mohaad. For instance, the sraardhaa ceremony, is saamparaayikaa and has to be performed only under Vedic guidance. Brahmana bhojanam is prescribed in the scriptures, as an essential part of the sraardhaa ceremony. 'Poor feeding' (dharidhra bhojanam) cannot replace Brahmana Bhojanam, though it will produce its own punyam. But, the dosham of non-performance of the sraardha karmaa, cannot be escaped from, if Brahmana bhojanam is not performed. An individual may think that by resorting to poor-feeding, instead of Brahmana bhojanam, he would have performed sraardhaa. This is wrong thinking and considered as 'mohaad'.

- तद् - such ritual
- उपकाराय न स्यात् - will be useless / futile,
- भस्मनि हुतं हविइवः - similar to oblations offered into ashes.

In the Mundakopanishad, in the Dvithieya Kandaa (section 2) of the Prathama Mundakaa (Chapter I), the teacher talks about various rituals prescribed in the Veda Poorva Baaghaa (the Karma Kaandaa), for attainment of material ends. Manthraa 2 specifies that "one should offer oblations in the fire only when the flames shoot up", while manthraa-s 4 and 5 refer to "tongues of fire, in which oblations are made" as "shining ones".

It is the poorvameemaamsakaa's stand, that, since (according to him) there is no specific Vedic injunction with regard to aathma jnaanam, the aspiration and effort to achieve liberation through aathma jnaanam, will be as futile as offering oblations, in Vedic rituals, into ashes, instead of into bright flames. This poorva paksha contention is answered by Sureswaraachaaryaa, later in the same chapter, in verse 90.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 17 :अभ्युपगतप्रामाण्यवेदार्थविज्जैमिन्यनुशासनाच्च ।

This follows also from the authority of Jaimini, who is acknowledged as a reliable guide and who has comprehended the import of the Vedaa-s.

The poorvapakashin continues: "This is not my own interpretation. This has been taught by Jaimini Maharishi, a thorough scholar of the Vedaa-s, who has written soothraa-s on the Vedaa-s. According to him (1) the entire Vedaa-s teach only karmaa and (2) no spiritual knowledge is useful by itself, but should be followed by karmaa".

- जैमिनि अनुशासनाः - The teachings of Jaimini Maharishi,
- अभ्युपगत प्रामाण्य वेदार्थ विद् - who is accepted as a reliable guide and a thorough scholar of the contents of the Vedaa-s abhyugamatha – accepted as ; praamaanya – as reliable guide; Vedaartha – the contents of Vedaa-s; vith - knower / scholar.
- च - also confirm this.

Chapter I: Verse 17 –:"आम्नायस्य क्रियार्थत्वादानर्थक्यम् "इतोऽन्यथा ।*इति साटोपमाहोच्चैर्वेदविज्जैमिनिः स्वयम् ॥ १७ ॥

Jaimini, who understands the Vedaa-s, has himself said loudly, as it were, and with gusto, that "as the scriptures signify actions to be done, statements that do not inculcate actions are of no significance and vale".

Sureswaraachaaryaa makes the poorvameemaamsakaa paraphrase the famous Jaimini Soothraa (soothraa 1 – section 2 – Chapter 1 of Poorva Meemaamsa Soothraa-s of Jaimini) – "aamnaayasa kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam".

The term 'aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath', in the soothraa, means 'since karmaa is the final teaching of the Vedaa-s'; 'athadharthaanaam' means 'whatever that teaches anything other than karmaa'; 'aanarthakyam' means 'useless'.

The consolidated meaning of the soothraa is "Since karmaa is the final teaching of the Vedaa-s, whatever other than karmaa talked about by sruthi is useless". According to this soothraa, therefore, siddhavasthujnaanam (aathma jnaanam), not being a karmaa, is useless and so is the statement 'aham brahma asmi'.

But, Jaimini does concede that knowledge may become useful under certain conditions – when it becomes an angam of karmaa, similar to the 'knowledge of availability of water in the container' example, earlier discussed in detail. He is of the view that Jnaanam may be angam for pravrutthi (meaning 'going towards') or nivrutthi (meaning 'going away').

- “आम्नायस्य क्रियार्थत्वात् - “Since karmaa is the final teaching of Vedaa-s
- इतः अन्यथा - anything other than karmaa (this includes jnaanam)
- आनर्थक्यम्” - is useless”
- इति वेदविद् जैमिनि स्वयम् आह - thus has declared, Jaimini maharishi, a scholar in the Vedaa-s,
- उच्चैः - loudly
- साटोपं - with gusto / vehemently. 'aatopam' means 'gusto'.

While the poorvameemaamsakaa holds that 'understanding' is not enough for mokshaa, Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa's / Advaitin's view is: "mere 'understanding' of Vedhaanthee is end of samsaaraa and therefore, mokshaa. There is no practice of Vedhaanthee involved".

If a student of Vedhaanthee makes the statement "I have understood Vedhaanthee; I only have to practice", it only shows that he has not 'understood' Vedhaanthee properly.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 18 – Chapter I:

मन्त्रवर्णाच्च|

The hymn also lays down the same thing.

The poorva meemaamsakaa continues:

मन्त्र वर्णाचः - The Veda pramaanaa-s also support us.

The poorva meemaamsakaa implies: "You may question Jaimini; but, the Veda pramaanaa-s also support us".

Chapter I: Verse 18:

"कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतं समा":।

इति मन्त्रोऽपि निःशेषं कर्मण्यायुरवासृजत् ॥ १८ ॥

Manthraa 2 of Isaavaasya Upanishad exhorts:

कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतं समाः ।

एवं त्वयि नान्यथेतोऽस्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥ २ ॥

kurvannēvēha karmāṇi jijīviṣēcchataꣳ samāḥ |

ēvaṁ tvayi nānyathētō:'sti na karma lipyatē narē || 2||

- Desire to live in this world for a hundred years, performing karmaa. There is no other way to avoid getting bound to karmapalan".

This manthraa is quoted by the poorva meemaamsakaa, in his support.

- "कर्माणि कुर्वन् - "Performing the Vedic rituals (vaidhika nithya naimitthika karmaan)
- इह एव - in this manushya janmaa itself,
- जिजीविषेत् - plan to live
- शतं समा: " - for a hundred years".
- इति - Thus
- मन्त्रपिअ: - a Vedic manthraa also says.
- निःशेषं आयुः - The entire life, without balance,
- कर्मण्ये अवासृजत् - should be dedicated to karmaa (vaidhika karmaa) only / should be spent on karmaa (vaidhika karmaa) only.

The poorvapakshin has given sruthi pramaanam here, against the Vedhaanthir's view of "aathma jnaanam alone can give liberation".

Hereafter, he uses grammar / language analysis, as support to his stand. "Any sentence is only karma bhodhaka vaakyam" will be his claim.

12. Chapter I, Verses 19 and 20 (01-07-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is presenting the poorva pakshaa elaborately, from verse 4 to verse 22. The poorva pakshaa is sub-divided into three groups.

Verses 4 to 13, covered the arguments of that group of karmavaadhin-s, who hold "karma alone gives mokshaa; though aathma jnaanam is talked of, in scriptures, it is neither required for mokshaa, nor is it relevant". This group is termed jnaana abhyupethya karma vaadhina: |

The second group are "jnaana anabhyupethya karma vaadhina:", who also hold that karma alone gives mokshaa, but, along with that, the more extreme view that there is no teaching at all, as aathma jnaanam, in scriptures. The conviction of this group is "If at all aathma jnaanam is mentioned in the scriptures somewhere, it is not the main teaching and it cannot help attain liberation. Mere knowledge about a fact, without a corresponding follow-up action, cannot give results. It is only 'action' that gives the results and not 'knowledge'. A vasthu bodhaka vaakyam, even if found in saasthraa-s, cannot be considered pramaana vaakyam, the final teaching. Kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani alone are useful and therefore, to be considered as pramaanam, the final teachings". In support of their views, these poorva pakshin-s quote (vide verse 17) Jaimini Maharish/s soothraa "aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadhaarthaanaam" - "since karma is the final teaching of the Vedaa-s, whatever other than karma that Vedaa-s talk about, is useless". They also quote (vide verse 18) manthraa 2 of the Isaavaasya Upanishad, "kurvannēvēha karmāṇi jijīviṣēchataṣsamāḥ"—"Desire to live in this world for a hundred years, performing karma s", which manthraa explicitly stresses that vaidhika karmaani should be done for the entire span of one hundred years of one's life.

In the following verse 19, the poorva pakshin (as quoted by Sureswaraachaaryaa), provides the support of grammar and language to his view.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 19:

ज्ञानिनश्च वस्तुनि वाक्यप्रामाण्य अभ्युपगमात् वाक्यस्य च क्रियापदप्रधानत्वात् ततश्च अभिप्रेतज्ञानाभावः।

The desired knowledge can never arise, for the advocate of knowledge seeks it from scriptural statements; and, statements have, as their central element, the verbs (which signify actions):

The Vedhaanthir/s claim is "aathma jnaanam gives liberation, without requiring karmaa". When questioned by the poorva pakshin, as to how one acquires jnaanam, i.e., as to the pramaanam for aathma jnaanam, the Vedhaanthin replies "aathmaa can be known by only one pramaana – Vedhaantha vaakyaani. None of the other five pramaanaa-s - prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi and anupalabdhi - can give the knowledge of aathmaa. Aathmaa cannot be known even through Veda karma kaanda vaakyaani - only *veda antha vaakyaani can give aathma jnaanam".

"Vedhaanthic statements reveal knowledge of aathma also; they do not reveal only karmaa" holds the Vedhaanthin.

The poorva pakshin counters this view: "Does a sentence reveal a fact? Or, does a sentence reveal an action? Vaakyam vasthu bodhakam vaa karma bhodhakam vaa? Does any sentence – leave alone a Vedic one – reveal an object or does it reveal an action?"

In reply, the Vedhaanthin says, that, a vaakyam can be vasthu bodhakam or karma bhodhakam; that, both types of statements are possible.

The poorva pakshin differs; he holds that no statement can reveal a vasthu; and, that, any statement - vaidhikaa or loukikaa – can reveal only a kaaryam or karmaa. He explains: "A sentence is a group of words; not just an arbitrary group of words, but, a group of words fulfilling certain conditions. The most important condition to be satisfied, is, that, the sentence should have a verb (kriyaapadham), without which, the sentence itself is not possible. A sentence without a verb, will be only a jumble of words, communicating nothing. Consider for example the sentence "The priest draws water from the well, with a bucket, for abhishekam in the temple". This sentence conveys a message by the crucial verb "draws". If this verb is removed, the sentence turns into a mere bunch of words conveying nothing. The verb is the link that connects all naamapadham-s (nouns) in the sentence and therefore, is the most important part of the sentence. Since the verb is the most important part of any sentence and since the verb reveals an action, it is to be concluded that kriyaa or karmaa is the central teaching of any sentence".

The poorva pakshin further argues: "Even the naama padham-s (nouns) in a sentence are not used with the purpose of revealing the substances they denote, since, even before using the use of the sentence, the listener knows the nouns and their meanings. The substances denoted are already known to the listener. If the listener does not know the substances, the speaker will not use the nouns".

The question, then, arises: "Then, what is the purpose of using the nouns in a sentence?"

The poorva pakshin replies: "In any sentence, the nouns are associated with 'prepositions' (vibakthi, in Sanskrit grammar). For instance, in the above sentence, 'from' (in the use 'from the well') and 'with' (in the use 'with the bucket') are prepositions. The prepositions are crucial, since they reveal the roles played by the nouns, with regard to the action indicated by the most crucial verb. In the sentence taken for example, the preposition 'with' (in the use 'with the bucket') reveals the special role of the bucket as 'instrument' and the preposition 'from' (in the use 'from the well') reveals the role of the well as 'source'. 'Water' is the 'object' drawn. The role of any noun, in the 'action' revealed by the sentence, is called the kaarakaa status of the noun. 'Instrument' is the kaarakaa state of the bucket, 'source' is the kaarakaa state of the well and 'object' is the kaarakaa state of water".

The poorva pakshin continues: "It follows, therefore, that, from a sentence, no new substance (vasthu) can be learnt. A sentence reveals a kriyaa and also only the roles of the nouns in the kriyaa. If the crucial verb in the sentence is removed, the action will go, the nouns also will lose their kaarakaa states and the sentence stops revealing any message".

The poorva pakshin concludes : "Because of these four indisputable facts, namely, that, even in a complete sentence (1) the nouns have only kaarakaa states of the substances they denote (2) the verb reveals the kriyaa for which the kaarakaa-s are required (3) neither the nouns nor the verb reveal a substance and (4) the complete sentence also does not reveal a new substance or a vasthu, it follows, that, aathmaa also cannot be revealed by a naamapadham or a kriyaapadham or even by a complete sentence. A vasthu bodhaka vaakyam is, therefore, not a pramaanam and nobody can acquire jnaanam from a vaakyam. When jnaanaa itself is not to be acquired from a vaakyam, where is the question of mokshaa?"

- ज्ञानिनः - For the Vedhaanthin,
- वाक्य प्रामाण्य अभ्युपगमात् - the Vedic vaakyaa-s are accepted as sources of knowledge
- वस्तुनि - for the aathma vasthu.
- वाक्यस्य च क्रियापद प्रधानत्वात् - (But) since it is the verb that is the crucial part of any sentence,
- अभिप्रेत ज्ञान अभावः - the desired knowledge will not arise,
- ततः - from the sentence.

'abhipretā' means 'desired / intended'.

"It is Kriyaa that plays the important role in any sentence ; hence, no sentence can be considered as jnaana pradhaanam" is the view of the poorva pakshin.

Chapter I: Verse 19:

विरह्य क्रियां नैव संहन्यन्ते पदान्यपि ।

न समस्त्यपदं वाक्यं यत्स्यात् ज्ञानविधायकम् ॥१९ ॥

The words do not come together in a sentence independent of an action signified by a verb. There can be no sentence, other than the words integrated by the focal point of action, which could enjoin knowledge.

- पधानि अपि न इव संहन्यन्ते क्रियां विरहय्य - Nouns alone cannot come together to form a sentence, without a verb. 'padhaanI' means 'nouns'; 'samhanyanthe' means 'join together'; 'virahayya' means 'without'.

The first line of the verse literally means "A sentence cannot be there without a verb"; it also implies "The nouns can come only as kaarakaa-s ; that too only when the verb is there".

- अपदं वाक्यं यत् स्यात् ज्ञानविधायकम् न समस्ति - There can be no sentence, other than the words integrated by the focal point of action, which could reveal 'knowledge'.

'apadham vaakyam' – a sentence without the integrating kriyaa padham ; yath – which ; jnaana vidhaayakam – revealing 'knowledge' ; na samasthi – does not exist; 'samasthi' is the same as 'asthi'; the prefix 'sam' is used to emphasize the non-existence. 'Na asthi' means 'not there'; 'na samasthi' means 'not at all there'.

"No sentence can reveal a substance. Vedic sentences also do not reveal aathma jnaanam, but, are meant only for action" is the conviction of the poorva pakshin.

Verses 14 to 19 covered the arguments of the second group of karmavaadhin-s, who contend that there is no such thing as aathma jnaanam at all. Sureswaraachaaryaa answers this group of karmavaadhin-s, later, in the same chapter, in verses 85 to 97.

From the next verse, the arguments of the third group of karmavaadhin-s are presented, by the Aachaaryaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 20 :

ज्ञान अभ्युपगमे अपि न दोष :यत :।

There is no difficulty in this position, even if knowledge is admitted as a possibility, because.....

From verse 20 to 22, the arguments of the 3rd group, the "jnaana karma samucchaya vaadhina:" are presented. This group of poorva pakshin-s, as against the earlier group which contends "there is no aathma jnaanam at all", accepts aathma jnaanam, as a teaching of the scriptures; but, maintains: "aathma jnaanam, by itself, will not give any benefit at all. The mere knowledge (that, "I am Brahman") alone cannot liberate from samsaaraa. Our grief and pain do not go away because of mere jnaanam. The jnaanam has to be combined with karmaa. Only the combination – jnaana karma samucchaya - will help liberation”.

The samucchayavaadhi group can be further divided into three sub-groups:

- Jnaana pradhaana samucchaya vaadhi - who considers jnaanam as pradhaanam (ANGI) and karmaa as support (ANGAA).
- Karma pradhaana samucchaya vaadhi - for whom karmaa is pradhaanam (ANGI) and jnaanam, the support (ANGAA).
- Sama pradhaana samucchaya vaadhi - who considers that both jnaanam and karmaa have equal importance.

In his Thaithreeya Upanishad Bhaashyam, while covering the first chapter, Seekshaa Valli, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, discusses in detail, as to which of the three, viz., (i) karmaa alone (ii) jnaanam alone or (iii) jnaana-karma-samucchaya – gives mokshaa. He finally establishes that jnaanam only and by itself, is mokshaa saadhanam – jnaanath eva kaivalyam.

Reverting to the text:

- ज्ञान अभ्युपगमे अपि - Even if jnaanam is accepted,
- न दोषः - there is no difficulty (to the poorva pakshin-s position),
- यतः - because of the following reason.

Chapter I: Verse 20 –

कर्मणोऽङ्गाङ्गिभावेन स्वप्रधानतयाऽथवा ।

Admission of knowledge causes no difficulty, for it may stand in relation to action as means or end or as equally important.

- ज्ञाने सति अपि - Even if we accept jnaanam,
- अदोषता- there being no difficulty,
- अथवा - in any one of the three positions, namely,
- कर्मणअङ्ग भावेन संबन्धस्य : - (i) karmaa as anghaa, in association with jnaanam (jnaanam as 'main' and karmaa as 'supporting factor'),
- (भावेन संबन्धस्य) अङ्गि (:कर्मण) - or (ii) karmaa as anghee, in association with jnaanam (karmaa as 'main' and jnaanam as 'supporting factor')
- स्वप्रधानतया - or (iii) both karmaa and jnaanam having equal importance,
- इह - in the context of mokshaa,

- संसिद्धिः - the result (viz., mokshaa) is achievable.
 - (तस्मात् जानं अस्तु) - (This sentence is supplied to complete the message) 'Therefore, let jnaanam be there'.

The jnaana karma samucchayaa vaadhi says "Hence, (because there is no difficulty to our position) we are willing to accept jnaanam. But, we cannot accept, that, aathma jnaanam, by itself, is the means to liberation".

In his support, the samucchayaa vaadhi quotes from the Chaandhogya Upanishad: "Yadeva vidhyayaa karothi sraddhayaa upanishadha thadeva veeryavatthithaa bhavathi" meaning "when a karmaa is done, with the support of jnaanam, the karmaa gives the result of mokshaa. When the ritual is done without jnaanam, the result is svarghaa. Karmaa done with aathma jnaanam becomes more powerful and the more powerful karmaa gives mokshaa".

According to this Upanishadic quotation, karmaa is anghee and vidhyaa (jnaanam) is anghaa. "So" claims the samuchchaya vaadhi "Vedic support is there for our theory, jnaana karma samucchayam".

13. Chapter I, Verses 21 to 24 (08-07-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is elaborately presenting a few poorva pakshaa-s. All the poorva pakshin-s, whom he has taken for refuting, have got one idea in common – “mere knowledge cannot give liberation” – “kevala jnaanaath mukthi: naiva sambhavath'”.

The Aachaaryaa introduces three groups of the poorva pakshin-s, in this portion:

- (1) Abhyupethya karma vaadhina: |
- (2) Anabhyupethya karma vaadhina: |
- (3) Samucchaya karma vaadhina: |

The first group holds: “Karmaa alone gives liberation. Even though jnaanaa is mentioned in saasthraa-s, it is not required for liberation”. The second group holds: “There is no such thing called jnaanaa. Mere karmaa alone gives mokshaa'”. Thus both groups say “kevala karmanaa moksha:'”, jnaanam asthu vaa na asthu vaa.

In verse 20, the Aachaaryaa presents the 3rd group of karma vaadhin-s, the samucchaya karma vaadhina:, who claim “karmana: sambhandhasya iha samsiddhi:'” – “karmaa gives liberation, in association with jnaanam, in one form or another”. This group can be further divided into three sub-groups, based on the ‘form of association with jnaanam':

- (1) Jnaana pradhaana samucchaya vaadhina: - for whom, jnaanam is anghee and karmaa is angham – i.e. karmaa supports jnaanam – karmana: angha bhaavena sambhandhasya samsiddhi: |
- (2) Karma pradhaana samucchaya vaadhina: - for whom, karmaa is anghee and jnaanam is angham – i.e. jnaanam supports karmaa – karmana: anghee bhaavena sambhandhasya samsiddhi: |
- (3) Sama pradhaana samucchaya vaadhina: - for whom, jnaanam and karmaa have equal importance, in the pursuit for liberation - karma jnaana yogayo: samapradhaana sambhandhasya samsiddhi: |

“Karmana: jnaana sambhandhasya iha samsiddhi:'” - “karmaa gives liberation, in association with jnaanam” can be taken as the common view of all the three.

Each sub-group cites Veda Pramaanaa in its support. The first sub-group quotes the last manthraa, in Section 1 – Chapter I, of Chaandhogya Upanishad – “yadeva vidhyayaa karothi sraddhayaa upanishadaa thadeva veeryavaththaram bhavath'” – “Only that karmaa which is done with knowledge, faith and meditation, that alone becomes more powerful”, which manthraa, according to this group of poorva pakshin-s, implies “karmaa is the main saadhanaa. It can produce greater result, if backed by jnaanam” – i.e. karmaa is anghee and jnaanam is angham. In this manthraa, the poorva pakshin interprets 'vidhya' as 'aathmajnaanam', whereas, the Advaitin-s, in their annotations of this manthraa, interpret 'vidhya' as 'upaasana'.

The second sub-group gives a quotation from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iv.22) – "Thametham vedhaanuvachanena braahmanaa: vividhashanthi yagnyena, dhaanene, thapasaa, anaasaakena" – "The Brahmanas seek to know It (Brahman) through the study of Vedaas, sacrifices, charity and austerity consisting in a dispassionate enjoyment of sense objects", from which manthraa, they draw the implication "karmaa is the angham for jnaanam – i.e. karmaa supports knowledge".

The 3rd sub-group quotes, in its support, the 11th manthraa of the Isaavaasya Upanishad –

विद्यां चाविद्यां च यस्तद्वेदोभयं सह ।

अविद्यया मृत्युं तीर्त्वा विद्ययाऽमृतमश्नुते ॥ ११ ॥

vidyām cāvidyām ca yastadvēdōbhayaṃ saha |

avidyayā mṛtyuṃ tīrtvā vidyayā:'mṛtamaśnutē || 11 ||

– "He, who knows the nature of both knowledge and action, transcends death by karmaa and enjoys everlasting bliss brought out by aathmajnaanam". The poorva pakshin interprets 'vidhya' in this manthraa, as 'aathmajnaanam' and 'avidhya' as 'karmaa'. The word 'saha' (in the manthraa) is taken by him, as indicating equal importance to both jnaanam and karmaa – sama pradhaanam or sama samuchchayam.

"Mere knowledge cannot give liberation. It should go with karmaa" is the stand of the samuchchaya vaadhin. He does not find any difficulty in accepting jnaanam, if it goes with *karmaa. This, he indicates, by the word 'adhoshatha:', in verse 20. (Adhoshathaa, in the place of adhoshatha:, may be a more appropriate usage, since it completes the sentence.)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 21 :

यस्मात् ज्ञानाभ्युपगमानभ्युपगमेऽपि न ज्ञानान्मुक्तिः ।

Liberation is never attained through knowledge, whether knowledge is admitted or not. Because of this reason, I would conclude the following:

This is the poorva pakshin's statement. The following verse 21 consolidates the three types of karmavaadhin-s and in this introductory gadhyam, the Aachaaryaa gives the poorva pakshin's view: "Whether jnaanam is in the saasthraa-s or not, I would like to emphasize that jnaanam cannot give liberation".

- ज्ञान अभ्युगम - Accepting the existence of aathmajnaanam in the scriptural teachings,
- ज्ञान अनभ्युगम अपि - or non-accepting the existence of aathmajnaanam in the scriptural teachings,
- ज्ञानात् मुक्ति(भवति) न : - liberation cannot result from jnaanam.
- यस्मात् - Because of this reason, I would conclude the following.

Chapter I: Verse 21 –

अतः सर्वाश्रमाणां हि वाङ् मनःकायकर्मभिः ।

स्वनुष्ठितैर्यथाशक्ति मुक्तिः स्यान्नान्यसाधनात् ॥ २१ ॥

Therefore, to conclude, actions well-performed through speech, mind and body, pertaining to the recognized stages of life, in accordance with one's powers, bring about release. There is no other means for it.

- अतः - Therefore,
- कर्मभिःस्यात् मुक्तिः - mokshaa results only from karmaa
- वाङ् मनकायः - done through speech, mind and body,
 "Chanting of slokaa-s and manthraa-s" are 'karmaa through speech'. "Performance of varieties of meditation prescribed in the saasthraa-s, for instance, the different upaasanaa-s mentioned in the Seekshaavalli of Thaithreeya Upanishad" will come under 'karmaa through mind'. "Pujaa, namaskaaram" etc., done using the sthoolasareeram are 'karmaa through body'.
- सु अनुष्ठितैः - done properly as prescribed (adjective to 'karmabhi:')
- यथा शक्ति - (and) according to one's capacity,

But, can all people do any or all karmaa-s, as they like? No. The karmaa undertaken by the performer, should be in keeping with his aasramaa. This is also stressed in the verse.

- सर्व आश्रमाणां - in keeping with the aasramaa (of the performer).
- हि - This is certain.

What about jnaanam? According to the poorva pakshin, if one believes in jnaanam, one is allowed to 'mix' it with karmaa. And, if one does not believe in jnaanam, it does not at all matter; mere karmaa will do. Only karmaa is essential for liberation; not jnaanam. This view is also stressed by the poorva pakshin, in the verse.

- न अन्य साधनात् :मुक्ति)स्यात्(- Mokshaa cannot result by any other means (including jnaanam is the implication).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 22:

असदर्थप्रलापोऽयमिति दूषणसंभावनाय आह ।

The author starts his criticism to show that this is the statement of a wrong position.

With verse 21, presentation of the arguments of the three types of poorva pakshaa is over. Sureswaraacharya starts presenting the views of the Advaithin. Detailed answers to the poorva pakshaa arguments are given later. The Aachaaryaa first presents his views ; he uses strong terms "these words are prattles".

- अयं - "These arguments (of the poorva pakshin-s)
- असत् अर्थ प्रलापः - (are) meaningless prattles "
- इति आह - Thus it is to be said (in the following verse)
- दूषण संभावनाय - with intention to counter the poorvapakshaa views. 'dhooshand' – 'counter' ; 'sambhaavanaad' – possibility / intention.

The Aachaaryaa's counters are 'strong', not because of his hatred of the karmavaadhin-s; but, only to give confidence to the student of Vedhaantha.

Chapter I: Verse 22 –

इति हृष्टधियां वाच :स्वप्रज्ञाऽऽध्मातचेतसाम् ।

घुष्यन्ते यजशालासु धूमानद्दधियाम् किल ॥ २२ ॥

Such indeed is the speech made in places of sacrifice, by people, who are pleased with themselves, whose intellect is nourished by their own constructions and whose vision is enveloped in smoke.

- इति वाचकिल : - Such is the speech, indeed
- यजशालासु घुष्यन्ते - made in the places of sacrifice
- हृष्टधियां - by people who are satisfied with their own philosophy. The reference is to the karmavaadhin-s.
- स्वप्रज्ञात् आत्मातचेतसाम् - who are vain with their own views / who are puffed up with their own views 'They are not open to alternate views, a serious failure on their part', is the charge of the Aachaaryaa.
- धूम आनद् धियां - and whose 'vision' is blurred by smoke.

Literally, the eyes of the 'karmi-s' are blurred by smoke rising from the homa-s, in their yagnyasaala-s. "Their intellect is clouded" is the implied meaning. This is another failure on the part of the karmavaadhin-s.

'Dhoomaa' has also been interpreted by some commentators to mean 'dhooma maargam' or 'krishna gathi:', the path taken by the karmi-s to heaven, after death. If so interpreted, "obsession with karmaa" will be the implied meaning of "vision blurred by dhooma maargam".

"Thus obsessed with a misconceived notion of an eternal heaven, the karmavaadhin-s proclaim that karmaa is the path to liberation. But, because of their failures cited above, we are sure that they are wrong" avers Sureswaraachaaryaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 23:

दूषणोपक्रमावधिज्ञापनायाह ।

The scope of the criticism launched is indicated by the following.

The samucchaya vaadhin's (the third group's) arguments are answered by the Aachaaryaa, later, in verses 54 to 79. In this verse, he starts his replies to the 1st group of *karmavaadhin*_s.

- दूषण उपक्रम अवधि ज्ञापनाय - To indicate the starting point of the refutation,
- आह - the following verse is presented.

'Dhooshanam' means 'refutation / objection'; 'upakrama:' means 'beginning'; 'avadhi' means 'period of time'; 'jnaapanam' means 'indicating / announcing'.

Chapter I: Verse 23 –

अत्राभिदध्महे दोषान् क्रमशो न्यायबृंहितैः ।

वचोभिः पूर्वपक्षोक्तघातिभिर्नातिसंभ्रमात् ॥ २३ ॥

Now we will state the objections in an orderly manner in words supported by logic, which will destroy the prima facie views and that not in the spirit of sophistry.

- अत्र - From the following verse (verse no. 24),
- दोषान् अभिदध्महे - we shall point out the mistakes / loopholes.

'Abhidaadhmahē' means 'we shall say'. The plural use is to show that the Aachaaryaa has the backing of the entire sampradhaaya guru paramparaa. As the Guruvandanam goes: "Yai: imey gurubhi: poorvam padhavaakya pramaanatha: / Vyaakyaathaa: sarva vedhaanthaa: thaan nithyam pranathosmi aham||".

- न्याय बृंहितैः वचोभिः - using arguments backed by nyaayaa/logic. The word 'br̥mhita' literally means 'grown / increased' and is to be interpreted here, as 'backed by / supported by / reinforced by'.
- पूर्वपक्ष उक्त घातिभिः - which (arguments) will destroy the statements of the poorva pakshin-s,
- क्रमशः - one by one / in an orderly manner / systematically,
- न अति संभ्रमात् - without any excitement / hatred / anger / disturbance.

The lesson to be drawn from the Aachaaryaa's use of the term 'na athi sambrahmaath:' "Never debate with another person, with the idea that he should accept your views. Do not be concerned about your opponent getting convinced or not. Your intention should be only to share your views. Your conviction or your liberation does not depend upon others' approval". There should be a relaxed attitude, while debating. This is a practical suggestion even for worldly matters. Intellectual conviction cannot be forced on others.

This verse (no. 23) is the 'introduction' to the siddhaanthaa of the Aachaaryaa (or the Advaithin). The word 'avadhl', in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 23, meaning 'starting point', indicates that the poorva pakshaa arguments are over and the siddhaanthaa presentation starts.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 24:

चतुर्विधस्यपि कर्मकार्यस्य मुक्तावसंभवान्न मुक्ते : कर्मकार्यत्वम् ।

Release cannot be the effect of action, for it cannot fall into any of the four categories that action can bring into existence.

Sureswaraachaaryaa starts with the refutation of the 1st group of karmavaadhina:, viz., abhyupethya karmavaadhina:. The 'abhyupethya karmavaadha niraasa:' is done in verses 24 to 53.

Introducing this, the Aachaaryaa says "karmaa cannot give mokshaa", as against the view of the karmavaadhin-s, viz., "karmanaa eva moksha: - karmaa alone gives mokshaa", as expressed by the karmavaadhin, in verse 21 "sarva aasramanaam kaaryakarmabhi: mukthi: syaath na anya saadhanaath". Sureswaraachaaryaa firmly avers that karmaa cannot give mokshaa; when he uses the word 'karmaa', he includes upaasanaa also, since upaasanaa is chittha poradhaana karmaa. Neither kaaya pradhaana karmaa nor chittha pradhaana karmaa can liberate. 'Meditation' also cannot give mokshaa.

Sureswaraachaarya can easily provide sruthi pramaanam for this statement of his, by quoting the well known manthraa in Kaivalya Upanishad, which is commonly chanted while receiving a sannyasi - "na karmanaa na prajayaa dhanena thyaagena eke amruthathvam aanasu."- "It is through renunciation that a few seekers have attained immortality, not through ritual, nor through progeny, nor through wealth". But, he has named his treatise a Siddhi Granthaa, which will necessitate the use of logic – yukthi – to establish his views. And, therefore, he stated (in verse 23) that he will use logic, to counter the poorva pakshaa views – 'nyaaya brumhithai'. The Aaachaaryaa does not satisfy himself with giving sruthi pramaanam only.

In this introductory paragraph to verse 24, Sureswaraachaarya says "In scriptures, the results of all types of karma - (i) kaayika, maanasa and vaachika karmaani and (ii) loukika and vaidhika karmaani - have been given. All karmapalan-s, whether secular or vaidhikaa, fall under four categories, indicated by the common saying 'chaturvidham karmakaaryam'. The Aaachaaryaa lists the four types of results later, in verse 53. They are:

- (1) aapthi: - 'reaching a place' – e.g. 'travel results in reaching a destination'
- (2) uthpatthi: - 'production' – e.g. 'farming produces grains, fruits etc.'
- (3) vikhaara: - 'modification / change (no production) – the form is changed.
- (4) samskaara: - 'purification' – neither production nor change, but, refinement.

In the vaidhikaa context:

- (1) When the result of a particular vaidhika karmaa is mentioned as 'going to svargaad', it comes under aapthi: /
- (2) When a particular karmaa is expected to produce punyam, it is uthpatthi: |
- (3) A particular karmaa or a particular karmapalan can be changed by change of dravyam or the instrument. The change of the oblation or even the ladle in a homa karmaa will give a different status to the karmaa. This is an example of vikhaara: /
- (4) Prokshana karmaa purifies – an example of samskaara:

Any vaidhika karma results in one or more of the karma kaaryam-s.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Mokshaa is ajnaana nivrutthi;; and, on analysis, we can conclude that mokshaa does not come under any one of the four types of karmapalan'.

The same subject is discussed by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam to Soothraa 1.1.4.

"Mokshaa, not being any one of the above four types of results, how can karmaa give mokshaa?" is the question of the Aachaaryaa-s.

14. Chapter I, Verses 24 to 27 (15-07-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa elaborately introduced three types of poorva pakshin-s, in verses 9 to 22, with the intention of refuting their theories later. Of these three types, the first group is being answered by the Aachaaryaa first, from verse 24.

"Karmaa alone gives mokshaa; even if there is a subject as aathmajnaanam, it does not play a role in attainment of liberation. Karmaa eva moksha kaaranam" is the view of the first group of poorva pakshin-s.

Sureswaraachaaryaa refutes this theory in verses 24 to 53, after first expressing his intention (to refute) in verse 23. His actual arguments against the poorva pakshin starts from verse 24.

The first argument of the Aachaaryaa: "All types of karmapalan can be broadly classified into four types, viz., uthpatthi:, aapthi:, vikhaara: and samsuddhi: (production, reaching, modification and purification respectively), whether the karmaa is loukikaa (worldly) or vaidhikaa. Mokshaa, being only aathma ajnaana nivrutthi: (removal of ignorance), it cannot come under any of the above four types of results. Mokshaa, therefore, or, for that matter, any 'knowledge', cannot come under karmapalan".

"No ignorance, including self-ignorance, can be removed by karmaa. Therefore, karmaa cannot give mokshaa" is the Aachaaryaa's answer.

In the sambhandha gadhyam of verse 24:

- मुक्तौ - In the field of mokshaa,
- चतुर्विधस्यापि - none of the four types of
- कर्मकार्यस्य - results of karmaa
- असंभवात् - can result; therefore,
- मुक्तेः न कर्मकार्यत्वम् - mukthi: cannot be the result of karmaa.

The four types of karmapalan are listed by the Aachaaryaa, later, in verse 53. Karmaa, in this context, includes upaasanaa also.

Chapter I: Verse 24 –

अज्ञानहानमात्रत्वान्मुक्तेः कर्म न साधनम् ।

कर्मापमार्ष्टिं नाज्ञानं तमसीवोत्थितं तमः ॥ २४ ॥

As release is nothing but the elimination of ignorance, action cannot be the means thereof. Just as the error engendered in darkness cannot put an end to darkness, action does not eradicate ignorance.

- मुक्तेः अज्ञान हान मात्रत्वात् - Mukthi being only removal of self- ignorance,
- कर्म न साधनम् - karmaa is not the 'means' for liberation.

'Haanam' means 'removal'; 'maathra' means 'mere'; 'ajnaana haana maathrathvaath mukthi:' means 'Liberation is attained by mere destruction of ignorance'.

Mukthi: is a matter of 'understanding'. By 'right understanding' one drops 'misconceptions'. The use of the word 'maathra', meaning 'mere' or 'only', is very significant. The word 'mere' emphasizes, that, after 'understanding', the seeker has nothing to 'do' for liberation.

"I have understood that 'I' am Brahman; now, what should I do for liberation?" is an absurd question; it only shows that 'right understanding' has not taken place. 'Understanding' includes the understanding that there is nothing else to 'do' for understanding.

An aspirant may say: "I accept that jnaanam is also a means to mokshaa. But, why should I not choose to use karmaa for attaining mokshaa?" Pre-empting such a doubt, the Aachaaryaa categorically stated 'karma na saadhanam' and follows up with the justification as to why karma cannot be a saadhanam:

- कर्म अज्ञानं न अपमार्ष्टि - Karmaa is not remover of ignorance,
- तमसि उत्थितं इव - similar to whatever is born of ignorance
- तमः न)अपमार्ष्टि(- cannot remove ignorance.

'Apamaarshthi' means 'remover', derived from the root 'maar', meaning 'to destroy'.

Why cannot karmaa remove 'ignorance'? The Aachaaryaa's answer: "Because, karmaa itself is a product of ignorance". Ajnaanam is kaaranam (cause) and karmaa is kaaryam (effect). In the avadhaarika gadhyam of this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, the Aachaaryaa had already explained how, viz.,

- (1). Self-ignorance (ajnaanam) leads to dvaita dharsanam – duality and multiplicity;
- (2). Dvaita dharsanam results in sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa: - i.e. the tendency to consider certain things / situations / people as favourable and certain others as unfavourable;

(3).The 'sobanaa-asobanaa adhyaasa:' creates raagha dveshaa – attachment and hatred and

(4).Raagha dveshaa-s propel a person to karmaani – vihitha and nishiddha karmaani. These steps show that karmaa is a 4th generation product of ajnaanam.

Any kaaryam imbibes the qualities of kaaranam. For example, a golden ornament (kaaryam) has the qualities of the gold (kaaranam). Karmaa being the kaaryam of ajnaanam, the svaroopam of karma is ajnaanam.

In the well-known rajju-sarpaa example, only in the 'ignorance of snake'(rajju ajnaanena) the snake is 'created'. In other words, 'rajju ajnaanam' is the kaaranam and 'sarpa dharsanam' is kaaryam. Sarpa dharsanam being the product of 'rope ignorance', the nature of sarpa dharsanam is 'ignorance'. 'Ignorance' is the cause; 'error' or 'wrong perception' is the effect. And, the nature of every error or misconception is 'ignorance'. Erroneous perception cannot remove ignorance, since it is itself born of ignorance.

Aathma ajnaanam is comparable to rajju ajnaanam. Karmaa is comparable to sarpa dharsanam. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says "Karmaa is not remover of aathma ajnaanam, similar to whatever is born of ignorance cannot remove ignorance".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 25:

कर्मकार्यत्वाभ्युपगमेऽपि दोष एव ।

Even if release is admitted as following from action, there are difficulties.

- अभ्युपगमे अपि – Even if it is accepted
- कर्म कार्यत्वं – that mokshaa can result from karmaa,
- दोष एव - there are problems.

In the following verse (verse 25) , Sureswaraachaarya asks the poorva pakshin : "I temporarily accept your theory that mokshaa is karmapalan ; then, tell me, what specific karmaa gives liberation?"

Chapter I: Verse 25 –

एकेन वा भवेन्मुक्तिर्यदि वा सर्वकर्मभिः ।

प्रत्येकं चेद्दृथान्यानि सर्वेभ्योऽप्येककर्मता ॥ २५ ॥

Is release the effect of one action or of all actions? If of one action, the other actions are useless; and, if, of all, they have all to be construed as constituting one action (which would be contrary to the strict division of actions into various kinds accepted by the theorists of karmaa).

Sureswaraacharya asks: "What karmaa can give liberation?"

Karmaa, in these discussions, can mean only viadhika karmaa, prescribed in the scriptures, since mokshaa is apourusheyam.

The Aacharya gives two options: "Can we say that (1) every vaidhika karmaa can give liberation OR (2) all karmaa-s, put together, will give liberation?"

- एकेन मुक्ति : भवेत् वा - Does liberation result from one karmaa?
- यदि वा सर्वकर्मभिः - Or, does it result from all karmaa-s put together ?
- प्रत्येकं चेत् - If only one karmaa singly, independent of other karmaa-s, can give liberation
- अन्यानि वृथा - all other karmaa-s become redundant.

"Then, why should Vedaa-s prescribe so many karmaa-s? They need not" is implied.

- सर्वेभ्यः)चेत्(- If mokshaa results through all the karmaa-s put together,
- एक कर्मता - then, all the karmaa-s put together, will become one karmaa.

The problem with this view (i.e. all karmaa-s put together, will give mokshaa) is detailed below: "This view would mean that all karmaa-s, prescribed in the scriptures, will have to be done to attain mokshaa, since omission of any karmaa will make the exercise incomplete. But, no single person can do all vaidhika karmaa-s, since vaidhika karmaa-s are prescribed for different varnaa-s and different aasramaa-s, and scriptures strictly prohibit para varna dharmaa and para aasrama dharmaa. This would mean that mokshaa will not be possible, for any one".

This objection may be countered by the poorva pakshin, with the reply that "performance of not all the karmaa-s, but of all the karmaa-s prescribed for the particular varnaa and aasramaa of the saadhakaa, will give him mokshaa". But, this is also not acceptable because of the following reasoning: "The 'groups' of karmaa-s performed by people of different varnaa-s and aasramaa-s, will be different. Since, according to this view, all of them can attain mokshaa, through the different 'groups' of karmaa-s performed by them, it would mean that mokshaa saadhanaa-s can be different. But, if saadhanaa-s differ, saadhyaa-s also will be different. 'Saadhana bedhena saadhyaa bedha:' and 'yathaa karmaa thathaa palan' – both, in essence, meaning 'results are different for different actions' - are undisputed maxims. But because mokshaa is not of different types, but, is only one Uniform, Eternal and Infinite, this reply is not logical".

In this context of the statement, that, mokshaa is not of different types, verse 42 from the 'Sadh Dharsanam' of Shri Ramana Maharishi, is relevant. The verse says: "roopinyaroopinyubhayaathmika cha mukthisthriropethi vidho vadhanthi | idham thrayam yaa vivinakyahamdhee: thasyaa: pranaasa: paramaarthmaamukthi:" - "Some people say that there are three types of mokshaa – roopini mukthi:, aropini mukthi: and ubhayaathmika mukthi: | Mukthi: being the destruction of the very ahamkaaraa, which indulges in this 'counting', how can there be three mukthi-s?"

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 26 :

सर्वप्रकारस्यापि कर्मण उत्पत्ति एव विशिष्टसाध्याभिसंबन्धान्न पारिशेष्यन्यायसिद्धिः।

All the diverse kinds of actions are associated with diverse effects by the initiating injunctions themselves and as such, there is no residual action to which the effectuation of release may be ascribed:

The karmi comes out with another suggestion: "I concede that eka karmaa and sarva karmaa are both ruled out. But, performing the specific karmaa leading to mokshaa will give liberation. The specific moksha saadhana karmaa has to be done".

The Vedhaanthin questions : "What is that specific moksha saadhana karmaa? The Vedaa-s do not talk about any specific karmaa for mokshaa. Various results for various karmaa-s have been indicated; but, all the results indicated, are other than mokshaa."

The poorva pakshin replies: "Vedaa-s have talked of some karmaa-s, without mentioning the palan of those karmaa-s. For whatever karmaa, a specific palan is not mentioned, the palan of that karmaa can be taken as mokshaa".

In reply, Sureswaraachaaryaa observes that there is no karmaa in the Vedaa-s, for which the palan is not mentioned.

- सर्वप्रकारस्य अपि कर्मणः - For all types of karmaa-s,

Karmaa-s are of five types – nithya, naimitthika, kaamyaa, praayaschiththa and nishiddha.

- उत्पत्तिः एव - even as and when they are introduced by the Vedaa-s,
- विशिष्ट साध्य अभिसंबन्धात् - since the specific goal is also prescribed, 'vishishtaa – specific ; 'saadhyaan – goal ; 'abhisambhandha:' - association.
- न पारिशेष्य न्यायसिद्धिः - the 'law of exclusion' cannot be applied.

'Paarisheshya nyaaya:' is the technical word for the 'principle of exclusion'. Applying whatever is 'left out', after consideration and elimination of other factors, is 'Paarisheshya nyaaya:'|

If the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s had talked of at least a single karma without indicating its result, by 'Paarisheshya nyaaya:', the claim can be made, that, the result of that particular karma is mokshaa. But, in the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, with every prescribed karmaa, the corresponding result has also been indicated. No karmaa, with results left out, has been mentioned. Nor has mokshaa been prescribed as a direct result of any karmaa. As such, there is no prescribed vaidhika karmaa that can be used for mokshaa, according to the Aachaaryaa. He elaborates this view further.

Chapter I: Verse 26 –

दुरितक्षपणार्थत्वान्न नित्यं स्याद्विमुक्तये ।

स्वर्गादिपलसंबन्धात्काम्यं कर्म तथैव न ॥ २६ ॥

The obligatory action cannot lead to release, for it is assigned to the function of removing sins. Similarly action prompted by desire is associated with ends like the conducting of the agent to heaven and cannot lead to release.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa explains how every karmaa is associated with some result or other and that there is no karmaa for which result is not prescribed.

- नित्यं दुरितक्षपणार्थत्वात् - Since nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s result in the destruction of praarabhdha paapam,
- विमुक्तये न स्यात् - they (nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s) cannot lead to liberation.

'nithyam' means 'nithya karmaa-s' and in this context, includes naimitthika karmaa-s also; 'dhuritha' means 'praarabhdha paapam'; 'kshapanam' means 'destruction'.

According to Vedhaanthin-s, nithya-naimitthika karma-s will destroy praarabhdha paapam (not sanchitha or aaghaami). As is well-known, the sankalpa done before any vaidhika karmaa specifies the purpose as 'dhuritha kshayadwaraad'.

The poorva meemaamsakaa-s or karma kaandin-s believe that performance of nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s are for avoidance of prathyavaaya paapam.

Either way, nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s have prescribed results, either dhuritha kshapanam or prathyavaaya papa parihaaram. It follows, therefore, that nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s cannot be used for mokshaa.

- काम्यं कर्म - The kaamya karmaa-s,
- स्वर्गादि फल संबन्धात् - because they are associated with results like svargaa etc.,
- तथा एव न (विमुक्तये स्यात्) - similar to nithya karmaa, cannot give mokshaa.

Nishiddha and praayaschittha karmaani need not even be mentioned, since their results (narakaa and parihaaraa respectively) are known.

Thus, there is no result-less action that can be used for mokshaa, according to the Aachaaryaa.

Though the text, Naishkarmya Siddhi does not talk of any vaidhika karmaa, for which no result is mentioned, some commentators have referred to a few karmaa-s, for which no palan has been mentioned in the Vedaa-s.

An example is the Viswajith Yaaghaa, finding mention in the Katopanishad as performed by the father of Nachikethas.

In anticipation of the poorva pakshin quoting such karmaa-s as moksha saadhananaa, the commentators are ready with an answer: "In the Poorvameemaamsa saasthraa, in the chapter titled Viswajith Adhikaranam, the poorva pakshin himself had said, that, wherever results are not given in the Vedaa-s, svarghaa should be taken as the result. So, even according to the poorva pakshin himself, mokshaa cannot be the result of such karmaa-s, i.e. karmaa-s for which no result has been specified".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 27:

प्रमाणासंभवाच्च ।

Further, there is no scriptural testimony in support.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, in anticipation of the poorva pakshin 'inventing' or 'devising' a karmaa as moksha saadhanam, says: "Whenever apourusheya vishayaa is discussed, saasthraa-s can be the only pramaanam. For worldly matters, one can devise one's own methods. But, not in apourusheya vishyaa-s. And, saasthraa-s have not prescribed a karmaa, for achieving mokshaa. Hence, karmaa cannot give mokshaa".

15. Chapter I, Verses 27 to 29 (22-07-2006)

Verse 27 – Chapter I:

साध्यसाधनभावोऽयं वचनात्पारलौकिकः।

नाश्रौषं मोक्षदं कर्म श्रुतेर्वक्त्रात्कथंचन ॥ २७ ॥

The means-and-end relation between action and their fruits of the nature of objectives beyond the present life, is to be ascertained through scriptures. From the mouth of sruthi, we have heard of no actions as leading to release.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the poorva pakshaa views, in these verses. Different poorva pakshin-s were introduced. Some claim that karmaa alone can give mokshaa and some others claim that "karmaa joined with jnaanaa" will give mokshaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa desires to refute both these theories, namely:

- Kevala karma vaadham and
- Samucchaya karma vaadham.

The first group, who say, "karmaa alone gives mokshaa" is being refuted now. Even within this group, one sub-group concedes that jnaanam is a subject taught in the scriptures; but, holds, that, it is not required for mokshaa. The other sub-group does not even accept jnaanam as a subject of teaching by the saasthraa-s.

Various arguments are given by the Aachaaryaa, against this view "karmanaa eva moksha:"

In verse 24, the Aachaaryaa argued that karma palan can be only of four types – uthpatthi:, aapthi:, vikhaara: and samskaara: and since mokshaa cannot be considered to come under any one of these four, mokshaa cannot be karmapalan.

Thereafter, he raises the query as to whether there are any karmaa-s mentioned by the saasthraa-s specifically for mokshaa. Saasthraa-s always indicate the result of any prescribed karmaa; but, nowhere is mokshaa mentioned as karmapalan. A kaamyaa karmaa results in fulfillment of the desire, for which the kaamyaa karmaa is performed. Nishiddha karmaa-s result in paapam and lead to inferior worlds or inferior punar-janmaa-s. Praayaschittha karmaa-s remove the paapam accrued because of performance of wanton or accidental nishiddha karmaa-s. As for nithya-naimitthika karmaani, the poorva meemaamsakaa says that they are done for avoidance of prathyavaaya paapam, while the Vedhaanthin holds, that, they are meant for dhuritha kshayam. Thus, the five types of karmaa-s have specified results; but, all the results are different from mokshaa. "Then how we can we attain mokshaa, resorting to karma?" is the Aachaaryaa's query.

In this context, some commentators rake up another question: "There are certain rituals, like Viswajith Yaaghaa, for which palan is not mentioned by the saasthraa-s. Can it be concluded that these rituals give mokshaa?" and themselves answer "This is also not acceptable, since, the karma kaandi himself had discussed this and had said, that, wherever results are not mentioned by the saasthraa-s, one can assume that svarghaa, being the most desired object of the humans, is the result".

In support, the commentators quote soothraa 15 – Section 3 – Chapter 4, of Jaimini Maharishi's Poorva Meemaamsa Soothraa-s, which runs "sa: svarga: syaath sarvaan prathi avisishtathvaath" meaning "the unmentioned result shall be svargaa, because it is desired universally". (The word 'sa:', in this portion of the soothraa, refers to the 'unmentioned result').

Sureswaraachaaryaa's stand is also that "there is no karmaa in the saasthraa-s, for which mokshaa is indicated as the result".

To this, the poorva pakshin may suggest "If there is no ritual in the Vedaa-s for attainment of mokshaa, why not we invent or devise a suitable karmaa?" Verse 27 pre-empts this possible suggestion, by saying: "Imagination or creativity cannot be a valid source (pramaanam) in matters concerning aloukika or apourusheya subjects like mokshaa. For worldly matters, you can devise your own methods. But, for aloukika vishayaa, saasthraa-s are the only pramaanam".

- अयं साध्य साधन भावः - This relationship between 'means' and 'end',
- पारलौकिकः - in subjects of aloukika nature
- वचनात्) एव निश्चितः - is to be ascertained only through scriptures.

The 'ends' of the 'means' are two-fold : (1) 'aloukika' – 'relating to this world' and (2) 'aloukika' or 'paaramaarthika' – 'not relating to this world'. Mokshaa is an aloukika result and when one needs to know as to what will lead to mokshaa, one has to get the information only from the saasthraa-s.

The view that "saasthraa-s do not talk of any karmaa for mokshapalan" is stated in the second line of the verse.

- श्रुतेः वक्त्रात् - From the mouth of the vedaa-s,
- मोक्षदं कर्म न अश्रौषं - we have never heard of a karma, which will give mokshaa,
- कथंचन - in any manner (whether as nithyaa or naimitthikaa or kaamyaa).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 28:

अभ्युपगतभ्युपगमाच्च श्वश्रूनिर्गच्छोक्तिवत्भवतो निष्प्रयोजनः प्रलापः ।

Moreover, you are repeating what the advocate of knowledge also holds and hence your talk is superfluous. It is like the mother-in-law calling back the guest refused by the daughter-in-law, so that she may exercise the privilege of refusing.

Verses 24 to 27 refuted the poorva pakshin's statement given in verse no. 9, namely, "As release is effected by actions, what is there for knowledge to accomplish?" From verse 10 to verse 13, the poorva pakshin had given a list of suggestions, in support of his above statement, as to how, totally ignoring comprehension of the Self, by mere 'judicious management' of the karma-s, the seeker can attain mokshaa.

"Renunciation of kaamyaa karma-s, avoidance of nishiddha karmaa-s and diligent and unflinching performance of nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s will lead to mokshaa" was his suggestion.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says that the poorva pakshin had not suggested anything new. Vedhaanthin-s also prescribe avoidance of kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaa-s and unflinching performance of nithya-naimitthika karmaa-s. Hence, the poorva pakshin's giving this advice, is similar to the well-known example of the mother-in-law calling back the guest refused by the daughter-in-law, so that she could exercise her authority to refuse to entertain the guest.

- अभ्युपगत - Whatever is accepted by us (in relation to the pancha karmaani)
- अभ्युपगमाः च - is accepted by you and vice versa.
- भवतः प्रलापः निष्प्रयोजनः - Therefore, your statement (namely, talking to us, of the pancha karmaani) is akin to useless / superfluous blabber,
- श्वश्रूनिर्गच्छोक्तिवत् - similar to the statement 'go away' of the mother-in-law.

Chapter I: Verse 28 –

निषिद्धकामयोस्त्यागस्त्वयापीष्टो यथा मया ।

नित्यस्यापलवत्त्वाच्च न मोक्ष :कर्मसाधन :॥ २८ ॥

Like me you also desire the renunciation of prohibited and desire-prompted actions. Obligatory action is said to produce no result. Hence release is not effected by any action.

- निषिद्ध कामयो : त्यागः - "Giving up" of nishiddha and kaamyā karmaa-s
- त्वया अपीष्ट : - is desired by you,
- यथा मया - just as desired by me.
- नित्यस्य अपलवत्त्वात् च - As for nithya-naimitthika karmaani, since they also do not give mokshaa as a result,
- मोक्ष : कर्मसाधन :न - mokshaa cannot be the result of any karmaa.

By the first line of the verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out: "Since the poorva pakshin also advocates renunciation of kaamyā and nishiddha karmaani, the view, that, performance of kaamyā and nishiddha karmaani cannot give mokshaa, is obviously accepted by the poorva pakshin also."

As for nithya-naimitthika karmaani, they should be performed; but, not for mokshaa. They give results that are different from mokshaa. The poorva meemaamsakaa says that they are done for avoidance of prathyavaaya paapam, while the Vedhaanthin holds, that, they are meant for dhuritha kshayam. Thus, both admit that the result of nithya-naimitthika karmaani is not mokshaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) of Verse 29:

एवं तावत् मुक्ते : क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वात् "इति निरस्तोऽयं पक्षः ।

Thus the position that release is effected by actions (verse 9) stands refuted.

Sureswaraachaaryaa tells the poorva pakshin: "I have clearly refuted your view", referring to the poorva pakshin's statement in verse 9, "mukthe: kriyaabhi: siddhathvaath" meaning "since liberation is achieved by actions (karmaani)".

Sambhandha gadhyam of Verse 29 (contd.):

अथाधुना सर्वकर्मप्रवृत्तिहेतुनिरूपणेन यथावस्तितात्मवस्तुविषयकेवलज्ञानमात्रादेव सकलसंसारानर्थनिवृत्तिरितीमं पक्षं द्रढयितुकाम आह ।

Now, with a view to strengthen the position, that all evils of transmigratory existence are subject to elimination only through the knowledge of the real nature of the Self by an account of the cause of all actions, the author proceeds to say the following:

In verse 24, Sureswaraacharyaa had made a statement – “karmapalan is only of four types – production, reaching, modification or refinement; and, mokshaa does not fall under any of them”. By this one statement itself, all the systems imagining mokshaa as a “place to be reached” / “destination” are indirectly dismissed by the Aachaaryaa.

“Mokshaa is not aapthi.” is the Aachaaryaa’s statement.

“Then, what is mokshaa?” will be the question. Sureswaraacharyaa did not elaborate - but, briefly said “ajanaa nivrutthi maathram is mokshaa” – “mere removal of ignorance is liberation”. He has to, therefore, establish two points now: (1) mokshaa is only ajanaa nivrutthi and (2) karmaa cannot remove ajnaanam. Henceforth, this is what the Aachaaryaa does.

The second point, namely, ‘karmaa cannot remove ignorance’ is taken up first.

The reason for this view is that “karmaa is itself born out of ignorance. Ignorance being the cause of karmaa, the essential nature also of karmaa is ‘ignorance’, since cause and effect are of the same essential nature. Thus, being the ‘result’ of ignorance and of the ‘nature’ of ignorance, karmaa cannot destroy ignorance”.

The poorva pakshin may ask: “Are you referring to loukika karmaa or vaidhika karmaa, when you say that karmaa cannot remove ignorance?”

The Aachaaryaa says, in reply to this possible question: “Neither loukika karmaa nor vaidhika karmaa can remove ignorance. Vaidhika karmaa, however holy, is also a product of ignorance and, therefore, cannot destroy ignorance and, therefore, cannot give mokshaa”.

An individual committed to vaidhika karmaa is a ‘religious’ person; but, not a ‘spiritual’ person. Only when ‘self-ignorance removal’ is attempted by him, he becomes ‘spiritual’.

- यथावस्थित आत्मवस्तु विषय केवल ज्ञानमात्रात् एव - “Merely by the knowledge of the ‘Self’, ‘as it is’, ‘Yathaavasthitha’ means ‘as it is’. This description is significant. “I am apoorna.” is, unfortunately, the universally held wrong belief. It is this misconception that causes the ‘search’ for a better future and the consequent ‘struggle’ for a better future, and, therefore, leads to ‘action’.

"I am poorna; here and now; there is no question of a better future; and, therefore, there is no question of any 'struggle' using either vaidhika karmaa or loukika karmaa" is the true and real jnaanam.

Swami Dayananda Saraswathi stresses: "'Trying to be different from what I am' is the struggle that binds. 'I do not have to be different from what I am now. I am perfectly OK, as I am' is the knowledge that will give mokshaa".

'Yathaa avasthitha' is an adjective to aathmaa, stressing this aspect; it can therefore, be interpreted as 'poorna'. 'Yathaa avasthitha aathma vishaya' can, therefore, be interpreted as 'poorna aathma vishaya'.

An interesting question: "Will an apoorna, can be modified by worldly struggles, to be a poorna?" The answer is: "No, it cannot be. It will become only a different apoorna:", similar to an ajnaani brahmachari becoming an ajnaani grihasthaa.

Worldly struggles are undertaken for 'changing' the perceived 'apoornathvam' and not for 'jnaanam'. The worldly struggles convert the 'struggler' from one form of apoornaa to only another form of apoornaa. The true 'struggle' should be to convert the 'ajnaani I' to the 'jnaani I'. This is the aim of the jnaana kaandaa of the Vedaa-s.

- सकल सम्सार अनर्थ निवृत्ति) : भवति(- the elimination of the grief caused by samsaraa (results)".

'anartha' means 'grief' or 'problems'; 'nivrutthi:' means 'elimination'.

Karmakaandaa converts the karmi from one type of apoornaa to another type of apoornaa. It is the jnaanakaandaa, which achieves conversion of the 'ajnaani I' to the 'jnaani I'.

- अथ अधुना - Now, at this time,
- इति इमं पक्षं द्रढयितुकामः - with a desire to reinforce this view of ours,
- सर्व कर्म प्रवृत्ति हेतु निरूपणेन - by establishing the cause for the pursuit of all karmaa-s – loukika and vaidhika,

'sarva karmaa' – all types of karma, both loukika and vaidhika ; 'pravrutthi' – pursuit ; 'hethu' – cause ; 'niroopanena' – by establishing.

Later, Sureswaraachaaryaa is going to say that any action that is undertaken, is a stamp of reinforcement of self-ignorance.

"Sarva karma pravrutthi hethu is ajnaanaa" – "the cause for the pursuit of any action is self-ignorance" is what is going to be established by the Aachaaryaa. By establishing this, he can show that jnaanam is the only means to mokshaa.

A question arises: "Is not the pursuit of jnaanam also a form of karmaa, since all efforts are karmaa?" This question is followed by another: "If this is so, i.e. if 'pursuit of jnaanam' is also a karmaa, then will not mokshaa become a karmapalan?"

How does one resolve these questions or doubts?

This subject is discussed by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam – samanvaya soothraa – 1.1.4. In the relevant portion, the question "Since 'meditation' is considered a 'mental action', is not 'knowledge' also a 'mental action'?" is raised. In replying this question, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa firmly establishes that "Jnaanam does not come under karmaa." The arguments furnished by him, in support, are not presented here, but, will be discussed in a later context. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa deals with the subject in one of his prakaranam-s also, named, 'Sarva Vedhaantha Siddhartha Saara Sangraha'.

- इह चेदं परीक्ष्यते ।

Here, this has to be examined.

- इह च - Here,
- इदं परीक्ष्यते - we are examining our theories.

The idea is to make the theories firm in our minds; to make sure that the study is not just superficial, but, a thorough and deep study to help assimilation of the theories.

All our struggles in life are because of 'self-ignorance'. Both loukika and vaidhika karma pravrutthi-s are because of ignorance. The struggles, therefore, will never end without jnaanam. Looking to achieve a better future through loukika and vaidhika karmaani, is a blunder. This braanthi – misconception – should be got rid of. Hence, the Aachaaryaa discusses these theories in detail.

He talks about various types of vaidhika karma pravrutthi – kaamyaa, nithya-naimitthika, praayaschittha and nishiddha karmaani.

He says: "Because of ignorance, people venture into nishiddha karmaani, even though they are prohibited by saasthraa-s. But, not only nishiddha karmaani; even the venture into nithya-naimitthika karmaani is also because of 'ignorance' only. Any action – even right action – is because of ignorance only".

16. Chapter I, Verse 29 (29-07-2006)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 29 (contd.) :

किं यथा प्रतिषिद्धेषु च कर्मसु स्वाभाविकस्वाशयोत्थ निमित्तवशादेवेदं

There are well-known instinctive actions and bad actions. Men distinguish good and bad in the light of their natural empirical reason. Even as a deluded person goes to a mirage to quench his thirst, people endeavour, by themselves, to attain or avoid what they thus regard as good and bad, through the adoption of means regarded as conducive to the respective ends by common sense. In the matter of (i) actions supposed to lead to higher goods (ii) actions promoted by desire and (iii) the obligatory actions, is the situation the same ? Or is there any other source of motivation ?

Sureswaraachaaryaa is negating karma vaadhaa. He had given a few arguments against the poorva pakshin from verse 24 to verse 28. He wants to reinforce those arguments by a deeper enquiry, in which, he wants to establish, that:

- (1) all types of activities, worldly and religious (lokika and saasthreeya), are born of ajnaanam only;
- (2) since karmaa is, thus, born out of ajnaanam, it cannot destroy ajnaanam – on the other hand, it will only reinforce ajnaanam ;
- (3) mokshaa is ajnaana nivrutthi;
- (4) since karmaa cannot destroy ajnaanam, it cannot give mokshaa, either independently or in association with jnaanam and, finally
- (5) jnaanam alone (mere knowledge) is moksha kaaranam.

In the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 29, the Aachaaryaa wants to emphasize this trend of his arguments.

He started the sambhandha gadhyam by saying “मुक्तेः क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वात्” इति निरस्तोऽयं पक्षः” Thus the poorva pakshin’s position (stated by the poorva pakshin in verse 9), that, ‘release is effected by actions’ stands refuted”.

Then he stated his intention: “अथाधुना सर्वकर्म प्रवृत्तिहेतु निरूपणेन यथा अवस्थित आत्मवस्तु विषय केवल ज्ञानमात्रात् एव सकल संसार अनर्थ निवृत्तिः इति इमं पक्षं द्रढयितुकाम आह।इह च इदं परीक्ष्यते।”

"Now, to reinforce the teaching that 'only through the clear knowledge of the real pancha kosa vilakshana aathmaa, all evils connected by samsaaraa can be eliminated', by establishing the cause of pursuit of all types of actions as 'ignorance', I proceed to say the following. In the following portion, the idea is to be examined".

In the first sentence above, the word 'jnaana' is preceded by 'kevala' and followed by 'maathra'. 'Kevala' and 'maathra' are synonymous, both generally meaning 'only'. Then, why use of both words? In this context, 'kevala' means 'samyak' or 'clear', while 'maathra' means 'mere' or 'only'.

When Sureswaraachaaryaa says "Karmaa cannot give mokshaa; only jnaanam can", the questions "Is not jnaanam also a form of karmaa? Is there, at all, a difference between karmaa and jnaanam?" may arise.

The Vedhaanthin answers: "No, jnaanam is not a form of karma. As for differences between them, there are at least two".

The first difference : "The nature / process of action is always determined or governed by the subject, whereas, the nature / process of knowledge that is acquired, is not determined by the subject, but, by the object".

Karmaa is karthru thanthram and jnaanaa is vasthu thanthram or vishaya thanthram.

A simple example will make this clear – "reading a newspaper". The reader chooses the subject that he wants to read and turns to the relevant page. This is karmaa, based on the reader's decision and control. The 'turning action' is karthru thanthram.

After turning to the required page and starting the use of the jnaanendriyaa, his eyes, 'knowledge' is collected by the reader; but, the 'knowledge' is based not on the will of the reader, but, on the event reported.

The action (karmaa) done, using the karmendriyaa was the individual's choice. But, he cannot choose the 'knowledge' (jnaanaa) acquired through his jnaanendriyaa. It is the object (vishayaa) that determines the 'knowledge' (jnaanam).

The Swamiji's class may be cited as another example. What the student listens to (jnaanam) is not his choice; the vishayaa decides it. But, the manner, the language and the content of the notes made by the student (karmaa) are all subject to the student's will and choice.

A third example can also be cited. This is given by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Brahma soothra Bhaashyam, while dealing with Samanvaya Adhyaayaa : the difference between

- (1) merely looking at a stone and gathering the knowledge (jnaanam) that it is a stone, on which 'knowledge', there is no choice, and
- (2) invoking an ishta devathaa on the stone, for Pujaa or Upaasanaa, which is a karmaa, on which the individual has a choice.

The second difference between jnaanam and karma : Jnaanam cannot bring about a change in the field or object of 'knowledge'. In other words, no change to the 'object of perception', takes place, by any amount of perception. This is expressed as "Jnaanam na kaarakam". It is only 'prakaasakam' or 'revealing'. Jnaanam reveals a thing "as it is".

Karmaa , on the other hand, is a kaarakam – it does bring about a change on the object or field it deals with, in one of the four ways (as discussed earlier) – (i) uthpatthi:, (ii) aapthi:, (iii) vikhaara: and (iv) samsuddhi:

It is to be noted, that, in the Vedhaanthic context also, jnaanam (aathma jnaanam) does not 'produce' mokshaa. It only 'reveals' the nature of aathmaa, 'as it is'. Jnaanam is not kaayika karmaa or vaachika karmaa nor even maanasa karmaa. "Jnaanena vishaya adhisaya ajanaka akarthathvaath" which means "since a change in the object is not brought about, by jnaanam", jnaanam is not karmaa.

Before proceeding further into the text of this sambhandha gadhyam (of verse 29), a gist of the Aachaarya's 'enquiry' / 'examination' (pareekshyathe), may be presented, as below:

Many actions are done by the individual, not because of saasthraas' injunctions (saasthra chodhanaa), but, because of the individual's desire and hatred (raaghaa and dveshaa). Both the poorva pakshin (the karma vaadhin) and the Vedhaanthin agree on this, namely, that, naturally born raagha-dveshaa is the force behind actions done without saasthra chodhanaa. Raagha-dveshaa is pravrutthi hethu.

Some of the actions thus undertaken may be even nishiddhaa (forbidden) by the saasthraa-s. When the 'doer' does not know saasthraa-s or value saasthraa-s, he indulges in these wrong actions, only because of his raagha-dveshaa. In the vision of the saasthraa-s, these wrong actions will produce dhu:kham. But, the 'doer' does not know that they are dhu:kha kaaranam and because of ajnaanam and mithyaa jnaanam, he performs the wrong actions. Where there is dhu:kham, as revealed by the saasthraa-s, he perceives sukham, because of mithyaa jnaanam and the mithyaa jnaana based raagha-dveshaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives an example to these misconceived ventures : "going after mirage water". Mithyaa jnaanam, namely, imagination of water where there is none, is the reason behind this fruitless action.

The Aachaaryaa first asks the poorva pakshin: "Is the performance of nishiddha karmaa-s, because of raagha-dveshaa based mithyaa jnaanam or because of saasthra chodhanaa?"

The poorva-pakshin answers: "Performance of nishiddha karmaa-s is because of raagha-dveshaa, which, in turn, is based on mithyaa jnaanam, the misconception that it will give benefits", i.e., he agrees that 'pursuit of nishiddha karmaanl is because of raagha-dveshaa and mithyaa jnaanam.

Thereafter, Sureswaraachaaryaa asks: "What about nithya-naimitthika karmaani and kaamyaa karmaanl? Are they also based on raagha-dveshaa or based on saasthric injunctions?" He calls on the poorva pakshin to enquire into this elaborately.

This 'enquiry' or 'examination' (as the Aachaaryaa calls it) and the answer to the question as to "whether the nithya-naimitthika karmaani and kaamyaa-karmaani are mithyaa jnaanam based or saasthra-chodhanaa based" are very important.

The Aachaaryaa starts with the nishiddha karmaani, since, with regard to them, the poorva pakshin has no difference of opinion with the Vedhaanthin.

Reverting to the text:

- स्वयं एव प्रवर्तते - (The individual) ventures by himself
- प्रतिषिद्धेषु कर्मसु - into prohibited actions,
- निमित्त वशात् एव - based purely on causal factors,
- स्वाभाविक - which factors are natural to oneself
- स्वाशय उत्थ - and which factors arise in one's own mind, namely,

'svaabhaavika' and 'svaasya uttha' are adjectives to 'nimittha'.

- इदं हितं इदं अहितं इति विशेषान् परिकल्प्य - the imagined notions 'this is good for me' and 'this is not good for me' etc.,

A prohibited action (for example, 'smoking') is believed to be good for the well-being of the 'doer', because of his mithyaa jnaanam.

- लौकिक प्रमाण प्रसिद्धानि एव साधनानि उपादाय - resorting to 'means' arrived at, through loukika pramaanaa-s,

'prasiddhaanl means 'arrived at'; 'upaadhaaya' means 'resorting to'.

Saasthraa-s do not play any role in such activities. They are based only on the individual's raagha-dveshaa (likes and dislikes).

- हितप्राप्तये अहितनिरासाय च - to obtain (what he considers) sukham and to eliminate (what he considers) dhu:kham,
- मृगतृष्णिक उदक पिपासुः इव - similar to a thirsty traveler in the desert who looks to satiate his thirst from the mirage water.

The essence of this portion of the sambhandha gadhyam is: "The performer of prohibited actions, based on his instinctive likes and dislikes, considers something as good for him and something else as bad for him and resorting to purely worldly means available to him, without any reference to saasthraa-s, endeavours to attain what he regards as good and eliminate what he regards as bad, through the performance of the prohibited actions. This is very similar to a person running after the non-existent water of a mirage".

Up to this, the subject is nishiddha karmaani, where the poorva pakshin also agrees, that, performance of prohibited actions is based on raagha dveshaa and mithyaa jnaanam and not on saasthra vidhi nishedham. A corollary of this conclusion is, that, "since the nishiddha karmaa-s are nourished by 'ignorance', they cannot remove ignorance; on the other hand, they will reinforce ignorance". The poorva pakshin has no problems, in accepting this also, with regard to nishiddha karmaa-s.

Sureswaraachaaryaa proceeds to say that the same is true about vaidhika karmaani also; that, they are also born out of 'ignorance' only (mithyaa jnaana janaka eva).

- अदृष्टार्थेषु काम्येषु - With regard to kaamya karmaa-s (which produce punyam now and consequent sukham later), Punyam resulting from the kaamya karmaani and the sukham, the fruit of the punyam acquired through the kaamya karmaani, are both invisible. Hence the use of the word 'adrishta', to describe them.

- नित्येषु कर्मसु च - and also nithya karmaani (meant to avoid prathyavaayapaanam),
- तत्र प्रवृत्ति निवृत्ति निमित्तं - the causal factor for performance of or withdrawal from them ,
- किं तथा एव वा अन्यदेव इति - is the same as for nishiddha karmaani or different, (is to be enquired into).

The query "Are kaamya karmaani and nithya-naimitthika karmaani also born out of mithyaa jnaanam, similar to nishiddha karmaani ?" is conveyed by the term 'thathaa eva'.

"Or, is there any causal factor, other than mithyaa jnaanam, for the performance of nithya and kaamya karmaani?" is the Aachaaryaa's query, by the term 'anyadeva'. The Aachaaryaa has "saasthric injunction" in mind, when he asks for the causal factor.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 29 (contd.):

But, what is the use of this enquiry?

- अतः - By this enquiry (namely, 'are nithya – kaamyaa karmaani based on Vedic injunctions or mithyaa jnaanam?)
- किंच - what is the prayojanam?

This question is from a passer-by, neither by the poorva pakshin nor by the Vedhaanthin.

"Nishprayojana vichaara: na karthavya:" – "Do not indulge in useless enquiry" is a saasthric rule.

'Kimchaatha:' is a commonly used term in Saankara Bhaashyam-s also.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 29 (contd.) :

यद्येवं श्रुणु |

I shall explain. Listen.

- श्रुणु - Listen to
- यद्येवं- what I have to say

Sureswaraachaaryaa considers this enquiry very crucial. Why? It is explained as below:

If nithya-naimitthika karmaani and kaamyaa karmaani are based on Saasthric injunctions, they are 'right' actions, from 'valid' sources, which actions will produce 'good' in the future. The poorva meemaamsakaa will be proved right, on this point, while the Vedhaanthin will be the loser.

If, on the other hand, these actions are also based on ajnaanam or mithyaa jnaanam, as Sureswaraachaaryaa firmly believes, even the vaidhika karmaani will not remove ajnaanam and mokshaa will not be attained. The poorva meemaamsakaa will be indulging only in futile actions, born out of ignorance, based on mithyaa jnaanam. The Vedhaanthin's views will stand vindicated.

Hence this enquiry is very important in the refutation of karma vaadhaa.

17. Chapter I, Verse 29 (05-08-2006)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 29 (contd.):

यदि तावध्यथावस्थितवस्तुसम्यग्ज्ञानं प्रमाणभूतं लौकिकमागमिकं वा प्रवृत्ति निवृत्ति निमित्तमिति निश्चीयते
निवृत्तिशास्त्रं च नाभ्युगम्यते तदा हताः कर्मत्यागिनो
भ्रान्तिविज्ञानमात्रावष्टम्भादलौकिकप्रमाणोपात्तकर्मानुष्ठानत्यागत्वाच्च।
अथ मृगतृष्णिकोदकपिपासुप्रवृत्तिनिमित्तवदयथावस्तुभ्रान्तिविज्ञानमेव सर्वप्रवृत्तिनिमित्तं तदा वर्द्धमहे वयं
हताः स्थ यूयमिति ।

If the question is answered in the affirmative, the following consequence arises. If, on the one hand, the source of motivation is true knowledge of reality acquired through empirical modes of knowledge or the scriptural and if the scripture preaching renunciation of actions, is not accepted, then those who renounce actions stand condemned, for, depending on false authorities, they discard actions enjoined by the transcendent authority of the scriptures. If, on the other hand, it is conceded that all their actions are actuated by false understanding, as that of the man seeking to quench his thirst in the mirage, we triumph and you stand condemned.

After introducing, in verses 9 to 22, three types of poorva pakshin-s, who are all karmavadhin-s of one type or another, Sureswaraachaaryaa is negating them, one by one, in the portions from verse 23. The refutation of the first group is done in verses 23 to 53.

Initially, the Aachaaryaa gave general arguments. His first argument was that the result of any karmaa will fall under four types – uthpatthi:, aapthi:, vikhaara: and samsuddhi: / Mokshaa, being only ajnaana nivrutthi: or jnaana praapthi:, is something different from all of them and will not come under the chathurvidha karmapalan.

Subsequently, he pointed out, that, the scriptures, even while prescribing the various karmaa-s, have also clearly enunciated the results of each of the karmaa-s; and, that, all the results enunciated by them are different from mokshaa. There is no specific karmaa prescribed in the scriptures for mokshaa, nor any karmapalan mentioned as mokshaa.

Then, the Aachaaryaa enters into further analysis: What is the cause of any karmaa? "Karmahethu: ka:?" The Aachaaryaa's intention is to establish that karmaa-s are done because of ajnaanam or mithyaa jnaanam. And, having been born of misconception (mithyaa jnaanam), karmaa-s cannot destroy ajnaanam.

Does this analysis include both loutika and vaidhika karmaa-s? The general perception is, that, loutika karmaa-s are born out of ignorance, while vaidhika karmaa-s, since they are prescribed by the Veda-s, which are considered valid sources, should be born out of 'right' knowledge. But, Sureswaraacharya's view is, that, even vaidhika karmaani are born out of mithyaa jnaanam only; and, therefore, they also will not destroy ignorance; but, will only nourish ignorance.

With the intention to establish his view, the Aachaaryaa enters into the enquiry "Is Vaidhika karmaa born out of right knowledge or misconception?"

He had already talked of nishiddha karmmani and had asserted that they are done only because of misconception. Obviously Vedic knowledge cannot be the cause of nishiddha karmaani, because Vedaa-s reject / prohibit them. Only one's own wrong understanding (mithyaa jnaanam) leads to nishiddha karmaani. Svaabhaavika karmaa-s, like bathing, taking food etc., are also not born out of Vedic knowledge or injunctions. With these examples, it can be concluded, without dispute, that, there are karmaa-s, which do not have Vedic backing.

Now, the Aachaaryaa comes to the crucial point: "Vaidhika karmaa-s, like sandhyavandhanam, should have some back-up knowledge. Is it right knowledge given by the Vedaa-s or mithyaa jnaanam?" The Aachaaryaa says, "this has to be enquired into" – "anyath eva thathra pravrutthi nivrutthi nimittam ithi" and starts the enquiry:

- यथावस्थित वस्तु सम्यग्ज्ञानं - "True knowledge of reality,
- प्रमाणभूतं - born out of valid sources,
- लौकिकं आगमिकं वा - either worldly (empirical) or saasthric,
- प्रवृत्ति निवृत्ति निमित्तं - is the cause of pursuit / withdrawal of vaidhika karmaani");
- इति यदि निश्चीयते - if we decide so (and)
- निवृत्ति शास्त्रं - the jnaana kaandaa of the Vedaa-s (where karmaa-s are renounced)
- न अभ्युगमते - is also not accepted,
- तदा - in that situation,
- कर्मत्यागिनः - those who have given up karmaa-s (referring to sanayaasin-s)
- हताः - will be ruined,
- भ्रान्ति विज्ञान मात्र अवष्टम्भात् - because of the wrong conception that only 'knowledge' is needed as 'support' to achieve liberation,
- अलौकिक प्रमाण उपात्त कर्मानुष्ठान त्यागित्वात् च - and also because of renunciation of the karmaa-s enjoined by Vedic injunctions.

The essence: "If it is concluded that vaidhika karmaani are born out of right knowledge, the result is that those who consider jnaanam as the only means to mokshaa and, therefore, have renounced the vaidhika karmaa-s, are ruined".

On the other hand, if the conclusion is, that, vaidhika karmaa-s are also born out of misconception, as Sureswaraachaaryaa believes, what is the result?

- अथ - If, on the other hand,
- मृगतृष्णिकोदक पिपासुप्रवृत्ति निमित्तवत् - "Similar to the man seeking to quench his thirst in the mirage,
- अयथावस्तुभ्रान्तिविज्ञानमेव - only misconception / false understanding
- सर्व प्रवृत्ति निमित्तं - is the cause of all actions";
- (इति यदि निश्चीयते - if we decide so,
- तदा वयं वद्मामहे - then, we (the Vedhaanthin-s) are on the right path.
- हताःस्थ यूयम् - You (karmi-s) stand condemned / are ruined.

This is re-assurance to the Vedhaanthic student.

Chapter I: Verse 29 –

हितं संप्रेप्सतां मोहादहितं च जिहासताम् ।
उपायान्प्राप्तिहानार्थान् शास्त्रं भासयतेऽर्कवत् । 29 ॥

The scripture is like the sun. It sheds light on the means of attaining and of avoiding ends, which men seek through delusion.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives one of the cardinal principles of Vedhaanthaa, in a nutshell, in this verse. He elaborates on the subject later. This verse is, therefore, a very important, profound and valid verse.

The Aachaaryaa says, that the Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa is not the cause of action. It is a pramaanam, but, which generates only knowledge and not action. The job of any pramaanam is only 'generation of knowledge' – not of action. Once the 'knowledge' is generated, the job of the pramaanam is complete.

A loukikaa example can be given for this: "The information from a newspaper on a possible 'goal' (saadhyam), through a 'means' (saadhanam). The newspaper, the pramaanam in this example, has generated saadhya jnaanam, saadhana jnaanam and saadhya-saadhana-sambhandha jnaanam (knowledge of a goal, knowledge of the means and knowledge of the relationship between the two). But, the newspaper is not responsible for any 'action' that follows the 'knowledge'.

This fact is succinctly expressed in Sanskrit as "Pramaanam bhodhakam eva bhavathi ; na kaarakam" or as "Pramaanam jnaana janakam eva bhavathi; naiva karma janakam".

This is only the first principle. Proceeding further, it is not only the pramaanam which is not karma janakam, but, even the pramaana janaka jnaanam is not karma janakam. In other words, not even the 'knowledge' generated by the pramaanam can be considered as responsible for the 'action' that follows the 'knowledge'. Both the pramaanam and the knowledge generated by the pramaanam, only throw light on the karmaa. They are not 'generators' of karmaa.

The question follows: "In that case, what is the generator of karmaa? (Pravarthakam / karmajanakam kim? / What is the reason for karmapravrutthi?)"

The answer is: Kaama: eva sarva karma janakam. (Desire alone is the cause of karmaa) .

In the manner as in the example of the newspaper, Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa also is not responsible for karmaa. It gives only knowledge on the various karmaa-s – maanasa, vaachika and kaayika karmaani. The results of the karmaa-s (saadhyam-s) and the relationships (sambhandhaa) between the two, namely, saadhyam-s and saadhanam-s, are all given. But, all the five types of karmaa-s are carried out only because of kaamaa (desire) and nothing but kaamaa.

Then, the next question arises: "What generates desire?"

The detailed analysis will be as follows:

Different people have different desires. The very fact that they engage themselves in different karmaa-s proves this. "But" Sureswaraachaaryaa points out. "All karmaa-s are only superficially different. They can be reduced to two types – both types centered on 'I' – i.e., both types are self-centered".

The two types are:

- (1) Sukha praapthi icchaa – desire to acquire happiness and
- (2) Dhu:kha nivrutthi icchaa – desire to get rid of grief.

The desire to 'acquire' (praapthi icchaa) is termed prepsaa and the desire 'to get rid of' (haana icchaa) is termed jahaasaa.

Every human being is driven by one of these desires only. What is the fundamental reason for these two desires?

Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, each of this self-centered desire is based on two assumptions.

When I want sukham, my assumptions are

- (1) that, I do not have sukham, and
- (2) that, my 'action' will give me shukham.

Likewise, when I want to get rid of dhu:kham, my assumptions are

- (1) that, I have dhu:kham, and
- (2) that, my 'action' will remove my dhu:kham.

All desires are based the above four assumptions.

Having thus analyzed the cause for desire, Sureswaraachaaryaa further argues:

All the four assumptions are mithyaa jnaanam or error/misconception. This misconception is because of self-ignorance – the ignorance of the fact, that, "I need not get aanandhaa from outside; nor do I require to remove my grief using external factors".

It is this ignorance which leads to action/kaaryaa , both vaidhika karmaani and loukika karmaani.

Vedaa-s are not responsible for the kaaryaa-s. They only give information.

Because of the above fact, viz., that, 'it is only ignorance which leads to action', vaidhika karmaa-s also will not remove ignorance. They will only reinforce ignorance.

Reverting to the text (verse 29):

- शास्त्रं भासयते - Veda poorva bhaaghaa throws light on
- उपायान् - various saadhanaa-s (the means)
- प्राप्ति हान अर्थान् - for getting various goals (like svarghaa) and for avoiding various destinations (like narakaa),
- अर्कवत् - like the sun (which also only illumines; but, does not decide your actions).

"Which saadhanaa will give you which saadhyaa etc." is also given by the Vedaa-s.

18. Chapter I, Verse 29 and 30 (12-08-2006)

In this important portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to establish that even vaidhika pravrutthi – Vedic actions – are born out of ignorance only; that, mithyaa jnaanam is the cause of all actions - loukikaa or vaidhikaa. This view is in contrast to the poorva meemaamsaka matham, which claims “Vedic activities are born out of right knowledge only”. The poorva meemaamsakaa holds : “Vedaa is a valid source – pramaanam. Vedic knowledge is right knowledge. Vedaa persuades one into action. Vaidhika karmaani, are, therefore, born out of right Vedic knowledge. Loukika karmaani may be born out of wrong knowledge, misconception and error – but, not vaidhika karmaani. Vedaa alone is pravarthakaa for vaidhika karmaani.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, on the other hand, firmly refutes these views. He holds that any pramaanam only gives knowledge (information), but, is not responsible for generating action. Neither the pramaanam nor the pramaana janya jnaanam can be considered responsible for action. (As earlier cited, the mere information that a newspaper gives, about the various programmes in the City, cannot be considered to be the cause for the reader to attend any particular programme. If the newspaper or the information from the newspaper were to be considered responsible, then all the readers should be attending all the programmes, which does not happen, nor is possible).

Then, what is responsible for ‘action’? Sureswaraachaaryaa answers: ‘Desire’. He says: “After getting the information, the individual ‘desires’ and acts”. Expressed in Sanskrit: “Jaanaathi, icchathi, pravarthithi”. According to the Aachaaryaa, the direct cause for action is only ‘desire’.

He says: “Vedaa-s never command a person to perform a ritual. It only gives information as to what are bad karmaa-s, what are good karmaa-s, what are the results of good and bad karmaa-s (saadhana-saadhya-sambhandham) etc.

“The vaidhika karma jnaanam is decided by the Vedaa-s; but, the karma pravrutthi, is not decided by the Vedaa-s. It is decided only by the ‘desire’ of the individual”.

Of course, there are some direct commandments in the Vedaa-s (not related to karmaa or upaasanaa), such as ‘sathyam vadha’ etc. But, even adherence to these direct commandments, depends only on the choice of the individual, based on his ‘desire’.

Reverting to the text (verse 29):

- शास्त्रं उपायान् भासयते - Vedaa-s reveal the various saadhanaa-s
- प्राप्ति हान अर्थान् - for attainment or removal of the various saadhyaa-s,

- अर्कवत् - similar to the sun.

The implication of the example, is, that, similar to the sun, which only illumines the roads and different routes, but, does not decide the route to be taken, Vedaa-s only provide information on the saadhyaa-s and the saadhanaa-s, but, do not force or command any action.

Why, then, does an individual venture into 'action'? The answer is in the first line of the verse:

- मोहात् - Because of misconception / delusion, which consists of
- हितं संप्रेप्सतां - the desire to attain sukham (sukha praapthi icchaa),
- अहितं च जिहासताम् - and the desire to remove dhu:kham (dhu:kha nivrutthi icchaa).

This gives rise to further queries: What generates desire? Does Vedaa or the Veda janya jnaanam generate desire?

Sureswaraachaaryaa answers: "Vedaa is only a pramaanam, and, therefore, does not generate desire, just as it does not generate action. Likewise, pramaana janya jnaanam also does not produce desire.

"It is only the conclusion of the individual, that, a particular action will produce hitham or sukham or the conclusion that a particular action will remove ahitham or dhu:kham. Only these 'self-analyzed' and 'self-arrived at' conclusions cause desire".

Are these conclusions 'right knowledge' or 'wrong knowledge'? The Aachaaryaa answers this also and declares that the conclusions are based on a fundamental blunder, namely, the wrong assumptions:

- (1) I do not have sukham
- (2) This particular action will give me sukham
- (3) I have got dhu:kham, and
- (4) This particular action will remove dhu:kham.

All four assumptions are wrong, since

- (1) aathmaa is aanandha svaroopaa:
- (2) therefore, nothing in the world need give sukham, nor, can anything give sukham
- (3) aathmaa is dhu:kha rahitha: and
- (4) therefore, nothing in the world need remove dhu:kham, nor, can anything remove dhu:kham".

“Hence” the Aachaaryaa concludes: “only ‘self-analyzed’ and ‘self-arrived at’ wrong conclusions are the causes for all actions”. In fact, this is a basic siddhaanthaa of the Vedhaanthin. Sankara Bhavadh Paadhaa also establishes this in his Adhyaasa Bhaashyam – that, all actions, loukikaa or saathreeyaa, are because of erroneous self-conclusions.

Sureswaraachaaryaa conveys this, in this verse, by the significant word ‘mohaath’.

This does not mean that, the individual should totally ‘give up’ relationships or possessions. No. What are to be given up are the wrong expectations from them. It should be recognized that relationships or possessions cannot give lasting or permanent aanandhaa.

The Aachaaryaa’s firm conviction is: Any activity is born out of ignorance only.

Verse 17 – Chapter III, of the Bhagavadh Githa, is relevant here. It declares:

यस्त्वात्मरतिरेव स्यादात्मतृप्तश्च मानवः |

आत्मन्येव च सन्तुष्टस्तस्य कार्यं न विद्यते ||३- १७||

yastvātmaratirēva syādātmatrptaśca mānavaḥ |

ātmanyēva ca santuṣṭastasya kāryaṁ na vidyatē ||3- 17||

meaning “ However, suppose there is a man who loves the Self alone, who is happy with the Self alone and who is contented with the Self alone. There is nothing to be accomplished by him”.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to verse 30 :

एवं तावत् प्रत्यक्ष अनुमान आगम प्रमाणवष्टम्भात् आत्मनो निरतिशयसुखहित अव्यतिरेकसिद्धेः अहितस्य च षष्ठगोचरवत् स्वत एव अनभिसंबन्धाद् एवं स्वाभाव्य आत्म अनवबोधमात्रात् एव ‘हितं मे स्यात्’ , ‘अहितं मे मा भूत्’ इति मित्याज्ञानं तु ऊषरशुक्तिकानवबोत्थ मिथ्याज्ञानवत् प्रवृत्तिनिमित्तमिति निर्धारितम् ।

Thus, it is determined, on the basis of perception, inference and scriptures, that, the Self is of the nature of intense bliss and ultimate good, while, evil, like what is non-existent, cannot in any way affect it, and, that, wrong understanding based on the non-comprehension of this nature of the Self, takes the forms ‘Let good befall me’, ‘Let not evil come to me’ and thus furnishes the motives for all action, even as the misconception of the shell leads to coveting it as silver.

In this portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa is concluding that actions are born out of wrong self-knowledge. The conclusion is arrived at, with the help of Veda pramaanam.

- हित (आत्म) अव्यतिरेकसिद्धः - Because of the fact that hitham (well being) is non-different from aathmaa;

"Sukham is an object which has to come from outside" is a wrong belief. The fact is, that, sukham is 'aathma avyathirekham' - 'not different from aathmaad / 'identical with aathmaad'.

- निरतिशय सुख (अव्यतिरेकसिद्धेः)- because of the fact, that, ungraded, absolute sukham is non-different from aathmaa;

Saasthraa-s declare that not only is aathmaa identical with sukham – but, the identical sukham is nirathisaya sukham – meaning "highest / ungraded / absolute". If aathmaa has graded aanandhaa, one may have to work for the higher and still higher grades, the effort being endless. But, aathmasvaroopam is that aanandhaa, which is beyond comparative and superlative degrees.

The corollary of this statement is, that, since aanandhaa is aathmasvaroopam, any effort to get aanandhaa from outside, is only because of mithyaa jnaanam – misconception.

"Removal of grief by external means" is another misconception, since, 'I' do not have grief. This message follows:

- स्वतः एव अहितस्य अनभिसंबन्धात् च - and, because of the inherent nature of non-association of aathmaa with dhu:kham,
- षष्ठगोचरवत् - similar to the 'object' of the sixth pramaanam;

"Aathmaa is dhu:kha rahitha:" or, in other words, "Dhu:kham is abhaavam in aathmaa" is the message that the Aachaaryaa wants to convey. For this, he uses the phrase "shashtagocharavath". The significance of the use is explained as follows:

Scriptures talk of six pramaanam-s (valid sources of knowledge). Of these, five are grouped as "bhaava pramaanaanam" - i.e. "sources that reveal existing things or objects" and are listed as (1) prathyaksham (2) anumaanam (3) upamaanam (4) arthaapatthi and (5) sabdhaa.

The sixth pramaanam is what is known as 'anupalabdhi' meaning 'non-cognition', which pramaanam reveals the 'absence' of objects. For example, the non-cognition (or non-experience) of horns on a human being reveals the fact of 'non-existence' of horns for humans. Another example: "non-experience' of an elephant in the class room reveals the 'absence' of an elephant". In short, the object of anupalabdhi pramaanam is 'abhaava.' – 'non-existent'.

Therefore, to convey the message "In aathmaa, 'dhu:kham' is abhaavam", the Aachaaryaa uses the phrase 'shashtagocharavath', meaning 'similar to the 'object' of the sixth pramaanam', which 'object' is non-existent or 'abhaava:'.

Why should an individual, then, strive for dhu:kha nivrutthi or search for peace? Both struggles are because of mithyaa jnaanam only.

- एवं स्वाभाव्य आत्म अनवबोधमात्रात् एव - purely because of the non-comprehension of such nature of the Self, (as detailed above), evam svaabhaavya – of such a nature; aathma – of the aathmaa; anavabodham – ignorance / non-comprehension ; maathraath eva – purely because of:

- मिथ्याज्ञानं - the misconception consisting of the aspirations,
- “हितं मे स्यात्” - 'let good befall me',
- “अहितं मे मा भूत्” इति - 'let not evil come to me' etc.,

The misconception (mithyaa jnaanam) is born out of ignorance (anavabodham); i.e. 'ignorance' leads to 'misconceptions', which, in turn lead to 'actions' (struggles in life). In Adhyaasa Bhaashyam, Sankaraacharya calls mithyaa jnaanam as adhyaasa: |

Sureswaraacharya compares this struggle to a person running after a mirage for the non-existent water or running towards a conch shell, for the non-existent silver.

- ऊषर शुक्तिक अनवबोध मिथ्याज्ञानवत् - similar to the misconceptions of running after a mirage (for water) or after a conch shell (coveting silver).

Oosharam – desert; sukthikam – conch shell; anavabodha - arising from ignorance.

In the examples, 'ignorance' results in 'misconceptions', which, in turn, results in 'actions', viz. 'looking for water' and 'looking for silver'.

- प्रवृत्ति निमित्तं (भवति) - becomes the cause of / motivator for activities.

The Aachaaryaa claims three pramaanam-s for this conclusion.

- इति निर्धारितम् - This conclusion is arrived at
- प्रत्यक्ष अनुमान आगम प्रमाणवष्टम्भात् - on the basis of 'valid sources', viz., perception, inference and scriptures.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 30 (contd.):
शास्त्रं च न पदार्थशक्त्याधानकृदिति ।

It is also determined, that the scripture does not confer any power on anything.

This is an important statement: “Pramaanam can never generate activity”.

According to the poorva meemaamsakaa, there are two types of statements : (1) siddha bodhaka vaakyam – a statement of fact and (2) chodhanaa vaakyam or pravarthaka vaakyam – a statement generating activity.

The poorva meemaamsakaa holds that there are 'commandments' in the Vedaa-s, which he calls vidhi vaakyaani or pravarthaka vaakyaani. The Vedhaanthin strongly refutes this. According to him, no statement, even in the form of a commandment, can generate action, unless the listener is motivated by 'desire'. An example was already cited : the Vedic injunction 'sathyam vadha'.

The Aachaaryaa emphasizes the view "a commandment does not generate action", by stating here "a commandment does not give power to do action". Only 'desire' gives the power to action.

- शास्त्रं - "Scripture
- न आधानकृत् - (is) not the creator (of)
- शक्ति - the activating power
- पदार्थ - (in) any object".
- इति (च निर्धारितम्) - This fact is also stated.

The poorva meemaasakaa says, that, whatever vidhi vaakyam is there in karma kaandaa, it is pravarthaka vaakyam. In contrast, the Vedhaanthin says that vidhi vaakyaani also are only bodhaka vaakyaani and not pravarthaka vaakyaani.

The Vedhaanthin is of the form view that even a commandment in the scriptures, only gives knowledge.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 30 (contd.):

अतेतस्यैवोत्तरत्र प्रपञ्च आरभ्यते ।

Therefore, the explanation of this principle follows:

19. Chapter I, Verses 30 to 32 (19-08-2006)

Sureswaraacharya pointed out that the Veda Poorva Bhaagaa i.e. the Karma Kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, is also a pramaanam. The job of a pramaanam is only "giving rise to knowledge". It can never do anything else other than giving information. It cannot produce any desire in the minds of the people. "Pramaanam jnaapakam eva bhavathi; kaarakam na bhavathi" meaning "Pramaanam is only a 'revealer' and not a 'producer'".

A pramaanam cannot generate action also. Veda Poorva Baaghaa also cannot generate any action. It is not the generator of vaidhika karmaani, even though it contains many vidhi vaakyaani (injunctions on right actions to be performed) and nishiddha vaakyaani (injunctions on prohibited actions). But, even such commandments cannot generate desire or action, as shown below:

An example of vidhi vaakyam is the one that Sandhyaavandhanam is an essential daily ritual to be performed. However powerful this commandment may be, it does not result in all the listeners' performing the ritual, without fail. Likewise, in spite of the awareness of the nishiddha vaakyam – "himsaa na kuryaath", meaning "violence should be eschewed", people continue to do himsaa. Such commonly observed non-adherence to vidhi vaakyam or nishiddha vaakyam, shows that vaakyam obviously does not have the power to generate the 'desire' to implicitly obey the commandment. It follows, therefore, that vaakyam lacks the power to 'generate' action also.

Ishta saadhanaartha bhodhakam is vidhi vaakyam; anishta saadhanaartha vaakyam is nishiddha vaakyam. Both types of commandments are only bodha janakaa - not kaama janakaa nor karma janakaa.

Sureswaraacharya says, that, any karmaa - loukikaa or vaidhikaa – is generated only by 'desire', which, as was seen, is also not generated by the Vedaa-s, but, by self-ignorance only, viz., the ignorance of the fact " 'I' do not require any karmaa to acquire sukham or remove dhu:kham, since 'my' svaroopam itself is only sukham". 'Ignorance', therefore, is the indirect cause of karmaa also – loukikaa and vaidhikaa.

The corollary that the Aacharya derives from this, is: "Since vaidhika karmaa is also born out of ignorance, it can never remove ignorance; therefore, karmaa – even vaidhika karmaa – cannot give mokshaa."

Then, a question may arise : (though this is not discussed here by the Aacharya): "If vaidhika karmaani cannot destroy ignorance and cannot give mokshaa and if mokshaa is possible only by Vedaantha Jnaana, then why should Veda Poorva Baaghaa talk of countless vaidhika karmaani, karma palaani etc.? Why should not Vedaa start straightaway with jnaana kaandaa? Why should it have a karma kaandaa at all, which, according to the Vedhaanthin, promotes and preserves self-ignorance?"

There are two explanations in clarification of this doubt.

The first will be as follows: "The human problem is self-ignorance ; only self-knowledge can remove the self-ignorance. Karmaa cannot solve the problem" is the essence and ultimate teaching of the Vedaa-s. But, humanity is not aware of this fact. Even among the few, who are aware of this, most are not easily convinced about it – at times, even a sincere Vedhaanthic student. The jnaana kaandaa does not appeal to such people. Till such time as the awareness of and conviction about this fact are achieved, humans, by inherent nature, are only in the field of karmaa – action in some form or other. So Vedaa-s deem it their duty to give information on karmaa, to guide the people on the path of right karmaa. In other words, Vedaa-s tell the seeker: "Jnaanam is the only means to mokshaa. But, since you are yet to be convinced of this, let me guide you on the path of right karmaa, till such time as you mature to get convinced on this". Manthraa 12 – Section 2 – Chapter I, of Mundakopanishad clearly expresses this route map. The manthraa runs: "Pareekshya lokaan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath naasthi akrutha: kruthena | Thath vijnaartham sa gurum eva abhigaccheth samithpaani: srothreeyam brahmanishtam", meaning "Having examined the worlds which are achieved through karmaa, a Brahmin (seeker) should come to dispassion. The unproduced (mokshaa) is not possible through karmaa. Therefore, to attain knowledge, he must necessarily approach with samith in hand, a teacher learned in scriptures and established in Brahmar".

The second explanation: "A seeker may be very clear that only aathma jnaanam can lead to mokshaa and may also have the keen desire for aathma jnaanam. But, he may not be mentally qualified to receive the jnaanam. We do find such instances in worldly education programmes also. A student might have completed schooling, the basic requirement to join a prestigious Institution of higher learning; he may have the keen desire also to join the Institution. But, the examiners in charge of admission might find him wanting in maturity and mental capacity, to receive the teachings at the Institute successfully. In this case, the desire to pursue the course is there – but, not the qualifications. Mere kaamaa (desire) is not sufficient; adhikaaraa (qualification) is also essential. With regard to mokshaa also, along with the desire for jnaanam, the yogyathaa should be there. Implicit following of the injunctions of the Karma Kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, gives the seeker, the jnaana yogyathaa. The elaborate karmaa-s prescribed by the Karma Kaandaa of the Vedaa-s are meant more for attainment of jnaana yogyathaa, than worldly gains".

Chapter I: Verse 30:

न परीप्सां जिहासां वा पुंसः शास्त्रं करोति हि ।
निजे एव तु ते यस्मात्पशुदावपि दर्शनात् ॥ ३० ॥

Desire or aversion is not put into men, by scriptures. They are natural, as they are found in animals also.

- पुंसः - For the humans,
- शास्त्रं - the scriptures,
- न करोति हि - surely, do not create
- परीप्सां - the desire to get sukham
- जिहासां वा - or the desire to get rid of dhu:kham.
- ते - They (pareepsaa and jihaasaa)
- निजे एव तु - - are inborn / natural
- यस्मात् दर्शनात् - as perceived
- पशुदावपि - even in animals.

Vedaa-s do not give any one, either the desire for sukha praapthi or the desire for dhu:kha nivrutthi. Acceptance and rejection by an individual, are, both, because of self-ignorance.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 31 and 32:

उक्तं तावदनवबुद्धवस्तुयाथात्म्य एव विधिप्रतिषेधशास्त्रेष्वधिक्रियत इति अथाधुना विषयस्वभावानुरोधेन प्रवृत्त्यसंभवं वक्तुकाम आह ।

It has been laid down that only he who has not understood the nature of Reality, is addressed by scriptural commandments and prohibitions. Now, with a view to show that action is impossible in the light of the nature of the object, the author proceeds:

In the following portion, Sureswaraacharya is entering a marginally different topic. Earlier, he had said that karmaa cannot remove self-ignorance and give mokshaa. In this portion, the Aachaaryaa will be stressing "karmaa is not required for mokshaa".

Before doing any karmaa, the relevant karmajnaanam should be obtained. The aspirant to any action 'learns' (jaanaathl), 'desires' (icchathl) and 'acts' (yathathl). But, when the aspirant comes to Vedhaanthaa, the very 'knowledge' removes 'desire'. 'Karmaa' becomes irrelevant and redundant.

- तावत् - Till now,
- इति उक्तं - it was stated, that,
- "अनवबुद्ध वस्तु याथात्म्यः एव - "Only he, who has not understood the real nature of the Self (i.e. an ajnaani or self-ignorant person) vasthu yaathaathmyam - real nature of the Self ; anava bhuddha - ignorant.

- विधि प्रतिषेध शास्त्रेषु अधिक्रियते - is addressed by scriptural commandments and prohibitions".

A jnaani knows that he has no dhu:kham and, that, therefore, he need not try to get rid of the non-existent dhu:kham, through Vedic karmaani. In contrast, an ajnaani, who is not aware of the real nature of the Self (sukha svaroopam), deems it necessary to perform the karmaa-s prescribed by the scriptures, for both sukha praapthi and dhu:kha nivrutthi.

- अथ अधुना - Hereafter,
- वक्तुकामः - desirous of discussing (the topic of)
- प्रवृत्ति असंभवं - 'non-requirement of karmaa (with regard to mokshaa)',
- विषय स्वभाव अनुरोधेन - by studying the nature of the subject matter of human goals,
- आह - the following is stated.

Vishaya – (in this context) means 'purushaartha vishayam' (subject matter of human goals); svabhaava – nature ; anurodhena – by studying.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is planning to classify the human goals into two groups and to establish that one of the two groups require karmaa, while, the other group requires jnaanaa – i.e., as (1) karmaa-requiring group of human goals and (2) jnaanaa-requiring group of human goals. The object of the study is to understand and pursue the route required for one's goal.

Mokshaa requires only a simple cognitive change. Intellectual knowledge is sufficient for mokshaa.

Chapter I : Verses 31 & 32

लिप्सतेऽज्जानतोऽलब्धं कण्ठे चामीकरं यथा ।

वर्जितं च स्वतो भ्रान्त्या छायायामात्मनो यथा ॥ ३१ ॥

भयान्मोहावनद्वात्मा रक्ष : परिजिहीर्षति ।

Forgetting that the gold necklace is there on the neck already, the wearer searches for it. Similarly, the man, mistaking in fright, his own shadow for a demon, runs to avoid the demon, which, in fact, is not there. There are, of course, cases in which one seeks to avoid what is really there to be avoided and wants to appropriate what is not really in his possession already.

Sureswaraachaaryaa talks of the four goals, in this verse. In certain cases, we have certain objects with us; but, are ignorant of the fact that the objects are already with us; and, therefore, take efforts to attain the object. An example will be a key within the folds of a handkerchief in one's pocket; the owner of the key (and the kerchief), removes the kerchief (along with the key in its folds, of which, he is not aware), keeps it in his left hand and looks for the key in the pocket. Not finding it there, he becomes frantic and perspires, and, while wiping his face with the kerchief, 'discovers' the key. Because of his ignorance a praapthavasthu became an aprapthavasthu. The 'distance' was caused only by ignorance and what he already had in his possession became a 'goal' / lakshyam. He looked for an object seemingly apraptham – but, actually praaptham; in other words, he took efforts to attain the already attained / to accomplish the already accomplished. What is the 'means' he used or should use to attain the key already with him? Ans: It is merely the 'knowledge' that the key was in the folds of his kerchief. This is a typical case of what the Aachaaryaa lists as his goal no. 1 , viz., 'praapthasya praapthi:' in his list of four goals .

The Aachaaryaa gives the example of a necklace around the neck, for this first goal 'praapthasya praapthi:' |

- अज्ञानतः - (An individual), because of ignorance/ forgetfulness,
- लिप्सते - desires to attain
- कण्ठे चामीकरं - the necklace (already) on the neck,
- अलब्धं (मत्वा) - (considering it) as not attained.

Sureswaraachaaryaa moves on to the 2nd goal on his list – "a non-existing problem is desired to be removed" – 'nivruththasya nivrutthi:' or 'pariharthasya parihaara:', akin to looking for a remedy for a disease, which is not there.

The Aaachaaryaa gives an example for this second goal also. A person sees his shadow on the wall and upon seeing the moving shadow, superimposes a ghost on it – a non-existing ghost, which, he wants to get rid of. The 'getting rid of the ghost' is also achieved merely by the knowledge that 'there is no ghost'.

- भ्रान्त्या - (Another individual), because of delusion,
- आत्मनः छायायां - superimposing on his own shadow,
- स्वतःवर्जितं रक्षः - an actually non-existent ghost,
- भयात् परिजिहीर्षति - fearfully desires to drive (it) away,
- मोह अनवद् आत्मा - with a mind covered by the delusion.

Raksha: - ghost; parijiheersathi - (pariharthum icchathi) desires to drive away.

The next two goals are "acquiring something which one does not own" (goal no. 3) and "removal of an actually existing problem" (goal no. 4)

20. Chapter I, Verses 32 to 35 (26-08-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to establish that karmaa can never give liberation, either independently or in association with jnaanam – swathanthrena vaa jnaana samucchithena vaa karmanaa moksha: kathaapi na praapyathe.

But, while dwelling on this topic, the seeker has to be very careful. It is the Vedhaanthir's firm view, that, Karmaa does not give liberation; but, he never says, that karmaa is totally useless. Karmaa is extremely useful – every seeker should follow karmaa for chittha suddhi. In the context of liberation, karmaa as moksha saadhanam is criticized; but, karmaa as suddhi saadhanam is glorified. Moksha saadhanathvena karmaa nindhyathe; suddhi saadhanathvena karmaa sthooyathe. The seeker of mokshaa should understand this clearly and should take care not drop his nithya-naimitthika karma anushtaanam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa makes it very clear that karmaa cannot give mokshaa. He gave one reason earlier; the reason given was on the basis of studying the cause of karmaa. Karma hethu vichaarena karmana: moksha asaadhanathvam nischitham. He showed that karmaa is caused by mithyaa jnaanam or ajnaanam; and, being a product of ignorance, it cannot destroy ignorance and therefore, cannot give mokshaa. This is karma hethu vichaara: |

Now, the Aacharyaa wants to establish the same view, viz., "karmaa cannot give mokshaa", by the study of karma pala vichaara: - the study of the 'results' or 'benefits' of karmaa. Poorvam karma hethu vichaara: | Idhaaneem karma pala vichaara: |

As a first step of this study, the Aachaaryaa analyses the varieties of possible results or goals that a human being chooses. All the possible goals, the Aachaaryaa says, will come under four categories (chathur vidha palaani), in two groups of two categories in each group. This categorization should not be confused with the categorization of the four purushaartha-s – dharma, artha, kama and mokshaa. It is also different from the categorization as aapthi:, uthpatthi:, vikhaara: and samsuddhi: |

The present categorization is as follows: (vide verses 31 and 32):

- (1) Praaptha praapthi: - Attainment of something which is already with me, but, missed by me / separated from me, due to ignorance. The example given by the Aachaaryaa is 'kantachaameekaram' – 'a thin maalaa around the neck'. This is a popular argument, known as 'kantachaameekara nyaayaa' |
- (2) Parihrutha parihaara: - Elimination of something, which is actually non-existent, but, thought to exist, again because of ignorance. The Aachaaryaa gives the example of a 'ghost seen in one's own shadow on the wall' – 'chaayaa pisaasa:.'

- (3) Apraaptha praapthi:- Attaining something that is not already attained. An example will be svargaa, which one does not have, but, would like to attain.
- (4) Aparihrutha parihaara:- Removal of a problem very much with me – a problem which is real and not imaginary. An example is a disease in one's body.

The first line of verse 31, talks of the first category of goals – "praapthaysa praapthi:" - "Lipsathe ajnaanatha: alabdham kante chaameekaram yathaa" – "similar to desiring to attain the thin maalaa, already around the neck, because of ignorance /oversight.

The second line of verse 31 and the first line of verse 32, talk of the second category - "parihruthasya parihaara:" – "aathmana: chaayaayaam svatha: varjitham raksha: parijiheersathi moha avanaddha aathmaa bhraanthayaa bhayaath yathaa" – "similar to desiring to get rid of the non-existent ghost, wrongly perceived on one's own shadow, out of fear, with a mind covered by delusion".

The second line of verse 32, mentions the third and fourth categories of goals.

Alabdham lipsathe - Desires to get what has not been attained (apraaptha praapthi).

No example is given by the Aachaaryaa, for this category, since the "un-attained" are obvious.

Aparihrutham vasthu (parijiheersathi) - (Desires to be rid of) an object/a problem, which is real / not imaginary.

Before starting any saadhanaa, the seeker has to be clear as to:

- (1) under which category mokshaa will come, and
- (2) in which field karmaa will help.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 33:

तत्र एतेषु चतुर्षु विषयेषु प्राप्तये परिहाराय च विभज्य न्यायः प्रदर्श्यते ।

Among these four cases, in the matter of attaining and avoiding, the principle is exhibited through analysis.

A seeker has to have clarity, first, with regard to saadhyam (his goal) and then, with regard to the appropriate saadhanaa (the means to achieve the goal).

- तत्र - In this context,
- एतेषु चतुर्षु विषयेषु - among these four types of goals,
- न्यायः - the principles / rules

- प्राप्तये - of the two types of praapthi:
- परिहाराय च - and also of the two types of removal,
- प्रदर्शयते - are presented
- विभज्य - distinctly.

Claiming 'knowledge' and disclaiming 'moksha' is because of ignorance. The statement "I have understood Vedhaanthaa; but, I am not a muktha:" is absurd; it results from the fact, that, though the teaching has been received, the content of the teaching has not been dwelt upon. The Aachaaryaa, therefore, says "pradharshyathe" – "shall analyze properly" (the 'means' of attaining these four types of goals).

Chapter I: Verse 33 –

प्राप्तव्यपरिहार्येषु जात्वोपायाञ्छुतेः पृतक् ।
कृत्वाथ प्राप्नुयात्प्राप्यं तथानिष्टं जहात्यपि ॥ ३३ ॥

In relation to what is to be got and what is to be got rid of in reality, one should find out from the sruthi, the appropriate means in a clear manner and get what is to be got and get rid of what is to be got rid of, using the appropriate means.

The Aachaaryaa first takes up analysis of the means to attain the third and fourth types of goals – 'apraapthasya praapthi:' (like svargaa etc.) and 'aparihruthasya parihaara:' (like disease etc.). To achieve these goals, one needs to first acquire the karma jnaanam (knowledge about the 'means') and then venture into the actual karmaa (performance of the appropriate action). For praapthi., one should have the information, as to what action is to be performed to attain what is desired to be attained. For parihaara.: also, one should have the knowledge, as to what action is required for elimination or removal of the problem. The knowledge is to be followed by performance of the appropriate karmaa, which, is also essential for both goals.

- प्राप्तव्य परिहार्येषु - For attaining the really un-attained and for elimination of the really existing problem,
- श्रुतेः उपायान् जात्वा - learning the appropriate rituals to be performed from the Vedaa-s,
- पृतक् - distinctly / thoroughly,
- अथ कृत्वा - and, performing the prescribed rituals, after thus learning about them,
- प्राप्यं प्राप्नुयात् - what has not been attained will be obtained ;
- तथा अनिष्टं अपि जहाति - in the same manner, problems also are eliminated.

One requires the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, for these two goals. Jnaana Kaandaa will not help.

As for the first two types of goals, viz., 'Praaptha praapthi:' and 'Parihrutha parihaara:', the 'means' are different and are explained in the following verse.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 34:अथ अवशिष्टयोः स्वभावत एव ।*Now, on the remaining two cases, which are natural:

Sukham* or happiness comes under praaptha vishayam i.e., we already have it, since the source for sukham is only aathmaa; the world cannot give us peace and joy. Likewise, 'removal of sorrow' is also a praaptha vishaya; because sorrow does not really exist; it is only an 'assumption' ; sorrows is a non-existent thing – a parihrutham.

Chapter I: Verse 34 –परिहृतावाप्तयोर्बोधात् हानप्राप्ती न कर्मणा ।*मोहमात्रान्तरायवात्क्रियया ते न सिध्यतः ॥ ३४ ॥

Through enlightenment, he must get rid of the two illusions, viz., (i) 'what is accomplished already, is unaccomplished' and (ii) 'what is really non-existent, is to be rid of'. This two-fold achievement is only through enlightenment and not through any action. So, these ends cannot be gained by any exertion, by way of action.

- हानप्राप्ती - The removal and attainment
- (स्वभावात्) परिहृत अवाप्तयोः - of the (naturally) absent problems and of the (naturally) present attainments ,
- बोधात् (संभवन्ति) - (result) through knowledge.
- न कर्मणा (संभवन्ति) - (They) do not result through action.

Parihrutham can be taken as dhu:kham, which is already absent in aathmaa; avaapthi: may be taken to mean poornathvam or sukham, which is the nature of aathmaa. Since 'absence of dhu:kham' and 'presence of sukham' are already 'my' nature, what is needed to get rid of the seemingly existent dhu:kham and attain the seemingly absent sukham, is the mere knowledge, that, 'they are my nature'. No action is needed.

- मोह मात्र अन्तरायत्वात् - Since the distance between me and these two is caused only by wrong notions, antharaaya: - gap / distance / separating factor ; moham - wrong notion.

What is the jnaanam that will remove the 'distance'? Ans: The awareness "I am sukha svarooपा: | dhu:kha rahitha: |"

- क्रियया ते न सिध्यत : - they (the removal and attainment) are not achieved by any type of karmaa (including paaraayanam, japam and dhyaanam).

Saasthravichaaraa should continue till one understands that mokshaa is one's nature and that one does not require anything else for mokshaa. The 'understanding' includes the understanding that nothing else except 'understanding', is required for mokshaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 35 :

कस्मात्पुनरात्मवस्तुयाथात्म्यावबोधमात्रादेवाभिलषितनिरतिशयसुखावाप्तिनिश्चेष दुःखनिवृत्ती भवतो न कर्मणेति । उच्यते ।

What is the ground for holding that the attainment of infinite bliss and the complete cessation of misery is brought about only by the knowledge of the real nature of the Self and not by action? The reply follows:

Sureswaraacharya had given two arguments to establish that karmaa cannot give moksha. The first argument was based on 'karma hethu vichaara:', viz., that, the cause of karmaa being ignorance, karmaa cannot destroy ignorance and therefore cannot give mokshaa. The second argument was based on 'karma pala vichaara:' meaning 'analysis of the results of karmaa'.

In this verse, he gets back to the "karma hethu vichaaraa" topic. The sambhandha gadhyam is a presumed question, addressed to the Aacharya, by the student of Vedhaanthaa, followed by the Aacharya's assurance that he will answer the question.

- कस्मात् - On what grounds,
- अभिलषित निरतिशय सुख अवाप्तिः - "The attainment of absolute sukham, desired by all (in other words, 'mokshaa') abilashitha – desired by all; nirathisaya - absolute / without gradation. Both are adjectives to sukham. Other desires may differ from person to person. Sarva abhilashitha sukham (i.e. sukham desired by all) is mokshaa.

- निश्चेष दुःख निवृत्तिः - (and) freedom from all sorrows,

Nissesha – without any balance / complete / all.

- आत्मवस्तु याथात्म्य अवबोधमात्रात् एव - (result) only by the knowledge of the real nature of the Self.

aathma vasthu - Self / aathmaa ; yaathaathmyam - real nature ; avabodham - knowledge ; maathraath eva - only by.

- न कर्मणा - (and) not by action"
- इति भवतः - is this statement made by you ?

Both "attainment of moksha sukham" and "complete cessation of misery" are possible by jnaanam and only by jnaanam, asserts Sureswaraacharya. Even some Advaitins believe that there are four routes to mokshaa, namely, karma yogaa, bhakthi yogaa, raja yogaa and jnaana yogaa. This is a wrong view. There is only one route – 'jnaanaa'. Sureswaraachaaryaa stress this, based on facts.

- उच्यते - "I will tell you" (the Aachaaryaa assures).

Verse 35 – Chapter I :

कर्मज्ञानसमुत्थत्वान्नालं मोहाप्तये ।

सम्यग्ज्ञानं विरोध्यस्य तामिस्रस्यांशुमानिव ॥ ३५ ॥

Action itself arises from ignorance and hence it cannot remove the latter. Perfect knowledge is the antithesis of ignorance, even as the sun is in relation to darkness.

Certain goals can be reached by different routes; for example, a temple on the hilltop. Different pathways may be provided; different types of vehicles can be used. But, certain other goals can be reached only by one 'means'; for instance "removal of darkness", which can be achieved only by one means, viz., "bringing in a light". Likewise "ajnaana nivrutthi" is the only means for removal of self-ignorance.

"Karmaa cannot destroy ignorance, because it is born out of ignorance. So, it cannot give mokshaa" repeats Sureswaraachaaryaa, in this verse.

21. Chapter I, Verses 35 and 36 (02-09-2006)

In this portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa is negating the karmavaadhin-s, establishing that karmaa cannot give liberation, either by itself or by joining jnaanam. The Aachaaryaa accepts karmaa as a means to chittha suddhi; there is no dispute on the fact that karmaa is very, very essential for preparing the mind. But, to the question "with regard to a person, who has already purified the mind, what is the role of karmaa?", Sureswaraachaaryaa replies, that, for such a person, karmaa has no role at all, since it cannot give liberation independently or in association with jnaanam.

He gave two reasons, as to why karmaa cannot give liberation:

Reason 1: Karmaa is born out of desire; desire is born out of ignorance ; so, karmaa is a product of ignorance; therefore, it cannot destroy ignorance and therefore, it cannot give mokshaa.

Reason 2: If an "analysis of the various results of karmaa" (karma pala vichaaraa;) is done, it can be concluded that, while apraapthasya praapthi: and apariruthasya parihaara: can be achieved by karmaa, the other two types of results – praapthasya praapthi: and pariruthasya parihaara: - can be achieved only by jnaanam. Mokshaa comes under 'praaptha:' – 'the already attained' and, therefore, does not need action.

Thus, by the two methods of reasoning, 'karma hethu vichaara:' and 'karma pala vichaara:', the Aachaaryaa established: "karmanaa moksha: na sambhavathi" .

In verse 35, he comes back to hethu vichaara:, with the intention of meeting another poorva pakshaa argument. The repetition of hethu vichaara: is for the purpose of refuting that specific poorva pakshaa objection, which the Aachaaryaa intends presenting in the next verse (no. 36). Reverting to the current verse (no. 35):

- कर्म अज्ञान समुत्थत्वात् - Since karmaa is born out of ignorance,

As already analyzed, karmaa is born out of desire, which is born out of misconception, which, in turn, is born out of ignorance.

- न अलं मोह अपनुत्तये - (it) is not capable of removing ignorance.

Alam - capable; moha – ajnaanam (ignorance); apanutthi: - removal.

Karmaa cannot remove ignorance; without removal of ignorance, mokshaa is not possible. Hence, karmaa cannot give mokshaa.

Then, what will give mokshaa? Answer follows:

- सम्यग्ज्ञानं - The correct / perfect / valid knowledge

Correct or perfect jnaanam is aathma jnaanam, born out of vedhaantha pramaanam; no other pramaanam can give aathma jnaanam.

- अस्य विरोधि - (is) the enemy (destroyer) of this (ignorance),

Knowledge alone is inimical to ignorance. The Aachaaryaa gives an example.

- तामिस्रस्य अंशुमान् इव - similar to sunlight (being the enemy) of darkness.

Only light is inimical to darkness; and, therefore, darkness can be removed only by light. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa gives the same example in Verse 3 of his Aathma Bodham, which runs:

अविरोधितया कर्म नाविद्यां विनिवर्तयेत् ।

विद्याविद्यां निहन्त्येव तेजस्तिमिरसङ्घवत् ॥ ३॥

avirōdhitayā karma nāvidyām vinivartayēt |

vidyāvīdyām nihantyeva tējastimirasaṅghavat || 3||

– “since karmaa is not inimical to ignorance, it does not remove or destroy ignorance. Just as light destroys darkness, only jnaanam can destroy ajnaanam”.

Sureswaraachaaryaa now introduces the new poorva pakshaa, unique to Naishkarmya Siddhi.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 36:

ननु आत्मज्ञानं अपि अविध्योपादानम् । न हि शास्त्रशिष्याचार्याधि अनुपदाय आत्मज्ञानं आत्मानं लभत इति ।

“But “it may be objected “surely the knowledge of the Self does not occur independent of diverse factors, like the scripture, teacher and disciple. Thus, even the knowledge of the Self is a product of ignorance”.

Up to this, in this sambhandha gadhyam, is the new poorva pakshaa. The poorva pakshir's objection is: “You say, that, karmaa cannot destroy ignorance, because karmaa is born out of ignorance. Then, by the same reasoning, jnaanam also cannot destroy ignorance, since jnaanam is also born out of ignorance, though not directly, but indirectly. Just as karmaa has ajnaanam as its ultimate cause, jnaanam also has ajnaanam alone as its basic cause”. The poorva pakshin explains how: “Your (the Vedhaanthir's) arguments are that the ultimate truth is advaitam and, that, any form of duality is born out of ajnaanam. If, thus, ajnaanam is the cause of any form of dvaitam, ajnaanam must be the cause of guru- sishya-saasthra dvaitham also. But, how is 'knowledge' born? It is born of guru-saasthra-upadesa. Upadesa is born of guru-sishya-saasthra dvaitham and jnaanam is born of guru-saasthra-upadesa. Without guru-sishya-saasthra distinction, jnaanam cannot be attained. So, it follows, ultimately, that jnaanam is also born of ajnaanam. How then, can you claim that jnaanam will destroy ajnaanam, which is the cause of the very rise of jnaanam? The logic that you applied to karmaa, will have to be applied to jnaanam also".

Expressed in Sanskrit, the poorva pakshin's objection to the Vedhaanthin is: "Yena kaaraanena karmaa ajnaanam na naasayathi ithi thvayaa uktham thena eva kaaranena jnaanam api ajnaanam naiva naasayathi | Thasmaath 'jnaanaath eva kaivalyam' ithi thava siddhaantha: dhushta:"

- ननु आत्मज्ञानं अपि अविध्योपादानम् - But, self-knowledge is also born of avidhya.

'Upaadhaanam' means 'kaaranam'. Here, the usage is 'bahuvreehi samaasam', similar to referring to King Dasarathaa as 'Ramaputhra.' – 'one whose son is Rama'.

- आत्मज्ञानं आत्मानं न लभते हि - Surely, the knowledge of the Self is not attained by the seeker, 'aathmaanam', in this context, refers to the seeker and not to the sacchidhaanandha aathmaa.

- शास्त्र शिष्य आचार्याधि अनुपदाय - without resorting to (diverse factors like) the scriptures, disciple and teacher.

'anupadhaaya' means 'without resorting to'.

"Aatma jnaanam can be attained, only by resorting to plurality, in the form of teacher, scriptures and disciple. Plurality is ajnaanam, according to the Advaithin. It follows therefore, that ajnaanam is the root cause of jnaanam. Then, in what manner, is jnaanam better than karmaa? If jnaanam can give mokshaa, karmaa also can give mokshaa. Conversely, if, as you say, karmaa cannot give mokshaa, because it is born out of ajnaanam, by the same reasoning jnaanam also cannot give mokshaa" is the argument of the poorva pakshin. The Aachaaryaa answers:

नैष दोषः । यतः आत्मज्ञानं हि स्वतस्सिद्धपरमार्थं आत्मवस्तुस्वरूपमात्रं
आश्रयादेवाविध्यातदुत्पन्नकारकग्रामप्रध्वंसि स्वात्मोत्पत्तावेव शास्त्राध्यपेक्षते नोत्पन्नमविध्यानिवृत्तौ ।

My conclusion is not wrong. The knowledge of the Self rests only on the essential nature of the Self, which is Self-established and the ultimate Reality. It is destructive, therefore, of ignorance and the operating factors emerging from it.

Moreover, while, Self-knowledge depends on factors like the scriptures etc., for coming into being, it does not depend on scriptures etc., after coming into being, for destroying ignorance.

The answer of the Aachaaryaa to the poorva pakshir's objection is very important and subtle. Sureswaraachaaryaa, first, accepts that 'rise of knowledge' requires plurality. Because knowledge is born out of pramaanam, saasthraa-s are required. Guru-sishya interaction and therefore guru-sishya distinction are required. With respect to jnaana uthpatthi, therefore, dvaitham is required, exactly as for karma uthpatthi. "Uthpatthi vishaye jnaanam karmaa cha samaanam eva" meaning "with regard to 'rise', both jnaanam and karmaa are the same". For karma uthpatthi, the plurality of karthaa, karanam and karmaa are required. For jnaana uthpatthi, the plurality of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam (or jnaathaa, jnaanam and jnyeyam) are required. Both types of plurality are born out of ajnaanam. Sureswaraachaaryaa agrees, that, Ajnaanam is the base for jnaana uthpatthi., as for karma uthpatthi:. Karma uthpatthivathu jnaana uthpatthi: api ajnaanam aasrayeth. Up to this point, both jnaanam and karmaa are the same.

The difference, thereafter, is, the fact, that, jnaanam destroys ajnaanam only because of its unique power, which unique power is not dependent on either dvaitham or ajnaanam, and, therefore, it can, by itself, destroy ajnaanam. What is that unique power?

For explaining this, an example is given by another Aachaaryaa (not Sureswaraachaaryaa): One requires different accessories to produce a flame, such as oil, oil holder, wick, match box etc. In other words, the flame is dependent on these materials for its 'rise'. But, the power of the flame to destroy darkness – the andhakaara nivarthaka sakthi of the flame – does not depend on these accessories, since the accessories themselves are not luminous. None of them has any 'light' in it. They are not responsible nor do they support the flame in destroying the darkness. It is only the inherent nature of the flame that destroys darkness. Likewise, jnaana uthpatthi: depends on plurality – saasthraa-s, guru, sishyaa etc. But, jnaana palan or jnaana kaaryam – "removal of darkness" – does not depend on plurality.

The destructive power of 'knowledge' is said to depend only on the 'validity' of the 'knowledge'. 'Validity' of the knowledge, in turn, depends on the content or 'object' of knowledge; in other words, any 'valid' knowledge is 'valid', only if the object of the knowledge is the fact / the truth. This statement can be better understood using the well-known analogy of the 'rope-snake'; the 'rope-knowledge' is valid, because the knowledge of the object, the 'rope' is true, whereas 'snake-knowledge' is not valid, since the 'snake' is false. Similarly, Advaita jnaanam is valid, because of the object of the advaita jnaanam is Advaitam, which is sathyam. The validity of the advaita jnaanam depends on the truth of advaitam. Therefore, the validity does not depend on dvaitham.

In short, 'rise of jnaanam' depends on dvaitham, while 'destructive power of jnaanam' depends on advaitam. Advaita Jnaanam, whose destructive power depends only on the advaita thathvam, is capable of destroying both ajnaanam and dvaitham. In contrast, with respect to karmaa, the 'rise of karmaa' is dependent on dvaitham and the karmapalan is also dependent on dvaitham; i.e. both uthpatthi and function of karmaa depend on dvaitham and ajnaanam.

Reverting to the text:

- न एव दोष : - My conclusion is not wrong,
- यत : - the reason being that
- आत्मज्ञानं प्रध्वंसि - self-knowledge is the destroyer
- अविद्यात् उत्पन्न कारक ग्रामं - of the group of plurality, born out of ignorance, avidhyaath - from ignorance ; uthpanna – born; kaaraka graamam-group of plurality.

"Aatma jnaanam is destroyer of ignorance and ignorance-born plurality" is the essence of this statement. But, how?

- (आत्म ज्ञानं) स्वतस्सिद्ध परमार्थ आत्मवस्तुस्वरूपमात्र आश्रयादेव - because (self-knowledge) depends only on the essential nature of the Self, which is self-established and is the ultimate Reality.

Aathma vasthu svaroopam - real nature of aathmaa; svatha: siddha – independent / self established (adjective to aathma vasthu); paramaatha – ultimate Reality (another adjective to aathma vasthu); maathra eva - merely (not dependent on saasthra- aachaaryaa-sishya relationships); aasrayaath – because of dependence.

'Snake knowledge' is invalid since the snake is 'false'. 'Rope knowledge' is valid, since rope is the 'truth'. (This comparison is repeated, to make the following statement clear).

"Vishayasya sathyathvam eva jnaasya yaathartham" meaning "The truth of the 'object' of knowledge gives validity to knowledge ; conversely, the validity of knowledge depends on the truth of the 'object' of knowledge" is a fundamental principle of epistemology – science of language.

- आत्मज्ञानं) शास्त्राधि अपेक्षते - (Self-knowledge) depends on saasthraa-s etc., (i.e. on dvaitham),
- स्वात्म उत्पत्तौ एव - only for its 'rise'.
- उत्पन्नं - (The self-knowledge) which has thus risen (from duality),
- (शास्त्राधि) न (अपेक्षते) - does not depend on saasthraa-s etc.,
- अविद्या निवृत्तौ - in the matter of elimination of ignorance,

Jnaanam born of ajnaanam destroys ajnaanam. Verse 7, of the Dasa Slokee of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa is relevant here. It declares "na saasthaa na saasthram na sishyo na sikshaa" , after attainment of knowledge.

Bhaagavadha Mahaa Puraanaa gives an example for this. In dense forests, during the hot summer, forest fires result due to friction between trees; the fires have the power to destroy the very tress of which they are born. So does jnaanam ; though born out of ignorance, it can and does destroy ignorance. On the other hand, karmaa's position, at all times, depends only on dvaitham and ajnaanam. So, it cannot destroy ajnaanam. This is what is stated in the next sentence of the sambhandha gadhyam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36 (Contd):

But, the position is different, in the case of action. It depends on ignorance both for origination and the subsequent efficacy.

Sureswaraacharya wants to highlight the difference between karmaa and jnaanam. Karmaa is dependent on dvaitham both for its rise (implementation) and its palan (results), consisting of sukha / dhu:kha experiences.

- पुनः - On the other hand (in this context),
- कर्मा - karmaa,
- स्वात्म उत्पन्नौ - for its rise
- उत्पन्नं च - and also for its functioning (depends on dvaitham).

Karmaa's very survival depends upon dvaitham i.e. ajnaanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36 : (Contd.)

नहि क्रिया कारकनिस्स्पृहा कल्पकोटिव्यवहितफलदानायस्वात्मानं बिभर्ति साध्यमानमात्ररूपत्वात्तस्याः ।

Action cannot continue in being, to produce its results, in the remote future, without the sustaining help of other factors in the interval, for its very essence lies in being a product of the productive factors.

Sureswaraacharya continues to talk on the differences between jnaanam and karmaa.

Jnaanam, for destruction of ajnaanam, is not dependent on time also. "Removal of darkness" is simultaneous with "rise of flame"; similarly, jnaanam gives advaita palan instantaneously; even jnaanavrutthi is destroyed. Jnaanam does not require dvaitham for its continued existence; in fact, the continued existence of knowledge is not even required, since it has finished its work immediately on its arrival.

'Aham Brahma asmi jnaanam also gets falsified, 'kathaka renuvath' as asserted by Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Aathma Bodham.

A jnaani does not even claim "I am a jnaani". Verse 5 of Maneesha Panchakam refers to "such a one who has dissolved his individual intellect in the Eternal Ocean of Bliss, is verily Brahman, not a mere knower of Brahman" – "yasmin nithya sukha ambudhau galitha dheer: brahmaiva na brahmavidh'".

Karmaa, on the other hand, requires continued existence to give its palan.

22. Chapter I, Verses 36 (09-09-2006)

Sureswaraacharya is establishing that karmaa cannot destroy ignorance and, therefore, karmaa cannot give mokshaa also. Among many reasons, one reason he gives, is, "Karmaa itself is born out of avidhyaa". When this is mentioned, the poorva pakshin raises an objection: "If karmaa cannot destroy ignorance, because it is born of ignorance, then, jnaanam also cannot destroy ignorance, since jnaanam is also born of ignorance". He explains: "Jnaanam is born of the thriputi of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam, which would mean that jnaana uthpatthi: (rise of knowledge) is dependent on dvaitham, which, even according to you (vedhaanthin), is born of ajnaanam. Then, how can that jnaanam, born of ajnaanam, destroy ajnaanam?"

To this objection, Sureswaraacharya first concedes: "It is true, that, both karmaa and jnaanam require dvaitham for their jnaanam or uthpatthi – karmaa requires karthaa, karanam and karmaa and jnaanam requires pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Thriputi janyathvam is common to both and, therefore, ajnaana janyathvam is common to both". (The term avidhyaa upaadhaanam was used in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 36, to mean ajnaana janyathvam).

"But", the Aacharya says "even though both karmaa and jnaanam are born out of dvaitham and ajnaanam, while karmaa requires ajnaanam and dvaitham for giving its results also (i.e. for doing its functions), jnaanam does not depend on dvaitham and ajnaanam for its function. This is because jnaanam's validity is said to be dependent only on its 'content' (the 'object of the jnaanam') being a fact. Aathmajnaanam's 'object of knowledge' is advaitam, which is sathyam; purely depending on the advaita vasthu, aathmajnaanam gets its validity and because of this validity, destroys ignorance and destroys dvaitham also. Jnaanam does not depend on avidhyaa or dvaitham, for its function of destroying samsaaraa". He says (in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 35): "Aathmajnaanam svaathma uthpannau eva saasthraadhi apekshathe; uthpannam avidhyaa nivrutthau saasthraadhi na apekshathe", meaning "For its rise alone, self-knowledge depends on scriptures etc.; but, for elimination of self-ignorance, it does not."

An example (given in another text, by another Aacharya) for this aspect of jnaanam, is the rise and function of a flame. The flame requires accessories such as oil, oil-holder, wick, match-box etc., for its rise. But, once the flame is lighted, it does not depend on the accessories for its function of "destroying darkness", which function, it achieves by its own inherent nature. The oil, wick, match box etc., cannot be said to destroy the darkness, since they are not luminous by themselves. In short, the flame is dependent on oil etc., only for its uthpatthi, but not for its function of andhakaara nivrutthi.

"In contrast, karmaa continues to depend on ajnaanam and dvaitham, even after its rise", the Aachaaryaa points out (in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 35): "Karmaa puna: svaathma uthpannau uthpannam cha dvaitham apekshathey" –"karmaa, on the other hand, for its rise and also after its rise, depends on dvaitham". Karmaa requires dvaitham for its continued existence, as well as, for its function. Sureswaraachaaryaa explains this statement, in the portion, now under study.

This portion highlights this important difference between jnaanam and karmaa.

Any knowledge requires thriputi (three factors) for its rise – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam (the knower, a valid source and the object of knowledge). For aathmajnaanam, the pramaathaa is the student, the pramaanam-s are guru and saasthraa-s and the prameyam is aathmaa. For a qualified disciple, the saadhana chathushtaya sampananna sishyaa, knowledge 'rises' even at the time of sravanam and simultaneously the 'ignorance' is 'destroyed'. The knowledge does not require even time to destroy the 'ignorance'. This is similar to the flame destroying the darkness, the moment it is lit. 'Rise' of the flame and 'elimination' of darkness are simultaneous. Jnaanam, therefore, need not even continue to stay, for destroying ignorance, since, even as it rises, it has done its job of removing ignorance. "Aham Brahma Asmi" vriththi has destroyed ignorance. Even if the vriththi continues, it cannot be called jnaana vriththi, since it will deserve that name only at the time of removal of ignorance.

On the other hand, in the case of karmaa, karmaa cannot provide the palan immediately, but, has to wait for a time, to give its results. The jyothishmaya yaaghaa, for instance, will give svargaa (its promised result) to the karthaa, only after the karthaa's praarabhdhaa gets exhausted. This means that karmaa has to 'survive' for completing its function at the appropriate time; therefore, dvaitham and ajnaanam will continue to be required by karmaa, in contrast to jnaanam, which has no more function, once it has risen.

- क्रिया - Any action
- न बिभति - does not survive
- स्वात्मानं - by itself
- कारक निस्स्पृहा - without depending on instruments / accessories,

Nisspruhaa – without depending; kaarakaa-s - instruments or accessories (devathaa-s, yagnyaa-s, agni kundaa-s etc., will come under kaarakaa-s).

- कल्पकोटिव्यवहितफलदानाय - since (karmaa) may have to give results in the remote future, probably after the passage of even many kalpaa-s; vyavahitha – far away / remote; kalpa koti - crores of kalpaa-s; Brahmaaj/s one day is a kalpaa, consisting of 2000 chathuryughaa-s.

This fact explains why, in our experience, at times, even good people meet with sufferings, while sinners lead happy, prosperous lives.

Karmaa has to 'stay' for giving results; so, it continues to require dvaitham and ajnaanam. This statement gives rise to the question: "Why? It is clear that karmaa needs dvaitham for its uthpatthi, but, why is it said to be dependent on dvaitham for its continuity?"

The question / doubt arises, since any object depends on various factors while it is being produced, but, not for its existence thereafter.

Sureswaraachaaryaa answers this doubt. He says that the above observation may be true of an object; but, not true of an action.

- तस्याः साध्यमानमात्र रूपत्वात् - this is because 'action' is in the form of a process.

Thasyaa: - kriyaayaa: |

Action is different from an object / a substance, in that, action is saadhyamaana roopam (a process), while a substance is siddha roopam (a product). A process cannot exist independently; an example is the Veddhaantha class itself, which is the process of speech, requiring a teacher, the students, the class room, the subject of study etc. Karmaa cannot exist independently, without dvaitham in the form of kaarakaa-s (subject, object, instrument etc.) and, therefore, is dependent on dvaitham for its very survival and therefore, on ajnaanam. Karmaa, therefore, cannot afford to destroy ajnaanam, on which it depends for its very survival also.

Of course, Jnaanam is also a process, 'happening' in the mind, as a result of thriputi. But, jnaanam does not have to continue for doing its function, since it completes its job, on its 'rise' itself. In fact, it is more appropriate to say that 'a jnaani does not have ajnaanam', than to say 'a jnaani has jnaanam'. The jnaanam came and has destroyed the ajnaanam, in a jnaani.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36 (Contd.) :

न च क्रिया आत्मज्ञानवत् स्वात्मप्रतिलम्भकाले एव स्वर्गादिपलेन कर्तारं संबध्नाति ।

Karmaa* cannot put the agent in possession of results aimed at, like heaven, in the very moment of his execution of it (unlike knowledge which is effective instantaneously).

The prathignyaa vaakyam (karma puna: svaathma uthpatthau uthpannam cha) is explained in this sentence.

- क्रिया - Karmaa
- कर्तारं स्वर्गादिपलेन न संबध्नाति - does not connect / link the 'performer' to the results like svarghaa etc.
- स्वात्मप्रतिलम्भकाले एव - even at the time of its very uthpatthi,
- आत्मज्ञानवत् - as aathmajnaanam does.

Prathilambha kaale – uthpatthi kaale (at the time of execution of the action)

Aathmajnaanam gives its benefit, viz., 'destroying ignorance', instantaneously, on its uthpatthi, whereas karmaa does not give the benefit, immediately on the performance of karmaa. Action has to survive as adhrishtam (in Vedhaanthic language) or apoorvam (in poorva meemaamsaa language) for a length of time, to give its results.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36 (Contd.):

आत्मज्ञानं पुनः पुरुषार्थसिद्धौ न उत्पद्यमानस्वरूपव्यतिरेकेण अन्यद्रूपान्तरं साधनान्तरं वापेक्षते ।

On the contrary, the knowledge of the Self does not require the assumption of any other form or use of any other means, apart from its emergence into being, in the matter of effectuating the good sought through it.

- पुनः - On the other hand,
- आत्मज्ञानं - Self-knowledge
- पुरुषार्थ सिद्धौ - in the accomplishment of moksha siddhi (in this context),
- न अपेक्षते - does not depend on
- अन्यत् - any extraneous factor
- उत्पद्यमानस्वरूपव्यतिरेकेण - other than its own uthpatthi / other than the condition of its being born;

Jnaanam does not depend on guru, sasthraa-s, pramaanam etc., for its function. It does not even require their presence.

It does not require time factor also, as the use of the term 'uthpadhyamaana' shows. 'Uthpadhyamaana' is a 'present passive participle' use, stressing the fact that 'as even as knowledge is born, ignorance is destroyed'. If a 'past passive principle' had been used, it would have meant 'after the rise of the knowledge, ignorance is destroyed', which implies a time gap, between the 'rise' of knowledge and the 'elimination' of ignorance. As soon as one understands that one is saakshi chaithanya svaroopaa., the very understanding helps one to claim that one is sarva samsaara varjitha: /

In this context, it may be noted, that, there is a difference between 'information' and 'knowledge'. The 'content' of 'information' is a mere statement from others. 'Knowledge', by definition, is knowledge only when the 'content' of 'knowledge' is a fact for 'me', the knower.

"I am ever free" is the content of self-knowledge. "It is a fact; it is not just a theory of the Upanishad-s" will be the conviction, when one has acquired self-knowledge.

- रूपान्तरं (न अपेक्षत) - nor does it ('Self-knowledge') depend on knowledge in any other form (for accomplishment of moksha siddhi).

Certain philosophers talk of two versions of knowledge – the first version, which is acquired at the time of sravanam and the second version, when the acquired knowledge gets converted into realization through meditation. Thus, they divide 'understanding' into knowledge-type-understanding and realization-type-understanding, of which, they believe, only the latter will give liberation. Sureswaraacharya does not agree. According to him, proper study of Vedhaanthaa gives the student the final knowledge, which does not require any type of transformation or transmutation or improvement. Hence, the Aacharya says "roopaantharam na apekshathe", meaning that aathmajnaanam does not need any improvement for achieving liberation.

- साधनान्तरं वा (न अपेक्षते)- nor does Self-knowledge depend on any further action (karma samucchayaa) for accomplishment of moksha siddhi.

Meditation, japaa, paaraayanam etc. are not required for improvement of the acquired self-knowledge. They are required only for saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, which, no doubt, is an essential qualification for the seeker, since, till the seeker gets this sampatthi, Vedhaanthaa remains only as 'information'. But, it should be noted, that performance of such saadhana-s does not convert the information into knowledge or make any improvement to the acquired knowledge. It converts only the seeker ; it makes him fit for receiving the knowledge. In short, the 'improvement' is made to the seeker.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36 (Contd.) :

कुत एतत् । यतः ।

How is that? The reason follows:

Sureswaraacharya himself asks:

- कुत एतत् - Why do I say so ? (that jnaanam does not require any extraneous factor, other than "understanding", to give liberation)

- यतः - Because, (The answer is in the verse that follows).

Chapter I: Verse 36 –

बलवद्दि प्रमाणोत्थं सम्यग्ज्ञानं न बाध्यते ।

Perfect knowledge, which is strong, being based on the right evidences, is not liable to be cancelled. In its work of cancelling errors, it needs the help of no other factor.

This verse highlights the importance of saasthraa-s and the importance of listening to the saasthraa-s properly.

The Aachaaryaa says: “Saasthraa is a pramaanam. It produces knowledge, which destroys ignorance. Just as darkness cannot fight light and does not even have the power to stay in the presence of light, ignorance also has no power to stay in the presence of proper knowledge, which instantaneously destroys ignorance. The entire samsaaraa, dvaittha prapancham, the dream-world, praarabhdha-sanchitha-aagaami karmaa-s, vaasanaa-s etc. are all based on ajnaanam only. All these karmaa-s and vaasanaa-s have been collected over kalpakoti janmaa-s and, therefore, quantitatively very huge. But, since they are based on ignorance only, once ignorance is negated, all of them get falsified instantaneously, on acquisition of knowledge”.

Swami Chinmayaanandhaa gives an example: “Imagine a cave in a Brazilian forest, which had never been entered by a man. It had, therefore, been dark in the cave for ages. But, if a light is now lit in the cave, would it need any length of time to dispel the darkness, that has been there for thousands of years? Is not the darkness dispelled instantaneously, on the light being lit?” Likewise, jnaanam is so powerful that ajnaanam, samsaaraa, karmaa-s, vaasanaa-s etc., are all instantaneously destroyed by jnaanam. Ajnaanam cannot attack jnaanam.

23. Chapter I, Verses 36 to 38 (16-09-2006)

In this portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa accepts that both karmaa and jnaanam depend on duality for their rise or uthpatthy. Karmaa requires the thriputi – karthaa, karanam and karmaa. Jnaanam requires the thriputi – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Thriputi dependence is common for karma uthpatthi and jnaana janyam. Thriputi itself is dependent on aathma ajnaanam. Hence, aathma ajnaanam is the base for karma uthpatthi and jnaana janyam. The Aacharyaa concedes: "This is a fact; we accept".

But, though both karmaa and jnaanam are ajnaana upaadhaanakam, the ways they function are different, in two main aspects:

- (1) Karmaa requires continued existence for giving results, whereas jnaanam does not require continued existence for performing its functions.
- (2) Karmaa depends on thriputi for giving results also, whereas jnaanam does not depend on thriputi for doing its function. Jnaanam's validity depends on advaitam and therefore, for doing its function of 'destroying ignorance', it depends only on advaitam. This is a unique topic dealt with, by Naishkarmya Siddhi.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "The moment jnaanam rises, it removes ignorance ; once ignorance is removed, advaitam is falsified, in the very wake of knowledge".

He further says : "No doubt ignorance has been existing for a long time and has a family of huge proportions - karthruthvam, bokthruthvam, sanchitha, praarabhdha, aagaami karmaa-s etc. Jnaanam may appear weak, in comparison with ajnaanam, to fight ajnaanam. It may even be doubted, that, ignorance and misconception may destroy knowledge in a fight. But, 'knowledge', being a 'fact', is stronger than millions of misconceptions, which are 'lies'. Falsehoods cannot stand in front of truth. Jnaanam cannot, therefore, be destroyed by ignorance and errors. On the other hand, jnaanam destroys ignorance and errors, in a trice".

One fact will survive any number of errors.

- सम्यग्ज्ञानं न बाध्यते - Right knowledge is not affected / cancelled,
- बलवद्भि - the strong jnaanam,

Balavaddhi is an adjective, used as a noun here, to denote jnaanam.

- प्रमाण उत्थं - having the support of vedhaantha pramaanaa.

The strength of 'self-knowledge' is because of the fact, that, 'self-knowledge' is based on the valid evidence of Vedhaanthaa.

"Pramaanam" in this context means "Vedhaanthaa". "Pramaana uttha jnaanam", therefore, means "self-knowledge revealed by Vedhaanthaa". Prathyaksha pramaanam, anumaana pramaanam, Veda poorva pramaanam, in fact, all pramaanam-s other than Vedhaanthaa talk only on vyaavahaarika subjects; i.e. they are all vyaavahaarika bodhakam. Vedhaanthaa is the only pramaanam revealing Paaramaarthika sathyam. Because of this fact, the pramaanam-s, other than Vedhaanthaa, cannot dent aathma jnaanam. Modern science also cannot affect aathma jnaanam, since modern science also deals with vyaavahaarika subjects only.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- आकाङ्क्षते च साधनम् न अन्यत् - (This knowledge) does not require the help of anything else / any other saadhanaa - meditation, karmaa etc.,

Karmaa is meant to convert only the student into a worthy listener. Karmaa cannot and need not improve knowledge. Once the listener is worthy, the very sravanam will destroy the samsaaraa-producing ignorance.

- बाधनं प्रति - for destroying samsaaraa.
Baadhanam – samsaara naasam; prathi – towards / for.

The essence: "Become a worthy listener. Listen to Vedhaanthaa from a proper guru. The job is over".

Knowledge is in the intellect; destruction of ignorance is also in the intellect. Hence, the realization "I am not jeevaathmaa ; I am the very Paramaathmaa" is a silent process.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 37:

स्वपक्षस्य हेत्ववष्टम्भेन समर्थितत्वान्निराशङ्कमुपसंहियते ।

As the position taken is fully defended by reason, the author concludes without any hesitation and uncertainty:

Sureswaraacharya restates his siddhaanthaa, to the karma vaadhin, in verse 37.

- समर्थितत्वात् - Because of the establishment,

- स्वपक्षस्य - of our own view (viz., "karmaa cannot give liberation ; jnaanam alone, independently gives liberation)
- हेतु अवष्टम्भेन - with the support of reasoning / logic,
- उपसंह्रियते the topic is now being wound up
- निराशङ्कम् - without any uncertainty / hesitation.

Chapter I: Verse 37 -

तस्माद्दुःखोदधेर्हेतोरज्ञानस्यापनुत्तये ।

सम्यग्ज्ञानं सुपर्याप्तं क्रिया चेन्नोक्तहेतुतः ॥ ३७ ॥

Therefore, perfect knowledge is sufficient for eradicating the ignorance that is the cause of the ocean of misery; and not action, for reasons already stated.

- तस्मात् - Because of the reasons given in the foregoing portion,
- सम्यग्ज्ञानं - right / proper knowledge (from right pramaanam)
- सुपर्याप्तं - is amply sufficient / more than sufficient
- अज्ञानस्य अपनुत्तये - for the removal of self-ignorance (apanutthi: - destruction)
- दुःख उदधेः हेतोः - which is the cause of the ocean of misery (samsaaraa).

Self-ignorance is the cause for mental pain, which includes the intellectual pain "why is there suffering in the world? Why should society go through problems?" etc. Only self-knowledge can remove self-ignorance and therefore, these pains.

- क्रिया चेत् - If the poorva pakshin claims that karmaa removes self-ignorance and samsaaraa (an ocean of misery), n-i t cannot be accepted,

"Karmaa cannot remove samsaaraa; it cannot even be a support to jnaanam, in destroying ignorance". Why not ?

- उक्त हेतोः - because of the reasons already given before.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is heavily discrediting karmaa, throughout this chapter. But, karmaa is not useless. The Aachaaryaa's contention is: "Karmaa cannot remove ignorance and, therefore, cannot give liberation". He does not say karmaa is useless. Later, in the same treatise, the Aachaaryaa will be stressing the importance of karmaa and how essential it is for converting the seeker into a proper listener.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 38:

ननु बलवदपि सम्यग्ज्ञानं सदप्रमाणोत्थेनासम्यग्ज्ञानेन बाध्यमानमुपलभामहे यत उत्पन्नपरमार्थबोधस्यापि कर्तृत्वभोक्त्रुत्तरागद्वेषाध्यनवबोधोत्थप्रत्यया आविर्भवन्ति ।

“But” it may be said “even if perfect knowledge is strong, we have cases in which, it is cancelled by erroneous knowledge originating from false sources. It is for this reason that even a person enlightened about Reality is subject to feelings of being an agent of actions and of being an experiencer of pleasure and pain, and subject to desire and aversions, all of which originate from ignorance”.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives an introduction to the next slokaa. The first part of the introduction, is in the form of a question from a student. “We are able to understand Vedhaanthaa; we accept that jnaanam destroys ignorance; that, all the misconceptions are also destroyed by removal of ignorance. But, the problem is, though jnaanam is very powerful when it rises at the time of sravanam, thereafter, it appears weakened and the ajnaana janya karthruthva bokthruthva feelings get resurrected and become so powerful, that, they seem to destroy knowledge. Avidhyaa and raaghdveshaa seem to become powerful and seem to destroy knowledge. Knowledge, therefore, may not be sufficient for destroying ignorance. It may need some other support” is the student’s doubt.

- ननु - But
- सम्यग्ज्ञानं बलवदपि सत् - though the right knowledge is powerful,
- उपलभामहे - we experience (prathyaksha anubhavena)
- बाध्यमानं - the knowledge being eliminated from us,
- असम्यग्ज्ञानेन - by mithyaa jnaanam / by ajnaanam / by erroneous notions
- अप्रमाण उत्थेन - born out of wrong pramaanam-s (adj. to asamyagjnaanam).

Wrong knowledge – asamyag jnaanam – is born out of non-Vedic pramaanam-s, such as prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa etc.

“Though I gain knowledge when I study scriptures (i.e. through sravanam), later, I find that the knowledge I have gained, is depleted by my avidhyaa notions. How is this? “laments the student. This is our own experience; knowledge does not seem to hold in a crisis. Raaghaa , dveshaa etc. seem to be more powerful.

- यतः - It is for this reason
- उत्पन्न परमार्थ बोधस्य अपि - even for a person enlightened about the paramaarthika sathyam, uthpanna paramaarthaa bodha: - jnaani (aathma bodha: yasya sa: - uthpanna paramaarthaa bodha:)

- अनवबोधोत्थ प्रत्ययाः - erroneous notions, originating from ignorance (such as)
- कर्तृत्व भोक्तृत्व राग द्वेषादि - the feelings of (1) being an agent of actions (2) being an agent of experiences of results (3) desires (4) aversions etc.,
- आविर्भवन्ति - arise.

For the student, it appears that ignorance is capable of destroying knowledge.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 38 (Contd.):

न ह्यबाधिते सम्यग्जाने तद्विरुद्धानां प्रत्ययानां सम्भवोऽस्ति ।

"If perfect knowledge had not been stultified, such impressions contrary to it would not at all arise".

The poorva pakshin asks: "From this experience, i.e. 'even a jnaani experiencing raaghaa and dveshad', what is the lesson to be drawn?" and answers the question himself: "The jnaani has lost his knowledge, since the conviction 'I am poorna:' is lost and thereafter, he himself gets lost in worldly matters. Ignorance is inimical to knowledge and so must have destroyed knowledge, giving rise again to karthruthva-bokthruthva feelings. Jnaanam does not seem to destroy ignorance permanently".

"Because of this fact, knowledge is to be reinforced by karmaa" is the poorva pakshin's stand.

- सम्यग्जाने अबाधिते - Without destruction of right knowledge,
- तद्विरुद्धानां प्रत्ययानां सम्भवः न अस्ति हि - the rise of erroneous notions cannot at all happen.

Prathyayaanaam viruddhaanaam – of erroneous notions; sambhava: - uthpatthy/ rise.

Destruction of knowledge is responsible for re-arising of erroneous misconceptions. Avidhyaa seems to relapse; samsaaraa is re-born.

Up to this is the poorva pakshin's argument or a genuine student's doubt.

Sureswaraachaaryaa starts replying.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 38 (Contd.):

न एतद् एवम् । कुतः ।

This is not true. Why not?

- एतद् एवम् न (भवति) - What you say is not right.

The Aachaaryaa implies by this terse statement: "Ignorance, once destroyed, cannot come back. Destroyed ignorance cannot destroy knowledge. Even live ignorance is not capable of challenging knowledge; how can dead ignorance challenge knowledge?"

- कुतः - Why do I say so ?
Aachaaryaa's answer follows in the verse.

Chapter I: Verse 38 -

बाधितत्वादविध्याया विध्यां सा नैव बाधते ।

तद्वासना निमित्तत्वं यान्ति विध्यास्मृतेर्ध्रुवम् ॥ ३८ ॥

As ignorance has been stultified, it cannot cancel enlightenment. The impressions left by enlightenment arouse the remembrance of knowledge, which does remove the impressions of ignorance.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Once ignorance is gone, it cannot come back, since it is anaadhi i.e. it has no beginning. If it comes back, it will amount to having a beginning, which is not possible. Since it cannot even come back, it cannot produce erroneous notions. It cannot produce prathyayaa'."

But, then how does one, who has acquired knowledge, get back erroneous notions ?

The Aachaaryaa replies: "It is not ignorance that is responsible for the re-birth of erroneous notions. It is the vaasanaa-s that are responsible".

Then, a further question arises: "If avidhyaa vaasanaa-s are responsible for the resurrection of the wrong notions, does one again require jnaanam to destroy avidhyaa vaasanaa?"

"Jnaanam destroys avidhyaa – but not the avidhyaa vaasanaa" seems to be possible.

Sureswaraachaaryaa agrees, that jnaanam does not destroy avidhyaa vaasanaa s. Avidhyaa is destroyed by vidhyaa; avidhyaa vaasanaa-s are to be destroyed by jnaana vaasanaa. But, even for the destruction of avidhyaa vaasanaa-s, karmaa is not needed. Jnaanam and jnaanasmruthi will destroy ajnaanam and ajnaana vaasanaa-s respectively. Jnaanasmruthi is otherwise called nidhidhyaasanam.

The Aachaaryaa says: "One need not even deliberately invoke jnaana vaasanaa. If avidhyaa vaasanaa-s arise, jnaana vaasanaa will be automatically invoked for a good seeker."

24. Chapter I, Verse 38 to 40 (23-09-2006)

Sureswaraacharya talked about the similarity and differences between karmaa and jnaanam. Karmaa and jnaanam are similar in requiring thriputi for their uthpatthi. But, in the production of their results, there are differences.

The first difference is, that, Karmaa has to stay for a length of time, to produce results only at a later date. As for jnaanam, it does not require continued existence, since, immediately as it rises, it does its job of destroying ignorance. In other words, Jnaanapalan is instantaneous, while karmapalan is not.

Another difference is, that, for producing results also, karmaa depends on thriputi and therefore dvaitham. This is because the result of karmaa is bhoghaa, which obviously requires thriputi. As for jnaanam, while it requires dvaitham for its jananam or uthpatthy, it does not depend on dvaitham for doing its function of removal of ignorance. On the contrary, it depends on advaitam for giving its results of destroying ajnaanam and dvaitham. In this aspect of destroying dvaitham, of which it is born, jnaanam can be likened to the wild forest fires, which kindled by friction between trees, in hot summers, destroy the very trees, of which they are born. The fire of jnaanam, rising from thriputi, is capable of destroying the thriputi.

Thereafter, i.e. after comparing and contrasting karmaa and jnaanam, the Aacharya himself foresees a possible question from the student (sambhandha gadhyam to verse 38). The question that may be raised, is: "How is it, when jnaana palan is claimed to be instantaneous, even people who have acquired jnaanam, have doubts, karthruthvam, bokthruthvam etc.? Does it mean that jnaanam does not destroy ajnaanam totally or does it mean that the destroyed ajnaanam comes back again? If so, would it also not mean, that, mere jnaanam is not sufficient, but, requires some other support, to avoid avidhyaa punar uthpatthi?"

Sureswaraacharya assures: "Ajnaanam once destroyed, is destroyed forever. It can never come back". Then how does one explain the experience of samsaaraa, even after a thorough Vedhaanthic study and understanding? The Aacharya explains: "In such cases, it is not avidhyaa that produces samsaaraa, since avidhyaa is gone forever. It is the avidhyaa vaasanaa (habit or memory), still in the mind, which is responsible for samsaaraa".

The student, then asks: "Since from what you say, jnaanam may not destroy the avidhyaa vaasanaa, which continues to torment the seeker, even after he has acquired jnaanam, do we not need something else to fight the avidhyaa vaasanaa? Nithya naimitthika karmaani may, perhaps, be required for this purpose. Jnaanam, supported by karmaa, may destroy the avidhyaa vaasanaa".

Sureswaraacharya replies (in verse 38): "No; you do not require karmaa for destroying avidhyaa vaasanaa also. Jnaanam has its own vaasanaa, which will destroy avidhyaa vaasanaa. A sincere seeker and student of Vedhaanthee will have vidhyaa vaasanaa or vidhyaa smruthi. When avidhyaa vaasanaa arises, the vidhyaa vaasanaa will trigger the knowledge that the student had received".

"The activated jnaana vaasanaa can / should be used by the sincere seeker to destroy the avidhyaa vaasanaa. He need not use anything else for destroying the avidhyaa vaasanaa. Jnaanam will help forever." This is the guarantee given by Sureswaraacharya.

- अविध्याया बाधितत्वात् - Since ajnaanam has been destroyed
- सा विध्यां न एव बाधते - that destroyed ajnaanam can never obstruct / negate the knowledge already attained.

The ajnaanam has been destroyed at the time of sravanam itself. It neither survives, nor does it come back, to obstruct the jnaanam. Jnaanasya naasam naasthi | Ajnaanasya punar uthpatthi: api naive naasthi"| On the other hand:

- तद्वासना - The vidhyaa vaasanaa,
- धृवम् - definitely / certainly,
- निमित्तत्वं यान्ति - becomes the activating cause
- विध्या स्मृतेः - of the Vedhaanthic teaching , which has been received for a length of time.

Vidhyaa smruthi: and vidhyaa vaasanaa are synonymous.

This is a powerful slokaa, to be registered and remembered. One can take total recourse to this teaching; use this teaching in one's life to obtain support and strength, in facing all situations. Every student has to bring about this change, sometime in his life – the firm decision "to surrender to this teaching wholeheartedly". It is, no doubt, not easy. But, the mind has to be firmly made up, to use this teaching as life-long support. Deciding to preserve the knowledge (nischaya), a sankalpaa should be taken: "Hereafter, in my life, in all situations, in the face of all challenges, I shall make use of this teaching, as my approach". Having taken this sankalpaa, implementation of the resolution – i.e. abhyaasaa should start and continue.

Nisschayaa (decision to preserve the knowledge) TO sankalpaa (resolution to use the knowledge) TO abhyaasaa (practice/use).

Jnaana yoga begins with this concededly difficult transformation. The seeker requires tremendous faith in 'knowledge' to start on the jnaana yoga path. Lack of faith leads one to give lame excuses such as "My knowledge is not complete / I have only book-knowledge / I do not have saakshaathkaaraa / I do not have anubhavaa" etc. Such statements are only expressions of lack of faith. The fact is, this teaching is ample to support the seeker in crisis.

The lack of faith, also, sometimes, leads one to make a compromise. Such a person admires the Vedhaanthic teachings; considers the scriptures and the aachaaryaa as wonderful ; but, does not have the courage to use the teachings to face life. "Vedhaantha for study; Bhagavaan for facing life" is the compromise formula followed, by many a Vedhaanthic student.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, though not harshly critical of such a student, warns: " If you are in this compromise formula, you have not started on jnaana yoga. At best, you are a karma yogi".

The difference between a karma yogi and a jnaana yogi, is, that, the karma yogi depends on Bhagavaan, for facing life. The jnaana yogi depends on Bhagavaan's teachings for confronting life. It follows, that, the karma yogi has faith only in Bhagavaan, while the jnaana yogi has faith in Bhagavaan and equally fervently in His teachings, and uses them for facing life. And, because of this, a jnaana yogi's faith can be considered greater than that of a karma yogi's.

The karma yogi prays to the Lord to help him in his life. The jnaana yogi prays "nourish my faith in Your teachings". The sankalpa to use jnaanam for day-to-day life, is not broken for a jnaana yogi. The mere study of Vedhaantha will not make one a jnaana yogi. One has to have the nischayaa (the decision to preserve the knowledge), form the sankalpa (resolution to use the knowledge) and practice abhyasaa, to become a jnaana yogi. Since jnaana yoga alone gives liberation, if one is interested in mokshaa here and now, one has to become a jnaana yogi, in this life.

Sureswaraachaaryaa assures, that, he is with such a person. This is the significance of the word 'dhruvam' in the slokaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 39:

"कर्माज्ञानसमुत्थत्वात्" इत्युक्तो हेतुस्तस्य च समर्थनं पूर्वमेवाभिहितं "हितं सम्प्रेप्सताम्" इत्यादिना । तदभ्युच्चयार्थमविधान्वयेन च संसारान्वयित्वं प्रदर्शयिष्यामीत्यत आह ।

The argument stated, that, "action born of ignorance cannot remove ignorance" (Verse 35) has been strengthened in advance by the consideration of motives of actions etc. (Verse 29). In order to supplement it, it is now proposed to show that action involves ignorance and so involves transmigratory existence.

Sureswaraacharya wants to go to the next topic and gives an introduction. He first states what he had already done and then states what he proposes to do.

- "कर्म अजान सम्थत्वात्" - For the fact "karma cannot destroy ignorance, since it is born of ignorance",
- इति हेतु उक्तः - logical reason was given (from verse 35).
- तस्य समर्थनं च - Explanation for this view also
- पूर्व एव अभिहितं - was also given earlier,
- "हितं सम्प्रेप्सताम्" इत्यादिना - starting from 'hitham samprepsathaam' (verse 29).

To recollect the explanation: "Even vaidhika karmaa is born of ignorance only ; performance of karmaa is because of desires – not because of Vedic injunctions, since Vedaa-s give only the information regarding the rituals and not the motivation for action". An example: Vedaa-s give the information as to how the puthrakaameshti yaagaa should be performed. But, the actual performance is undertaken, not because it is an injunction of the Vedaa-s, but, only because of the desire for a puthraa, which desire is born out of ignorance.

Up to this, in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 39, some of the topics already discussed were re-stated.

Now, the gadhyam moves to the next topic.

- तद् अभ्युच्चयार्थ - To give additional support to the previous arguments,-

The previous argument referred to, is: "Karmaa is born out of ignorance, since, because of ajnaanam, apoorathvam results, because of which desires arise, for the fulfillment of which, karmaa is undertaken". The Aachaaryaa, now, wants to show, that, not only is karmaa born out of ignorance, it also 'travels' with ignorance. Avidhyaa not only produces karmaa; it also co-exists with karmaa.

- अत इति प्रदर्शयिष्यामि - now, I will show, in the following manner, that,
- संसार अन्वयित्वं - "continuity of samsaaraa (persists)
- अविध्या अन्वयेन - because of the companionship of avidhyaa (with karmaa)"
- आह - says the author.

Chapter I: Verse 39:

ब्राह्मण्याध्यात्मके देहे लात्वा नात्मेति भावनाम् ।

A man entertaining the belief that he is the body belonging to a certain caste, order etc., becomes obedient to the sruthi, in his actions of speech, mind and body.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out: "To perform Vedic karma, the appropriate qualifications are required. Pursuit of jnaanam requires the four-fold qualifications – saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi. Likewise, performance of karmaa also requires certain qualifications. Among them, the two important qualifications are varnaa and aasramaa. Any particular karmaa has to be undertaken only by the relevant varna – aasrami as prescribed in the scriptures, to produce the adhrishta or apoorva palan, promised for that particular karmaa by the scriptures. If a karmaa is performed by one, who does not have the prescribed varnaa and aasramaa qualifications, the karmaa will not produce the desired adhrishta palan. In other words, 'Varna aasrama abhimaanaa', is a prerequisite for a vaidhika karmaa'.

(An interesting related subject is that of the inter-caste marriages which are not uncommon in present times. According to the Hindu Dharmaa, 'marriage' is a samskaaraa. The marriage rituals for each varnaa are designed for that particular varnaa. The Vedic ritualistic wedding, in the situation of an inter-caste marriage, may, therefore, satisfy the sentiment – but, will not produce the adhrishta palan.)

To continue with the elaboration of the Aachaarayaa's arguments:

Mundakopanishad defines aathmaa, using the terms, among others, 'agothram' and 'avarnam' in Manthraa 6 – Section 1 – Chapter I. Another well known verse runs "Jaathi neethi kula gothra dhooragam naama roopa guna dosha varjitham na varnam na varnaasrama chaaradharmaa:"|

But, whenever performance of any vaidhika karmaa is undertaken, this varna-rahitha-aasrama-rahitha-svaroopaa has to be consciously rejected. The performer has to, necessarily, identify with his varnaa and aasramaa, which are anaathmaa. In other words, karmaa requires anaathma abhimaanaa and, therefore, adhyaasaa. This would mean, that, karmaa has to travel with ajnaanam.

When this is true of vaidhika karmaa, it is certainly more true of loukika karmaa.

"Ignorance is perpetuated by karmaa, and, hence, there is no mokshaa for the one who is steeped in karmaa" is Sureswaraachaaryaa's warning.

(Again, a not irrelevant interesting fact: It is well known that a sanyaasi gives up grihastha vaidhika karmaa and also his varnaa. What is not that well known, is, that, when one prostrates to a sanyaasi, the conventional chanting of abhivaadhanaa, indicating kulam, gothram etc. is prohibited, since a sanyaasi, always identifying with the aathmaa, is not supposed to pay any attention to the anaathmaa details of caste etc.)

ना - A man (manushya: / purusha:)

लात्वा - invoking

देहे - in the body,

ब्राह्मण्यादि आत्मके - the nature of varnaa, aasramaa etc.,

Braahmanyaadhi – ‘braahmanyam’ denotes varnaa and the use of aadhi denotes aasramaa etc. ‘Aathmake’ means ‘of the nature’.

- आत्मा इति भावनाम् - (and) the abhimaanaa as the egoistic individual,
- श्रुतेः किङ्करताम् येति - becomes a slave / servant / daasaa of sruthi,
- वाङ् मनः कार्यकर्मसु - in the fields of speech, mind and body.

‘yethi’ – ‘attains’; ‘sruthe:’ – ‘of the Vedaa-s’; ‘kinkarathaa’ – ‘the nature of being a servant’.

Mokshaa is freedom from slavery. But, such a karmi becomes a slave to the vidhinishedha vaakya sruthi and gets totally involved in all types of karmaa - nithya, naimitthika and kaamyaa. The use of the term ‘vaang mana:’ emphasizes the ‘total’ involvement of the karmi in karmaa.

Every karmi has deha abhimaanam and therefore, ajnaanam and ajnaana janya adhyaasa: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 40:

यस्मात्कर्माज्ञानसमुत्थमेव तस्मात्तद्व्यावृत्तौ निवर्तत इत्युच्यते ।

As action originates from ignorance, it terminates on the removal of ignorance. The following verse enunciates this principle.

Sureswaraachaaryaa shows the contrast between anvayaa and vyathirekhaa. When ajnaanam and adhyasaa are there, karma also is there. When they are gone, karmaa also is gone.

- यस्मात् कर्म अज्ञान समुत्थं एव -- “Since karmaa is born out of ignorance and varna – aasrama abhimaanaa,
- तस्मात् तद् व्यावृत्तौ - - therefore, on the destruction / removal of ignorance,

The pronoun ‘thad’ denotes ‘ajnaanam’, in this context; ‘vyaavrutthi:’ – ‘naasa:’ (destruction).

- (कर्मा) निवर्तते - karmaa will go away”.
- इति उच्यते - This principle is to be enunciated (in the following verse).

After rise of jnaanam, it is impossible to invoke varna - aasrama abhimaanaa and, therefore, impossible to commit oneself to vaidhika karmaa. “Ajnaana sathve karma sathvam; ajnaana abhaave karma abhaava:” is the essence.

Chapter I: Verse 40 -

दग्धाखिलाधिकारश्चेद्ब्रह्मज्ञानाग्निना मुनिः ।

वर्तमानः श्रुतेर्मूर्ध्नि नैव स्याद्वेदकिङ्करः ॥ ४० ॥

Since a sage’s sense of identity with the body of a particular caste etc., is burnt up by the knowledge of Brahman, such a one dwells above the sruthi and he is no longer a servant of Vedic injunctions.

A jnaani is not a Veda daasa:; he is a Veda swami: The aim of a Vedhaanthic seeker should be to move from a daasa: in the preliminary stage, to a swaami ultimately.

25. Chapter I, Verse 40 to 42 (30-09-2006)

Sureswaraachaarya first established that karmaa cannot destroy ignorance – any ignorance, including self-ignorance. Without destruction of self-ignorance, mokshaa is not possible. Since karmaa cannot destroy ignorance, it follows, that, karmaa cannot give mokshaa also.

Karmaa cannot destroy ignorance, since it is born of ignorance. Ignorance leads to apoomathvam, which leads to desires, which lead to action (karmaa). Karmaa, thus, is a product of ignorance.

The Aachaaryaa established that karmaa is not only a product of ignorance, but, that, karmaa is also accompanied by ignorance, throughout its existence; karmaa travels with ignorance, all the time. Since karmaa is accompanied by ignorance, it follows, that, it is accompanied by samsaaraa also. How can that karmaa, for which samsaaraa is a companion, ever destroy samsaaraa?

In verse 39, the Aachaaryaa talked of the karma samsaara ajnaana anvayee ('anvayee' means 'travel with') i.e. of the fact, that, karmaa, samsaaraa and ajnaanaa travel together. Yathra yathra avidhyaa anvaya: thathra thathra samsaara anvaya: | Wherever ignorance is a companion, samsaaraa is also an uninvited companion.

But, how do you say that karmaa travels with avidhyaa? Sureswaraachaaryaa explains: "Vaidhika karmaa requires varna-aasrama-abhimanaa, since, according to Vedic injunctions, any vaidhika karmaa requires the appropriate varnaa and the appropriate aasrama qualifications. The varna-aasrama-abhimanaa goes with deha abhimaanaa, which goes with adhyaasaa, which, in turn, goes with ajnaanaa". Ignorance is, thus, the cause of adhyaasaa, varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa and karma anushtaanam. In verse 39, the Aachaaryaa remarked "Braahmanyadhi aathmake dehe laathvaa", stressing that karmaa exists with varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa. This trend of argument – "wherever avidhyaa is there, samsaaraa is", is based on anvayaa logic.

In the present verse (verse 40), the Aachaaryaa gives the vyathirekhaa argument: "When a person gains knowledge, viz. that, 'aham brahma asmi', the immediate consequence is deha abhimaana naasa: | Once deha abhimaanaa goes, varna-aasrama-abhimanaa also goes. When varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa goes, all Vedic injunctions become irrelevant to him; he is no more a candidate existing within the purview of Vedic injunctions. The Veda Poorva Bhaagaa addresses people of all four varnaas – braahmanaas, kshathriyaas, vaisyaas and sudraas and also people of all aasramaas – brahmachaarins, grihasthaas, vaanaprasthaas and sanyaasins. But, the person who has achieved self-knowledge, has transcended all of them; his karma abhimaanam is gone. Qualifications for karmaa have been burnt in his case. Karmaa, therefore, does not exist for him”.

- दग्ध अखिल अधिकारःचेत् - If, one's qualifications, in the form of varnaa and aasramaa are totally burnt

Dhagdha – burnt down; akhila – all; adhikaara: - qualification (in the form of varnaa and aasramaa).

Performance of vaidhika karmaa not only necessitates the qualifications of the relevant varnaa and aasramaa; but, also the abhimaanaa as karthaa and bokthaa; and, the sense of belonging to a specific gothraa and soothraa also, to perform the specific karmaa, on the specified day, at the specific time etc.

A jnaani, on the other hand, is (to use the words used by the Mundakopnishad, in I.1.6, for describing Brahman) `agothram` and `avarnam`.

- ब्रह्म ज्ञान अग्निना - by the fire of brahma jnaanam (“aham brahma asmi” ithi jnaanam),
- मुनिः - such a jnaani
- वेदकिङ्करः न स्यात् - is no more a servant of Vedaa-s (karma kaandaa);
- श्रुतेः मूर्ध्नि वर्तमानः एव - but, resides in the Veda anthaa.

The jnaani transcends the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s. He is no more bound by the Vedic injunctions – either vidhi or nishedhaa. He is, therefore, not a servant of Vedaa-s anymore; but, is the very subject matter of the Veda antha teachings – the very Brahman. Use of the word `moordhni`, indicates this. He is no more a dhaasa; but, a swami.

In the Bhagavadh Geetha also, Lord Krishna asserts that the jnaani transcends the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, - “sabdha brahma adhivarthathe”, `sabdha brahma` denoting the Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa or the karma kaandaa.

Such a jnaani can claim, as in the Kaivalya Upanishad (manthraa 19) “mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham, mayi sarvam layam yaathi | Thadh brahma advayam asmi aham”| - “Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything resolves into me alone. I am that non-dual Brahman”|

There is no need of karmaa for a jnaani. Hence, he has no avidhyaa and hence no samsaaraa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 41:

अथेतरो घनतराविध्यापटल संवीत अन्तःकरणोऽङ्गीकृत कर्तृत्वाध्यशेष कर्माधिकारकारणो
विधिप्रतिषेधचोदनसंदंशोपदष्टः कर्मसु प्रवर्तमानः ।

The other man whose inner sense is enveloped by the dense darkness of ignorance and who accepts the conditions leading to action like that of being an agent, gets stung, as it were, by commandments and prohibitions and engages in actions.

Sureswaraachaaryaa comes back to the karmi. In verse 40, he had said that a jnaani is free from avidhyaa, therefore, free from karmaa, and therefore, free from samsaraa. In verse 41, he comes back to the ajnaani, who is wedded to karmaa. As long as the ajnaani is attached to karmaa, he will be perpetuating ignorance, varna and aasrama abhimaanaa, deha abhimaanaa and samsaraa. Holding on to the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, such a person will travel from samsaraa to samsaraa.

A warning here will be appropriate. The contents of Sureswaraachaaryaa's teachings should be understood properly. The Aachaaryaa does not consider karmaa as entirely useless; later, he will himself talk of how essential the use of karmaa is, in the initial stages of the spiritual journey. But, his contention is, that, after a limited use of the karma kaandaa, to achieve the purposes it is intended for (viz. chittha suddhi and chittha ekaagradhaa), the seeker should move on to the jnaana kaandaa, since, it is jnaanaa alone, that can give liberation.

- अथ इतरः - On the other hand, the other one (i.e. the ajnaani / karmi, the one other than the jnaani),
- घनतर अविध्या पटल संवीत अन्तःकरणः - with internal vision blindfolded by a thick covering of ignorance, ghanathara – thick ; avidhyaa – ignorance ; patalam – covering / membrane; samveetha - blindfolded / covered ; antha: karanam – inner vision.

The ajnaani's discriminatory faculty is covered with a thick layer of ignorance. He, therefore, looks upon himself as a karthaa and bokthaa; and, as endowed with all qualifications for vaidhika karmaa, such as varnam, aasramam, age etc.

An example of the 'age' qualification is 'krishna kesam' (black hair, denoting youth) prescribed for certain agni rituals. Recognition of such qualifications in oneself, establishes deha abhimaanam also.

- अकृत कर्तृत्वादि अशेष कर्म अधिकार कारणः accepting /considering himself to be a:

- possessor of all the qualifications,
- such as being a karthaa etc., for
- performance of karmaa,

'Karthruthvaadhī' - 'doership' (the sense of being the performer of the action) etc.; asesha - without any left-over / entire / all; karma adhikaara – qualifications for performance of karmaa; kaarana: - possessor.

- विधि प्रतिषेध चोदन संदंश उपदष्ट : - is gripped firmly by the tongs of the pair of injunctions – vidhi and prathishedha, samdamsa: - tongs; upadhashta: - gripped; vidhi – commandments; prathishedha-prohibitions.

- कर्मसु प्रवर्तमानः:- and is constantly engaged in action

The jnaani escapes the tongs of veda vidhi nishedhaa. But, the karmi who is proud of his qualifications, is, in reality, helplessly caught in the tongs of vidhi nishedhaa, because of karthruthvaa abhimaanaa and is, for ever, busy with karmaa.

As a bokthaa (reaper of results) also, the karmi acquires praararabhdha punya- paapaani, which steer him into more samsaaraa.

Chapter I: Verse 41 –

शुभैः प्राप्नोति देवत्वं निषिद्धैर्नरकीं गतिम् ।

He, not being a master of himself, becomes a God by virtuous actions or goes to hell as a result of unrighteous deeds or becomes a human being, if the two kinds of action are evenly mixed in his life.

This is a popular verse, very often quoted. Sureswaraachaaryaa earlier explained as to how the karmi gets caught in vidhi-nishedhaa tongs, as a karthaa. Later, as a bokthaa, the karmi is caught in the punya-paapaa tongs.

शुभैः(कर्मभिः) देवत्वं प्राप्नोति - Through noble actions, one becomes a deva (i.e. he may go to svarghaa);

But, svarghaa is also samsaaraa. The Thaithreeya Upanishad grades various types of aanandhaa-s; Indra aanandhaa is one of them. Anything that is subject to gradation, is, obviously, capable of improvement and is, therefore, apoornam, and liable to create feelings of jealousy etc. Further, once the punyaa is exhausted the svarga vaasam is terminated (ksheene punye marthyalokam visanthi – Bhagavadh Geeetha – Verse 21 – Chapter IX).

- निषिद्धैः (कर्मभिः) - through prohibited actions
- नारकीं गतिम् (प्राप्नोति) - attains narakaa;
- उपाभ्यां पुण्य पापाभ्या - when punyaa and paapaa are in equal measure,
- मानुष्यं लभते - attains the human world (manushya janmaa is maanushyam),
- अवशः - helplessly.

This significant word 'avasa:' is explained in the following verse.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 42:

आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्ते घोरे दुःखोदधौ घटीयन्त्रवत् आरोह अवरोह न्यायेन अधम मध्यम उत्तम सुख दुःख मोह विध्युच्चपलसंपात दायिनोः विचित्रयोनीः चण्ड उत्पिञ्जलक श्वसन वेग अभिहित अम्भोधिमध्यवर्ति शुष्क अलाबुवत् शुभ अशुभ व्यामिश्र कर्म वायु समीरितः ।

The world consisting of creatures from Brahmaaji down to the lowest species is an ocean of terrible misery. Births in it are like going up and going down of a pot in a water-wheel, placing us in positions high, low and middle, in respect of pleasures, pains and illusions, momentary like flashes of lightning. The creature is tossed about by the terrific wind of good, bad and mixed deeds of the past like a dry gourd in the middle of an ocean, agitated by a stormy wind.

Scriptures talk of the journeys of the jeevaa from one place to another, in one janmaa itself and then, from one body to another, after the present janmaa is over. The word, samsaaraa, can be interpreted as the travel from one body to another. Is this 'travel' enjoyable or unpleasant?

On this question, Vedaa-s sound a warning. To explain their import, in simple language: "Consider examples from the mundane world; if one joins a conducted tour to places of interest, one has the freedom to choose the tour that one wants and thus the places of one's visit and stay. On the other hand, if one is abducted for some reason and forcibly taken away, obviously, one will have no say on where he is taken to or what condition he lives in. Likewise, if a human being's future is decided by him fully, at both the planning and experiential stages, it can be assumed that he has total freedom. But, it is not so. It is the individual's past karmaa, sometimes done in a very distant earlier janmaa, that decide the results of even his current actions."

This is true in the case of even a jnaani. Sureswaraachaaryaa says that this helpless situation is samsaara.

Vedaa-s give a choice:

The first option is: "If an individual is not interested in mokshaa, but, enjoys karthruthvam and bokthruthvam, without minding the experience of the inevitably cyclic pleasure and pain, he can choose to be a karthaa and bokthaa, following the karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s, which gives guidance as to how to perform punya karmaa-s".

But, this option has a drawback. The performer, even if he diligently pursues only punya karmaa-s now, cannot escape from his already accumulated sanchitha papa karmaa.

The second option is: "Follow the jnaana kaandaa, acquire jnaanam and as jnaana palan, be rid of both sanchitha and aagaami karmaa-s".

The second option is what an intelligent individual would choose. In other words, he will choose to be a mumukshu.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, in this portion, gives a description of samsaaraa and the poor plight of the jeevaa in it.

- (जीवः) - The jeevaa (the subject of the sentence, is supplied),
- आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्ते घोरे (सम्सारे) - in this terrible samsaaraa, consisting of varieties of creatures, from Brahmaji to a blade of grass,
- sthambha - blade / clump of grass; ghore - terrible (adjective to 'samsaarey', which word is supplied).
- दुःख उदधौ - and an ocean of pains (janma / mrithyu / jaraa / vyaadhi etc.),

'Dhu:kha udhadhi:' is another adjective to samsaaraa.

- आरोह अवरोह न्यायेन - following the rule of aarohanam and avarohanam,

Aarohanam - 'going up' (in this context, denotes higher forms of life); avarohanam - 'going down' (in this context, denotes lower forms of life).

No janmaa is permanent or eternal. The jeevaa has to move from janmaa to janmaa, sometimes, as higher species of creation and at other times, as lower species. The Aachaaryaa calls this fact 'aaroha avaroha nyaayam'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives an example to this "going up and down" of the jeevaa.

- घटीयन्त्रवत् - similar to the pot in the water-wheel machine,

Ghatee – in this context, means 'a small pot'; (there is another meaning to the word, as 'clock'). Yanthra: - The reference is to a water-wheel device, used for drawing water from well, for irrigation. The pot, attached to the device, repeatedly goes down the well and comes up, drawing water.

- दायिनाःविध्युत् च पल संपात - and attacked by the results given like flashes of lightning, by the producers, janmaa and karmaa,

The word 'Dhaayinee' literally means 'givers' / 'producers' and in this context, refers to janmaa and karmaa, which give the experiences of sukham, dhu:kham and moham. 'Sampaatha:' literally means 'falling together', 'concurrence' etc. , and implies 'attack', in this context.

- अधम मध्यम उत्तम सुख दुःख मोह - the results being the 'low', the 'middle' and the 'high', viz., confusion, pain and pleasure,

Sukham is associated with sathva (utthama) gunaa; dhu:kham with rajo (madhyama) gunaa; moha: with thamo (adhama) gunaa. The Aachaaryaa, therefore, refers to moham as 'adhama', (since it is under the power of thamo gunaa, the individual's intellect is immobilized or stultified), to dhu:kham as 'madhyama' and to sukham as 'utthama'.

The essence of this statement: The jeevaa is associated with janmaa-s, which are producers of sukham, dhu:kham and moham, attacking the jeevaa, all of a sudden, like flashes of lightning.

- विचित्र योनीः in varieties of births,

The aim of Sureswaraachaarya is to warn the student of the results of the punyaa-s and paapaa-s, acquired through karmaa, which itself is the result of deha abhimaanaa, which, in turn, is a result of ignorance. "Destruction of ignorance" or "acquisition of self-knowledge" is, therefore, the only way to be free of samsaaraa.

The word 'naishkarmya' means 'free from all karmaa-s'.

(The word-by-word interpretation of the Sambhandha gadhyam is not complete; it is to be continued in the next class.)

26. Chapter I, Verse 42 to 44 (07-10-2006)

Sureswaraacharya is giving an elaborate description of samsaara, to show that the "travelling together" of avidhya (ignorance), kaama (desire) and karma (action) is the cause of samsaara. All the three being causes of samsaara, none of them can remove samsaara.

The Aacharya's description of samsaara may leave one with a doubt, that, Vedhaantha is very pessimistic, ever talking about the problems, trials and tribulations that a human being faces. Did not the 20th century Tamil poet, Subramania Bharathiar, sing "eththanai kodi inbam vaitthai, Iraiva", praising the Lord, for the numberless sources of joy and happiness He has provided all round? Why, then, should Vedhaantha concentrate on all the negative aspects of life, such as mrithyu, jaraa, vyaadhi etc., instead of on the positive aspects? This is a charge leveled by the Westerners also, against Hinduism.

But, a clear unbiased analysis will show that Vedaa-s, taken as a whole, do not highlight samsaara problems, in the initial stages. In fact, the Veda Poorva Bhaagaa vigorously promotes karthruthvam and bokthruthvam - which can together be termed as 'individuality'. The karma kaandaa of the Vedaa-s talks of various pleasures of this world and also of the higher worlds, and prescribe the appropriate karmaa-s – kaayika, maanasa, vaachika karmaani – to achieve these pleasures. "Even in death, you can go to a higher lokaa", it says, and, thus, is probably the most optimistic scriptural literature in the world. Ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa are also not frowned upon, by the Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa. A prayer in the popular Sri Rudram runs: "Maanasthoke thanaye maa na aayushi maa no ghoshu maa no asveshu reerisha:" - "Let not our infants, children, cows, horses etc. be subject to misery", praying for the well-being of even animals. In Gaya, during the sraadhaa ceremony, pindam is offered even for domestic animals. Thus, Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa promotes individuality and relationships. No doubt, it also stresses the importance of Isvara Bhakthi and of values in life; but, it does not talk of asangathvam. And, it is the Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa, talking about the glory of worldly pleasures, which is the more voluminous portion of the Vedaa-s.

Only in the latter part, the Vedaa-s warn "As long as karthruthvam and bokthruthvam are there, you will have pleasures alright; but, pain also will be inevitable. You will have to accept both".

And, as the Mundaka Upanishad exhorts ("pareekshya lokaan karma chithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath" meaning "having examined the worlds, which are achieved through karmaa, a Brahmin should come to dispassion" – manthraa 12 – Sec. 2 – Chapter 1).

Discriminate people, at one stage, get dissatisfied with the relative worldly pleasures, unpredictably and inevitably sandwiched between relative pains. Rejecting the temporary worldly pleasures, such people seek eternal happiness. The Veda Antha portions address only such people, appealing to them to transcend the Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa. Since the Vedhaanthic teaching is, thus, intended for mature and advanced seekers, it is called raaja vidhyaa (the supreme knowledge) and raaja guhya yōgam (a top secret path), by Lord Krishna, in the Bhagavadh Geetha.

But, even so, why should Vedhaantha talk only about pain and not the pleasures? Ans: It is because, the Veda poorva karma kaandaa has, already, so elaborately talked about the pleasures, that Vedhaantha takes it upon itself, to warn the individual of the inevitable pains accompanying the worldly pleasures and the need to look for eternal aanandhaa. The individual, of course, if not interested in the Vedhaanthic teachings, has the option of living according to the injunctions and guidance of the Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa.

Vedaa-s, therefore, cannot be accused of pessimism.

Sureswaraacharya talks about the pains of samsaaraa, in this portion. Having first covered the fact, that, all creatures from Brahmaaji down to the lowest species, suffer in the terribly miserable ocean of samsaaraa and then, the fact, that like a pot in the waterwheel, the creatures move from birth to birth – high and low- experiencing alternately, sukham, dhu:kham and moham, which land on the jeevaa as suddenly and as disastrously as lightning, he now talks about as to how the jeevaa is helplessly tossed about.

The Aachaaryaa compares the helpless jeevaa to a dried gourd, floating in the ocean, in stormy weather.

Reverting to the text (continuing the incomplete sentence, from the earlier session):

- चण्ड उत्पिन्जलक श्वसन वेग अभिहित अम्भोधिमध्यवर्ति शुष्क अलाबुवत् - similar to a dry gourd, in the middle of the ocean, battered by fierce, uncontrollably powerful winds, chanda – fierce; uthpinjalaka – uncontrollable; vega – powerful; svasana – wind; abhihitha – battered; ambodhi madhyavarthi - situated in the middle of the ocean; sushka – dry; alaabhu: - a form of gourd.

Praarabhdha karmaa that cannot be destroyed by praayaschittha karmaa-s, can be likened to the fierce, uncontrollably powerful winds.

- शुभ अशुभ व्यामिश्र कर्मवायु समीरितः - is battered by the cyclone of karma palan, consisting of the results of punyam, paapam and a mixture of the two.

Subha – punyakarma palan; asubha - paapakarma palan; vyaamisra – palan of a mixture of punya karmaa and paapa karmaa; karma vaayu – cyclone of karma palan; sameeritha: - battered.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, here, addresses a person, who is tired of the worldly pleasures, which are inevitably mixed with pain and is, therefore, eager to transcend them.

Chapter I: Verse 42 –

एवं चण्डक्रम्यमणोऽयमविध्याकामकर्मभिः ।

पाशितो जायते कामी म्रियते चासुकावृतः ॥ ४२ ॥

Thus, the creature is in constant movement owing to the force of ignorance, desire and action. He takes birth, bound and overcome by desire, and dies, enveloped all through, in misery.

- अविध्याकामकर्मभिः पाशितः - Bound by the ropes of ignorance, desire and action,

The word 'paasitha.' describes the typical condition of a jeevaa in samsaaraa, who has karthruthva-bokthruthvam (individuality) and ahamkaara-mamakaaram (relationships). The individual, because of ajnaanam (ignorance), becomes a kaami. He desires things or situations either for himself (ahamkaaraa based) or for his near and dear (mamakaaraa based). A 'sense of want' is kaamaa. Kaamaa leads to karmaa.

- अयं कामि - such an individual, who has desires,
- एवं चण्डक्रम्यमाणः - thus, helplessly moves about;

'Kram' means 'to move'; 'chandakramyathe' would mean 'helplessly moves about'.

A further tragedy, is, that, the journey of such an individual does not end with death. He is born again:

- जायते - (and) is born again (to continue the journey);

In a manushya janmaa, one may have some willpower to control one's movements. In an animal birth, this limited freedom is also lost; one is helplessly moved around.

- असुखावृतः - (and, as he gets older) surrounded by varieties of afflictions
- म्रियते च - perishes (miserably).

This chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi is intended to prepare the seeker, for the Vedhaanthic teachings, beginning from the 2nd chapter. Hence, such warnings from the Aachaaryaa, sounding severe.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 43:

यथा उक्ते अर्थे आदरविधानाय प्रमाणोपन्यासः ।

Concerning the matter thus enunciated, with a view to create interest in the student, some authorities are adduced.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "What I say is not my personal philosophy. I am only repeating the facts of life, as already stated by scriptures".

- यथा उक्ते अर्थे - With respect to the statement made (in verse 42, that, avidhyaa-kaama-karmaa chain creates bondage)
- आधर विधानाय - to create more faith (in the student)
- प्रमाण उपन्यासः - scriptural supports are given.

Chapter I: Verse 43 –

श्रुतिश्चेमं जगदार्थं कामस्य विनिवृत्तये ।

तन्मूला संसृतिर्यस्मात्तन्नाशोऽज्ञानहानतः ॥ ४३ ॥

Sruthi* has stated this principle for purposes of eradicating desire, for desire is at the root of transmigratory existence and it is destroyed by the elimination of ignorance.

Vedaa-s promote karthruthva-bokthruthvam in the poorva bhaagaa and destroy karthruthva-bokthruthvam, in the antha bhaagaa.

When a person is ready for knowledge and opens up, Vedaa-s tell him: "Desire born out of ignorance, is the cause of samsaaraa". To express the same statement in a marginally different manner "Ignorant-based self-dissatisfaction, called kaamaa, results in samsaaraa".

Pujyasri Swami Dayananda eloquently defines kaamaa: "THE CONSTANT STRUGGLE TO BE DIFFERENT FROM WHAT I AM NOW, IS KAAMAA".

Kaamaa-s are of two types. Jnaani-s also have desires, such as loka sangraham, sarva jana shreyas etc. Even Bhagavaan has srushti-paripaalanaa-samhaaraa kaamaa. But, these are suddha-kaamaa-s, which are non-binding in nature.

What are frowned upon by Vedhaanthaa are asuddha kaamaa-s, born out of self-ignorance and ahamkaara-mamakaara-s.

- तन्मूला संसृतिः यस्मात् - Since samsaaraa is born because of asuddha kaamaa-s,
- कामस्य विनिवृत्तये - for the purpose of removing the asuddha kaamaa-s,
- श्रुतिः इमं अर्थं जगाद - scriptures give the following teaching.

Sruthi: - Vedaa-s; imam – this / following; artham – teaching (in this context) ; jagaadha – mentions.

- तन्नाशः - The removal of desires
- अज्ञान हानतः - is by the removal of ajnaanaa.

Haanam – removal.

Samsaaraa is because of karmaa; karmaa is because of kaamaa; kaamaa is because of avidhyaa. Therefore, remove avidhyaa to get rid of samsaaraa. This is the essence of the Vedhaanthic teachings.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 44 :

का तु असौ श्रुतिः इति चेत् ।

Which is this sruthi?

The Aachaaryaa said (in verse 43) that he is quoting from the sruthi. The student, therefore, asks "Which sruthi? In what context?"

- का तु असौ श्रुतिः - "What is that Vedic statement (which gives the idea)?"
- इति चेत् - If asked thus:

Chapter I: Verse 44 –

"यदा सर्वे प्रमुच्यन्त" "इति नु" इति च वाजिनः ।

The text of the Vaajins (followers of the sukla yajur Vedaa / those belonging to the sect of the Vaajasaneeyin-s) says "when the desires are extinguished, the mortal becomes immortal and attains Brahman here" (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad- IV.iv.7) and "he, who is freed from desires., being already Brahman, is merged in Brahman" (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad- IV.iv.6). Vyaasaa also says again and again, that, life is one of bondage through desire".

The phrase "yadhaa sarve pramuchyathe" occurs in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iv.7) and also in Katopanishad (II.iii.14). The second quotation in the verse, "ithi nu" is also from Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV. iv. 6).

The gist of the two quotations is "as long as desires are there, finitude is there. As long as finitude is there, the cycle of births and deaths continue – punarapi jananam punarapi maranam".

The type of one's next birth is governed by one's kaamaa-s also (apart from one's actions). Jadabharathar, in the Bhaagavadha Mahaa Puraanam, is a typical example. No doubt, it is praarabdha karmaa, that decides the nature of the puna janmaa; but, kaamaa also has a hand, in this process. It is only "desire for mokshaa", that will destroy samsaaraa.

"Kaama naasena samsaara naasa:" is the essence of the first quotation. This is a vyathirekhaa type of statement, i.e. a negative reference to the fact. The second quotation, in essence, would mean "yathra kaama: thathra samsaara:" – an anvayaa type of statement, i.e. a positive reference to the same fact.

The phrase 'vaajina:' may also be interpreted as 'from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad'. Vaajasaneeyi Samhithaa = Sukla Yajur Vedaa = Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad.

27. Chapter I, Verse 45 to 47 (14-10-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is negating the poorva paksha matham, which claims that karmaa can give liberation. The Aachaaryaa, on the other hand, establishes that karmaa cannot give liberation. He argues that liberation is possible only through destruction of self-ignorance and since karmaa cannot accomplish destruction of self-ignorance, it is also not capable of giving liberation.

But, why do you say that karmaa cannot destroy self-ignorance? Many reasons can be given. Sureswaraachaaryaa gives two reasons. The first reason he gave, was, that karmaa itself is a product of ignorance, and, therefore, it cannot destroy ignorance.

In this portion, the Aaachaaryaa is elaborating on the second reason. He says: "Karmaa is not only born of ignorance; but, exists along with ignorance and therefore, exists along with samsaaraa also. Karmana: avidhyaa anvayathvaath samsaara anvaya: | (Anvaya: means 'accompaniment' or 'co-existence'.) Since karmaa has avidhyaa anvaya:, it has samsaara anvaya: also. It 'travel's with samsaaraa and therefore, cannot destroy samsaaraa".

How do you prove that karmaa goes along with avidhyaa ? For this also, two reasons are given by the Aaachaaryaa. The first reason is that, every vaidhika karmaa inevitably requires varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa ; this inevitable claiming of the varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa is a loud proclamation of ignorance, since aathmaa is varna-aasrama-atheetha: and 'knowledge' consists in 'knowing' this aathmaa. Karmaa goes with varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa; varna-aasrama-abhimaanaa goes with ignorance ; therefore, karmaa goes with ignorance.

The second reason to believe that karmaa goes along with avidhyaa, is the fact, that karmaa always goes with desire. The very motive behind any action is only kaama: | The Manu smruthi declares this as: "yath yath hi kuruthe karma thath thath kaamasya cheshtitham". It can be concluded that "yathra yathra karmaa, thathra thathra kaama:". But, wherever there is kaama: (desire), there is ignorance, since 'desire' is only a result of apoomathvam - 'sense of want', a sign of self-ignorance.

A further fact to be noted, is, that, wherever there is 'desire', samsaaraa is also there. In short, karmaa, kaama:, avidhyaa and samsaara travel as a group.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out (in verse 44) that Veda itself is pramaanam for these facts. The Veda says, that, wherever there is kaamaa, there are karmaa and samsaara and wherever there is kaama abhaavaa, there are karma abhaavaa and samsaara abhaavaa. He quotes two *Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad manthraa*s in verse 44. The manthraa first quoted, is the 7th manthraa, in Sec. Iv – Chapter IV of the Upanishad.

Referring to the text:

यदा सर्वे प्रमुच्यन्ते (कामाः ये अस्य हृदि श्रिताः अथ मर्त्योऽमृतो भवति अत्र ब्रह्म समश्नुत इति) " - " when all the desires that dwell in his heart (mind) are gone, then, he, having been mortal, becomes immortal and attains Brahman in this very body".

As could be observed, the manthraa implies "wherever kaamaa is, there are karmaa and samsaaraa | When kaamaa goes away, karmaa and samsaaraa also go away. Karmaa and samsaaraa alone can co-exist; karmaa and mokshaa can never co-exist."

The manthraa second quoted in verse 44, is part of the 6th manthraa, in Sec. iv – Chapter IV of the Brahadhaarananyaka Upanishad.

"इति नु (कामयमानः अथाकामयमानः योऽकामो निष्काम आप्तकाम आत्मकामो न तस्य प्राणाः उत्क्रामन्थि ब्रह्मैव सन्ब्रह्माप्येति)" -

"Thus the man who desires transmigrates; but, the man who does not desire , never transmigrates. He who is without desires, who is free from desires, the objects of whose desire have been attained and to whom all the objects of desire are but the Self, being but Brahman, is merged into Brahman" |

The implication of this manthraa is also "Yathra kaama: thathra samsaara: | Kaama naasena samsaara naasa:" इति च वाजिन - Thus has said the Vaajasaneeyi Samhithaa.

Vaaji is a shortened form of Vaajasaneeyi samhithaa or sukla yajur vedaa. The sukla yajur Veda was given out by Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa, who was also known as Vaajasaneeyi or Vaajasaneeya:, since he is believed to be a disciple of Suryaa, one of whose many names is Vaajasani:, meaning 'giver of food'. 'Vaaja:' means 'anaam' (the well-known chamakam starts with the prayer 'vaajas cha mey'). 'Sani:' means 'giver' (dhaathaa). Suryaa gets this name, since he gives food to all living beings, through rains. In this verse 44, Vaaji denotes the Brahadhaarananyaka Upanishad belonging to sukla yajur Vedaa. 'Vaajasaneeyi manthraa:' is 'vaajina:' |

- व्यासः अपि आह पदे पदे - Vyaasaa also has repeatedly declared
- कामबन्धनं एव इदं (जगत्) - "this entire world is bound by kaamaa".

Kaamaa – desire; bhandhanam – shackle. The entire world is shackled by desire. Wherever kaamaa is there, there are karmaa and samsaaraa.

The quoted slokaa of Vyaasaachaarya is from "moksha dharmaa" of the Mahabharatham - Verse 7 – Chapter 251. It runs "Kaama bandhanam eva idham | na anyath asthi iha bhandhanam | kaama bhandhana muktha: hi na iha bhooya: abhijaayathe" meaning "The entire world is shackled by desire. There is no other shackle in the world. A person who is free from the shackle of desire (i.e. a person who is aathma rathi:/ aathmani eva thushta :) is free from the cycle of births and deaths".

The 'desire' referred to here, is only asuddha kaamaa:, prompted by ignorance and not a jnaan/s desires (such as loka sangraham, sarva jana shreyas etc.), which are suddha kaamaa:. Verse 55 – Chapter II of the Bhagavadh Geethaa is also relevant here. It runs

प्रजहाति यदा कामान्सर्वान्यार्थ मनोगतान् |
आत्मन्येवात्मना तुष्टः स्थितप्रज्ञस्तदोच्यते ||२- ५५||

prajahāti yadā kāmānsarvānpārtha manōgatān |
ātmanyēvātmanā tuṣṭaḥ sthitaprajñastadōcyatē || 2- 55 | |

– "Oh Arjuna! Satisfied in himself by himself, when one gives up all the desires obtaining in the mind, then, he is said to be of firm knowledge".

Since kaamaa, karmaa, avidhyaa and samsaaraa go together in a group, karmaa cannot give liberation.

Sambhandha gadhyam* to Verse 45:

एष संसारपन्था व्याख्यातः । अथेदानीं तद्व्यावृत्तये कर्माण्यारादुपकारकत्वेन यथा मोक्षहेतुतां प्रतिपद्यन्ते तथाभिधीयते ।

Thus the pathway of transmigration is explained. Now, with a view to put an end to it, how actions become distant and mediate means for release, is going to be explained.

- एषः संसारपन्थाः व्याख्यातः - Thus, the chain of samsaaraa has been explained by us.

Panthea: - maargaa: / routes. The nature, consequence etc. of samsaaraa, were dealt with, in detail, thus far, since, only when samsaaraa is understood properly, one can work for mokshaa, in the right direction.

To recapitulate what has been discussed on this subject so far: "Ignorance leads to apoorvathvam (sense of want), which leads to kaamaa (desire), in turn, leading to karmaa (actions, to fulfill the desires), resulting in punyam and paapam, ultimately resulting in punarjanma-purnamarana cycle. This is the six-fold samsaara chakram - the chain of samsaaraa, with six links. Since karmaa is an important link in the chain, karmaa cannot give liberation”.

At this stage, the Aachaaryaa desires to present a different angle. Till now, he was criticizing karmaa; from now on, he glorifies karmaa. From karma nindhaa, he moves over to karma sthuthi, the reasons, of course, being valid for either. The Aachaaryaa says: “When we criticize karmaa, it is a conditional criticism i.e. it is criticism of karmaa under certain conditions. When a person tries to achieve liberation through karmaa, we will strongly condemn the effort, since we are convinced that karmaa cannot give liberation. The poorva meemaamsakaa-s recommend karmaa as a ‘means to liberation’, quoting verses like ‘kurvan eva iha karmaani jjeevisheth satham samaa: evam thvayi anyathha asthi na karma lipyathe nare’ (Isaavaasya Upanishad – manthraa 2). We do not accept this view of theirs. On the other hand, if karmaa is performed as a means to chitthasuddhi, we shall certainly encourage it. In fact, karmaa alone can give chittha suddhi”.

- अथ इदानीं - From now on,
- कर्माण्य आरात् उपकारत्वेन - since karmaa helps indirectly

‘aaraath’ means ‘indirectly’;

‘upakaarathvam’ means ‘help/ assistance’.

Karmaa indirectly contributes to liberation, by giving chittha suddhi. It can be given up, after attaining chittha suddhi. But, till attainment of chittha suddhi, karmaa is a necessity.

- तद् व्यावृत्तये - for removal of samsaaraa (‘thadh’ denotes ‘samsaaraa’),

If karmaa is an indirect ‘contributing’ factor for liberation, what is the direct cause? Ans: ‘Mahaavaakya vichaaraa’ is the direct cause.

- यथा मोक्षहेतुतां प्रतिपद्यन्ते - the manner in which karmaa is an indirect means to mokshaa,
- तथा अभिधीयते - will be explained.

Chapter I: Verse 45 –

तस्यैव दुः। कथंचित्पुण्यशीलनात् खतप्तस्यः

नित्येहाक्षालितधियो वैराग्यं जायते हृदि ॥ ४५ ॥

In the heart of the creature, tormented by sorrow, as a result of some unexpected cultivation of merit and the purification of the mind, through the consequent observance of obligatory duties, the spirit of renunciation arises.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Only mahaa vaakya vichaaraa can lead to liberation. But, a samsaari, who is deeply engrossed in samsaaraa, cannot directly get into mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. Veda poorva bhaaghaa, i.e. the karma kaandaa of the Veda-s, has to be introduced to him first. Initially, his lifestyle can be kaamya-karma pradhaanam. He can fulfill all his legitimate desires; but, he should accept and revere them as Isvara Prasadaa. His mind becomes purer and purer, through the Isvara Prasaadha Bhavanaa and, as a consequence, his worldly desires would come down. Desire for mokshaa will replace the worldly desires. But, mere 'desire for mokshaa' (i.e. moksha icchaa alone) is not sufficient to attain mokshaa. Other qualifications, moksha yogyathaa, should also be there. Hence, once the desire for mokshaa intensifies, the seeker should take to karma yogaa. The kaamya-karmaani should give way to nithya-naimittika-karmaani. In other words, the second stage for the seeker is a nishkaamya-karma pradhaanaa lifestyle. Diligent practice of karma yogaa helps the seeker acquire the qualifications for liberation - vairaaghyam, samaadhi shadga sampatthi etc. A raaghi mumukshu should continue with diligent performance of nithya-naimittika-karmaani, to become a viraaghi mumukshu'.

- एवं तस्य दुःखतप्तस्य - For the person, who is thus tormented by grief,
- कथंचित् पुण्यशीलनात् - as result of some unexpected cultivation of merit (and)
- नित्य ईहा क्षालित धियः - the purification of mind through performance of nithya-naimittika karmaani (such as pancha mahaa yagnyaani),

'ehaa' means 'karmad'; 'kshaalitha' means 'cleansed'; 'dhiya:' means 'of the mind'.

- हृदि वैराग्यं जायते - vairaaghyam is born in the mind.

For a mumukshu (one who is keenly desirous of liberation), vivekaa is comparatively easy to attain. He may even achieve samaadhi shadga sampatthi also, without much difficulty. It is vairaaghyam, that is very difficult to develop. When one is willing to give up everything, for the sake of liberation, it is called theevra vairaaghyam. In the Yoga Saasthraa, it is called 'para vairaaghyam'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 46 :
कीद्रुवैराग्यमुत्पद्यत इति । उच्यते ।

kīdrugvairāgyamutpadhyata iti | ucyatē |
What kind of renunciation arises, is, thus mentioned:

What is the type of vairaaghyam, that is to be generated in the mind? The seeker must be prepared to lose everything he possesses, including his body, for the sake of mokshaa. This attitude is revealed through the story of Nachikethas, in the Katopanishad, who refused everything offered by Yama Dharma Raja. It is interesting to note and register that "not wanting" is easier than "willingness to lose".

But, Vedhaantha demands the mental preparedness to lose everything that one possesses, i.e. a sanyaasi mind. This is covered by the Aachaaryaa here, in verse 46.

Chapter I: Verse 46 –

नरकाद्दीर्यथास्याभूत्तथा काम्यफलादपि ।

यथार्थदर्शनात्तस्मान्नित्यं कर्म चिकीर्षति ॥ ४६ ॥

As formerly he was afraid of hell, now, as he sees through it, he is afraid of the fruit of the desire-prompted deeds also. Therefore, he desires to engage himself in obligatory duties only.

- यथा तस्य नरकात् भीः - Just as fear of naraka lokaa is there, for a person,
- तथा काम्य फलात् अपि भूत् - in the same manner, the kaamyaa palam (i.e. punyam and svarghaa) also create the same fear,
- यथार्थ दर्शनात् - by the observation of their (of results of punyam) nature, (namely,
- their capacity to create dependence).

Possessions are sources of samsaaraa. The mumukshu should be frightened of dependence on any part of the entire anaathma prapancham. Once the dependence is gone, there need be no fear. "I can make use of things; but, I shall not 'lean' on them" should be the motto.

- तस्मात् - As a result,
- नित्यं कर्म चिकीर्षति - nithya karmaani (pancha mahaa yagnyaani) alone are done (by such a person).

This lifestyle leads to para vairaaghyam.

This sloka is not in the form of a commandment. It is in the form of a statement, from which a diligent seeker should draw guidance.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 47:

एवं नित्यनैमित्तिक कर्मानुष्ठानेन ।

Thus, by the performance of obligatory actions, enjoined for daily observance and special occasions, the results mentioned below are achieved.

- एवं - In this manner,
- नित्यनैमित्तिक कर्मानुष्ठानेन - by performing the pancha mahaa yagnyaani,

The Aachaaryaa plans to point out, in this verse, that, by the consistent performance of the pancha mahaa yagnyaas, such a state of mind, namely, a mind not depending on external objects, is attained. This state of mind is a pre-requisite for Vedhaantha Vichaaraa.

As indicated earlier, initially, kaamyā karmaa-s can occupy more time. Later, they will have to be reduced and nithya-naimittika karmaani should get priority and prominence.

Chapter I: Verse 47 -

शुध्यमानं तु तच्चित्तमीश्वरार्पितकर्मभिः । :

वैराग्यं ब्रह्मलोकादौ व्यनक्त्यथ सुनिर्मलम् ॥ ४७ ॥

The mind, purified by the actions dedicated to God, manifests pure renunciation even with regard to high rewards like the attainment of the world of Brahmaji.

- ईश्वर अर्पित कर्मभिः - Through karmaa done with Isvara arpitha and Isvara Prasaadha bhavanaa,

Verses 30 and 31 of Chapter III, of the Bhagavadh Geetha, are relevant here:

मयि सर्वाणि कर्माणि संन्यस्याध्यात्मचेतसा ।

निराशीर्निर्ममो भूत्वा युध्यस्व विगतज्वरः ॥३- ३०॥

ये मे मतमिदं नित्यमनुतिष्ठन्ति मानवाः ।

श्रद्धावन्तोऽनसूयन्तो मुच्यन्ते तेऽपि कर्मभिः ॥३- ३१॥

mayi sarvāṇi karmāṇi saṁnyasyādhyātmacētasā |

nirāśīrṇirmamō bhūtvā yudhyasva vigatajvaraḥ || 3- 30 ||

yē mē matamidaṁ nityamanutiṣṭhanti mānavāḥ |

śraddhāvanto:'nasūyantō mucyantē tē:'pi karmabhiḥ || 3- 31 ||

meaning "Offering all actions unto Me, with a devout mind, fight, without expectations, without a sense of possession and without anxiety. Those people who always follow this teaching of Mine with faith and without being critical, are freed from the bonds of Karmaa."

- तद् चित्तं शुध्यमानं - with a cleansed mind (willing to give up),
- सुनिर्मलम् वैराग्यं व्यनक्ति - pure vairaaghyam manifests (as inner strength increases),

The adjective sunirmalam (pure) indicates that the vairaaghyam is not 'enforced detachment'; but, a natural result of the increased inner strength, which itself is the result of the consistent practice of karma yoga. This strength-based vairaaghyam is healthy, while vairaaghyam caused by disappointments and depression, is not desirable.

Also, "giving up possessions physically, but, with mental attachment to them" is dangerous. The reverse, viz., "physical possession, but, mental detachment" is better.

A measure of vairaaghyam that one has developed, is by an honest assessment of how many things one can give up and how many things one cannot bear to lose.

- ब्रह्मलोकादौ - with regard to all anaathmaa, including Brahma lokam.

"I do not want to depend on the external anaathma prapanchaa. I want to be poorna:, by myself. I do not want to seek love from others, even as I love them" should be the attitude.

28. Chapter I, Verse 47 and 48 (28-10-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is utilizing the 1st chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi, to refute all the karmavaadhin-s, who heavily rely on the Veda Poorva Bhaagaa and either totally ignore or give only minimum importance to the Veda Antha Bhagaa. Their claim is that karmaa itself will give liberation. Among the karmavaadhin-s also, there are many sub-groups. Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the different sub-groups, one by one.

Till now, he gave different arguments to establish, that, karmaa – even vaidhika karmaa – though prescribed by the apourusheya pramaanam, the Vedaa-s – cannot give liberation, since it does not have the power to do so.

After thus refuting the views of the karmavaadhin, Sureswaraachaaryaa is now taking a diversion. He says “Even though karmaa cannot give liberation, karmaa cannot be said to be totally useless. It has its utility. In fact, it has a very important role. Karmaa leads to purification of mind. The nithya naimitthika karmaani prescribed by scriptures, especially, the pancha mahaa yagnyaani, play an important role in human life”.

The nithya naimitthika karmaani give twofold results. They give ‘spiritual growth’ as the primary result and ‘material prosperity’, even heaven, as the secondary result – avaanthara palan.

In the initial stages of an individual’s life, only the material benefits are talked about more. To an young newly initiated brahmachaari, the results of nithya karma anushtaanam are listed as health, scholarship, wealth, good family life etc. Chittha suddhi, as a benefit, is not given importance, at this stage.

After performing the nithya naimitthika karmaa-s diligently for some time, the individual will begin to understand the importance of spiritual growth. When, thus, the individual develops a value for spirituality, the scriptures and the guru lay more emphasis upon the spiritual benefit of the nithya naimitthika karmaa-s. The individual is gradually weaned away from kaamyaa and praayaschittha karmaa-s and is called upon to increase his nithya naimitthika karmaa-s, both qualitatively and quantitatively, so that his mind becomes more fit for vedhaantha vichaaraa. This important spiritual role (preparation of the mind for vichaaraa) of the nithya naimitthika karmaani, cannot be ignored even by a great advaitin. Sureswaraachaaryaa also, therefore, considers it essential to stress the need for performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani.

In verse 47, the Aachaaryaa says "Isvara arpitha karamabhi: chittham sudhyamaanam (bhavathi)" meaning "by performance of the pancha mahaa yagnyaani, the mind becomes purer and purer".

What is the indication of this 'purification'? Sureswaraachaaryaa says "Increase in 'sense of detachment' (vairaaghyam) from possessions, relationships etc."

"Supporting one's relations" may be termed 'love', a desirable sentiment. But, conversely, "expecting support from relations" is 'attachment', to be scrupulously avoided. Even 'anxiety' and 'concern' for relations should gradually come down, if not totally got rid of. Likewise, "caring for one's body" is acceptable; but "expecting one's body to be always healthy" is unrealistic. "Giving up one's expectations from or anxiety about anything, from one's own body to Brahma lokaa" is vairaaghyam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out (in verse 47) that such vairaaghyam is achieved by practice of karmayogaa, saying "Brahmalokaadhau sunirmalam vairaaghyam vyanakthi" meaning "pure vairaaghyam, with regard to all anaathmaa, starting from Brahma lokaa, manifests".

The use of the verb 'vyanakthi' (meaning 'manifests') is significant. Through this usage, an unique point is made by the Aachaaryaa: "It is vairaaghyam which is the natural state of the mind – not raaghadvashaa. By diligent practice of karma yogaa, the natural vairaaghyam manifests. It need not be born afresh, as it is already present". In God's creation, thyaagaa and sanyaasaa are natural to humans. But, because of ignorance, one 'holds on' to possessions and relations. When ignorance is got rid of, once the mind becomes healthy, the already existent vairaaghyam manifests.

The adjective 'sunirmalam' is also significant. The vairaaghyam should come from within. It should not be enforced, by suppression of mind. Sanyaasaa without this natural vairaaghyam – i.e. vairaaghya rahitha sanyaasaa – can be risky and dangerous. It is relevant here to recollect Lord Krishna's warning in the Bhagavadh Geetha (verse 6 – Chapter III) "karmendriyani sayyamyaa ya aasthe manasaa smaran, indriyaarthaan vimoodaathmaa, mithyaachaara: sa uchyathe" – "That deluded person, who, having externally controlled the sense organs, remains dwelling on the sense-objects mentally, is called a hypocrite". The Aachaaryaa avers, that, the vairaaghyam resulting from the diligent practice of pancha mahaa yagnyaani – is sunirmalam, natural and not enforced, similar to that of Nachikethas.

Sambhandha gadhyam* to Verse 48 :

यस्माद्भ्रजस्तमोमलोपसंसृष्टमेव चित्तं कामबुद्धिशोनाकृष्य विषयदुरन्तसूनास्थानेषु निक्षिप्यते
तस्मान्नित्यनैमित्तिककर्मानुष्ठानपरिमार्जनेनापविद्भ्रजस्तमोमलं प्रसन्नमनाकुलं संमार्जितस्फटिकशिलाकल्पं

बाह्यविषय हेतुकेन च रागद्वेषात्मकेन अतिग्रहबडिशोनानाकृष्यमाणं विधूताशेषकल्मषं प्रत्यङ्मात्रप्रवणं चित्तदर्पणमवतिष्ठते । अत इदमभिधीयते ।

Because, the mind, only when tainted by rajas and thamas, gets attracted by desires, as by a bait and is thrown into the slaughter-house of sense-objects; and, when cleansed by the observance of obligatory actions and its rajas and thamas are expelled, becomes clear and tranquil like a well-washed crystal block; then, it does not get polluted by desires and aversions, engendered by sense-objects; in that state, the mind, wholly purified of all taint, remains like a clean mirror, with an inclination towards only the inmost Self. Therefore, the following is stated:

In this portion, Sureswaraacharya is defining vairaaghyam, in his own technical terms. According to him, a mind with vairaaghyam must have two virtues:

- (1) The first is, that, it should no more be under the grip of exterior sense-objects or people. A mind with raagha-dveshaa is under such grip. The sense-objects, by their attractiveness and the people around, by their behavior, can disturb a raaghee mind. Pre-occupation with objects and people enslaves the raaghee mind. Such a mind will not be available for Vedhaanthalaa. "Development of freedom from the grip of objects and people" is, therefore, the first virtue to be developed. Chittha suddhi consists in releasing the mind from pre-occupation with objects and people.
- (2) The second requirement is, that, the mind should naturally be interested in aathma jnaanam. One should not force one's mind to Vedhaanthalaa. The mind should be naturally inclined to dwell upon the teachings. This natural inclination towards the aathmaa – prathyang pravanathaa – is the second virtue or condition.

The Aachaaryaa assures that such a vairaaghyam is accomplished by practice of nithya naimitthika karmaani. Till such time as the vairaaghyam is accomplished, nithya naimitthika karmaani should be continued. Once that stage is reached, the seeker is ready for renunciation, at least internally.

In this introduction (sambhandha gadhyam) to the verse 48, the Aachaaryaa uses an analogy for desires and the human mind. Similar to a fish getting caught in a fisherman's hook, the mind, compared to the fish, is ensnared by the hook of 'desires'. And, just as the fish is taken away to be destroyed, the kaamaa hook takes away the mind to tormenting centers – the anaathma baahya prapanthaa sense objects. Sureswaracaahrayaa implies that every vishaya is a torment centre ; he uses the term 'soonaasthaanam', the word 'soonaad' meaning torture. Every sense object is a 'torture centre', since every object of attachment causes anxiety and concern, thus tormenting the mind.

The aim of the seeker should be to prevent the mind from getting caught by the hook of 'desire', to avoid the soonaasthaanaa-s. How to achieve this ? Ans: By diligent performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani. (This is the gist of verse 48 and its sambhandha gadhyam).

- यस्मात् चित्तं रजस्तमोमल उपसंसृष्टं एव - Since only the mind that is contaminated by the impurities of rajas and thamas ,

'malam' – impurity; 'upasamsruhtam' - contaminated / tainted.

The normal mind, unfortunately, is predominantly raajasic or thaamasic, and, craves for relationships and attachments. It gets disturbed by the very thought of sanyaasaa. An exceptional individual may evince interest in Vedhaanthaa, even while young, and in such cases, the interest must be ascribed to his having practiced karma yogaa, in his earlier birth.

- कामबडिशेनाकृष्य - dragged / attracted by the hook of desires, Badisena – by the hook; aakrushya – attracted by / dragged by.

Every attachment/desire is a hook, dragging the mind away from the aathmaa to external objects. The Katopanishad (manthraa 1– Sec.1–Chap. II) warns: "paraanchi kaani vyathrunath svayambhoo: thasmaath paraangh pasyathi na antharaathman| kaschith dheera: prathyagh aathmaanam eikshath aavruttha chakshu: amruthathvam icchan" - "The Lord destroyed the sense organs, by making them extrovert. Therefore, everyone perceives outside, not the inner Self. Desiring immortality, only a rare, discriminative one turns away his eyes and sees the inner Self".

- विषय दुरन्त सूनास्थानेषु निक्षिप्यते - is dropped into the torture-houses of sense-objects, the potential sources of sorrow;

Every vishayaa (i.e. sense object) is a soonaasthaanam, where the mind is tormented. But, in a lay-person's perspective, the sense-objects give pleasure; then, how do you call them 'objects of torment'? The answer is: "because, they are potential sources of sorrow". This is emphasized by the use of the word 'dhurantha', derived as 'dhu:kha yuktha antham yasya', meaning 'whose ultimate result is sorrow'. Culmination of vishayaa is sorrow, since, when you are inevitably parted from the sense object, the separation gives intense pain. Lord Krishna warns in the Bhagavadh Geetha (verse 22 – Chapter V): "Ye hi samsparsajaa bhoghaa: dhu:kha yonaya: eva they aadhyanthavantha:" – "Those pleasures, which are born of contact, are indeed sources of sorrow only, since they have a beginning and an end". The Lord describes the vishayaa-s as dhu:kha yonaya: (sources of sorrow).

- तस्मात् - therefore,

Since the mind is ever occupied, there is no time or inclination for vedhaantha vichaaraa. Therefore, the mind has to be cleaned. How?

- नित्य नैमित्तिक कर्मानुष्ठान परिमार्जनेन - by cleaning (the mind) through observance of nithya naimitthika karmaani; Parimaarjanam – wiping away / cleaning away.
- (चित्तं) अवतिष्ठते - the mind remains

This long sentence of the Aachaaryaa is split for easier comprehension. The verb 'avathishtathe' is, therefore, used once here. It will be used again later.

- अपविद् रजस्तमोमलं - cleared of the impurities of rajas and thamas,

Rajas and thamas will gradually decrease, because of the performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani. Satthvaa will become predominant. To quote the Bhagavadh Geetha again, the Lord exhorts Arjuna (verse 45 – Chapter II) –

त्रैगुण्यविषया वेदा निस्त्रैगुण्यो भवार्जुन |

निर्द्वन्द्वो नित्यसत्त्वस्थो निर्योगक्षेम आत्मवान् ||२- ४५||

traiguṇyaviṣayā vēdā nistraiguṇyō bhavārjuna |

nirdvandvō nityasattvasthō niryōgakṣēma ātmavān ||2- 45||

-“Oh Arjuna! The Vedaa-s deal with the world of three gunaa-s. Be free from the desire for the world of three gunaa-s. Be free from the hold of the pairs of opposites. Be ever established in satthva gunaa. Be free from concerns of 'acquisition' and 'preservation'. Be ever mindful of the Self”.

If the mind becomes more and more saathvic, it worries less and less about 'acquisitions' and 'preservations'. Yoga kshemaa concerns come down. The more possessions one has, more problems also one has. The aim should be to reduce possessions and lead a simple life.

- प्रसन्नं - relaxed,

Because it is relaxed, the mind is made available for japam, dhyaanam, sravanam, mananam, nidhidhyaasanam and other saadhanaa-s. Poet Kalidaasaa, when describing the tranquil Maanasarovar, compares it to the mind of a wise man.

- अनाकुलं - undisturbed,

Why the use of both prasannam and anaakulam, which two words mean almost the same? The answer is: 'Prasannam' signifies 'undisturbed' and 'anaakulam' signifies 'cannot be disturbed'. When the mind is strong enough not to be disturbed by anything, it is said to be anaakulam.

- संमार्जित स्फटिक शिलाकल्पं - - (and) very clear like a well cleaned crystal stone.

'sammajitha' means 'wiped well'/'cleaned well' and is adjective to silaa kalpam.

The second half of the sambhandha gadhyam, which follows, points out, that, the mind not only gets released from external objects because of the performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani (as averred in the first half above) , but, it also 'stays' released. The mind becomes invulnerable to future temptations and attachments also, unlike Jadabharathaa in the Bhaagavatha Mahaa Puraanam, who renounced his kingdom, family and possessions and took to the forests for austerities, but, unfortunately, got attached to a deer. One has to be ever alert, to avoid vulnerability.

- चित्तदर्पणं - This clean mirror-like mind
- अनाकृष्यमाणं - not affected
- रागद्वेषात्मकेन अतिग्रहबडिशेन - by the powerful hook of desires and aversions,

'Athigraha:' is a term borrowed from the Brahadhaaanyaka Upanishad (III.ii.1 to III.ii.9), which calls sense objects as 'athigraha:'. The Brahadhaaanyaka Upanishad refers to sense organs by the word 'graha:', meaning 'controller / enslaver', since sense organs enslave the jeevaa. The sense objects are called 'athigraha:', by the Upanishad, since the sense objects, in their turn, control or enslave the sense organs. Sense organs control / enslave the humans; sense objects control / enslave the sense organs. The term 'athigraha:' would, therefore, mean 'controller of controller'. Sureswaraacharya (in this context) uses the word in the meaning of kaamakrodhaa or raaghadveshaa.

- बाह्य विषय हेतुकेन - caused by exterior objects (descriptive of raagha dveshaa-s)
- विधूत अशेष कल्मषं - (and, therefore) wholly free of all impurities, vidhootha – free from ; asesha kalmasham - impurities, without any trace

Lord Krishna refers only to this state of mind in the Bhagavadh Geetha in verse 52 of chapter II, when he says:

यदा ते मोहकलिलं बुद्धिर्व्यतितरिष्यति |
तदा गन्तासि निर्वेदं श्रोतव्यस्य श्रुतस्य च ||२- ५२||

yadā tē mōhakalilaraṁ buddhirvyatitariṣyati |
tadā gantāsi nirvēdaṁ śrōtavyasya śrutasya ca ||2- 52||

- "when your intellect goes beyond the mist of delusion, then you will attain dispassion for what is yet to be heard and what is already heard".

What is the greatest advantage of such a state of mind? For such a person, plenty of time is available for vedhaantha vichaaraa.

- अवतिष्ठते - remains (the verb used again, as explained earlier)
- प्रत्यङ् मात्र प्रवणं - with the inclination being only towards aathmaa.

Prathyang – prathyak aathman; maathra - only; pravanam - inclination.

Even without Vedhaantha, a contented, detached, peaceful mind is enjoyable.

Therefore, karmaa is very necessary.

- अतः इदं अभिधीयते - Therefore, the following is stated.

29. Chapter I, Verse 48 to 52 (04-11-2006)

Chapter I: Verse 48 –

व्युत्थिताशेषकामेभ्यो यदा धीरवतिष्ठते ।
तदेव प्रत्यगात्मानं स्वयमेवाविविक्षति ॥ ४८ ॥

When the mind abides, purged of all desires, it is then, that it spontaneously inclines to merge into the inner Self.

Sureswaraachaaryaa pointed out in the sambhandha gadhyam to this verse, that, karmaa is very essential to prepare the mind, though he strongly criticized the view that karmaa is a means to liberation. Karmaa performed as a 'purifier' can be verily called Karma Yoga. And, in Karma Yoga, nithya naimitthika karmaani - essentially the pancha mahaa yagnyaani – are performed diligently. Kaamyaa karmaa-s and praayaschittha karmaa-s are gradually given up. Because of the diligent performance of nithya-naimitthika-karmaani, the mind gets purified and becomes fit to absorb jnaanam. This is the topic being covered by the Aachaaryaa, from verse 45.

- यदा धीः अशेष कामेभ्यः व्युत्थितः अवतिष्ठते ते - When the mind abides, purged of all desires, yadhaa – when; dhee: -mind; asesha kaamebhya: - from all worldly desires; vyuthyitha : - purged / transcending ; avathishtathe – abides / remains.

- तदा एव प्रत्यगात्मानं स्वयमेव अविविक्षति - it is then, that, it spontaneously inclines to merge into the inmost Self.

Thadhaa eva – only then; prathyagh aathmaanam – innermost aathmaa; avivikshathy – turns / inclines (aavesum icchathi – avivikshathy); svayam eva – naturally / spontaneously.

When desires for worldly pleasures and objects cease, the process of self-enquiry becomes natural.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 49 :

अतःपरमवसिताधिकाराणि कर्माणि प्रत्वप्रवणत्वसूनौ कृतसंप्रत्तिकानि चरितार्थानि सन्ति

After this, the actions, having fulfilled their function and having transferred their responsibility, to the inclination of the mind towards the Self, reach the completion of their purpose, as it were.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to say that karmaa-s have completed their job, once they have generated 'interest in self-knowledge'. ('Interest in' or 'eagerness for' 'self-knowledge') is termed 'jignyaasaa'). After this stage, karmaa-s have no role to play. On the other hand, the very same karmaa-s will turn into obstacles, by making the mind extrovert again. Hence, once introversion is achieved, karmaa-s will have to be given up.

- अतः परं - After this (i.e. after jignyaasa uthpatthi),
- अवसित अधिकाराणि - with their functions fulfilled,
- कर्माणि चरितार्थानि सन्ति - karmaa-s become satisfied for their having completed their job.

Avasitha – fulfilled / completed/ ended; adhikaaraani - purposes; charithaarthaani – feel satisfied.

They feel: "If we (karmaa-s) continue to be here, we will be only obstacles to the seeker. The more we remain, the less time the seeker will have, for vedhaantha vicharaad".

- प्रत्यक् प्रवणत्व सूनौ कृतसंप्रत्तिकानि - (and) transfer the responsibilities to their 'son', viz., the 'inclination of the mind towards Aathmaad'.

Prathyak pravanathvam – jignyaasaa / inclination for jnaanam; soonu:- puthra:

The 'inclination of the mind towards aathmaad', in other words, 'yearning for self-knowledge' is Brahma jignyaasaa. Since it is karmaa, performed as karma yogaa, which produces this desire, Sureswaraachaaryaa refers to jignyaasaa as the 'son of karmaad' .

"Karmaa calls its 'son', jignyaasaa, and transfers to it, the responsibilities for further spiritual progress of the seeker", the Aachaaryaa says, in a poetic manner.

"Sampratthikaan" is a term borrowed from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (1. v. 16), which talks of a sampratthi karmaa, a formal ritual, by which, a father, infirm with old age, hands over all responsibilities to his son – including even the sandhyaavandana karmaa. 'Samprakthi.' or 'sampradhaanam' means 'handing over'.

Karmaa formally calls jignyaasaa, hands over the responsibility to jignyaasaa and withdraws.

Chapter I:Verse 49 –

प्रत्यक्प्रवणतां बुद्धेः कर्माण्युत्पाद्य शुद्धितः ।

कृतार्थान्यस्तमायान्ति प्रावृडन्ते गना इव ॥ ४९ ॥

Actions, having generated in the mind, through purification, the 'inclination towards the Self' and having fulfilled their purpose thus, disappear like clouds after the rainy season.

The idea presented in the sambhandha gadhyam is repeated in the verse.

- कर्माणि - The karmaa-s,
- प्रत्यक् प्रवणतां बुद्धेः - having generated jignyaasaa in the mind,
- शुद्धितः - by purifying (the mind)

'suddhitha.' indicates that the mind has been purified of worldly desires. The mind, is, therefore, more spiritually oriented.

- कृतार्थानि - (and, thus) having gained their object,
- अस्तमायान्ति - disappear / withdraw,

This is another subtle point. Sureswaraacharya says: "You need not give up karmaa; once maturity is achieved, karmaa-s will naturally cease". This is similar to the mango dropping from the tree, when ripe.

Swami Dayananda gives another example: "once the child grows up, its interest in the toys goes away".

Sureswaraacharya gives the example of the monsoon clouds moving away, after the rainy season.

- प्रावृडन्ते घनाः इव - similar to the clouds (disappearing) after the rainy season.

Praavrush – rainy season; antha: - end; praavrudanthe - at the end of the rainy season; ghanaa: - clouds.

During the rainy season, the clouds produce rains. At the end of the rainy season, having done their job, they withdraw. Karmayogaa (comparable to the clouds) 'rains' vivekaa, vairaaghyaa and samaadhi shadgha sampatthi. Once the mind (comparable to the fields) is saturated with these varshaa-s, the karma yoga clouds withdraw. Grihastha aasramaa (rainy season) ends. Vedhaantha Vichaaraa begins.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 50:

यतः नित्यकर्मानुष्ठानस्य एष महिमा ।

Since such is the greatness of performance of obligatory actions.

"Therefore" Sureswaraacharya says "when I criticize karmaa-s, I am not against karmaa-s as such. They are glorious".

- यतः - Since
- एषः महिमा - such is the glory

- नित्य कर्म अनुष्ठानस्य - of the performance of nithya naimitthikaa karmaani,

"All the people should perform nithya naimitthika karmaa-s" is the exhortation of the Aaachaaryaa, in the verse that follows this sambhandha gadhyam.

The Brahma soothraa-s start with the exhortation "athaatho Brahma jignyaasaa" – "now (after the attainment of the requisite spiritual qualities), therefore (since the results obtained by sacrifices etc. are ephemeral, whereas the result of the knowledge of Brahman is eternal), the inquiry into the real nature of Brahman should be taken up". This terse statement, at once, emphasizes the need for the performance of karmaa for attainment of spiritual qualities and also the desirability of giving up karmaa-s at the appropriate time (since the results of karmaa-s are impermanent).

Verse 50 – Chapter I :

तस्मान्मुमुक्षुभिः कार्यमात्मजानाभिलाषिभिः ।

नित्यं नैमित्तिकं कर्म सदैवात्मविशुद्धये ॥ ५० ॥

Therefore, aspirants after liberation seeking the knowledge of the Self, must always perform, for purposes of self-purification, actions obligatory everyday and on special occasions.

- तस्मात् - Therefore (since karmayogaa is very essential for spiritual inclination),
- मुमुक्षुभिः - by those who aspire for mokshaa
- आत्मजानाभिलाषिभिः - (and, therefore) desire aathma jnaanam, abhilaashaa - desire.

Desires have to get refined gradually. Desire for sukham has to be refined to desire for mokshaa. Sukha icchaa has to be refined to moksha icchaa; therefore, to aathma jnaanam icchaa (since only aathma jnaanam can give mokshaa), therefore, to vichaara icchaa (since jnaanam results only from intense vichaaraa) and, therefore, to sravana icchaa (which is the first step in vichaaraa).

For such refinements, karma yogaa is very important.

- नित्यं नैमित्तिकं कर्म - the mandatory daily and occasional religious activities
- कार्यं सदा एव - should be done always
- आत्म विशुद्धये - for chittha suddhi (purification of the mind).

Aathmaa, in this context, denotes the mind.

Karmaa cannot give jnaanam or mokshaa; it will give purification.

Verse 11 – Chapter V, of the Bhagavadh Geetha, is relevant here: “yōginaḥ karma kurvanti saṅgaṃ tyaktvā”tmaśuddhayē”. – “Karma yogi-s perform action, without attachment, for the sake of mental purity”.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 51:

यथोक्तेऽथ सर्वजवचनं प्रमाणं ।

On the matter thus stated, the words of the omniscient Lord constitute the authority.

How does Sureswaraachaaryaa know that karmaa gives only purification and not jnaanam or mokshaa? The Aachaaryaa explains: “Lord Krishna has stated this in the Bhagavadh Geetha”.

- यथोक्ते अर्थे - With regard to the teaching that has been mentioned,
- प्रमाणं - the authority (is)
- सर्वजवचनं - the statement of the omniscient Lord.

The Aachaaryaa quotes the relevant portion of the Bhagavadh Geetha, in the verse.

Chapter I:Verse 51 –

"आरुरुक्षोर्मुनेर्योगं कर्म कारणमुच्यते ।

योगारूढस्य तस्यैव शम "एवेति च स्मृतिः ॥ ५१ ॥

“For one who wants to ascend to yoga, action is said to be the means. To the same person, when he has ascended to yoga, sama (renunciation of action) is said to be the means” (Bhagavadh Geetha – VI -3). Such is the smruthi passage.

- “योगं आरुरुक्षोः ने: - For the seeker, who wants to reach jnaana yogaa.
- कर्म कारणमुच्यते - nithya naimitthika karmaa is said to be a very important saadhanaa, ‘Yogam’, in this context, is jnaana yogaa.

- तस्य योगारूढस्य - Once the seeker has come to jnaana yogaa (after attaining
- saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi),
- शमः एव (कारणं उच्यते) - (it is said) ‘giving up nithya naimitthika karmaa’ is the
- means”.
- इति एव च स्मृतिः- Such is the smruthi (Bhagavadh Geethaa) passage

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Geetha Bhaashyam, in this context, interprets ‘sama’, as ‘sanyaasaad’, as is his wont. For a non-sanyaasi seeker, the word is taken to mean “renunciation of action” or “giving up nithya naimitthika karmaan”.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 52:

नित्यकर्मनिष्ठानात् धर्मोत्पत्तिः । धर्मोत्पत्तेः पापहानिः । ततः चित्तशुद्धिः । ततः सम्सारयाथात्म्यावबोधः । ततः वैराग्यं । ततः मुमुक्षुत्वं । ततः तदुपायपर्येषणं । ततः सर्वकर्म तत् साधनं संन्यासः । ततः योगाभ्यासः । ततः

चित्तस्य प्रत्यक्प्रवणता । ततः तत्त्वमस्यादिवाक्यार्थपरिज्ञानं । ततः अविध्योच्चेदः । ततश्च स्वात्मन्येवावस्थानं "ब्रह्मैव सन् ब्रह्माप्येति" "विमुक्तश्च विमुच्यते" इति ।

From the performance of obligatory actions, righteousness arises. From the arising of righteousness, sins are destroyed. Purity of mind flows from the destruction of sin. From that follows the comprehension of the real nature of transmigratory existence. From that originates renunciation. From that emerges the desire for liberation. Then the search for the means of liberation ensues. Then follows the renunciation of all actions and their means. From that follows the practice of contemplation. From it originates the inclination of the mind towards the Self. From that arises the understanding of the import of the propositions like "that thvam asi". From it follows the elimination of ignorance. Then the Self remains in itself. "Being Brahman, he attains Brahman" (Brahadhaarnyaka Upanishad IV. iv. 6) and "the freed one is freed" (Kenopanishad II.ii.1).

The entire range of saadhanaa-s is presented here beautifully, as a ladder of several rungs.

- नित्य कर्म अनुष्ठानात् -- By diligent observance of nithya naimitthika karmaa-s, A seeker's journey begins with nithya naimitthika karmaani – pancha mahaa yagnyaani.
- धर्म उत्पत्तिः - spiritual punyam increases

Kaamyaa karmaa-s increase material punyam, resulting in prosperity. Nithya naimitthika karmaa-s increase spiritual punyam.

- धर्म उत्पत्तेः पाप हानिः - From the uthpatthi of spiritual punyam, spiritual paapam goes away.

Spiritual paapam means "anything that is non-conducive to spiritual growth" i.e. anything which obstructs sravana, manana, nidhidhyaasanaani. Every material undertaking can be a prathibhandha: (obstacle) to Vedhaantha Vichaaraa.

Isaavaasya Upanishad calls even svarga lokaa as the "dark world", since, though all sensual pleasures are available there, there will be no inclination for Vedhaantha. "Lack of interest in Vedhaanthic study" is a paapam.

- ततः चित्त सुद्धिः - Thereafter, mental preparedness, in the form of interest in Vedhaanthic study / purification of the mind / nithya anithya vasthu viveka: etc.
- ततः सन्सार याथात्म्य अवबोधः - Thereafter, the awareness of the problems of samsaaraa.

'yaathaathmyam' means 'real nature'. The 'real nature' of samsaaraa is its 'hollowness' and 'problems'. 'avabodha:' means 'clear understanding'.

- ततः वैराग्यं - Thereafter, detachment from the world / relations / family.
- ततः मुमुक्षुत्वं - Thereafter, desire for liberation.

Greater the detachment from materialistic factors, greater will be the attachment for mokshaa. This fact can also be expressed as "attachment to mokshaa is inversely proportional to attachment to the world".

- ततः तदुपाय पर्येषणं - Thereafter, seeking the route to mokshaa.

As Mundakopanishad (verse 12 – Sec.ii – Chapter I) points out "thadh vijnaartham gurum abhigaccheth" - "Thereafter (the seeker, after coming to dispassion) must necessarily approach a guru, to attain knowledge".

- ततः सर्व कर्म तत्साधन संन्यासः - Thereafter, renunciation of all karmaa-s and all the conditions that produce karmaa-s
'Saadhanaa', in this context, denotes the "infrastructure" that produces karmaa-s, by which grihastha aasramam is implied.

30. Chapter I, Verse 52 to 54 (11-11-2006)

In the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 52, Sureswaraachaaryaa talks about the entire range of spiritual saadhanaa-s, to show that karmaa does have a role to play in the spiritual journey – but, only a limited role. One has to enter karmaa and later, grow out of karmaa. The spiritual path is presented by the Aachaaryaa, in the form of a 'staircase' with a number of steps.

- नित्य कर्म अनुष्ठानात् धर्म उत्पत्तिः - Spiritual punyam results from karmaa (karmayogaa).
- धर्म उत्पत्तेः पाप हानिः - Spiritual punyam eliminates spiritual paapam (paapam meaning any obstacle to come to spirituality).
- ततः चित्त शुद्धिः - Thereafter, mental purity.
- ततः संसार याथात्म्य अवबोधः - This mental purity results in dosha dharsanam in samsaaraa (awareness of the deficiencies in worldly objects).
- ततः वैराग्यं - The result of dosha dharsanam is vairaaghyam, which means 'turning the mind away from anaathmaa'.
- ततः मुमुक्षुत्वं - The mind turned away from anaathmaa, is turned towards aathmaa (desire for mokshaa or liberation).
- ततः तद् उपाय पर्येषणं - From mumukshuthvam, results 'looking for' or 'seeking' moksha upaayaa / the 'means' to mokshaa.

'Paryeshanam' means 'looking for' / 'seeking'; the aspirant 'looks for' / 'seeks' saasthraa-s and a guru, to guide him towards mokshaa.

- ततः सर्वकर्म तत्साधन संन्यासः - Thereafter, renunciation of all karmaa-s and the infrastructure that is needed for karmaa-s.

The word karmaa, in this context, primarily means vaidhika karmaa. And, 'thadh saadhanaa' denotes the infrastructure that is conducive to karmaa, meaning the grihastha aasramaa, since brahmachaarins-s, vaanaaprasthaa-s and sanyaasins-s cannot do vaidhika karmaa. "Renunciation of vaidhika karmaa and grihastha aasramaa", in the literal sense, would mean "adoption of sanyaasa aasramaa".

Chathurtha (sanyaasa) aasrama sveekaaram – i.e. formal renunciation of family life, including yagnyopaveetham and tuft – is part of the original Vedic scheme. But, in the present circumstances, when varna-aasrama dharma itself has been given the go-bye, this advice for formal renunciation of family life and adoption of the sanyaasa aasramaa, may not be relevant.

In the current age, can an individual become a sanyaasi, for the purpose of renouncing lokika karmaa? Interestingly, even that is not possible. In the original concept of sanyaasa dharmaa, the sanyaasi was prohibited from staying for a length of time, in one place. He was expected to be on the move, all the time and that too singly – as an ekaaki. But, to-day's circumstances have made it necessary for any sanyaasi to be part of an Institution; and, for such a sanyaasi, lokikaa duties connected with the Institution have replaced duties to the family. In fact, quantitatively more karmaa-s have to be done by him, as the Institution member.

In other words, both grihastha aasramaa and modern sanyaasa aasramaa appear to be not conducive to jnaana maargaa. And, therefore, recourse has to be taken to the next best option, viz., that, whatever be one's external aasramaa, one should reduce four factors – possessions, obligations, relationships and transactions, since these four factors deprive the seeker of valuable time that could otherwise be utilized for spirituality ; they also cause preoccupation or obsession of mind.

The term, sarvakarma thadh saadhana sanyaasa:, can, therefore, be taken to mean, "reduction of the above four factors", so that, time and a mind free of preoccupations, will be available for vicharaa.

- ततः योग अभ्यासः - Thereafter, resorting to ashtaanga yoga abhyaasa:.

By the ashtaanga yoga practice, the mind is acclimatized and prepared for a life of study and contemplation. A mind which has been used to relationships and activities, feels terribly disturbed, when it is made to withdraw from worldly relationships and activities, for the purpose of spiritual study. We commonly see instances, when even a temporary separation from the family for professional work, is found intolerable. Therefore, even if any effort is made to withdraw from active life for the purpose of vedhaantha vicharaa and thus, make the environment conducive for vicharaa, the mind may not co-operate, because it had been used to relationships, interaction etc. Because of this 'withdrawal system', such a person will have the time, but not the aptitude for studying Vedhaantha. The mind, therefore, has to be trained to accept gradual withdrawal from worldly matters.

Lord Krishna, in the Bhagavadh Githa, stresses the importance of seclusion, for a spiritual seeker (in verse 10 – Chap. VI): "yōgī yuñjīta satatamātmānaṃ rahasi sthitaḥ | ēkākī yatacittātmā nirāśīraparigrahaḥ." - "Remaining alone in solitude, with a restrained mind and body, without any desire, and without any possession, a Yogi should constantly engage the mind in meditation". Again (in verse 11 – Chap. XIII), while listing out important values which prepare the mind for self-knowledge, the Lord stresses the need for 'viviktha desa sevithvam' meaning 'seclusion'.

"Therefore" Sureswaraacharya says "yoga abhyaasaa is required to train the mind to be comfortable with itself, without relationships etc., for the purpose of long study and long contemplation". Resorting to the Ashtaanga Yoga consisting of yamaa, niyamaa, aasanaa, praanayaamaa and prathyahaaraa will be fruitful, in training the mind, for contemplation.

- ततः चित्तस्य प्रत्यक्प्रवणता - Because of the yoga abhyaasaa, the mind will learn to be comfortable and happy in being alone for sravana, manana, nidhidhyaasanaani.

For a prepared mind, 'being alone' is not 'loneliness', which is disturbing, but 'aloneness', which is welcome and enjoyable. This comfort of the mind / inwardness of the mind is prathyak pravanathaa. Once the mind is ready, one can apply the mind to sravanam, mananam and nidhidhyaasanam, uninterrupted by thoughts of the four factors – possessions, obligations, relationships and transactions.

- ततः तत्त्वमस्यादि वाक्यार्थ परिज्ञानं - Thereafter, thorough enquiry into mahaa vaakayam (mahaa vaakya vichaaraa) leading to jnaanam.

Parijnaanam – aparoksha jnaanam. This is achieved by sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani, the constituents of Vedhaantheta Vichaaraa.

- ततः अविध्या उच्छेदः - Thereafter, 'total destruction of ajnaanam / 'avidhyaa naasa:' / 'dvaitha naasa:' | 'ucchedha:' means 'uprooting' / 'total destruction'.
- ततः अविध्या उच्छेदः - Thereafter, 'total destruction of ajnaanam / 'avidhyaa naasa:' / 'dvaitha naasa:' | 'ucchedha:' means 'uprooting' / 'total destruction'.
- ततः स्वात्मनि एव अवस्थानं - Thereafter, abiding in the aathmaa and seeing everything else as mithyaa / anaathmaa,

With aparoksha jnaanam, one's world view changes. As a karmayogi, my view is of a triad, consisting of jeeva, jagath and Isvara. As a samsaari, I am a hapless, helpless jeevaa, requiring Isvara's support to confront my praarabdhaa.

Jnaana yogam and svaathmani avasthaanam change this view and replace the triad of jeeva-jagath-Isvara to dhruk-dhrusya-vivekaa. The attitude "I am dhruk Brahman ; everything else is dhrusyam" takes over.

My day starts with aathma-anaathma dhyaanam. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa's Praatha: smarana sthothram begins : "Praatha: smaraami hrudhi samspruadh aathmathathvam" and ends with the line "rajvaam bhujangam iva prathibhaasitham vai". If I have aparoksha jnaanam, the entire universe is like rajjusarpaa (mithyaa), while I am like the rajju (sathyam).

"Aham sathyam jagan mithyaa" becomes the conviction. Even while confronting praarabhdhaa, I draw strength from the aathma-anaathma format. I consider praarabhdhaa also as mithyaa. The sathya 'I' can never be frightened by the mithyaa praarabhdhaa.

"I support everything; I do not need any support; I am not helpless or hapless; I am the happy Brahman" is the jnaana nishtaa or jeevan mukthi. This will lead to videha mukthi. "Even with praarabhdhaa, I am aathmaa; without praarabhdhaa also, I am aathmaa" is videha mukthi.

Thus, the spiritual journey is from karma anushtaanam to videha mukthi.

What is the pramaanam, for all these? Sureswaraachaaryaa quotes "Brahmaiva san brahma aapyethi" from Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.iv.6) and "vimuktha: cha vimuchyathe", from Katopanishad (II.ii.1).

- "ब्रह्मैव सन् ब्रह्माप्येति" - remaining in Brahman while alive (jeevan mukthi) merges into Brahman, after death (videha mukthi) and,
- "विमुक्तः च विमुच्यते" - remaining free, while living, becomes free after death (free from punar janmam).

Chapter I: Verse 52 –

पारम्पर्येण कर्मैव स्यादविद्यानिवृत्तये ।

जानवन्नाविरोधित्वात्कर्माविध्यां निरस्यति ॥ ५२ ॥

Thus, through such a series of links, action contributes to the removal of ignorance. But, it cannot directly remove ignorance, for it is not opposed to it.

What is the conclusion reached through this introduction? The answer is: "That karmaa is only a remote and indirect means to mokshaa; jnaanaa alone is the direct and proximate means. Jnaanam will remove ignorance directly; karmaa will not, but is indirectly useful.

- एवं - In this manner (as discussed above),
- कर्मा अविद्या निवृत्तये स्यात् - karmaa becomes a means of ignorance removal,
- पारम्पर्येण - indirectly / remotely.
- कर्मा अविध्यां न निरस्यति - Karmaa does not remove ignorance directly,

- जानवत् - as knowledge does,
- अविरोधित्वात् - since karmaa is not an enemy of ignorance.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 53 :

न च कर्मणः कार्यमण्वपि मुक्तौ सभाव्यते नापि मुक्तौ यत्संभवति तत्कर्मपेक्षते। तदुच्यते ।

It is impossible that action could do anything directly to bring about release. Nor does that which constitutes release, require the aid of action. This is going to be brought out now:

In this introduction to verse 53, Sureswaraachaaryaa explains why karmaa is not a direct means for mokshaa. He gives two reasons: (1) Whatever be the consequence of karmaa, is not found in mokshaa. Karma kaaryam is not seen in mokshaa. (2) Whatever be the consequence of mokshaa or the nature of mokshaa, you do not find in karmaa. The features of mokshaa are not seen in karmaa.

There is no connection between karmaa and mokshaa.

- कर्मणः कार्य - The consequences of karmaa

Four consequences of karmaa are mentioned by the Aachaaryaa, later, in the verse.

- मुक्तौ अणुवपि न संभाव्यते - are not found, even a little, in mokshaa.
- मुक्तौ यद् संभवति - Whatever is found in mokshaa / the nature of moksha
- तद् कर्म अपि न अपेक्षते - has no connection / relationship to karmaa.

(Apekshaa - connection / relationship).

- तद् उच्यते - I will explain how.

Karmaa and mokshaa has no sambhandhaa at all. Karmaa is in the field of dvaithaa ; mokshaa is in the field of advaitaa. Karmaa is in the field of mithyaa; mokshaa is in the field of sathyam. Karmaa is associated with time and space; mokshaa is dissociated from time and space. Karmaa is associated with change; mokshaa is associated with changelessness.

Chapter I:Verse 53 –

उत्पाध्यमाप्य संस्कार्य विकार्य च क्रियाफलम् ।

नैवं मुक्तिर्यतस्तस्मात्कर्म तस्या न साधनम् ॥ ५३ ॥

The result of action must be either 'production' or 'attainment' or 'improvement' or 'modification'. Release cannot come under any of these four. Therefore, action is not the means of release.

This was seen before in verse 24, where Sureswaraacharya mentioned "chaturvidha karmakaaryam" – "four-fold results of karmaa", though, he did not name them. In this verse (verse 53) he lists them.

- क्रियाफलम् - The result of action is
- उत्पाद्यं - production (or)
- आप्यं - reaching (or)
- संस्कार्यं - purification (or)
- विकायं - modification.
- एवं मुक्तिः न (स्यात्) - Mokshaa has nothing to with any of these.

As long as one is caught in "cause-effect" pursuit, one is trapped in samsaaraa. A Vedhaanthic student, even after coming to Vedhaanthee, very often, finds it difficult to get out of samsaaraa. "I have understood Vedhaanthee; I am pursuing meditation for mokshaa to come" is a statement in the cause-effect realm.

- यतस्तस्मात् - Because of this (since mokshaa is beyond cause-effect)
- कर्मा तस्याः साधनम् न (भवेत्) - karmaa cannot be a means for mokshaa.

Thasyaa: - mukthe: / for mokshaa.

Jnaanam also does not produce mokshaa; it only helps you realize the fact that mokshaa is your nature.

With this verse, Sureswaraacharya concludes the refutation of the first group of poorva pakshin-s, which refutation, he started in verse 23.

As may be recollected, the Aacharya had mentioned 3 types of poorva pakshin s:

- (1) Abhyupedhya karma vaadhina: - in verses 9 to 13.
- (2) Anabhyupedhya karma vaadhina: - in verses 14 to 19 and
- (3) Jnaana karma samucchaya vaadhina: - in verses 20 to 22.

Of the three types, the first type (abhyupedhya karma vaadhina;) was taken up for refutation in verse 23; the arguments against this group is completed with verse 53. This group of poorva pakshin-s concede that the topic of aathma jnaanam is discussed in the scriptures; but, hold, that aathma jnaanam is not required for mokshaa and that karmaa alone (by itself) can give mokshaa.

Refuting them, the Aachaaryaa established that karmaa is not moksha saadhanam; it has only a limited role, 'purifying the mind', and that is all it can do.

The second group, abhyupedhya karma vaadhina:, do not even accept that jnaanam is mentioned in the saasthraa-s. The Aachaaryaa will take up the refutation of this philosophy, later.

He now takes up "samucchaya vaadha roopa poorvapaksha niraasa:" – "refutation of the view of the 3rd group of poorva pakshin-s, viz., jnaana karma samucchaya vaadhina:", from verse 54, which goes on up to verse 79.

What is samucchaya vaadhaa? The answer: "The view that only a combination of karmaa and jnaanam will be the cause of mokshaa".

This group can be further sub-divided into three sub-groups:

- (1) Jnaana pradhaana samucchayaa – which holds jnaanam as main (anghee) and karmaa as support (angam). According to this view, Jnaanam gives mokshaa, supported by karmaa.
- (2) Karma pradhaana samucchayaa – in which karmaa is considered pradhaanam and jnaanam as support (angam). According to this view, it is Karmaa that gives mokshaa, supported by jnaanam.
- (3) Sama pradhaana samucchayaa - in which, both jnaanam and karmaa have equal importance. "Both together give mokshaa" is the view of this group.

Sureswaraachaaryaa will be refuting all the three sub-groups; he will establish that jnaanam gives mokshaa, unsupported by karmaa - "gandha lesasya abhaavaath". In jnaanam and mokshaa, karmaa is not there.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 54 :

एवं तावत् केवलं कर्म साक्षात् अविध्या अपनुत्तये न पर्याप्तमिति प्रपञ्चितम्।

Thus, it has been explained that mere action is not competent to remove ignorance directly.

Sureswaraachaaryaa sums up what he has done till now, from verse 23 to 53.

- एवं - In this manner,
 - प्रपञ्चितं - the teaching has been given elaborately,
 - केवलं कर्मा - (that) karmaa alone
 - न पर्याप्तं - is not adequate / sufficient,
 - अविद्या अपनुत्तये - for removal of self-ignorance.

Apanutthi: - removal.

Karmaa includes upaasanaa also, which is maanaseeka karmaa.

31. Chapter 1, Verse 54 to 56 (18-11-2006)

In the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 54, Sureswaraacharya is consolidating the previous topics and introducing the next topic.

One of the previous topics was that karmaa cannot be a direct means to liberation, although karmaa does have its importance. The Aachaaryaa agreed, that, karmaa serves as an indirect means to liberation, by preparing the mind for jnaana yogam. He pointed out that karma yogaa is, thus, the means only to jnaana yogaa and it is jnaana yogaa which is the direct means to liberation. In other words, there is a cause-effect relationship between karma yogam and jnaana yogam; there is a cause-effect relationship between jnaana yogam and liberation; but, there is no direct cause-effect relationship between karma yogam and liberation; only an indirect cause-effect relationship.

Sureswaraacharya very clearly established this view on the nature of the relationship between karmaa and liberation, by saying that nithya-naimitthika karmaani will only purify the mind and make it fit for receiving knowledge; and, that, with the purification, karmaa's function is over. Thereafter, the seeker has to make a deep study of the Veda antha portions, the pramaanam; the deep study (vichaaraa) gives 'knowledge', which, in turn, gives mokshaa. This aspect, viz. "karmaa mokshasya paramparaa saadhanaa | na saakshaath saadhanaa" was one of the topics covered in the portion between verses 23 and 53.

The Aachaaryaa commences the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 54, with the statement "kevalam karmaa avidhyaa apanutthaye saakshaath na paryaaptham ithi prapanchitham" meaning "it has been explained, that, mere karmaa is not adequate to remove self-ignorance directly". The use of the word 'saakshaath' is significant. Karmaa cannot act directly, to remove ignorance; but, it does have an indirect role.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 54 (Contd.):

मुक्तौ च मुमुक्षुजानतद्विषयस्वाभाव्यानुरोधेन सर्वप्रकारस्यापि कर्मणोऽसंभव उक्तो "हितं संप्रेप्सताम्" इत्यादिना।

In the argument beginning with the statement 'the scripture sheds light on the means of attaining ends etc.' (verse 29), it has been pointed out, by analyzing the nature of the seeker, the nature of knowledge and the nature of the object of knowledge (viz., aathmaa), that no action of whatever description can be effective in bringing about liberation.

This portion of the gadhyam talks of the reason, which also has been already discussed, as to why mere karmaa is not adequate or competent to remove ignorance.

- मुक्तौ च - With regard to liberation
- कर्मणा असंभवः उक्तः - it was established that karmaa cannot be effective (in bringing about the desired liberation),

What type of karmaa?

- सर्वप्रकारस्य अपि - whether loukikaa or viadhikaa / of whatever nature,

How was this established?

- मुमुक्षु जान तद्विषय स्वाभाव्य अनुरोधेन - by analyzing the nature of the seeker, the nature of 'knowledge' and the nature of the object of knowledge (namely aathmaa),

Mumukshu – seeker; jnaanam – knowledge; thadh (jnaana) vishayam – object of the knowledge (viz., Self); svaabhaavyam – nature (svaabhaavyam is another term for svabhaavam); anurodha: - consideration / analysis.

By serious analysis, we find no direct connection between karmaa and mokshaa. The absence of direct connection is arrived at, by analysis of the nature of the seeker, the nature of the knowledge and the nature of aathmaa. The line of analysis is: "Mokshaa is already our svaroopam. We do not require any process to bring about mokshaa. When no process is involved, karmaa also has no role to play".

- "हितं संप्रेप्सताम्" इत्यादिना - from the verse starting with "hitham samprepsathaam".

The reference is to verse 29.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 54 (Contd.):

यादृशः च आराद् उपकारकत्वेन जानोत्पत्तौ कर्मणां समुच्चयः संभवति तथा प्रतिपादितम् ।

How it (karmaa) can indirectly contribute to the process of liberation has also been brought out.

The Aachaaryaa uses the term 'karmanaam samucchaya.' (the combination of karmaa with jnaanam). Because of this, his statement may seem to mean "I have talked about the usefulness of jnaana-karma-samucchayam for liberation". Is this not contradictory to his stand against the samucchaya vaadha poorva pakshaa? The answer is: "No, as explained below":

There are two types of combinations – one 'simultaneous' and the other 'sequential'. The Aachaaryaa is not totally against samucchayaam also, just as he is not totally against karmaa. But, he accepts only a 'sequential combination', as the appropriate type of samucchayam.

It is Aachaaryaa's firm conviction, that Karma yogaa leads to chittha suddhi, which makes jnaana yogaa possible; and in turn, the jnaana yogaa leads the aspirant to 'knowledge' and 'liberation'. At the time of karma yogaa, jnaana yogaa is not functional and at the time of jnaana yogaa, karma yogaa ceases to be functional.

An example from the mundane world is the procedure of initially going through primary school education and later to the University for graduation. It is a known and accepted fact, that 'schooling' and 'college education' for an individual cannot be simultaneous. They have to be sequential.

Similar sequential combination of karmaa and jnaanam, krama samucchaya:, is accepted by the Aachaaryaa, while sama samucchaya:, simultaneous dependence on the combination of karmaa and jnaanam, is condemned by him, as inappropriate.

What Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to convey, is: "While strongly criticizing the stand of viewing karmaa as a direct means to liberation, I also pointed out that karmaa cannot be totally condemned. Karmaa does have a role to play, as an indirect means".

- ज्ञान उत्पत्तौ - "In the rise of knowledge,
- यादृशः कर्मणां समुच्चयः - in what type of combination, does karmaa
- आराद् उपकारत्वेन संभवति - help as a remote and indirect means",
- तथा प्रतिपादितम् - was also established.

Krama samucchaya: is implied by the word araadh (meaning remote/indirect).

The Aachaaryaa had already quoted (in verse 51), the slokaa from Bhagavadh Githa (slokaa 3 – Chapter VI), namely, "aaruruksho: mune: yogam karma kaaranam uchyathe | Yogaaroodasya thasya eva sama: kaaranam uchyathe" – "For a seeker, who wants to reach jnaana yogaa, karma yogaa is said to be the means. For the seeker, who has reached jnaana yoga, renunciation is said to be the means".

The gist of this teaching of Lord Krishna is also "Enter karmaa; jnaana yogaa is not there, at that time. After karmaa's job is done, i.e., when the mind is purified, withdraw from karmaa and start jnaanam".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 54 (Contd.):

अविध्योच्छित्तौ तु लब्धात्मस्वभावस्यात्मज्ञानस्यैवासाधारणं साधकतमत्वं नान्यस्य प्रधानभूतस्य गुणभूतस्य चेत्येतदधुनोच्यते ।

Now it is going to be stated, that, in the matter of removing ignorance, the full-fledged knowledge of the Self is the unique and best (direct) means, and, that, nothing else has this potency either as a subsidiary or as a principal factor.

Sureswaraachaaryaa briefly introduces his next topic.

- अविध्या उच्छित्तौ तु - In the matter of removal of ignorance, Uccitthi: - removal.
- असाधारणं साधकतमत्वं - being the unique and best (direct)'means'
- लब्ध आत्मस्वभावस्य आत्मज्ञानस्य एव - is that of Self-knowledge (athma jnaanam) alone, that has come into firm existence in the mind of the seeker,

When I say "aham Brahma asmi", it can be a 'knowledge' for me, only when I am convinced that it is a 'fact'. The mere thought (vritthi) "aham brahma asmi", without the conviction of it being a 'fact', is not jnaanam. It is only 'information' suggested by the saasthraa-s and the guru. In other words, when I look upon it as a mere hypothesis, it is not jnaanam. Only when I have the conviction, that, it is the 'fact', it is jnaanam. This is what is indicated by the Aachaaryaa, by the use of the adjective (to aathma jnaanam) "labhdha aathmasvabhavaasya", which term conveys "when 'knowledge' has firmly taken place ; when it is not a mere 'information' " .

- न अन्यस्य - (and) not of anything else, The Aachaaryaa means 'karmaa' by 'anything else'. Karmaa cannot remove ignorance. In what form?
- प्रधानभूतस्य गुणभूतस्य च - either as a dominating factor or as a secondary / supporting factor.

Earlier, the Aachaaryaa had established that "karmaa independently cannot destroy ignorance". In this portion, he affirms that "karmaa, even in combination with jnaanam, cannot destroy ignorance". "Anyasya samucchithasya avidhyaa ucchitthi: na bhavathi".

Three types of combination (samucchayam) between karmaa and jnaanam are possible: (1) karma pradhaana samucchayam – karmaa as main and jnaanam as secondary (2) jnaana pradhaana samucchayam – jnaanam as main and karmaa as secondary and (3) sama pradhaana samucchayam – karmaa and jnaanam having equal importance. Of these, the first two are mentioned explicitly by the Aachaaryaa by the use of the terms - 'pradhaana bhoothasya' and 'guna bhoothasya'. The third one (sama pradhaana samucchayam) is to be taken as implied.

- इति एतद् - This teaching
- अधुना उच्यते - is going to be entered into.

The jnaana karma samucchaya vaadha: was presented by the Aachaaryaa, in verses 20 to 22. Now, from verse 54, the Aachaaryaa is commencing the refutation of jnaana karma samucchaya vaadha: / The refutation goes on up to verse 79. Of the three types, he first talks of karma pradhaana samucchaya vaadham.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 54 (Contd.):

तत्र ज्ञानं गुणभूतं तावदहेतुरित्येतदाह ।

First of all, it is urged that knowledge as instrumental to something else cannot be the means of release.

- तत्र - In this context,
- ज्ञानं गुणभूतं - the karma pradhaana samucchayam (where, jnaanam is secondary)
- तावत् अहेतुः - is not the cause of ignorance removal.
- इत्येतद् आह - This is being said.

Chapter I: Verse 54 –

संनिपत्य न च ज्ञानं कर्माज्ञानं निरस्यति ।

साध्यसाधनभावत्वादेककालानवस्थिते : ॥ ५४ ॥

Action, appropriating knowledge as an accessory to itself, cannot remove ignorance, because action is the means and knowledge is the end and the two, being means and end, cannot be simultaneously operative.

The first line of the verse is the proposition and the second line, the argument.

- कर्मा अज्ञानं न निरस्यति - Karmaa cannot destroy ignorance,
- ज्ञानं संनिपत्य च - even taking support of jnaanam.

What is the reason? It is because karma yogam and jnaana yogam cannot exist in proximity at all, for one to take the assistance of the other.

But, why cannot they exist in proximity? The answer is: "Jnaana yogaa is 'understanding' Vedhaanthaa ; the 'understanding' is possible only when the mind is purified and ready. It is karma yogaa that gives the purification of the mind - chittha suddhi. Thus, karma yogaa is the means of coming to jnaana yogaa. The preparation of the mind is done by karma yogaa, which should have succeeded in its task of preparing the mind; in other words, karma yogaa should have completed its job, even before jnaana yogaa can be employed fruitfully. Then, how can karma yogaa and jnaana yogaa co-exist?"

When Vedhaanthaa is working for a seeker, his mind having been fully prepared, he may continue to do karmaa, for the welfare of the society - 'loka sangrahartham', as Lord Krishna pointed out in the Bhagavadh Githa (verse 20, Chapter III). But, the karmaa, is not playing any role for him, since it had already completed its job of purifying his mind.

Conversely, when nithya naimitthika karmaani are functioning – i.e. when they are still in the process of purifying the mind of the seeker, which is not yet ready for jnaana yogaa, the jnaana yogaa cannot be functional. But, would that mean that the study of Vedhaanthaa, at this stage, is a waste. The answer is: "No; the study will be another type of sath karmaa, though not jnaana yogaa".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, only one yogaa will be functional for a seeker, at a given time, even if both karmaa and vicharaa are done at the same time.

The original Vedic scheme was that grihastha aasaramaa is for the practice of karma yogaa and sanyaasa aasaramaa for the practice of jnaana yogaa.

Reverting to the text:

- साध्य साधन भावत्वात् - Since one (karma yogaa) is saadhanaa (means) and the other (jnaana yogaa) is saadhyam (goal),
- एक काल अनवस्थिते: - both cannot be simultaneously functional.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 55:

समप्रधानयोरप्यसंभव एव ।

Nor can these two be combined as equal partners:

Sureswaraachaaryaa is now taking up the 3rd type of samucchayaa vaadham – sama samucchayam. He says: "I cannot accept this also".

- समप्रधानयोःअपि असंभवःएव - (Liberation) is not possible even through the combination of karmaa and jnaanam having equal importance.

He explains why, in the verse.

Chapter I: Verse 55 –

बाध्यबाधकभावाच्च पञ्चास्योरणयोरिव ।

Because one is stultified and the other stultifies it, they cannot be co-existent and joined together, even as a lion and a sheep cannot work together in partnership.

In the previous verse, the Aachaaryaa had said that karmaa and jnaanam cannot co-exist at the same time, i.e., eka kaala avasthaanam is not possible.

In this verse, he says, that, they cannot co-exist in one place, i.e. in one person. Eka desa avasthaanam also is not possible "The impossibility of light and darkness co-existing in the same place" is an example commonly given by scriptures, to stress this view. Sureswaraachaaryaa gives the example of "a hungry lion and a lamb".

- पञ्चास्य उरण्योःइव - Similar to a lion and a lamb,
'Panchaasya:' - Lion (pancham yaasyam yasya sa: - one whose mouth is wide); 'urana:' - lamb.
- बाध्य बाधक भावात् - which, because of the 'destroyer-destroyed' relationship,
- एक देश अनवस्थात् च - cannot co-exist in one place,
- तयोः समुच्चयता न - the combination of karma yogaa and jnaana yogaa is not possible.

Karma yogaa and jnaana yogaa cannot co-exist in one place, viz., the aspirant.

In his Githa Bhaashyam, in his consolidated comments on the 1st chapter, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa points out: Karmaa requires the notions "I am jeevaa, karthaa, bokthaa and samsaari. I have problems created by praarabhdhaa. Therefore, I have to work for solutions to the problems". In contrast, when jnaanam dominates the mind, the very outlook changes to "I am not a jeevaa. I am akartha. I am aboktha. I am asamsaari. I do not have even praarabhdhaa, which is also mithyaa. I choose to perform action only for loka sangraham (welfare of the world). I do not require karmaa for liberation, since I am already muktha." | This analysis of Bhagavadh Paadhaa also establishes that karmaa and jnaanam cannot co-exist.

As long as the seeker is a karmi or a karma yogi, he is subject to the triad of jagath, jeeva and Isvara and needs the support of Isvara, for confronting praarabhdhaa.

But, for a jnaana yogi, the format is replaced by the aathma-anaathma duo ; there are only two things: (1) 'I', the dhruk-brahman, who is sathya: and muktha: and (2) everything else that is confronted – dhrusyam , including praarabhdhaa, all mithyaa. As a jnaana yogi, " aham asangasvaroopo: asmi . I do not require a remedy for any problem, since problems do not even exist."

Hence, karmaa and jnaanam cannot co-exist.

For an unprepared mind, Vedhaantha sravanam is a punya karmaa; for a prepared mind Vedhaantha is pramaanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 56:

कुतः बाध्यबाधक भावः । यस्मात् ।

How is one of them the stultifier and the other stultified : It is this way ?

In the previous verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa said that karmaa and jnaanam can never co-exist in the same mind, since one is the destroyer and the other the destroyed. He now gives the reason, why jnaanam will destroy karmaa.

- कुतः - What is the reason for
- बाध्यबाधक भावः - the relationship of the destroyed and the destroyer?
Baadhyam – destroyed; bhaadhakam – destroyer; bhaava: - relationship.
- यस्मात् - For the following reason (given in the verse).

Chapter I: Verse 56 –

अयथावस्त्वविध्या स्याद्विध्या तस्या विरोधिनी ।

Ignorance is contrary to the nature of Reality and knowledge is opposed to ignorance. The two cannot be combined, even as the sun and darkness cannot be combined.

The essence of the teaching can be compared to: "Waking state and dreaming state cannot co-exist. If one is really awake, one need not work seriously for solving the dream problems".

32. Chapter I, Verse 56 to 60 (25-11-2006)

In these verses, beginning from verse 54 and ending with verse 79, Sureswaraacharya is refuting the samucchaya vaadha poorva pakshaa philosophy. This poorva pakshaa was introduced earlier, in verses 20 to 22. According to this philosophy, jnaanam and karmaa should be combined for achieving liberation.

As already discussed, this samucchaya vaadham is of three types:

- (1) Karma pradhaana samucchayam, according to which, karmaa, supported by jnaanam (i.e. karmaa as pradhaanam or anghee and jnaanam as angam) gives liberation.
- (2) Jnaana pradhaana samucchayam, according to which, jnaanam, supported by karmaa (i.e. jnaanam as peadhaanam or anghee and karmaa as angam) gives liberation.
- (3) Sama pradhaana samucchayam, according to which both jnaanam and karmaa are equally powerful.

Of the three, the karma pradhaana samucchaya vaadham was refuted by the Aachaaryaa, in verse 54. He pointed out, that, karma yogaa and jnaana yogaa cannot exist at the same time for a given seeker, since karma yogaa is the saadhanaa and jnaana yogaa is the saadhyam. When saadhanaa is operational, saadhyam is yet to be accomplished; and, when saadhyam is accomplished, saadhanaa becomes irrelevant. So, the two cannot co-exist.

From verse 55, Sureswaraacharya takes up the refutation of sama samucchaya vaadham. In verse 55, he argues, that, karmaa and jnaanam, in equal measures also, is not possible, since they are 'opposites', like a hungry lion and a sheep. Just as the lion will swallow the sheep, Jnaanam 'swallows' karmaa. "Baadhya baadhaka bhaavaath" – "because of destroyer-destroyed relationship" is now the argument, while, in the earlier verse, it was "saadhya saadhana bhaavaath" – "because of end-means relationship".

The Aachaaryaa explains, in verse 56, why jnaanam destroys karmaa.

- अविद्या अयथा वस्तु स्यात् - Ignorance is contrary to the nature of Reality.

'Yathaa vasthu' means 'sathyam'; 'Ayathaa vasthu' is the opposite of 'yathaa vasthu' or 'not sathyam', which means 'mithyaa'. Karmaa is founded on the notions "I have a varnaa'; 'I have an aasramaa'; 'I am a karthaa'; 'I am a bokthaa' etc. These varna-aasrama abhimaanam and karthruthva-bokthruthva abimaanam are results of mithyaa jnaanam. Karmaa, is, therefore, founded on mithyaa jnaanam or ajnaanam. Karmaa is embodiment of ajnaanam; 'karmaa' is crystallized ignorance.

- विद्या तस्याःविरोधिनी - Knowledge is the enemy of ignorance.
Thasyaa: - 'of avidhya' (therefore 'of karma', as karma is a product or result of avidhya.)
- एवं तयोः समुच्चयः - When it is so, their combination
- रविः शार्वरयोःइव - (is) similar to that of the sun and the darkness of night.

The analogy makes it clear, that, the combination between karma and jnaanam is not possible.

Karma yogaa needs the perspective of a triangular format – jeevaa, jagath and Isvara. In contrast, Jnaana yoga, gives a binary format (1) aathmaa, the 'seer' (dhruk) on the one hand and (2) everything that is perceived – dhruyam - on the other. Jnaana yoga leads to the conviction, that, aathmaa is the only sathyam (Reality) and everything else, including praarabhdhaa, is mithyaa.

In karma yogaa, there is need for the jeevaa to depend on the support of Isvara. In Jnaana yogaa, "I am swami / asangh", unaffected by anything.

For a jnaana yogi, the day starts with aathma-anaathma format, the challenges are met through the aathma-anaathma format and the day ends with aathma-anaathma format.

The triangular format (when 'I am helpless') and the binary format (when 'I am the master') cannot combine. At a given time, only one can be implemented.

The 'implementation' consists of three stages: (i) nischayaa, weighing the pros and cons of the different paths and making a choice (ii) sankalpaa, firmly deciding to stick to the chosen path and (iii) abhyaasaa, firm practice of the chosen path.

In the Bhagavadh Githa, Lord Krishna declares to Arjuna (verse 3 – chapter III): "lōkē'smin dvidihā niṣṭhā purā prōktā mayā'nagha| jñānayōgēna sāṅkhyānām karmayōgēna yōginām" – "O! Sinless one! In this world, two types of disciplines have been initiated by Me, in the beginning of creation, in the form of jnaana yogaa for the Saamkyaa-s and in the form of karma yogaa for the Yogi-s", making it clear, that, these are two paths distinct from each other.

Sureswaraachaaryaa also says that the two (karma yogaa and jnaana yoga) cannot combine.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 57:

तस्मादकारकब्रह्मात्मनि परिसमाप्तावबोधस्याशेषकर्मचोदनानामचोध्यस्वाभाव्यात्कुण्ठता। कथं तद्।अभिधीयते ।

Therefore, he, who has comprehended the nature of Brahman-Aathman, which never forms a factor in the context of action, transcends liability to injunctions of all actions. How is that? It is explained:

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out, that, once a person has understood Vedhaantha and has understood sufficiently to make use of this binary product at all times, Karmaa becomes irrelevant to him.

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- परिसमाप्त अवबोधस्य - for a jnaani, whose sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani have culminated in 'knowledge', 'parisamaaptham' – culmination; 'avabodha:' - knowledge.

What type of knowledge?

अकारक ब्रह्मात्मनि - " I am not a jeevaathmaa ; but, brahmaathmaa, who does not exist in the field of action; who is not an accessory to action; who has transcended action",

Kaarakam is a technical word, referring to karthaa, karanam and kaaryam. Brahman is not the subject of action, not the object of action, nor instrument of action, nor location of action, neither benefactor nor beneficiary of action. "That Brahman I am" has been assimilated by the jnaani.

Verse 19 – Chapter II, of the Bhagavadh Githa and manthraa 19 – section 2 – Chapter I, of the Katopanishad, which are almost identical, declare: "na ayam hanthi na hanyathe" – "this aathmaa does not kill; nor is it killed".

If such a jnaani, with the conviction "I am akarthaa", reads the various Vedic injunctions, what is his perception? Sureswaraachaaryaa says "Such a jnaani looks upon all Vedic commandments as irrelevant". All actions are associated with varnaa and aasramaa, as a karthaa. For a jnaani, no Vedic commandment will be functional.

The Aachaaryaa uses the word 'kuntathaad', to describe the nature of the Vedic commandments, for a jnaani.

- अशेष कर्म चोदनानाम् - all commandments, either vidhi (prescribed) or nishedhaa(prohibited), `Aseshā` – all / without any exception; `chodhanaā` – commandment.

- कुण्ठता - become blunt,
- अचोध्य स्वाभाव्यात् - since he is no more within the range of the commandment.

`chodhya:` – one who is within the range of commandment; `svaabhaavyaath'` – because of the very nature.

All Vedic commandments become non-functional and non-operational for a jnaani.

Such a jnaani does not look upon himself as a father or a son etc. All commandments, therefore, meant for a father or a son etc., become irrelevant to him. He becomes a sanyaasi. Both loukika karmaani (with respect to family, society etc.) and vaidhika karmaani become irrelevant to him.

Why? Sureswaraachaaryaa himself asks this question:

- कथं तद् - How do you say that ?
- अभिधीयते - I will explain (says the Aachaaryaa).

Then, he explains why.

Chapter I: Verse 57 –

बृहस्पतिसवे यद्वत्क्षत्रियो न प्रवर्तते ।

ब्रह्मणत्वाध्यहंमानी विप्रो वा क्षत्रकर्मणि ॥ ५७ ॥

It is similar to a Kshakthriyaa not engaging in the sacrifice Brihaspathisava; or similar to a person believing himself to be a Braahmanaa not undertaking the duties of a Kshakthriyaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives a karma kaandaa example, to explain his view. Every vaidhika karmaa is based on the varnaa and aasramaa of the individual performing the karmaa. In other words, every Vedic commandment is directed towards a particular varna-aasrami. If a kshakthriyaa reads about an yaaghaa, by the name Brihaspathi-sava, which, according to the scriptures, is to be performed only by a Braahmanaa, he looks upon the information as irrelevant to him. Likewise, a Braahmanaa also (according to the karma kaandaa) does not undertake the karma of a kshakthriyaa, for example, the Raaja Sooya Yaagaa, which is prescribed only for kshakthriyaa-s.

- यद्वत् - It is similar to
- क्षत्रियः बृहस्पतिसवे न प्रवर्तते - a kshakthriyaa not venturing into the yagnyaa, Briahapathisava
- ब्रह्मणत्वाध्यहंमानी विप्रः वा - or a person claiming to be a Brahmin
- क्षत्रकर्मणि (न प्रवर्तते) - not venturing into the duties of a kshakthriyaa.

A Brahmin will not get prathyavaaya paapam for non-performance of kshakthriya karma-s; nor would a kshakthriyaa, for not performing braahmana karmaani.

The Aachaaryaa asserts: "This principle is extended to the jnaani – all karma-s become irrelevant to him". A sanyaasi, who has formally renounced grihastha aasramaa, even if not a jnaani, gets no paapam, for not doing family duties.

The jnaani has no duties, since he is an akartha. Under such circumstances, where is the question of jnaana-karma-samucchaya?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 58 :

यथायं दृष्टान्तः एवं दार्ष्टान्तिकोऽपीत्येतदाह ।

Similar to these illustrations, is the case on hand. That is brought home in the next verse.

- यथायं दृष्टान्तः - As in the case of this example (by which all commandments are not relevant to all people, even if they are Vedic commandments),
- एवं दार्ष्टान्तिकः अपि - so, in the case of a jnaani (no commandment is relevant).

In the case of braahmanaa-s or kshathriyaa-s, only particular commandments are applicable to them. In the case of a jnaani, no commandment is applicable (nisthraigunye pathi vicharathaam ko vidhi: ? Ko nishedha: ?).

- इति एतद् आह - This is brought forth by the author (in the following verse).

Chapter I: Verse 58 –

विदेहो वीतसंदेहो नेतिनेत्यवशेषितः ।

देहाध्यनात्मदृक् तद्वत्तत्क्रियां वीक्षतेऽपि न ॥ ५८ ॥

The person who has transcended the body, whose doubts have all been dispelled, who has apprehended his own essential nature by discarding all superimpositions by the method of 'not this, not this', and who perceives the body etc., as non-self, does not even glance at the actions executed by the body.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "that jnaani, who has received the teachings and who has changed the format of his perspective (from the triad of jeeva-jagath-Isvara to the duo of dhruk-dhrusyam) is free from all doubts".

"Whether 'I am jeeva: is the fact and brahma asmi is a vesham' or 'aham brahma asmi is the fact and my being a father / son etc. is vesham'" is the doubt. A jnaani has no such doubts. For him 'aham brahma asmi' is the fact and all his other roles are vesham.

When the 'roles' as father, son etc., are taken seriously, they preoccupy the mind. But, when one is convinced, that, they are all only vesham-s, they do not become burdens.

- विदेहः - Free from all the three bodies (Deha thraya rahitha: - "I am neither viswaa, nor thyjasaa, not praagnyaa but I am thureeya:),
- वीतसंदेहः - with all doubts dispelled,
- नेति नेति अवशेषितः - discarding all super-impositions by the method of 'not this, not this',

'nethi nethi ithi avaseshitha:' is the description of a wise man. The expression 'nethi, nethi' is borrowed from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, which negates both the visible and invisible worlds, the moortha prapancham by one 'ithi' and the amoortha prapancham by the second 'ithi'; it negates the sthoola, sookshma, kaarana sareeraani. After negating all these, what is left over is the 'observer chaithanyam' only; and, the Upanishad reveals that "'I', the left-over aathmaa, the Observer, am Brahman". 'Avaseshitha:' means the left-over adhishtaanam, after negating the body-mind-intellect complex.

- देहादि अनात्म दृक् - perceiving his body, the world etc., as mithyaa / anaathmaa etc. (regularly and during any crisis also),
- तत्क्रियां न वीक्षते अपि - does not even see the karmaa-s given by the Vedaa-s,
- तद्वत् - similar to that.

The term 'thadvath' refers to the contents of the previous verse, meaning, 'similar to braahmanaa-s perceiving kshathriya karmaani and kshakthriyaa-s perceiving Braahmana karmaani'.

After negating everything, I cannot claim varna-aasrama identity or family identity. Hence, how can I have any karmaa - even nithya-naimitthika karmaan? Sureswaraachaarya states that such a man does not even 'look at' the karmaa-s - 'na api veekshathe'. Then how can he 'do' any karmaa seriously, once he has understood Vedhaantha properly?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 59:

तस्यार्थस्याविष्करणार्थमुदाहरणम् ।

In order to explain this, an analogy is offered.

- तस्य अर्थस्य अविष्करणार्थ - To explain the fact "jagan mithyaa, brahma sathyam",
- उदाहरणम् - an example is given.

Chapter I: Verse 59 -

मृत्स्नेभके यथेभत्वं शिशुरध्यस्य वल्गति ।

अध्यस्यात्मनि देहादीन्मूढस्तद्विचेष्टते ॥ ५९ ॥

Just as a child, taking a clay-elephant to be a real elephant, reacts accordingly, the unenlightened man imagines himself to be the body etc., and behaves accordingly.

- यथा - Just as,
- शिशु - a child
- मृत्स्न इभके इभत्वं अध्यस्य - entertaining the false perception of a real elephant, in a clay elephant (a toy elephant)
- वल्गति - reacts (accordingly),

Mruthsnam – clay; ibhaka: - elephant; sisu: - child; ibathvam – nature of elephant;

Adhyasya – falsely perceiving; valgathy - the literal meaning is 'runs up and down'; the child may run away from the toy elephant because of fear or may run towards it, because of attraction.

- तद्वत् - in a similar manner,
- मूढ - the deluded man / the unenlightened man
- आत्मनि देहादीन् अध्यस्य - falsely perceiving his body etc. as himself,
- विचेष्टते - acts accordingly.

The implied meaning of 'acts accordingly' is 'involves himself in karmaa'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 60:

न च वयं ज्ञानकर्मणोः सर्वत्रैव समुच्चयं प्रत्याचक्ष्महे । यत्र प्रयोज्यप्रयोजकभावो ज्ञानकर्मणोस्तत्र नास्तित्रपि शक्यते निवारयितुम् । तत्र विभागप्रदर्शनायोदाहरणं प्रदर्शयते ।

We do not discard the combination of action and knowledge everywhere. Where the two stand in the relation of cause and effect, not even our father can repudiate the combination. To bring out the distinction, an analogy is presented.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to make a clarification.

When we say that jnaana-karma-samucchyam is not possible, what particular jnaanam is talked of Scripture talk of two types of knowledge – paraa vidhyaa and aparaa vidhyaa.

Aparaa vidhyaa is 'material and worldly knowledge'. Aparaa vidhyaa and karmaa are friendly to each other and mutually supportive. In fact, for improving the karmaa, one has to have a thorough knowledge about the karmaa. This is true of both loukika karmaa and vaidhika karmaa. This 'mutual supporting tendency' of aparaa vidhyaa and karmaa, is referred to, by the Aachaaryaa, in this portion, as 'prayojya prayojaka bhaava.'|

All worldly sciences lead to aparaa vidhyaa. Veda poorva bhaagaa comes under aparaa vidhyaa. Puraanaa-s also come under aparaa vidhyaa.

Aparaa vidhyaa does not change the perception of 'jeeva, jagath and Isvara' triad. It maintains the distinction. The individual feels persecuted by the world and looks to Isvara for support, when in crisis, as Draupadi did.

The one vidhyaa that replaces the jeeva -jagath-Isvara format with dhruk-dhrusya format is brahma vidhyaa or paraa vidhyaa.

Aparaa vidhyaa-karma-samucchayam is possible, because of prayojya-prayojaka bhaava:, whereas, brahmaavidhyaa- karma-samucchayam is not possible.

- वयं सर्वत्र एव न प्रत्याचक्ष्महे - We do not reject, in all circumstances
- ज्ञान कर्मणोः समुच्चयं - the combination between jnaanam and karmaa.
- यत्र - In those instances,
- ज्ञान कर्मणयोः प्रयोज्यप्रयोजकभावः (अस्ति) - where supporter- supported relationship between jnaanam and karmaa exists,

- तत्र निवारयितुम् अस्मत् पित्रापि न शक्यते - there, even our father cannot reject the combination.

The prayojya prayojaka bhaava: - the supporter-supported relationship – is there in all lokika saasthra-s and in the Veda poorva bhaagaa. The jeeva bhaava: is also maintained by the Veda poorva bhaaghaa. Visishtaadvaitam and dvaitam also maintain the jeeva bhaava: permanently - even in Vaikuntaa, believed to be the abode of Vishnu. "Mokshaa", according to Visishtaadvaitam and dviatham, is, 'proximate service to the Lord, in Vaikuntaa'. In the Advaitin's vision, visishtaadhvaitham and dvaitham are also being in karma yogaa.

33. Chapter I, Verse 60 to 63 (02-12-2006)

In these verses, beginning from verse 54 to verse 79, Sureswaraachaaryaa is negating the jnaana karma samucchaya vaadhaa. He points out, that, in this context, the word jnaanam refers to the most unique jeevaathma-paramaathma-aiykya-jnaanam; and, that, this knowledge negates ignorance and all ignorance-based misconceptions. The misconceptions include the plurality in the form of karthaa (subject), karmaa (object) and karanam (instrument). This very plurality, required for performance of karmaa, is negated by jnaanam. Naturally, the plurality-negating knowledge can never co-exist with plurality, just as darkness cannot co-exist with light.

If, in the very rise of knowledge, duality is gone, along with that, karmaa is also gone, since karmaa requires duality – kaarakam. This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "The presence of jnaanam means the absence of duality and, therefore, the absence of karmaa. Jnaanam and karmaa cannot go together. That is the reason that a jnaani does not look at karmaa favourably, whether the karmaa is loukikaa or vaidhikaa. The Aachaaryaa used the expression "na veekashathay api", in verse 58.

In the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 60 (currently being discussed), Sureswaraachaaryaa talks of two types of knowledge:

- (1) The first type is the karmaa-friendly knowledge or karmaa-promoting knowledge. All material sciences inspire one to engage in action, for the improvement and material prosperity of one's family and one's society. The Veda Poorva Bhaaghaa also inspires karmaa, talking about various lokaa-s, various rituals etc. Such karmaa-promoting knowledge, derived from the material sciences and the Veda Poorva Bhaghaa, retains the performer's individuality and sense of duality, the two basic requirements for karmaa. The Aachaaryaa concedes that this type of knowledge and karmaa can happily jell. But, according to Vedhaanthaa, all such knowledge is bhraanthic jnaanam or ayathartha jnaanam – 'erroneous knowledge'.
- (2) The other type of knowledge is the paraa vidhyaa or yathartha jnaanam - the jeevaathma-pramaathma-aiykya-jnaanam, which knowledge is not a qualification for karmaa; nor can it use karmaa.

The first type of knowledge, according to the Aachaaryaa, has 'prayojya-prayojaka-bhaava.' - 'supporter-supported relationship'. The aparaa vidhyaa is the 'supporter' of action and karmaa is 'supported' by the aparaa vidhyaa.

The Aachaaryaa starts this sambhandha gadhyam, with the statement, “jnaanakarmano: samucchayam vayam sarvathra eva na prathyaachakshmahe”, meaning “We do not negate the combination of jnaanam and karmaa, in all situations or in every situation”.

Then, where does he accept samucchayam? The Aachaaryaa says: “yathra prayojya prayojaka bhaava: (asthi), thathra jnaana karmano: (samucchayam) nivaarayithum asmath pithraapi na sakyathe” – “where mutual supporter-supported relationship between jnaanam and karmaa exists, in such situations, even our father is not capable to negate the combination of jnaanam and karmaa”.

Any knowledge which preserves one’s individuality (ahamkaara:) and all-round duality (dvaita prapancha:) will come under this definition.

To recap the ‘distinction’ between the two types of ‘knowledge’:

1. In whichever knowledge the triangle of jeevaa-jagath-Isvara is maintained, is one type of knowledge, though it is considered bhraanthic jnaanam or ayathaartha jnaanam.
2. In whichever knowledge, the above triangular format is replaced by the binary format of aathmaa and anaathmaa, is the second type of knowledge – the yathaartha jnaanam.

The first type of knowledge, preserving the jeeva-jagath-Isvara triad, goes with karmaa. In the first (karma yogaa) stage, pujaa-s and karmaa-s can be pursued vigorously. Even a study of Vedhaanthee, at this stage, is part of the triangle of jeeva-jagath-Isvara, though the study is intended to shift the perspective from the triangular format to the binary format of aathmaa and anaathmaa.

The second stage, Jnaana yoga, is for “shifting the individual from the triangular format to the binary format”.

- तत्र विभागप्रदर्शनाय - To show the difference between the karmaa-friendly and the karmaa-negating types of knowledge,
- उदाहरणं प्रदर्शयते - I shall give an example.

Verse 60 – Chapter I :

स्थाणुं चोरधियालाय भीतो यद्वत्पलायते ।

बुद्ध्यादिभिस्तथात्मानं भ्रान्तोऽध्यारोप्य चेष्टते ॥ ६० ॥

Just as a man taking a post for a robber, runs away in fright, similarly a man, wrongly identifying the Self with the intellect etc., engages in action.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives a very significant and powerful example, to understand this Vedic teaching clearly:

Let us imagine that a person has mistaken a post for a robber, because of darkness. He has got chora dharsanam. Other people know this as an erroneous knowledge; but, for the particular individual, the chora dharsanam, a false knowledge, is jnaanam. And, this 'jnaanam' will promote a 'karmaa' - 'running away'. Therefore, chora dharsana jnaanam and palaayana karmaa (the action of 'running away') are mutually promoter-promoted. This is also a form of jnaana-karma-samucchaya: |

Sureswaraachaarya gives this example and says that all 'un-enlightened' people have this chora-dharsana-roopa jnaanam and therefore, indulge in karmaa.

- यद्धत् - Just as
- स्थाणुं चोरधिया आलय - taking a post for a robber, 'sthaanu:' – post ; 'chora:' - robber ; 'dhiyaa' – in the mind ; 'aalaaya' – taking.
- भीतः पालयते - a frightened man runs away,
- भ्रान्तः - the deluded man

Adi Sankara calls the whole world 'Bhraanthaalaya:' - location of delusions.

- बुद्ध्याधिभिः आत्मानं अध्यारोप्य - falsely superimposing the Self on the sareerathrayam / considering the sareerathrayam as the real Self, 'buddhyaadhibhi:' – on the intellect etc. (indicates sareerathrayam); 'aathmanam' – the Self ; 'adhyaaropya' - falsely placing / falsely superimposing.
- चेष्टते - acts / performs (accordingly).

Such a person resorts to both loukika karmaa and vaidhika karmaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 61 :

एवं यत्रयत्र जानकर्मणोः प्रयोज्यप्रयोजकभावस्तत्र सर्वत्रायं न्यायः । यत्र तु न समकालं नापि क्रमेणोपपद्यते समुच्चयः स विषय उच्यते ।

Thus, wherever knowledge and action are related as cause and effect, this principle applies. The principle involved in cases where the two cannot be combined either simultaneously or in succession, is brought out, in the verse.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "In this particular case, chora dharsana jnaanam and palaayana karmaa can and do mutually support. Similarly, where individuality and dvaitha dharsanam are there, varieties of karmaa are also there".

- एवं यत्र यत्र ज्ञानकर्मणोः प्रयोज्यप्रयोजकभावः (अस्ति) - Thus, wherever knowledge and action are related as 'supporter' and 'supported'

'jnaanam', in this statement, is 'aparaa vidhyaa', which, according to Vedhaanthaa, is 'bhraanthijnaanam'. Adi Sankara considers 'aparaavidhyaa' as 'avidhyaa'.

- तत्र सर्वत्र - in all those cases,
- अयं न्यायः - this principle is applicable (i.e. samucchaya: sambhavathi).
- यत्र तु - On the other hand, where
- समुच्चयः - the combination (of jnaanam and karmaa)
- न उपपद्यते - is not possible,
- समकालं - (either) simultaneously
- न अपि क्रमेण - or sequentially,
- स विषयः उच्यते - I shall talk about that.

By the term 'sequentially', the Aachaaryaa refers to 'karmaa following aathma jnaanam', which sequence, he holds, is not possible. The sequence of aathma jnaanam following karmaa is possible and, in fact, is the prescribed path.

"I have talked about karmaa-friendly knowledge; now, I will talk about karmaa-negating knowledge" says the Aachaaryaa.

Verse 61 – Chapter I :

स्थाणोः सतत्त्वविज्ञानं यथा नाङ्गं पलायने ।

आत्मनस्तत्त्वविज्ञानं तद्वन्नाङ्गं क्रियाविधौ ॥ ६१ ॥

Just as the right understanding of the post as such (as a post) , cannot incite the action of 'running away', so also, the understanding of the Self, in its real nature, cannot be instrumental to any action.

The example given in the previous verse is extended further by the Aachaaryaa.

The erroneous chora dharsanam resulted in 'running away'. Samucchayaa between 'knowledge' (though erroneous) and 'action', was possible. Now, let us assume that the truth is realized by the individual, that, there is no robber, but, only a post. Realization of this truth will not result in the action of 'running away'.

- यथा स्थाणोः सतत्त्व विज्ञानं - Just as the realization of the true nature of the post yathaa – just as; sthaano: - of the post ; sathathvam – real nature; vijnaanam – knowledge / realization.

- पलायने न अङ्गं (भवति) - cannot be a supporter of the action of 'running away',
- तद्वत् - in a similar manner,
- आत्मनः तत्त्व विज्ञानं - the true 'knowledge' of the Self (that 'I' am not viswaa, thyjasaa or praagnyaa – but, 'I' am the thureeyaa),
- अङ्गं न (भवति) - cannot be a supporter
- क्रियाविधौ - in performing karmaa.

'Knowledge of the post', the true knowledge, cannot be connected with 'palaayana karmaa'; 'aathma jnaanam' cannot be connected with any karmaa. 'Individuality' cannot co-exist with naishkarmya siddhi jnaanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 62 :

यस्मात् गुणस्य एतद् स्वाभाव्यम् ।

For what is instrumental, always, has this nature.

Sureswaraachaaryaa further elaborates on the same topic. He says "if two things should function together as 'main and support' – 'anghee and angam' - they have to fulfill a condition. The 'supported' one should have a nature similar to the nature of the 'supporting' one. Both should have similar features. One should follow the other in all characteristics. Bhraanthic jnaanam and karmaa are both born of avidhyaa, and, therefore, they can get on well with each other.

- यस्मात् - Because
- एतद् स्वाभाव्यम् - the following is the nature
- गुणस्य - of the supporting / favouring factor.

What is that nature? The Aachaaryaa answers in the verse that follows.

Chapter I: Verse 62 –

यद्वि यस्यानुरोधेन स्वभावमनुवर्तते ।

तत्तस्य गुणभूतं स्यान्न प्रधानाद् गुणो यतः ॥ ६२ ॥

That which conforms in nature to another can be instrumental to it and not that which destroys that principle factor itself.

Sureswaraachaarya defines the nature briefly: "An 'assisting' factor should have the same nature of the 'assisted' factor.

- यद् यस्य अनुरोधेन स्वभावं अनुवर्तते - That factor which conforms in nature to another factor yadh – that factor; yasya – of another factor ; anurodhena – in conformity with; svabhaavam anuvarthathey - follows the nature.

- तद् तस्य गुणभूतं स्यात् - that (the first factor) can become the supporting factor to the other (the second) factor;

Thadh - that (meaning the 'first factor', in this context); thasya – of that (meaning the 'second factor', in this context); gunabhootham – supporting; syaath- becomes.

In the example of the false perception of the post as a robber, the paalayana karmaa (action of running away) is the primary factor. The supporting factor is the bhraanthic jnaanam (false perception) of chora dharsanam (perceiving the post as a robber). In the same manner, any ritual can be supported only by the false jnaanam of 'duality'.

- प्रधान अद्गुणः (गुणभूतं) न (स्यात्) - (But) that factor which is the very destroyer of the principal factor itself, cannot become the supporting factor.

'Pradhaanam atthi' ithi 'pradhaana adh'. 'Pradhaanam', in this context, indicates the 'main factor'. 'atthi' means 'destroys'; 'that which destroys the main factor' is 'pradhaana adh'.

In the example, the realization that 'what is perceived is not a robber, but, only a post', destroys the action of 'running away'. Likewise, Aathma jnaanam consisting of the realizations "I do not have varnaa and aasramaa. I do not have karthruthvam and bokthruthvam" etc., destroys karmaa. How can this 'pradhaana adh jnaanam', the 'knowledge' that destroys the main factor 'karmaa', support vaidhika karmaa, since it is only logical that the supporting factor should not be the destroyer of the supported factor?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 63 and 64 :
यस्मात् ।

This is so, because:

More elaborations follow in the next two verses.

Chapter I: Verse 63 -
कर्मप्रकारणाकांक्षि जानं कर्मगुणो भवेत् ।

यद्दि प्रकरेण यस्य तत्तदङ्गं प्रचक्षते ॥ ६३ ॥

The knowledge that belongs to the context of action does naturally serve it as a subsidiary. What belongs to the context of anything, does become subsidiary to it.

Even though this teaching seems clear and simple, Sureswaraachaaryaa continues to reinforce the view, since this seemingly simple fact has not been understood by the poorvameemaamsakaa-s, who have studied both the Veda poorva and Veda antha portions and yet have formulated the jnaana-karma-samucchaya-vaadhaa, a powerful philosophy, in the days of Adi Sankara. The meemaamsakaa-s claim that Vedhaantha jnaanam also is only meant to improve the karthaa. They claim vehemently, that, after Vedhaantha jnaanam, the karthaa is better qualified to do karmaa; and, therefore, karmaa can be done better, after acquiring Vedhaantha jnaanam. In support, they quote the Chaandoghya Upanishad statement “yadheva vidhyayaa karothi sraddhayaa upanishadhaa thadeva veeryathara: bhavath!”.

Sureswaraachaaryaa does not agree. His view is: “Veda poorva bhaaghaa can improve the ‘performer’. That is understandable. But, as for Veda antha jnaanam, the very ‘performer’ is negated by that jnaanam. How, then, can that jnaanam be a means of improving the performer? Such a perspective is absurd”.

- कर्म प्रकरण आकांक्षि जानं - All the knowledge required for the karma kaandaa,
- कर्मगुणः भवेत् - is the supporter / promoter of karmaa.

‘karma prakaraanam’ – that which spells out the manner / mode / fashion of karmaa, which means ‘Veda poorva bhaaghaa or karma kaandaa; aakaankshi – required.

- यद्दि यस्य प्रकरणे (वर्तते) - Whichever knowledge exists in whichever context,
- तद् तदङ्गं प्रचक्षते - that knowledge can be used as an angam in that context.

What is implied by this (rather devious) statement, is, that, karma kaanda jnaanam, acquired by the study of the karma kaandaa and therefore, existing in karma kaandaa, can be used as an angam of karmaa.

But, Veda anathaa has nothing to do with rituals; and, veda antha jnaanam / jnaana kaanda jnaanam cannot be used as angam for karmaa. Jnaanam and karmaa cannot have samucchayam.

Exactly like a dream losing its importance, after the ‘dreamer’ wakes up, the entire world, duality and karmaa lose their importance, after ‘knowledge’.

34. Chapter I, Verse 63 to 67 (09-12-2006)

In these verses, (verse 54 to verse 79), Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the jnaana karma samucchaya vaadham – all three of them – karma pradhaana, jnaana pradhaana and sama pradhaana. He asserts that none of these three is possible. But, in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 60, the Aachaaryaa carefully makes a clarification. When he uses the word 'jnaanam' in this context, he means the knowledge "aham brahma asmi", which jnaanam can never go with karmaa. All other types of jnaanam are favorable to and friendly with karmaa, and therefore, can go with karmaa. It is the karthruthvam-eliminating aathma jnaanam, which is inimical to karmaa and therefore, that jnaanam and karmaa cannot go together.

Karmaa is firmly founded on the belief "I am karthaa – a doer; my actions in the appropriate manner will improve me". Therefore, when the very karthruthvam is destroyed because of aathma jnaanam, karmaa naturally ceases.

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out, that, in the Veda poorva bhaaghaa, many rituals are talked about, giving information on the manner of performance of the rituals, their efficacy etc. Information on the various devathaa-s, lokaa-s etc. is also given. This 'jnaanam', derived from the Veda poorva bhaaghaa can be utilized for karmaa; in fact, that 'jnaanam' is essential for performance of yagnyaa-s and other vaidhika karmaani in the appropriate manners. This is what the Aachaaryaa indicates, in verse 63, as "karma prakaarana aakaamkshi jnaanam" – "the knowledge that is required / necessary for karmaa". The word 'aakaamkshi' means 'necessary' / 'required'. This type of knowledge, therefore, can be said to be friendly to karmaa. Naturally, karma samucchayam with this type of jnaanam is possible.

This knowledge which is required for efficient performance of karmaa is called karma anga bhootha jnaanam or angam of karmaa. The word angam, in this context, means 'support / booster / promoter / catalyst'. The general rule, therefore, is, "yasya karmana: prakaraṇe yadh jnaanam varthathe, thadh jnaanam thasya karmana: angam bhavathi" – "In the context of whichever karmaa, whichever supportive knowledge is imparted, that supportive knowledge becomes angam of that karmaa". This type of jnaanam and karmaa will mutually support each other. But, Veda antha jnaanam does not come under karma prakaaranam / karma kaandaa. It destroys karthruthvam itself, which karthruthvam is the very basis of karmaa.

Chapter I: Verse 64 -
स्वरूपलाभमात्रेण यत्त्वविध्यां निहन्ति न : ।

न तदङ्गम् प्रधानं वा ज्ञानं स्यात्कर्मणः क्वचित् ॥ ६४ ॥

Knowledge, which, by merely emerging into being, removes ignorance, does not combine with action either as an accessory or as an equal partner.

- यद् (ज्ञानं) - Whichever knowledge
- नः अविद्यां निहन्ति - destroys our ignorance
- स्वरूप लाभ मात्रेण - by merely rising in our (the seekers') minds,
- तद् ज्ञानं - that karthruthva-destroying knowledge
- कर्मणः अङ्गं न (भवति) - cannot be a subsidiary accessory to karmaa
- प्रधानं वा (न भवति) - nor can it be a main factor for karmaa,
- क्वचित् - under any circumstances.

'Na:' – ours; 'nihanthi' – destroys; 'avidhya', in this context, is to be interpreted as 'karthruthvam'.

"Yadh jnaanam avidhyaam nihanthi" would, therefore, mean "yadh jnaanam karthruthvam nihanthi" - "whichever knowledge destroys karthruthvam".

Aathma jnaanam destroys the ignorance of the fact "I am akarthaa". Once the firm knowledge "I am akarthaa" arises, it has to obviously destroy the notion "I am karthaa" i.e. 'karthruthvam' is destroyed.

Since karthruthvam is destroyed, jnaanam destroys karmaa also. Thus, Vedhaanthic knowledge is of a caliber, totally different from the karmaa-boosting knowledge.

In the second line of the verse, Sureswaraacharya asserts "thadh (jnaanam) karmana: angam pradhaanam vaa na syaath" – "(aathma) jnaanam cannot join karmaa, either as a leader or a follower" and follows it up, with the term "kvachith", meaning "under any circumstance".

By the usage of the term 'angam pradhaanam vaa', the Aacharya negates two types of samucchayam, viz., the karma pradhaana samucchayam and the jnaana pradhaana samucchayam. The third type, 'sama samucchaya vaadhaa' was already negated in verses 55 and 56.

Thus, "sarva vidha samucchaya: na bhavathi" is the Aacharya's firm stand.

"Jnaanam, by itself, can give liberation. Let karmaa come, sweep away the mental impurities and quit. Thereafter, it has no role to play. Jnaanam, singlehandedly, can achieve liberation for us" is Sureswaraacharya's gantaagosa: - loud proclamation.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 65 :
समुच्चयपक्षवादिनाप्यवश्यमेतदभ्युपगन्तव्यम् । यस्मात् ।

This has to necessarily be admitted by even the advocates of the combination of action and knowledge, because of the reason:

- समुच्चय पक्ष वादिना अपि - Even by the samucchaya vaadhi
- एतद् - what I have said
- अभ्युपगन्तव्यम् - has to be accepted,
- अवश्यं - necessarily.
- यस्मात् - This is because of the reason given in the verse.

The reason is given in the verse that follows.

Chapter I:Verse 65 –
अज्ञानमनिराकुर्वन्ज्ञानमेव न सिध्यति ।
विपन्नकारकग्रामं ज्ञानं कर्म न ढौकते ॥ ६५ ॥

Knowledge does not arise at all, without displacing ignorance; and, action does not even touch the knowledge, which annihilates all the factors involved in action, for it itself stands annihilated.

- ज्ञानं न सिध्यति - Jnaanam cannot arise
- अज्ञानं अनिराकुर्वन् - without displacing ajnaanam.

This is step 1, in the arguments presented by the Aachaaryaa.

“Darkness will have to go away, when light comes. Likewise, when jnaanam rises in the mind, ajnaanam has to go away. It cannot be present anywhere around”.

Step 2: Ajnaanam is the sustaining principle of kaaraka dvaitham.

(Karakam is a technical word, indicating the various accessories required for karmaa, including the subject (karthaa). The object, location, instrument (karanam) etc., are some other kaarakam-s).

Karmaa needs kaarakam. Ajnaanam is the support for kaarakam.

Step 3: Jnaanam destroys ajnaanam, therefore, kaarakam and therefore, kriyaa.

- विपन्न कारकग्रामं ज्ञानं - The knowledge which destroys the group of accessories to karmaa

Vipanna - destroyed / eliminated; graamam – group ; karaka graamam – group of accessories to karmaa.

'Karthaa' is the first kaarakam. The very performer of karmaa is deceased, once jnaanam arrives. Such a vipanna kaaraka jnaanam (knowledge that destroys all the kaaraka-s, starting with the karthaa) does not even go near karmaa.

- कर्मा न ढौकते - does not even go anywhere near karmaa. (‘doukathey’- ‘gacchathl’).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 66 :
इदं चापरं कारणं ज्ञानकर्मणोः समुच्चयनिबर्हि ।

Following is another reason for rejecting the combination of action and knowledge.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: “If you are not convinced, I will give another reason for negating samucchayam”.

- इदं च - The following (is)
- अपरं कारणं - another reason
- ज्ञान कर्मणोः समुच्चयनिबर्हि - that will destroy (negate) the jnaana- karma-samucchaya vaadham.

'nibarhi' means 'destroyer'.

Chapter I: Verse 66 –
हेतुस्वरूपकार्याणि प्रकाशतमसोरिव ।

विरोधीनि ततो नास्ति साङ्गत्यं जानकर्मणोः ॥ ६६ ॥

When we examine the source, nature and effect of knowledge, we find that they are all opposed to the source, nature and effect of action; and, therefore, action and knowledge cannot be joined together, as light and darkness cannot be.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa says: “If you study the main features of jnaanam and those of karmaa, you can clearly see that they are totally incompatible. Between incompatible members, association is not possible”.

How does one prove the incompatibility or non-conformity between jnaanam and karmaa? The answer is: “By studying the hethu (cause), svaroopam (nature) and kaaryam (consequence or effect) of jnaanam and also those of karmaa. One will find they are diagonally opposite”.

- हेतु स्वरूप कार्याणि - The cause, nature and effect
- जान कर्मणोः - of jnaanam and karmaa

- विरोधीनि - are totally different.
- ततः - This being so
- (ज्ञान कर्मणोः) साङ्गत्यं - co-existence between jnaanam and karmaa,
- नास्ति - is not there,
- प्रकाश तमसोः इव - similar to (the impossibility of co-existence between) light and darkness.

In karma yogaa, with the triangular format of jeeva-jagath-Isvara, helplessness is invoked; jeevaa needs the support of Isvara. On the other hand, in the binary format of jnaana yogaa, "I am the supporter of the whole universe". The notion "I am a lowly jeevaa" is diametrically opposite to the conviction "I am the powerful aathmaa".

To analyze the hethu (cause) first: "Enquiry and study of vedaantha pramaana vaakyam" (vichaara bhaava :) is the hethu for jnaanam. Non-enquiry / non-study of the Vedhaanthea (vichaara abhaava;) sustains the notion of karthruthvam and is, therefore, the hethu for karmaa.

As for svaroopam (nature), jnaanam is prakaasaathmaka roopam and vidhyaa roopam, while karmaa is aprakaasakam and avidhyaathmakam. Karmaa is called aprakaasakam or 'dark', because, in karmaa, "I am in darkness, with respect to who I really am". The entire karmaa is functioning in the semi-darkness of adhyasaa. Adi Sankara points out in his Adhyaasa Bhaashyam, that, all activities result from erroneous notions with respect to oneself and with respect to the world. Karmaa requires the 'darkness' of adhyasaa, while jnaanam is 'brightness' incarnate. Thus, the nature of jnaanam and the nature of karmaa are diametrically opposite to each other. Expressed in Sanskrit: "svaroopathaa prakaasa aprakaasa roopena virodhee".

What about the third factor, kaaryam or 'consequence' ? For karmaa, the result may be termed 'punya paapa vardhaka roopa palam' and for jnaanam, as 'punya paapa naasaka roopa palam'. In other words, karmaa increases punyam and paapam, while jnaanam destroys punyam and paapam. Obviously therefore, by analysis of the kaaryam also, jnaanam and karmaa are not compatible.

"Thatha: jnaanakaramano: saangathyam naasthi" - "Therefore, no samucchayam between jnaanam and karmaa is possible" - concludes the Aachaaryaa.

With this verse, the first stage of jnaana-karma-samucchaya-vaadha niraasa: (negation of the view of jnaana-karma-samucchayam) is complete. The Aachaaryaa enters into deeper, more subtle and more technical discussions from the next verse, for which, therefore, he gives a long introduction.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 67 :

एवमुपसंहृते केचित् स्वसम्प्रदाय बल आवष्टम्भात् आहुः यद् एतद् वेदान्तवाक्यात् अहं ब्रह्मेति विज्ञानं समुत्पद्यते तद् नैव स्वोत्पत्तिमात्रेण अज्ञानं निरस्यति ।

After concluding thus, we may notice two other theories. Some, drawing strength from their own tradition, maintain that the knowledge of the form "I am Brahman", which arises from the sentences of Vedhaanthaa, does not dispel ignorance, by its mere coming into being.

Sureswaraacharya's contentions should be properly understood and remembered:

- (1) The Aachaaryaa wants to emphasize, that, "clear understanding of Vedhaanthic teachings gives liberation". The word 'clear' has two parts. "Clear understanding of the mahaa vaakyaa-s" is one part. 'Clear understanding of the fact that the 'clear understanding' is enough for liberation' is the second part. In other words, the second part is the conviction that "nothing else other than 'clear understanding of the mahaa vaakyaa-s' is required for liberation".
- (2) This two-fold 'clear understanding' is gained from sravanam alone. By sravanam is meant "a consistent, systematic study of the scriptures under a competent guru, for a length of time". Sravanam is the primary saadhanaa for liberation.
- (3) All saadhanaa-s, other than sravanam, are only subsidiary saadhanaa-s, which help the seeker in the practice of the primary saadhanaa; i.e., they are all anga saadhanaa-s. Sravanam is primary, while japaa, poojaa, paraayanaa etc. are all only supportive. Meditation should help a person to come to sravanam. Sureswaraacharya holds that even nidhidhyaasanam is only an angam, which has to lead a student to more sravanam. The culmination of all saadhanaa-s is the sravana saadhanam.

In short, all saadhanaa-s lead to sravana saadhanam, which leads to the "two-fold clear understanding" (explained earlier), which, in turn, leads to liberation.

These are what Sureswaraacharya wants to establish, from now on. In this approach, he follows the 'thathvam asi prakaranam' of Upadesa Saahasri.

A poorva pakshin (a new type, different from the samucchaya vaadhi) raises objections to this Aachaaryaa's view, viz., "Clear understanding is enough for liberation. Nothing else is needed". The poorva pakshin argues "Clear understanding alone is not enough. After clear understanding, meditation is required, which alone will lead to liberation".

The poorva pakshin is countered by the Aachaaryaa with the questions: "But, why? What is the deficiency in 'clear understanding'? What is the role of 'meditation'? How does it help 'clear understanding' in achieving liberation?"

At this stage, the Aachaaryaa brings in two types of poorva pakshin-s, who reply to these questions.

The first type says: "Clear understanding' is not enough to destroy ignorance totally. It can only partly destroy ignorance. Only a sustained 'meditation', following the 'clear understanding' can help destroy ignorance totally and lead to liberation".

This is the view that is held by a particular group of advaitin-s, lead by Brahmadhattaa, also a great scholar.

35. Chapter I, Verse 67 (16-12-2006)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is in the process of refuting jnaana karma samucchaya vaadha:

His first stage of refutation, (in which he established that jnaanam and karmaa can never be combined together, either in the form of jnaana pradhaanaa or in the form of karma pradhaanaa or in the form of sama pradhaanaa) has been completed. Now, the Aachaaryaa is entering the next stage of the refutation process, a very important and technical part of the discussions; and, in that process, he is introducing two other types of poorva pakshin-s.

What is the siddhaantham, that, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to convey?

He wants to establish: "Clear understanding of the Vedhaanthic teachings gives liberation. The 'clear understanding' has two components. The first component is 'clear understanding of the mahaa vaakyaa-s'. The second and equally or even more important component is 'clear understanding of the fact, that, nothing else other than the 'clear understanding of the mahaa vaakyaa-s' is required for liberation'. This two-fold clear understanding gives liberation".

The two poorva pakshin-s, introduced by Sureswaraachaaryaa here, are attacking the second part of the Aachaaryaa's contention. They argue: "'Clear understanding' of the mahaa vaakyam alone is not sufficient for liberation. Long meditation has to follow the 'clear understanding' to achieve liberation". 'Brahma vaadhina:' is the term used to refer to this type of poorva pakshin-s, whose claim is, that, ultimately, it is meditation which leads to liberation. Sureswaraachaarya strongly refutes this importance given to meditation and wants to stress that it is Vedhaantah Sravanam or Vedhaantah Vichaaraa, which is the final stage of saadhanaa-s for liberation.

The first type of poorva pakshin says: "Mere clear understanding is not enough. It cannot destroy ignorance. The 'clear understanding' has to be 'repeated' in the mind, which repetition, we may term as jnaana abhyaasa: or jnaana bhaavanaa. This meditation has to be practiced for a length of time, because of which, the meditation gives a cumulative power or strength to the 'knowledge'. Only reinforced by this bhaavana samskaara cumulative force, jnaanaa gets the power to destroy ignorance and give liberation. Only under such conditions, mokshaa can be attained". He also contends, that, this jnaana abhyaasaa also will be effective, only when nithya naimitthika karmaa-s are continued with. In effect, his contention is "The seeker might have achieved jnaanam through Vedhaantha sravanam. But, to make the jnaanam effective, he should practice meditation and also carry on with diligent performance of nithya naimitthika karmaani. This karma sahitha jnaana abhyaasa:

(meditation, accompanied by nithya naimitthika karmaani) will boost the seeker's 'jnaanam' and this boosted 'jnaanam' only, will give liberation".

Reverting to the text

(sambhandha gadhyam to verse 67):

- एवं उपसंहृते - As I conclude thus,
- केचित् - a group of poorva pakshin-s,

According to some commentators, Sureswaraachaaryaa, is, here, referring to Brahmadhattha, another great Advaita aachaaryaa.

- स्व संप्रदाय बल अवष्टम्भात् - supported by the strength of their own tradition, 'avashtambha:' - support / prop.
- आहुः - claim (that)
- यद् विज्ञानं एतद् 'अहम् ब्रह्म अस्मि' इति वेदान्त वाक्यात् समुत्पद्यते - which knowledge rises from the mahaa vaakyam "aham brahma asmi",
- तद् - that knowledge,
- स्व उत्पत्ति मात्रेण एव - by its mere coming into being / by mere rise in the mind
- अज्ञानं न निरस्यति - does not destroy ignorance.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 67 (Contd.):

किं तर्हि । अहन्यहनि द्वाधीयसा कालेन उपासीनस्य सतो भावनोपचयात् निश्शेषं अज्ञानं अपगच्छति "देवो भूत्वा देवानप्येति" इति श्रुतेः।

What then? One who meditates on this truth every day and for a long time, develops inward contemplative force, by which force, ignorance, in its entirety, is removed. The sruthi says "becoming a god, he attains the gods" (Brahdhaaranyaka Upanishad – IV.i.2).

- किं तर्हि - What then? (If 'understanding' does not clear ignorance, what does?)
- उपासीनस्य सतः - For the virtuous man who practices the "aham brahma asmi" meditation,
- अहनि अहनि - day after day,
- द्वाधीयसा कालेन - over a long time,
- भावना उपचयात् - because of the cumulative strength of meditation,
- अज्ञानं अपगच्छति - ignorance goes away
- निश्शेषं - totally (without any left-over),

The word 'bhaavanaa' has two meanings (1) practice of meditation and (2) the force resulting from the meditation.

What is the pramaanam for this? According to the poorva pakshin, there are Vedic injunctions for the regular upaasanaa "aham brahma asmi".

The poorva pakshin quotes from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad "Devo bhoothvaa devaan apyethi" (B.U. IV. i .2). In this portion of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Devathaa Upaasanaa is talked about, along with the results of the Devathaa Upaasanaa. For instance, if an individual is an upaasaka of Hiranyagarbhaa, he has to, first, understand the glory of Hiranyagarbhaa. Then, he has to practice 'aiykya bhaavam' ('aham ithi bhaavanaa') with Hiranyagarbhaa.

In the 3rd Dhyaana Sloka of the Lalitha Sahasra Naamam, the devotee meditates: "Aham ithi eva bhaavaye bhavaaneem" – "I think of Devi Bhavaani as the Supreme I-sense".

Yet another instance, is the practice of referring to Ayappa Bakthaa-s, as Ayyappanmaar-s.

Through such constant practice of aiykya bhaavam, the upaasaka gradually acquires the traits of the upaasya Devathaa and ultimately, after death, 'becomes' the upaasya Devathaa.

The poorva pakshin claims: "The constant meditation 'aham brahma asmi' follows the same course. The meditation on the mahaa vaakyam, will gradually give the seeker the traits of Brahman and after death, the seeker 'merges' with Brahman". In other words, the prammaana vaakyam for Devathaa Upaasanaa, found in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, is extended by the poorva pakshin, to the 'aspirant for mokshaad / the 'mumukshu' also.

- "देवि भूत्वा देवानप्येति" इति श्रुतेः - based on the sruthi vaakyam "becoming a god, he attains gods".

Thus far are the views of the first type of poorva pakshin, introduced by Sureswaraachaaryaa. The second type of poorva pakshin follows.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 67 (Contd.):

अपरे तु ब्रूवते वेदान्तवाक्यजनितं अहम् ब्रह्मेति विज्ञानं संसर्गात्मकत्वात् आत्मवस्तु याथात्म्य अवगाह्येव न भवति ।

Others, again, hold that the knowledge of the form 'I am Brahman' signifies a complex whole of associate parts, and, therefore, does not constitute a correct apprehension of the Self at all.

The second poorva pakshin presents a technical argument. He says:

"You are gaining Brahmajnaanam by the analysis of a mahaa vaakyam; in other words, brahma jnaanam is a vaakya janya jnaanam. Every vaakya janya jnaanam (i.e. every knowledge gained from vaakya vicharaa) has got a particular nature, that you have to understand. And, to understand that knowledge, you should first know what a vaakyam itself is. Let me analyze: What is a sentence? A vaakyam consists of several words connected syntactically; every word in the sentence is connected with the other words in the sentence by propositions. If the words are not connected, the resulting disjointed group of words, cannot be a sentence and cannot convey a message. The individual words have to be connected syntactically, to form a meaningful sentence - one word being the subject, another word being an object, a third word being the location, the fourth word being the instrument and so on. In short, a sentence is a string of words connected properly.

"Every word, in a sentence, has got a meaning i.e. every padham reveals the padha artha: | When padham-s are connected, the pada arthaa-s are also connected. Connection between the padhaa-s reveal the connection between the padha arthaa-s.

"For example, in the sentence 'paathre jalam asthi', the word 'jalam' is in nominative case and the word 'paathram' is in locative case. The words 'paathram' and 'jalam' are connected. The connection between the words reveal the connection between their meanings. The padha sambhandha: reveals the padha artha sambhandha:, the aadhaara-aadheya sambhandha: |

"And, that means, every padha arthaa that we understand from the sentence, is not an isolated padha arthaa; but, is connected with other padha arthaa-s. In other words, whatever padha arthaa you understand through a sentence, is a sambhaddha padha arthaa, connected with other padha arthaa-s in the sentence. The technical word used in grammar, for this understanding, is 'samsrushta padha artha jnaanam'. Through a sentence, we come to know about things which are all connected with other things referred to, in the sentence. Therefore, every sentence gives only 'samsrushta padha artha jnaanam'. To repeat, by way of clarification: "samsrushta padha artha jnaanam" means "knowledge of various objects which are connected with various other objects". The other expressions used for this jnaanam are (1) 'samsargaathmaka jnaanam', meaning 'relational knowledge' and (2) 'vaakyartha jnaanam', meaning 'sentential knowledge' or 'book knowledge' ".

The poorva pakshin contends: "When you know Brahman from a mahaa vaakyam, Brahman is also a padha artha: - the meaning of the word occurring in a sentence. This Brahman, since it is learnt from a vaakyam, has to be samsrushta padha arthaa only; in other words, through the mahaa vaakyam, you understand a Brahman, which is associated with other padha arthaa-s revealed in the vaakyam – whatever other objects mentioned in the sentence be. This means that the Brahman revealed from a mahaa vaakyam, is samsrushta padhaartha only.

“According to Vedhaantha, ‘samsrushta Brahma jnaanam’ (‘knowledge of a Brahman connected with objects’) cannot give liberation. Asamsrushta Brahma Jnaanam (the knowledge of that Brahman, which is asangham Brahman – not connected with any other padhaartha) alone can give liberation. The mahaa vaakyartha Brahma Jnaanam, being only samsrushta Brahma Jnaanam and not asamsrushta Brahma Jnaanam, cannot give liberation.

“You require sajaatheeya vijaatheeya svagathe bedha rahitha kevala asangha Brahma vijnaanam, for liberation; and, any amount of mahaa vaakya sravanam cannot give this type of knowledge.”

“Hence” the poorva pakshin continues “your saadhanaa is not complete with vicharaa ; i.e. vicharaa is not the culmination of saadhanaa-s. You should do another saadhanaa for converting samsrushta Brahma jnaanam into asamsrushta Brahma jnaanam. Samsrushta Brahma jnaanam is mere jnaanam, while asamsrushta Brahma jnaanam is saakshaathkaara: | The former is only ‘mere knowledge’; only the latter is ‘realization’ or ‘enlightenment’. By Vaakya vicharaa, you get only ‘knowledge’, variously called as ‘relational knowledge’, ‘book knowledge’, ‘sentential knowledge’ etc., and certainly not ‘enlightenment’. A conversion process is essential; and, that conversion process is ‘meditation’, termed Bhavanaa.

“Because of bhaavanaa upachaya samskaaraa, the mind gets a special power and when the mind has got sufficient cumulative strength because of meditation, it converts the samsrushta padhaartha jnaanam into asamsrushta padhaartha jnaanam; the samsargaathmaka jnaanam into asamsargaathmaka jnaanam; vaakyartha jnaanam into avaakyartha jnaanam.

“The conclusion is: Sentential knowledge has to be converted into non-sentential knowledge, through meditation, to achieve liberation”.

(This topic is discussed elaborately by the Aachaaryaa, later, in the 2nd and 3rd chapters.)

The name of the Aachaaryaa leading this second group of poorva pakshin-s is not clear. Some annotators mention the name as Mandana Misra (different, of course, from Sureswaraachaaryaa, whose name, before his renunciation, was also Mandana Misra). This second group is referred to as ‘saakshaathkaara vaadhina:-’- ‘Realization Theory Advocates’.

- अपरे तु - Another group of people
- ब्रूवते - vehemently argue (that)
- वेदान्तवाक्यजनितं अहं ब्रह्मेति विज्ञानं - this knowledge "I am Brahman", born out of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa,
- सम्सर्गात्मकत्वात् - because it is in the form of 'relational' Brahmajnaanam and not 'asangha' Brahmajnaanam,
- आत्मवस्तु याथात्म्य अवगाहि एव न भवति - does not become the revealer of the real nature of aathmaa (viz., being the same as Paramaathmaa).
- Aathma vasthu – aathmaa ; yaathaathmyam – reality ; avagaahi - revealer.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 67 (Contd.):

किं तर्हि । एतदेव गङ्गास्रोतोवत् सततमभ्यस्यतोऽन्यदेवावाक्यार्थात्मकं विज्ञानान्तरमुत्पद्यते ।

What then? In the mind of an aspirant, who practices continuously this knowledge itself like the flow of the Ganga, a new type of knowledge arises, which is an integral apprehension, transcending verbal cognition.

- किं तर्हि - What then is to be done?
- सततं अभ्यस्तः (पुरुषस्य) - For a person constantly meditating
- एतद् एव - this same knowledge,
- गङ्गास्रोतोवत् - like the flow of river Ganga,
- अन्यद् एव अवाक्यार्थात्मकं विज्ञानान्तरं उत्पद्यते - another type of knowledge, which transcends verbal cognition and which is different from the knowledge born out of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, arises

'avaakyaaaarthaathmakam' – 'of the nature of transcending mere words';
'vijnaanaanatham' - 'another type of knowledge' ; 'uthpadhyathe' – arises ; 'anyadeva' – different from (the knowledge born out of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa).

"Transmutation of 'knowledge' into 'realization' is achieved by meditation" is the view of the poorva pakshin.

In essence, the debate is: "Which is more important in the search for liberation – saasthraa-s or the seeker's mind?". The poorva pakshin says "The mind is more important, since saasthraa-s give only sentential knowledge and only meditation gives non-sentential knowledge, which is the liberating knowledge". On the other hand, Sureswaraacharya wants to establish the pre-eminence of saasthraa-s, in giving the knowledge required for liberation.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 67 (Contd.):

तदेव अशेष अज्ञानतिमिरोत्सारीति "विज्ञाय प्रजां कुर्वति ब्राह्मणः" इति श्रुतेरिति।

It is this new knowledge that expels all darkness of ignorance. The sruthi says "The Brahmana, after understanding, must proceed to apprehend in a direct manner".

The poorva pakshin's arguments continue.

- 'तदेव अशेष अज्ञान तिमिर उत्सारि' - "Only that non-sentential knowledge given by meditation (is) the destroyer of the darkness of ignorance in entirety'
- इति - is the fact that is proved
- इति श्रुते: - by the sruthi statement
- 'विज्ञाय प्रजां कुर्वति ब्राह्मणः' - 'After gaining knowledge through sravanam may theseeker practice meditation' "
- इति - so states the poorva pakshin.

The poorva pakshin quotes the manthra IV.iv.21 of the Brahdhaaranyaka Upanishad, in his support. "This upanishadic statement is pramaanam enough that sravanam is not sufficient. Meditation is essential" is the argument of the second poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraacharya has to refute the two poorva pakshin-s.

36. Chapter I, Verses 67 and 68 (23-12-2006)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 67 (Contd.) :

अस्य पक्षद्वयस्य निवृत्तये इदमभिधीयते ।

What follows is in refutation of these two positions.

As a part of jnaana-karma-samucchaya-vaadha kandanam, Sureswaraachaaryaa is introducing two types of poorva pakshin-s, in this portion. By negating these two, he wants to establish the central teaching of his treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi, viz. "By clearly understanding Vedhaanthic teaching, liberation can be achieved". This clear understanding has two components: (1) clear understanding of the mahaa vaakyam and (2) clear understanding of the fact, that, nothing else other than this clear understanding of the mahaa vaakyam, is required for liberation. The Aachaaryaa wants to emphasize that meditation is also not required for liberation. So, he introduces these two poorva pakshin-s, both of whom attach importance to meditation in the search for liberation.

The first poorva pakshin argues: "Clear understanding is not enough for gaining liberation. I concede that the 'clear understanding' is a knowledge – but, it is not the liberating knowledge. This 'non-liberating knowledge', acquired by Vedhaanthic study, has to be converted into 'liberating knowledge', through long meditation. By meditation, termed bhaavanaa, your mind gets a special forces, which reinforces the non-liberating knowledge; this reinforced knowledge alone will give liberation, much later". This poorva pakshin further contends, that, while this conversion process (from non-liberating to liberating knowledge) progresses gradually through meditation, the seeker has also to diligently practice nithya-naimitthika-karmaani. Thus, jnaanam and karmaa have to be combined for a long time, jnaanam in the form of meditation and karmaa in the form of nithya-naimitthika karmaani and that 'combination' will give liberation. "Clear understanding' from the mahaa vaakyam alone is not at all enough. It is non-liberating knowledge" is the stand of this poorva pakshin. He is also a jnaana-karma-samucchaya vaadhin, since he also insists on karmaa.

The second poorva pakshin also concedes that knowledge acquired through sravanam is 'knowledge'; but, contends: "This is not the final stage. This is because, any sentence can give only relational knowledge (samsargaathmaka jnaanam) or sentential knowledge (vaakyaaartha jnaanam). But, what is required in the field of realization is asanga (non-relational) Brahma jnaanam. Since only samsargaathmaka jnaanam has been attained from the study of mahaa vaakyam, we should convert that 'knowledge' into 'enlightenment', through long meditation. This converted knowledge is the final knowledge, which liberates". The second poorva pakshin also, like the first poorva pakshin, holds, that, while the seeker is practicing meditation for the conversion of 'knowledge' into 'enlightenment', the seeker has to simultaneously continue with nithya-naimitthika karmaani, for the meditation to be successful.

Thus, the first poorva pakshin talked of "a 'special force' resulting from meditation, reinforcing the non-liberating knowledge acquired from Vedhaanthic study to become liberating knowledge", while, the second poorva pakshin talked of "the capacity of meditation to convert mere book-knowledge into 'enlightenment'". Otherwise, both poorva pakshin-s are essentially similar, both holding that, only after long meditation, that too, supported by karmaa, liberation will result.

Sureswaraachaaryaa refutes both theories briefly in the next verse. He presents his elaborate arguments against them, later, in the 2nd and 3rd chapters. "Mere sravana janya jnaanam", by itself, gives liberation. Meditation is not required for a so-called 'final liberating knowledge' " is his firm view.

- अस्य पक्षद्वयस्य निवृत्तये - For refutation of these two philosophies
- इदम् अभिधीयते - I am saying this.

His brief reply follows in the verse.

Chapter I : Verse 67 –

सकृत्प्रवृत्त्या मृदनाति क्रियाकारकरूपभृत् ।

अज्ञानमागमजानं साङ्गत्यं नास्त्यतोऽनयोः ॥ ६७ ॥

The understanding of the scriptures, at once (without any need for 'repetition' or 'meditation') destroys the ignorance that bears the forms of action and the factors involved in action. There is no combination of these two.

- आगमजानं अज्ञानं मृदनाति - Knowledge born out of a thorough study of maha vaakyam can instantly destroy ignorance,

'aagamaa', in this context, refers to Vedhaantha, especially mahaa vaakyaa-s. 'Mrudh' means dust. The literal meaning of 'mrudhnaath' is 'converts to dust'. And, therefore, 'mrudhnaath' means 'naasayath' or 'destroys'.

It should be carefully noted, that, in this sentence, 'aagamajnaanam' is the subject and 'ajnaanam' is the object and not the other way around.

- क्रिया कारक रूप भृत् - (which ignorance is) in the form of the sustainer of karmaa and kaarakam,

'kriyaad' means 'karmaad' or 'action'; 'kaarakam' means 'the various accessories required for karmaad', beginning with the karthaa (the subject), and including object, location, instrument etc.; 'bhruth' means 'sustainer' / 'supporter'.

Ignorance is 'sustainer' of duality. When ignorance goes away, the duality is also falsified. That means "jnaanam destroys ajnaanam and duality".

"Dveethiyaath vai bhayam bhavath" – "fear is the result of dvaitha bhaavam" is a well-known Upanishadic statement (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad - I.iv.2).

"When jnaanam rises, dvaitham goes away; samsaaraa also goes away; liberation results. Thus, 'clear understanding' of the mahaa vaakyam is enough to achieve liberation" is the essence of this statement (aagamajnaanam kriyaa karaka roopa bhruth ajnaanam mrudhunaath) of the Aachaaryaa.

By this statement, he has answered the 2nd poorva pakshin, who had claimed that 'sentences' (by which he implies mahaa vaakyam-s) can give only relational knowledge. Sureswaraachaaryaa maintains "While it is true, that, in general, sentences can give only relational knowledge, in the exceptional case of mahaa vaakyam, the vaakyam itself gives non-relational advaita jnaanam, the final knowledge, without the need for the saadhanaa of mediation".

Sureswaraachaaryaa does not support his statement with any explanation in this portion. Later, he dwells elaborately on this topic of 'sentences giving relational knowledge'. He uses a term (later) – 'vaakyaath avaakyaartha:' - stressing that pure brahma jnaanam is obtained from the very sravanam of the mahaa vaakyam, without the need for any further saadhanaa. "Aagama jnaanam is ajnaana naasaka jnanam" is his conviction.

- सकृत्प्रवृत्त्या - in one stroke.

By the use of this term 'sakruthpravrutthayaad', the Aachaaryaa strongly refutes the 1st poorva pakshin, who had said "instantaneous liberation is not achieved by knowledge. 'Repetition' is required". The Aachaaryaa counters: "No; no repetition (aavrutthi) is needed. By one stroke, liberation is achieved by destruction of ajnaanam. Knowledge destroys ajnaanam, in one stroke, by its rise alone, similar to the 'lighting of a lamp' removing the darkness straightaway. Aavrutthi (repetition) and bhaavanaa (meditation) are not required".

"Clear understanding of the sruthi, by study, is the final and liberating knowledge. You do not require a separate 'saakshaathkaaraad' / realization / mystic feelings etc., for liberation" is Sureswaraachaaryaa's firm stand.

If meditation is not required after 'understanding', do you require 'karma samucchaya'? The Aachaaryaa responds: "When meditation itself is not required, why karmaa?"

- अतः - This being the case (i.e. when even meditation is not required)
- साङ्गत्यं न अस्ति - there is no combination (samucchayam)
- अनयाः - between jnaana abhyaasaa and karma abhyaasaa.

A doubt may arise. If mere sravanam gives clear understanding and liberation, why should the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad talk about "srothavya:, manthavya:, nidhidhyaasithavya:" – an exhortation to "hear, clear doubts and meditate" ? How does one reconcile this teaching of the Upanishad with the Aachaaryaa's stand.

Obviously, the word 'srothavya:', in the above quotation, cannot be and is not against the Aachaaryaa's views, since it implies the following facts also:

- (1) Meditation cannot be a source of knowledge – material or spiritual. Knowledge can result only from an appropriate means or instrument. Imagination or wishful thinking cannot be called knowledge. Scriptures and tradition list six sources of knowledge / pramaanam-s. It should be noted that this list does not include meditation. This fact is a strong support to the contention of Sureswaraachaaryaa, that meditation cannot be the source of 'liberating knowledge'.
- (2) While any knowledge can come only from one or more of the above six pramaanam-s, brahma jnaanam specifically, can result only from the 6th pramaanam, viz., the apourusheya Veda pramaanam. The theoretical study of Veda pramaanam is sravanam. Analysis of thadhpadhaa and thvampadhaa is pramaana operation. The culmination of spiritual knowledge is through sravanam i.e. the study of Veda pramaanam, especially the mahaa vaakyaani.

But, what about use of the terms 'manthavya:' and 'nidhidhyaasithavya:.'| Do these terms not contradict the Aachaaryaa's views?

Sureswaraachaaryaa explains: "The use of 'manthavya:' and 'nidhidhyaasithavya:' should not be taken to mean that mananam and nidhidhyaasanam should follow sravanam for achieving liberation" (though, it is generally believed so). He maintains: "Normally, sravanam itself should give 'clear understanding'. But, if in a particular seeker's case, it does not do so, it means that the seeker suffers from some buddhi doshaa: - obstacles in his mind and reasoning. The saadhanaa-s of mananam and nidhidhyaasanam are required only in this area, namely, 'for removal of the mental obstacles'. They are not meant for enlightenment or realization. They only prepare the seeker's mind for effective sravanam. The seeker has to go back to sravanam, after the mind is adequately prepared. The climax has to be only in sravanam. Effective sravanam alone gives you the final knowledge". "So" Sureswaraacharya concludes: "nothing else apart from 'clear understanding' is required for liberation".

This gives rise to further questions. What are the mental blocks, because of which sravanam is ineffective? And, how are they removed?

The 1st mental block : It is generally true, that knowledge derived from a book, is very often a non-final knowledge and that, this 'book-knowledge' should be converted into 'enlightenment', by bringing into practical use the contents of the book. Unfortunately, we have a tendency to extend this concept to Vedhaanthic study also. We tend to believe "By Vedhaanthic study, I receive only 'book-knowledge' of Brahman. I now have to 'experience' it". But, this is a misconception and is the 1st mental block. This has to be removed by mananam, which consists in an analysis of "Which source gives final 'liberating' knowledge? Which source does not?" etc. A diligent analysis will result in the understanding". In general, 'book-knowledge' is not final. But, Vedhaantha is an exception. The apourusheya sabda pramaanam can and does give the final knowledge". This conviction should come by mananam. Thus, through mananam, the 1st mental block is removed.

The 2nd mental block may be called a 'habit block'. One always tends to judge oneself from the stand-point of the body-mind complex. This body-mind based self-judgment leads to the misconception "I have problems like anger etc.", even after a study of Vedhaantha, though it is not 'I' that has such problems, but only the mind of 'I'. Even an advanced aspirant, though he may tell himself that he is not anaathmaa, may continue the self-judgment, based on anaathmaa. This anaathmaa-based self-judgment is the greatest vipareetha bhaavanaa. Under such vipareetha bhaavanaa conditions, the aspirant can never achieve 'liberation'; and, therefore, he should remove this mental block of mind-based self-judgment, with the help of the saadhanaa of nidhidhyaasanam.

'Removing the two mental blocks and listening to mahaa vaakyam' will give 'freedom'. Mananam and nidhidhyaasanam are the needed saadhanaa-s, for removal of the mental blocks. They are not for 'realization'. Only sravanam is the mukya saadhanaa, while mananam and nidhidhyaasanam are 'supporting' saadhanaa-s. It is mananam which can and does give the two-fold 'clear understanding' earlier explained.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 68 :

एवं तावदनानात्वं ब्रह्मणि जानकर्मणोः समुच्चयो निराकृतः । अताधुना पक्षान्तराभ्युपगमेनापि प्रत्यवस्थाने पूर्ववदनाश्वासो यथा तथाभिधीयते ।

Thus, the combination of 'knowledge' and 'action' is denied, on the theory, that Brahman is one divested of all plurality. Now even if another samucchayaa point of view is raised, I will show the logical problem in it also , in the same manner as it was shown in the earlier samuchyaa vaadham.

In verse 67, Sureswaraacharya refuted the bhavanaa vaadhi philosophers, who had claimed that meditation is the final saadhanaa. The Aachaaryaa averred that sravanam is the anghi (main) and mananam and nidhidhyaasanam are only angam-s (supports). "The seeker practices mananam and nidhidhyaasanam only for the purpose of effective 'listening'. The two are not after sravanam, but, are for sravanam" was the Aachaaryaa's reply.

From verse 68 to verse 79, the Aachaaryaa discusses another group of jnaana- karma-samucchaya vaadhina:, who were also equally powerful during the times of Adi Sankara and Sureswaraacharya.

This group of poorva pakshin-s are known by three different names : 'bedha abedha vaadhina:', 'naanaarasa brahma vaadhina:' and 'ekasaasthra vaadhina:' | They are people who do not agree with either the poorva meemaamsakaa-s or the Advaitin-s. Poorva meemaamsakaa-s are dvaithin-s, who give importance to Veda Poorvaa and ignore Veda anthaa. Advaitin-s refute dvaitham and give less importance to Veda poorvaa, compared to Veda anthaa.

The bedha abedha vaadhi strongly feels that both poorva meemaamsakaa-s and advaitin-s are misguided in their respective partial visions, giving importance to only one part of the Veda - either the poorva bhaagam or the antha bhaagam. The beda abedha vaadhi wants to give importance to the entire Veda and to accept both dvaitham and advaitam. His concept of 'truth' is unique: "Ekam and anekam / dvaitham and advaitam / bedham and abedham".

The Aachaaryaa for this group is Bharthru Prapancha: |

Both Jeeva-Isvara bedhaa and jeeva-Isvara aikyam are acceptable to this group of poorva pakshin-s. Jnaana-karma-samucchaya: is also acceptable to them.

37. Chapter I, Verses 68 to 70 (30-12-2006)

One of the fundamental questions, discussed by the Vedic Achaaryaa-s, is whether Vedaa-s are to be treated as one whole saasthram or as the combination of two saasthraa-s – “Ekasaasthram vaa saasthradvayam vaa vedaa:?”

There are differences of opinion on this fundamental question.

We, the Advaithin-s, treat Vedaa-s as a mixture of two distinct saasthraa-s and are, therefore, called saasthra dvaya vaadhina:. To us, Veda Poorvaa or karma kaandaa is one saasthraa and Veda anthaa or jnaana kaandaa is a different saasthraa. This distinction is considered very important by us, since many philosophical / metaphysical conclusions are reached, based on this belief.

We treat Vedaa-s as two saasthraa-s, because of a number of reasons. The most important reason is as follows: It is an universally accepted fact, that, any saasthraa should have a distinct anubhandha chathushtayam – group of four factors – namely,

- (1) the adhikaari – the person to whom the saasthraa is addressed
- (2) the vishayaa – the subject matter
- (3) the sambhandha: - relationship between the adhikaari and the vishayaa and
- (4) the palan – the benefit derived from the saasthraa.

Every saasthraa will have an unique, specific, particular and relevant anubhandha chathushtayam. When we approach and analyze Vedaa-s, we find that:

- the karma kaandaa has got a specific anubhandha chathushtayam and the jnaana kaandaa has got another distinct and different anubhandha chathushtayam. For the karma kaandaa, the adhikaari is raaghi (the individual with desires), the vishayaa is anithyam (ephemeral), the sambhandha: is chodhya-chodhana sambhandha: and the palan is also anithyam.
- For the jnaana kaandaa, they are, respectively (1) viraagi (one who has given up desires) (2) nithya (eternal) vasthu (3) prathibhaadhika-prathibhaadhya sambhandha: and (4) nithya palan.

So, we conclude, that, the two portions of the Vedaa-s should be treated as two different saasthraa-s. Since each portion addresses its own different adhikaari, the portions cannot be combined. “Samucchayaa between karmaa and jnaanam is, therefore, never possible” is the Advaithin's firm view.

On the other hand, another group of philosophers claims that Veda is ekasaasthraa, because, according to them, both karmaa and jnaanam are based on the one and same Veda pramaanam, given by Bhagavaan, addressed to the same group of "believers and seekers". "Veda should be treated as Ekasaasthraa" claims this group, who existed even before Adi Sankara's times. "Ekasaasthra vaadhina:" is the name of this group, headed by an Aachaaryaa, Bharthru Prapancha:. The Visishtaadvaithaa philosophy is an evolution of this Ekasaasthravaadhaa.

Rama Raya Kavi, a scholar who came much later than Sureswaraachaaryaa, wrote a treatise, by name, Sankaraasankara Bhaashya Vimarsa:, wherein, he makes a comparative study of Sankara's Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam and Ramanuja's Brahma Soothra Bhashyam. In this treatise, he also discusses elaborately, this question: "Vedaa: eka saasthram vaa saasthradvayam vaa?" and establishes that it is saasthradvayam.

Sureswaraachaaryaa, in this portion of Naishkarmya Siddhi, takes on the Ekasaasthravaadhaa, for refutation.

The corollaries of accepting Ekasaasthra vaadhaa are many.

Corollary 1: The Veda Poorva Bhaagaa talks of dvaitam and the Veda antha baaghaa of advaitam. The reality, according to the Eka saasthra vaadhi, is, therefore, neither dvaitam nor advaitam. He claims "Dvaitaadhvaitam" is real.

Corollary 2: The Veda Poorvaa talks of the differences between Isvara and Jeeva; i.e. jeeva-jagath-Isvara bedhaa is the subject matter of Veda Poorvaa. On the other hand, the Veda antha bhaagaa talks of aiykyam or abedhaa between jeevaa and Isvara. "Therefore" the Eka Saasthra Vaadhi concludes "the ultimate relationship between jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa is 'Bedhaabedhaa'"; "Unity is real; diversity is also real" is the statement of the eka saasthra vaadhi. (Sureswaraacharyaa uses the term "naanaarasam Brahman" for this poorva paksha perspective.) In contrast, the Advaitin says "Real Unity is there, in apparent diversity".

Corollary 3: Veda Poorvaa talks of karmaa and Veda anthaa talks of jnaanam. "Therefore" the eka saasthra vaadhi says "there has to be a combination of jnaanam and karmaa." According to him, "Jnaana-karma-samuccchayam" will give 'liberation'" is the message of the Vedaa-s. A further fall-out of this corollary, is, that, according to the eka saasthra vaadhi, grihastha aasramama alone is a valid aasramaam. He holds that sanyaasa aasrama is not prescribed by the Vedaa-s. "Only the 'combination of jnaanam and karmaa' can give liberation" is his view.

This eka saasthra vaadha philosophy was very much prevalent, during the periods of Adi Sankara and Sureswaraachaaryaa.

The subject matter of verses 68 to 79, is "eka saasthra vaadha kandanam" – "refutation of this philosophy".

Reverting to the text

(sambhandha gadhyam to verse 68):

- एवं तावत् - Until now,
- जान कर्मणोः समुच्चयः निराकृतः - the combination between jnaanam and karmaa was rejected,
- अनानात्वे ब्रह्मणि - assuming Brahman as one.
- अत अधुना - From now on,
- पक्षान्तर अभ्युपगमेन प्रत्यवस्थाने अपि - considering another samucchaya point of view, which also raises objections (to our view), pakshaanthra – another view; abhyugamena – considering; prathyavasthaane – giving objections.

- अनाश्वासः अभिधीयते - I will show its logical problem / logical incongruity, anaasvaasa: - logical problem / logical incongruity.
- यथा पूर्ववत् तथा - similar to the same manner, in which , the logical problem was shown in the earlier instance.
Yathaa – similar to; poorvavath – as in the earlier instance; thathaa - in the same manner.

Chapter I: Verse 68 –

अनुत्सारितनानात्वं ब्रह्म यस्यापि वादिनः ।

तन्मतेनापि दुस्साध्यो जानकर्मसमुच्चयः ॥ ६८ ॥

Even according to the view of the theorist for whom Brahman does not exclude diversity, the combination of action and knowledge remains equally impossible.

Sureswaraachaaryaa introduces the new poorva pakshin.

- यस्य अपि वादिनः - In the case of the philosophers for whom
- अनुत्सारितनानात्वं ब्रह्म - Brahman does not exclude diversity,

The philosophers referred to here, are the 'eka saasthra vaadhina:'.

The eka saasthra vaadhina: talk of a philosophy, where plurality continues to exist even in Brahman; for them 'plurality' is also real, whereas, for the advaitin, plurality is mithyaa ; only advaitam is real.

Uthsaaritha – negated; anuthsaaritha – not negated ; naanaathvam – plurality / diversity. 'anuthsaaritha naanaathvam' is adjective to 'Brahman'.

- तन्मतेन अपि - even from their standpoint
- जानकर्म समुच्चयः - the combination between jnaanam and karmaa
- दुस्साध्यः - is not possible.

This verse is only the introduction to the refutation of the poorva paksham. The Aachaaryaa elaborates his views subsequently, in the verses that follow.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 69:

तस्य विभाग उक्तिः दूषणविभागप्रज्ञप्तये ।

This position is further analyzed so that the criticism also may be presented analytically.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "I will divide the discussion into three levels. In the eka saasthra vaadhin's philosophy, he talks of bedha-abadha sambhandha: (translated as 'identity-in-diversity'). He holds that between Isvara and jeevaa, difference is there; identity is also there. Let us analyze this in three levels. First, from the bedha paksha viewpoint, where, we will show that samucchayaa is not possible. Then, we will analyze it from the view point of there being identity – abadha pakshaa - where also, we will show that samucchayaa is not possible. Finally, from the bedha-abadha-paksha angle also, we will show that samucchayaa is not possible".

The Aachaaryaa uses a standard method, known as vikalpa, which consists in dividing the poorva paksha vaadhaa, into different aspects and countering the opponent's theory, from each one of the aspects. While this is done to facilitate clarity in the counter-explanations, it also weakens the opponent.

- तस्य - In respect of this philosophy (of the eka saasthra vaadhi)
- विभाग उक्तिः - the method of 'division' (is being adopted)
- दूषण विभाग प्रज्ञप्तये - for the clear understanding of the divisions in our refutation.
Pragnyapthi: - clear understanding.

Divisions in the poorva pakshaa are talked about, for understanding clearly the divisions or stages in the refutation; in other words, poorva paksha vibhaaga: is resorted to, for clarity regarding poorva paksha niraasa vibhaaga: |

The details of the 'division' follow.

Chapter I: Verse 69 –

ब्रह्मात्मा वा भवेत्तस्य यदि वा अनात्मरूपकं
आत्म अनाप्तिः भवेन्मोहादितरस्याप्यनात्मनः ॥ ६९ ॥

Either Brahman is the aathman or it is other than the aathman. If it is the aathman, then its non-attainment is only through illusion. If it is other than the aathman, it ever remains a non-self, and neither by knowledge nor by action, it becomes one with aathman.

Sureswaraachaaryaa asks a question of this poorva pakshin: "Is Paramaathmaa identical with jeevaathmaa or different from jeevaathmaa?"

- ब्रह्म आत्मा वा भवेत् - (One possibility is) "Paramaathmaa is identical with jeevaathmaa".
- यदि वा तस्य अनात्मरूपकम् (भवेत्) - (The second possibility is) "Paramaathmaais different from jeevaathmaa".

Thasya – of Brahman (Paramaathmaa); anaathmaroopakam – of the nature of being distinct from aathmaa (jeevaathmaa).

Sureswaraachaaryaa is proceeding to maintain that karmaa is utterly useless, in either case. Then, where can there be any jnaana karma samucchayam?

He argues: "If there is identity between Isvara and jeevaa, Isvara need not be my goal, since I am already Isvara. And, thus, when I am already Isvara, if I set my goal as Isvara and crave for Isvara, it is only because of delusion. This delusion has to be removed, which removal is possible only through jnaanam. Karmaa cannot help".

- आत्म अनाप्तिः - (In the first instance, i.e. when Isvara and jeevaa are identical), thenon-attainment of Brahman,
- मोहात् भवेत् - results only from delusion.

The implication is "therefore, karmaa is useless".

In the second case also, where Brahman and aathmaa are considered different, karmaa is useless, since any amount of karmaa cannot convert the finite into the 'Infinite'. If jeevaathmaa (finitude) is my 'essential' nature, I can never lose this nature and attain Brahmathvam, the nature of the 'Infinite'.

- इतरस्य अनात्मनः अपि - Even in the other possibility of Brahman being different from jeevaatmaa (and, therefore a 'goal'),
- (कर्मणा अनाप्तिः भवेत्) - (Brahman cannot be attained by karmaaa).

"Karmanaa moksha: na eva sambhavathi" is the firm conviction of Sureswaraachaaryaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 70:

तत्र यदि तावत् वास्तवेनैव वृत्तेन ब्रह्मप्राप्तं आत्मस्वाभाव्यात् केवलं आसुरमोह अपिधानमात्रमेव अनाप्तिनिमित्तं तस्मिन्पक्षे ।

If, in reality, Brahman is already attained, being one's very nature, then, only the demoniac misconception must present it as unattained. In that case :

The poorva pakshin may ask: "How do you (Advaitin), then, talk of mokshaa, if karmaa cannot give mokshaa?". The Advaitin replies: "I believe, that, mokshaa is through jnaanam and not through karmaa. Hence, I have no problem. Only you have a problem, since you consider karmaa as a moksha saadhanam, when it is a logical fallacy".

"I do not require any saadhanaa" is the saadhanaa.

- तत्र यदि तावत् - In this regard, if we assume, that
- वास्तवेन वृत्तेन - in reality,
- ब्रह्मप्राप्तं - Brahman is already accomplished by me,
- आत्मस्वाभाव्यात् - being my very nature,
- केवलं आसुरमोह अपिधानमात्रं एव - the mere covering in the form of delusion natural to materialistic persons,
- अनाप्ति निमित्तं - is the cause for non-attainment of Brahman.

Aasura moham - delusion that is natural for people given to materialistic pursuits; apidhaanam - covering.

Delusion 'covers' ('stands in the way of') reasoning and, is, therefore, the cause of non-attainment of Brahman. Manthraa II.i.1, of Katopanishad, which runs, "paraanchi kaani vyathrunath svayambhoo: thasmaath paraang pasyathi na antharaathman" – "The Lord destroyed the sense organs by making them extrovert ; therefore, every one perceived outside, not the inner Self", conveys a similar message.

तस्मिन् पक्षे - In that case,

The Aachaaryaa plans to state in the verse that follows: "No karmaa will remove any delusion. Only the understanding 'aham brahma asmi' will give liberation".

Chapter I: Verse 70 -

मोहापिधानभङ्गाय नैव कर्माणि कारणम् ।

जानेनैव फलावाप्तेस्तत्र कर्म निरर्थकम् ॥ ७० ॥

For removing the misconception, action can never be the means. As only knowledge produces the required result, action in that situation is useless.

मोह अपिधान भङ्गाय = - For removal of this covering in the form of delusion

Moham – delusion; apidhaanam – cover (pidhaanam also means 'cover'); bhangaaya – to cause the removal.

- कर्माणि न कारणम् एव (भवति) - karmaa-s can never be the cause.
- ज्ञानेन एव फल अवाप्ते : - Since the result (viz., 'liberation') is attained only by 'knowledge',
- तत्र - in that context (Brahma praapthi vishaye)
- कर्म निरर्थकम् - Karmaa (either loukikaa or vaidhikaa) is irrelevant / useless.

Sureswaraachaarya holds that karmaa is useless in attaining Brahman; but, he has also earlier warned that karmaa is useful, in any number of other fields, especially in the 'preparation' / 'refinement' of the mind of the seeker. In fact, lots of karmaa may be necessary for a given individual for this purpose, but karmaa cannot give liberation direct.

38. Chapter I, Verses 70 and 73 (06-01-2007)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the jnaana karma samucchaya vaadha: - the philosophy of combining knowledge and action, as a means of liberation. In this process, he is now taking on a particular type of philosophers, known as 'eka saasthra vaadhina:', a powerful group lead by Bharthru Prapancha Aachaaryaa. Their philosophy is known also as naanaa rasa brahma vaadha: and as bedha-abadha vaadha: |

From verse 68, Sureswaraachaaryaa has entered into the refutation of this philosophy.

For the purpose of refutation, he has divided the arguments into three stages. Since the 'eka saasthra vaadh' calls his philosophy as 'beda-abadha vaadha:' also, the Aachaaryaa takes on the philosophy from three angles: (1) bedha paksha: - the assumption that Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa are different (2) abadha paksha: - the assumption that Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa are non-different / identical and (3) bedha-abadha paksha: - Paramaathmaa and jeevaathmaa are both different and identical (similar to the state of Tamil Nadu, being both identical with and different from the country, India – identical with India, because it is included in India ; but, different from India, because it is only a part of India – not the whole of India).

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to prove, that, whatever stand the eka saasthra vaadhi takes among the three pakshaa-s (the word 'pakshaa' means 'stand' or 'view point'), karmaa cannot contribute to liberation. Beda pakshe karmaa na moksha saadhanam, abadha pakshe karmaa na moksha saadhanam and bedha-abadha pakshe api karmaa na moksha saadhanam. Therefore, karmaa cannot be and need not be combined with jnaanam, as a means to liberation.

In verse 69, the Aachaaryaa introduced the poorva pakshin and enquired of him: "Do you believe Brahman is different from jeevaa or identical with jeevaa?" and said "Either way, you have a problem".

In verse 70, Sureswaraachaaryaa considered the abadha pakshaa angle. He reasoned: "According to this view, Brahman and jeevaa are identical. But, the common perception is that there are differences between the two; this is because of ignorance; in other words, there is a 'delusion'. Therefore, to attain Brahman, what is required, is only removal of this delusion or false notion that jeeva is different from Brahman. And, notions can be removed only be cognitive knowledge; never by any amount or type of karmaa". Thus, the Aachaaryaa established, that, abadha pakshe, karmaa cannot help.

Now, in verse 71, the Aachaaryaa looks at the issue, from the beda pakshaa i.e. the view "Brahman is different from jeevaa" and will show, that, in this case also, karmaa cannot help.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 71:

अनात्मरूपके तु ब्रह्मणि न कर्म साधनभावं प्रतिपद्यते नापि ज्ञानं कर्मसमुच्चितमसमुच्चितं वा यस्मादन्यस्य स्वत एव साधकस्य ब्रह्मणोऽप्यन्यत्वं स्वत एव सिद्धम् । तत्रैवम् ।

If Brahman is other than the Self, neither action, nor knowledge combined with or uncombined with action, can lead to Brahman's identity with Self, since the aspirant is inherently other than Brahman. This being so:

This is a very important and significant portion, since, our very approach to the spiritual saadhanaa will be clear, only if the fundamentals are grasped.

- अनात्मरूपके तु ब्रह्मणि - Even in the event of Brahman being different from jeevaa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is talking of 'beda pakshaa' i.e. Brahman as different from the Self, and therefore 'anaathmaa'. How can you say that Brahman is anaathmaa? Ans: 'I' am aathmaa; and, therefore, anything different from 'me', is anaathmaa; therefore, even Brahman, if different from 'me', is only anaathmaa.

- कर्म साधनभावं न प्रतिपद्यते - karmaa cannot assume the role of a saadhanaa for liberation.

If jeevaa's essential nature is samsaarithvam, it can never attain Brahmabhaavathvam. An intrinsically finite entity can never attain 'infinite' by any saadhanaa. This is what Sureswaraachaaryaa avers. He says: "In beda pakshaa, not only karmaa, but, no other saadhanaa also can lead to liberation". First, he ruled out karmaa as a saadhanaa, by his statement "karma saadhanabhaavam na prathipadyathe". Then, he proceeds to rule out other saadhanaa-s also.

- न ज्ञानं अपि (साधनभावं प्रतिपद्यते) - Jnaanam also does not (become the means),

When the jeevaa's intrinsic nature is samsaarithvam, jnaanam can, in fact, only confirm the samsaarithvam. And, therefore cannot lead to mokshaa.

Aachaaryaa divides jnaanam into two types: (1) jnaanam mixed with karmaa. (2) pure jnaanam.

- कर्म समुच्चितं असमुच्चितं वा - whether it is jnaanam combined with karmaa or not combined with karmaa,

A samsaari jeevaa will only be a samsaari jeevaa always, if jeevaa is essentially different from Brahman.

- यस्मात् अन्यस्य साधकस्य स्वत एव - since the distinction of the aspirant from Brahman is 'essential' or 'intrinsic' in nature (as assumed by the bedha paksha vaadhi),
- ब्रह्मणस्य अन्यत्वं अपि स्वत एव सिद्धम् - and the distinction of Brahman from the aspirant is also 'essential' or 'intrinsic' in nature (again, as assumed by the bedha paksha vaadhi).

"What cannot be given up" is 'essential' or 'intrinsic' nature. 'Finitude' is 'essential nature' (indicated by the word 'svatha:') of jeevaa. Hence, if jeevaa has to be different from Brahman, as assumed by the bedha paksha vaadhj, jeevaa can never attain the 'Infinite' nature or Brahman. So, any type or amount of saadhanaa cannot help jeevaa to become Brahman, if bedha pakshaa is accepted.

- तत्र एवम - This being so (explanation follows in the verse) :

Chapter I: Verse 71 –

अन्यस्यात्मताप्राप्तौ न क्वचित् हेतुसंभवः ।

तस्मिन् सत्यपि नो नष्टः परात्मानं प्रपद्यते ॥ ७१ ॥

There can be no means which could bring about the transformation of one entity into another. If it abides as such, it cannot become even another and if it gets destroyed in the process, then also it cannot be said to have become another.

- क्वचित् न हेतुसंभवः - No logical reason is ever possible
- अन्यस्य (अन्यत्) आत्मता प्राप्तौ - in the matter of one entity attaining the nature of another entity.

anyasya – of one entity ; (anyath) aathmathaa – the nature of another entity; praapthau – in the matter of attainment.

Logically one cannot become another, if jeevaa and Brahman are essentially different. That means mokshaa is never possible.

Sureswaraachaaryaa first raises another question: "When jeevaa becomes Brahman, does it retain the jeeva bhaava or drop the jeeva bhaavaa?" He proceeds: "Let us consider the first possibility, viz., 'the jeevaa retains the jeeva bhaavaa and becomes Brahmar'. On consideration, we realize, that, it is not possible at all, since the finite jeevaa cannot become the 'infinite' Brahman, retaining the finitude. Even if, hypothetically, it does so, such a transformation will be useless for achieving 'liberation', since the jeevaa will retain its samsaarithvam also. Therefore, the first option, viz., 'jeevaa becoming Brahman, retaining the jeevathvam', has to be ruled out".

The second possibility is "jeevaa becoming Brahman, dropping the jeevathvam status". The Aachaaryaa comments: "jeevaa dropping jeevathvam' means 'the death of jeevaad'. If there is no more jeevaa, who becomes Brahman?" No jeevaa is there to become Brahman or claim Brahmajnaanam. The second option is also, therefore, not possible.

The conclusion is, that, jeevaa cannot become Brahman, either by retaining the jeeva bhaavaa or giving up jeeva bhaavaa, if jeevaa and Brahman are entirely different i.e. from the beda pakshaa angle.

In Advaitam, jeevaa does not 'become' Brahman. Jeevaa is Brahman, attaining Brahmabhaavaa, in the process of mokshaa. To repeat for clarity: In Advaitam "I' am already and always Brahman". If, therefore, an objection is raised "If you are already Brahman, why should you attain Brahman?", the Advaitin will reply " 'I' , Brahman, attain Brahmabhaavaa, by dropping the notion that I am jeevaad".

Adi Sankara, in his Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad Bhaashyam, specifically mentions: "Jeevaa does not really have to become Brahman, since it is only Brahman. Its 'dropping the false notion (viz., that it is jeevaa and not Brahman), through jnaanam' is figuratively called 'becoming' Brahman".

तस्मिन् सति - By retaining jeeva bhaavaa

नष्टः अपि - or by even dropping jeeva bhaavaa

(जीवः) परात्मानं न प्रपद्यते - jeevaa does not attain Brahman.

"Therefore, if you say jeevaa and Brahman are different, working for mokshaa is a futile exercise, since mokshaa is not at all possible, under this condition (as shown)" implies the Aachaaryaa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 72:

अपरस्मिन् पक्षे विधिः ।

On the other view, the following injunction would be reasonable.

Sureswaraachaaryaa showed that, if jeevaa and Brahman are different i.e. in beda pakshaa, no saadhanaa can lead to liberation. On the same topic, he is making a different approach now.

In the saasthraa-s, in the upaasanaa portion, it is said, that, by the practice of abedha upaasanaa, jeevaa can become Brahman.

Lord Krishna also declares in the Bhagavadh Githa (verse 6 – Chapter VIII): “yam yam vaapi smaran bhaavam thyajyanthe kalevaram tham tham eva ethi kauntheya sadhaa thadhbhaavabhaavitha.” - “Oh Arjuna! Thinking of whatever object a person gives up the body, at the time of death, that very object he attains, being always steeped in that thought”. Jadabharathaa, in the Bhaagavatha Mahaa Puraanaa, is a typical example for this belief.

In the krama mukti vaadhaa, the Advaithins do accept the jeevaa ‘attaining’ Brahman by upaasanaa, which view is supported by saasthraa-s also. But, the Advaithin does not say that, upaasanaa gives liberation or Brahman direct. He is of the conviction, that, by diligent practice of upaasanaa, the jeevaathmaa goes to Brahmalokaa and there attains the knowledge that, he is already Brahman; and, thus drops the notion of not being the Paramaathmaa. In other words, jeevaathmaa does not have to become Paramaathmaa. He has to only realize that he is already the Paramaathmaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: “Let us assume that jeevaa and Brahman are now different and jeevaa becomes Brahman, later, by constant Upaasanaa of Paramaathmaa, even at the time of death”. This is only an assumption and not accepted, by the Aachaaryaa, as a fact. But, even in this purely hypothetical case, jnaana karma samucchayam will not help, since, what is required is only abedha dhyaanam.

Jnaanam and karmaa are opposed to each other, since performance of karmaa requires samsaara jeeva bhaava:, while jnaana nishtaa requires asamsaara brahma bhaava: | Then how can you combine the two?

Chapter I: Verse 72 –

परमात्मानुकूलेन जानाभ्यासेन दुःखिनः ।

द्वैतिनोऽपि प्रमुच्येरन्न परात्मविरोधिना ॥ ७२ ॥

Even the dualists undergoing suffering, will attain liberation, by continued meditative knowledge of God, in conformity to His nature. (But) they will not gain the result by engaging in anything contrary to the true relation to Him.

- दुःखिनः द्वैतिनः अपि - Even the dualists, who are in samsaaraa,
- प्रमुच्येरन् - will attain mokshaa (at a future date, through karma mukthi)
- जान अभ्यासेन - by Upaasanaa,
- परमात्म अनुकूलेन - conducive to the future merger with Brahman.

Up to this, in the verse, is the view of the poorva pakshin holding "Upaasanaa itself brings jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa together".

Sureswaraachaaryaa hastily adds:

Na paraathma virodhinaa - But, not by saadhanaa-s not conducive to Paramaathmaaiikyam .

The essence of the Aachaaryaa's comment is: "Even if your statement, namely that 'Upaasanaa will lead to attainment of Brahman' is accepted, neither karmaa nor jnaana-karma samucchayam will help".

The term 'paraathma virodhi' implies 'karmaa' and 'jnaana-karma samucchayam'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 73:
इतरस्मिन् पक्षे विधेरेवानवकाशत्वम् । कथम् ।

On the other view, there is no scope whatever, for any injunction. How ?

Sureswaraachaaryaa now goes back to abedha pakshaa, to give more objections. In verse 70, he had discussed abedha pakshaa, while in verses 71 and 72, he had taken up beda pakshaa. Now, in verse 73, he is back to abedha pakshaa.

On abesha pakshaa, "If Brahman and jeevaa are identical and non-different, you have to only drop the notion that they are different and therefore, karmaa is neither useful nor needed" was the reason given by the Aachaaryaa, in verse 70.

In this verse (no. 73), he gives one more reason.

- इतरस्मिन् पक्षे तु - In the other view (i.e. in abedha pakshaa),
- विधेः अनवकाशत्वम् एव - there is no scope for presenting any saadhanaa to attain mokshaa.
'anavakaasa:' – Absence of room or scope.
- कथम् - How do you say that?

Chapter I: Verse 73 –
समस्तव्यस्तभूतस्य ब्रह्मण्येवावतिष्ठतः ।

ब्रूत कर्मणि को हेतुः सर्वानन्यत्वदर्शिनः ॥ ७३ ॥

What is the ground for any action on the part of one, who is the microcosm of the totality, has perceived the unity of all beings and who abides only in Brahman?

Sureswaraacharya points out: "In the abedha pakshaa, according to the eka saasthra vaadhi (for whom there is no nirguna Brahman, Brahman is real and the world also is real), there is one Brahman, in which everything is included. Brahman is ekam and Brahman is also anekam".

"Samastha (total) vyastha (individual) bootha:" is the technical term used to indicate this.

This abedha paksha vaadhi claims: "Once I get jnaanam, I know I am Brahman, in which everything is included – the whole cosmos, the four purushaarthaa-s etc".

The Aachaaryaa counters: "After getting this knowledge that 'I am Brahman, in which everything is included', where is the question of doing any karmaa? What type of karmaa is needed? Karmaa has got four saadhyam-s (results) - aaptham, uthpaadhanam, samskaaryam and vikaaryam. After abedha paksha jnaanam, in which everything is included, I do not see any need for any type of karmaa, producing any type of result". '

39. Chapter I, Verses 73 to 76 (13-01-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya, in these verses, is dealing with the eka saasthra vaadhi— who treats the entire Veda, as one saasthra and, therefore, says, that every seeker has to follow both Veda poorvaa and Veda anthaa simultaneously. Because of this, the eka saasthra vaadhi accepts jeevaathma-paramaathma-bedham from the Veda poorva baaghaa angle and jeevaathma-paramaathma-aiykyam from the Veda anthaa angle. Since he considers both these relationships as equally true, he is also called bedha abedha vaadhi. Through this bedha-abedha vaadham, he preaches jnaana-karma samucchaya: |

Sureswaraachaarya is arguing against these views. He refutes the bedha-abedha-vaadhi, in three stages – (1) from bedha paksha: - where there is a difference between jeevaathmaa and paramaathma (2) from abedha paksha: - where there is aiykyam between jeevaathma and paramaathma and (3) from bedha-abedha paksha: - where both difference and identity between jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa are accepted.

He refuted beda paksha., in verses 71 and 72, in which he said: "If jeevaathmaa and paramaathma are essentially different, then any amount of karma cannot change the fact of the difference. Jeeva will be essentially a samsaari and can never become paramaathmaa. Just by going near paramaathmaa, jeeva cannot not be a samsaari."

In the present and the following few verses, the Achaaryaa is taking up the abedha paksha angle.

In verse 70, he briefly dealt with this view, by saying: "If jeevaathmaa and paramaathmaa are essentially one and the same, then the seeming difference is obviously caused by misconception. And, when misconception is the problem, karma cannot be the solution. Only jnaanam can remove the misconception and therefore, jnaanam alone can be the solution to the problem".

In verse 73, the Achaaryaa comes back to abedha paksha kandanam. He first points out to the poorva pakshi: "If you accept abedha pakshaa, every jnaani should know that he is one with paramaathmaa – the conviction 'aham paramaathma abhinna: asmi'. But, in your philosophy, paramaathmaa is not nirguna Brahman – but, the totality of Creation – 'One' from the angle of totality and 'many' from the stand of individuality – samastha vyastha bhootha: - enjoying 'Unity in Diversity'".

(The 'unity-in-diversity' view is similar to India being one nation, from total angle, with different states from individual angle.)

The Achaaryaa proceeds: "Thus, in your philosophy, when the jnaani has the conviction that he is abiding in the all-inclusive Brahman, (not the nirguna brahman of Advaita), the fourteen lokas, the four purushaarthaas, punyam-paapam etc. all being in that Brahman, the jnaani would have realized all the purushaarthaas and when all purushaarthaas have thus been achieved by him, why should he do any karma at all?"

- ब्रह्मणि एव अवतिष्ठतः - For one (the jnaani) who abides in Brahman,
- समस्तव्यस्तभूतस्य - who is in the form of unity and diversity,
- सर्व अनन्यत्व दर्शिनः - who is of the view that all things are non-different from him, Ananyathvam – aikyam.
- कर्मणि को हेतुः - what is the reason (motive) to perform any karma?
- ब्रूत - Answer (this question of mine)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 74:

सर्व कर्म निमित्त सम्भव असम्भवाभ्याम् सर्व कर्म सङ्करश्च प्राप्नोति । यस्मात् ।

Further, as there is jointly the possibility as well the impossibility grounds of all action, confusion of actions results. For:

Sureswaraachaarya continues with abedha paksha kandanam - negation of the abedha pakshaa of the bedha abedha vaadhi.

He argues (to the abedha paksha vaadhi): "You say that the jnaani gets the knowledge 'aham brahma asmi', the all-inclusive Brahman; the fourteen lokaas, the entire humanity, all the varnaas and all the aasramaas are included in this Brahman. Your jnaani claims that he is this total Brahman; therefore, if somebody asks him 'What is your varna? What is your aasramaa?', how would he reply? What is the specific designation of samastha Brahman? I want to know this, since all vaidhika karmaas are based on the specific designation of the individual. Rituals are different for different people based on their Vedas, varnaas and asramaas. A jnaani also, if he wants to do karma, has to identify himself with a particular varna and a particular aasramaa. Since your jnaani identifies with samastha vyastha Brahman and, therefore, he identifies with all varnaas and aasramaas, he will have to do all the karmaas, prescribed for all human beings of different varnaas and aasramaas. While this is physically impossible, this will also result in karma sankara dosha: - a mix-up of all karmaas. Alternately, since your jnaani cannot specify any particular designation ("all designations" would only mean "no specific designation") he has to abandon all karmaas. Therefore, in abedha pakshaa, karma is not possible; jnaana-karma samucchayam is also not possible".

- सर्व कर्म निमित्त सम्भव असम्भवाभ्याम् - Since conditions for all vaidhika karmaas will either be there or not there at all,

Sarva karma nimittha - Conditions for all vaidhika karmaas; Sambhava- will result (from one angle – when the jnaani has all varnaas and aasramaas); Asambhava - will not be there (from another angle – when the jnaani has no varnaa or aasramaa)

- सर्व कर्म सङ्करः च प्राप्नोति - Mix-up of all karmaa will result .
- (सर्व कर्म अभावः प्राप्नोति - No karma will be possible.) This remark is “supplied”.
- यस्मात् - I will explain this (in the following verse)

Chapter I: Verse 74 –

सर्वजात्यादिमत्वे अस्य नितरां हेतु असम्भवः।

If one sees himself as belonging to all castes etc., there is no ground for action. Unless one specifically identifies oneself with one particular caste and station, no action can be initiated.

In this verse, Sureswaraachaarya explains the second objection, viz. “when there is no specific varnam or aasramam, the individual (the eka saasthra vaadha jnaani) cannot perform any karma”. “Sarvakarma abhaava.” situation is explained.

- अस्य - For this jnaani (whose conviction is “aham samastha vyastha roopa Brahman” – not nirguna Brahman)
- सर्व जात्यादिमत्वे - possessing all the varnaas (not only the main four varnaas – but also the intermediary varnaas, resulting from inter-varna marriages) नितरां हेतु असम्भवः (भवति) - there is really no specific designation.
- Nitharaam - really / totally; hethu – designation (in this context)
- विशेषं हि अनुपादाय - Since the jnaani cannot have any specific designation (varna and aasrama)

Visesham – specific / particular (“designation” is implied); anupaadaaya – not identifying with.

- कर्म न प्रवर्तते – Karma is not possible.

It is because of this reason, the “inter-caste weddings” pose a problem, with regard to the wedding rituals. Any vaidhika karma requires the qualifying varna, and a proper marriage (vaidhika) ritual would require the participating couple to be of the same varna, for the ritual to be effective.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 75:

स्यात् विधिः अध्यात्म अभिमानात् इति चेत न एवम् । यस्मात् ।

If it is said that action is possible as the agent identifies himself, with one particular body etc., we deny that possibility. The reason is as follows:

The bedha abedha vaadhi may suggest a solution: "Why not the jnaani go by the designation of his physical body i.e. by the varna, in which he was born?"

- अध्यात्म अभिमानात् - "Based on identification with his own specific physical body (the varna in which he was born),
- विधिः स्यात् - the Rules (vaidhika karma vidhi) can apply"
- इति चेत् - If it is thus claimed,
- न एवम् - it is not possible.
- यस्मात् - The reason is as follows:

Chapter I: Verse 75 –

न च अध्यात्म अभिमानः अपि विदुषः अस्ति आसुरत्वतः ।
विदुषः अपि आसुरः चेत् अस्य निष्फलं ब्रह्मदर्शनम् ॥ ७५ ॥

Since such identification with the body is demonic in nature, an enlightened man cannot have it. If an enlightened man also can be demonic, the vision of Brahman would be futile.

Why cannot the jnaani perform vaidhika karmaas, based on his physical body (varna decided by the birth of the body)? Ans: The very idea is jarring (discordant), since a jnaani does not have deha abhimaanaa; in other words, jnaanam and ahankaaraa cannot co-exist in an individual.

This objection may be countered by the claim that jnaanam can be from paaramaarthika dhrushti and ahankaaraa can be from vyaavahaarika dhrushti. And, in support of this claim, Verse 8 of Chapter V – Bhagavadh Githa may be quoted : "Naiva kinchith karomi ithi yuktha: manyetha thathvavith / pasyan srnvan sprusan jigran asnan gacchan svapan svasan" – "Even while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining and breathing, the disciplined knower of Truth understands 'I do not do anything at all'".

But, this argument cannot be presented by the eka saasthra vaadhi, since, he does not recognise the distinction of paaramaarthika and vyaavahaarika dhrushtis. Only the Advaitin has the bedha of paaramaarthika and vyaavahaarika stages. For the eka saasthra vaadhi, ahankaaraa and aathmaa are equally real; there are no different orders of reality.

While for the Advaitin, Brahman is paaramaarthikaa, jagrath avasthaa (waking state) is vyaavahaarika and svapna avasthaa (dream state) is praathibhaasikaa, for the dvaitin and the visishta advaitin, the three stages - paaramaarthika, vyaavahaarika and praathibhaasika are all equally real and so are Brahman, jagrath avasthaa and svapna avasthaa.

The eka saasthra vaadhi, therefore, cannot defend himself, by resorting to the distinction between paaramaarthika dhrushti and vyaavahaarika dhrushti.

- विदुषः - For a wise person,
- अध्यात्म अभिमानः अपि - physical identification also
- न अस्ति - is impossible,
- आसुरत्वतः - since such identification is a result of ajnaanam.

Ahankaaraa is born out of ignorance. A jnaani cannot have ignorance and, therefore, he cannot have ahankaaraa. How, then, can he have a varna or an asramaa? Without these qualifications, how, then, can he resort to karma? Where, then, is the possibility of jnaana-karma samucchayam?

If it is argued that a jnaani has ahankaaraa also i.e. jnaanam and ajnaanam co-exist, for the purpose of jnaana-karma samucchayam, what is the result of this view?

- विदुषः आसुरः अपि चेत् - If it is claimed that the wise person has ajnaana janya ahankaaraa also,
- ब्रह्मदर्शनम् निष्फलं स्यात् - then, the jnaanam becomes useless.

Jnaanam is meant for ajnaana nivritthi. If they are to co-exist, then why should one strive for jnaanam at all?

The word "aasura moham" was explained under verse 70, as "delusion natural to materialistic persons". "Aasura:" and "aasurathvatha:", in this verse 75, refer to the individual who is materialistic and is, therefore, an ajnaani, with ahankaaraa domination.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 76:

अज्ञान कार्यत्वात् न समकालं न अपि क्रमेण जान कर्मणोः वस्तु अवस्तु तन्त्रत्वात् सङ्गतिः अस्ति इत्येवम् निराकृतः अपि काशं कुशं वा अवलम्ब्याह ।

As action is the effect of ignorance, knowledge depending on reality and action not so depending on reality, cannot be combined either at the same time or in succession. Though this position has been already refuted, it presents itself as if catching at straws:

Sureswaraachaarya says: "I have shown that a jnaani cannot have ajnaanam and, therefore, he cannot have ahankaaraa, deha abhimaanaa, varna asrama designations, vaidhika karma and jnaana karma samucchayam. Karma cannot join jnaanam either simultaneously or after jnaanam- jnaana kaale vaa jnaana anthare vaa".

Jnaana kaale - simultaneous with jnaanam. Karma is not possible, simultaneous with jnaanam, since identification with the body (a prerequisite for karma) and withdrawal from the identification (a result of jnaanam) cannot be simultaneous.

Jnaana anthare - After jnaana janyam. Karma is not possible, after jnaana janyam also, since, when ignorance is gone, how can there be deha abhimaanaa (a prerequisite for karma)?

- अज्ञान कार्यत्वात् - Since karma is a product of ignorance,
- समकालं - simultaneously
- क्रमेण अपि - or sequentially (after jnaanam)
- जानकर्मणोः सङ्गतिः - the combination between jnaanam and karma,
- न (भवति) - (is) not possible.

Sangathi: - (in this context) means samucchaya: - elsewhere, it means a "link".

The use of "kramena" has to be interpreted carefully. In Advaita, karma preceding jnaanam is accepted; in fact, considered essential, for acquisition of saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, after achieving which, the seeker drops karma and proceeds through jnaana yoga. This sequence is possible. What is considered impossible (by the Advaitin) is jnaana anthara karma – karma following jnaanam.

Sureswaraachaarya, then, takes up another important technical point. He refers to another difference between jnaanam and karma.

He describes jnaanam as vasthuthanthram - over which one has no choice; in other words jnaanam is not will-based.

Karma is described by the Achaaryaa as avasthuthanthram – what can be chosen; in other words, "what depends on will".

For a clear understanding, the example of attending a Vedhaantha class is cited. While the student can exercise his will

- (1) in choosing to attend or not to attend the class,
- (2) on the mode of traveling to the class,
- (3) on his posture, while sitting in the class,

(4) on the control of his mind, in paying attention to the teachings etc., he has no choice on the message he receives. He has choice only over his actions – but, not on the knowledge he receives.

“Thus jnaanam and karma are two essentially different processes and therefore, they cannot be combined” is the Achaaryaa's argument, in this portion.

40. Chapter I, Verses 76 to 78 (20-01-2007)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting the bedha-abadha vaadha: In this philosophy, the Brahman is looked upon as samastha vyastha bhootham, existing in the form of "One Total" and existing in the form of "Plurality" (as individuals, beings and things) also - "Unity in Diversity". In the view of these poorva pakshis, "Unity" is sathyam and "Diversity" is also sathyam.

Advaitam also talks of "unity in diversity". The difference is, that, in Advaitam, "unity" is sathyam and "diversity" is mithyaa. Since, to a bedha-abadha-vaadhi, both unity and diversity are equally sathyam and therefore, Brahman is samastha vyastha bhootham, the question arises: "What is the relationship of the jeevaathmaa, with such a brahman? Is the jeevaathmaa different from the samastha-vyastha-bhootha Brahman or identical with the samastha-vyastha-bhootha Brahman?". The poorva pakshi responds: "It is neither pure bedha nor pure abadha – but, bedhaabadha – Difference in Non-difference".

Sureswaraachaarya is refuting this philosophy. He does this, in three stages –from bedha paksha view, from abadha paksha view and from bedaabadha pakshaa view.

In verse 70, he started with refutation of abadha pakshaa; in verses 71 and 72, he refuted the bedha pakshaa and came back to abadha pakshaa, in verse 73; abadha paksha niraasa: (refutation of abadha pakshaa) goes on upto verse 77.

In the abadha pakshaa viewpoint, 'I', (the jeevaathmaa), claim one-ness with samastha-vyastha-brahman.

The Achaaryaa says: "Once I claim one-ness with the samastha-vyastha Brahman, it would mean that I have all varnaas and all aasramaas, identified with me. I cannot claim to be of any one particular varna or any one particular aasramaa. As long as I identify with my individual body, I can claim to belong to a particular varna and to a particular aasramaa. But, once I identify with the samastha-vyastha-bhootha Brahman, I assume all varnaas and all aasramaas. This results in a tricky situation: either I will have to do all karmaas or I am not qualified to do any karma, since being a samastha-vyastha-brahman, I cannot lay claim to any particular varna or aasramaa, whereas, for any vaidhika karma, the appropriate varna and aasramaa are pre-requisites. Before I achieved the jnaanam "aham brahma asmi", I had a particular designation – varna and asramaa - and the karmaas specified for that particular designation were possible; but, at this stage, jnaanam was absent. After acquiring jnaanam, (jnaana anthare), because of the loss of specific designations, no karma is possible. In effect, karma – either along with knowledge (samakaalam) or after acquiring knowledge (kramena) - is not possible."

Sureswaraacharya adds a brief, but, important note. "Jnaanam and karma have essentially different nature. Karma depends on human will. Jnaanam, on the other hand, does not depend on human will". The Aacharya uses the terms vasthu thanthraa (will-based) for karma and avasthu thanthraa (non-will-based) for jnaanam. Adi Sankara discusses this topic in his Brahma Sootra Baashyam (1.1.4) and in his prakarana, "Sarva Vedhaantha Saara Sangraha:".

- वस्तु अवस्तु तन्त्रत्वात् - since one (karma) is dependent on human will and the other (jnaanam) is not dependent on human will,
- जान कर्मणोः सतिः न अस्ति - combination of jnaanam and karma cannot be done.

"Varna aasrama designation is a pre-requisite for karma" is the Achaaryaa's stand. The poorva pakshi may raise an objection, in desperation, realizing that he was losing in the debate.

- इति एवम् निराकृतः अपि - Though the refutation has thus been made,
- काशं कुशं वा अवलम्ब्याह - the poorva pakshi may hold on to some idea or other, similar to a drowning man clutching to dry grass.

Chapter I: Verse 76 –

अथ अध्यात्मं पुनः यायात् आश्रितः मूढतां भवेत् ।

सः करोति एव कर्माणि कः हि अजं विनिवारयेत् ॥ ७६ ॥

If, by some chance, the enlightened one identifies himself with the body, he is lapsing into stupidity. He certainly performs actions. Who can prevent a fool?

What is the flimsy explanation given by the bedha- abedha vaadhi? He may argue: "Let us assume, that, after gaining the knowledge 'aham brahma asmi', why should not the jnaani come back to his deha abhimaanam and his original varnaa and aasramaa, to claim a particular designation for performance of the related vaidhika karma?"

- अथः "Thereafter (i.e. after acquiring jnaanam)
- अध्यात्मं – vyashti sareeram / varna aasrama abhimaanam
- पुनः यायात् - again comes back".

If such an argument is given, what happens? The Aacharya is quick to point out: "such a situation only means, that the jnaani has come back to 'ignorance'"

- मूढतां आश्रितः भवेत् - He has come back to ajnaanam.

"Deha abhimaanaam" indicates that "aham brahma asmī" is only lip-service.

- सः कर्मणि करोति एव - Such a person, necessarily, will take up karmaas.

This is a hypothetical situation; once jnaanam is really attained, there is no getting back. The Achaaryaa is discussing only a hypothetical situation.

- कः हि अजं विनिवारयेत् - Who can stop such a person from becoming an ajnaani (and performing karmaas again)?

Karma abhimaanam will come back with deha abhimaanam.

"Therefore, how can this mean jnaana-karma samucchayam?" asks the Achaaryaa "once the jnaani comes back to deha abimanaa, jnaanam is gone; only karma is there. How, then, can there be jnaana-karma samucchayam? Jnaanam and karma are mutually exclusive".

Jnaana kaale varna aasrama: na asthi, karma na bhavathy (At the time of jnaanam, varna and aasrama are gone; so, there can be no karma) | Karma kaalee varna aasrama bhaadha: na asthi, jnaanam na bhavathy (If and when karma is undertaken, non-identification with varna and aasrama is not possible and therefore, ajnaanam returns) |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 77:

सिद्धत्वात् च न साध्यम् । यतः ।

The ideal is already accomplished and it is not something to be attained afresh. This is so, because:

Sureswaraachaarya gives another argument, in the context of abedha paksha: - "When the knowledge 'I am samastha vyastha bootha Brahman asmī is achieved, karma is not possible, from another angle also. When I claim that I am 'one' with Brahman, I am 'one' with all human beings ; I am 'one' with all vaidhikaas; I am 'one' with all the people, with all the varnaas and aasramaas; I am 'one' with all the nithya-naimitthika karmaas performed by the different people of different varnaas and assramaas, to different injunctions. Samastha vyastha bootha Brahman includes the karmaas also; in other words, karmaas are svaroopam of the samastha vyastha bootha Brahman of the bedha-abadha-vaadhi. (In advaitam, Brahman is nirgunam.) And, therefore, karmaas become svaroopam of the bedha-abadha-vaadha jnaani also, once he identifies with the samastha vyastha bhootha Brahman. What is 'svaroopam' need not be accomplished by effort, since, "svaroopam", by definition, is "natural", i.e. what is "effortlessly present". Karmaas, therefore, need not be undertaken, after jnaanam".

The Achaaryaa gives an example for svaroopam of a living person- "breathing". The bedha-abadha-jnaani has karma as his svaroopam and hence, he need not take efforts to perform karma. Therefore, jnaana-karma-samucchayam is not possible.

Karmana svaroopena siddhathvaath saadhanam na bhavathi | For an ajnaani, karma is a saadhana; for a jnaani, karma is svaroopam.

- सिद्धत्वात् - Since all karmaas have been accomplished by the jnaani, as his very svaroopam,
- न साध्यम् – karma need not be accomplished, through effort.
- यतः - The cause:

"Therefore, you cannot present jnaana-karma-samucchaya: as a saadhana, just as I cannot present 'breathing' as a saadhanaa." – the Achaaryaa says in the following verse.

Chapter I: Verse 77 –

सामान्य इतर रूपाभ्यां कर्म आत्म एव अस्य योगिनः ।

निश्वास उच्छ्वासवत् तस्मात् न नियोगम् अपेक्षते ॥ ७७ ॥

In the yogin, action must be his very Self as universal or particular. It must be so independent of his effort, like respiration. Such being the case, it would need no injunction to that effect.

- कर्म अस्य योगिनः आत्म एव (भवति)- For this jnaani (of the bedha-abadha-vaadhaa), karma must be his very self.

This yogi, since he is the all-inclusive Brahman, includes everything in himself, including karma. For him "aham" includes "karma" also.

"Aathma", in this context, means "svaroopam".

Every object can be viewed from two perspectives – (1) general –saamaanya dhrushti and (2) particular – visesha dhrushti. For example, from saamaanya dhrushti, an individual is just a human being; but, from visesha dhrushti the same human being becomes an individual with a particular varna, aasramaa, gender etc. Vaidhika karmaas also can be viewed in these two perspectives: from saamaanya dhrushti, as just vaidhika karmaas; And , from visesha dhrushti, (1) as specific rituals following specific injunctions, belonging to a particular Veda, gothra etc., (2)as rituals prescribed for people of different varnaas, aasramaas etc., (3) as praathas sandhyaa, saayam sandhyaa, agni hothram etc. But, irrespective of the dhrushti, whether general or particular, all karmaas become the "nature" of the samastha-vyastha-bhootha-brahma-jnaani.

- सामान्य इतर रूपाभ्यां - in general or other (implying 'specific') nature.

All karmaas become the very nature of the jnaani. Like what?

- निश्वास उच्छ्वासवत् - similar to inhalation and exhalation.
- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- नियोगम् - prescription of karma / injunctions with regard to karma
- न अपेक्षते - is not required (for a jnaani).

Since karma cannot be prescribed, jnaana-karma-samucchayam is not possible.

With verse 77, abedha paksha niraasa: is over; the refutation was covered in verse 70 and later from verses 73 to 77 (totally six verses). Bedha paksha niraasa: was done in the two verses 71 and 72. The beda paksha: and the abeda paksha: should be looked upon as constituents or components of bedha-abedha paksha: /

Hereafter, Sureswaraachaarya negates the combination, bedha-abedha paksha: , as a mixture.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 78:

अस्तु तर्हि भिन्न अभिन्न आत्मकम् ब्रह्म । तथा च सति जान कर्मणी सम्भवतः भेद अभेद विषयत्वात् तयोः ।

Then, let Brahman be looked upon, as being both one and diversified. In that case, knowledge and action can very well be combined for they involve unity and diversity respectively.

This part of this sambhandha gadhyam is the poorva pakshi's suggestion. He says: "If I take only the beda pakshaa stand, where Brahman and jeeva can differ, I have the advantage of remaining in karma kaandaa and of doing karma, but, of course, the advaita jnaanam goes away. If I take only the abedha paksha stand, then the reverse happens – jnaanam remains, but, karma goes away. Then, why should I not hold on to both jnaana kaandaa and karma kaandaa together, so that I can have both jnaanam and karma? Individually, the two pakshaas – bedha and abedha – may be refuted by you (the advaitin). But, if I hold them together, how can you refute?"

- तर्हि - In that case (i.e. since bedha paksha and abedha paksha are refuted),
- ब्रह्म भिन्न अभिन्नात्मकं अस्तु - let Brahman be different and non-different from jeeva.

Bhinna (athmakam) – different from jeeva; abhinnaathmakam – identical with jeeva.

The poorva pakshi is anxious to maintain the validity of the Veda Poorva and Veda antha simultaneously. This is a tight proposition, which, many philosophers have been trying to reconcile. The Veda Poorva Baaghaas say "you are Isvara Daasaa"; the Veda Anatha Baaghaas, on the other hand say "you are Isvara". The philosophies of dvaita, visishta advaita, advaita etc., have all been trying to solve this problem. Validating the Veda poorva and Veda antha simultaneously is difficult. "Should I take to the jeeva-jagath-Isvara triad format or the aathma-anaathmaka binary format?" is a question disturbing every seeker.

- तथा च सति - If you judiciously combine both,
- जान कर्मणी सम्भवतः - you can practice both jnaana and karma simultaneously.

Jnaana karmani – the pair of jnaana and karma; sambhavatha: - is possible.

But, how? According to the poorva pakshi,

- तयोः भेद अभेद विषयत्वात् - since they are bedha vishayam and abedha vishayam / since they involve unity and diversity.

The Aachaaryaa responds.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 77:

तत्र तावत् अयम् पक्षः एव न सम्भवति । किम् कारणम् । न हि भिन्नः अयम् इति अभेदबुद्धिं अनिराकृत्य भेदबुद्धिः पदार्थम् आलिङ्गते ।

In the first place, this theory itself is untenable. What is the reason? Nothing can be conceived as 'different' without denying the conception that it is 'non-different'.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "It is very nice to be all – accommodating. No doubt veda is pramaanam, given out by God Himself – both the Veda Poorva and the Veda antha. Veda poorva talks of jeeva-Isvara bedham, while, Veda antha talks of jeeva-Isvara aikyam. But, unfortunately, you cannot combine bedha and abedha, since it is logically untenable, though Veda talks of both of them."

Vedas are to be respected; but, in the process, logic should not be given up. Vedhantha does not accept blind belief. While interpreting Veda, care should be taken to make sure that the interpretation does not go against logic. This approach is healthy sraddha. "Giving respect to Veda, at the cost of logic" is one extreme stand and "holding on to logic, disregarding Veda" (the naasthika vaadham) is another extreme stand.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "Hold on to both sruthi and yukthi, as pramaanam. Your interpretations should not contradict each other. Bedha abedha vaadhaa is contrary to logic. Opposite attributes cannot co-exist in one place. Jeeva can be either identical with or different from Brahman; but, cannot be both identical and different. Karma kaandaa and jnaana kaandaa cannot co-exist; therefore, jnaana-karma samucchayam is not possible."

An interesting issue, though not discussed here, in Naishkarmya Siddhi, is relevant: "If bedha and abedha cannot co-exist, if jnaana kaandaa and karma kaandaa cannot co-exist, if jnaanam and karma cannot co-exist, how is it, that, in the Bhagavadh Githa, Lord Krishna advises the jnaani to continue with karma? (Sloka 25 – Chapter III – "sakthaa: karmani avidhvaamsa: yathaa kurvanthi bhaaratha. kuryaath vidvaan thathaa asaktha: chikeershu: lokasangraham" – "Oh Arjuna! Just as ignorant people act with attachment to action, a wise man also should act, without attachment, with a desire to maintain the harmony of the society")".

The answer to this doubt: "Opposites cannot normally co-exist; but, they can co-exist under a rare condition, when they are of different orders of reality – sathyam and mithyaa, like the dry sand and mirage water, where the sand is sathyam and the mirage mithyaa. Advaitam looks upon abedha as sathyam and bedha as mithyaa. Under that condition, they can co-exist".

But the beda-abedha-vaadhi claims that both bedha and abedha are equally sathyam. Hence, the problem.

41. Chapter I, Verses 78 to 80 (27-01-2007)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 78:

Then, let Brahman be looked upon as being both one and diversified. In that case, knowledge and action can very well be combined for they involve unity and diversity respectively. In the first place, this theory itself is untenable. What is the reason? Nothing can be conceived as 'different' without denying the conception that it is 'non-different'. If this principle is not admitted, the significance of terms 'different' and 'non-different' must be construed in some extraordinary sense. If even this consequence that they are to be conceived in a sense not supported by proper grounds, is accepted, the fact, that, both unity and diversity are affirmed, would imply by virtue of the unity (between jeeva and Brahman) that Brahman itself would be subject to misery. Therefore, it is said:

As a part of the refutation of jnaana-karma samucchaya vaadham, Sureswaraachaarya is analyzing that particular type of philosophy, known as bedha-abadha vaadhaa. Therein, he first talked about the logical problems if bedha vaadhaa is accepted; thereafter, he discussed the logical problems in accepting abadha vaadhaa. Now, in this portion, the Achaaryaa is talking about the problems that will result, if bedhaabadha vaadha (the combination of bedha and abadha) is accepted. He is refuting the bedhaabadha combination theory.

The first two sentences in this sambhandha gadhyam ("Asthu tharhi bhinna abhinnaathmakam brahma | Thathaa cha sathi jnaana karmanee sambhavatha: bedha abadha vishyathvaath thayo:" - "Then, let Brahman be looked upon as being both one and diversified. In that case, knowledge and action can very well be combined, for they involve unity and diversity respectively") present the poorva pakshi's matha (view point). Thereafter, follows the refutation of the viewpoint, by Sureswaraachaarya.

This poorva pakshi (bedhaabadha vaadhi) gives equal importance to Veda Poorvaa and Veda Anathaa, giving the reason that they are both given by the Lord and therefore, equally pramaanam. He says: "Both Veda Poorvaa and Veda anthaa should be treated on equal footing. Both karma kaandaa and jnaana kaandaa are to be equally accepted. In karma kaandaa, jeevaathma-paramaathma bedham is clearly mentioned; karmaas are prescribed, based on the jeeva – Isvara bedham only. Therefore, we have to accept the bedham and also the karma saadhanaa. Equally, we should accept the jnaana kaandam also, where, of course, jeeva-Isvara aikyam is talked about. We have to, therefore, accept jeeva-Isvara aikyam and the jnaana saadhanaa also".

"Accepting both equally", the bedhaabedha vaadhi continues: "we practice a composite system, wherein bedha and abedha are both accepted; karma saadhanaa and jnaana saadhanaa are both accepted. Therefore, lifelong karma should be performed – samucchayaa should be practiced. After death, mokshaa is attained, by this."

Jeevan mukthi is not accepted by this poorva pakshi.

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this view.

- तत्र तावत् अयम् पक्षः एव न सम्भवति - This view itself is not acceptable / not tenable.
- किं कारणम् - What is the reason (for not accepting this theory)?
- भिन्नः अयम् इति बेद बुद्धिः- This concept of 'difference'(i.e. jeevathmaa is different from paramaathmaa),

If I want to perceive myself as different from paramaathmaa, such perception is beda buddhi: ("Buddhi:", in this context, does not mean "intellect"; it means "cognition / understanding".) This perception has to displace another perception. What is the perception to be displaced?

- अभेद बुद्धिं अनिराकृत्य -without setting aside (rejecting) the 'non- different' concept,

"Abedha buddhi:"is the conviction "I am identical with paramaathmaa".

- पदार्थम् हि न आलिङ्गते - cannot certainly be entertained.

The literal meaning of "Aalingathe" is "embraced"; in this context, it means "entertained/maintained".

In Advaita philosophy, it is possible to be a bakthaa and Baghavaan simultaneously; from vyaavahaarika drushti – a baktha and from the paaramaarthika dhrushti – Bhagavaan Himself. "Bedha" is accepted by the Advaitin, in the vyaavahaarika plane and "abedha" is realized by him, in the paaramaarthika plane. The opposites- bedha and abedha - can co-exist, if they are in different orders of reality. The poorva pakshi, on the other hand, does not even recognize two orders of reality – for him, both bedha and abedha are equally sathyam, because of which, Sureswaraachaarya points out: "abedha buddhim aniraakruthya bedha buddhi: padhaartham na aalingathe" – "without negating the concept of 'non-difference', the perception of 'difference' cannot be maintained".

“You have to accept only one of the two. You cannot say that both bedha and abedha are equally acceptable. ‘That their co-existence is a logical contradiction and only an imagination’ should be accepted by you” the Achaaryaa tells the poorva pakshi.

If the poorva pakshi does not accept this, what is the consequence?

- एवम् अनभ्युपगमे - If this logical contradiction is ignored (by the poorva pakshin),

“Then, you have to consider the bedha-abedha combination as an abnormal / mysterious theory” contends the Achaaryaa.

- भिन्न अभिन्न पदार्थयाः - the meanings of the terms ‘different’ and ‘non- different’
- अलौकिकत्वं प्रसज्येत - will have to be construed in some extraordinary sense.

Alaukikathvam - Extraordinary (“do not ask questions; accept even if it is sarva pramaana viruddha: - against all evidence”). Prasajyetha - will have to be construed.

Later, the Achaarya uses the word nishpramaanakam , to describe this stand .

The poorva pakshi may reply to the Advaitin: “Your maayaa is anirvachaneeyam – indescribable. Then, why should not our bedha-abedha concept be extraordinary?”.

- अथ निष्प्रमाणकं अपि - Though the concept of bedha-abedha is against all
- pramaanams, such as prathyakshaa, anumaanaa and saasthraa,
- आश्रीयते तदपि - if you are going to follow this,
- उभय पक्ष अभ्युगमात् - because you are accepting both bedha and abedha,
- अभेद पक्षे - by virtue of the unity (between jeeva and Brahman)
- ब्रह्म दुःखि स्यात्- Brahman (Isvara) will become a miserable samsaari.

If only bedha pakshaa (jeeva and Isvara are different) is accepted, jeeva is samsaari and Isvara is not; which is conceivable. But, in abedha pakshaa, the jeeva and Isvara being the same, Isvara will become a samsaari, associated with jeeva's samsaaraa. Later, Sureswaraacharya adds: “Not only does Isvara become a samsaari - He becomes a great samsaari, since He is associated with all the jeevaas and will be associated with the samsaaraa of every jeeva. Sarva jeeva dhu:kam (not only of the humans – but, of all the beings) will be Isvara's, in abedha paksha. Isvara will be a mahaa-samsari, though He is sarvagnya: (omniscient) and sarva sakthimaan (omni-potent). Therefore, beda-abedha paksha: is a ridiculous / absurd proposition”.

अत आह - Hence, I say:

Chapter I: Verse 78 –

भिन्न अभिन्नं विशेषः चेत् दुःखि स्यात् ब्रह्म ते ध्रुवम् ।

असेष दुःखिता च स्यात् अहो प्रजात्मवादिनाम् ॥ ७८ ॥

Your Brahman should be surely subject to misery if Brahman is both identical with and different from the individuals. What is more, all the misery should affect Brahman itself. This is indeed wonderful wisdom, on your part.

Sureswaraachaarya condenses the same statements, in the verse.

ब्रह्म विशेषः भिन्न अभिन्नम् चेत् - If Brahman is different and identical with jeevaas, Visesha: - jeeva, in this context.

- ते (ब्रह्म) - Your Brahman
- दुःखि स्यात् - will be subject to misery,
- ध्रुवम् - surely / certainly.

This problem is pointed out to the Visishtaadvaitins also: "If all jeevaas become part of Isvara / the sareeram of Isvara, then, Isvara will have to suffer the sorrows of all jeevaas. Isvara will become a samashti samsaari".

In Advaita, Isvara will never be afflicted by sorrow, since sorrow is mithyaa and hence can be transcended. Only if mithyaa is not accepted, problems arise. While brahma sathyam is accepted by every philosopher, jagan mithyaa is a unique concept of Advaitam, which concept resolves many logical problems.

- अशेष दुःखिता च स्यात्:- It (your Brahman) has to share the sorrows of all living beings (not only humans).

The Visishtaadvaitin may reply: "Dhuh:kam will not belong to Bhagavaan. Only positive attributes and sukham will belong to Him". In that case, the problem will be that Bhagavaan will be limited. He will not be anantha: - but sa antha: / Certain things will be outside Bhagavaan; He will not reach areas where sorrows are there. In effect, you will have problems whether you exclude or include sorrows in Bhagavaan, (if sorrows are not looked upon as mithyaa).

The only solution is to superimpose sorrow in Bhagavaan. Then, sorrow will be 'in' Bhagavaan - but, not affect Bhagavaan. This is the result of the Advaitin's view.

अहो प्रजात्मवादिनाम् - Wonderful indeed is the wisdom of the bedha- abedha vaadhi!
(a sarcastic comment by the Achaaryaa.)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 79:

तस्मात् सम्यक् एव अभिहितं न जानकर्मणोः समुच्चयः इति उपसंहियते ।

Therefore, it is being concluded that the contention that knowledge and action cannot be combined is perfectly sound:

- तस्मात् - Therefore (i.e. because of the reasons given – from Verse 54, where samucchaya vaadha kandanam started),
- सम्यक् एव अभिहितम् - the proposition I gave is perfectly sound and proper. What proposition?
- जान कर्मणोः समुच्चयः न (सम्भवति) - Combination of jnaanam and karma is not possible.
- उपसंहियते- (Therefore, the topic) is being closed.

Chapter I: Verse 79 –

तमः अन्द्गत्वं यथा भानोः अग्नेः शीताद्गता यथा ।

वारिणः च उष्णता यद्दत् जानस्य एवं क्रियाद्गता ॥ ७९ ॥

Just as the sun cannot be a contributory factor of darkness, fire cannot have cold as its part and water cannot be combined with heat, knowledge cannot be integrated with action.

Conclusion of the topic is done in this verse.

Jnaana karma samucchayam is as illogical as the three examples given in this verse.

- तमः भानोः अन्द्गत्वं यथा- Similar to darkness being part of the sun (the sun having darkness, as its part),
- यथा शीता अग्नेः अद्गता- similar to coolness being part of fire,
- (यथा) उष्णता वारिणः च (अद्गता) - similar to heat being part of natural water,

According to tharka saasthraa, the 'nature' of water is 'coolness'.

- यद्दत् - like the three examples given,

- जानस्य एव क्रिया अङ्गता – jnaanam and karma cannot be integrated.

If thathpurusha samaasa interpretation is given, kriyaa: anga: is kriyaanga: (jnaanam being anga: of kriyaa); if bahuvreehi samaasa interpretation is given, kriyaa anga: yasya is kriyaanga: (kriyaa being anga: of jnaanam). Jnaanam cannot be part of kriyaa and kriyaa cannot be part of jnaanam. Samucchaya:, is, therefore, not possible.

With this, samucchaya kandanam is over. Sureswraachaarya wants to move to the next topic.

Sambhanda gadhyam to Verse 80:

यथोक्त उपपत्ति बलेन एव पूर्व पक्षस्य उत्सारितत्वात् वक्तव्यम् न अवशेषितम् इत्यतः

प्रतिपत्ति कर्मवत् पूर्वपक्ष परिहाराय यत्किञ्चित् तद् वक्तव्यम् इत्यतः इदम् अभिधीयते ।

By these arguments, the prima facie view stands refuted (in substance). Nothing more remains to be said. But, still, the points raised by the poorva pakshin are answered now (formally) for completing the refutation: (TEXT MEANING)

- यथोक्त उपपत्ति बलेन - By the strength of the arguments given (by me)
- Yathoktha - as said; upapatthi - arguments; balena – by the strength of.
- पूर्वपक्षस्य उत्सारितत्वात् – since the poorvapakshi's view stands rejected,
- अवशेषितम् वक्तव्यम् न - nothing more is to be said.
- इत्यतः - Therefore,
- पूर्व पक्ष परिहाराय – for the purpose of rejecting other theories of the poorva pakshi,

The theories will be mentioned later; the Achaaryaa only indicates his intention here. He gives an example for the "disposal" of the poorvapakshi.

- प्रति पत्ति कर्मवत् - like the prathi patthi karma,

The Achaaryaa was a poorva meemaamsakaa, before he became a sanyaasin and a disciple of Adi Sankara. Probably because of this fact, the example is from the karma kaandaa of the Vedas.

Prathi patthi karma is a technical word used in poorva meemaamsaa. Any ritual can be undertaken only with the materials specified by the karma kaandaa for that particular ritual; and, at the end of the ritual, the materials have no more function and have to be disposed off. But, according to the karma kaandaa injunctions, the 'disposal' cannot be done in any manner, other than the manner prescribed by the karma kaandaa itself. The disposal of the unwanted accessory, after conclusion of the ritual, has also to be done in the prescribed 'formal' manner. This 'formal' disposal is called 'prathi patthi karma' – the 'ritualistic disposal of unwanted material, after conclusion of the ritual'.

An example of such an accessory can be cited – krishna vishaana: - the horn of a type of a deer, probably a black buck. The horn is to be used, if necessary, for scratching parts of the body of the kartha, in case they itch, since use of the fingernails, for the purpose, is prohibited, during the course of the ritual. Karma kaandaa prescribes "chathvaare krishnavishaana: usrujeth" – "dispose off the krishna vishaana: in a hole (pit) dug in the ground, for the purpose".

Even the ritual performed for the assumption of the sanyaasa asramaa, consisting of formal renunciation of brahmacharya or grihastha aasrama rituals (the marks of brahmacharya and grihastha aasramaas – the sacred thread and tuft - are also "disposed off") is comparable to prathi patthi karma.

The Achaarya likens the "disposal of the poorva pakshi" to a prathi patthi karma. "I want to formally dispose off the poorva pakshi, similar to prathi patthi" he says.

- यत्किञ्चित् वक्तव्यम् - I have to make some more statements.
- इत्यतः - Therefore,
- इदम् अभिधीयते - I am saying this:

Chapter I: Verse 80–

"मुक्तेः क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वात्" इत्यादि अनुचितम् बहु ।

यदभाणि तदन्याय्यम् यथा तदधुना उच्यते ॥ ८० ॥

Commencing with the statement that 'release is attained by actions' (verse 9) many inappropriate assertions have been made. Now it is going to be demonstrated, that, all that is unreasonable.

Earlier, three types of poorva paksha vaadhaa were given – (1) from verse 9 to 13 (2) from verse 14 to 19 and (3) from verse 20 to 23.

Sureswaraachaarya goes back to the first group of poorva pakshis, though he had already discussed them. He negates their views now, in verses 80 to 84.

- "मुक्तेः क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वात्" इत्यादि - In the portions beginning with verse 9,
- बहु अनुचितम् अभाणि यत् - the many illogical / improper / defective theories made by the poorva pakshi,

"Bhan" meaning "to state"/ "to utter", is the root of the word abhaani.

- तत् अन्याय्यम् यथा तत् अधुना उच्यते - how illogical their statements are, I want to discuss now.

Thadh anyaayyam – their illogical character; yathaa thath – in the manner in which; adhunaa - now; uchyathe - I shall state.

42. Chapter I, Verses 80 to 81 (03-02-2007)

With the 79th verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa has completed the jnaana-karma-samucchaya vaadha kandanam, which he started in verse 54.

The Achaaryaa had introduced three groups of poorva pakshis, from verse 9 to verse 22. Of these three groups, the first poorva pakshi, introduced in verses 9 to 13, accepts that jnaanam is talked about in the scriptures; but, holds that jnaanam is not required for mokshaa and that karma, by itself, can give mokshaa. This poorva pakshi, is, therefore, named abhyupedhya karma vaadhi – "abhyupedhya" signifying that he accepts jnaanam, as a teaching of scriptures, though of course, he considers only karma as the saadhanam for moksham.

The 2nd group of poorva pakshi, introduced between verses 14 to 19, does not accept the very existence of aathma jnaanam as a subject of scriptures. He holds that no such subject as aathma jnaanam is taught by scriptures. He is, therefore, referred to as anabhyupedhya karma vaadhi - a staunch believer that karma is the only saadhanam for mokshaa and that, there is no such thing as aathma jnaanam.

Verses 20 to 22 covered the 3rd group of poorva pakshis – the samucchayavaadhi, whose view is that jnaanam, only when combined with karma or conversely karma combined with jnaanam, can lead to liberation.

The Achaaryaa is refuting the three groups, one by one. The first group – the abhyupedhya karma vaadhi - was refuted in verses 23 to 53. Then the Achaaryaa took up the 3rd group (without going into the 2nd), in verse 54. This samucchaya vaadha niraasa: was done by him, between verses 54 and 79.

In verse 80, the Achaaryaa goes back to the 1st poorva pakshi. He says: "I have not formally concluded the refutation of the 1st poorva pakshi. I would like to do so". He gives an introduction to this intention of his, in verse 80.

The abhyupedhya poorva pakshi, who, incidentally, has been refuted by Adi Sankaraachaarya also, even in his Upanishad Baashyams, has a peculiar theory. He first refers to the five types of karmaas – Nithya, Naimitthika, Kaamyam, Nishiddha and Praayaschittha.

Nithya and naimitthika karmaas are compulsory Vedic duty; non-performance of the nithya-naimitthika karmaas will result in incurring of a special type of paapam, termed prathyavaaya paapam.

Kaamyā karmaas are desire-based karmaas, performance of which will produce punyam for the karthaa, giving results in this janma or the later janmaas.

Nishiddha karmaas are "prohibited" actions, performance of which will produce paapam for the performer.

The first poorva pakshi argues: "We should manage our karmaas, in such an appropriate manner, that, at death, there will be no punyam or paapam to our account". The "appropriate manner" suggested by him: "Do not perform kaamyā karmaas at all; punyam, therefore, will not accrue. Punya balance will be reduced. Of course, avoid nishiddha karmaas; paapam resulting from such karmaas, is thus avoided. As for nithya-naimittika karmaas, perform them diligently, without failure, so that, pratyavaaya paapam will be avoided. By this method, at death, you will have no punyam or paapam accrued to your credit."

But, what about past karmaas? The poorva pakshi replies: "Exhaust the past karmaas, by experiencing their results. Punya karmaas will be exhausted by experiencing good things in life; paapa karma, by willingly suffering the results, not looking for solutions to your problems. Thus past karma should be exhausted, by sukha dhu:kha anubhavam". He continues: "Since no fresh punya-paapam has also been added, by managing your karmaas as explained, there will be nil-balance of punyam and paapam, at the time of death. There will, therefore, be, no punarjanma. This is mokshaa. Then, where is the need for vicharaa – sravana, manana, nidhidhyaasanam?"

These views of this poorva pakshi were covered in verses 9 to 13.

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "All these are impossible". In verses 81 to 84, he elaborately refutes the abhyupedhya karma vaadhi. Earlier also (in verses 23 to 53) he had refuted this poorva pakshi. He adds a few more details to his refutation now.

He gives an elaborate introduction to verse 81.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 81:

योयम् काम्यानां प्रतिषिद्धानां च त्यागः प्रतिजायते सा प्रतिजा तावत् न सक्व्यते अनुष्ठातुम् । किं कारणम् । कर्मणो हि निर्वृत्तात्मनः द्वाभ्यां प्रकाराभ्यां निवृत्तिः सम्भवति आरब्ध फलस्य उपभोगेन अनारब्ध फलस्य असुभस्य प्रायश्चित्तैः इति ।

The renunciation of actions prompted by desires and the prohibited actions, which has been advocated, is impossible of observance. What is the reason?

Actions that have already been performed cannot be given up in one of two ways. If the actions in question have already begun to produce their results, they are to be worked out by simply undergoing their results. If they have not begun to be operative in that fashion, they can be liquidated by expiatory rituals.

The Achaaryaa first talks about kaamyaa prathishiddha karma thyaaga: - renunciation of desire-based rituals and avoidance of prohibited actions. Kaamyaa karmaas produce punyam, and, are, therefore, associated with punyam. Nishiddha karmaas produce paapam, and, are, therefore, associated with paapam.

The poorva pakshi says: "Give up kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaas".

Sureswarachaarya asks: "Are you referring to the already performed (i.e. past) karmaas or the future performable karmaas?" Already performed kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaas, cannot obviously be "given up", since they have already been performed, similar to an arrow already shot.

- काम्यानां प्रतिषिद्धानां च त्यागः - Giving up of the kaamyaa and nishiddha karmaas
- योयम् प्रतिजायते - which you have suggested,
- सा प्रतिजा - such a suggestion,
- तावत् - as a first step
- न सक्व्यते अनुष्ठातुम् - is not possible of implementation.
- किं कारणम् - What is the reason / why do we say this?

The poorva pakshi had not talked about any distinction between past and future (kaamyaa/nishiddha) karmaas. But, to counter the poorva pakshi, the Achaaryaa uses the method of "vikalpa" - splitting the actions into "past" and "future".

- निवृत्तिः - The elimination
- निवृत्तात्मनः कर्मणः हि - of the karmaas of the nature of "already performed" (i.e. of past actions)

Nirvrtttham - already performed / krutham / anushtitham.

- द्वाभ्यां प्रकाराभ्यां संभवति - happens by only two other methods

Sureswaraachaarya divides the "past" karmaas also into two: (1) those past karmaas, which have started giving results and (2) those past karmaas, which have not yet matured / not yet ready for giving results / unfructified, (though already performed).

- आरम्भ फलस्य (निवृत्तिः) - (Elimination) of the fructifying performed karmaa,

- उपभोगेन - (is) by experiencing (the results).

There is no means by which one can remove or avoid the fructified karmaas; they have to be exhausted only by sukha-dhu:kha anubhavam.

- अनारब्ध फलस्य (निवृत्तिः) - (Elimination) of karmaas which have not started giving results,
- प्रायश्चित्तैः इति - (can be) by prayaschittha karmaas.

The Achaaryaa's contention is: "You cannot remove the past karmaas; you cannot stop the arrival of their results. Either experience them or neutralize them". But, there is a third method – the Vedhaanthic method, which the Achaaryaa talks about, next..

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

तृतीयः अपि त्यागप्रकार अकर्त्रात्म अवबोधात् स तु आत्मज्ञान अनभ्युपगमात् भवता न अभ्युगम्यते ।

A third way is also there and that is by the realization of the aathman, who is no agent of actions. But, this is not admitted by you, as you do not admit the knowledge in question.

The 3rd method of "removing" already performed karma is jnaanam. What jnaanam? The realization: "I am akarthaa and abokthaa".

- तृतीयः त्यागप्रकारः अपि - The third method of "giving up" tṛtīya - third; thyaagha - "giving up"; prakaara: - method.

- अकर्त्रात्म अवबोधात् (भवति) - (is) by realization of the aathmaa, who is akarthaa.

But, the poorva pakshi cannot use this method, since he wants to avoid jnaanam; he wants to attain liberation, without jnaanam.

- स तु - But, that method,
- आत्मज्ञान अभ्युपगमात् - since you do not accept the concept of Aathmajnaanam,
- भवता न अभ्युपगम्यते - is not admitted by you

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

तत्र यानि अनुप भुक्त फलानि अनारब्धफलानि तानि इस्वरेण अपि केनचित् अपि न शक्यन्ते परित्यक्तुम्।

The actions, whose results are not yet experienced and which have not yet begun to produce the results, cannot be renounced even by Ishvara.

Sureswaraachaarya mentioned three options with regard to performed punya-paapa karmaas:

- (1) By going through them (anubhavana)
- (2) By neutralizing them (by praayaschittha karmaas) and
- (3) Through jnaanam.

But, the poorva pakshi does not want to use any one of the methods; he does not want to experience them or neutralize them. He does not recognize jnaanam. The Achaaryaa says: "A fourth method of removing past punya-paapa karmaas, is not available".

- तत्र - In the context of
- यानि अनुपभुक्त फलानि - those karmaas whose palan is not experienced by us (yet),
- अनारब्धफलानि - since they are not ready for fructification,
- तानि परित्यक्तुम् न शक्यन्ते - there is no possibility of removing these Karmaas,
- इस्वरेण अपि केनचित् - by any one, including Ishvara.

Any past karma can fructify at any time; irrespective of an individual being virtuous in this janma, a past bad karma can create problems. The Achaaryaa warns: "Even Ishvara cannot avoid it". You cannot "write off" the unfructified past karma.

What about fructified karma?

Sambhandha gadhyam* (further) to Verse 81:

अथ आरब्ध फलानि त्यज्यन्ते तानि अपि न शक्यन्ते त्यक्तुम् ।

If it be said, that, actions which have begun to be productive of their results, are to be renounced, that is also impossible.

- अथ - On the other hand,
- आरब्ध फलानि - the karmaas which have started fructification
- त्यज्यन्ते - are to be renounced,
- तानि अपि त्यक्तुम् - to renounce them also,
- न शक्यन्ते - is impossible.

Sambhanda gadhyam* (further) to Verse 81:

किं कारणम् । अनिवृत्तेः । अनिवृत्तं हि चिकीर्षितं कर्म शक्यते त्यक्तुं प्रवृत्तिनिवृत्ती प्रति कर्तुः स्वातन्त्र्यात् ।

What is the reason? When once the actions have been performed, there can be no termination of them, except by going through their results or by expiation. What can be renounced are the actions not yet performed, but contemplated, for, in relation to them, the agent is free either to do them or abstain from them.

- किं कारणम् - What is the reason?
- अनिवृत्तेः - Since they have been already performed. (Therefore, you cannot escape your responsibility).

“Nirvratthe:” is a better reading, in the place of “anivratthe:”, for easier understanding, meaning the same.

Future actions can be given up; but, past ones cannot be disowned.

- अनिवृत्तम् कर्म हि - As for the karma which is not yet performed,
- चिकीर्षितं - but, which is being planned,
- त्यक्तुम् शक्यते - is capable of being renounced,

You have a choice with regard to future actions; but, not with past ones.

- कर्तुः स्वातन्त्र्यात्- since the kartha has the free-will,
- प्रवृत्तिनिवृत्ती प्रति - towards performing or non-performing.

This shows that Sureswaraachaarya accepts “freewill” with regard to future actions. “Future karmaas can be renounced” is important.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

निवृत्तेः तु कर्मणि तदसंभवात् दुरनुष्ठेयः प्रतिजातार्थः ।

In the case of actions already performed, the renunciation advocated is impossible.

- निवृत्तेः तु कर्मणि - With regard to past karmaas,
- तदसंभवात् - because of the impossibility (of calling them back)

(An incidental moral: Do not feel guilty about the past. But, resolve not to repeat the regretted action in the future. Guilt and regret are useless, since past is past.)

- प्रतिजात अर्थः - what you have suggested,

- दुर् अनुष्ठेयः - is impossible of being implemented.

Past cannot be removed. Accept the past. But, what about the future? Sureswaraachaarya says: "Even the proposition to give up future actions, on closer scrutiny, is not possible", though, he seemed to concede the possibility of giving up future actions, in the previous portion.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

अशक्य प्रतिजानाः च न च शक्यते प्रतिजातुं यावत् जीवं काम्यानि प्रतिषिद्धानि च कर्माणि न करिष्यामि इति सुनिपुणानाम् अपि सूक्ष्म अपराध दर्शनात्।

Further, the maxim recommends the impracticable. It is impossible to fulfill the resolve, that, one will abstain from desire-prompted and prohibited actions, all through his life; subtle failures are noted even in the wisest of men.

Sureswaraachaarya temporarily suspends the discussion on past punya-paapa karmaas. (He will take up this topic, later, again.) Now, he talks of future punya-paapa karmaas.

The poorva pakshi says: "We will avoid kaamya and nishiddha karmaas".

The Achaaryaa responds: "The human being has limited power and limited knowledge. So, wrong actions can result. Only Isvara can avoid wrong actions. The human being will continue to do mistakes; past mistakes may not be repeated, but, new mistakes may be performed. As long as desires are there, you cannot avoid kaamya karmaas. Hence, with regard to the future also, your proposal will not work."

43. Chapter I, Verses 81 to 83 (17-02-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya has come back to the 1st poorva pakshi once again, after completing the refutation of the 3rd poorva pakshi, in verses 54 to 79. Earlier, in verses 23 to 53, he had already put forth some arguments against the 1st poorva pakshi and now, in verses 80 to 84, he adds some more arguments.

The theory of the 1st poorva pakshi, presented by the Achaaryaa, in verses 9 to 13, is as follows: "You can attain mokshaa, without jnaanam, if you manage your karma skillfully, since it is only the karma balance, which is responsible for punarjanmam. The management consists in (1) avoiding performance of any kaamyaa karma, and therefore, the resulting punyam; (2) keeping away from nishiddha karmaas, and, therefore, the resulting paapam; and (3) performing the nithya-naimitthika karmaas diligently, without failure and thus avoiding prathyavaaya paapam. Fresh punya-paapam is, thus, carefully avoided. As for whatever karmaas that have already been accrued, exhaust them by 'experiencing' their results. Thus, at the time of death, the balance of karma, in your account, would be made 'nil', and, as a consequence, there will be no punarjanma".

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this systematically. First, he pointed out: "You can never disown past karmaas. Unperformed karmaas may possibly be given up. But, past karmaas, since they have already been performed, already stand in your credit. Past karmaas are also of two types: (1) Fructifying and (2) Non-fructifying. You cannot give up either of them."

The Achaaryaa discusses, in detail, the topics of parihaaraa for and experiencing of past karmaas, in a later context. In this portion, he only makes a statement, that past karmaas cannot be disclaimed, since they have been already performed.

Next, he takes up the future karmaas – he uses the words kaamyaa and nishidda, instead of punya and paapa karmaas. The poorva pakshi had said: "Avoid kaamyaa karmaas and the resulting punyam. Avoid nishidda karmaas and the resulting paapam"; Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Neither is possible".

- अशक्य प्रतिजानाःच - The proposals are impossible of implementation (meaning, that, nobody can undertake a prathingyaa not to do any kaamyaa karma or nishidda karmaa)

This is a brief reply – samskshepa uttharam. He elaborates: "You can never avoid nishiddha or kaamyaa karmaas, because, unknowingly some mistake or other will take place, since no human being is perfect. Even the most intelligent man may resort to nishiddha karma, bringing paapam."

- प्रतिजातुं न शक्यते - It is impossible to make (or fulfill) a resolution
- यावत् जीवं काम्यानि प्रतिषिद्धानि च कर्माणि न करिष्यामि इति – that “I shall not perform anykaamya or nishiddha karma, as long as I live”,
- सुनिपुणानाम् अपि - even by the most intelligent persons,
- सूक्ष्म अपराध दर्शनात् – since human knowledge is limited.

Adi Sankara also discusses the “avoidance of kaamya karmaas” elsewhere. He points out, that, as long as ignorance is there, kaamya karmaa cannot be avoided. Ignorance leads to apournathvam, which, in turn leads to desires – kaamaa and therefore, to kaamya karma, to achieve the desires. Ahankaara and mamakaara attitudes will certainly lead to kaamya karmaas, resulting in punyam.

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

प्रमाण अभावाः च । न च प्रमाणम् अस्ति मोक्षकामः नित्यनैमित्तिके कर्मणी कुर्यात् काम्य प्रतिषिद्धे च वर्जयेत् आरब्धफले च उपभोगेन क्षपयेत् इति ।

Again, there is no authority for this position. There is no scriptural statement to the effect, that, ‘an aspirant, after liberation, must perform obligatory actions perpetual and occasional, must give up desire-prompted and prohibited actions, and must exhaust the actions already productive of results, by undergoing those results’.

Sureswaraachaarya tells the poorva pakshi: “This method to mokshaa is your own invention. We do not have any saasthra pramaanam for your view”. Whenever apoureshaya matters are discussed, saasthra support is needed. Mokshaa means ‘freedom from punarjanma’; and, punarjanma is not logically provable or disprovable. One has to go only by saasthra pramaanam. After obtaining saasthra pramaanam, one can discuss the (apourusheya) subject logically; but, not without saasthra pramaanam. The Achaaryaa asks the poorva pakshi: “Show me the saasthric support for your view”. On the other hand, saasthraas say “jnaath eva kaivalyam”, rejecting all other saadhanaas.

- प्रमाण अभावाः च - There is no authority (for the poorva pakshi's views).

This is another samskshepa uttharam – brief reply. The Achaaryaa accuses that there is pramaana abhaava dosha: (defect, because of lack of saasthric support) in the poorva pakshi's arguments. There is no saasthra pramaanam. Mere speculation cannot be a valid source of knowledge.

- मोक्ष कामः - “One who desires to attain mokshaa
- नित्य नैमित्तिक कर्माणि कुर्यात् - should perform nithya-naimitthika karmaani,

- काम्य प्रतिषिद्धे च वर्जयेत् - should give up kaamyaa and prathishiddha karmaas,
- आरब्ध फले च उपभोगेन क्षपयेत् - should exhaust the past karmaas, which have started fructifying, by experiencing their results"

Upto this, is the poorva pakshi's arguments. Sureswaraachaarya refutes this, saying, that there is no saasthric support for this view.

- इति - For these statements
- न च प्रमाणम् अस्ति - there is no pramaanam .

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

आनन्त्याः च । न च उपचितानां कर्मणां इयत्ता अस्ति संसारस्य अनादित्वात् ।

Moreover, there are infinite actions. There is no limit to the actions awaiting fructification, for the empirical life of transmigration has been there without a beginning.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "For argument's sake, let us assume that the individual avoids all future karmaas – kaamyaa and nishiddha, and therefore, manages to clear the future. But, what about his past karmaas?"

The poorva pakshi will reply: "I have already told you. Exhaust them, by experiencing their results".

The Achaaryaa responds: "If it is one janma karma palan, you may probably be able to exhaust them by experiencing them; but, not of the innumerable janmaas, you have gone through".

- आनन्त्याः च - The actions are numerous (another samskshepa uttharam).
- उपचितानां कर्मणाम् इयत्ता न च अस्ति - There is no limit to the results of actions acquired,

Apachitha is equivalent to sanchitha. Sureswaraachaarya does not use the word sanchitha, since the poorva meemaamsakaa does not recognize sanchitha karmaa. Iyathha - limit. (The number of past actions and their results cannot be computed).

- संसारस्य अनादित्वात् - since janmaas are anaadhi.

Why cannot I do praayaschittha? The Achaaryaa does not specifically talk about this. But, we can draw the reply: "Since the karmaas are infinite, one will never be capable of exhausting them, by performance of praayaschittha karmaas".

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 81:

न च काम्यैः प्रतिषिद्धैः वा तेषां निवृत्तिः अस्ति शुद्धिः अशुद्धिः साम्ये सति अविरोधात् इति आह।

They are not to be put an end to by desire-prompted or prohibited actions, for, in the matter of purity and impurity, there is equality between the actions of the past and new ones to be resorted to and, hence, there is no opposition between them as required. So, it is stated:

Another question may be asked: "Why should not some kaamyas be used, to wipe out past punya karmaas and some nishiddha karmaas to negate past paapa karmaas (i.e. use the same type of karmaas for destroying the past karmaas - similar to using a thorn, for removal of a thorn in the foot)?"

- काम्यैः प्रतिषिद्धैः वा - By kaamyas and prathishiddha karmaas,
- तेषां निवृत्तिः न अस्ति - their elimination is not possible,
- शुद्धिः साम्ये सति अविरोधात् - since, in the matter of past and future punya karmaas,
- there is no enmity between them
- अशुद्धिः (साम्ये सति अविरोधात्) - since, in the matter of past and future paapa karmaas, there is no enmity between them.

Destruction is possible only if there is enmity. But, there is no paraspara virodham, between past and future punya karmaas and similarly, between past and future paapa karmaas, and, therefore, the suggested destruction is not possible.

Then, why should not one eliminate punya karmaas by paapa karmaas and paapa karmaas by punya karmaas? This question is not raised by Sureswaraachaarya; but, is a valid question. The answers to this doubt : (1) The past karmaas are infinite in number; you cannot, therefore, physically exhaust them (similar to the explanation given, in the case of praayaschittha karmaas. (2) There is no saasthra pramaanam to the suggestion to do paapa karmaas to wipe out punya karma palan.

The poorva pakshi's arguments have all been negated.

- इति आह - So, I am stating this (in the verse that follows):

Chapter I: Verse 81 –

न कृत्स्न काम्य संत्यागः अनन्तत्वात् कर्तुं इष्यते ।

निषिद्धकर्मणः चेत् तु व्यतीत अनन्त जन्मसु ॥ ८१ ॥

There is no possibility of throwing out in their entirety the numberless desire-prompted and prohibited actions performed through numberless lives of the past.

Sureswaraachaarya repeats the same idea in the verse.

कृत्स्न काम्य संत्यागः न कर्तुं इष्यते – Past karmaas cannot be destroyed in entirety.

Why?

अनन्तत्वात्- Since they are infinite.

No praayaschittham can wipe out all past karmaas totally. Only jnaanam can. The reference "Sanchitha paapa vinaasana lingam", in the sacred prayer Lingaashtakam, can be understood only to indicate that the prayer will help the devotee to take to jnaanaa khaandaa; because of the prayer, the sanchitha paapam might get wiped out, whereas, for sanchitha punyam there is no praayaschiththa prescribed. You cannot get rid of sanchitha punyam and the consequent punarjanmaam, except by jnaanam.

- व्यतीत अनन्तजन्मसु निषिद्धकर्मणः चेत् तु - If nishiddha karmaas, acquired in infinite janmaas are talked about,

Vyatheetha – acquired; anantha janmasu - in infinite janmaas.

- (संत्यागः कर्तुं न इष्यते अनन्तत्वात्) - they (also) cannot be destroyed totally, since they
- are (also) infinite)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 82:

स्यात् मतम् व्यतीत अनन्त जन्म उपात्तानाम् कर्मणाम् ।

It may be suggested that the actions performed in our numberless past lives,

The Achaaryaa says that the poorva meemaasakaa may come out with another solution, (which he gives in the verse that follows).

- व्यतीत अनन्त जन्म कर्मणाम् उपात्तां - For the elimination of the actions performed in our numerous past lives,
- स्यात् मतम् - if the (following) theory is extended:

Chapter I: Verse 82 –

क्षयो नित्येन तेषाम् चेत् प्रायश्चित्तैः यथा एनसः ।

निष्फल्त्वात् न नित्येन काम्यादेः विनिवारणाम् ॥ ८२ ॥

can be exhausted through the observance of obligatory duties, just as sins are removed through expiatory rites. But, as the obligatory duties do not produce any fruits, the actions like the desire-prompted ones cannot be nullified by them.

Earlier, the absurdity in the possible suggestion that "punyam and paapam can be neutralized by kaamyas and nishiddha karmaas respectively" was pointed out, by referring to the saamyam and avirodham between past punya karmaas and proposed kaamyas karmaas and similarly, between past paapa karmaas and proposed nishiddha karmaas.

Now, the poorva pakshi may suggest: "Nithya naimithika karmaas are karmaas prescribed by the saasthraas. Innumerable purifying, positive and good nithya naimithika karmaas have been prescribed. Then, why should not all the past karmaas be wiped out, by performing nithya naimithika karmaas? For wiping out past paapa karmaas, praayaschittha karmaas can be used; for past punya karmaas, why not use nithya naimithika karmaas?"

The aim of the poorva meemaasaka is to avoid jnaanam and, hence, such weak, and, sometimes absurd suggestions.

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "You have already said that nithya naimithika karmaas will not give you any punyam and that, their non-performance only will result in paapam. Then, how can you claim that performance of nithya-naimithika karmaas will give the result of destruction of past karmaas?"

The poorva meemaasakaa's stand is "nithya-naimithika karmaani nishpalaani";

The advaitin accepts punya palan for nithya-naimithika karmaas, both material (in the form of sukham) and spiritual (in the form of chittha suddhi).

Since the poorva meemaasakaa does not accept this, the Achaaryaa questions: "Since, according to you, nithya naimithika karmaani are nishpalaani, how can you say, that, they will neutralize past karmaas?" And, if the nithya-naimithika karmaas do neutralize past karmaas, they will have to be considered praayaschittha karmaas. But, since the poorva meemaasakaa prohibits performance of kaamyas karmaas, if he takes this stand, that, nithya-naimithika karmaas can be performed to neutralize past karmaas, "svamatha kandana dosham" will result.

- यथा येनसः क्षयः - "Just as elimination of paapam
- प्रायश्चित्तैः (भवति) - happens by praayaschittha karmas,
- (तथा) तेषाम् क्षयः - similarly, elimination of punyam
- नित्येन (भवति) - results by performance of nithya-naimithika karmaas"

This is the claim of the poorva pakshi, which the Achaaryaa proceeds to refute.

- काम्येदे: विनिवारणाम् - Elimination of past punyam is not possible
- नित्येन - by performance of nithya-naimitthika karmaas,
- निष्फलत्वात्—because, (according to you) nithya-naimitthika karmaas do not give results.

They cannot be used to neutralize sanchitha punya karmaas.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 83:

प्रमाण अभावा: च । कथम् ।

There is no scriptural support for this position; for:

Sureswaraachaarya gives another argument, in support of his stand, against the poorva pakshi's view, that, nithya-naimitthika karmaas will neutralise sanchitha punyam. He says: "karma palan is adrishtam and apourusheyam. You cannot prove the results of your actions satisfactorily. You go only by saasthraas. 'Vachanaath pravrutthi: vachanaath nivrutthi:' is an established maxim (vachanam, in this context, means saasthraa.) 'Do nithya-naimitthika karmaas give any palan?' is a question to be answered only by saasthraas. There is no mention anywhere, in saasthraas about this; according to saasthraas, praayaschittha karmaas can and do give palan; but, there is no pramaanam to prove that nithya-naimitthika karmaas will remove sanchitha punyam".

Punyam, although good, maintains the samsaaraa, the cycle of births and deaths. For mokshaa (i.e. avoidance of punar janma), sanchitha punyam also has to be destroyed. This is possible only by jnaanam. That is why the Mundaka Upanishad declares (verse 3– Sec.I– Ch.III) "Yadhaa pasya: pasyathe rukmavarnam karthaaram eesam brahmayonim thadhaa vidvaan vidhooya punyapaape niranjana: upaithi paramam saamyam" – "When the seer sees the Brahman which is ever effulgent like gold, which is the creator, which is the Lord and which is the cause of Hiranyagarbha, then, the wise gives up all punyaa and *paapaa. Free from impurities, he attains total identity with Brahman."

44. Chapter I, Verses 83 to 85 (24-02-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is dealing with the poorva meemaamsaka matham, which claims that mokshaa can be attained without using jnaanam. A particular scheme was presented by them in the verses 9 to 13. According to this scheme of the poorva pakshin: "You can bring down karma account to zero level, if you know how to 'manage' karma. The 'management' consists in (1) avoiding performance of kaamyas and therefore, the resulting punyam (2) keeping away from nishiddha karmas and therefore, the paapam resulting from them and (3) performing the prescribed nithya-naimittika karmas diligently, without fail, and thus avoiding the prathyavaaya paapam resulting from non-performance of nithya-naimittika karmas. Accrual of fresh punya-paapam is thus averted. As for the palan of past karmas, exhaust them by going through sukha-dhu:kha experiences. By this method of averting future karma palan and exhausting past karma palan, your karma account will be zero, at the time of your death. Since punar janma is the result of karma palan, in the absence of karma palan, punar janma is avoided. Avoidance of punar janma is only mokshaa and therefore, you attain moksha, by this skillful management of karma".

This scheme is analysed in the verses 80 to 84, by Sureswaraachaarya, who, first, pointed out: "You cannot avoid kaamyas, since, as long as self-ignorance (aathma ajnaanam) is there, apoornathvam will be there; desires will be there. Kaamyas will be undertaken to fulfill the desires, resulting in punyam. In short, avoidance of punyam is impossible, as long as there is self-ignorance. Likewise, paapam also cannot be avoided, since human knowledge is limited and a jeeva cannot avoid mistakes totally (at best, he may be able to reduce them). Nishiddha karmas cannot be totally avoided and, therefore, paapam also will accrue".

Then, the Achaaryaa moved on to the topic of past karmas. He asked: "For argument's sake, suppose (it is only a supposition – not a possibility) future karmas are avoided, then, what about the past karmas?"

The poorva pakshi had said "exhaust past karmas, by experiencing them".

Sureswaraachaarya replied: "Past karmas are too numerous to be exhausted in one janma".

(There is also another objection, which, the Achaaryaa does not talk about; the objection, nevertheless, is valid: "Different bodies are required to exhaust different types of past karmas. One human birth or one human body cannot exhaust all sanchitha karmas").

The poorva pakshi replied: "All right. I will exhaust as many karmaas as possible. Whatever karmaas cannot be exhausted, I will neutralize them by some other appropriate karmaas".

The Achaaryaa asked: "How?".

The poorva pakshi replied: "There are numerous nithya-naimitthika karmaas prescribed by the scriptures. I will make use of them to neutralize the past karmaas".

Sureswaraachaarya responded: "There are many problems with this theory. Nithya-naimitthika karmaas may neutralize the past paapam; but, how can they neutralize past punyam? Since, nithya-naimitthika karmaas are punyam, they can never neutralize past punyam, as there is no virodham – but, there is only saamyam – between punyam and punyam."

The Achaaryaa continued: "Nithya-naimitthika karmaas negating past paapam is also not possible, since, nithya-naimitthika karmaas performed in one janma can be only limited punyam, whereas past paapam has been accumulated during infinite number of janmaas. How can one janma punyam neutralize many janma paapam? Numerically, they are unbalanced."

Now, in the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 83, he presents another objection: "There is no Vedic pramaanam for your view, that, nithya-naimitthika karmaas can neutralize past karmaas".

- प्रमाण अभावाः च - There is no Vedic pramaanam to your statement (that nithya-naimitthika karmaas of this one janma will neutralize all past karmaas of all past janmaas)
- कथम् - how? (Why do I say this?)

Chapter I: Verse 83 –

पाप अपनुत्तये वाक्यात् प्रायश्चित्तम् यथा तथा ।

गम्यते काम्यहानार्थम् नित्यं कर्म न वाक्यथः ॥ ८३ ॥

Scripture lays down that sin is to be removed by expiatory rites. There is no scriptural statement to the effect that the desire-prompted actions are to be nullified by obligatory actions.

- पाप अपनुत्तये - "For the elimination of past paapa karma palan
- प्रायश्चित्तं – praayaschittha karmaas (can help)"
- वाक्यात् - (this fact is known) by Vedic injunctions.
- यथा तथा - on the same line,

- काम्य हानार्थ - "For elimination of past punyam
- नित्यम् कर्म गम्यते – nithya-naimitthika karmaas are known to work"
- न वाक्यतः - (for this view) there is no Vedic pramaanam.

Gamyathe – (avagamyathe)/known.

Nithya-naimitthika karmaas do help in neutralizing paapam, as the sankalpam before any ritual ("Mama upaatha samastha dhuritha kshayadhvaaraa" - "By destroying all sins that have accrued to me") would show. Praayaschittha karmaas, of course, also neutralize past paapam. Nithya-naimithika karmaas, can, therefore, be considered as saamaanya praayaschittha karmaas, while, the rituals associated with the Shasti abda poorthy, and adhi-rudraa and mahaa-rudraa chantings may be termed visesha praayaschittha karmaani.

In this context, it may be noted that it is essential, for any vaidhika, to perform his shashti abda poorthi. The vaanaprastha aasramaa and spiritual saadhanaas are supposed to start on completion of the age of 60. The praayaschittha rituals associated with the shashti abda poorthi contribute to the performer's achieving saadhana chathushtaya sampaaathi and thus to a successful spiritual life. Therefore, while the 'celebrations' and social get-togethers, if considered ostentations, may be skipped, the religious rituals, prescribed for the shashti abda poorthy, have to be performed.

Sureswaraachaarya says (in this verse) that praayaschittha karmaas can neutralize past paapam, for which fact, there is Vedic pramaanam, whereas, there is no such pramaanam, that, nithya-naimitthika karmaas will neutralize past punyam.

Though the Achaarya does not refer to this, it is relevant to note, that , as pointed out earlier, with regard to past paapam, it will not be possible to exhaust past punyam also totally in this manushya janma, since, certain types of punyam can be exhausted only through a deva sareeram; manushya sareeram will not be sufficient.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 84:

अथ अपि स्यात् काम्यैः एव काम्यानां पूर्वजन्म उपचितानाम् क्षयः भविष्यति इति । तत् न यतः ।

It may be said that the performance of desire-prompted actions themselves in the present life, will neutralize the desire-prompted actions of the past lives. This is inadmissible; for:

The poorva meemaamsakaa may suggest a solution to handle past punyam. Sureswaraachaarya had already mentioned this in the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 81.

The poorva pakshi may say: "We have seen that 'similar' counters 'similar'. A thorn removes another thorn. Similarly, why not we perform kaamyas, to eliminate punyam? New punyam will eliminate old punyam".

- अथापि स्यात् इति - Suppose you give the following argument
- पूर्व जन्म उपचितानाम् काम्यानाम् क्षयः - "Neutralisation of punyam accumulated over the past janmaas
- काम्यैः एव भविष्यति - happens by performance of fresh punya karmas themselves".
- तत् न - No; it is not so.
- यतः - Because of the following reason.

Chapter I: Verse 84 –

पाप्मनाम् पाप्मभिः नास्ति यथा एव इह निराक्रिया ।

काम्यैः अपि तथा एव अस्तु काम्यानां अविरोधतः ॥ ८४ ॥

Just as sins cannot destroy sins, even so desire-prompted actions cannot destroy desire-prompted actions, for there is no opposition between the two sets of the said actions.

Two reasons are given by Sureswaraachaarya to negate this statement of the poorva pakshin, that, fresh punyam can neutralize past punyam:

- (1) Pramaana abhaava: - punyam and paapam are apourusheyam. Pramaanams, other than saasthraas, such as prathyaksham, anumaanam etc. cannot be depended on, to establish any truth regarding aporusheya subjects. Only saasthraas have to be referred to. Saasthraas do not specify that fresh kaamyas can wipe out past punyam. In the previous verse, it was pointed out, that, there is no pramaanam to the view that nithya-naimittika karmas will eliminate past punyam. Likewise, there is no saasthra pramaanam for this view also, that, fresh punya karmaa will eliminate past punya karmas. The loukika example, of a thorn removing another, given by the poorva pakshi, cannot be accepted, since the subject is aloukikam (supersensory) and, hence, only saasthraas have to be depended on, for guidance.
- (2) Secondly, "paapam cannot eliminate paapam" is very logical. Extending the same principle "punyam cannot eliminate punyam".

- पाप्मनाम् निराक्रिया - The elimination of paapam
- पाप्मभिः इह नास्ति - is not possible through paapam, in this manushya janma.
- यथैव तथैव - In a like manner,
- काम्यानाम् (निराक्रिया) - the elimination of past punya karmas
- काम्यैः अपि (नास्ति) - is not possible through fresh punya karmas.
Why not?

- अविरोधतः - Because of lack of enmity / absence of enmity.

Paapam and paapam do not have mutual contradictions. They are not inimical to each other. Where enmity is not there, elimination / destruction is not possible. Paapam cannot destroy paapam. The same logic is extended to punyam also.

Then, how can you say that jnaanam can eliminate punyam? Is not jnaanam also punyam (or result of punyam)? The answer: Jnaanam does not come under punyam or paapam. Jnaanam is punya-paapa ubhaya virodhi.

Q.: How do you say that jnaanam is punya-paapa virodhi? A.: Punya paapam are results of kaamaa – desire; desire is born out of karthruthvam; which, in turn is born of ignorance. So, punya-paapam come under 'ignorance' category and therefore, jnaanam is punya-paapa virodhi.

The well-known beginning phrase of the Brahma Soothraas – "Athatho Brahma Jignyaasaa"- is a pointer that jnaanam can be sought, only after achieving vairaaghyam. Vairaaghyam includes 'rejection' of punyam also. The prakaranam, "Thathva bodha:", defines vairaaghyam as "Iha amuthra artha pala bogha viraagha:", - "dispassion for the enjoyment of objects which are the fruit of actions here, in this world, and there, in heavens".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 85:

एवम् तावत् "मुक्तेः क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वात्" इति निराकृतम् । अथ आत्मज्ञानस्य सद्भावे प्रमाणसंभव उक्तः तत्परिहाराय आह ।

Thus far, that "release is attained through actions" (verse 9), was refuted. It was said by the poorva pakshi that there is no scriptural evidence, in favour of the knowledge of the Self. That is going to be criticized now:

With verse 84, Sureswaraachaarya concludes the refutation of the poorva meemaamsaka scheme for attainment of mokshaa, which scheme was presented in verses 9 to 13. In verses 85 to 97, the Achaaryaa discusses the next topic.

To understand the next topic, a revision, at this stage, of the topics covered so far, is essential. This approach is termed "simha avalokanam nyaayaa" – "revising what has been covered so far", so that, we can understand the future topics better – as, otherwise all topics would appear the same:

- (1) Verses 9 to 13 covered the viewpoints of the 1st type of poorva pakshin – abhyupedhya karma vaadhin.
- (2) Verses 14 to 19 covered the viewpoints of the 2nd type of poorva pakshin – anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin.
- (3) Verses 20 to 22 covered the viewpoints of the 3rd type of poorva pakshin – jnaanakarma samucchaya vaadhin.
- (4) In verses 23 to 53, the negation of the theories of the 1st type of poorva pakshin was done.
- (5) In verses 54 to 79, the negation of the theories of the 3rd type of poorva pakshin was done.
- (6) In verses 80 to 84, Sureswaraachaarya went back to the 1st poorva pakshin, adding some more objections, thus negating the 1st poorva pakshin, in two stretches.

Till now, the 2nd type of poorva pakshin had not been negated. Now, in verses 85 to 97, the Achaaryaa negates the views of the 2nd type of poorva pakshin.

The 2nd type of poorva pakshin also, the anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin, maintains that, karma alone will give liberation and that aathma jnaanam cannot; he goes a step further than the abhyupedhya karma vaadhi and says that, there is no subject at all, as aathma jnaanam, in saasthraas. He holds, that, the entire Veda teaches karma alone as moksha saadhanaa and, that, jnaanam is taught only as a means to perform karma, because, performance of any karma requires the knowledge as to when to perform karma, how to perform karma, how much karma to perform etc. According to this karma vaadhin, jnaanam is only an angam for karma, whether kaayika, vaachika or maanasa. "The central teaching of Vedhaanthaa is only karma; jnaane thaathparyam naasthi" he declares. This poorva paksha vaadham is being refuted by the Achaaryaa, in this portion, from verse 85.

- एवम् तावत् - Until now,
- निराकृतम् - I have refuted
- "मुक्तेः क्रियाभिः सिद्धत्वात्" इति - the poorva paksham presented in verses 9 to 13, starting with the phrase "mukthe: kriyaabhi: siddhathvaath"
- अथ - Hereafter,
- आत्म जानस्य सद्भावे प्रमाण अस्भवः - "(there is) absence of Saasthric support, with regard to aathma jnaanam"
- उक्तः - the person who states this
- तत् परिहाराय - for the negation of that person (the 2nd type of poorvapakshin-abhyupedhya karma vaadhin)
- आह – is being said now.

Chapter I: Verse 85 –

श्रुतयः स्मृतिभिः साकम् आनन्त्यात् कामिनाम् इह ।

विदधति उरुयत्नेन कर्मातः बहुकामदम् ॥ ८५ ॥

It is true that the sruthis along with the smrithis, enjoin elaborately, actions productive of manifold satisfaction of desires. That is because the world abounds in men of desire.

The poorva pakshin (2) says: "All scriptures – sruthi, smrithi, ithihaasa, puraanaas etc. - are taking lots of pains only to prescribe varieties of activities for the vaidhikaas – kaayika, vaachika and maanasa karmaas".

Sureswaraachaarya disagrees: "Not all scriptures. I accept that a bulky part / a big chunk of scriptures talk about karma only. I also accept that karma portion is predominant, while jnaana portion is smaller. But, certainly not all portions talk of karma". He adds: "Karma portion has to be bulky, because there are infinite 'finite' goals sought by human beings. Even a single individual has got numerous desires and the world is full of such humans. Therefore, the total number of desires and 'finite' goals of the entire humanity will, necessarily, be 'infinite'. Karma kaandaa of the Vedaas, the divine guide for performance of karmaas, has to be, therefore, bulky. But, do not say that aathma jnaanam is not there at all, in scriptures".

- श्रुतयः स्मृतिभिः साकम् - Vedas along with smruthis

Saakam - along with

- विदधति - prescribes
- बहुकामदम् कर्म - karmaas for fulfillment of varieties of desires,
- उरुयत्नेन - taking great pains / bahu prayathnena.

What is the reason for the uruyathnam or bahuprayathnam, in the karma kaandaa teaching?

कामिनाम् आनन्त्यात् - Because, desires are plenty.

45. Chapter I, Verses 85 to 88 (03-03-2007)

In this final portion of the 1st chapter, beginning from verse 85, Sureswaraachaarya is refuting the remaining poorva pakshin, among the three types mentioned – the jnaanana anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin. This poorva pakshin was introduced in verses 14 to 19 and he is being refuted from verse 85 onwards.

In verse 85, the Achaaryaa is refuting the idea given in verse 14. The poorva pakshin had said: "When I look at the entire Vedaa, both poorva and antha baaghaas, I see only karma vidhi - varieties of injunctions dealing with varieties of karma. I do not see jnaanam as a primary part of Vedas". The poorva pakshin accepts that jnaanam is talked about, in some portions of the Vedas; "but", he contends "it does not have a primary value and has to be utilized only for performing karma. You cannot say that jnaanam is the theme of Vedas; karma is the theme. Jnaanam is only an angam of karma – karmanaa angathvam. Jnaanam cannot be said to be the thaathparyam of Veda; on the other hand, entire Veda has only karma as thaathparyam".

In reply, Sureswaraachaarya while conceding, that, Vedas are mostly dealing with karma, insists that Vedas deal with jnaanam as the prime topic. He says: "If the karma portion of the Vedas is bulky, it is understandable. Even a single human being has a number of 'finite' desires and, therefore, the sum total of the desires of the entire human race would naturally be huge. Hence, the karma kaandaa prescribing specifications for maanasa, kaayika and vaachika karmaani for fulfillment of desires pertaining to this world, as well as other worlds, will have to be large. On the other hand, jnaanam leading to the only 'Infinite' goal, does not vary from individual to individual. This is the reason why that portion of the Vedas which deals with jnaanam, is small, while, the karma portions dealing with the numerous 'finite' goals of the numerous humans is bulky. This cannot and should not lead to the conclusion that Vedas do not teach jnaanam".

The same idea is continued in the next verse also.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 86:

न च बाहुल्यं प्रामाण्ये कारणभावं प्रतिपद्यते । अत आह ।

But quantity is no criterion of truth.

The poorva pakshin may argue: "You accept that Vedas are predominantly talking about karma and much less about jnaanam. That means karma has more veda pramaana vaakyaani – pramaana baahulyam (the word baahulyam means "in abundance"); and, therefore, has more pramaanam than jnaanam, with respect to which, there is no baahulyam, but, only alpathvam. Karma, having pramaanam baahulyam, is, therefore, the theme of Vedas. Therefore, there is no such thing as aathma jnaanam".

Sureswaraachaarya gives a technical answer. He says: "No knowledge can have greater pramaanam or lesser pramaanam, as suggested by you. Any knowledge will have only one pramaanam as support." Why? Because, any pramaanam has got only one field for its functioning. Other pramaanams do not have access to that particular field and, therefore, cannot function in that field and, therefore, cannot support that particular knowledge. An example is the functioning of the pancha jnaana indriyaas. Each one of the indriyaas functions only in its respective field. When an individual observes a flower, his eyes function in the field of the colour and form of the flower, his nose functions in the field of the smell of the flower and his skin or touch, in the field of the texture of the flower. What the eyes see, the nose cannot support or reject. One indriyaa cannot validate or invalidate another indriyaa. The individual gets the different components of the observed object, through the pancha jnaana indriyaas and 'integrates' them by his mind. The conclusion to be drawn from this, is, that, many pramaanams cannot or need not support 'one' knowledge, since, all of them do not function in one field.

An objection may be raised by the poorva pakshin, through an example. Suppose a person infers 'fire' from 'smoke' i.e. the 'fire knowledge' is got through 'inference'. Then, if the person goes out and sees the fire, he gets the knowledge of fire, through 'perception'. In this case, two pramaanams – anumaanam and prathyaksham deal with one knowledge – 'existence of fire'. The poorva pakshin may quote this and ask: "How can you, then, say that many pramaanams cannot deal with one knowledge?" The answer: "Scriptures do not agree (that different pramaanams can deal with one knowledge). In this particular instance, though two pramaanams indicate fire, they deal with different aspects of the fire. When the person 'saw' the fire, the 'perception' did not give him 'knowledge of the existence of the fire', which knowledge he already had, because of anumaanam. But, the 'knowledge' he received on 'perception', was the size and extent of fire; i.e. the two pramaanams – inference and perception, did not deal with 'one' knowledge, but two different aspects of the subject 'fire'"

"Therefore" Sureswaraachaarya says "you cannot say that karma has more pramaanam and jnaanam has less pramaanam, since any pramaanam gives only a particular knowledge".

- प्रामाण्ये - In the matter of validity,
- बाहुल्यं - abundance
- कारणभावं - as the reason / support,
- न प्रतिपद्यते - cannot be claimed.
- अत आह - Therefore, the author says:

Verse 86 – Chapter I:

प्रामाण्याय न बाहुल्यं न हि एकत्र प्रमाणताम् ।

वस्तुनि अटन्ति मानानि तु एकत्र एकस्य मानता ॥ ८६ ॥

Preponderance is no test of validity. The several modes of valid knowledge do not all converge to establish any one truth. Each mode of valid knowledge is confined to its specific subject-matter.

- बाहुल्यम् प्रामाण्याय न (भवति) - (Mere) abundance is no test of validity. (the implication, in this context: greater number of veda vaakyaani cannot prove validity of karma , as central theme of Veda.)
- हि - Why?
- मानानि - (pramaani) different instruments of knowledge (like prathyaksham, anumaana etc. and even within prathyaksham, the different indriyaas)
- प्रमाणताम् न अटन्ति - do not attain the position of pramaanam
- एकत्र वस्तुनि - in one common field.
- एकत्र एकस्य मानता - In one particular field, only one pramaanam has validity.

eg. 1: 'Ears' are incapable of supporting the 'eyes' in the field of form or colour.

eg. 2: Scriptures deal with religion and imperceptible entities, whereas, science deals with perceptible entities; in other words, each one of them operates in a different field. You cannot use science to justify or disprove saasthraas.

(This second example, incidentally, throws opens another topic. It is a great blunder to do scientific study to justify rituals, though, well-intentioned. "Benefits of rituals" are adrishtam – unseen and apourusheyam – not subjects for the human brain. Do not look for scientific benefit from rituals. The reason: maanaani ekathra vasthuni pramaanathaam na atanthi)

Similar to the examples quoted above, karma comes from karma vaakyaani in the Vedas and jnaanam, from the jnaana vaakyaani.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 87 :

यत् उक्तम् "यत्नतः वीक्षमाणः अपि" इति - तत्र अपि भवतः एव अपराधः। कस्मात् । यतः ।

Your not finding, as you had said (in verse 15), any injunction with reference to knowledge, in spite of looking for it a great deal, is due to your own fault. For:

In the previous two verses (85 and 86), Sureswaraachaarya refuted the poorva pakshin's views stated in verse 14. In this verse (87), he is refuting the contents of verse 15.

- यत् उक्तम् - What you had said
- "यत्नतः वीक्षमाणः अपि" इति - in verse 15, starting with this phrase,

The poorva pakshin had said "When I study the Vedas deeply, I find that they talk about varieties of karma to be performed. Even application of knowledge is only for performance of activities- mental, physical etc. Mere knowledge, without application, is useless. Nor do I find jnaanam prescribed, in the Vedas".

- भवतः एव अपराधः - is your own flaw.

The Achaaryaa implies that the poorva pakshin has not studied the Vedas properly.

- कस्मात् - Why do I say so?
- यतः - I am giving the reason (in the following verse)

Verse 87 – Chapter I :

"परीक्ष्य लोकान्" इत्याध्या आत्मज्ञानविधायिनीः ।

नैष्कर्म्यप्रवाणाः साध्वीः श्रुतीः किम् न श्रुणोषि ताः ॥ ८७ ॥

Do you not hear the excellent sruthi texts, enjoining knowledge of the Self and oriented to freedom from karma, like the one which says 'after examining the worlds secured by merit, a brahmana should cultivate dispassion, as the eternal is not gained by the transitory works. and let him approach a preceptor for enlightenment etc.' ? (M.U. I.ii.12)

Sureswaraachaarya asks the poorva pakshin: "Have you not observed the predominant sruthi vaakyaani, such as the Mundaka Upanishad injunction (verse 12 – Section II – Chapter I), which says 'pareekshya lokaan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath na asthi akrutha: kruthena yadh vijnaartham sa gurum eva abhighachcheth samithpaani: srothriyam brahmanishtam' – 'having examined the worlds which are achieved through Karma, a Brahmin should come to dispassion. The unproduced (mokshaa) is not possible through Karma. Therefore, to attain knowledge, he must necessarily approach, with samith in hand, a teacher who is learned in scriptures and established in Brahmar?'"

This Upanishadic injunction does not present karma, but, recommends withdrawal from karma.

- "परीक्ष्य लोकान्" इत्याध्या - Statements such as "pareekshya lokaan" etc.
- नैष्कर्म्य प्रवाणाः - that recommend withdrawal from karma
- आत्मज्ञान विधायिनीः - (and) prescribe only self-knowledge,
- किम् न श्रुणोषि - have you not heard

- ताः साध्वीः श्रुतीः- such valid sruthi statements?

Thaa: - Those (such); saadhvee: - valid /excellent / wonderful; sruthee: - vedic statements.

"Jnaana pradhaana vaakyaani are found in the Vedas. The poorva pakshin has not studied the Vedas properly" is the Achaaryaa's contention.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 88:

ननु" आत्मा इत्येव उपासीत" "आत्मा वा अरे द्रष्टव्यः" इति अपूर्व विधि श्रुते :पुरुषस्य आत्मदर्शन क्रियायां नियोग अवसीयते इति । न एवम् । अपुरुषतन्त्रत्वात् वस्तुयाथात्म्यवज्ज्ञानस्य सकल अनर्थ बीज आत्म अनवबोध उत्सारिण :मुक्तिहेतो :इति। विधि अभ्युपगमे अपि न अपूर्व विधि :अयम् । अत आह ।

But, passages like "Let Brahman be meditated upon as aathman" (B.U. I .IV. 7) and "Aathman is to be seen" (B.U.II .IV .5) embody injunctions of what is not a matter of ordinary life and thus they inculcate action of the character of meditation. It is not so. The knowledge of Reality, which destroys the ignorance of the Self, the root-cause of all evil, and which is the means of release, is not dependent on human effort to be the theme of injunction. Even if it is admitted that we have an injunction here, it is not an injunction of something novel.

The poorva pakshin replies: "I have seen the aathma jnaana vaakyaani. But, they are not karma thyaagha vaakyaani. On the other hand, they also prescribe only karma, since aathma jnaanam itself is a type of karma. 'Mandavya: srothavya:,' is a Vedic injunction, meaning 'the mandha adhikaari shall listen'. 'Listening', 'meditation' etc. are prescriptions for karma only".

- ननु - But, (the poorva pakshin says)
- "आत्मा इत्येव उपासीत" - the Veda vaakyam "may you meditate upon the aathmaa" (B.U.I. iv.7), "आत्मा वा अरे द्रष्टव्यः" इति - (and) the Veda vaakyam "aathmaa has to be seen" (B.U. II.iv.5) etc.
- अपूर्व विधि श्रुतेः - are Vedic commandments to do actions.

"Apoorva vidhi" is the name of a statement giving a commandment to do an action.

The poorva pakshin contends that, the vaakyam "aathmaa ithyeva upaaseetha" prescribes Upaasana Kriyaa and the vaakyam "aathmaa vaa arey dhrashtavya:" prescribes Darsana Kriyaa. Self-awareness, aathma darsanam, is also looked upon by him only as an action. The poorva pakshin holds that sruthi injunctions, thus, prescribe only new "actions" as saadhanaas. He concludes that Vedas talk only of karma and not of jnaanam.

46. Chapter I, Verses 88 and 89 (10-03-2007)

(Sureswaraachaarya is in the process of refuting the views of the poorva pakshin, introduced in verses 14 to 19, from verse 85.)

In the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 88, the Achaaryaa takes up a possible argument of the poorva pakshin. The poorva pakshin might quote two phrases from the Brahadhaaranayaka Upanishad – "Upaaseetha" and "drashtavya:", as vidhis, i.e. commandments to "actions to be done". He will hold that aathma dhyaanam and aathma jnaanam also are only injunctions and will come under karma only. Jnaanakaandam, according to him, will come under Jnaanakriyaa. The Vedic exhortation "Srothavya: mandhavya:", he will consider, as prescribing only kriyaa of "listening", "contemplating" etc. He considers such statements as apoorva vidhis – statements giving commandments to do new actions. All those new action-prescribing statements/commandments are called apoorva vidhis. An example is the injunction to do prokshanam before naivedhyam. "Likewise" says the poorva pakshin "aathma jnaanam is also a 'new' action prescribed by Vedas. 'Knowing' is only karma".

- ननु - "But,
- पुरुषस्य - for the individual,
- आत्मदर्शनक्रियायाम् नियोगः - the undertaking of the "actions" of "self- knowledge" etc.,
- अपूर्व विधि श्रुतेः अवसीयते – is inculcated by the injunctions of the Vedas,
- "आत्मा इत्येव उपासीत" "आत्मा वा अरे द्रष्टव्यः" – similar to passages "let Brahman be meditated upon as aathman" and "aathma is to be seen"
- इति - Thus, the poorva pakshin says.

Up to this is the poorva pakshin's statement.

The Achaaryaa is refuting this, using a few technical methods.

He first argues, that, jnaanam will not come under 'action'; not only aathma jnaanam, but, knowledge of any type, cannot come under 'action'.

It is true, that, the "bringing together" of the pramaanam (the relevant instrument) and prameyam (the object to be known), is karma; for instance, during sravanam, the "bringing together" of the mind and the subject listened to, is 'action'. Of course, the pramaathaa is also there; "bringing together" this thriputi – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam - is karma. But, only upto this, it is 'action', over which the pramaathaa has a choice. Beyond this, the 'knowledge' that 'results', because of this bringing-together of the thriputi, is not under the control of the pramaathaa and is, therefore, not 'action'.

Karma is done by the choice of the kartha, whereas jnaanam 'happens' without the choice of the pramaathaa. Expressing in a different manner, karmendriya function is the individual's choice; but the jnaanedriya function is not.

Your voluntary 'action', the pramathru-pramaana-prameya combination, results in 'knowledge', which is not based on your choice or wish.

- अपुरुषतन्त्रत्वात् - Because of non-dependence on human effort,
- वस्तु यातात्म्यक् जानस्य - in the matter of the rise of knowledge of the true nature of the Self, (i.e. in the matter of aatma jnaanam)
- सकल अनर्थ बीज आत्म अनवबोध उत्सारिणः - (which knowledge/ jnaanam is) the destroyer of self-ignorance, the root cause of all evil sakala – all ; anartha - evil ; bheeja – seed / root cause ; aatma anvabodham – self-ignorance; uthssari – destroyer.

- मुक्ति हेतोः - and (which knowledge / jnaanam is) the means of liberation,
- नैवम् - what you have said (that, aatma jnaanam is an 'action' pursued by the seeker) is not right

The rise of aatma jnaanam and the destruction of aatma ajnaanam will automatically result, when the pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam are brought together, and, hence the use of the phrase apurushathanthrathvaath.

(The pramaathaa, referred to, here, of course, is the qualified 'knower', the saadhana chathushtaya sampanna vidhyaarthi, which explains why all seekers do not get jnaanam.)

"Since, therefore, jnaanam does not come under karma, no 'commandment' is possible, with regard to jnaanam. In other words, jnaanam is not subject to any sort of vidhi. Therefore, your view that it is a vidhi, is wrong" says the Achaaryaa.

This is the first part of the answer given by Sureswaraachaarya. He proceeds:

- विधि अभ्युगमे अपि – Even if it is accepted that a commandment is possible with regard to jnaanam, (This is only an assumption – not a fact).
- अयम् न अपूर्वविधिः - these vidhivaakyaani quoted from Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad will not come under apoorvavidhi (but, it may come under some other vidhi)

In poorva meemaamsaa, a commandment can come under any one of three types of vidhis: (1) apoorva (2) niyama and (3) parisankhya. Sureswaraachaarya says that the Upanishad vaakyaani quoted by the poorva pakshin may come under niyama vidhi or parisankhya vidhi – but, not under apoorva vidhi.

Atha: aaha - Therefore, it is clarified:

Chapter I: Verse 88 –

नियमः परिसंख्या वा विध्यर्थोपि भवेध्यतः ।

अनात्मदर्शनेन एव परात्मानम् उपास्महे ॥ ८८ ॥

The injunction may be for completing an action being done without an injunction or for the exclusive specification of an alternative. We meditate upon the higher Self, by the exclusion of the perception of the non-Self.

Apoorva vidhi is “prescription of a new, unknown activity”. A niyama or parisankhya vidhi, in the Vedas, does not deal with unknown activities; but, with two or more ‘known’ activities.

The Vedas want to restrict the individual to some ‘known’ activities and exclude certain other ‘known’ activities from being performed; i.e. the Vedic injunction (vidhi) can command both ‘exclusion’ and ‘inclusion’ of ‘known’ activities.

When the emphasis of the injunction is on ‘inclusion’ of some known activity, with the ‘exclusion’ of another known activity ‘implied’, the injunction is niyama vidhi. For instance, the injunction “take bath in the early morning”, where the emphasis is on ‘inclusion’, (the ‘exclusion’ of ‘a late bath’ being only implied), is a niyama vidhi.

Conversely, when the emphasis of an injunction is on ‘exclusion’, the injunction is termed parisankhya vidhi. ‘Pari’ means ‘parivarjanam’ - ‘exclusion’, and ‘sankhya’ means ‘jnaanam’. The injunction imparting “Knowledge of the thing to be excluded” is parisankhya vidhi. To cite an example, in the injunction ‘sathyam vadha’, the emphasis is not on ‘speaking truth’ (though seemingly so) but on ‘not speaking untruth’. Such a vidhi is parisankhya vidhi.

On the basis of the above explanations of the three types of vidhis, what vidhi does jnaanam come under? Aathma darsanam and anaathma darsanam are both known to the student. Between the two activities, Veda wants to ‘include’ one (the aathmadarsanam) and ‘exclude’ the other (the anaathma darsanam). The Bhagavadh Githaa exhorts (verse 8 – Chapter V) – “Pasyan srnvan sparsan jighran asnan gacchan svapan svasan, thathvavith yuktha: kinchith naiva karomi ithi manyetha” - “while seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, reclining, breathing etc., the disciplined knower of Truth should understand ‘I do not do anything at all’”. Again in verse 18 – Chapter V, the Bhagavadh Githa states “pandithaa: samadarsina:”- “the Wise see the same Brahmar”, indicating, that, even when a Vedhaanthin sees varieties of things, he should not forget the inherent aathmaa. The two injunctions are typical examples of niyama vidhi. Likewise, the Upanishadic quotation "aathmaa vaa arey dhrashtavya:" is also only a niyama vidhi.

Some aacharyaas consider that this injunction is a parisankhya vidhi. They argue that, a niyama vidhi is needed only when there is a chance of losing sight of aathmaa. For a sincere seeker, who is a saadhana chathushtaya sampanna:, the aathma darsanam is only natural (as natural as a grihasthaa worrying about his family). For such a student, the teaching has created such an impact, that, only Vedhaanthic thinking dominates. The injunction "aatmaa vaa arey dhrashtavya:", for such a person, is intended to recommend "anaathma varjanam" i.e. giving up or reduction of possessions, obligations, relationships and transactions. When viewed from this angle, the injunction is parisankhya vidhi. When the vidhi is considered as stressing "aathma darsanam" it is niyama vidhi. But, why this difficulty? The explanation is, that, the difference in classification under the two categories depends on the adhikaari- for mandha adhikaaris (beginners), it is a niyama vidhi and for madhyama adhikaaris (advanced students), it is a parisankhya vidhi.

"In any case, this is not an apoorva vidhi", Sureswaraacharya says.

- विध्यर्थः अपि - Even if the two statements (quoted by the poorva pakshin) are taken as commandments,
- नियमः परिसंख्या वा भवेत् - they will come under either niyama vidhi or parisankhya vidhi only.

"(Na apoorva vidhi: - not a new prescription)" is implied.

Self-awareness is not a new action; no teacher can prescribe it as a new action.

- यथः - Therefore,
- अनात्मदर्शनेन एव – by excluding anaathma darsanam (without getting carried away by worldly vyavahaaraa),
- परात्मानम् उपास्महे - let us remain in the field of meditation on the higher Self.

The perception should be of the aathma-anaathma binary mode and not of the triad mode of jeeva-jagath-Iswara.

Sambhanda gadhyam (part) to Verse 89:

यत् च उक्तम् "विश्वासः न अन्यतः अस्ति नः" इति - तदपि निद्रा आतुर चेत् त्वया स्वप्नायमानेन प्रलपितम् ।

Your statement "we have no faith in anything else" (15) is like the talk of one in dream, while asleep.

After refuting in verses 85 and 86, what was stated in verse 14, by the anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin, Sureswaraachaarya is now refuting the views expressed in verse 15, from verse 87.

"नः विश्वासः अन्यतः अस्ति" - "For us, there is no faith in anything else (other than sruthi and smrithi)"

The poorva pakshin said that there is no proof for "aham brahma asmi jnaanam", in the Vedas. He further said: "'Apourusha vishaye veda maathra pramaanam' is an accepted maxim. 'aham brahma asmi' statement or knowledge or conviction, is also an apourusheya vishayam, similar to lokaas like svarga, naraka, pithruloka etc. and rituals like sraardha etc. This being so, you have to resort only to Vedas, for information on the subject. Other instruments of knowledge, such as prathyakshaa, arthaapatthi, anumaanam, upamaanam etc. cannot prove or disprove it. Science also cannot establish this. Vedas talk only about karma; they do not give the knowledge 'aham brahma asmi'. And, you (the Vedhaanthin) yourself say karma does not reveal Brahman. Veda is not proof of 'aham brahma asmi'. Under these circumstances, how can I accept 'aham brahma asmi'?"

(Mystic experiences also cannot be accepted by a traditional Achaaryaa.)

- इति यत् च उक्तम् - This statement of yours,
- तदपि - that statement also,
- त्वया प्रलपितम् - (is) your prattle,
- निद्रा आतुर चेतसा – made with the mind under the influence of sleep.

47. Chapter I, Verses 89 and 90 (17-03-2007)

In these verses, from 85 to 97, Sureswaraachaarya is refuting the second poorva paksham, which was introduced in verses 14 to 19. The Achaaryaa is taking up the verses of the poorva pakshin, one by one, for refutation. In verses 87 to 89, he is refuting the contents of verse 15.

The 2nd type of poorva pakshin is called the anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin, who does not accept the very existence of aathma jnaanam or brahma jnaanam. He argues: "Vedas talk only of karma, of one type or another and not of jnaanam. To put it differently, thaathparyam of Vedas is only karma and not jnaanam. The subject of aathmaa or brahman is apourusheyam and not available for any pourusheya pramaanam. Apourusheya veda alone has to be depended on for guidance on the subject. Since Vedic pramaanam is not there, how can you ever believe in the existence of brahma jnaanam or aathma jnaanam; in fact, even in the existence of brahman or aathmaa? There is no such thing as Brahman. The very idea is only a bhrama (delusion)".

In the 2nd line of verse 15, the poorva pakshin declared "na: anyatha: viswaasa: na asthy" – "we have no faith in any pramaanam other than Veda". (He had already said, in the first part of the verse: "yathnatha: veekshamaana: api jnaanasya vidhim sruthau smruthau vaa kvachith na pasyaami" – "Either in sruthi or smruthi, do I see anywhere, injunction with reference to knowledge, in spite of looking for it, a great deal").

Sureswaraachaarya refers to this declaration ("Yath cha uktham" – "what you have said") as the prattle (pralapitham) of one, whose mind is overpowered by sleep (nidra aathura chethasaa), talking as though in a dream (svapnaayamaanena).

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 89:

किम् कारणम् न हि वयम् प्रमाणबलेन ऐकात्म्यम् प्रतिपद्यामहे ऐकात्म्यस्य स्वत एव अनुभवमात्रात्मकत्वात् । अत एव सर्वप्रमाणावतारासंभवं वक्ष्यति । प्रमाण व्यवस्थायाः च अनुभवमात्राश्रयत्वात् । अत आह ।

Why? We do not uphold the unity of Self on the strength of authorities, for it is a matter of intrinsic and immediate experience. That is the reason it is going to be shown that it is beyond all proofs and the order of proofs is itself solely dependent on immediate experience. Therefore, the text proceeds: (TEXT MEANING)

The Achaaryaa continues.

- किम् कारणम् - Why should we say that the poorva pakshin's statement (that 'I have no belief in brahman or aathmaa, since there is no proof for the existence of brahman or aathmaa') is 'prattle'?

Sureswaraachaarya explains the reason, as to why he considers the poorva pakshin's statement as 'prattle': "Vedas define Brahman as jnaanasvaroopam and chaithanyasvaroopam (of the nature of Consciousness). 'Sathyam-jnaanam-anantham brahma' is the vaakyam in Brahmaanandavalli and 'Vijnaanam aanandam Brahma' is a statement from Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad. In the Veda antha bhaghaas, brahman is revealed as chaithanyam or 'Consciousness'. Asking for the proof of Brahman, is, therefore, asking for the proof of chaithanyam or 'Consciousness'. But, it is 'Consciousness', which is the proof for the existence of everything in creation, in fact, even of the proofs that are being talked about. Then how can you talk of a proof for 'Consciousness'? 'Consciousness' is the unproved and unproveable proof for the existence of everything, including the very pramaanams you are talking about, prathyakshaa, anumaanaa etc. Have you not heard the Vedic declaration 'Yan manassa na manuthey yena aahur manomatham yath chakchushaa na pasyathi yena chakshoogumshi pasyathi thadeva brahma thvam viddhi'- 'Brahman is that very consciousness, which people do not know with the mind, but, by which the mind is known; Brahman is that very consciousness, which one does not perceive with the eye but, by which one perceives the eyes. Thus you understand' (Kena upanishad – verses 6 and 7 of Chap.I)? "

- न हि वयम् ऐकात्म्यम् प्रतिपद्यामहे- We do not uphold the unity of the Self,
- प्रमाण बलेन - with the help of Saasthraas/ on the strength of authorities.

Saasthra pramaanam need not and cannot reveal brahman, since the saasthraas themselves are revealed only by brahma chaithanyam. "Yatho vaacho nivarthanthey apraapya manasaa saha" – " Words, along with the mind, return without reaching that Brahman" - Verse 9 of Brahmavalli of Thaithreeya Upanishad.

There is also another reason for not depending on pramaana balam.

- ऐकात्म्यस्य स्वत एव अनुभवमात्रात्मकत्वात् - Since the experience of the Unity of the Self, is only intrinsic and natural.

Eikaathmyam – Unity of Self; svatha eva – only intrinsic / by itself; anubhavam – experience; maathra – only; aathmakathvam – nature.

Veda only negates duality; it does not reveal chaithanyam or non-duality. Abrahmathva nivrithi eva saasthrasya prayojanam.

- अत एव - Because of this only,

- सर्व प्रमाण अवतार असंभवं वक्ष्यति - the author is going to talk about the impossibility of revealing Brahman, by the employment of any pramaanam- any one of the pramaanams.

Brahman cannot, not only, be revealed by any pramaanam; It need not be revealed also, since It is always available.

Mahaavaakya vichaaraa is the subject to be discussed.

The Achaaryaa uses a term 'Pramaana Vyavasthaa' in the next sentence, which term needs some explanation. The term means 'field of proving anything by the science of knowledge (epistemology) '.

Varieties of instruments of knowledge are used for the proof of the existence of a substance. The 'operation of a pramaanam' leads to 'generation of knowledge', which, in turn, gives the 'proof for the existence of an object'. This entire field is called epistemology - pramaana vyavasthaa.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "the very existence of this field presupposes the existence of a factor or medium – the Consciousness principle. We can talk of pramaatha/ pramaanam/ prameyam only in the presence of chaithanya thathvam".

An example is 'light', which is the medium for perception of objects. Should you prove the 'light' by using a perceptual operation? The very perception of objects, presupposes the presence of light. Then why do you require any other proof, for the existence of light?

Extending this example, all 'knowledge operations' (science of epistemology) or pramaana vyavasthaa, is possible only in the presence of Consciousness; And the Vedas declare that this Consciousness is Brahman.

- प्रमाण व्यवस्थायाः च अनुभव मात्र आश्रयत्वात् - since the dependence/ basis for all 'knowledge operations' is only Consciousness.

Pramaana vyavasthaayaa: - of all 'knowledge operations'; Anubhavam – in this context, means 'Consciousness'; aasrayathvam – dependence / basis.

No pramaanam is needed for the existence of chaithanyam, because, it is proved even before the start of consideration of any pramaanam.

- अत आह - Therefore, it is said:

Chapter I: Verse 89 –

वाक्य एकगम्यं यद्वस्तु न अन्यस्मात् तत्र विश्वसेत् ।

ना अप्रमेये स्वतः सिद्धे अविश्वासः कथम् आत्मनि ॥ ८९ ॥

What is solely ascertainable through the words of the scripture is not such that it calls for faith on other grounds. How can one refuse to believe in the Self, which is beyond all proof and is self-evident?

Sureswaraachaarya says: "You can talk about the necessity of proof with regard to dharma/adharma, svargaa/narakaa etc., since they are not available by pourusheya pramaanam. You need Veda pramaanam to prove them; expressing the same idea differently, 'veda vaakyam alone is pramaanam for such objects. But, you cannot say the same thing about aathmaa / brahman, which does not require saasthric support, since aathmaa/brahman are only other words for chaithanyam, which is self-evident".

- यद्वस्तु वाक्य एकगम्यम् - In the objects, where only Veda is the support,
- तत्र - in such cases,
- विश्वसेत् - for believing / for ascertaining,
- न अन्यः - there is no other proof.

Science has not established the existence of a sookshma sareeram or the fact that, it is different from the sthoola sareeram. Then how do you know that the mind survives the body, travels to another body etc.? Only saasthraas are the pramaanam.

But, aathmaa/brahman, in other words, Consciousness, is different. It is self-evident.

- ना - For the humans,
- आत्मनि अविश्वासः कथम् – how can faithlessness in the Self be possible?

Aathmani – in the Self; aviswaasa: - faithlessness; katham - how.

How can a human being be without faith in aathmaa? Why?

- स्वतः सिद्धे: - Because the aathmaa is self-proven.

Once again, the example of light should be remembered. Light is 'taken for granted'. Vedas say the Consciousness is 'taken for granted', in the same manner.

- अप्रमेय - In the subject (the Self, in this context) which can never be revealed /objectified by any pramaanam.

In fact, pramaanams are revealed by Consciousness; the 'revealed' need not reveal the 'revealer'. With regard to such an aathmaa, how can there be non-belief?

This raises a question, not discussed by Sureswaraachaarya here, but relevant: "If aathmaa is self-evident, why should scriptures talk of aathma jnaanam"? The answer is, that, Vedaantha is not meant to reveal the existence of aathmaa (Consciousness); but, is meant to reveal the nature of Consciousness, that, Consciousness (1) is not a part / property / product of the body (2) is an entity independent of the body, pervading the body and lending it sentiency (3) is not limited by the boundaries of the body; but, exists beyond the body – thus not limited by space (4) continues to survive even after the fall of the body and thus, not limited by Time also and (5) though (Consciousness) continues to survive the fall of the body, it is not available for transactions, in the absence of the medium – the body.

An example (for easier understanding of this fact): When an individual looks into a mirror, is his object to prove the existence of his face? The individual has no doubt with regard to the existence of his face; he uses the mirror only to know the 'nature' of his face. Likewise, chaitanyam is svatha: siddham; the scriptures only reveal the 'nature' of Consciousness. Therefore, how can you doubt the existence of the Consciousness Principle?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 90:

यदपि उक्तम् "अन्तरेण विधिम्" इति - तदपि अबुद्धिपूर्वकम् इव नः प्रतिभाति । यस्मात् कालान्तर फलदायिषु कर्मः एतद् घटते। आत्मलाभकाल एव फलदायिनि तु आत्मज्ञाने न एतत् समञ्जसम् इति आह ।

The statement 'anything undertaken independent of injunction, for securing spiritual objectives, is like pouring oblations into ashes' (16) seems to us to be due to lack of understanding. That would apply only to actions productive of their fruits at a future date. It would not apply to knowledge of the Self, which produces its result simultaneous with itself.

Sureswaraachaarya goes to the next verse (16) of the poorva pakshin, in which, the poorva pakshin had raised a new question.

With regard to any Vedic injunction, the result of observing the injunction, is known based on the twofold vaakyam – vidhi vaakyam (prescriptions) or nishedha vaakyam (prohibitions). The direct result is not obvious to the follower of the injunction. For instance, the ritual prokshanam is vidhi and is supposed to produce punyam. Similarly, the nishedha vaakyam "suraam na pibeth", totally prohibits the consumption of intoxicants. Science does not totally prohibit intoxicants; but, saasthraas do, with the warning that such nishiddha karmaas (prohibited actions) produce paapam. But, the punyam resulting from observing the vidhi vaakyam or the paapam resulting from the prohibited actions is not visible; only the veda vaakyas are the authorities for such adrishta palan.

As for jnaanam, Sureswaraachaarya had said (in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 88) that there need be no vidhi or nishedha with regard to jnaanam. The poorva pakshin, therefore, asked: "If brahma jnaanam does not come under any vidhi vaakyaa or nishedha vaakyaa, you cannot talk of any positive or negative results for brahma jnaanam. So, even if there is something like brahma jnaanam, it will not give any result. It is nishpalam". The poorva pakshin likened this (in verse 16) to 'pouring oblations into ashes'. It may also be likened to offering a non-prescribed oblation into the Homa, say, an apple. Such oblations do not produce any result, since Vedas do not talk about them. Such actions (without Vedic prescription) is nishpalam.

Sureswaraachaarya counters this statement of the poorva pakshin, in these portions.

- यदपि युक्तम् - Another argument given by the poorva pakshin,
- "अन्तरेण विधिम्" इति – that ran "he who undertakes anything through delusion, independent of scriptural injunction, for securing spiritual objectives, gains no help thereby. His work is futile like pouring oblations into ashes",
- तदपि - that statement also,
- अबुद्धि पूर्वकम् इव - is one made without application of mind.
- नः प्रतिभाति - So it appears to us.
Na: - for us.
- यस्मात् - Why?
- कालान्तर फलदायिषु कर्मसु - In actions which produce results after a long time,
- एतत् घटते - this rule is applicable.

With regard to brahma jnaanam, one does not require any such vidhi, to talk about the palan, because, even without any saasthra vaakyam, jnaana palan (result of knowledge) is known to us. It is a dhrushta palan – visible result.

What is the result? When jnaanam comes, ajnaanam goes. That 'when light is switched on, darkness goes away' is obvious. It does not require saasthra vaakyam. What is the further benefit of removal of darkness? With the removal of darkness, darkness-caused problems also go away.

Likewise, when aathma jnaanam comes, aathma ajnaanam goes away and the consequences of (i.e. problems caused by) aathma ajnaanam also go away. This is a dhrushta palan.

48. Chapter I, Verses 90 and 91 (24-03-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is refuting the 2nd poorva pakshin, (whose views were presented in verses 14 to 19), in these verses starting from 85 up to 97.

This 2nd poorva pakshin is called anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin, who says that there is no such thing as aathma jnaanam teaching at all, in the Saasthraas. "Even if there is any mention of aathma jnaanam, it is a not a primary teaching; but, is to be utilized only as an anga of karma. Karma being the angi, the thaathparyam of the Vedas goes to karma only. Aathma jnaanam is not the central theme of Vedas. There are only vidhi nishedha vaakyaas in the Vedas, prescribing or prohibiting karma - but not jnaanam " maintains this poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this. He says: "In Jnaana kaandaa, there are several sentences, which prescribe jnaanam as the end in itself, and talk only of jnaanam, like 'pareekshya lokaan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath na asthi akrutha: kruthena thadh vijnaanaartham sa gurum eva abhigaccheth samithpaani: srothriya brahma nishtam' (Mundakopanishad – I. ii . 12); therefore, jnaanam is the thaathparyam of the Vedas. The portions on jnaanam may not be voluminous; but, jnaanam is the central theme of the Vedas. Of course, there can be no vidhi with regard to jnaanam, since jnaanam is not subject to one's will and where will is not possible, vidhi also is not possible. To repeat: while jnaanam is the central subject of the Vedas, since jnaanam is not subject to any vidhi, Vedas do not and need not contain any vidhi, with regard to jnaanam".

The poorva pakshin responds: "If there is no vidhi with regard to jnaanam, it would mean that there can be no palan also for jnaanam. Vidhivaakya karmaas produce positive results, in the form of punyam, while nishiddha karmaas produce negative results, in the form of paapam. If jnaanam does not have vidhi vaakyaas or nisheda vaakyaas talking about it, it can have no positive or negative results and the portions covering jnaanam are equivalent to artha vaadha baaghaas, which have neither vidhi nor nisheda and which produce no results. When such is the case, how can you claim any palan for jnaanam?"

Sureswaraachaarya answers this in verse 90. In the introduction to the verse, he says: "You do not require vidhi (positive statement) or nishedaa (prohibiting statement) to know what is jnaana palan, because jnaana palan is already known to every one, by experience. Jnaana palan is not adhrishta palan – but always dhrishta palan, experienced by every one, every day."

What is the palan of jnaanam? Ans: Ajnaana nivritthi.

Any jnaanam removes the relevant ajnaanam. "Yadh vishayaka jnaanam labhyathey thena jnaanena thadvishayaka ajnaanam apagacchathi ithi drishtam palam. Thadhartham kimartham vidhi: nishedha: vaa apekshathey?" - "When knowledge about any subject is acquired, then, because of that knowledge, the ignorance about that subject goes away' is a commonly experienced fact. In that case, why do you have to seek vidhi or nishedham?. Neither will be required.

Sureswaraachaarya, therefore, says: "Kaalanthara paladhaayishu karmasu ethath gatathe" - "What you say will apply only with respect to the adrishta palan of the karmaas, which give results much later, either in this life or even in subsequent births". And continues:

- त – Whereas,
- आत्मज्ञाने - in the matter of aathma jnaanam
- आत्मलाभकाले एव फलदायिनि - which gives it result, even at the time of uthpatthi:(adjective to aathma jnaanam)

Aathma laabha: - Janma or uthpatthi; paladhaayini – which gives results.

- एतत् न समञ्जसम् - this rule (that vidhi or nishedhaa is required for knowing the result) is not applicable .
- इत्याह- This is being said (in the verse that follows)

Aathma jnaanam produces its result (ajnaana nivritthi), instantaneously on its very rise, similar to darkness going away instantaneously, when light is switched on. And, similar to one's physical actions becoming easy because of the removal of darkness, the moment aathma jnaanam arises, that very moment, there is mental relaxation; stress and tension are got rid of. This is the subsequent and obviously, more important result of aathma jnaanam.

Verse 90 – Chapter I:

जानात्पले हि अवाप्ते अस्मिन् प्रथ्यक्षे भवघातिनि।

When this consummation of knowledge, destructive of bondage, can be attained as a matter of immediate perception, to speak of knowledge as 'being of no help as it is without any supporting injunction' (16), does not seem to us to be in accordance with any reason.

- जानात् प्रथ्यक्षे फले अस्मिन् अवाप्ते- When visible result can be attained instantaneously from acquisition of aathma jnaanam,

Jnaanaath – from athma jnaanam; prathyakshe pale - instantaneous visible result; avaapthe – when attained.

What prathyaksha palan? Ans: Destruction of samsaaraa.

- भवघातिनि - Destroyer of samsaaraa (adjective to jnaana palan)

How can you say that jnaana palan is prathyaksham (instantaneously perceived)?

Ans: The jnaani becomes free from sareerathrayam, immediately on acquiring jnaanam. Jnaana kale eva, the jnaani becomes a nithya videha aathmaa. He is not obsessed with the future of his sthoola or sookshma sareeram. Concern for sthoola and/or sookshma sareeram is deha abhimaanam, which leads to punar janmam. Jnaanam, thus, rids the jnaani of the deha abhimaanam instantaneously and punarjanma later.

Therefore:

- "तत् उपकाराय न" इति वचः - the (poorva pakshin's) statement that "jnaanam will not benefit the jnaani",
- न न्याय्यम्- (is) not at all proper
- नः भाति - (so) it appears to us.

"Your statement does not appear to be correct to us" says the Achaarya, to the poorva pakshin.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 91:

The reference to Jaimini's statement appears to be due to not comprehending his intention (17). To Explain: it cannot be the opinion of Jaimini that the entire Veda subserves action. If this were his opinion, he would not have composed the sacred saareeraka soothraas beginning with the aphorisms, 'Then, therefore, inquiry into Brahman', 'Brahman is that from which the origin etc. of this world proceed', which embody inquiry into the import of the whole of Vedhaanthaa, enshrine a profound logic and which aim at setting forth the essential nature of the Brahman-reality. But, he has composed that treatise.

Sureswaraachaarya takes up verse 17, for refutation. In this verse 17, the poorva pakshin referred to a soothraa by Jaimini Maharishi, who was a disciple of Vyaasaachaarya, in his Poorva Meemaamsaa Saasthram, which text is in the form of soothraas. The soothra referred to, is: "Aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam", which means "since the entire Veda is dealing with kriyaa (karmaa), any statement, presenting only facts and not presenting karma is useless (redundant)". "Athadhartha vaakyam" is a "factual statement - a non-commandment statement".

"Commandment statements are fruitful statements. Factual statements are not fruitful statements" is the poorva pakshin's stand, based on Jaimini. An example (already cited, in another context) is the factual statement "there is water in the container". The poorva pakshin holds, that, the mere knowledge that, there is water in the container, does not give any result. But, if a commandment "access and drink the water" is given, followed by the action of accessing the water and drinking it, the result of 'quenching the thirst' is achieved. "Likewise, "thathvam asi" is also only a factual statement and not a commandment. There is no use of repeating the statement thathvam asi" says the poorva pakshin.

Some philosophers recommend meditation on mahaa vaakyaa as a karma to be practiced; and, hold, that, the punyam resulting from the meditation will give mokshaa. Yet another group of philosophers converts mahaa vaakyaa japa into a karma, which japa, according to them will give punyam, in turn, giving mokshaa.

But, Vedhaanthins believe that "soham" is meant neither for meditation nor japa; but, is intended for vichaaraa and assimilation.

The poorva pakshin, on the other hand, considers the statement "thathvam asi" itself, as redundant, based on his interpretation of Jaimini. This is being referred to, here.

- यद् जैमिनीयम् वचनम् उद्धृत्यसि - That statement of Jaimini, being presented by you,
- तदपि - that reference also ,
- उद्भावयते - is made (by you),
- तद् विवक्षा अपरिज्ञानात् एव - because of ignorance (on your part) of the implied intention / significance of Jaimini's statement.

Vivakshaa – 'implied' (not explicitly stated) intention; aparijnaanam – ignorance.

The Achaaryaa tells the poorva pakshin: "Behind Jaimini's soothra, there is an implied idea, not understood by you".

- किम् कारणम्- Why do I say so ?

Meemaamsaa is Vedic analysis - analysis of Vedic manthraas. Jaimini's soothraas are called Poorva Meemaamsa Soothraas i.e. those who analyze the Poorva Baaghaa (i.e. karma kaandaa) of the Vedas. Jaimini's guru, Vyaasaachaarya, on the other hand, has authored Utthara Meemaamsaa, the analysis of the latter part of the Vedas – the Jnaana Kaandaa. The very titles indicate that, Jaimini has limited himself to the analysis of the karma kaandaa, while, Vyaasaachaarya has analysed only the Jnaana kaandaa. Sureswaraachaarya points out, that, when, therefore, Jaimini uses the word 'aamnaaya:', he has referred only to the poorva baaghaa of the Vedas- not to the poorna Vedas or the utthara baaghaa of the Vedas.

A simple example: The word 'day' has two different meanings, in the two statements 'a day consists of 24 hours' and 'he works day and night'. The contexts, in which the word is used, make the difference. This 'contextually curtailed meaning' is termed 'samkuchitha artha:'.

Similarly, "though the general meaning of the word aamnaaya: is Veda, in the context of the use by Jaimini Maharishi, the word would mean only the karma kaandaa of the Vedas and not the poorna veda. In the karma kaandaa, vidhi alone has significance; factual statements are redundant. But, in jnaana kaandaa, vidhi is not required, factual statements are not redundant and therefore, the statement 'thathvam asi' is meaningful" holds Sureswaraachaarya.

- यतः- Because,
- जैमिनेः अभिप्रायः न - (when writing this soothra) Jaimini's opinion is not
- "आम्नायः सर्व एव क्रियार्थः" इति- that the entire Veda is meant only for karma.

While using the word aamnaaya:, Jaimini has not intended the word to mean the entire Veda, but only the Veda Poorva Baaghaa. This intention of his, is very clear, because, if Jaimini had intended the word to mean both Veda Poorvam (karma kaandaa) and Veda antham (jnaana kaandaa), then he would have made Vyaasaachaarya's Utthara Meemaamsa Soothraas redundant. But, how can the devoted sishtyaa make his revered guru's teachings redundant or meaningless? He would certainly not dare to enter the territory of his guru. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- यदि हि अयम् अभिप्रायः अभविष्यत्- If Jaimini's intention were to cover the entire Veda, through his Poorva Meemamsa Soothraas,
- श्रीमाच्छारीरकम्- the holy Utthara Meemaamsaa (of Vyaasaachaarya)
- न असूत्रयिष्यत् - would be meaningless.

Very powerful descriptions are given by Sureswaraachaarya for the Uttthara Meemaamsaa (i.e. for Sreemath saareerakam.)

The first description is about the purpose of the Brahma soothraas.

- "अथातो ब्रह्मजिज्ञासा" - "Then, therefore, inquiry into Brahman" (the first soothraa of the Brahma Soothraas),
- "जन्माध्यस्य यतः"- "Brahman is that from which the origin etc. of this world proceed" (the second soothraa of Brahma Soothraas),
- इत्येवमादि- with such soothraas,
- ब्रह्म वस्तु स्वरूप मात्र याथात्म्य प्रकासनपरम् - that reveal the fact about the Reality-nature of the Paaramaarthika sathya Brahman,

Vasthu – paaramaarthika sathyam; svaroopam – nature; yaathaathmyam – fact; prakaasanaparam - revealing.

The soothraas reveal paaramaarthikam. By dwelling on the paaramaarthikam itself, the resulting clarity of knowledge will make all the saadhanaas redundant. The 'clear knowledge' should not encourage the seeker to do saadhanaas; but, should make all saadhanaas redundant, because saadhanaas are meant for future mokshaa, whereas, the 'clear knowledge' has already made mokshaa, the very, very real nature of the seeker. The more the clarity of knowledge, the less the tendency to resort to saadhanaas. "I have clear knowledge; I am doing nidhidhyaasanam to remove vipareetha bhaavana" is also a wrong statement, since, 'clear knowledge' includes understanding vipareetha bhavanaa as mithyaa and there is no question of removing mithyaa.

While sruthis reveal the true nature of Brahman; it is supported by 'reasoning' also.

गम्भीर न्याय सन्दुब्धम् - well reinforced by deep reasoning.

Gambheera – deep; nyaaaya – reasoning / logic; samdrubdam - well reinforced / well corroborated/ well substantiated / well clarified.

The first chapter of the Brahma Soothraas is sruthi pradhaanam, while, the 2nd chapter is yukthi pradhaanam.

Clear understanding is the only requirement, completing the process of liberation. Nothing else need be done. The understanding is: "I was free; I am free; I will ever be free".

सर्व वेदान्तार्थ मीमांसनम्— the result of the analysis of the entire Vedhaanthaa (another adjective to sreemath saareerakam)

Meemaamsanam - analysis. Brahma soothraas of Vyaasaachaarya, the Achaaryaa points out, is the result of the analysis of the Veda Antha portions.

"The sreemath saareerakam of such glory would become meaningless, if Jaimini had used the word aamnaaya: to indicate the entire Veda" is the Achaaryaa's objection.

Saareerakam – sareerey bhavam / residing in the body as chaithanyam.

The Brahma Soothraas deal with brahman and hence, are referred to as 'sreemath saareerakam', here.

- असूत्रयः च – But, separate Utthara Meemaamsa soothraas have been composed (making it clear, that, Jaimini has not covered the entire Veda, in his soothraas)

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 90:

तस्मात् जैमिनेः एव अयम् अभिप्रायः यथैव विधिवाक्यानाम् स्वार्थमात्रे प्रामाण्यम् एवम् ऐकात्म्यवाक्यानाम् अपि अनधिगतवस्तु परिच्छेद साम्यात् इति । अथ इदम् अभिधीयते ।

Therefore, the idea of Jaimini, must have been, that, just as Vedic injunctions have validity in their sphere of application, the passages of Vedhaanthaa, speaking of the unity of the aathman, must be recognized as valid in their sphere, for, there is similarity between the two, in so far as both propound what transcends other modes of knowledge. Therefore, the following is stated:

Therefore, we have to receive the rules properly. The rules are: (1) In karma kaandaa, all commandment statements are fruitful, while factual statements are redundant. (2) In Jnaana kaandaa, there are no commandment statements; there are only factual statements and the factual statements in jnaana kaandaa are fruitful. You have to only clearly understand the statements; you have nothing to do.

49. Chapter I, Verses 91 and 92 (31-03-2007)

In these verses, beginning from verse 85 and up to verse 97, Sureswaraachaarya is refuting the 2nd poorva pakshin, the anabhyupedhya karma vaadhin, who does not even accept aathma jnaanam and whose views were presented in verses 14 to 19. The Aachaaryaa is analyzing these verses (14 to 19) and refuting them, one by one.

From verse 91, the 17th verse is being refuted. Verse 17 is a 'technical' verse, wherein, the poorva pakshin quoting a Jaimini Soothram – "aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam", argued that Jaimini had said that the Veda is dealing with only karma as its main theme, and, therefore, even if aathma jnaanam is mentioned anywhere in the Veda, it does not have any importance; nor is it of any use, by itself. "Knowledge has to be utilized for some karma; i.e., knowledge can only be an angam of karma. Ultimately, karma alone has to give one purushaartha or other. All siddha bodhaka vaakyaani (of the Vedas) which produce knowledge in the mind, are useless by themselves. If they are to be useful, they have to be linked to kaarya bodhaka vaakyaani i.e. to statements prescribing one activity or another. Ultimately, karma alone will give benefits" is the stand of the poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraachaarya refuted this. He first points out: "Jaimini had not written about the entire Veda. Jaimini's meemaamsaa is not called Veda Meemaamsaa- but, Poorva Meemaamsaa, which means 'analysis of the Veda Poorva Baaghaa (or Karma Kaandaa'. It is Vyaasaachaarya who has analyzed the Veda antha, through his Utthara Meemaamsa Soothraas i.e. Brahma soothraas. Since Jaimini has limited himself to the karma kaandaa, whenever he uses the word Veda, it can mean only the Veda Poorva Baaghaa or karma kaandaa "

The Aachaaryaa proceeding further, tells the poorva pakshin: "In karma kaandaa, your rule, that 'siddha bodhaka vaakyaani and knowledge derived from them, are useless by themselves; they have to be connected to karma, is acceptable."

The well known example, is the description of svargam – which is a siddha bodhaka vaakyam, giving detailed descriptions of heaven. This information, by itself, the svarga jnaanam, is useless; it has to be connected to the vidhi vaakyam "jyothistomena svarga kamo yajetha", indicating that an aspirer for heaven, should do the Jyothistoma Yaagam, to achieve his purpose.

But, then, this rule is not applicable to all cases. There are situations where knowledge, by itself, is fruitful, without the need for any karma. Kevala jnanam does give benefits often. Several examples are there: one is the well-known rajju jnaanam, which, instantaneously on its rise, removes the misconception of snake, the consequent fear etc. Another example, that may be cited, is the situation when an individual suspected to be ailing from a serious physical disorder, is subjected to medical tests. Till the results are known, the individual undergoes mental agony; but, once the results reveal that he is free of the suspected disorder, the very knowledge removes the agony and stress, without any follow-up action.

The Achaaryaa continues: "As opposed to the karma kaandaa, the jnaanam given by jnaana kaandaa, is not governed by any vidhi. Nor has it to be followed by any karma or kaaryaa. The jnaanam itself directly gives benefits; the benefits being adhyasa nivritthi and the consequent freedom."

- तस्मात्- Therefore,
- जैमिनेः अयम् एव अभिप्रायः - Jaimini's intention is only this much.

What intention?

- यथैव - In the manner similar to
- विधिवाक्यानाम् स्वार्थमात्रे प्रामाण्यम्- the Vedic injunctions having validity in their sphere of application,

Vidhivaakyaani – Vedic injunctions for karma; svarthamaathre – in their own sphere of field of application/ i.e. in the sphere of karma; praamaanyam – validity.

In the karma kaandaa, if there is a siddhabodhaka vaakyam, it will be considered apramaanam (invalid) i.e. kevala jnaana janaka vaakyam in the karma kaandaa is useless. But, this is only in karma kaandaa.

- एवम् ऐक्यात्म्यवाक्यानाम् अपि (स्वार्थमात्रे प्रामाण्यम्) - in the jnaana kaandaa, the siddha bodhaka vaakyaani, the statements that reveal the fact that there is only one aathmaa in reality, have validity in their sphere.

Eikaathmya vaakyaani – means "statements that declare 'there is only one aatmaa; everything else is mithyaa'". Eikaathmyam means Aathma ekathvam i.e. jeevathma-paramaathma eiykam and jeevaathma-jeevaathma aiykyam.

The term "Svaarthamaathre praamaanyam" – "valid in their own sphere" is to be re-used, to draw the meaning properly. "In the jnaana kaandaa" is also supplied.

The essence is that "vidhi vaakyaani are valid in the field of action and, likewise, siddha bodhaka vaakyaani are valid in the field of jnaanam". How can one come to this conclusion?

- अनधिगत वस्तु परिच्छेद साम्यात् - Since there is similarity between the two in so far as they reveal subjects, which transcend other modes of knowledge

Anadhigatha – Unknown; vasthu – subject; paricchedha – revealing; saamyam – similarity.

Karma kaandaa teaches “unknown” (apoorva) rituals. Jnaana kaandaa teaches “unknown” (apoorva) facts (about aathmaa). Both are dealing with apoorva vishaya-unknown facts. In the aspect of “teaching of apoorva vishaya”, the two kaandaas have similarity (saamyam).

But, in the matter of ‘knowledge’, the knowledge received through jnaana kaandaa, is fruitful without any follow-up karma. Only in the karma kaandaa, the knowledge received should be followed up by corresponding action, if it has to be fruitful. The poorva pakshin has to restrict this rule to karma kaandaa and cannot extend it to jnaana kaandaa.

- इति - This should have been the intention of Jaimini.
- अतः इदम् अभिधीयथे - Therefore, it is said.

Verse 91 – Chapter I :

अधिचोदनम आमनायः तस्यैव स्यात्क्रियार्थता ।

तत्वमस्यादिवाक्यानाम् ब्रूत कर्मार्थता कथम् ॥ ९१ ॥

Whatever is affirmed as supplementary to injunctions subserves the purpose of action. How can statements like ‘That thou art’, which do not belong to this category, be construed as contributory to action?

All problems have resulted because of the ‘misunderstanding’ of Jaimini’s soothram. Sureswaraachaarya says that the word ‘aamnaaya.’ should be understood properly.

- आमनायः - The word ‘aamnaaya.’, appearing in Jaimini’s soothram,
- अधिचोदनम् - is connected only with karma kaandaa.

Chodhanam – vidhi (denotes karma kaandaa, in this context).

Why so? Because, Jaimini has analyzed only the karma kaandaa of the Vedas, since, his guru has already analyzed the jnaana kaandaa. Jaimini will not enter his guru’s territory.

- तस्यैव - Only with respect to karma kaandaa,

- क्रियार्थता स्यात् - there is the possibility of teaching karma.

Karma can be taught only in karma kaandaa. In jnaana kaandaa, no new karma is taught. In fact, Upanishads even talk of the futility of karma – as in the well-known manthraa – “na karmanaa na prajaya dhanena thyaagena eke amruthathvam aanasu:” – “It is through renunciation (karma thyaaga:) that a few seekers have attained immortality – not through ritual, not through progeny nor wealth”.

Jnaana kaandaa reveals the fact “I am a nithya akarthaa”. How can such a jnaanam induce me to act?

- तत्वमस्यादिवाक्यानाम् - For jnaana kaandaa statements, such as “That thou art”
- कथम् कर्मार्थता - how can karma be the teaching?
- ब्रूत - Tell me (addressed to the poorva pakshin).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 92 :

अपि च । ऐकाग्र्यपक्ष इव अद्रिष्टार्थ कर्मसु भवत्यक्षे अपि प्रवृत्तिः दुर्लक्ष्या । यतः । (TEXT)

And again, just as the theory of the unity of the Self precludes action, even on your theory, actions productive of unseen results become inconceivable, for: (TEXT MEANING).

Sureswaraachaarya takes up the poorva pakshin's arguments in verse 18, in which verse, the poorva pakshin had said that the Veda had talked about only karma and never of aatma jnaanam. “You have to continue to do vaidhika karma throughout your life. Sanyaasaa is not the teaching of Veda; it is not even acceptable to the Veda” the poorva pakshin held. In support, he quoted the 2nd manthaa of the Isaavaasya Upanishad – “Kurvan eva karmaani jjeevisheth satham samaa:” – “Doing actions, let him desire to live for a hundred years”. Since “one hundred years” is considered poorna aayu:, according to this manthraa and the poorva pakshin quoting this manthraa, life-long karma is essential.

Then what about the sanyaasa aasramaa? The poorva pakshin says, that, the sanyaasa aasramaa is prescribed only for those who cannot do vaidhika karma, because of physical or mental infirmities. “The entire Veda preaches only karma” is the poorva pakshin's view.

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this view of the poorva pakshin, in five verses, 92 to 96. The course of the refutation can be briefly summarised, as below:

Sureswaraachaarya asks the poorva pakshin: “You are talking about vaidhika karmaas. Varieties of yaagaas are prescribed in the karma kaandaa of the Vedas. Many of the rituals are for attainment of higher lokaas, mainly svarga. At the time of the performance of such rituals, what is your expectation? If you want to attain svarga, who are 'you' going to svarga? If you say, 'I want to go to svarga', what is the meaning of the 'I'? Generally the body is referred to, as 'I'. But, the body is cremated and reduced to ashes, on death. Then how do 'you' hope to go to svarga?"

The poorva pakshin replies: "I do not say I am the body. I claim to be the dehavyathiriktha aathmaa, the Self different from the body".

The Achaaryaa will question: "But, who is doing the rituals? Whoever does the karma alone will get the palan."

The poorva pakshi has to reply: "I, the dehavyathiriktha aathmaa, is the kartha, who will leave the body and go to svarga." (It follows that, the aathmaa becomes a bokthaa also).

Sureswaraachaarya's question: "Since, from what you say, the aathmaa is different from the body, what is the nature of that aathmaa?"

The poorva pakshin's answer is similar to that of an advaitin: "Aathmaa nithya: sarvagatha: cha" – eternal and all-pervading.

Later, the poorva pakshin says "there are many eternal, all-pervading aathmaas" – 'many' and 'all-pervading' being obvious contradictions. Even ignoring this claim of the poorva pakshin, the poorva pakshin is proved wrong, by the Achaaryaa, who asks "Can that eternal, all-pervading aathmaa be a karthaa or a bokthaa?"

The aathmaa cannot do any action, since the aathmaa does not have karma adhikaaram (i.e. varnaasrama dharma), karthruthvam, karma pala sambhandham or bokthruthvam. "Veda can never prescribe karma for you, since you are akartha, anadhikaari and abokthaa" says the Achaaryaa.

Till now, Sureswaraachaaryaa was saying that the jnaana kaandaa does not preach karma. Now, he goes a step further and says "not only jnaana kaandaa, but even karma kaandaa cannot prescribe karma, since you are akartha, incapable of karma. No part of the Veda is meant to prescribe karma; Veda's only aim is to teach you the fact that you are akartha-anadhikaari-abokthaa aathmaa. Jnaanam alone is the teaching of the entire Veda. There is no other teaching at all".

The poorva pakshin naturally questions: "If Veda does not prescribe karma, then what about all the vidhivaakyaani in the Vedas? "Jyothistomena svarga kaama yajetha", "kurvan eva iha karmaani jiveevisheth”, “ahar aha: sandhyaa upaaseetha” are all Vedic exhortations. What about these statements?”

Sureswaraachaarya answers: “You should interpret Vedas properly. They are not meant to teach karma. Since Vedas know that you are akartha-abokthaa, they will not prescribe karma for you. In fact, Vedas want to teach you that you are akartha-abokthaa. But, before receiving the teaching, every individual has abhimaanaa for the body and because of the abhimaanaa, he also has the notion that he is karthaa-bokthaa. Because of this strong deha-abhimaanaa and the strong karthruthva-bokthruthva attitudes, the individual engages in karma. At this stage, because of his pre-occupation with karma, he does not even stop to listen to the Vedic teaching, that, he is the akartha-aboktha-aathmaa. Therefore, to create confidence in the people’s mind about Veda, Veda bears with the ‘ignorance’ of the people and temporarily accepts karthruthvam and bokthruthvam. Vidhi vaakyaani are called anuvadha vaakyaani. Such temporary acceptance by the Veda, because of its compassion for humanity, should not be misconstrued as ‘teaching’; nor should such statements be looked upon as pramaanam”.

The Mundakopanishad (verse 12 – Sec. II – Chap. I) exhorts: “pareekshya lokan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath nas asthi akrutha: kruthena | Thadh vijnanaartham sa gurum eva abhigachcheth samithpaani: srothriyam brahma nishtam” - “having examined the worlds, which are achieved through karma, a brahmin should come to dispassion. The unproduced mokshaa is not possible through karma. Therefore, to attain knowledge, he must necessarily approach, with samith in hand, a teacher who is learned in scriptures and established in Brahmar”. While this is a pramaana vaakyam, the Isaavaasya manthram “kurven eva iha karmaani jiveevisheth”, is not a pramaana vaakyam, but, only an anuvadha vaakyam, temporarily accepting the human ignorance. This fact is brought out by Adi Sankara, in his Isaavaasya Upanishad Bhashyam for this manthraa.

Veda says: “As long as you look upon yourself, as a human being, you are a karthaa. This is because of the deha abhimaanam of the human being. And, as long as you have the deha abhimaanam, you have to do karma. Once you realise the truth about aathmaa, karma is not necessary. The jnaanam liberates you”.

- भवत् पक्षे अपि - Even according to your view,
- प्रवृत्तिः - venturing
- अद्रिष्टार्थ कर्मसु— into vaidhika karmaas, that lead to adrishta palan,
- दुर्लक्ष्या – is not possible/ is inconceivable,
- ऐक्यात्म्यपक्ष इव - similar to the impossibility (or inconceivability) of engagement in Karma, in Jnaana kaandam.
- यतः - because,

In both systems, karma is not possible, since aathmaa is akartha /anadhikaari/ aboktha. “Karma is only for the ignorant; come out of karma; gain knowledge; be free” is the exhortation of Sureswaraachaarya, in the verses that follow.

50. Chapter I, Verses 92 to 94 (07-04-2007)

Chapter I: Verse 92 –

स्वर्गम् यियासुः जुहुयात् अग्निहोत्रम् यथाविधि ।

देहादि वित्थापितस्य एवम् कर्तृत्वम् जैमिनेः कथम् ॥ ९२ ॥

How can on Jaimini's theory, an agent of action of the kind enjoined in the passage, 'He who wants to reach heaven must perform agnihotra sacrifice, in the proper order', perform it when he transcends adjuncts like the body?

In these verses, from verse 85 to 97, Sureswaraacharya is refuting the 2nd poorva pakshin, who presented his views in verses 14 to 19. The Acharya is taking up each verse of the poorva pakshin and refutes the contents. The 2nd poorva pakshin is the abhyupedhya karma vaadin, who says that aathma jnaanam does not exist at all and that, it is karma alone that can give liberation and therefore, Veda is teaching karma alone, as saadhanaa for liberation.

Sureswaraacharya is refuting the contents of verse 18, in five verses, 92 to 96.

What was the poorva pakshin's contention in verse 18? He quoted the second manthraa from the Isaavaasya Upanishad, "kurvan eva iha karmaani jijeevisheth satham samaa:" – "a vaidhika should live the full span of a hundred years, performing the vaidhika karmas without fail". The poorva pakshin claims that, the emphasis of this manthraa is not only on compulsory performance of karma, as indicated by the use of the word eva: (the Bhagavadh Githa – verse 5 – Ch. XVIII, also states: "yagnya dhana thapa: karma na thyaajyam thath kaaryam eva thath" – "activity in the form of jagnyaa, charity and austerity should not be given up; it has to be performed necessarily") but, also that, this compulsory performance of the vaidhika karma is to be adhered to, for the individual's full life span of one hundred years. "Karma is compulsory; karma is universal; karma is life-long; therefore, karma is the primary teaching of Veda" is the poorva pakshin's argument.

Sureswaraacharya refutes this powerful argument, in five verses. Adi Sankara had also, earlier, negated this argument of the poorva pakshin, in his Isaavaasya Upanishad Baashyam for the 2nd manthraa, but briefly. Sureswaraacharya expands that brief negation in these verses and also explains how Vedas should be understood.

The Acharya, first, talks about the nature of athmaa. The poorva pakshin's understanding of the nature of aathmaa, is not different from that of the Vedhaanthin. According to the poorva pakshin also, as for the Vedhaanthin, the aathmaa is akartha, abokthaa, asanga: and varna aasrama rahitha: The corollary of this fact, is, that, aathmaa cannot be associated with karma. This is the first stage of Sureswaraachaarya's arguments.

The 2nd stage: The aathma jnaani also cannot be associated with karma. How do you say this? Aathma jnaani is one who claims that he is the aathmaa i.e. he is equal to aathmaa and therefore, he is also akarthaa, abokthaa, asanga: and varna aasrama rahitha: The aathma jnaani, also, cannot, therefore be associated with karma.

The 3rd stage of the Aachaaryaa's arguments, is, that, since the aathma jnaani cannot be associated with karma, it follows that karma can be associated only with aathma ajnaanis. All karmaas are prescribed only for ajnaanis.

There are a few more stages of the argument, which will be taken up later.

These three stages (aathma has no association with karma, aathma jnaani has no association with karma and therefore, karma is meant only for ajnaanis) are based on the poorva pakshin's own philosophy on aathmaa; not only on the Vedhaanthin's philosophy.

These three stages are being dealt with the Aachaaryaa, in these five verses.

In verse 92, the Aachaaryaa questions as to how the deha vyathriktha aathmaa can perform rituals?

- स्वर्गम् यियासुः जुहुयात् अग्निहोत्रम् यथाविधि - One who desires svarga should perform the agnihothraa ritual, exactly as prescribed.

Yiyaasu: - (yaathum ichhu:) – the one who desires to attain; juhuyaath - should perform; yathaa vidhi - exactly as prescribed.

- एवम - Through this sruthi vaakyam,
- देहादि वित्थापितस्य - for the jeevathmaa who is separated from the three bodies – sthoola, sookshma and kaarana,

Viththaapitha: - extracted out (intellectually – not physically)

When the performer of the agni hothraa ritual desires to go to svarga, he obviously accepts that 'he' is different from his body, since, he is aware, that, his body will be cremated after his death and therefore, his body cannot go to svarga; i.e. the concept of deha vyathiriktha aathmaa is accepted by the poorva meemaamsaka, who is a staunch believer in rituals.

The poorva meemaamsaka also accepts that the jeevaathmaa is nithya: (eternal) and sarvagatha: (all-pervading), like aakaasaa. (This aspect is not mentioned in this verse.)

- कथम् कर्तृत्वम् (भवेत्) - how can there be karthruthvam?

Just as aakaasaa cannot do any karma, aathmaa also cannot do any karma.

In the Baghavadh Githa, aathmaa is considered akartha-aboktha, according to Vedhaantha darsanam. Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that the aathmaa is akartha-aboktha, even according to the poorva meemaamsa darsanam and asks the poorva pakshin "katham aathmana: karthruthvam?" and also,

- (कथम्) जैमिने: (कर्तृत्वम् भवेत्) - How can karthruthvam be there for Jaimini also, who is an aathma jnaan?

Aathmaa does not have karthruthvam. Aathmajnaani also does not have karthruthvam. These first two stages of the argument have been covered, in this verse.

The same idea is repeated in the following verses also.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 93:

न च प्रत्याख्यात असेषसरीरादि कर्मसाधन स्वभावस्य आत्ममात्रस्य कर्मसु अधिकारः । यस्मात् ।

And, surely the pure Self, which is devoid of all instruments of action like the body, cannot be the fit subject to undertake action. Further: (TEXT MEANING)

In this verse, Sureswaraachaarya wants to say that aathmaa does not have varna aasramaa – it is varna aasrama atheetha: He tells the poorva pakshin: "All vaidhika karmas are based on varna and aasramaa qualifications. But, even according to your own poorva meemaamsaa, the nithya sarvagatha aathmaa cannot have varna or aasramaa. Because of this, karma adhikaaraa is not there for aathmaa and therefore, aathmaa cannot perform any karma. It follows that, the aathmajnaani also cannot have karma, since he is also varna-aasrama atheetha."

A verse in Adi Sankara's Nirvaana Dasakam runs: "Na varnaa na varnaasrama achaaradharmaa: na me dhaarana dhyaanayogaaadhya: api anaathmaasroyaham mama adhyaasa: naasthi thadh eko vasishta: siva kevaloham", wherein, the aathmajnaani claims "I am varna aasrama atheetha;: what karma can I do?". The difference is, again, that, the Nirvaana Dasakam claim is based on Vedhaantha darsanam, while, in these verses, the Achaaryaa points out, that, the absence of varna and aasramaa, and, therefore the ineligibility to do any vaidhika karma, of both aathmaa and aathmajnaani, are based on the poorva meemaasaka darsanam.

(An incidental topic: The injunction that every vaidhika karma requires the corresponding varna and aasramaa qualifications, is the reason why inter-caste weddings create problems, with regard to the vaidhika rituals to be followed to solemnize such a wedding.)

- आत्म मात्रस्य - For the pure aathmaa, (which has no association or contact with any of the three sareerams – similar to space that cannot have association with anything.)

Verse 33, Ch. XIII of the Bhagavadh Githa compares aathmaa to space: " Yathaa sarvagatham saukshmyaath aakaasam na upalipyathey sarvathra avasthitha: dehe thathaa aathmaa na upalipyathey " – " Just as the all-pervading space is not affected due to its subtlety, so also, the Self, which is present in every body, is not affected".

- प्रत्याक्यात असेष सरीरादि कर्म साधन स्वभावस्य - (which is) free from all the three sareeraas, (and, therefore) from all instruments required to perform karma.

Prathyaakyaatha – free from; asesha – without exception / all; karma saadhana-instruments for performance of karma.

All instruments for karma, such as jnaanedriyaas, karmendriyaas, pancha praanaas and antha: karanam belong to the sookshma sareeram. Since aathmaa is free from all the three sareerams, including sookshma sareeram, it is free from the instruments also. How can such an aathmaa perform any karma?

Na cha karmasu adhikaara: - there is no qualification / eligibility to perform karma.

And, therefore, an aathma jnaani also has no eligibility to perform karma.

Chapter I: Verse 93 –

सर्व प्रमाण असम्भाव्यः हि अहम्वृत्ति एक साधनः ।

युष्मदर्थम् अनादित्सुः जैमिनिः प्रेर्यते कथम् ॥ ९३ ॥

How can Jaimini, who (as pure self) is incomprehensible through the ordinary modes of valid knowledge, is to be approached only through ego-consciousness, and is separated from every non-Self, be enjoined to act by any injunction?

- कथम् जैमिनिः प्रेर्यते - How can Jaimini (an aathma jnaani) be compelled (to do any action)?

Why cannot Jaimini be persuaded to do karma? Because, he is an aathma jnaani, who claims to be aathmaa, whose nature is explained here.

- सर्व प्रमाण असम्भाव्यः - Inaccessible to all pramaanams.

Aathmaa = aathma jnaani and is therefore = Jaimini. Even saasthra pramaanam cannot address Jaimini, an aathma jnaani. Manthra 9 of the Brahmavalli (Thaithreyopanishad) runs: "Yatho vaacho nivarthanthe | apraapya manasaa saha" – "words, along with the mind, return without reaching that Brahmar".

- युष्मदर्थम् अनादित्सुः - Unassociated with anything (sareerathrayam)

"Yushmath" means "you" and "artham" means "object"; "yushmadhartham" means "objects of the word 'you'". In the saasthraas, the word yushmadhartham is used to mean "everything other than the 'seer' / everything dhrusyam / (ultimately meaning) all anaathmaa". Asmadhartham means "the 'seer' / dhruk / aathmaa."

"Aadhitsu:" means "capable of association with" and "anaadhitsu:" means "incapable of association with". Aathmaa is incapable of association with any anaathmaa and therefore has no relationship with the sareerathrayam. And, Jaimini is the sareethraya vilakshana sarvapramaana agochara aathmaa.

If aathmaa is not available for description, how can Vedas teach about aathmaa?

- अहम् वृत्ति एक साधनः - Aatmaa is not directly accessible; it is accessible only indirectly through the ahamkaaraa, otherwise called thvampadhaartham.

Saadhana: - in this context means pramaanam.

Such an aathmaa and such an aathma jnaani cannot be associated with karma. How can Veda prescribe karma for such a jnaan!? Karma prescriptions are only for ajnaanis? (A remark in lighter vein by Swami Suddhaananda is "Rules are only for fools"; while this may be applicable in worldly matters, only in a lighter vein, in Vedhanthaa it is a fact that karma injunctions are only for ajnaanis.)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 94:

प्रवृत्ति कारण अभावाः च । यस्मात् ।

And, again, there is no cause for action; for: (TEXT MEANING)

The same teaching is given in a different manner. In the previous sloka, (verse 93) Sureswaraachaaryaa said: "aathmaa is varna aasrama rahitha:", and, in the earlier verse (verse 92) "aathmaa karthruthvarahitha:".

In this verse, Sureswaraachaarya says "aathmaa is bokthruthva rahitha:". All karmas are performed only for karma pala praapthi: and karma pala bogartham, i.e. for the corresponding result of the karma and for enjoyment of the results of the karma. All karthaas are engaged in karma, only with the aim 'sukham'.

Sureswaraachaarya asks: "Can aathmaa be associated with sukha boghaa or sukha vishayaa?" Since aathmaa is, like space, asanga:, it cannot be associated with any sense pleasures. If you are interested in aathma aanandaa, you should be free of sense pleasures.

Aathmaa cannot have bokthruthvam; aathma jnaani also cannot have bokthruthvam. When he cannot have bokthruthvam, why should he perform karma, at all? The motivation for karma is sense pleasures. When a jnaani does not have sense pleasures, he does not have the motivation for performance of karma. How, then can he engage in any karma?

In the Bhagavadh Githa, verse 55 –Chapter II, refers to the sthitha pragnya: as "sarva kaamaan parijahaath" – "gives up all the desires" , while , verse 17 – Chapter III declares: "Ya: thu aathmarathi: eva syaadh aathmthruptha: cha maanava: aathmanyeva cha santhushta: thasya kaaryam na vidhyathe" – "The man who loves the Self alone, who is happy with the Self alone, and who is contented with the Self alone, has no karma to be performed by him" . The jnaani, having given up all his desires, (bokthruthva abhaavaath) has no motivation to perform any karma.

- प्रवृत्ति कारण अभावाः च - The motivating reason for pravrutthi (karma) is not there (for a jnaani)
- यस्मात् - Because,

Verse 94 – Chapter I :

सुखदःखादिभिः योग आत्मनः न अहमा ईक्ष्यते।

पराक्त्वात् प्रत्यगात्मत्वात् जैमिनिः प्रेर्यते कथम्॥९४॥

Pleasures and pains are not associated with the Self. They affect the ego. As they are external and objective and as Jaimini is the inner self-luminous principle, how can be actuated to act?

Aathma does not have bokthruthvam.

आत्मनः सुखदःखादिभिः योगः न ईक्ष्यते – For aathmaa contact with sense pleasures is not seen.

Yoga: - in this context, means contact / relationship / sambhandha:

Aathmaa cannot be related with the pains and pleasures created by the senses, since it is asanga: (Though both pain and pleasure are mentioned in the verse, 'pain' is not important, in this context. 'Aathmaa cannot be related with pleasures' is the more important fact.)

Then, who enjoys the sense pleasures, if it is not aathmaa?

- (सुखदःखादिभिः योगः) अहमा (ईक्ष्यते) - the pains and pleasures are connected with ahankaaraa only / i.e. mind only.

Why?

Sense pleasures are anaathmaa and therefore, can be associated with the anaathmaa mind only – only anaathmaa and anaathmaa can have relationship, with each other; aathmaa and anaathmaa cannot. Expressing differently: 'Perceived attributes' can belong only to 'perceived objects' – never to the 'perceiver subject'.

- पराकत्वात् – (dhrusyathvaath) / because they are external and 'perceived'

No sense pleasure can belong to the 'perceiver' aathmaa - it can belong only to the perceived mind.

- प्रत्यक् आत्मत्वात् - and, because, aathmaa is the subject – the 'perceiver'.

Prathyak – dhruk / the subject.

When I perceive an orange coloured cloth, the orange colour belongs only to the cloth – not to the perceiver.

- जैमिनिः कथम् प्रेर्यते – (This being so) How can Jaimini be persuaded to act?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 95 and Verse 95:

किनच ।

न तावध्योग एवास्ति शरीरेण आत्मनः सदा ।

विषयैः दूरतः नास्ति स्वर्गादौ स्यात् कथम् सुखम् ॥९५॥

And again: In the first place, there is no association between the body and the Self. From the objects, the Self is further removed. Then, how can the Self undergo pleasure in conditions like heaven?

किन्च - Moreover.

The Achaaryaa reiterates the same idea that aathmaa / aathma jnaani cannot have motivation for karma, since sense pleasures are not for them, but, for the mind only.

One may argue: "I need not do karma for myself (aathmaa); but, I can do karma, for the sake of the pleasures of my mind".

Answer: "To say 'my' mind, it requires a connection. Aathmaa can claim something as 'mine', only if it has connection with the claimed object. But aathmaa is asanga: - it has no relationship with any anaathmaa. It cannot claim 'my' mind. Further, aathmaa being all-pervading, whose mind can it claim to be its own? "I' am the Consciousness Principle, in whom all minds are there" is the claim of the aathma jnaani. Therefore, aathmaa cannot work for the pleasure of any particular mind; so also the aathma jnaani, who claims to be the aathmaa. If I work for the pleasure of a particular mind, I am an ajnaani".

51. Chapter I, Verses 95 to 97 (14-04-2007)

In these verses, from verse 85 to 97, Sureswaraachaarya is refuting the 2nd poorva pakshin, who gave his views in verses 14 to 19. The 2nd poorva pakshin is the anabhyupedyā karma vaadhin, who does not at all accept aathmajnaanam as main teaching of the Vedas and claims that karma alone can give liberation.

Sureswaraachaarya is refuting this poorva pakshin, verse by verse. He had refuted verses 14 to 17, in verses 85 to 91. The 18th verse is being refuted in verses 92 to 96 (five verses). In these verses, Sureswaraachaarya points out that karma can never be the central teaching or central theme of the Vedas - not only of the jnaana kaandaa, but, even of the karma kaandaa. Earlier, it was said that karma is not the central theme of the jnaana kaandaa, and that, it may probably be a central theme of the karma kaandaa. Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa says that karma is not a central theme of the karma kaandaa also.

Then, how do you explain the 2nd verse of the Isaavaasya Upanishad – "kurvan eva karmaani jjeevisheth satham samaa:" – "Perform karma throughout the full life span of 100 years"? How do you account for this?

Sureswaraachaarya answers this, step by step.

First, he said, that, karma cannot be associated with aathmaa even according to the poorva pakshin, because, (1) aathmaa does not have karthruthvam (2) aathmaa does not have varna and aasramaa – i.e. adhikaaraa for karma and (3) aathmaa cannot enjoy the palan of karma. Karthruthva abhaavaath, varna aasrama adhikaara abhaavaath and bokthruthva abhaavaath, aathmaa is not associated with karma.

The next step – aathma jnaani also cannot have karma, since he claims to be aathmaa. Whatever is applicable to aathmaa is applicable to the aathma jnaani also – thayo: aikyathvaath.

The third step is, therefore, that, all karmaas are directed to ajnaanis only.

In verse 92, the Achaaryaa had said, that, aathmaa does not have bokthruthvam and therefore, cannot enjoy karma palan. If so, who enjoys the sense pleasures? It is the 'mind'. The poorva pakshin, in reply, may say: "All right! Then let me work for the enjoyment of my mind". In reply, Sureswaraachaarya points out (verse 95): "Aathmaa cannot work for its mind also, because, aathmaa being asanga:, it is not related to anything, including the mind, to claim anything, including the mind, as its own. The word 'my' can be used, only with a 'second' object, with which I have some relationship. But, aathmaa does not have any relationship with anything – mind, body, sense organs included and, therefore, it has no connection with sense pleasures. Bokthruhvam is not possible directly or indirectly for aathmaa and aathma jnaani. How can Vedas, therefore, prescribe karma for a jnaani?" How can Jaimini say "aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam"?

- आत्मनः शरीरेण योगः एव तावत् न अस्ति - In the first place, aathmaa does not have connection with the body itself

Thaavath - firstly / in the first place; Yoga: - sambhandha: /relationship.

When I have no connection with the body itself, how can I have connection with sense-objects, which are connected with the body?

- विषयैः (योगः) दूरतः न अस्ति - Association with sense objects is not there even indirectly.
- स्वर्गादौ सुखम् कथम स्यात् - How can aathmaa enjoy sense pleasures in heaven?

"Then, why should aathmaa / aathma jnaani perform any vaidhika karma?" is the implied question.

Conclusion: All prescriptions for karmaa are directed towards only ajnaanīs. If ajnaanīs are proud of Vedic rituals, they are only proclaiming their ignorance, as if it is a merit. It is amazing to note that, it is Sureswaraachaarya, a mahaa-karma-kaandi earlier, who makes this statement against karma. We can understand what a drastic change his thinking had undergone, because of the effective teachings of his guru, Adi Sankaraachaarya.

"All ritualists are embodiments of ignorance" is said in the next sloka.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 96 & Verse 96"

यस्मात् अन्यथा न उपपद्यते ।

नराभिमानिनम् तस्मात् कारकाधि आत्मदर्शिनम्।

मन्त्र आह उररीकृत्य "कुर्वन्" इति न निर्द्वयम् ॥९६ ॥

As it is thus impossible of explanation otherwise: The hymn (I.U. 1.2. in verse 18), "Doing actions let him live for a hundred years" is addressed to one, who imagines himself to be a human being and sees factors involved in action as the Self itself and not to one who understands himself as the pure Self without a second

- यस्मात् अन्यथा न उपपद्यते - Therefore, there is no other way (other than ours) of interpreting this sloka (of the Isaavaasya Upanishad)

What is the interpretation? "That, the manthraa is addressed to aathma ajnaanis".

- तस्मात् - Therefore (since there is no other interpretation possible)
- मन्त्रः "कुर्वन्" इति – the manthraa (the 2nd verse of Isaavaasya Upanishad) starting with "kurvan ithi karmaani",

(The manthra had been quoted, by the poorva pakshin, in verse 18, in support of his views on karma.)

- आह – addresses,
- नर अभिमानिनम् - the one who claims "I am a human being" i.e. an ajnaani/ one with deha adhyaasa:

In Vedhaanthic vision, one who claims to be a human being, is an ajnaani. The person who claims to be aathmaa is, alone, a jnaani. Body-identification reveals self-ignorance.

But, how do you know that the manthraa is addressed to nara abhimaan? Answer: Look at the manthraa carefully. It uses the word 'narey' – i.e. a human being who considers himself as a human being, because of deha abhimaanam. Sareera abhimaanam means varna aasrama abhimaanam, resulting in the need to perform vaidhika karma.

- कारकाधि आत्मदर्शिनम् (आह) - (addresses) one who identifies himself with all accessories for karma.

Kaarakaani – various accessories for karma, such as pancha jnaandriyaas, pancha karmendriyaas, mana:, buddhi: etc.

Praana maya kosaa, mano maya kosaa are all kaarakaas – connected with karma. A jnaani claims "I am akaaraka aathmaa" and renounces all karma.

- उररीकृत्य (नर अभिमानिनम् कारकाधि आत्मदर्शिनम्) - Taking into account / considering (such ajnaanis - nara abhimaani, kaarakaadhi aathma darsi etc.)
- न (आह) निर्द्वयम् - (does) not (address) the one who understands himself as the pure Self without a second (i.e. an aathma jnaani)

Majority of the humans are ajnaanis.

(Verse 3 – Chapter VII, of the Bhagavadh Githa : "Manushyaanaam sahasreshu kaschith yathathi siddhaye yathathaam api siddhaanaam kaschith maam vetthi thathvatha:" – "Among thousands of human beings, a rare one strives for liberation and even among those seekers, who strive, a rare one knows Me in reality").

Sureswraachaarya says that the Isvaasya manthra, quoted by the poorva pakshin, has been given, out of consideration for such ajnaanīs.

[The following discussion, not in the text, but, analyzed by the Achaaryaas elsewhere, is relevant here:

Once you know that karma kaandaa is prescribed only for ignorant people, 'life-long karma', can never be the main teaching prescribed by the Vedas. Why not? Because, if you say, that, Veda is prescribing life-long karma, and, that, karma is meant for the ajnaanīs, it would mean that Veda expects you to be a life-long ajnaani. But, Veda cannot perpetuate ignorance. Can the aim of Veda be "perpetuation of ignorance"? Veda is considered a pramaanam; the definition of pramaanam itself is 'generator of knowledge' and the aim of any pramaanam, can, therefore, be only "destruction of knowledge". How can Veda, being a pramaanam, perpetuate ignorance? Therefore, karma kaandaa's central theme is not karma.

If it is so, what is the aim of karma kaandaa? The Advaitin believes that karma kaandaa's aim is to lead the seeker to karma vairaaghyam. By putting people through karma, it wants to generate vairaaghyam in the minds of the people. Once vairaaghyam develops, the jnaana kaandaa takes over and generates jnaanaa, which is the primary purpose of the Vedas. What knowledge is generated? That, I have no association with any karma at all. The Mundaka Upanishad (verse 9 – Sec II – Ch. II) declares: "Ksheeyanthe cha asya karmaani thasmin dhrushte paraavare" – "when that Brahman , which is in the form of cause and effect is seen, all his (such a jnaani's) karmaas wear out".

The next doubt is: How do you know that the aim of karma kaandaa, is not karma, but, karma vairaaghyam? Ans: Through the verses in the Vedas, similar to verse 12- Sec. II – Ch. I of the Mundaka Upanishad, "Pareekshya lokaan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath'"- which implies "having performed karma and having gone through the karma palan, which are full of doshaas (defects) such as anithyathva dosha (impermanent), dhu:kha misrithathva dosha (mixed with pain or misery) and bhandhakathva dosha (creating attachment or addiction) , one should give up karma, at the earliest and proceed to acquire jnaanam".

This is more explicitly stated in verses 7 to 9 – Sec. II – Ch. I , of Mundaka Upanishad: "Plavaa: hi ethe adhrudaa: yagnyaroopaa: ashtaadhasoktham avaram yeshu karma yethath sreya: ye abhinandhanthi moodaa: jaraamruthyum they puna: eva yanthi | Avidhyaayaam antharey varthamaanaa: svayam dheeraa: panditham manyamaanaa: janghanyamaanaa: pariyanthi moodaa: andhena eva niyamanaa: yathaa andhaa: | Avidhyaayaam bahudhaa varthamaanaa: vayam kruthaarthaa: ithabhimanyanthi baalaa: yath karmina: na pravedhayanthi raaghaath thena aathuraa: ksheena lokaa: chyavanthe." - "Those eighteen constituents of Yagnyaa, mentioned in the scriptures, upon which rests the inferior Karma, are fragile floats indeed. Those who acclaim this as a means for mokshaa are indiscriminate. They enter old age and death, again and again. Steeped in ignorance and considering themselves to be wise and learned, these indiscriminate ones, who are intensely afflicted, move about like the blind being led by the blind | Remaining variously in ignorance, these 'children' claim "we are contented", because these ritualists do not 'know', due to their attachment. Consequently, these unfortunate ones fall with their punya exhausted."

Similar manthraas pointing out the inadequacies of karma are to be found in abundance in the Upanishads. Therefore, one has to conclude, that, karma is not the aim of either the Veda Poorvaa or Veda anthaa; and that, Karma vairaaghyam is the aim of Veda Poorva and Jnaanam is the aim of Veda anthaa.

"Therefore, your view that moksha is attained by karma, is wrong. Only jnaanam and jnaanam alone can give mokshaa" Sureswaraachaarya tells the poorva pakshin.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 97:

यत् च उक्तम् "विरह्य" इति तदपि न सम्यगेव । तथापि तु न या काचित् क्रिया यत्र क्व च अध्याहरणीया किम् तु या यत्र अभिप्रेत सम्बन्धम् घटयितुम् शक्नोति आकाङ्क्षाम् च वाक्यस्य पूरयति सा एव अध्याहरणीया ।

What has been further argued i.e. 'Words do not come together, independent of an action signified by a verb etc.' (19), is not right. Even admitting the contention, we are not to construe any verb indiscriminately. Only such a verb that can fit into the context of the meaning on hand and can answer the requirements of the sentence must be construed. (TEXT MEANING)

With verse 96, Sureswaraachaarya has completed the refutation of what was stated by the poorva pakshin, in verse 18. He now enters the final verse (verse 19) of the 2nd poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraachaarya tells the poorva pakshin: "Your argument in verse 19, is also not acceptable".

The arguments in this portion are very technical arguments. The poorva pakshin says: "Vedic teaching is in the form of sabda pramaanam; in the form of the spoken word, in the form of veda vaakyani – vedic sentences such as sathyam vadha, dharmam chara, ahar ahar sandhyaam upaaseetha, agnihothram juhothi etc."

The poorva pakshin, further, argues: "Any sentence is defined as a group of words, which are syntactically and grammatically connected. Every sentence should have a verb, without which, the nouns in the sentence will not be tied together".

For example, in the sentence "Rama performs namaskaaraa to Dasaratha, in the house", if the verb 'performs' is dropped, the sentence loses the meaning. The nouns are 'accessories', whose connection is known by the verb. There can be no sentence, without a verb – kriyaa padam.

The next point, stressed by the poorva pakshin: "The verb is named a kriyaa padam – i.e. 'a word indicating action'. That means any sentence is connected to action."

The poorva pakshin uses the above points, to hold, that, Veda vaakyaani have significance, only if they specify action – karma. Sureswaraachaarya is refuting this argument of the poorva pakshin.

- यत् च उक्तम् - What has been said (by the poorva pakshin)
- "विरहय्य" इति - (in verse 19) starting with the word virahayya,
- तदपि न सम्यगेव - that argument is also not correct / proper. (samyak – proper/correct)

The poorva pakshin had said that Vedic thaathparyam is only karma, based on this verse, starting with virahayya – "The words do not come together in a sentence independent of an action signified by a verb. There can be no sentence, other than the words integrated by the focal point of action, which could enjoin knowledge".

Sureswaraachaarya counters: "You can have sentences, without a verb also". Two examples can be considered – one a loukika vaakyam "sa: ayam devadhattha:" and the other, a vaidhika vaakyam "sathyam jnaanam anantham brahma". There are no verbs, in these sentences. "Kriyaapada rahitha vaakyaani may be there" is the Achaaryaa's contention.

The poorva pakshi replies: "No. Your contention is wrong. If a sentence does not have an explicit verb, you have to supply the implied verb. Explicit or implicit, a verb has to be there, in a sentence." In the example sentence "sa: ayam devadhattha:", you have to supply a verb, such as 'gacchathi' etc., for the sentence to give a meaning.

The supply of the verb is called adhyaahaaraa.

(These arguments of the poorva pakshin are not given in the text. This probable course of his arguments is understood from Sureswaraachaarya's explanations.)

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "If you have to supply a verb, it has to be the appropriate verb – not any". What should be the verb? This is elaborately discussed in this paragraph.

A gist of the explanation of the Achaaryaa:

There are two types of verbs.

One type reveals 'action', kaarya bhodhaka kriyaa padhaani (action-revealing verbs.)

The second type does not reveal any action – but, reveals only facts already in existence-siddha bodhaka kriyaa padhaani (fact-revealing verbs.) For instance, in the sentence, "Soyam devadhattha: asthi", there is no action indicated by the verb – only 'information' is indicated.

Sureswaraachaarya asks: "What action is involved in such a sentence – for the speaker, or the listener or for Devadhattha?. 'Existence' is not an action done by somebody. It is only a fact i.e. the verb of 'being' does not reveal action – but, a fact, which does not prescribe any action. Likewise, Vedic sentences such as 'sathyam, jnaanam, anantham brahma', 'thathvamasf' etc. are sentences which do not prescribe any action at all."

52. Chapter I, Verses 97 to 100 (21-04-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is refuting the 2nd poorva pakshin, who presented his views in the verses 14 to 19. The refutation is done, by the Achaaryaa, verse by verse. He has now come to the final verse – verse 19.

In this verse, the poorva pakshin had mentioned: "Veda is in the form of sabda pramaanam; in the form of vaakyaani. A vaakyam is a group of words connected by the most important kriyaapadam – verb. If the verb is not there, the syntactic connection will not be there and the listener will not understand the subject, object, instrument etc. All sentences including Vedic sentences should have kriyaapadam. Kriyaa is 'action'. Therefore, Veda is dealing only with karma – "aamnaayasya thaaathparyam karma eva".

Sureswaraachaarya (in verse 97) is answering this.

- यत् च उक्तम् "विरहय्य" इति - What you had said, starting with "virahayya",
- तदपि न सम्यक् एव - is also not correct.

This is because, there are sentences without verb – the sentence 'sathyam jnaanam anantham brahma', being an example.

Poorva pakshin, in reply, says, that in these contexts, where the verbs are not explicit, they have to be 'supplied'.

Sureswaraachaarya counters: "I concede that verbs have to be supplied, in certain contexts. But, verbs are of two types – kaarya bodhaka kriyaapadhaani (process revealing verbs) and siddha bodhaka kriyaapadhaani (fact revealing verbs). While, 'process revealing verbs' are connected with action, 'fact revealing verbs' are not connected with any action". An illustration : In the sentence 'there is water in the bottle', 'is' a siddha bodhaka kriyaapadham, while, in the sentences 'drink the water from the bottle', 'drink' is a kaarya bodhaka kriyaapadham.

Sureswaraachaarya says, that, when you supply a verb, you have to take into account, the contextual and grammatical requirements and supply the verb suitably.

In the context of Brahman, 'action revealing verb' will not apply at all; only 'fact revealing verbs' can be supplied, because Brahman is not an 'accessory for action' (a kaaraka) nor is an action (kriyaa) nor is the result of an action (palam); nor is Brahman connected with any accessory or action or result. Kaaraka-kriyaa-pala vilakshanam is Brahman. Kaaraka is used for kriyaa; and kriyaa gives results. The Vedic sentences pertaining to Brahman, cannot reveal any sambhandha (relationships) also, since Brahman is asanga: | Therefore, the verb supplied (in the context of Brahman) can only be a 'fact revealing verb', such as asthi, bhavathi, vidhyathe etc.

The contextual requirement demands a verb of 'being' and the grammatical requirement demands a verb of suitable 'person' – 1st person (*aham brahma asmi), 2nd (*thath thvam asi) or 3rd (*pragnyaanam brahma asthi). The supplied verb should fulfill the contextual and grammatical requirements. You cannot use your flights of phantasy; you have to use the proper verb.

- तथापि तु - Even then (i.e. even when you have to supply the verb- yathaa api kriyaapadham adhyaaharaneeyam thathaa api)
- या काचित्क्रिया यत्र क्व न अध्याहरणीया - any kind of verb cannot be supplied in any kind of sentence.
- किम् तु - On the other hand,
- या - whichever verb
- यत्र अभिप्रेतसम्बन्धम् घटयितुम् सक्नोति - is able to bring
- about the intended relationship
- properly between the words in the sentence,

Abhipredham - intended; sambhandham – relationship; ghatayithum - to bring about/ to reveal; saknothi – is able to.

In the context of Brahman, between Paramaathma and Jeevathmaa, aiykyam only is there. Therefore, the verb should reveal only the aikyasambhandham between paramaathma and jeevaathmaa. It should be one of equation.

- वाक्यस्य आकाङ्क्षाम् च पूरयति - and also fulfills the grammatical requirement of the sentence
- सा एव अध्याहरणीया - that verb only has to be supplied.

(For the sentences thathvam asi and aham brahma asmi, you need not supply a verb, since the verbs are explicit in the sentences. But, for the sentences pragnyaanam brahma and ayam aathma brahma, you have to supply verbs.)

(Further) Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 97:

एवम् विसिष्ट च क्रिया अस्माभिः अभ्युपगता एव । सा तु उपादित्सत वाक्यार्थ अविरोधिनि एव न अभूतार्थप्रादुर्भावपलेति ।

Such a verb, we surely recognize. It does not contradict the meaning of the sentence in question and does not signify any action productive of something new.

- एवम् विसिष्ट क्रिया - Such an appropriate verb (which fulfills the contextual and grammatical requirements)
- अस्माभिः अभ्युपगता एव - have already been supplied by us.

The sentences, pragnyaanam brahma and ayam aathmaa brahma, have to be supplied with a verb of 'being' only, since you are already brahman and need not become brahman. Brahman being nirvikaara; cannot be the end product of a process. Therefore, I cannot say "You do saadhanaa and become Brahman"; I will say "you are already brahman".

- सा तु - Such an appropriate verb,
- उपादिस्त वाक्यार्थ अविरोधिनि एव- does not contradict the intended teaching of the sentence.
- Upaadithsatha – intended (adjective to 'teaching'); vaakya artha – teaching of the sentence; avirodhini – not contradictory to / appropriate.

'Eternal changeless brahman is you' is the teaching. Brahman and 'becoming' can never be connected.

- न अभूतार्थ प्रादुर् भाव पल इति - You cannot supply a verb which will reveal the emergence of a future event (mokshaa)

Na – you cannot use / supply; aboothaatha - future event; pradhurbhaavam – emergence ; pala – revealing. "Aboothaatha praadhurbhaava pala" (revealing the emergence of a future event) is an adjective to kriyaa (verb).

Why cannot such a verb (revealing the emergence of a future event – mokshaa) be used here? Because, by "knowing", you do not become free; by medhaa, you do not become free; you are already free.

(Further) sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 97 :

षड्भाव विकार रहित आत्मवस्तुनः निर्धूत असेष द्वैत अनर्थस्य अपराधीन प्रकाशस्य विजिजापयिषितत्वात् 'असि' 'अस्मि' इत्यादि क्रियापदम् स्व महिम सिद्धार्थ प्रति पादन समर्थम् अभ्युपगन्थव्यम् न विपरीत अर्थ प्रति पादनपरम् इति ।

As the subject to be understood is the aathman without the six-fold modifications, that is free from all evil constituted of duality and is self-revealing, verbs like 'am' and 'art', that are capable of signifying self-accomplished actualities are to be admitted and not those of a contrary import.

The teacher is forced to teach in the manner: "You are free; you are free", even if the student is unable to accept it. Why? Because, that happens to be the nature of brahman / aathman.

- विजिजापयिषितत्वात् - Because the Upanishads intend to reveal,
- षड् भाव विकार रहित आत्म वस्तुनः - the aathmaa, which is free from the six-fold modifications (and, therefore, you cannot become aathmaa),
- निर्धूत असेष द्वैत अनर्थस्य - (which is) free from all problems resulting from duality,

Nirdhootha – free from; asesha – without balance / all ; dvaita – duality ; anartham - problems / evil.

Knowledge does not solve the problem ; 'knowledge' tells you, that, you have no problem.

- अपराधीन प्रकाशस्य - (which is) independently evident (not dependent on any pramaanam).

(Three adjectives or descriptions of aathmaa have been given, in this portion: (1) free from the six-fold modifications- shadbhaava vikaara rahitha (2) free from all problems resulting from duality – nirdhootha asesha dvaita anartha and (3) independently evident – aparaadheena prakaasa.)

No instrument is required to reveal brahman; verse 11- Sec. II – Ch. II, of Mundakopanishad, declares brahman as "Thameva bhaantham thasya bhaasaa sarvam idham vibhaathi" – "Brahman is self-effulgent. By its light, all this shines".

Knowing "action" is also not required; because, aathmaa is always available as saakshi chaithanyam.

- 'असि' 'अस्मि' इत्यादि क्रियापदम्- Verbs like asi, asmi, asthi etc.,
- स्व महिम सिद्धार्थ प्रति पादन समर्थम् - which have the capacity to reveal the self-evident/ already evident,
- अभ्युपगन्तव्यम् - are to be supplied.

Conscience is self-experienced and already experienced. This fact is revealed by the verbs asi, asmi, asthi etc. (in the vaakyaani – thathvam asi, aham brahma asmi and pragnyaanam brahma asthi respectively.) In karma kaandaa, the verbs are full of 'doing' – action. Not in the jnaana kaandaa.

Therefore,

- न विपरीतार्थप्रतिपादनपरम् (अभ्युपगन्तव्यम्) - Verbs which will give the opposite meanings (cannot be supplied)
- इति - This is presented in the sloka (that follows).

Verse 97 – Chapter I:

धावेदिति न दानार्थं पदम् यद्वत्प्रयुज्यते ।

एधीत्यादि तथा न इच्छेत् स्वतः सिद्धार्थवाचिनि ॥ ९७ ॥

Just as an expression 'let him run', is not to be used to indicate the sense 'let him give' verbs like 'you flourish' are not to be used, in connection with the self-exiting reality.

The sambhandha gadhyam is consolidated in the verse.

- धावेत इति पदम् - The verb 'one should run',
- दान अर्थे न प्रयुज्यते - is not supplied to indicate 'giving';
- यद्वत् तथा - In the same manner / similarly,
- 'एधि' इत्यादि - (Verbs) such as 'become' / 'attain' etc.
- न इच्छेत् - (sruthi) will not desire to use,
- स्वतः सिद्धार्थवाचिनि - when it wants to convey 'you are already free'.

In short, inappropriate verbs are not used by the sruthi. The conclusion: Mahaa vaakyaani are siddha bodhaka vaakyaani - not karma bodhaka vaakyaani.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 98 :

न च यथोक्त वस्तु वृत्त प्रति पादन व्यतिरेकेण तत्वमस्यादिवाक्यम् वाक्यार्थ अन्तरम् वक्तीति सव्यम् अध्यवसानुम् इति आह ।

It is not possible to understand sentences like 'That thou art', as signifying the sense of some other sentence and as not signifying accomplished entities as pointed out.

The poorva pakshin makes a final attempt. He says: "I do agree that verbs which do not reveal 'action' , but reveal only 'facts' i.e. fact-revealing sentences (siddha bodhaka vaakyaani) are found in the Vedas. That's why my soothra says 'aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam athadharthaanaam' – the word 'athadharthaanaam' indicating that there are siddha bodhaka vaakyaani, in the Vedas. But, while I accept this fact, I also have to add, that, even if there are such statements, you cannot stop with the siddha bodhaka vaakyaani alone; but, have to connect them with vaakyaani (statements) which lead to 'action'. For instance, the mere information in the Vedas, that, 'there is heaven', will not serve any purpose, unless it is followed up by the Vedic injunction 'perform jyoyhistomaya yagnyam so that you can go to heaven. In the loukika example, the information 'there is water in the container' has to be followed up by the 'action' of getting hold of the container and drinking the water, for the information of the availability of water to be of any use. Likewise the Vedic vaakyam 'thath thvam asi' – a siddha bodhaka vaakyam- is of no use by itself, unless connected with some other sentence, supplied, if necessary. The supplied vaakyam being 'thath thvam asi ithi upaaseetha'. Thaithreya Upanishad – Seekshaavalli (verse 8) declares 'Om ithi brahma..om ithi brahmana: pravakshayan aaha brahma upaapravaani ithi brahma eva upaapnothi' - 'one should meditate on onkaaraa as brahman.desiring to learn the vedas, the brahmin utters onkaaraa, with the intention 'let me attain knowledge, and he certainly attains knowledge'. Therefore, meditate on the mahaavaakyam to get the benefit".

Sureswaraachaarya replies.

- तत्वमस्यादि वाक्यम् - The sentences like 'that thou art'
- यथोक्तवस्तुवृत्तप्रतिपादनव्यतिरेकेण - other than revealing the above mentioned fact,

Yathoktha vasthuvruttha – the above mentioned fact ; vyathirekena – other than.

What fact? "Jeevaathma – Paramaathma aikyam".

- वाक्य अर्थान्तरम् वक्तृति अध्वसातुम् न सक्यम् - it is not possible to understand that they signify some other additional meaning,
- इति आह – This is being pointed out (in the following verse)

Vaakya arthaanthram – any other additional meaning (in this context, 'action'); adhyavasaathum - to understand; na sakhyam - is not possible.

The sentences (the mahaavaakyaani) only reveal the fact of the jeevaathma-Paramaathma aikyam; you cannot draw any other meaning or injunction for 'action', from the mahaavaakyaani.

Why not? Sureswaraachaarya does not give the reason here. But, it has been discussed and established elsewhere. In the case of Svarga vaakyam, that, 'there is heaven', you have to introduce 'action'- jyothishtoma, since mere 'knowledge of heaven' does not give you the result. Where 'knowledge' itself does not give results, 'action' has to be added. But, there are occasions, where, 'knowledge' itself produces results. This can be illustrated by a worldly example. Consider the case of an individual undergoing some medical tests, to find out, whether he suffers from a critical disorder. After the tests are done and before the results are received, the individual and those close to him, suffer trauma and mental agony. When the results are received, if the individual is found to suffer from the disorder, 'action' has to follow, in the form of medication or similar 'treatment'. But, if the results show, that, the individual does not suffer from the disorder, what 'action' is needed to relieve him and his kin of the mental agony? Obviously, no action is needed. Likewise, 'aham brahma asmi' is 'knowledge', which, by itself, gives result, without a need for any follow-up action. This is said, in the next verse.

Chapter I: Verse 98 –

तत्वमस्यादि वाक्यानाम् स्वतसिद्धार्थबोधनात् ।
अर्थान्तरम् न सन्द्रष्टुम् सक्व्यते त्रिदशैरपि ॥ ९८ ॥

Even the very gods cannot discern in sentences like 'That thou art', any import other than the revelation of an accomplished reality.

Therefore, the conclusion is, that, there is no action mentioned in Jnaana kaandam.

- तत्वमस्यादि वाक्यानाम् - In sentences like 'That thou art',
- अर्थान्तरम् सन्द्रष्टुम् न सक्व्यते - no other meaning can be seen,
- स्वत सिद्धार्थ बोधनात् - other than the revelation of an accomplished Reality,

Svatha siddhaartha - already available / accomplished Reality ; bodhanaath – other than the revelation.

- त्रिदशैरपि - even by the gods.

With this verse, all poorva pakshins have been negated.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 99 & Verse 99:

यस्मात् एवम् ।

अतः सर्वाश्रमाणाम् तु वाङ्मनःकाय कर्मभिः ।

स्व अनुष्ठितैः न मुक्तिः स्यात् जानात् एव हि सा यतः ॥ ९९ ॥

Such being the case - That release is attained by the proper performance through speech, body and mind, of duties pertaining to the agents' aasramaa etc. (21) is not true ; for it is to be attained only by knowledge.

- यस्मात् एवम् - Because of these reasons (this is my conclusion)
- सर्वाश्रमाणाम् - for the seekers belonging to different aasramaas,
- स्व अनुष्ठितैः - by (mere) observance of the prescribed
- वाङ् मनः काय कर्मभिः - duties performed through speech, body and mind,
- मुक्तिः न स्यात् – mokshaa is not possible.

Karma cannot give mokshaa. Then, what will give mokshaa?

- जानाथ् एव हि सा (स्यात्) यतः - for surely it (is to be attained) only by knowledge.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 100 & Verse 100:

- तस्मात् च कारणात् एतत् अप्युपपन्नम्।
- स्व मनोरथ सन्क्लुप्त प्रज आध्मात् धियामतः।
- श्रोत्रियेषु एव वाचः ताः शोभन्ते न आत्मवेदिषु ॥ १०० ॥

For this reason, the following is also sound: This argument advocated by those whose intellect is nourished by their own wishful ratiocination, becomes those who simply go by the Vedas. It does not become those who comprehend the aathman.

- तस्मात् च कारणात् एतत् अप्युपपन्नम् - Therefore, what I said (in the beginning of my argument in verse 22, that, all the observations of the poorvapakshins, given in verses 9 to 20, will be valid only in the yaaga saalaas) holds good.
- ताः वाचः - All those elaborate words of the poorva pakshins
- श्रोत्रियेषु एव सोभन्ते- are attractive and appealing only to Vedic ritualists committed to karma kaandaa.

What kind of ritualists?

- स्व मनोरथ सन्क्लुप्त प्रज आध्मात् धियामतः - whose intellects are bloated with misconceptions, imagined by their own fancy.

Sva manoratha sankluptha – imagined by their own fancy; pragnya – misconception (in this context); aadhmaatha dhiyaamatha - with bloated intellects. "Misguided ritualists" is the meaning, in essence.

- आत्म वेदिषु न (सोभन्ते) – (The elaborations of the poorva pakshins) will not (appeal to / be attractive to) the wise people who are students of Veda anthaa.

This is our conclusion. Therefore, mahaa vaakya vichaaraa will be done, in the following chapters.

53. Summary of 1st Chapter (09-06-2007)

A Summary of the 1st Chapter

The 1st chapter, consisting of 100 verses, can be broadly classified into six topics:

- (1) Avadhaarika - Introduction.
- (2) Poorvapaksha thrayam – three types of objections to Vedhaanthic teaching.
- (3) Prathama poorva paksha niraasa: - Refutation of the 1st poorva pakshin.
- (4) Dvitheeya poorva paksha niraasa: - Refutation of the 2nd poorva pakshin.
- (5) Thrutheeya poorva paksha niraasa: - Refutation of the 3rd poorva pakshin.
- (6) Upasamhaara: - Conclusion.

Topic 1: Sureswaraachaarya commences his treatise with an 'Introduction', in eight verses, verse 1 to verse 8.

In this introduction, after Isvara Guru Namaskaara: - salutations to Lord Vishnu and his guru Adhi Sankaraachaarya - Sureswaraachaarya points out: "I am writing this text, not because my guru's teaching is insufficient or incomplete; or because it is deficient or defective. Nor am I writing for name or fame. I venture into writing this treatise, to refine my own understanding".

Then he gives the Vedhaantha Saaraa, the essential features of Vedhaantha, consisting of four points:

- (1) Ajnaanam is samsaara kaaranam - self-ignorance is the cause of samsaaraa.
- (2) Jnaanam is moksha kaaranam – self-knowledge is the means to mokshaa.
- (3) Mahaavaakyam moksha kaaranam – Vedic mahaa vaakyam leads to mokshaa (by giving jnaanam)
- (4) Karma na moksha kaaranam – Karma can never be the (direct) means to mokshaa.

Of these four essential features, the 1st three are discussed in the later chapters (2, 3 and 4). The first chapter is dedicated to the 4th feature – karma na moksha kaaranam – karma (vaidhika karma also) cannot give mokshaa.

How 'ajnaanam is the cause of samsaaraa' is given by the Achaaryaa, through a flow-chart:

- (1) Because of ignorance of advaitam, there is the (mis)perception of duality – advaita aathma ajnaanaath dvaitha darsanam bhavathi.

- (2) The duality perception leads to sobhana asobhana adhyaasam – misperception of the world as full of favourable and unfavourable circumstances.
 - (3) The sobhana asobhana adhyaasam leads to raaghaa and dveshaa – likes and dislikes – likes of favorables and dislikes of unfavourables.
 - (4) Raghaa-dveshaa leads to dharma-adharma karmaani – good and bad actions.
 - (5) Dharma-adharma karmaani lead to corresponding punya-paapa palaani-i.e. the good and bad actions result in punyam and paapam
 - (6) Punya-paapa palaani lead to utthama-adhama deha praapthi: - the punyam and paapam , lead to re-births, as superior or inferior beings, depending on the punya-paapam balance.
 - (7) Deha-praapthi: and deha abimaanam lead to varieties of problems – janma, jaraa, mrithyu, dhu:kham etc., which constitute samsaaraa.

In effect, ajnaanam is samsaara kaaranam and therefore, jnaanam is moksha kaaranam.

This 'Introduction' is from verse 1 to verse 8.

Topic II: Poorva paksha thrayam – presentation of the views of three types of poorva pakshins – opponents of Vedhaanthic teaching. The three types of views, based on poorva meemaasaa and allied philosophies, are presented elaborately, by the Achaaryaa, in the verses 9 to 22. The three theories presented are (with the order slightly changed):

- (1) Abhyupedyaa karma vaadha: - verses 9 to 13.
- (2) Abhyupedyaa samucchaya vaadha: - verses 20 to 22.
- (3) Anabhyupedyaa karma vaadha: - verses 14 to 19.

Topic III: Prathama poorva paksha niraasa: - Negation of the 1st objection – abhyupedyaa karma vaadha:. This refutation is done in two places – first, in verses 23 to 53 and later, in verses 80 to 84.

What is the prathama poorva paksham – the abhyupedyaa karma vaadha:? This poorva pakshin says: "I concede that Aathma jnaanam is discussed in the Vedas. But, even though it is talked about, in the Vedas, you do not have to utilise it for mokshaa. You do not require aathma jnaanam for attainment of mokshaa. You can get mokshaa, by karma itself and, since karma, by itself, is capable of giving mokshaa, why do you have to worry about aathma jnaanam?"

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this poorva paksham, through five points:

- (1) "Karma na ajnaana nivarthakam" – any number of karmaas (loukika or vaidhika) cannot remove self-ignorance.

Why not?

Because karma itself is a product of ignorance, karma will only protect its 'parent' – ignorance.

But, why do you say, that, karma is a product of ignorance?

The seven steps, given in the avadhaarika, give the answer.

Karma is not only a product of ignorance, but also perpetuates 'ignorance', by perpetuating the misconceptions, that, (1) I am a kartha (I have to claim karthruthvam, when I perform karma) and (2) I have varnaa and assramaa (which are basic qualifications, for any vaidhika karma). Self-ignorance is, therefore, nourished by the misconceptions, resulting from karma.

Since karma does not remove self-ignorance, moksha is not possible, because mokshaa happens to be the very nature of aathmaa and therefore, as long as self-ignorance (aathma ajnaanam) is there, mokshaa cannot be achieved.

(2) "Karma is anithya pala-hethu" – i.e. karma can produce only 'finite' results.

Why?

Karma is finite and, therefore, karmapalan can also be only finite.

Results of karma are of four types – aapthi: (reaching a place), uthpatthi: (production), vikhaara: (modification / change) and samskaara: (purification) - all types of results being only 'finite'.

Mokshaa, on the other hand, is 'infinite' / nithyam.

Since karma can produce only anithya palan, it cannot lead to nithya mokshaa.

(3) "Karma moksha bhinna palan" – Karma produces results, other than mokshaa.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "When you look at Vedas, you find that they talk of varieties of karma and of the palans of the karmas. But, all karma palans promised by the Vedas, are only in the form of puthra (progeny), dhanam (prosperity), svargam (heaven) etc. But, nowhere do the Vedas promise mokshaa, as karmapalan."

The poorva pakshi argues: "In the Vedas, for whatever karma, results are not specifically mentioned, you can assume, that, the palan for these karmas, is mokshaa".

"But", Sureswaraachaarya points out, "there is no karma, prescribed by the Vedas, for which the palan is not mentioned".

- (4) "Karmaa is sruthi ninditham" – Karma is criticized by the Vedas, as the cause of samsaaraa, punar jananam etc.

Mundakopanishad declares (1.2.7): "Plavaa hi ethey adhrudaa yagnyaroopaa: ashtaadasoktham avaram yeshu karma ethacchreyo ye abhinandhanthi moodaa: jaraamruthyum they punareva apiyanthi" – "Those eighteen constituents of Yagnyaa mentioned in the scriptures, upon which rests the inferior karma, are fragile floats indeed. Those who acclaim this as means for mokshaa are indiscriminate. They enter old age and death again and again".

Likewise, Kaivalya Upanishad states (verse 3) : "Na karmanaa na prajaya dhanena thyaagena eke amruthathvam aanasu: | " - "It is through renunciation, that, a few seekers have attained immortality – not through ritual, not through progeny, not through wealth".

How can, then, one say, that karma is moksha kaaranam?

- (5) "Poorva paksha upaaya niraasa:" - Negation of the suggestions given by the poorva pakshin on the utilization and management of karma, for attainment of mokshaa.

What was the suggestion of the poorva pakshin?

"Avoid kaamya karmaani - punyam will not accrue; avoid nishiddha karmaani - paapam will not accrue. All future punya-paapam are, thus, avoided by avoiding kaamya and nishiddha karmaani. As for past punya-paapam, 'exhaust' them, by going through the experiences resulting from the punya-paapam. At the time of death, your karma balance will , therefore, be nil. You will attain mokshaa".

Sureswaraachaarya refutes these suggestions, saying, that, it is impossible to implement any of the three suggestions: "You cannot avoid kaamya karmaani , since, as long as self-ignorance is there, desires will be there and the desires will motivate kaamya karmaani. Likewise, as long as raagha-dveshaa are there, nishiddha-karmaani also cannot be totally avoided. As for past punya-paapam, since they have been acquired during infinite number of janmaas, it is impossible to work them all out, in this one janma".

The upaayam of the poorva pakshin, therefore, is not possible of implementation.

But, while refuting the theory of the abhyupedhya karma vaadhin, the Achaarya makes a very important observation. He warns that karma is not totally useless. It cannot give direct liberation; but, it is extremely useful, in fact, essential, for acquisition of chittha suddhi. One should, therefore, follow karma, for some time, in the initial stages for jnaana योगyathaa siddhi and only thereafter, has to go to jnaanam. Do not rule out karma totally and do not permanently stick to karma also.

Up to this, is, Prathama Poorva Paksha Niraasa: |

Topic IV: Dvitheeya poorva paksha niraasa: - Negation of the 2nd objection – abhyupedhya samucchaya vaadha: - This is done between verses 54 and 79.

The 2nd type of poorva pakshin claims that a 'combination of karma and jnaanam' alone will help in attainment of mokshaa.

Five arguments are given by Sureswaraachaarya, against this poorva paksha vaadham:

(1) "Jnaanam bhinna kaayikam" – Jnaanam and karma do not exist at the same time – just as youth and old age cannot belong to the same time.

When karma saadhanaa is functioning, jnaanam is not functioning. When a person is performing karma, he is purifying his mind. When the mind is not purified, jnaanam cannot function.

Conversely, if jnaanam is functioning, the mind is already purified. At that stage, karma is not required.

Since, thus, jnaanam and karma cannot function at the same time, how can there be samuccharam between the two?

Expressing the same idea differently, karma yoga is saadhanaa and jnaana yoga is the saadhyam and, therefore, samuchchayam between them, is not possible.

(2) "Jnaanam kaaraka nivarthakam" – Jnaanam negates duality / plurality, which, on the other hand, is an 'accessory' to karma.

Karma requires subject, object, location, tools etc., called kaarakaas. Once jnaanam comes, all plurality goes; kaarakaas will go; karma, will have to, therefore, go. Jnaanam, thus, replaces karma. How can there be samucchayam, between the two? Light and darkness cannot have samucchayam.

- (3) "Jnaanam karma adhikaara nivarthakam" – Jnaanam negates all varna, aasramaa etc. Varna aasrama abhimaanam, on the other hand, are essential qualifications for any vaidhika karma. Jnaanam removes the abhimaanam. How, then, can there be samucchayam between jnaanam and karma?
- (4) "Jnaanam mumukshuka nivarthakam" – When jnaanam comes, I know that I am 'free', and, therefore, lose the desire for mokshaa. Because jnaanam has already given me the mokshaa, I do not have to combine my jnaanam with any karma, to attain mokshaa.
- (5) "Eka saasthra vaadha niraasa:" - One of the arguements of this poorva pakshin (jnaam abhyupedhya samucchaya vaadhin) is: "Vedas talk of karma, in the first portion and of jnaanam in the 2nd portion. Since, the entire Veda is one saasthree and since you have to respect both portions and obey both, you will have to combine jnaanam and karma".

Sureswaraachaarya answers: "We also respect both portions. We do not mind combining the two; but, not simultaneously, because, as shown earlier, they cannot co-exist. We accept only sequential combination – karma, in the initial stages, for purification of mind and jnaanam later, after acquiring jnaana yogyatha, through karma."

Topic V : Thrutheeya poorva paksha niraasa: - Negation of the 3rd type of poorva paksham – anabhyupedha karma vaadha:. The negation is covered from verses 85 to 97.

The anabhyupedhya poorva pakshin, as the term implies, does not even accept jnaanam as a primary topic of the Vedas.

The four arguements given by this poorva pakshin, in support of his views, are effectively countered by Sureswaraachaarya as below:

- (1) "Jnaana prathi bhaadanaa asthi" – The anabhyupedhya poorva pakshin had said "there is no such thing as aatma jnaanam discussed in the Vedas, as a primary topic. Where jnaanam is talked about, it is only an 'angam' (part) of karma, because jnaanam will not give any benefit."

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "Vedas do talk about aatma jnaanam, as primary theme and as a means of liberation. In several places, Vedas present jnaanam as the independent means to mokshaa – "tharathi sokham aathmavith", "pareekshya lokaan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath naasthi akrutha: kruthena thadhvijnaartham sa gurum eva abhigaccheth" being only a few examples.

- (2) "Isaavaasya manthra thaathparyam" – Quoting the Isaavaasya manthraa "kurvan eva iha karmaani jijeevisheth satham samaa:" – "Live a hundred years, engaged in karmaa", the poorva pakshin had said: "karma is always there, in the life of a person i.e. a person should engage in karma lifelong. Pure jnaanam, therefore, does not exist".

Sureswaraachaarya answers: "Your interpretation of the manthraa is not correct. Note that the manthraa also says 'na karma lipyathe nare'. The implication is, that, "as long as desires are there, do karma". When deha abhimaanam is dropped, karma ceases to exist. This is the thaathparyam of the manthraa".

- (3) "Jaimini soothra thaathparyam" - Based on the Jaimini Meemaamsa Soothraa "Aamnaayasya kriyaarthathvaath aanarthakyam", the poorva pakshi claimed " Vedas talk only about karma, as per this soothra of Jaimini. Your view, that, Vedas talk about jnaanam, is, therefore, not right".

Sureswaraachaarya counters: "Jaimini has talked of Veda Poorva only i.e. his subject is Poorva Meemaamsaa. His guru, Vyaasaachaarya, had already covered the topic of jnaanam, in his Utthara Meemaasaa. Jaimini's reference, 'amnaayasya', therefore, applies only to the Veda Poorva Baghaa; do not apply his statement to the entire Veda".

- (4) "Vaakya svabhaava thaathparyam" - The poorva pakshi had said: "Any sentence is a group of words, but, in which a verb (a kriyaapadam) is compulsorily necessary. A sentence, without a verb, does not convey any information and is, therefore, impossible. The entire Veda is made up of vaakyaani – innumerable sentences, each sentence having a verb, which verbs always refer to action – karma of one kind or another, the name kriyaapadam itself, emphasising this. It, therefore, follows that Vedas talk only of karma and not jnaanam."

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "No doubt, sentences require verbs. But, not all verbs convey action. There are verbs which reveal 'facts' – 'is', the verb of 'being', is, but, an example. In the mahaa vaakyam "thaththvam asi", the verb "asi", is only a verb of 'being', conveying a fact – not a verb of 'action'. So also, in the verb "asmi" in the mahaa vaakyam "aham brahma asmi". Your contention, that, all verbs refer to action, is, therefore, wrong. Vedas use such verbs also, which reveal 'knowledge'. (In the popular rajju sarpa example, the rajju jnaanam itself is enough to be freed from the fear of the sarpa; no action is needed).

"Aathma jnaanam is the primary subject of the Vedas and can itself give you mokshaa".

Topic VI - Upasamhaara - Conclusion, in the three verses 98 to 100:

Sureswaraachaarya repeats the four points, which he mentioned in his Introduction:

- (1) Ajnaanam is the cause of samsaaraa.
- (2) Knowledge alone is the means of liberation
- (3) Mahaavaakyaas alone give the knowledge, and
- (4) Karma can never give liberation.

"And, therefore", Sureswaraachaarya concludes "for those purified (qualified) people, I want to give 'knowledge' through the Vedic mahaa vaakyaani and through the 'knowledge', 'liberation'".

The following three chapters deal with mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

54. Chapter II, Verse 1 (16-06-2007)

In verses 7 and 8, of the 1st Chapter, Sureswaraachaarya presented the Vedhantha Saaram – essence of Vedhantha – through four essential principles:

- (1) Aathma ajnaanam is samsaara kaaranam (which statement, he established by elaborating the seven steps through which self-ignorance leads to samsaaram)
- (2) Aathma jnaanam alone is moksha kaaranam (self-knowledge alone is the means to liberation)
- (3) Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyaani alone can generate that self-knowledge.
- (4) Karma, whether loukika (worldly) or vaidhika (religious) cannot give knowledge and therefore, cannot give liberation also. Karma, independently, cannot give liberation and there is no question of its giving knowledge, jointly with jnaanam also. At the same time, karma is not totally useless; on the other hand, karma is extremely important to prepare the ground for the mahaa vaakyaani to give knowledge.

Of these four features, Sureswaraachaarya established the fourth feature, viz. “karma can never give liberation”, in the 1st Chapter.

In the 2nd Chapter, the Aachaaryaa is taking up the third principle: “Mahaa vaakyaani alone can generate self-knowledge; and mahaa vaakyaani are more than capable of generating self-knowledge - the jeevaathma-paramaathma- aikyam.”

We can never look upon Vedic sentences and worldly sentences on equal footing. There is a huge difference between vaidhika vaakyaani and loukika vaakyaani. Vaidhika vaakyaani are primary sources of knowledge, termed ‘upajeevya pramaanaani’, like a sense organ, whereas, a loukika vaakyam is termed ‘upajeevi pramaanam’ – a secondary source of knowledge.

To understand the difference clearly, consider a newspaper report; the report generates knowledge in my mind; but, the report is not the producer of the knowledge, since the knowledge has already been produced in the mind of the reporter, by prathyaksha pramaanam; i.e. the sabda pramaanam (the newspaper report) can be verified by the prathyaksha pramaanam.

In contrast, ‘knowledge’ generated by Veda is not attainable through any other source, including meditation. ‘Words’ of the Veda are the only source. Vaidhika sabda is not a ‘carrier’ of knowledge, as the newspaper report is; but a ‘producer’ of knowledge. This is very similar to a sense organ; when a particular sense organ produces the knowledge of a particular fact, that fact cannot be proved or disproved by any other sense organ. (Colour/ form/ shape etc. can be perceived only by the eye; smell only by the nose; noise only by the ear and so on.) Likewise, for the 'knowledge' given by the Vedic mahaa vaakyaani, there is absolutely no other alternative source (pramaanam) nor proof. Also, other than 'understanding' the mahavaakyaani, there is no other 'knowledge'.

Sureswaraachaarya struggles to make the student understand that 'there is no other realisation other than clear understanding of the mahavaakyaani'. If even after listening to mahavaakyaani, 'realisation' and therefore 'moksha' has not been attained by the seeker, Sureswaraachaarya points out, that, it is the seeker, who has not studied the mahavaakyaani properly.

'Clear understanding of the mahavaakyaani' and the 'clear understanding of the fact, that, that clear understanding of the mahavaakyaani will do, for attaining knowledge; nothing else is required' should be realised by the student.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 1 – Chapter II:

प्रत्यक्षादीनां अनेवं विषयत्वात् तेषाम् स्वारम्भक विषय उपनिपातित्वात् आत्मनः च अशेषप्रमेयवैलक्षण्यात् सर्व अनर्थ एक हेतु अजान अपनोदि जान दिवाकर उदय हेतुत्वं वस्तु मात्र यातात्म्य प्रकाशन पटीयसः तत्वमस्यादेः वचसः एव इति बह्वीभिः उपपत्तिभिः प्रदर्शितम्

It has been demonstrated through much reasoning that only scriptural texts like 'That thou art', capable of revealing Reality as such, can be the source of knowledge, destructive of ignorance, which is the sole cause of all evil, because ordinary instruments of knowledge like perception do not pertain to this subject-matter, as they are capable of revealing only the elements, of which they are the products and also because the Self is altogether different from every object of knowledge.

- बह्वीभिः उपपत्तिभिः प्रदर्शितम् - It has been established by several arguments,

What has been established?

- तत्वमस्यादेः वचसः एव हेतुत्वं - (that) the Vedic sentences such as 'thathvamasi' alone can generate
- जान दिवाकरः - the sun of knowledge,

Knowledge can come only from mahaa vaakyaani.

- सर्व अनर्थ एक हेतु अजान अपनोदि - which (sun of knowledge) is the destroyer of the self-ignorance, which (self-ignorance) is the source of all miseries, Sarva anartha - all miseries; eka hethu – only cause; ajaana – self-ignorance; apanodhi – destroyer.

'Ignorance' is not one of the causes of samsaaraa; it is the only cause; hence, the use of eka hethu.

- वस्तु मात्र याथात्म्य प्रकाशन पटीयसः - (that, which is) capable of revealing the true nature of 'Reality'

This adjective is for vachasa: - the Veda vaakyaani, while the earlier 'sarva anartha eka hethu ajnaana apanodhi' refers to jnaana divaakara:

Vasthu maathra – 'Reality'; Yaathaathmya – true nature ; prakaasana – revealing; pateeyasa: – capable of / has the power of .

Mahaavaakyaa is like a powerful torch light, which, switched on, will reveal aatma svabhaavam. This knowledge of aathmaa, given by the mahaa vaakyam, cannot be gained from any other alternative source (pramaanam), since, no other pramaanam (prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaanaa, arthaapatthi, anupalabdhi, loukika sabda etc.) deals with aathmaa. 'Meditation' is not even included in the list of pramaanaas; hence, the question of 'meditation giving knowledge' does not arise at all. So also 'intuition'. According to our scriptures 'doubtful source of knowledge' is not a source of knowledge at all.

Consistent, systematic study of mahaa vaakyam is, therefore, the only means to self-knowledge. Other pramaanams cannot be used, even for verification of the mahaavaakya upadesam.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- प्रत्यक्षादीनाम् अनेवं विषयत्वात् - Since all other pramaanams like perception etc., deal with subject matters, different from aathmaa,

Evam vishaya; - 'this' matter; anevam vishaya: - matter different from 'this' matter.

- तेषाम् स्वात्मभक्त विषय उपनिपातित्वात् – (and) because they are capable of revealing only their causal elements,

Svaarambhaka vishayam – the 'causal' subject / that which is the cause; nipaathithvam – capability of revealing.

The five sense organs do different functions, presided over by the different bhoothaas, of which they were born; for example, the ears do the function of 'hearing', with the aid of aakaasaa, the skin does the function of 'touch', with the aid of vaayu etc. Every sense organ is born out of one particular element (cf. Thathva Bodham) and tends to preserve its causal element only. The pancha bhoothaas and the paancha boudhika prapanchaa (all anaathmaa) are perceived by the pancha jnaanendriyaas. The mind also is born of the pancha bhoothaani only and therefore, the mind also can perceive only anaathmaa. 'Improved' mind can experience extraordinary things; but, only extraordinary anaathmaa. Mahaa vaakyam alone can generate self-knowledge.

Modern science also cannot reveal aathmaa, because, modern science functions on the data collected by the five jnaandriyaas, which deal with anaathmaa only.

If, therefore, one is keen on mokshaa, one has to come to the mahaa vaakya vichaaraa only. This was shown by several arguments - 'bahvee: upapatthibhi: pradarsitham' |

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 1 – Ch. II:

अतः तदर्थाप्रतिपत्तौ यत्कारणं तदपनयनाय द्वितीयोध्यायः आरभ्यते ।

This second chapter is undertaken for removing the cause of the failure to understand the significance of the text.

If a person 'properly' studies the mahaa vaakyam and 'properly' understands it, the 'proper' understanding is 'self-knowledge'.

But, most people tend to say "I have understood mahaa vaakyam; but, I do not have self-knowledge – akandaakaara vrutthi:". This is a result of confused understanding or improper understanding.

'I have understood mahaavaakyam ; but, I have no self-knowledge'; 'I have understood mahaavaakyam; but I have no Realisation'; 'I have understood mahaavaakyam; but, I have no prathyaksha anubhavam'; 'I have understood mahaavaakyam; but, I have no moksham (liberation)' - are all confused thoughts. And, in all such cases, mahaa vaakyam has to be further enquired into, to remove these confusions.

'Understanding alone is knowledge; understanding alone is realisation; understanding alone is anubhavam ; understanding alone is moksham' – should be the firm conclusion.

This is prathibandha nivritthi.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says "atha: thadartham aprathipatthau yathkaaranam thath apanayanaaya dvidtheeya adhyaaya: aarabhyathe".

अतः तदथं अप्रतिपत्तौ - Now, for not clearly understanding the mahaa vaakyam, यत्कारणम् - whatever is the cause,

- तदपनयनाय - to remove that cause,
- द्वितीय अध्यायः आरभ्यते - the 2nd chapter is commenced.

Chapter II: Verse 1 –

श्रावितः वेत्ति वाक्यार्थं न चेत् तत्वमसि इत्यतः ।

त्वंपदार्थं अनभिज्ञत्वात् अतः तत्प्रक्रियः उच्यते ॥ १ ॥

If a person does not understand the import of the proposition 'That thou art', when it is imparted to him, it is because he has not grasped the meaning of 'Thou'. Therefore, we will now propound its meaning.

- श्रावितः - The student who is exposed to the Vedhaanthic teaching,
- वाक्यार्थम् वेत्ति - clearly grasps the meaning of the vaakyam,
- तत्वमसि इत्यतः - from the mahaa vaakyam like 'thathvamasai',

(The vaakyartha: of the mahaa vaakyaani is 'jeeevathma-paramaathma-aiykyam')

Brahman is not a mysterious entity. It is the chaithanyam, which we are experiencing every moment. Vedhanthaa talks of this chaithanyam only.

We make the mistake of considering the chaithnyam as a part or product or property of the body. Vedhaantha makes it clear, that, it is not so.

Brahman is the ever available sentiency (can be interpreted as உணர்வு in Tamil), unconnected with the body, which lasts even after the body falls.

The proper understanding of this fact is 'knowledge'. We do not require any mysterious state to understand Brahman.

- न चेत् - But, if a student does not understand (this simple and directly available fact),

For this 'non-understanding', there is only one reason.

When the teacher states "That you are", 'you' is the reference to the non-tangible aathmaa - not to the tangible body. Nor is the reference to the mind or intellect. The reference is to the chaitanya thathvam only.

But, very often 'thvam' or 'aham' (in the mahaa vaakyam), is mistaken as the body-mind complex. And, the misunderstanding is due to lack of communication. The seeker, thereafter, looks for a mystic experience, which is another mistake. He has to, only, enquire into Vedhaanthee again.

Communication-gap is the main obstacle to liberation. 'Proper' listening and 'proper' understanding, in fact, complete the journey.

55. Chapter II, Verse 2 and 3 (23-06-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is introducing the subject matter of the 2nd chapter.

In the first chapter, he had enunciated four fundamental principles of Vedhantic teachings:

- (1) Self- ignorance alone is the cause of samsaaraa
- (2) Self-knowledge alone, therefore, is the only solution to samsaaraa
- (3) Vedic Mahaa vaakyam alone is the only means of acquiring self-knowledge
- (4) Karma can help us only in preparing our mind, to receive the knowledge; karma cannot contribute directly to liberation.

Having dealt with the fourth principle in the 1st chapter, Sureswaraacharya, is taking up "Mahaa vaakyam alone is the source of self-knowledge" as the subject of the 2nd chapter.

He firmly holds, that, there are only two primary sources of knowledge; one is prathyaksha pramaanam and the other is the Vedic pramaanam. Of these two primary sources of knowledge also, the prathyaksha pramaanam deals only with the objective world; mahavaakya Vedaantha pramaanam alone deals with the Subject. Prathyaksha pramaanam will not be useful for gaining self-knowledge.

There are many secondary sources of knowledge, like upamaanam, anumaanam etc., which sources, the modern sciences use. "But", Sureswaraachaarya points out, "the secondary sources of knowledge, are all dependent on the prathyaksha pramaanam and, therefore, they are also only object-centric. There is only one pramaanam, which deals with the Subject and that is the mahaavaakya Vedaantha pramaanam. Therefore, the seeker does not have any other choice apart from the mahaa vaakya vichaaram, to achieve knowledge."

This statement 'mahaa vaakyam alone has to be resorted to, for acquiring self-knowledge, because, mahaa vaakyam alone deals with the Subject' can be explained with the analogy of the sense organs. If a person wants to know 'colours', he has to make use of only his eyes, since, the fact happens to be, that, 'eyes alone, among the five jnaana indriyaas, deal with colours'; this is a 'law of Creation'. "Likewise" Sureswaraachaarya says "in the entire Creation, there is only one source of knowledge, that deals with aathmaa and that source is the Vedaantha mahaa vaakyam".

In the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 1, the Achaaryaa says:

- आत्मनः च असेष प्रमेय वैलक्षण्यात् – Since Aathmaa is different from all other objects of knowledge,
- वचसः एव ज्ञान दिवाकर उदय हेतुत्वं – Vedaantha mahaa vaakyam alone is the cause for the rise of the 'sun of knowledge'.

Avesha – all other; prameya – object of knowledge; vailakshanyam - nature of 'being different'

Aathmaa is unique; aathma jnaanam is also unique. And, therefore, its source of knowledge also has to be unique.

What is the uniqueness of aathmaa? Ans: It is the 'Subject', while everything else, including all Sciences, Arts etc. are all 'objects'. Hence, Sureswaraachaarya says 'aathmana: chavesha prameya vailakshanyaath' - 'because of the nature of aathmaa being different from all other objects of knowledge'.

Only one thing is not the object of observation – the 'Observer'. And, therefore, you cannot use any object-centric pramaanam, to achieve 'aathma jnaanam' – only one pramaanam can be used and that pramaanam is Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam. This fact is stressed by the Achaaryaa, by the statement 'vachasa: eva hethuthvam' – 'only vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam being the cause'.

To repeat (for emphasis) : Sureswaraachaarya says "Mahaa vaakyam is the only valid pramaanam in the field of aathmaa, just as the eye is the only valid pramaanam in the field of colours , the ear is the only valid pramaanam in the field of sound and so on."

Further, a valid pramaanam, whether one likes it or not, should generate knowledge. Once again resorting to the example of the sense organs, the 'ear', another valid pramaanam, will report the sounds it hears, - i.e. the 'ear' will produce the 'knowledge'/ awareness of the noises around - whether the individual likes it or not.

Personal likes or dislikes will have nothing to do with a pramaanam generating the pramaa of the prameyam. "And, likewise", Sureswaraachaarya says " the valid pramaanam, mahaa vaakyam, will generate aathma jnaanam, since it is the nature of the mahaa vaakyam".

But, suppose a person says "I have studied the mahaa vaakyam; but the mahaa vaakyam has not produced 'knowledge' in me". Sureswaraachaarya says, that, in such cases, the dosha (deficiency) is not that of the mahaa vaakyam, but, that of the srotha (the listener). There is no doshaa in the pramaanam; there is no doshaa in the prameyam – the doshaa is only in the pramaathaa. So, what should the pramaathaa do? He cannot and should not change the pramaanam, as no other pramaanam can help in the field of aathma jnaanam.

He should recognise that the mahaa vaakyam has not produced 'knowledge', only because of his own deficiency. He should, therefore, take steps to correct his deficiencies and again go back to mahaa vaakyaa. This process may take time; may not be completed in his present janma; but, as the Lord assured in the Bahagavdh Githa, (verse 41 – Chapter VI) - "Yoga brashta: sucheenaam sreemathaam gehe abhijayathe" – "One who has fallen from Yoga is reborn in the family of the cultured and prosperous" (the implication being that, though he could not attain the 'final' goal in his present birth, such a sincere seeker will be reborn, as a reward for his efforts, in circumstances conducive to his further progress in the spiritual path).

There are several pramaathru doshaas – 'deficiencies in the listener'.

A very common problem is the 'understanding' of the word 'thvam', in the mahaa vaakyam 'thath thvam asi'. The mahaa vaakyas say: "'You' are always free; 'you' are always secure; 'you' are the only source of aananda" etc. They do not even say "'you' have aananda"; but say "'you' are aananda". In all these statements, the Upanishad uses the word 'you', in which word, there is a communication gap, between the 'intended' meaning and the 'communicated' meaning i.e. between the 'intent' of the Upanishad / guru and the 'understanding' of the student. This is a major block – a prathibhandham. Sureswaraachaarya says (in verse 1) "I am going to address this problem".

- श्रावितः - The one who is made (by the guru) to listen to the mahaa vaakyam
- वाक्यार्थं वेत्ति - understands the meaning of the mahaa vaakyam.

Vaakyam, in this treatise 'Naishkarmya Siddhi', is mahaa vaakyam.

Whence does the student get the vaakyartham?

- तत्त्वमसीत्यतः - from the mahaa vaakyams such as 'thathvam asi'.

The student gets the sentential meaning from the sentence. This is the normal condition.

- न चेत् - But, if this does not happen,

There must be a prathibhandha: - a block. What is this block?

- त्वम् पद अर्थ अनभिज्ञत्वात् - because of the misunderstanding or non- understanding of the meaning of the word 'thvam', Anabhijnathvam (improper understanding) is the prathibhandham.

- तत्प्रक्रियः - (Therefore) the method of right and complete 'understanding' of the word 'thvam',
- उच्यते - is going to be dealt with (in the 2nd chapter, to avoid further communication gap)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 2 :

योयम् अहं ब्रह्मेति वाक्यार्थः तत्प्रतिपत्तिः वाक्यादेव इति प्रत्यक्षादीनाम् अनेवम् विषयत्वात् इत्यवादिषम् तस्य विशुद्ध्यर्थं अनैकान्तिकत्वं पूर्वपक्षत्वेन उपस्थाप्यते ।

We have declared that the import of the proposition 'I am Brahman', is to be gained from that proposition itself, because ordinary means of knowledge, like perception, do not apply to this sphere. With a view to establish that position clearly, a prima facie view, that, the proposition is not the necessary means of knowledge in the case, is set up for consideration:

Sureswaraachaarya wants to enter 'thvam padhaartha vichaara:' – 'the analysis of the meaning of the word 'thvam'. But, before doing so, he wants to deal with a possible objection of a poorva pakshin. What could be this objection?

The poorva pakshin might say: "You are assuming and asserting that mahaa vaakyam alone is the only valid source of knowledge and also that it is a definite source of knowledge. But, I am not convinced; because, from the scriptures, we come to know, that, in certain instances, self-knowledge has taken place without the aid of the mahaa vaakyam and also, that, in certain other instances, self-knowledge has not taken place, even with the mahaa vaakyam. Why do you, then, insist that mahaa vaakyam is the only valid source of self-knowledge and that it is also a definite source. I can quote several instances, to disprove both your statements". This perceived 'indefiniteness'/ 'uncertainty' of Sureswaraachaaryaa's claim is referred to, as 'anaikaanthikathvam' - a 'dosham'- in this portion.

- अहं ब्रह्मेति वाक्यार्थः - "The meaning of the statement 'I am Brahman',
- तत् प्रतिपत्तिः - the knowledge (of that meaning),
- वाक्यात् एव - (rises from) the mahaa vaakyaa only"
- इति अवादिषम् - Thus I have declared,

Avaadhisham – has been declared.

Where?

- प्रत्यक्षादीनाम् अनेवं विषयत्वात् - in the portion starting with 'prathyakshaadheenaamanaevam vishayathvaath' (i.e. in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 1). तस्य विशुद्धर्थम् - To clarify this idea, (that the mahaa vaakyam is the only source of knowledge)

That 'the mahaa vakyam is the only source of self-knowledge' is not acceptable to many believers – sometimes, even to students of Vedhaantha - who refer to the lives of Meera, Buddha, Ramana Maharishi and the like and point out that many such people had not approached a guru, had not studied scriptures, had not done Vedhaantha vichaaraa - but, had gained knowledge, without the aid of the mahaa vaakyam. Such believers hold that mahaa vaakyam can be one source of self-knowledge; but, not the only source.

- पूर्व पक्षत्वेन – a poorva paksham is introduced;

What is the poorva paksham?

- अनैकान्तिकत्वं - the uncertainty (of the contention that the mahaa vaakyam is the only source of knowledge and a definite source of knowledge).

The Achaaryaa's contention (that the mahaa vaakyam is the only source of knowledge and a definite source of knowledge) is to be reinforced, by the mention and negation of the poorva paksham.

- उपस्थाप्यते – It (poorva paksham) is to be dealt with, in the following portion.

Chapter II: Verse 2 –

व्रत्सु अनात्म निवृत्तौ च कश्चित् आप्नोति निर्वृत्तिम् ।

श्रुत वाक्यस्मृतेः च अन्यः स्मार्यते च वचः अपरः ॥ २ ॥

A man of pure intellect gets satisfactory understanding when the whole realm of non-Self is eliminated through reasoning. Another person understands when he remembers the proposition. Still another person understands, when he is reminded by the preceptor of the proposition.

The poorva pakshin introduces four types of people, or four cases / situations. His intention is to show that the mahaa vaakyam is not the only source of knowledge.

First case: Vaakya asravanam – of a person gaining knowledge, even without listening to mahaa vaakyam.

Second case: Vaakya sravanam - of a person, like the conventional Vedhaanthic student, gaining knowledge, consequent to listening to mahaa vaakyam.

Third case: Vaakya smaranam - of a person, to whom knowledge did not result, at the time of listening, but the smaranam (remembering) of the mahaa vaakyam produces knowledge after a lapse of time (days or weeks or years)

Fourth case: Vaakya smaanam - of a student, who does not remember the mahaa vaakyam; but, to whom, the teacher keeps on repeating and reminding of, the mahaa vaakyam and because of the repeated teachings and reminders, knowledge takes place.

For each case, the poorva pakshin gives an example (or examples).

For the 1st case – vaakya asravanam – Prajapathi, from the Brahadaaranyaka Upanishad – Purushavidhi Brahmanam - (Ch. I – Sec 4), is cited. The Upanishad relates the episode of Prajapathi gaining the knowledge “I am secondless”, but, does not talk of Prajapathi's ‘listening to’ or ‘studying’ any mahaa vaakyam.

Vamadeva rishi, from the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (1.4.10) and also in the Aithreya Upanishad, is cited as another example for the same situation – vaakya asravanam. Vamadeva Rishi is quoted to have gained self-knowledge, even while in his mother’s womb, without any mahaa vaakya sravanam.

For the second case, vaakya sravanaath jnaanam, the student from Kena Upanishad, who gains knowledge, on listening to the mahaa vaakyam, is cited.

For the third case, vaakya smaranaath jnaanam, the example quoted is Bhrugu, from the Bhrugu Valli of the Thaithreeya Upanishad. Bhrugu, as related in the Upanishad, does not gain knowledge immediately on listening to his father Varuna. Only on repeated reflections – ‘sa: thapo athapyatha; thapas thapathvaa’ - ‘he conducted enquiry; on conducting enquiry’ – he gained knowledge. “In his case, vaakyam” claims the poorva pakshin “is not the source of knowledge; but, vaakya smaranam”. There is a school of thought, which claims, that, mere ‘listening’ (sravanam) does not give knowledge; only ‘meditation’ (dhyaanam) on what has been heard, gives knowledge.

For the fourth case, vaakya smaanamath jnaanam, Svethakethu, from the 6th chapter of Chandhoghya Upanishad is cited as an example. Svethakethu was taught the mahaa vaakyam ‘thath thvam asi’ repeatedly – nine times, till he felt satisfied with the teaching.

The poorva pakshin says: “From these four cases, it is clear that mahaa vaakyam is not the only source of knowledge. Others are also there”.

- कश्चित् - Certain seekers
- निर्वृत्तिम् आप्नोति - attain mokshaa,
- क्लृप्त्वा अनात्मनिवृत्तौ – when the dvaitha is negated by their knowledge 'I am the non-dual Brahman'.

It may be recollected that, Prajapathi (Brahadaaranyaka Upanishad), falls into this category.

- अन्यः - Certain others
- श्रुत वाक्यस्मृतेः - by mahaa vaakya smaranam,
- (निर्वृत्तिम् आप्नोति) – (attain mokshaa)
- अपरः वचः स्मार्यते – In certain other cases, mahaa vaakya is repeatedly taught.

(After several classes / reminders, this category of people attains liberation).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 3:

ऐतत्प्रसङ्गेन श्रोत्रन्तरौपन्यासं उभयत्रापि संभावनाय आह ।

In this connection, the case of the fourth person is brought forward, to show that the understanding may be either through or independent of the scriptural Proposition:

- ऐतत्प्रसङ्गेन - In this context itself,
- श्रोत्रन्तर उपन्यासम् आह - another type of student is introduced,
- संभावनाय - for presenting another possibility,
- उभयत्र अपि – that vaakya sravanam may also produce knowledge, in some cases.

The idea is: Sureswaraachaarya had said that vaakya sravanam alone produces knowledge. The poorva pakshi concedes that vaakya sravanam produces knowledge; but, his objection is to the use of 'vaakya sravanam alone' by the Achaarya. He insists that, the word 'also' only should be used instead of 'alone'.

'Ubhayathra api' implies 'siddhaanthi abhyugamanaartham' – 'for accepting the Achaaryaa's view partially, that vaakya sravanam (also) generates knowledge'.

Chapter II: Verse 3 –

वाक्यश्रवण मात्राः च पिशाचकवत् आप्नुयात् ।

त्रिषु याधुच्छिकी सिद्धिः स्मार्यमाणे तु निश्चिता ॥ ३ ॥

As in the case of Pisaachaka, merely hearing the proposition brings illumination to the fourth class of persons. In the other three cases, the result seem to be a coincidence, but, in the case of a man being made to remember, the result is certain and sure.

Having introduced three possible methods of acquiring knowledge (in his opinion) in verse 2, the poorva pakshin introduces a fourth option, in this verse – vaakya sravanam, (which is the 2nd 'case' made out in our list earlier).

While Sureswraachaarya insists 'vaakya sravena maathrena jnaanam', the poorva pakshin says 'vaakya sravana maathraa: cha'.

- वाक्यश्रवण मात्रा: च - (In addition to the 3 methods given earlier) merely by vaakya sravanam also,
- आप्तुयात् - (the seeker) may gain (knowledge and mokshaa).

Who is the example? In our list, the student from Kana Upanishad was cited. The poorva pakshin gives the example of Pisaachakaa.

पिशाचकवत् - as i n t he case of Pi saachakaa.

This reference to Pisaachakaa has been commented upon, in two different manners. According to one Commentary (on Naishkarmya Siddhi), known as 'Chandrika', authored by one Jnaanoththamaa, Pisaachakaa is a proper noun, the name of a person, who was an exceptional student, fully endowed with saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, because of which, he acquired jnaanam by vaakya sravanam – a typical example of 'sravana maathrena jnaana uthpatthi'. Another Commentary, 'Klesa Apahaarin', authored by Sacchidaanendra Saraswathy, explains Pisaachakaa thus: "In puraanaas, we find episodes of celestials sometimes being cursed by a sage to turn into a pisaacha or a brahma rakshas. On their pleading for saapa vimochanaa, the rishi concedes the plea, saying, that, after a particular time, a few years or decades, a mahaathmaa will release the celestial from the curse, reminding him that he was not a pisaachaa or brahma raksha – but, a deva. The mere reminder of the mahaathmaa, will give the celestial, deva jnaanam, that he is a deva. In the same manner, the samsaari pisaachaa drops his jeevathvam, because of guru upadesam and gains brahmathvam".

The text Naishkarmya Siddhi, very closely follows the Upadesa Saahasri of Adi Sankaraa, especially the 18th chapter "Thathvamasi prakaranam", in which, Adi Sankara gives the example of the Rama Avathaaraa. Rama forgets that He was an avathaara and towards the end of His sojourn on earth, a rishi is said to have reminded Him, that He was an avathaaraa of Vishnu and it was time that He returned to Vaikuntaa.

“In such cases, vaakya sravanam, by itself, has generated knowledge” concedes the poorva pakshin.

But, of these four cases,

- त्रिषु सिद्धिः याधुच्छिकी - In the three cases, vaakya asravanam, vaakya sravanam and vaakya smaranam, knowledge is possible- but not definite.
- स्मार्यमाणे तु (सिद्धिः) निश्चिता - (but) in vaakya smaranam, i.e. when mahaa vaakyaa is repeatedly taught, knowledge is certain to result.

This is the poorva pakshin's contention, Sureswaraacharaya's replies to which follow.

56. Chapter II, Verse 3 to 5 (30-06-2007)

In Chapter I, Sureswaraachaarya had mentioned the four basic principles of Vedhaanthaa. They are:

- (1) Self –ignorance alone is the cause of all problems
- (2) Self-knowledge alone is the solution to all the problems
- (3) Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam alone is the source of self-knowledge, and (4) Karma can never give self-knowledge or liberation; however, it will prepare the mind, by purifying it.

Of these four principles, Sureswaraachaarya has taken up the third principle, "maha vaakyam alone is the source of self-knowledge- vaakyam eva jnaana kaaranam", in the beginning of the 2nd chapter, with the intention to establish this principle. (The Achaaryaa uses the word vaakyam, to refer to Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam).

A poorva pakshin challenges this stand of the Achaarayaa, by a technical method.

Normally, when we prove that a particular thing is a cause of another particular thing, we use a logic known as 'anvaya-vyathirekha' method, to prove the kaarya-kaarana sambhandham between the two. To prove that "vaakyam eva jnanasya kaaranam" – "vaakyam alone is the cause of jnaanam", by the use of anvaya-vyathirekha method, it has to be established that "Vaakya sathve jnaana sathvam" – "where vaakyam is present, jnaanam is present" (which is the anvaya part of the logic) and also that, "vaakya abhaave jnaana abhaavam" – "where vaakyam is absent, jnaanam is also absent" (which is the vyathirekha part of the logic).

Conversely, if the poorva pakshi is to refute the Vedaanthin's argument, he has to show that the anvayaa and vyathirekha do not work properly. This 'knocking off' is termed 'vyabhichara darsanam' - 'showing the violation'. The poorva pakshin has to do either anvaya vyabhichara darsanam or vyathireka vyabhichara darsanam or both. If the poorva pakshin demolishes the anvaya- vyathirekha support of the Vedaanthin, he succeeds in demolishing the kaarya-kaarana sambhandham between jnaanam and vaakyam.

As already explained, using anvayaa to establish that vaakyam is kaaranam of jnaanam, is to show that "yathra yathra vaakyam thathra thathra jnaanam, vaakya sathve jnaana sathvam"- "wherever vaakyam is present, jnaanam is present". The poorva pakshin has to disprove this, if he wants to counter the Vedhaanthin.

The vyathirekha logic is the establishment of "Vaakya abhaave jnaana abhaavam"- "where vaakyam is absent, there jnaanam is also absent". The poorva pakshin has to disprove this contention also. For this purpose, the poorva pakshin refers to Prajaapathi and Vaamadeva in the Upanishads, who had gained knowledge without vaakyam. The poorva pakshin tells the Vedhaanthin "According to you, where vaakyaa is not there, jnaanam should not be there. But, in the cases of Prajaapathi and Vaamdeva, jnaana bhaava: is there, even though there is vaakya abhaava:. Vaakya asravanaath api, prajaapathi vishaye, vaamadeba vishaye cha jnaana bhaava:. You cannot, therefore, say that vaakyam is the cause of knowledge, since, in their cases, there was no vaakyaa at all".

The anvaya vyabhicharaa (the showing of the non-validity of the anvaya logic, as applied to the kaarya-kaarana sambhandham of jnaanam and vaakyam) is done by the poorva pakshin, quoting himself as an example. "I have been listening to the vaakyam for a length of time – but, I do not have the knowledge." He also gives another argument: "In the case of some people, they did not get jnaanam by listening to the vaakyam – but, they attained jnaanam by dhyaanam (on the vaakyam). Vaakya sravanena jnaanam na theshaam, vaakya smaranena theshaam jnaanam bhaveth. From the example of these people, it is clear that jnaanam was achieved through smaranam (dhyaanam) not vaakyam". These arguments of the poorva pakshin fall under anvaya vyabhichara darsanam.

Thus, through anvaya vyabhicharaa and vyathirekha vyabhicharaa, the poorva pakshin counters: "You cannot say that vaakyam alone is the source of knowledge".

And, as a part of this course of arguments, the poorva pakshin gives four instances:

- (1) Vaakya asravanaath api jnaanam – "rise of knowledge even without listening to vaakyam"
- (2) Vaakya sravanaath jnaanam – "In some rare cases, jnaanam results, by listening to vaakyam."
- (3) Vaakya smaranam generates jnaanam- "Knowledge is generated by meditation or remembrance"
- (4) Vaakya smaaranaath jnaanam – "the student does not get the knowledge, immediately on listening to the vaakyam; but, because of the guru's repeated assertions of the vaakyam, knowledge results".

"Because of these different instances, you cannot hold either that vaakyam alone is the source of knowledge or that vaakyam is a definite source of knowledge" says the poorva pakshin. Verses 2 and 3 gave the arguments of the poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraachaarya refutes this in the following verses.

Sambhanda gadhyam to Verse 4 (Chapter II):

न अयं अनैकान्तिकः हेतुः। यतः ।

It is urged in reply that the role of the proposition in giving rise to knowledge is not a mere coincidence.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "No. I do not accept your contention. There is no vyabhicharaa, either in anvaya or in vyathirekhaa. My anvaya-vyathirekha logic is sound. Vaakyam alone is the source of knowledge and vaakyam is a definite source of knowledge".

- अयम् - The mahaa vaakyam,
- हेतुः - being the cause/source (of knowledge)
- न अनैकान्तिकः - (is) not uncertain;

Anaikaanthika: - uncertain; not definite.

வாக்கியம் தான் ஞானத்தைக் கொடுக்கும்; வாக்கியம் ஞானத்தைக் கொடுக்கக்க தான் செய்யும்.

यतः - because of the following reasons.

Chapter II: Verse 4 –

सर्वोयम् महिमा जेयो वाक्यस्य एव यथा उदितः ।

वाक्यार्थं न हि रुते वाक्यात् कश्चित् जानाति तत्त्वतः ॥ ४ ॥

All this is the glory of the proposition itself. No one can really grasp the import of the proposition, independent of the proposition.

In this verse, Sureswaraachaarya only re-asserts what he had said earlier. He does not explain or substantiate. But, the commentators (of the text) have given the explanation.

अयम् सर्वः महिमा जेयो वाक्यस्य एव - In all the four instances you quote, vaakyam alone has generated knowledge.

Let us consider the 2nd case first: vaakya sravanaath jnaanam – the student gets the knowledge through sravanam and he gets liberation here and now, (on which the Vedhaanthin has no dispute).

Consider the 3rd case: vaakya smaranaath jnaanam – In the case of some students, the teaching is received by 'listening', but does not result in immediate knowledge; however, at a later stage, by dwelling on the 'teaching', the students get the knowledge. This is the instance of 'vaakya dhyaanam producing knowledge' (according to the poorva pakshin).

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "You say, that, vaakya smaranam produced knowledge. But, what really is the cause of the knowledge? Is it vaakyam or smaranam? It is not the smaranam, but, the remembered vaakyam alone, that has produced knowledge. Because the student's mind was not prepared earlier, the 'heard' statement did not produce knowledge; but, later, when the mind got cleansed of impurities, the 'remembered' statement gave the knowledge. But, even so, it was not 'remembrance' that produced the knowledge, but the remembered 'statement' only".

If the question "if it is the vaakyaa that produced knowledge, why did it not produce knowledge, at the time of hearing?" is raised, the answer is "it is not the deficiency of the vaakyam; only because of some block in the mind, the vaakyaa did not produce immediate knowledge. The problem is not of that of the vaakyam; but, that of the mind. When the mind gets purified, the vaakyam produces knowledge".

In short, vaakya smaranam did not produce the knowledge; smrutha vaakyam alone produced the knowledge.

Taking up the 4th case: Vaakya smaaranam producing knowledge. In this instance also, the guru's teaching 'thathvamasl' did not produce knowledge, during the first session with the guru, only because of some block in the mind ; but, the repeated teachings, over the years, generated the knowledge, because of removal of the blocks, over the years. Again, it is the vaakyam alone that produced knowledge. Therefore, "Vaakya sathve eva jnaana sathvam"

Now, we come to the first case : Vaakya asravanaath api jnaanam.

"In the case of Prajaapathi, it is said in the Brahadaaranyaka Upanishad (4th Braahmanaa – 3rd manthraa), Brahmaaji was born from the navel of Lord Vishnu, he looked around and was frightened. But, suddenly he got the knowledge, without a guru or guru vachanam" ('dveetheeyam vai bhayam bhavathl' is the quotation) "Is it not a clear instance of vaakya asravnaath api jnaanam?" is the argument of the poorva pakshin.

The commentators explain thus: "It is not certain from the Brahadaaranyaka Upanishad, whether Brahmaaji got the knowledge at all. When you read the next manthraa of the Upanishad, it says that Brahmaaji started feeling 'lonely'. He needed companionship, and, therefore, by his sankalpa sakthi, he divided himself into two – pathi and pathni – Manu and Satharopa. If Prajaapathi had acquired advaita jnaanam, how can the Upanishad manthraa say that, he was feeling lonely?"

The poorva pakshin asks: "But, what about Vaamadeva, who got 'knowledge', even while in the womb of his mother and claimed 'aham brahma asmi!' Brahadaaranyaka and Eithreya Upanishads relate this episode".

The Vedhaanthin's reply: "Even in this case, vaakya alone must have generated knowledge. Vaama Deva must have listened to the vaakyam, in his earlier birth; but, because of some obstacle - prathibhandham – he would not have got the clarity. He would have been an Yoga Bhrashtaa. The Saasthraas say, that, in the case of an yoga bhrashtaa, though the teachings of the vaakyaa might not have produced immediate 'knowledge', they would remain as 'vaasanaas' in the yoga bhrashtaa's mind -sookshma sareeram - and when the yoga bhrashtaa is reborn, because of an udhbodhakam (a trigger), 'knowledge' will be born, from the vaasanaas. A spiritual genius remembers the vaasanaa and, at the appropriate time, because of some trigger, jnaanam will be achieved. Thus, it is only the poorva janma vaakya sravanam that has helped Vaama Deva also".

Therefore, vaakyam alone and vaakyam definitely will produce knowledge. (This is an assurance to the students of Vedhaantha.)

- अयम् सर्वः - All the four cases you quote,
- वाक्यस्य महिमा एव ज्ञेयः - should be understood as proving the glory of the maha vaakyam,
- यथा उदितः - as declared by me, earlier.
- वाक्यात् रुते - Without maha vaakyam,
- कश्चित् वाक्यार्थं न जानाति - nobody can get the 'knowledge' (jeevaathma paramaathma aiykya jnaanam),
- तत्त्वतः - in truth / certainly.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 5:

वाक्यं च प्रतिपादनाय प्रवृत्तं सत्प्रतिपादयति एव सर्वप्रमाणामपि एवम् वृत्तत्वात् ।

The proposition, purporting to convey knowledge, does so positively. Such is the nature of all means of knowledge.

Sureswaraachaarya says that the maha vaakyam has the power to generate knowledge. Therefore, it will certainly generate knowledge, in the mind of the equipped listener. Not only will the vaakyam generate knowledge – the knowledge will be the final, liberating knowledge, which will not require any further corroboration or validation, in the form of a mystic experience or a second source etc.

Why do we say so?

This knowledge cannot be confirmed by any other source, since no other source deals with aathmaa. How can sources which do not deal in the field / sphere of aathmaa validate the aathma jnaanam given by the mahaa vaakyam?

Your 'understanding' is the final knowledge. Do not look for further corroboration. Vedhaantha vaakyam is like a sense organ. What is received by the 'eye' in the field of colours or form, is final knowledge, that cannot be proved by the other sense organs – ears or tongue, since they do not function in the field of colours and forms.

When you get information from a secondary source, you may require further corroboration. For instance, existence of fire is known from the smoke by 'inference' – anumaana pramaanam and confirmed by physical perception – prathyaksha pramaanam.

Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam, on the other hand, is a primary source of knowledge, and does not require any further proof. It is a primary source, giving primary knowledge.

There is no question of direct proof of aathmaa, since 'you' are 'aathmaa'. 'Understanding' is literally 'knowledge'.

(This 'analysis of knowledge' – an analysis of the source, validity, proof for validity etc.- is called epistemology – pramaana saasthram).

There may be a further doubt. A student might ask: "OK. Other sources may not be able to corroborate the Vedhaantha Vaakya knowledge. But, other sources may contradict the Vedhaanthic statements. In fact, they do so. How can I, therefore, accept that Vedhaanthic knowledge is valid?"

How do they contradict? Because all other pramaanams – prathyaksham, anumaanaa, upamaanaa etc. – reveal dvaitham and Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam alone is revealing advaitam. "The vaakya pramaanam is, thus, contradicted by other pramaanams. One may accept vaakya pramaanam, even if there is absence of support from anya pramaanam; but, when there are positive contradictions from other pramaanams to vaakya pramaanam, how can you say that vaakyam gives valid knowledge?" is the question raised.

Sureswaraachaarya answers: "If you understand properly, no other pramaanam can contradict mahaa vaakyam. Therefore, the knowledge is valid, uncontradicted by any other source of knowledge, experiences etc."

- वाक्यं च - The mahaa vaakyam
- प्रतिपादनाय प्रवृत्तं सत् – being meant only for giving knowledge,

- Pravruttham - 'functioning'
- प्रतिपादयति एव - will certainly produce knowledge,
- सर्वप्रमाणानाम् अपि एवम् वृत्तत्वात् - since all pramaanams (sources of knowledge) are of such a nature.

Vrutthathvaath – because of being of such a nature.

But then, how do you solve the problem i.e. of advaita pramaanam revealed by Vedhaanthaa, being contradicted by all other pramaanams?

Sureswaraachaarya says 'there is no problem at all'.

Chapter II: Verse 5 –

न अहंग्राह्यो न तद्दीने न प्रत्यङ्नापि दुःखिनि ।

विरोधः सदसि इत्यस्मात् वाक्य अभिज्ञस्य जायते ॥ ५ ॥

There is no contradiction for one who understands the sentence 'thou are that being', in connection with either the ego or the factors other than ego, such as the senses or the pure Self or the individual subject to misery.

In the teaching "you are whole; you are aananda svaroopaa:", what is the meaning of 'you'? Four meanings can be taken. But, whatever is taken, Sureswaraachaarya says, there is no contradiction.

1st meaning of 'thou': Sthoola Sareeram - ahamgraahya: is the word used by the Achaaryaa for the sthoola sareeram, (in this verse).

2nd meaning of 'thou': The various sense organs – referred to, by the Achaaryaa as 'thadh heene' – thena heenam is thadh heenam - since the sense organs are referred to as 'mine' and not as 'I' .

3rd meaning of 'thou': The mind – referred to as dhu:khini - since it is generally occupied by one worry or another.

4th meaning of 'thou': Chaitnyam – Prathyang is the word used here.

Sureswaraachaarya says, that, in all the four cases, there is no contradiction with the mahaa vaakyam.

How do you say so?

57. Chapter II, Verse 5 to 8 (07-07-2007)

Four principles of Vedhaantha have been mentioned in the 1st chapter:

- (1) Self-ignorance alone is the cause of samsaara.
- (2) Self-knowledge alone is, therefore, the solution for samsaara.
- (3) Mahaa vaakyam alone is the source of self-knowledge, and
- (4) Karma cannot give self-knowledge or liberation; but karma can purify the mind for gaining knowledge and liberation.

Sureswaraacharya has taken the third principle, for analysis, in the 2nd chapter – that, the Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyaani such as 'thath thvam asi' etc., are alone the valid sources of self-knowledge.

In the introduction to verse 5, he said mahaa vaakyam is a primary source of knowledge and therefore, whatever it reveals has to be the final knowledge. The knowledge revealed by the mahaa vaakyam cannot be validated by any other source nor contradicted. An example of a primary source of knowledge is the sense organ 'eye', which cannot be corroborated by any other sense organ, in its field of knowledge, the 'colours' and 'forms', which field is unique to the 'eye' only. As other senses do not have access to 'colours' and 'forms', they can neither confirm nor contradict the eyes. Therefore, in the field of colours and forms, whatever the eye reveals, has to be accepted as valid knowledge, which does not require further corroboration or substantiation. So also with the other sense organs, in their respective fields of knowledge. In the same manner, mahaa vaakyam is the source of knowledge, in the field of aathmaa. If properly taught by the guru and if properly understood by the student, the transaction will result in knowledge. The Achaaryaa stresses this, in the introduction to verse 5, as "vaakyam prathipaadhayathi eva" - "vaakyam will certainly produce knowledge".

"thath thvam asi" - "That you are" - is a mahaavaakyam. 'Thath' is a pronoun, whose meaning has to be understood from the context in which it occurs. This mahaavaakyam is from the Chandhogyha Upanishad, in which the guru starts his teaching with 'Sath eva soumya' etc. From the context, 'thath' is to be understood as 'sath' (the poorna aananda chaithanyam). Sureswaraacharya makes use of the same word here (in verse 5) – 'sath asi'.

- 'सदसि' - 'you are poorna aananda chaithanyam'

This statement is equivalent to 'thath thvam asi', which means 'sathvam asi' or 'sath asi'. Sureswaraachaarya avers, that, when the student receives the sentence, he will receive valid knowledge, which cannot be contradicted by other sources.

- अभिज्ञस्य - For one who has understood (properly)
- 'सदसि' इत्यस्मात् वाक्य - the mahaa vaakyaani, such as 'sath asi',
- विरोधः न जायते - no contradiction appears (in the meaning)
- अहं ग्राह्यो – in the context of the body,
- तद्दीने - (or) in the context of the senses,
- दुःखिनि - (or) in the context of the mind,
- प्रत्यङ्नापि - (or) even in the context of consciousness.

Looking from any angle, there is no contradiction for such a student.

How does Sureswaraachaarya say this? If it is stated that "from the state of Consciousness, there is no contradiction", the statement can be accepted, since Consciousness is sath svaroopam, chith svaroopam and aananda svaroopam. But, what about the body, senses and mind? How can you say, that, there are no contradictions with respect to these also? The detailed explanation would be as follows:

If, only the vaachyaarthaa (immediate meaning) of the word 'you', in the mahaavaakya, is considered, the word would mean, "I, the Consciousness, including the body-mind-senses". But, Vedhaantha mahaa vaakyam does not give the vaachyaartham for 'you'; it gives, what is termed, baagha thyaagha lakshanaa meaning, by which, the word 'you' or 'I' (in the mahaavaakya) will refer to only the Consciousness principle, keeping out the body-mind-senses complex. Thus, the mahaavaakya should be understood as calling only the pure Consciousness as aananda svaroopam:

And, when the Vedaanthic statement says, "I the Consciousness is aananda", you cannot contradict it at all, since no other pramaanam deals with Consciousness, to contradict or confirm this statement and Vedhaantha alone is the pramaanam for Consciousness.

Aananda svaroopam and body-mind-senses will contradict, since your mind only reflects the aananda of the Consciousness, that too, only at times. Permanent prathi-bhimbha-aananda will not be there. Therefore, contradiction comes if baagha thyaagha lakshanaa is not applied.

For one who has understood the mahaavaakya properly i.e. with the baagha thyaagha lakshanaa, there cannot be a contradiction, since he will realise that, in the case of Consciousness, there is permanent aananda, while in the case of body or mind or senses, there cannot be permanent aanandaa. (i.e. Consciousness is aananda svarooopa.; while the body or mind or senses are not.)

This is how Sureswaraachaarya's statement "abignyasya virodha: na jayathe" – "For one who has understood properly, no contradiction appears", should be interpreted.

Chapter II :Verse 6 –

न अविरक्तस्य संसारात् निविवृत्सा ततः भवेत् ।

न च अनिवृत्त तृष्णस्य पुरुषस्य मुमुक्षुता ॥ ६ ॥

In one who has not developed dispassion towards the world, no inclination to renounce it will arise. One, in whom the desires are not quenched, does not develop the urge towards release.

Mahaa vaakyam is the primary and valid source of valid knowledge, which can liberate a person instantaneously. Nirdhushta pramaanam is the word used about vaakyam.

If vaakyam does not liberate, the problem is not with the vaakyam – but, with the guru or the sishyaa. Suppose the guru does not have any problem, having given knowledge to some other sishyaa, the problem has to be with the sishyaa only.

What is the sishyaa's problem?

Sureswaraachaarya says that this has to be investigated into. He says that the student has to go through eight stages to succeed in the spiritual project. If there is a snag in any one of the eight stages, it has to be rectified.

Verses 6 to 9, deal with the eight stages, each verse covering two stages. Verse 6 talks of the first two stages, which are vairaaghyam and uparamaa. If a person wants to attain mokshaa, he should work for mokshaa. For this, he should have the desire for mokshaa, to start with.

What is mokshaa? 'Samsaara nivritthi' i.e. a man desiring mokshaa, should have desire for samsaara nivritthi - dropping samsaaraa. If this is to happen, i.e. if desire for samsaara nivritthi is to arise, he should have samsaara vairaaghyam first.

Samsaara vairaaghyam will alone lead to samsaara nivritthi icchaa or moksha icchaa.

- अविरक्तस्य संसारात् - For one who has not got dispassion for samsaaraa,
- निविवृत्सा - desire to get rid of samsaaraa

- ततः न भवेत् - will not arise.
- अनिवृत्त तृष्णस्य पुरुषस्य मुमुक्षुता न (भवति) - For one who does not have samsaara nivritthi icchaa, moksha praapthi icchaa will not arise.

The samssaraa nivritthi icchaa is what is known as uparamaa and is the second stage, as listed by Sureswaraachaarya, while vairaaghyam is the first stage.

There is an interesting fact with regard to vairaaghyam: People want to be rid of pain. They come to a Vedhaanthic teacher, who says "If you want to be free of pain, drop the sources of pain". This is perfectly acceptable to the student. But on deeper analysis, he realises that all sources of pain, happen to be sources of pleasure also. (Normally, it is said that all sources of pleasure are sources of pain also.) This means that, the student has to drop the sources of pleasures also. This is what discourages the student, in his vairaaghyam. Bhagavaan has made every object which is a source of pleasure, as a source of pain also and vice versa. Hence the dilemma for the seeker. Vairaaghyam results, when in pain; but, when he enjoys, vairaaghyam disappears and raaghaa appears. Only when you drop sources of pleasure also, i.e. only on developing vairaaghyam, mumukshuthvaa (desire for mokshaa) will result.

Chapter II: Verse 7 –

न च अमुमुक्षोः अस्ति इह गुरु पाद उपसर्पणम् ।

न विना गुरुसंबन्धं वाक्यस्य श्रवणम् भवेत् ॥ ७ ॥

One who has no urge towards release, will not approach a preceptor. Apart from a preceptor, there is no hearing of the sacred text.

The third stage is "the strong desire for moksha praapthi:" – "mumukshuthaa" and the fourth stage is "guru upasarpanam" or "guru upasadhanam" - "approaching a guru".

Compare 'the mumukshu approaching a guru to a 'patient rushing to a Doctor, when in intense pain'. The mumukshu is to be given samsaara rogha vaidhyam.

"Mumuksho: eva guru paada upasarpanam" - "Only a person who has moksha praapthi icchaa, will have gurupraapthi; ; he alone will approach the Vedhaanthic preceptor" is the message that Sureswaraachaarya wants to convey and does it using a double-negative sentence.

- अमुमुक्षोः गुरु पाद उपसर्पणम् न अस्ति - For one who does not have moksha icchaa, 'approaching a preceptor' does not result,
- इह – in this subject / circumstances.

The next step: Only when the seeker goes to the guru, vaakya sravanam can happen i.e. Guru upasadanam will lead to mahaa vaakya sravanam / vichaaram. The Aachaaryaa uses double-negative to convey this also.

- गुरुसंबन्धं विना वाक्यस्य श्रवणम् न भवेत् - Without interaction with guru, maha vaakya vichaaram is not possible.

Vinaa - without.

To recap: Stage:

- (1) Samsaara vairaaghyam – detachment from samsaaraa
- (2) Samsaara nivritthi icchaa – desire to be rid of samsaaraa
- (3) Moksha praapthi icchaa - desire for attainment of mokshaa
- (4) Guru praapthi: - approaching a guru.
- (5) Vaakya sravanam.

Chapter II: Verse 8 –

तथा पदपदार्थौ च न स्तः वाक्यं रुते क्वचित् ।

अन्वयव्यतिरेकौ च तौ रुते स्तां किम् आश्रयौ ॥ ८ ॥

Without hearing the sacred text, there are no words or meanings to be enquired into. In the absence of words and their meanings, on what should rational inquiry rest?

The 5th step is vaakya sravanam and with vaakya sravanam, the seeker enters padhaartha vichaaraa. Sravanam can also mean vichaaraa. Vaakyaa is, of course, mahaa vaakyam (in this text). What is padha artha vichaaraa? Ans: 'Word analysis'.

Any sentence consists of only words. 'Sentence analysis', therefore, is always accompanied by 'word analysis'. Vaakya vichaaraa will lead to padha artha vichaaraa. Sureswaraachaarya expresses this fact as "a person who does not enter vaakya vichaaraa will not enter padha vichaaraa or padha artha vichaaraa".

- वाक्यं रुते - Without vaakyam,
- पद पदार्थौ न स्तः - padha vichaaraa: and padha artha vichaaraa: will not result,
- क्वचित् - in any circumstance.

The 6th step, therefore, is padha, padha artha vichaaraa:| Once you enter padha vichaaraa:, you enquire into the meaning of 'that'(paramaathmaa) and 'thvam' (jeevaathmaa).

What exactly is conveyed by the word 'thvam'? If you want to understand the meaning of jeevaathmaa, the saasthraas have presented a particular method of enquiry - anvaya vyathirekha vichaara: This method of enquiry to arrive at the meaning of the word 'thvam' is adopted by Sureswaraachaarya in Naishkarmya Siddhi. Adi Sankaraachaarya also uses this method in his Upadesa Saahasri, though not to the extent of Sureswaraachaarya in Naishkarmya Siddhi. Likewise, Vidhyaranya Swami also uses this method in his treatise Panchadasi, again not to the extent of Sureswaraachaarya in Naishkarmya Siddhi.

Since padha vichaara: (the 6th step) leads to anvaya vyathirekha vichaara:, the anvaya vyathirekha vichaara: is to be considered, as the 7th step.

58. Chapter II, Verse 8 to 12 (14-07-2007)

Sureswaraacharya is establishing in this chapter, that, mahaa vaakyam is the direct means of gaining direct knowledge of aathman; the knowledge is gained even at the time of mahaa vaakya sravanam, if the student has gone through the required stages properly. The Achaaryaa talks of eight stages, through which the seeker has to go, to gain liberation from samsaaraa. The eight stages are covered by four verses, verse 6 to verse 9.

Verse 6 talks of samsaara vairaaghyam, which means 'dispassion towards samsaaraa (the entire anaathma prapanchaa)', as the first stage; the second stage indicated by this verse is samsaara nivritthi icchaa - the 'desire to get out of the emotional dependence on samsaaraa (the anaathma prapanchaa)'.

Verse 7 talks of two further stages, stage 3, being moksha praapthi icchaa i.e. the 'intense desire for mokshaa or self-dependence' and stage 4, being guru paada upasarpnam, 'approaching a guru for guidance to attain the goal, which action requires the conviction, that, the goal cannot be attained without the guidance of a guru. (Mundaka Upanishad - I.II.12 - declares "*pareekshya lokaan karmachithaan braahmana: nirvedam aayaath naasthi akrutha: kruthena thadvijnartham samithpaani: sa: gurum eva abhigaccheth samithpaani: srothriyam brahmanishtam" – "having examined the worlds which are achieved through karma, a brahmin should come to dispassion. Since mokshaa is not possible through karma, to attain knowledge, he must, with samith in hand, necessarily approach a teacher, who is learned in scriptures and established in Brahman).*

Verse 8 covers the 5th and 6th stages. The 5th stage is when the guru guides the student through a spiritual educational programme – Vedhaantha vakya sravanam / Vedhaantha vaakya vichaaram. As the student listens to the mahaa vaakyam, he will understand that, Vedhaantha is talking about brahma svaroopam or aathma svaroopam; that, it points out, that, that brahman is 'you' yourself.

A seeker, in the initial stages, is not receptive to the idea, however much he respects the guru. He will assume that the guru is talking about a 'Reality', which he, the student, will realise only later. This is a common mistake, the notion, "the guru has talked about a Brahman, which I have now understood intellectually; but, later I will get a direct experience in the thureeyaa stage". The guru, on the other hand, insists "you are brahman, which is, ever available, even at the time of sravanam." When a student thus misses the message of the mahaa vaakyaa and does not grasp the meanings of the important words 'that' and 'thou', it is the responsibility of the guru to point out to the student "you do not require saadhanaas like meditation, to understand the real import of the mahaa vaakyaa. What you do require is further enquiry – into the words 'thath' and 'thvam' – padha, padha artha vichaara:". This padha, padha artha vichaara: is the 6th stage, as indicated by Sureswaraachaaryaa.

- वाक्यम् रुते - Without enquiry into the mahaa vaakyam,
- पद पदार्थो न स्तः - the student will not understand the padhaa and the padha arthaa.

Stha: is the dual verb form of asthi, (the plural form is santhi), the subject of the sentence, padha, padha arthau, being dual.

Padha vichaara: is 'word analysis' and padha artha vichaara: is 'analysis of the meanings of the word'. Entering into padha vichaaraa and padha artha vichaaraa is not possible without vaakya sravanam.

When the student enters into 'thvam' padha vichaaraa – the word denoting jeevaathmaa (kaarya aathmaa) and into 'thath' padha vichaaraa – the word denoting paramaathmaa (kaarana aathmaa), he finds that, when the teacher refers to the student as 'you', he is referring to the essential 'you', not to the non-essential, peripheral, anna-maya, praanamaya kosa etc. 'you'.

One should segregate the essential 'I' from the non-essential 'I' – as Katopanishad (Ch.II – Sec III – Verse 17) points out "Purusham antharaathmam svaath sareeraath dhairyena pravruheth munjaath isheekaam iva" – "one should separate the inner Self, from one's own body, with diligence, like separating stalk from munjaa grass". This effort requires anvaya vyathirekha vichaaraa. 'What is anvaya vyathirekha vichaaraa?' is not going to be detailed now, except that it is a type of enquiry to segregate the essential 'I', from the non-essential, superficial, peripheral person.

- तौ रुते - Without entering the padha, padha artha vichaaraa
- अन्वयव्यतिरेकौ - the anvaya vyathirekha enquiry
- किं आश्रयौ - will be based on what ?

The import of the question is: 'Anvaya-vyathirekha is based on padha, padha artha vichaara:'; alternately, 'only when you enter padha, padha artha vichaara: you will enter anvaya-vyathirekha'. This is in tune with Upadesa Saahasri – Ch. XVIII.

What is the importance of anvaya-vyathirekha? Both Adi Sankaraacharya and Sureswaraacharya say "If you do anvaya-vyathirekha, you will gain knowledge immediately".

Chapter II: Verse 9 –

अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां विना वाक्यार्थबोधनम् ।

न स्यात् तेन विना अज्ञानप्रहाणं न उपपद्यते ॥ ९ ॥

Without such an enquiry, there is no comprehension of the significance of the sacred sentence. Without that comprehension, there is no termination of ignorance.

In this verse, the last two stages are mentioned: Anvaya vyathirekha vichaaraa (which was mentioned in the earlier verse also) and vaakyartha jnaanam.

Anvaya vyathirekhaa is the crucial part of the spiritual enquiry. If this is done properly, you get aparoksha jnaanam - direct / instantaneous realisation. 'Understanding' takes place during vaakya sravanam itself, in jaagrath avasthaa – not in the samaadhi avasthaa, since all sources of knowledge - guru, saasthraas etc.- are shut off during samaadhi. Guru and saasthraas are available only in jaagrath avasthaa. Samaadhi can be used for 'remembering' knowledge, but, not for 'acquisition' of knowledge, since 'acquisition' is not possible during samaadhi, since guru, saasthra, vedhaantha and sabda pramaanams are not available in samaadhi; they are available only in jaagrath avasthaa.

Only through anvaya vyathirekha, vaakyartha jnaanam is possible.

- अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां विना - Without anvaya vyathirekha (anvrutthi and vyaavrutthi) vichaaraa,
- वाक्यार्थबोधनम् - the direct knowledge of Brahman ('I' am Brahman here and now)
- न स्यात् - will not happen.
- तेन विना - Without vaakyartha jnaanam taking place,
- अज्ञान प्रहाणं न उपपद्यते - elimination of self-ignorance is not possible.

Prahaanam - Elimination.

My jeeva bhaavaa is replaced by Brahma bhaavaa - 'I am jeeva' notion is replaced by 'I am brahmar' conviction. This is mokshaa.

This displacement of the notion takes place in the intellect of the seeker and, therefore, mokshaa is an event of removal of a notion in the intellect.

To summarise: the eight steps listed out by the Achaaryaa, in this portion, are:

- (1) Samsaara vairaaghyam
- (2) Samsaara nivritthi icchaa
- (3) Moksha praapthi icchaa
- (4) Guru praapthi:
- (5) Vaakya sravanam
- (6) Padha artha vichaaram
- (7) Anvaya vyathirekha vichaaram
- (8) Vaakyartha bodhanam / aiykya jnaanam.

If you go through these stages properly, ajnaana prahaanam takes place, only when moksha purushaartha is attained. This is said in the next verse.

Chapter II: Verse 10 –

विना अज्ञानप्रहाणेन पुरुषार्थः सुदुर्लभः ।

तस्मात् यथोक्त सिद्ध्यर्थं परः ग्रन्थः अवतार्यते ॥ १० ॥

Without the termination of ignorance, the attainment of the supreme good is impossible. Therefore, with a view to establish the import of 'Thou' in 'That Thou art', the subsequent part of the work starts.

"Only when self-ignorance goes, a person attains moksha purushaartha" says Sureswaraachaaryaa.

अज्ञानप्रहाणेन विना - Without elimination of self-ignorance,

पुरुषार्थः सुदुर्लभः - mokshaa is impossible.

In the case of the other purushaarthaas – viz. dharma, artha and kaamaa, you have to do a lot of action. But, for moksha purushaartha, you have to do a lot of thinking/ enquiry – vicharaa. Mokshaa pursuit is predominantly an educational programme , since, it is only pursuit of intellectual knowledge.

Some people wrongly advise against this, because, they do not understand that knowledge comes through vaakya vicharaa, padha vicharaa, anvaya vyathirekha vicharaa etc. And, one should note that the spiritual journey actually gets over with sravanam.

Nidhidhyaasanam is not continuation of the journey; but, is only reminding oneself that the journey is over. Otherwise, one will think that the journey is not over and that, one is still a saadhakaa. Orientation of the continuation of the journey has to be broken – nidhidhyaasanaa should make one understand that, 'one is Brahman here and now'. If this is not understood 'further study' has to be done. The ajnaana prahaanam (elimination of self-ignorance) is only through study. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says : "I want to advise the student to do vaakya, padha, anvaya vyathirekha vichaaraa, assuming that the early stages such as samsaara vairaaghyam etc. have been achieved by the student".

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- यता उक्त सिद्ध्यर्थ - for accomplishing the stages mentioned (explained in the last 4 verses),
- परः ग्रन्तः - the following part of the work
- अवतार्यते - starts.

Chapter II: Verse 11 –

वर्चस्कं तु अन्नकार्यत्वात् यथा न आत्मा इति गम्यते ।

तद्भागः सेन्द्रियः देहः तद्वत् किमिति नेक्ष्यते ॥ ११ ॥

Just as faeces, a product of food, is regarded as other than the Self, even so the body, along with the senses, being the product of food in the same way, must be regarded as other than the Self. Why is it not so understood?

Up to verse 10, is the introduction to the subject matter. The 'enquiry' begins from the 11th verse only. (The subject matter is vaakya vichaaraa, padha vichaaraa and anvaya vyathirekha vichaaraa).

Padha vichaaraa starts from the 11th verse.

First, Sureswaraachaarya says, that, the primary obstacle to understand Vedhaantha is "deha abhimaanam". The physical personality obstructs the spiritual personality. The word 'thvam' has to be understood properly; and, the deha abhimaanam should become thinner and thinner, till it disappears totally. Deha abhimaanam is also of three types – similar to deha – sthoola deha abhimaanam, sookshma deha abhimaanam and kaarana deha abhimaanam. Of these, the strongest is the sthoola deha abhimaanam. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya starts with physical body negation.

He gives several reasons to include the physical body into the anaathma prapanchaa. He says that the physical body is a product of annam. (Thathva bodhaa declares that the sthoola sareeram corresponds to the first sheath of the individual - the annamaya kosa:

"annarasena eva bhoothvaa annarasena eva vrudhim praapya anna roopa pruthivyaam yadhvileeyathe thadh annamaya: kosa: sthoolasareeram" – "the gross body is a sheath born of the essence of food, grows by the essence of food alone and also resolves in the earth, which is in the form of food.")

In the body 'waste' is also there. This faecal matter, referred to as varchaskam (malam- filth / waste), in the verse, is a product of food – anna kaaryam, since, it is the food consumed which has become faeces. Likewise, the gross body also is a product of food. Varchaskam anna kaaryam ; deha: api anna kaaryam. "Are you interested in claiming varchaskam as yourself ? Is it not repulsive, even to think or talk of varchaskam? When you are so inclined to treat varchaskam – one anna kaaryam with revulsion - why do you treat the other anna kaaryam, the gross body, as something precious?" asks Sureswaraachaaryaa.

- यथा - Just as,
- वर्चस्कं तु - the faecal matter,
- अन्नकार्यत्वात् - because of being the result of food,
- न आत्मा इति गम्यते - is not considered the "self" by anybody,
- सेन्द्रियः देहः - the gross body with all the sense organs,
- तद्भागः – being also another variety of anna kaaryam,

Anna kaarya vibhaagha: is thadhbaagha: /

- किमिति नेक्ष्यते - why is not understood / looked upon
- तद्वत् - in the same manner ?

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 12:

आक्लिर्ः आलिइउ म् क्र् आम् ः मिओल्क्ः ।

The food is recognised as a non-Self, before consumption and after excretion. What makes it otherwise, in the interval?

Sureswaraachaarya gives the second argument.

"If you analyse the physical body, before the skin, bone, flesh etc. were formed, they were in the form of food, i.e. initially, the body was anaathmaa – aahaara roopena. Later the consumed food becomes varchaskam – mala roopena anaathmaa. If it is anaathmaa in the past and anaathmaa in the future, when it is in the body-form for a short duration, in the middle, how can you claim it as aathmaa?" asks the Achaaryaa.

A fingernail or a hair, which is looked after, with care, when it is a part of the body, becomes asoucham when it is removed from the body, the dharma saasthraas, in fact, prescribing a bath, if you happen to come into contact with the removed hair or nail.

- कः प्रतिबन्धः - What is the obstacle for you (in accepting) ,
- अनात्मत्वे प्रसिद्धे - what is well established as anaathmaa,
- आध्यन्तयोः - in the past and the future,
- मध्ये अपि – (as anaathmaa) in the interval also ?

This is conveyed by the verse that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 12 –

प्रागनात्मा एव जग्धं सत् आत्मताम् येति अविध्यया ।

स्रग् आलेपनवत् देहम् तस्मात् पश्येत् विविक्थधीः ॥ १२ ॥

What is non-Self before, is identified as the Self, after being eaten, through misconception. Therefore, a man of discrimination must see it as other than the Self, like a garland and a fragrant unguent.

- प्रागनात्मा एव - Before getting converted into blood, skin etc. (i.e. when in the form of food), what is understood as anaathmaa, 'Later also' is implied; later also it is anaathmaa, in the form of varchaskam.
- जग्धं सत् – after eating,
- अविध्यया - because of self-ignorance,
- आत्मनाम् येति - is (mis)understood as 'myself'.

Anna karyathvaath - is the 1st reason given.

Adhyanthayo: anaathmathvaath - is the 2nd reason given.

59. Chapter II, Verse 12 to 16 (21-07-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya wants to establish that, makhaavaakyan can directly give self-knowledge, if one undergoes the necessary preparatory stages; by 'preparatory stages', we mean, "grasping the meanings of the word 'thvam' and of the word 'thath'".

'Thath' means Paramaathmaa, which should be understood as 'Pure Existence' – as the Chandoghya Upanishad says "sath eva soumya idham agra aaseeth" – 'pure Existence', without nama-roopa contamination. But, this topic is not discussed here.

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to emphasize the 'thvam padha artham' here. The 'thvam padha' should be understood as aathmaa separated from anaathmaa. If anaathmaa is not separated, 'thvam' or 'aham', in the mahaa vaakyaani will include anaathmaa and the mahaa vaakyam will have no significance. Therefore, one has to take pains to separate 'aham' from anaathmaa – the sareera thrayam, the sthoola sareeram being the outermost. Aathma anaathma vivekam is compulsory before mahaa vaakya sravanam.

Katopanishad - II. III. 17 – declares: "angushtamaathra: purusha: antharaathmaa sadhaa janaanaam hrudaye sannivishtha:" – "Purushaa, the inner Self, which is of the size of the thumb, is ever seated in the heart of the people"; And exhorts: "Tham svaaath sareeraath pravruheth munjaath eva isheekaam dhairyena | tham vidhyaath sukram amrutham tham vidhyaath sukram amritham ithi" - "One should separate that (the inner Self) from one's own body with diligence, like separating the stalk from the munja grass. One should know that to be pure and immortal". One can claim one's immortality, only when one claims 'one's self' from one's mortal body.

This is the reason why Sureswaraachaarya talks of the sthoola sareera anaathma vivekam and emphasises that the sthoola sareeram should not be included in the meaning of the word 'I'.

'Aadhyanthayo: anaathmathve prasiddhe madhye api ka: prathibandha: (the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 12) means: "Before the food is converted into the skin, blood, bone etc. of the gross body, it existed as anaathmaa, as 'food on the plate' and also looked upon as such i.e. as anaathmaa. The very same annam gets converted into and thrown out as waste, which is also considered anaathmaa. Then, when the food, in the interval, exists as blood, bone etc., how can you consider them alone as aathmaa?"

- अविध्यया आत्मताम् येति - Only because of ignorance, you claim (your gross body, made of food), as the "Self".

In the second line of the verse, the Aachaaryaa gives another logic. The physical body is acquired temporarily by us and will be dropped later, like a garland or like perfume (sandalwood paste etc.)

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- विविक्तधीः - a discriminating person / a viveki
- पश्येत - should look upon
- देहं - his gross body
- सगालेपनवत् - like a garland or perfume.

Srak – means 'garland'. A garland is thrown off when it fades away. Similarly, the jeeva had a particular body in its earlier birth and threw away the body, when the body became old and withered; as Lord Krishna said in the Bhagavadh Githa: (verse 22 – Ch. II) "Vaasaamsi jeernaani yathaa vihaaya navaani grunhaathi naroparaani thathaa sareeraani vihaaya jeernaani anyaani samyaathi navaani dehi" - "Just as a person gives up worn out clothes and puts on other new ones, so also, the Self gives up worn out bodies and attains other new ones".

The second example given by the Achaaryaa is aalepanam, which refers to any perfume, like sandalwood paste etc., applied on the body. Lipyathe ithi lepanam – that which is applied. The aalepanam is only a temporary application on the body and is later washed away. The gross body is like the perfume, a temporary 'plastering' on the sookshama sareeram (which is also anaathmaa, the negation of which is to be taken up later.)

The body is only temporary, existing for a short period. During that period, 'use' the body as 'means, to realize the aathmaa and then reject the body. An example is a plastic cup used to drink from. Once the drink is consumed, the plastic cup is crushed and thrown away. Likewise, the sareeram should be used to drink the jnaana amritham. The person, who is alive to this fact, is vivikthadhee: - a discriminating person.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 13 :

अथ एवमपि मद्बचनम् नाद्रियसे स्वयमेव एतस्माच्छरीरात् अशुचिराशेः निराशः भविष्यसि ।

If you are not inclined to accept my words, even then, you yourself will develop aversion to it, the storehouse of filth, on scrutiny.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "By this much description, you should have got vairaaghyam from the body. If not, I will present more shocking facts; I will give you the description of the body, after the jeeva leaves the body. Look at the condition of any other dead body and extend the same condition to your body, when it is dead. Your attachment to your body will go away.”

- एवम् अपि मद्बचनम् न अद्रियसे - If you do not accept this teaching of mine,
- अथ - (then) by further scrutiny (to be presented in the following verse),
- स्वयमेव - by yourself,
- निराशः भविष्यसि - you will get detachment
- एतस्मात् शरीरात् - from this body,
- अशुचिराशेः - (which is) a bundle of impurities.

Verse 13 – Chapter II:

मन्यसे तावत् अस्मि इति यावत् अस्मात् न नीयसे ।

श्वभिः क्रोडीकृते देहे न एवं त्वं अभिमंस्यसे ॥ १३ ॥

As long as you are not conducted out of it, you think you are the body. When it is appropriated by dogs, as belonging to them, you do not identify yourself with it.

- यावत् - As long as,
- अस्मात् न नीयसे - you are not separated from the body,

Asmaath - from the body ; neeyase - separated.

- तावत् - till that time ,
- अस्मि इति मन्यसे - you think that you are the body.

"Marana paryantham- upto the time of death "is what is indicated by "Yaavath asmaath na neeyase thaavath". "As long as it is a live body" is the essence.

What is the condition, when it becomes a dead body? All animals and birds pounce on the body and prey on it.

- श्वभिः देहे क्रोडीकृते - On dogs taking hold of the (dead) body,
- एवं त्वं न अभिमंस्यसे - you will not thus identify yourself with the body.

The Achaaryaa is obviously referring to the dead body of a sannyasin, which cannot be cremated. Cremation of a dead body is also a ritual, a samskaaraa termed anthyeshthi, where the son offers the parent's body to the Agni Devatha, in a ritualistic manner. A sanyaasi has to give up all rituals, especially connected with agni – he is called niragni: - and, therefore, cannot have the anthyeshthi samskaaraa. As a consequence, his body is disposed off in manners other than cremation- thrown into a river or a forest, sometimes even cut to pieces (though such procedures are not discussed, in detail). In such cases, the body is taken possession of, by scavenging animals and birds.

The Achaaryaa continues in the same vein, in the next verse also.

Chapter II: Verse 14 –

शिर आक्रम्य पादेन भर्त्सयति अपरान् शुनः ।

ध्रुष्ट्वा साधारणं देहं कस्मात् सक्तः असि तत्र भोः ॥ १४ ॥

One dog takes possession of the dead body, standing on the head and fights with other dogs to drive them away. Seeing that the body is the common possession of you and the dogs, why do you take a special interest in it?

One dog takes possession of the dead body; other dogs approach the body, for a share. But, the dog, which had originally taken possession of the body, stands on the body and challenges the other dogs. The fight between the dogs is over your body, once carefully pampered.

“In the mahaa vaakyam 'that thvam asi', the word 'thvam' should not include this miserable body” is the idea, that Sureswaraachaaryaa is trying to convey.

- भोः - address to the readers / listeners.
- शिरः पादेन आक्रम्य - (One dog) taking possession of the body, by standing on the head of the body,
- भर्त्सयति - threatens
- अपरान् शुनः - other dogs.

Dogs are selfish by nature and hence this reference to them, by Sureswaraachaarya.

- देहम् साधारणम् ध्रुष्ट्वा - Thus seeing your body as common property,
- कस्मात् तत्र सक्तः असि - how do you take a special interest in it?

Even while alive, your body is not totally yours, since, your physical presence is demanded by people around you –family members, employers etc. After your death, the scavenging animals claim your body.

The intention of the teaching is to create a sense of detachment from the body. At the same time, one should not develop hatred, disgust, anger etc., towards the body. Creating a negative attitude, towards the body, is not the aim. Dissociation from the body is necessary; hatred is not.

Vedhaanthaa also warns that the body is Deva aalayaa – auspicious and therefore, to be respected. Saasthraa, in certain contexts, glorify the body; and, in certain other contexts, criticise the body. Though the two teachings are seemingly contradictory, both are correct. To prevent the individual from developing extreme raaghaa for the body, saasthraas criticise the body. But, if, on the other hand, the individual tends to create an aversion – dveshaa – for the body, saasthraas glorify the body.

“Use the body as ‘means’; transcend the body” is the advice of saasthraas, and for this purpose, they aim to neutralise both extreme raaghaa and dveshaa for the body.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 15:

श्रुतिपरिप्रापितः अयम् अर्थः अनात्मा बुद्ध्यादिदेहान्तः इति इदम् आह ।

This point, that everything from the mind down to the body is the non-Self, is proclaimed by the Sruthi also. This is pointed out now:

So far, Sureswaraachaarya gave prathyaksha and anumaana pramaanaas, to establish that the body is only a temporary container of ‘you’ – that, the body is not ‘yourself’. Now, he gives sruthi pramaanam.

- श्रुतिपरिप्रापितः - Vedaas also reveal
- अयं अर्थः - this idea
- बुद्ध्यादि देहान्तः अनात्मा इति - that “ from the mind to the body (everything) is only non-Self”,
- इदं आह - This is being told in the following verse.

Chapter II: Verse 15 –

ब्रुसत्रीहिपलालांशैः बीजं एकम् त्रिधा यथा ।

बुद्धिमांसपुरीषाम्शैः अन्नम् तद्वत् अवस्थितम् ॥ १५ ॥

Food that is taken in, becomes transformed into three parts as the mind, muscle, faeces, just as the self-same seed exists in a threefold form as husk, bran and grain.

Chandoghya Upanishad (in Section V – Chapter VI) describes what happens to the food that is consumed. The Upanishad says that the food has sthoola, sookshma and sookshmathathara constituents.

The sthoola constituent is only the ‘taste’ part, not important at all. The sookshma (subtle) constituent is the part, which caters or contributes to the nourishment of the sthoola sareeram. The sookshmathathara constituent is an even subtler, more invisible part, which caters or contributes to the sookshma sareeram - the character of the individual.

Details are given in the Upanishad. The essence is that, both sthoola and sookshma sareerams are nourished by food only. As modern medicine also holds, any imbalance in chemicals, causes changes in the individual's mind, thinking, talk, behaviour etc.

How can one type of food cause three-fold effects? Sureswaraachaarya gives the example of a seed, which produces three-fold effects.

- एकं बीजं यथा त्रिधा (भवति) - Just as one seed (becomes) three,
- ब्रुसव्रीहिपलालांशैः - the brawn, the grain and the straw,

Brusau - brawn; vreehi: - grain; palaalam - straw.

- तद्वत् - in the same manner,
- अन्नं - the same food,
- अवस्थितम् - will remain as
- बुद्धिमांसपुरीष अंशैः - sookshma sareeram, sthoola sareeram and waste

Since the character and thinking are affected by the type of food consumed, saasthraas prohibit certain specific vegetables like onions, garlic etc. for a serious seeker.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 16 :

यथोक्त अर्थप्रतिपत्तौ सत्यां न रागद्वेषाभ्यां विक्रियते विपश्चित् इति अस्यार्थस्यप्रतिपत्तये धृष्टान्तः।

If this truth is realized, a man of knowledge does not get affected by attachments and hatred. To drive home this implication, an illustration is offered:

Sureswaraachaarya gives more powerful verses – though the motive is good.

- यथोक्त अर्थ प्रतिपत्तौ सत्यां - If the meaning of the previous teaching is understood properly,

Yathoktha – the previous teaching / what has been told; artha – meaning; prathipatthau – knowledge /understanding; sathyaam - if (it) remains.

- विपश्चित् रागद्वेषाभ्यां न विक्रियते - the wise person is not disturbed by raaghaa and dveshaa.

Vipaschith - the wise person (who has the right understanding)

Looking upon the whole universe as one's family is not possible because of abhimaanaa – attachment. Attachment to one's immediate family is a result of one's deha abhimaanaa only. Attachments and hatreds result from deha abhimaanaa and family abhimaanaa. If one gets over the deha abhimaanaa (a very tough task indeed), raagha dveshaas will go away. Nothing can disturb such a person. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya stresses on deha abhimaanaa thyaaga:.

- इति अस्य अर्थस्य प्रतिपत्तये - To teach this idea (that deha abhimaanaa is the cause for raaghaa and dveshaa)
- ध्रुष्टान्तः - this example (is given).

Prathipatthi: - jnaanam / understanding.

Chapter II: Verse 16 –

वर्चस्के संपरित्यक्ते दोषतः च अवधारिते ।

यदि दोषम् वदेत् तस्मै किं तत्र उच्चरितुः भवेत् ॥ १६ ॥

When faeces is excreted and its filthy character is noticed, does that finding anger the person, whose faeces it is?

Sureswaraachaarya says: "The physical body is anna kaaryam; the waste is also anna kaaryam. As long as the anna kaarya varchaskam remains in my body, as an integral part of my body, I do not have dosha darsanam with respect to the waste. I do not see it as pollution – asoucham. But, when the same anna kaarya varchaskam is separated from the body, asoucha buddhi and dosha darsanam (with respect to the waste), result. When others also have dosha darsanam with regard to my varchaskam, I do not feel insulted or offended or disturbed. Should I not extend the same attitude to the other anna kaaryam- my body? When somebody criticizes my body, why should I get disturbed?"

60. Chapter II, Verse 16 to 19 (28-07-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is establishing the point that aathma-anaathma viveka is extremely important. Only then the meaning of the word 'thvam', in the mahaavaakyam will be very clear; i.e. thvam padha artham will never be grasped clearly, unless you have aathma anaathma vivekam. If thvam padha artham is not grasped clearly, mahaavaakyam will not make sense. And, if mahaavaakyam does not make sense, any amount of study of Vedhaanthaa will only be futile.

Expressing the same in the reverse order, if the study of Vedhaanthaa is to be purposeful, mahaavaakyam should be understood properly; to understand mahaavaakyam properly, thvam padha artham should be understood properly; to understand thvam padha artham properly, aathma anaathma vivekam is essential.

Anaathmaa consists of the sthoola, sookshmaadhi sareera thrayam, and, therefore, Sureswaraacharya wants to emphasize the anaathma nischayathvam of sareerathrayam.

The current topic is "sthoola sareera anaathma nischaya:" – "establishing that the physical body is anaathmaa; that, the physical body is not myself".

For this purpose, Sureswaraachaaryaa has been giving various arguments. Some more arguments also will be given by him later. But, in these three verses 16, 17 and 18, the Achaaryaa makes a small diversion – prasangavasaath. What is that diversion? Sureswaraachaarya wants to say "when aathma anaathma viveka vichaaraa is done properly, the primary advantage is that the mahaavaakyam will be clearly understood. Spiritual benefit is the primary benefit of thvam padha vichaaraa or sthoola sareera anaathmathva nischaya: / In addition to this primary benefit, there are some secondary benefits – avaanthara palaani - also".

The Achaaryaa mentions two such secondary benefits here, in these three verses. When the gross body is looked upon as anaathmaa, by an individual, the first avaanthara palan of such an attitude, is the reduction of manovikriyaa - disturbances in the mind – if and when somebody else criticizes the individual's gross body. The second avaanthara palan, is, similarly, reduction of 'anger'. He explains the reasons for the avaanthara palaani as follows: "When the body is separated from myself, the body is no more included in the 'I'. The consequence is, that, I start looking at my body objectively. I see the 'deficiencies' very clearly; (i.e. dosha darsanam results); the further consequence of which, is, that, when I am myself aware of the deficiencies of my gross body, I will not be offended / irritated by others' comments of the dosham."

This may be termed as 'Anya dosha vadane vikriyaa abhaava:' |

To recap: 'Separation of the gross body from 'I' – the sthoola sareera anaathma nischaya buddhi (stage 1) helps in 'dosha darsanam of the sthoola sareeram' (stage 2), which, in turn, helps in vikria abhaava: - freedom from mental disturbances (stage 3).

To make this view clear, Sureswaraacharya gives the example of varchaskam. It is common knowledge that the gross body holds waste matter all the time; but, even though you are aware of this fact, when the fecal matter is within the body, you do not have dosha darsanam. You do not feel polluted; you attend to your Pujaas and other anushtaanaas ; you even visit temples and such other sacred places, without any feeling or fear of polluting them. But, once separation takes place, i.e., the fecal matter is thrown out, dosha darsanam results. You consider the thrown out waste as a pollutant. You are not offended by the dosha darsanam of your fecal matter by others also.

Separation of varchaskam leads to dosha darsanam, which, in turn, leads to vikriyaa abhaava: | Varchaskam is annakaaryam; the gross body is also annakaaryam. Therefore, apply the same three stages – (1) separation (2) dosha darsanam and (3) anya dosha darsane vikriyaa abhaava: - to both. There is one difference, though. In the case of varchaskam, the separation is physical – throwing away or 'visarjanam'. In the case of the gross body, the 'separation' is not physical; it is 'mental'– a change in the mental attitude – 'abhimaana thyaaga:'. Once you do the abhimaana thyaagha:, dosha darsanam takes place and vikriyaa abhaava: results.

The same can be applied to sookshma sareeram also.

- वर्चस्के सम्परित्यक्ते - Once varchaskam is physically separated (stage 1)
- दोषतः च अवधारिते – doshaa (from both hygiene and religious angles) results (stage 2)
- यदि दोषं वदेत् तस्मै - If somebody else talks about the asouchathvam of the
- varchaskam,
- तत्र उच्चरितुः किं भवेत् – in that context, what disturbance results to the 'evacuator' ?
- ('no disturbance results' is the implication . This is stage 3).

Uccharitha - one who has evacuated the waste.

Chapter II: Verse 17 –

तद्वत्सूक्ष्मे तथा स्थूले देहे त्यक्ते विवेकत। :

यदि दोषं वदेत्ताभ्यां किं तत्र विदुषो भवेत् ॥ १७ ॥

In the same way, if the gross and subtle bodies are discarded, as other than the Self, through discrimination and if their defects are noted, can that affect a wise man?

Verse 16 is 'dhrushtaantha sloka:' – covering the upamaanam (varchaskam). Verse 17 is 'dhaashtaantha sloka:' – covering the upameyam (sthoola, sookshma sareeraani). The Achaaryaa says: "apply the same three stages to the sareeraani".

- तद्वत् - Exactly like this,
- स्थूले तथा सूक्ष्मे देहे त्यक्ते - if, with respect to sthoola and sookshma Sareeraas, abhimaanam is given up,
- विवेकतः - through the process of discrimination,

This is stage 1. The second stage, not explicitly mentioned by the Achaaryaa, is 'objective perception' of the sthoola, sookshma sareerani. The deficiencies of the individual's sthoola sareeram – jaraa, vyaadhi, mrithyu, dhu:kha dosha: - and of the individual's sookshma sareeram - the kaama, krodha, lobha, moha, madha, maascharya defects in the mind – will be perceived by the individual himself. Many vaasanaas and samskaaraas of earlier births persist, but, are seen only when abhimaanaa is given up.

Stage 3, is the manovikriyaa abhaava: /

- यदि (अन्यः) ताभ्यां दोषं वदेत् - when (somebody else) talks of the deficiencies of (my) sthoola and sookshma sareeraani,
- तत्र - in that dosha vadanam
- विदुषः - for the wise person (who has separated himself from the sthoola and sookshma sareeraani),
- किं भवेत् - what disturbance will result? ('Nothing will disturb' is the implied meaning).

If somebody criticizes somebody else (in whom I have no abhimaanaa), how does that criticism affect me? Do I react, at all? For an individual, who has given up his abhimaanam for his sthoola, sookshma sareeraani, the situation is exactly the same.

What is the other secondary benefit? It follows in verse 18.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 18 – Chapter II:

एतावद् एव हि' अहं ब्रह्मास्मि 'इति वाक्यार्थ अप्रतिपत्तौ कारणं यदुत बुद्यादौ देहान्ते हि अहं मम इति निस्सन्धिबन्धनः ग्रहः । तदव्यतिरेके हि न कुतश्चित् विभज्यते एकल एव प्रत्यक् आत्मनि अवतिष्ठते इति आह ।

Just this: the delusion concerning adjuncts from mind down to the body of the form 'I am that' and 'That belongs to me', a delusion that fastens itself close, is the cause of non-comprehension of the import of the dictum 'I am Brahman'. If that were to be eradicated, one ceases to be divided from anyone whatever, and abides in the integral inner reality. This is said now:

In this sambhandha gadhyam, Sureswaraachaarya is reminding of the primary benefit once again, before elaborating on the second secondary benefit. What is this primary benefit? He expresses it indirectly as follows: 'Not separating / distancing from the sthoola, sookshma sareeraani is the main obstacle in receiving 'aham brahma asmi' teaching" (i.e. only abhimaana thyaaga: will result in proper grasp of the mahaavaakyam).

- एतावद् एव - This much alone
- वाक्यार्थ अप्रतिपत्तौ कारणं - is the main reason / cause / obstacle for the non-receiving of the meaning of the sentence,

Aprathipatthi: - Non-understanding / non-comprehension / non-reception.

What sentence?

- 'अहं ब्रह्मास्मि' इति - (the mahaavaakyam) that 'I am Brahman'.

When the guru tells you 'you are suddha:', your mind is disturbed (i.e. you are not convinced), since you have the tendency to include your sthoola and sookshma sareeraani, with all their physical and mental impurities, in your concept of 'I'. Only when you distance yourself from your gross and subtle bodies, you can happily see yourself as 'suddha:', which 'suddha:' 'you' always are, but, which fact you are unable to perceive, because of non-distancing or non-separating 'I' from the sthoola, sookshma sareeraani.

What is the 'ethaavadh' referred to, in the text? Sureswaraachaarya explains:

- यदुत्त – which (the obstacle to proper understanding of mahaavaakyam) is
- बुद्ध्यादौ देहान्ते ग्रहः - the abhimaanam in (intimate association with) the entire anaathmaa, beginning with the buddhi to the physical body.

Graha: - abhimaanam / intimate association.

What form of association?

- अहं मम इति - in the form of ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa.

That's why, in the Bhagavdh Githa, Lord Krishna repeatedly exhorts the seeker to be 'nirmama:' and 'nirahamkaara:'; without the elimination of ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa, mahaavaakyam will not be understood.

How strong is the association?

- निस्सन्धिबन्धनः - such intimate connection that the joint is not visible (adjective to graha.)

Nissandhi - without a joint / joint invisible; bandhana: - connection.

The connection between the anaathmaa part and the aathmaa part, in an individual is so intimate that the distinction is not perceived by the individual. This adjective nissandhi bandhana: is used by the Achaaryaa, to highlight the intimacy.

Even as you touch any part of your body with your hand, the tangible part is anaathmaa and the sentiency called 'unarvu' in Tamil, is aathmaa. But, we do not even know where the anaathmaa stops and aathmaa starts. We do not know how to separate them. The separation has to be done to make Vedhaanthic study fruitful.

- तद्व्यतिरेके - When there is separation / when the connection between aathmaa (dehi) and anaathmaa (deham) is eliminated,

Vyathireke - separated / eliminated.

- कुतश्चित् (अहं) न विभज्यते - 'I', the aathmaa is not separate from any other jeeva / 'I' is one and the same in every one.

Kuthaschith – any other jeeva; na vibhajyathe - not separate.

- एकलः एव (वर्तते) - (I see every being) as one aathmaa.

Your body is different from mine; your mind is different from mine. But, when the bodies and minds are set aside, the remaining 'Consciousness' is one and the same in every being (even an ant). Ekaathma nischaya: results, by the 'separation' of the 'Consciousness' from the body-mind complex. There is no feeling of 'isolation' – which is the biggest problem of samsaaraa.

The Bhagavadh Githa – Verse 3 – Ch XIII "Kshekthragnyam chaapi maam viddhi sarvakshethreshu" – " Also understand Kshethragnya to be Myself, obtaining in all bodies" and Verse 29 – "Sarvabhoothastham aathmaanam sarvabhoothaani cha aathmani ekshathe yogayukthaathmaa sarvathra samdharsana:" – "One whose mind is disciplined, perceived the Self in all beings and all beings in the Self. He has the same vision everywhere", are relevant here.

Such a person, i.e. a jnaani, who has separated the gross and subtle bodies from the 'Consciousness', abides in the aathmaa.

- एकलः एव – advaita roopens
- प्रत्यक् आत्मनि अवतिष्ठते - abides in the non-isolated, non-isolatable Aathmaa
- इति आह - This is being said.

The second secondary benefit – 'anger coming down' -, is talked of in the following verse.

Chapter II: Verse 18 –

रिपौ बन्धौ स्वदेहे च सम एकात्म्यं प्रपश्यतः।

विवेकिनः कुतः कोपः स्वदेहे अवयवेषु इव ॥ १८ ॥

How can the discerning seer who sees equally the self-same aathman in the enemy and the kindred and in his own body also, be angry with any one? Can one be angry with parts of his own body? The causes are exactly similar.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "It is common observation that one does not get angry with parts of one's own body. Likewise, once I look at myself as one aathmaa, in which millions of sookshma / sthoola sareeraas are there, I will not get angry with any person, even if the person has any deficiency.

- सम एकात्म्यं प्रपश्यतः विवेकिनः - For a jnaani who sees the uniform Aathmaa
- रिपौ बन्धौ स्वदेहे च - in the enemy, in a relative and in one's own body,
- कुतः कोपः - how can there be anger,
- स्वदेहे अवयवेषु इव - just as (one does not get angry) with one's body and limbs?

You do not get angry with your own limbs. If your teeth bite your tongue accidentally, you do not get angry with your teeth. For a viveki, every one is like his own avayavam. Kopa abhaava: (absence of anger) is the second secondary benefit, vikriyaa abhaava: (absence of mental disturbance) being the first (covered already).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 19:

इतश्चानात्मा देहादिः।

For these further reasons also, the body etc. are not the Self.

- इतश्च - Because of the following reasons also,
- देहादिः अनात्मा – deham etc. are anaathmaa.

First reason given was 'anna kaaryathvaath' – body being a product of food..

Second reason given was 'aagama apaayinathvaath' – the body being of a temporary nature – subject to 'arrival and departure'.

The third and fourth reasons are given in Verse 19.

Chapter II: Verse 19 –

घटादिवच्च द्रुश्यत्वात्तैरेव करणैर्द्रुशेः।

स्वप्ने च अनन्वयात् च ज्ञेयः देहः अनात्मा इति सूत्रिभिः ॥ १९ ॥

Just as the objects admittedly other than the Self, like a jar are objects of perception through the senses, the body is also an object perceived through the same senses. In dreams, the body of the waking state does not persist. Therefore, it may be judged by the wise, as other than the Self.

- घटादिवत् च द्रुश्यत्वात् - Since experienced like a pot etc.,
- द्रुशेः - by the saakshi chaithanyam – the aathmaa,

The physical body is also 'experienced' like any other object; it is an 'object' of experience, while 'I' is the 'subject'. So the 'body' cannot be 'Me'.

- तैः एव करणैः - using the same sense organs (as used for the pot etc.)

The same sense organs which experience the external objects, experience the gross body also – through abda, gandha etc. Therefore, the body is also only anaathmaa;

It can be used only as an instrument.

But, we have the tendency to include the instrument as 'subject'; for instance, when I use a pen for writing, I claim 'I am writing', including the pen in the 'I'. Similarly, though the body is also used only as an instrument, I tend to say 'I am doing this'; but, there is one difference between the pen and the body. In the case of the pen, I am aware that I am not the pen, whereas, in the case of the body, I make the mistake of not being aware of 'I' not being the body.

The fourth reason (for the body being anaathmaa) is given in the 2nd line of the verse. During dreams, a dreamer does not use his physical body for his dream-transactions. He assumes and uses a 'dream-body' for 'dream-transactions'. This is obvious, because, even if the 'dream-body' moves all over in the dream, the dreamer's body remains in bed. The dreamer 'drops' his physical body in the 'jaagrath prapanchaa', enters the dream-world, assumes a 'dream-body' and involves in the 'dream-transactions', similar to changing one's dress.

In essence, my body does not follow me everywhere – to every avasthaa.

'Ananvayathva hethu:' is the technical name given for this 'reasoning'. The Brahadhaaranayaka Upanishad talks of this in detail.

61. Chapter II, Verse 16 to 19 (04-08-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya, in this portion, is dealing with the topic of Anaathma sthoola sareera viveka:. He intends dealing with sareera thraya viveka: (i.e. the establishment of the anaathmathvam of all the three sareeraas) and has first taken up sthoola sareera viveka:. Ultimately, by this viveka:, the saakshi has to be understood as thvam pada lakshyaartha: / Only when the thvam pada lakshyaartha saakshi is identified, that saakshi can be equated to thvam pada lakshyaartha Brahman. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya is giving various arguments to establish that, 'I, the saakshi is not the sthoola sareeraa. Until now, three reasons have been given and in verse 19 (under discussion now) two more reasons are given.

The first reason was given in verse 11 – 'annakaaryathvaath'. The physical body is a product of annam and therefore cannot be aathmaa. The example given was varchaskam.

The second reason was given in verse 12 – 'aadhyanthayo: anaathmathvaath'. Food is anaathma before eating and after excretion. If annam is anaathmaa, before eating as aahaaraa and after excretion as vachaskam, in the interim also, the body, which is a version of annam has to be anaathmaa only.

The third reason, also given in verse 12, is 'aaganthukathvaath' – subject to arrival and departure – arrival at the time of birth and departure at the time of death. Because of this reason also the sthoola sareeram is anaathmaa.

Now, in the 19th verse, the 4th and 5th reasons are given. The first line of the verse refers to the 4th reason, the most popular – 'dhrusyathvaath'. Since the physical body is an object of experience, it has to be different from the subject, exactly like a pot or such other object.

The 5th reason (given in the 2nd line of verse 19) is 'svapne ananvayaath'. The sthoola sareeram does not accompany us during dreams. The dreamer, dropping his physical body in the bed, enters the svapna prapanchaa, creates a special physical body of his own and using the svapna sthoola sareeram experiences the tangible objects of the svapana prapanchaa.

We have one physical body for svapna and another physical body for jaagrath. The jaagrath sareeram does not enter the svapana prapancha and the svapna sareeram does not enter the jaagrath prapanchaa. They are mutually exclusive. This is indicated by the word 'ananvayaath'. 'Anvaya:' means 'accompaniment'; 'ananvaya:' means 'non-accompaniment'.

My jaagrath sthoola sareeram does not accompany me to the svapna prapanchaa. For these reasons,

- देहः अनात्मा इति ज्ञेयः - It should be known that the gross body is anaathmaa,
- सूरिभिः - vivekibhi: /by discriminating people / by discerning people.

The 6th and final reason is given in the following verse.

Sambhandha gadhyam to verse 20:

देहादि कार्य कारण संघात व्यतिरेक अव्यतिरेक अदर्शिनः। उपलभ्यते कार्यम् विरुद्ध एव प्रत्यक्षत :

By simple observation we can study the differences that follow from the immanence and the separation of Self, in relation to the complex aggregate of effects and instruments that is the body etc.:

Sureswaraachaaryaa says that the body is an object of temporary aham abhimaanam, (meaning 'I' identification). How do we know this? He says: "We can experience it directly. When we have abhimaanaa in the body, the body seems to be very, very light. But, when the body goes limp in svapna or sushupthi or coma, i.e. when the aham abhimaanaa is withdrawn, the same body becomes heavy". I can experience this (seeming loss of weight) personally in the svapna avastha, while others will experience this at the time of my maranam. While an individual with aham abhimaanaa is able to carry around the weight of his sthoola sareeram with ease, when he dies, his body has to be carried by four people – chathurbhi: uhyathe | Why this difference? Presence of aham abhimaanaa makes the body light, and absence of aham abhimaanaa makes the body heavy.

From this, a conclusion can be drawn: 'Body is temporary object of aham abhimaanaa and therefore, body is not aham'. 'Aham' enters the body and gets out of the body. The body does not have aham intrinsicness. If aham is intrinsic to the body, the body will always be light. Therefore, body is not aathmaa.

- कार्य कारण संघात - The physical-subtle body complex / body-mind complex, Kaarya – physical body (in this context); kaarana – subtle body (in this context); sangaatha – combination.
- देहादि – in the form of deham etc.,
- व्यतिरेक दर्शिनः - to the abhimaanaa rahitha:
- अव्यतिरेक (दर्शिनः) - to the one without identification
- प्रत्यक्षतः एव विरुद्धकार्यम् उपलभ्यते – the opposite nature is directly experienced

The 'opposite nature', referred to, is lightness of body in 'identification' and 'heaviness of the body' in the lack of identification. This phenomenon can be experienced even in meditation. Suppose you keep your hand on your thigh and gradually withdraw the hand identification – loosen or relax the hand – the hand will become heavier and heavier. Another example: When a baby is carried by the mother, when the baby is awake, it has a certain weight; when the baby goes to sleep and the baby's body becomes limp, the mother finds the baby heavier.

Abhimaana bhaava abhaavayo: viruddha kaaryam upalabhyathe – opposite consequences are experienced when abhimaanaa is present and when abhimaanaa is absent. How? prathyakshatha: - directly.

What are the opposite consequences? : Sureswaraachaarya gives the details in the verse.

Chapter II: Verse 20 –

चतुर्भिः उह्यते यत्तत्सर्वशक्त्या शरीरकम् ।

तूलायते तदेव अहंधियाघ्रातं अचेतसाम् ॥ २० ॥

A body is carried by four persons with all their strength. But the same body is light to a foolish person who lives in it with the sense of identity.

- (इदम्) शरीरकम् - This physical body (when dead) / i.e. the corpse

Use of the word 'sareerakam' is significant. The dead body / corpse has got inferior value – asoucham. To reveal the inferior nature of the dead body the letter 'ka' is used- nindhaarthasya 'ka' prathyaya: /

- चतुर्भिः उह्यते - is carried by four people,
- सर्वशक्त्या – with all their strength.
- तदेव - The same body
- अहं धिया आघ्रातं – enlivened by 'aham abhimaanaa',

'Agraatham' literally means 'smelt by'. In this context, it means flavored by / associated with / enlivened by.

- तूलायते - is light like cotton,
- अचेतसाम् - to the ignorant people ('ignorant' because they have 'aham abhimaanam')

Thoolam – cotton.

The individual, who moves about effortlessly 'carrying' his heavy body, has to be carried by four people with all their strength, when dead. The 'aham dhiyaad' makes all the difference. This proves that the body is an object of temporary 'aham abhimaanaad' and therefore, not the aathmaa.

With this, the 6th argument is also over – 'anithya abhimaana vishayathvaath' – given in verse 20. This is the speciality of Naishkarmya Siddhi – the presentation of six arguments to establish that the gross body cannot be aathmaa. In most other treatises, only one argument is generally presented – 'dhrusyathvaath' (the gross body being an object of experience), the 4th argument in the above group of arguments.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 21:

प्रसिद्धत्वात् प्रकरणार्थ उपसंहाराय आह ।

As this is a familiar matter, the conclusion is sought to be drawn:

Sureswaraachaarya says: "I can give more arguments also; but, since everybody (all vaidikaas) already know that 'I' am not the body, I am confining myself to these six arguments".

All vaidhikaas or philosophies like saamkyaa, yoga, vaisesika etc., accept the fact that the body is not aathmaa.

In fact, even in karma kaandaa, our assumption is 'I' am different from the 'body'. How do we say this? Ans: In karma kaandaa, people perform rituals so that they can get better births in after-lives i.e. they believe in punar-janma, which, in turn, means that they believe in 'survival' after death. But, they also know that their physical bodies, after death, are cremated and therefore, they should know that the 'surviving principle', the aathmaa, is different from the physical body. Thus, even in karma kaandaa, sthoala deha vyathiriktha aathmaa is known.

All other vaidhika darsanams, apart from the Poorva Meemaamsaa and Vedhaantha – like saamkyaa, yoga, nyaaya and vaisesikaa also accept the fact that 'aathmaa is different from the body'. The confusions or differences in opinion are only on (1) whether the aathmaa is one or many (2) whether the aathmaa is kartha-boktha or not (3) whether the aathmaa is anu or mahaan or madhyama etc. Only the Charvaaka philosophy does not accept the concept of a 'soul', punar janma etc. Hence, the six arguments given above by the Achaaryaa, need to be presented only to the Charvaakaa philosophers. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- प्रसिद्धत्वात् - Since known to all the people,

- प्रकरण अर्थः उपसंहाराय - for the purpose of concluding this topic (that aathmaa is different from the sthoola sareeram),
- आह - the following (verse) is said:

Chapter II: Verse 21 –

स्थूलं युक्त्या निरस्य एवं नभसः नीलताम् इव ।

देहं सूक्ष्मं निराकुर्यात् अतः युक्तिभिः आत्मनः ॥ २१ ॥

Thus through reasoning the gross body must be differentiated from the Self as we differentiate blueness from the sky. In a similar fashion the subtle body must also be discriminated by reasoning.

The Achaaryaa here concludes sthoola sareera viveka: and introduces sooksham sareera viveka: |

- एवं स्थूलं निरस्य - Thus negating the sthoola sareeram as anaathmaa,
- युक्त्या - by reasoning (the six arguments given above),

An important example is given.

- नभसः नीलतां इव - like the blueness in the sky (i.e. just as the blueness of the sky is negated, by the knowledge that the sky does not have blueness and therefore, the blueness does not belong to the sky),

Sureswaraachaarya wants to convey a very important lesson by the use of this example. Even after we negate the blueness of the sky intellectually, the 'experience' of the blueness does not go away. The blueness anubhava will continue for me, even if I know that the sky is not blue. Likewise, even when I recognize that my physical body is different from myself, the recognition will not stop physical experience of pains. It has to be clearly understood that Vedhaantha cannot remove my experiential, biological pains, even when I am convinced that I am not the body, that, the pains belong to the body, that, both the body and the pains are only 'objects', whereas 'I' am the 'subject' etc. But, there is a redeeming feature. Going back to the example, even though the blueness 'experience' continues, the experience does not have the power to 'shake' the experiencer's knowledge that the sky is not blue. In the same manner, for a jnaani, even when he has intense pain that cannot be stopped, his knowledge 'I am not the body; the pains belong to the body; they do not belong to me' cannot be challenged by the opposite experience. He will not doubt the validity of the Vedic pramaana. And, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya gives this example.

Vedhaanthic study and assimilation will not help you get rid of biological or physical pains; but, it will change your psychological response to the pains. Sorrow and worry are unintelligent responses to biological pain. Sorrow and worry – otherwise called chint - is rejected by aanthara sanyaasaa, resulting from Vedhaanthic study. 'Claiming 'I am the body', anxiety and special prayers' – CL.A.SP – are avoided by a jnaani. All these messages are conveyed by this example of 'nabhasa: neelathaam iva'.

Having dismissed the sthoala sareeram, the Achaaryaa intends to move on to the negation of the sookshma sareeram.

- अतः - Hereafter,
- देहं सूक्ष्मं निराकुर्यात् - the subtle body is to be discriminated,
- आत्मनः - from the aathmaa (the real 'I'),
- युक्तिभिः - by various reasons.

The negation of the sookshma sareeram is much more difficult. Why? Because, it is more intimate. At the time of svapna, I drop my gross body; but my subtle body continues even in the svapna prapanchaa. So also, even at maranam, while the physical body drops, the sookshma sareeram continues through – janmaath janma, janmana: janma, sareeraath sareeram, the sookshma sareeram travels. Separating it (from the aathmaa) is more difficult, than separating the sthoala sareeram from the aathmaa. Nevertheless, it has to be done.

Having introduced the subject, the Achaaryaa enters sookshma sareera viveka: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 22:

कथं देहं सूक्ष्मं निराकुर्यात् इति । उच्यते ।

How is the subtle body to be distinguished from the Self? On these lines:

Sureswaraachaarya raises the question "how to distinguish the sookshma sareeram – especially the mind – from 'me'?" The mind is so intimate to me, that it appears to be 'me'.

Chapter II: Verse 22 –

अहं ममत्व यत्न इच्छा न आत्मधर्माः क्रुशत्ववत् ।

कर्मत्वेन उपलभ्यत्वात् अपायित्वात् च वस्त्रवत् ॥ २२ ॥

The ego-consciousness, the feeling of mineness, will and desire are not the attributes of the Self. Just as leanness, for example, is not the attribute of the Self, for they are experienced as objective and they are subject to cessation. In the latter respect, they are like the garment one may wear.

Sureswaraachaarya approaches the subject in a particular manner.

He refers to all the attributes of the mind – representing the sookshama sareeram – and, points out that all emotional and intellectual attributes are clearly known and experienced by us. i.e. they are 'objects' of our knowledge. Also, they are subject to arrival and departure also. He argues: "Because they are objects of our knowledge and because they are subject to arrival and departure, they can never belong to 'me'. 'I' can never know 'my' own attributes and therefore, all known attributes must belong to some other entity".

What are those attributes? The Achaaryaa enlists a few of them.

- अहं - The 'I' – ness / sense of 'I' feeling / ahamkaaraa
- ममत्वं - the 'my' – ness / sense of 'my' feeling / mamakaaraa,

Both are attributes experienced by me in the jaagrath and svapana avasthaa. In sushupthi, I do not experience them.

- यत्न - free will / the choice to act / effort at mind level / volition,
- इच्छा – desire etc.

All other emotions like anger, jealousy etc. can also be added to this list.

- न आत्म धर्माः - are not attributes of aathmaa,
- कृशत्ववत् - like leanness (of the gross body)

Krusathvam – leanness, as opposed to sthoopathvam – fatness/obesity. Krusathvam is an attribute belonging to sthoopath sareeram. The Achaarya has already established that the sthoopath sareeram and its attributes are different from the aathmaa. "Leanness or fatness which is experienced by me, is neither 'me', nor belonging to 'me'" has already been shown. The sthoopath sareera dharmaas are, therefore, taken as examples to negate sooksham sareera dharmaas. Both are dhrusya dharmaa: - 'experienced attributes', which do not belong to 'me'.

- कर्मत्वेन उपलभ्यत्वात् - because they are clearly objectified by me,

"What is 'experienced' does not belong to the 'experiencer'".

- अपायित्वात् च – also because they go away, even while I continue to exist.

Apaayithvam - Nature of being subject to departure; apaayin – one who is subject to arrival and departure.

If they are attributes belonging to 'me' or intrinsic to 'me', they should continue as long as I continue. But, they are subject to arrival and departure and therefore, are different from 'me'.

- वस्त्रवत् – similar to the dress you wear and remove.

These are further elaborated.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 23:

- वैधर्म्ये ध्रुष्टान्तः।

To indicate the distinction, an analogy is offered:

- वैधर्म्ये – If you do not accept this important law (that experienced attributes always belong to the experienced objects and never to the experiencer 'subject')
- ध्रुष्टान्तः - the following example is given.

Chapter II: Verse 23 –

न उष्णिमानम् दहति अग्निः स्वरूपत्वात् यथा ज्वलन् ।

तथा एव आत्म आत्मनः विध्यादहं न एव अविशेषतः ॥ २३ ॥

The blazing fire does not burn up its own heat, for heat is its very nature. In the same way, the Self could never objectify the ego etc., if they were constitutive of its very nature.

A counter-example is given by the Achaaryaa.

- यथा - Just as
- अग्निः उष्णिमानं न दहति - fire does not destroy its 'heat' (its own attribute, while it destroys everything else),

Ushnimaanam – 'heat' (attribute of fire), Destruction represents 'objectification'.

Fire cannot burn its own heat faculty / feature.

- ज्वलन् - even when it is burning intensely,
- स्वरूपत्वात् - (this heat) being its own nature,

"Aathmaa can never objectify Consciousness" is the lesson to be drawn by the Achaaryaa. That's why a seeker is always advised: "Never work for experiencing aathmaa; because, if you do try, it will amount to the Consciousness trying to experience Consciousness, which never works. In Vedhantic meditation, after coming to blankness, I have to entertain thoughts 'this blankness itself is illumined by the awareness and the awareness I can never objectify. The blankness-illumining awareness 'I' am- the silence awareness, 'I' am'".

Thereafter you have to change the thought pattern, seeing various features of the 'awareness'. The silence awareness 'I' am (1) is not a part or property of the body (2) is an entity independent of the body (3) is not limited by the body – but is all-pervading (4) not limited by time also and (5) will continue to survive even after the fall of the body etc.

Even the 'all-pervading' nature cannot be 'experienced'. It means only 'entertaining the thought that limitations do not belong to the silence Awareness'. 'Aham nithya:, aham suddha:' – such thoughts are to be entertained. We are not to look for any aathma anubhava – any experience. Even if you get any such experience , ignore that, since that is also only an object of experience, subject to arrival and departure. Entertain the thoughts, centred on 'I' the silent Awareness. The Achaaryaa is developing this portion towards these teachings only.

He says: "Fire cannot destroy (objectify) its own heat; similarly aathmaa cannot objectify its own Consciousness".

तथा एव - in the same manner,

In the same manner, Aathmaa can never objectify itself and its 'Consciousness' also.

62. Chapter II, Verse 23 to 25 (11-08-2007)

As a part of mahaavaakya vichaaraa, Sureswaraachaarya has entered into thvampadha vichaaraa, since thvampadhaa is a part of mahaa vaakyaa. And, as a part of thvampada vichaaraa, he has come to aathma anaathma viveka:, since thvampadhaa is a mixture of aathmaa and anaathmaa. In this course of aathma anaathma viveka:, the Achaaryaa had already rejected sthoala sareeram (in verses up to verse 21).

Now, from verse 22, sookshma sareera viveka: is being discussed. In the sookshma sareeram, the most important component is the mind or antha:karanam. And, Sureswaraachaarya wants to establish that the mind is different from 'me'. 'I' am the observer of the mind; the mind is observed by 'me'. One ('I') is the subject and the other (the mind) is the object and therefore, they cannot be identical. This is what the Achaaryaa wants to establish.

For this purpose, he has entered into an enquiry. He uses a particular, very interesting method of analysis- referring to our experience of our emotions. Every individual intimately and intensely experiences emotions; in fact, the experience of emotions alone is the cause of samsaaraa – experiencing fear, worry, anger etc. This 'emotion-experience' is taken up by the Achaaryaa for analysis. And, for the purpose of this analysis, some fundamental laws, which are derived from tharka saasthraa and commonly known to us, are to be remembered.

The first law: A substance and its attributes can never be physically separated. They are always intimately together. To refer to this intimate connection, Tharka saasthraa uses the technical term samavaaya sambhandha: or avinaa bhaava sambhandha:, Attributes - colour or height or length - cannot independently exist by themselves. The moment any attribute of a substance is separated from the substance, it cannot even exist. The attributes have to rely on the substance for their very existence – they are parathanthraa. "Substance and attributes are inseparable" is the first law.

From this first law, we get the second law as a corollary: "Since a substance and its attributes are inseparable, they must always be experienced together only" i.e. the experience of the substance implies the experience of its attributes; or conversely, the experience of the attributes, implies the experience of the substance. You can never hope to experience the attributes alone without experiencing the substance or the substance alone without experiencing its attributes. "Experience of one (substance or its attributes) presupposes the experience of the other (attributes or substance)" is the second law.

The third law is: "If a substance and its attributes are objects of experience, there must be a subject-experiencer, who is different from both the substance and the attributes".

The fourth law (a corollary of the 3rd): "All the experienced attributes should belong to the experienced substance only – the object and never to the experiencer – subject".

With the help of these four laws or principles, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to establish that "sorrow does not belong to 'me'". Because 'sorrow' is an emotional attribute, i.e. understanding sorrow as an emotional attribute, Sureswaraachaarya establishes "'I' am free from sorrow".

How does he do that?

Using these four principles, first, he takes up 'emotions'. Emotions are experienced by us. 'Emotions' are 'attributes'. Why do you say that 'emotions are attributes' and not substances? Because emotions cannot exist separately by themselves – i.e. they cannot exist independently. Obviously, one cannot 'perceive' any emotion (anger, jealousy etc.) in a physical form. Therefore, emotions are attributes.

Now Sureswaraachaarya argues "emotions are experienced and are attributes of the mind. Therefore, experience of emotional attributes, imply experience of the mind, which is the 'substance' having the 'attributes'; therefore, 'mind', the 'substance' and 'emotions', the 'attributes' are inseparable and both are objects of experience. They are simultaneously experienced by us; therefore, it is proved, that, both are only objects of our experience. Therefore, 'I' am neither the mind nor the emotions; but, 'I' am the observer of the emotional mind."

By 'emotional mind' is meant 'emotion-attributed mental substance'. 'I' am the observer of the emotional mind; therefore, 'I' am different from both mind and emotions; therefore, no emotions belong to me; therefore, sorrow also does not belong to me; therefore, I do not require mokshaa. (Only if I have sorrow, I have to eliminate the sorrow by attaining mokshaa).

This, Sureswaraachaarya implied in verse 22: "Merely watch your sorrow, claiming you are free from sorrow, since you are nithya muktha svaroopaa." All the emotions, he enlisted by using four terms – aham, mamathva, yathna and icchaa. Aham (ahamkaaraa) is a particular type of thought; mamathvam (mamakaaraa) is another type of thought; -yathna (will) is also yet another type of thought and icchaa (raagha.) – attachment- is also another emotion. All the four words represent 'emotion'; Sureswaraachaarya argued that the emotions and mind are respectively, the attributes and substance objectified.

Having said that, now, in the 23rd verse, Sureswaraachaarya is saying "If you do not accept what I say, what will be the problem?" (This portion will be complicated, since it is all 'supposition', which requires a highly imaginative approach.) Sureswaraachaarya said "emotions are the attributes of the mind, which (i.e. the mind) is an object". The poorva pakshi does not accept this; he (especially the nyaaya vaiseshikaa philosopher) vehemently argues "emotions are not the attributes of the mind; they do not belong to the mind; but to 'I' the aathmaa- the observer". If this view is accepted as correct, it will mean, that, aathmaa will become the substance and emotions will become the attributes of the aathmaa substance. A further consequence: "Whenever I experience emotions, it will mean, I the aathmaa is experiencing the emotions, which are my own attributes; which would mean that substance is experiencing its own attributes. This would mean that the substance

Sureswaraachaarya tells the poorva pakshin "In your philosophy, the substance and its attributes will have subject-object relationship". How? Aathmaa will be the substance-experiencer and emotions, the attributes, will become the objects. Substance and attribute will have subject-object relationship, under the poorva pakshin's theory. And Sureswaraachaarya firmly says: "This can never happen. You can study any number of your experiences; you can use any amount or type of logic. Substance and attributes cannot have subject-object relationship." An example to understand this better: "my eye and its white colour, together, is, for me, the 'subject' experiencing the world, and, at the same time, for you, who are looking at me, my eye and its white colour are together an 'object' of experience; whereas, my eye can never look at its own white colour." A substance can never objectify its own attributes. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya's contention is "substance and attributes cannot have subject-object relationship".

Sureswaraachaarya establishes this law with an example (in verse 23) – 'fire' and its attribute, 'heat'. The Achaaryaa says "the fire can burn other objects; but, it cannot burn its own heat. i.e. while, fire can have subject-object relationship with other objects, it cannot have this subject-object relationship with its own attribute, 'heat'."

- यथा अग्निः उष्णिमानं न दहति – Just as fire does not burn its own attribute of 'heat',

Ushnimaanam – heat

- ज्वलन् – even if the fire is a huge conflagration/ however big the fire may be

Fire can burn everything in the universe; but, never its own 'heat'. (If this happens, fire will become cold, which is certainly impossible.)

"I' can never observe my own attributes; therefore, all observed attributes belong to something else. 'I' am free from all attributes" is what the Achaaryaa wants to establish as his final conclusion, by this course of his arguments.

- स्वरूपत्वात् – because it (heat) is its very attribute,
- तथा एव – in the same manner,
- आत्मा अहं न विध्यात् – aathmaa can never know the ahamkaaraa/ aathmaa can never experience emotions

Aham in this verse can be interpreted as raaga-dveshaadhi emotions. If the emotions belong to aathmaa, aathmaa would not have experienced the emotions, just as fire does not burn its own heat.

- Aathmaa – aathmaa, the observer
- Naiva vidhyaath- would never have experienced
- Aham – the emotions
- Aham = aham mamathva yathna icchaa: (from the previous verse)= all emotions.

I would not have experienced the emotions, if the emotions were my own attributes. But, I do experience the emotions intimately. This shows that I am aware of the emotions; that means, I am free from emotions.

Vedhaantha does not give you 'freedom from sorrow'; it only teaches "you never have sorrow, for it to be necessary, to become free from sorrow".

अविशेषतः - if (as the poorva pakshin says) the emotions are attributes of the aathmaa

Sambhandha gadhyam to verse 24:

एकस्यात्मन ग्राहक अहंप्रत्ययग्राह्यत्वात् । प्रत्यवतिष्ठते :मीमांसक श्रुत्वा इति नोपपद्यत सर्वथा :कर्मकर्तृभावः । निवृत्त्यर्थमाह तत् इति आत्मा

The Meemaamsaka, hearing that the Self can never be both the subject and the object, raises his objection. He holds that the self is cognized through the notion of the ego and is also the cognizing Self. That is refuted now: (in the following verse)

Until now, what we have established is "ekasya aathmana: karmakartrubhaava: na upapadyathe" – "One and the same 'I', the aathmaa, the observer, can never be the subject-observer and the object-observed also; and, therefore, 'I' am ever the observer and never the observed."

- एकस्य आत्मनः - " One and the same aathmaa, the saakshi chiathanyam – theobserver Consciousness,
- न उपपद्यते – cannot have
- कर्मकर्तृभावः - both the subject status and the object status

bhaava: - status

Subject-status and object-status, both statuses together, can never be located in one aathmaa, the observer

- सर्वथा – under any circumstances".

That's why, it is repeatedly said "Never work for aathma anubhavam, the experience of aathmaa", since (by this approach) you are trying to make aathmaa, the 'experiencer' and also the 'experienced', which is never possible.

- इति श्रुत्वा – After listening to this Advaita siddhantha: ,
- मीमांसकः - the meemaamsaka philosopher, especially the Paatta Meemaamsaka philosopher,

Just as there are internal sub-divisions as Advaita Vedhaanthee, Visishtadvaita Vedhaanthee and Dvaita Vedhaanthee, in Vedhaanthee, there are sub-divisions among the Meemaamsaka philosophers also. One is Praabhaakara Meemaamsaka, propounded by Prabhaakara Misra: and another as Paata Meemaamsaka, propounded by Kumaarila Patta: Here, the reference is to Paata Meemaamsaka, which challenges our siddhantha by saying "aathmaa can be both the subject and the object and, therefore, there is something called self-cognition, in which Self is the subject and Self is the object".

"Whenever I am talking about myself, it is because I know myself; i.e. I am the 'knower' and I am the 'known' and this is expressed by the word aham; the very fact that people use aham prathyaya, reveals self-cognition. In every aham prathyaya, there is self-cognition and in every self-cognition, I am cognizing myself – which means, that, I am the subject and I am the object also. Therefore, I can enjoy the status of the subject and the status of the object. How do you say that aathmaa cannot have karma karthru bhaava?" questions the meemaamsaka philosopher.

- आत्मा – "The Self,

- अहंप्रत्यय ग्राह्यत्वात् – since it is cognized through the notion of the ego (is an object of cognition)
- ग्राहकः - (and) is also the Subject”.

Graahyathvaath –Since it is an ‘object’ (of cognition) through Aham prathyaya – self cognition / self-knowledge

- इति (मीमांसकः) प्रत्यवतिष्ठते – In this manner, (the paatta meemaamsaka philosopher) is challenging the advaitin
- तत् निवृत्त्यर्थम् – To negate such a challenge or objection,
- आह - the author (Sureswaraachaarya, referring to himself) says the following

Chapter II: Verse 24 –

यत्कर्मको हि यो भावः। यत तत्कर्तृको नासौ :

No idea, which has a particular object, can have that object itself as the subject. Just like the notion of, say, a jar, the notion of the ego cannot have as its object the seer himself.

In any cognition, we require a distinct subject and (a distinct) object. Cognition (knowledge / experience) in Sanskrit is called prathyaya: In this sloka Sureswaraachaarya uses the word bhaava: in the place of prathyaya:, to mean ‘cognition’. Every cognition requires a distinct subject and a distinct object. You can never have an identical subject and object in any particular cognition. This is an universal and unnegatable law. This has to be dwelt upon and assimilated i.e. “every particular cognition requires a distinct subject and a distinct object”; therefore, if there is a self-cognition, you cannot say that “self” is the subject and “self” is the object; in self-cognition also, the subject and object will have to be different. This is what the Achaaryaa wants to convey.

- यो भावः - Every particular cognition
- यत् कर्मकः - which has got a particular object,
- असा - that cognition
- तत् कर्तृकः न (भवति) – cannot have the same object as the subject also (of the cognition), yath karmaka: - yath karma yasya sa: - object (adjective to bhaava:); thath karthruka: - sa: karthaa yasya sa: - subject (also adjective to bhaava:)

எந்த ஞானமானது எந்த வஸ்துவை ‘object’ ஆக உடையதாக இருக்கிறதோ, அந்த ஞானமானது அதே வஸ்துவை ‘subject’ ஆகவும் கொண்டு இருக்காது.

Every particular cognition which has got a particular entity as an object can never have the same entity as the subject also. In other words, every particular cognition should have a distinct subject and a distinct object; applying this law, self-cognition cannot have the same 'self' as the subject and the object. It is impossible.

An example is given. "Pot-cognition", where I am the subject and the pot is the object.

- घटप्रत्यवत् - exactly like 'pot-knowledge'.
- तस्मात् – therefore
- अहं ध्रष्टुकर्मकः न स्यात् – self-cognition can never have 'self' as the object (since 'self' is the subject of the self-cognition)

aham – self-cognition (in this context) – aham prathyaya: ; dhrashtru karamaka: na syaath – can never have the 'self' as the object. Dhrashtaa karma yasya sa: -: dhrashtru karamaka: /

The poorva meemasaka argues further.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 25:

अत्राह प्रत्यक्षेण आत्मनः कर्मकर्तृत्वं अभ्युपगमे तत्पादोपजीविनः अनुमानेन प्रत्यक्षोत्सारणम् अयुक्तम् इति चोध्यम् तत् निराकरणाय प्रत्यक्ष उपन्यासः।

Here it may be objected: Perception reveals the ego as both the subject and the object. The other ways of knowing are subordinate to perception, as they rest on its support. How can they negate the deliverance of perception? To answer this, perception is considered:

The poorva meemasaka challenges the Achaaryaa's contention. He says: "In self-cognition, when I am talking about myself, it is very clear to me, that I am the subject and that I am talking about myself only. In other words, in self-cognition, "that I am the subject and I am the object" is very evident to me; it is the anubhava of every one. Therefore, self-cognition having the self as both the subject and the object is anubhava siddham (prathyaksha pramaana siddham) – direct experience".

On the other hand, the Advaitin says: "In self-cognition, "self" is the subject and cannot be simultaneously the object also." The Meemasaka contends: "Your (the Advaitin's) view is based on anumaana pramaanam, while my principle is based on prathyaksha pramaanam. Between the two pramaanams, prathyaksha pramaanam is upajeevya pramaanam (primary), whereas anumaana pramaanam is upajeevi pramaanam (secondary), because inference (anumaanam) is based on perceptual (prathyaksham) data. Therefore, prathyaksha is more powerful than anumaana and since I have prathyaksha pramaanam in my favour, against the anumaana pramaanam in your favour, you cannot negate my stand".

This objection of the Meemaamsaka has to be answered, which, Sureswaraachaarya does in the verse that follows.

63. Chapter II, Verse 25 and 26 (18-08-2007)

Chapter II: Verse 25 –

यत्र यो द्रुस्यते द्रष्टा तस्यैवासौ गुणो न तु ।

द्रष्टुस्थं द्रुश्यतां यस्मान्नेव इयात् द्रष्टुबोधवत् ॥ २५ ॥

That which is perceived in some locus, is a quality of that locus and not that of the perceiver. What belongs to the perceiver himself is never an object of perception, even as consciousness belonging to the perceiver never becomes the object of perception.

As a part of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa, Sureswaraachaarya has come to thvam padha vichaaraa, otherwise termed jeevaathma vichaaraa and as a part of thvam pada vichaaraa, he has entered into aathma-anaathmaka viveka. Anaathmaa is divided into three parts – sthoola sareeram, sookshma sareeram and kaarana sareeram, and, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya is differentiating each one of the sareerams from aathmaa.

Sthoola sareera viveka has been completed. Now, the Achaaryaa has entered into sookshma sareera viveka. The most important component of sookshma sareeram is the mind and therefore, Sureswaraachaarya is separating the mind from 'myself'. This is 'the toughest nut to crack', because all of us look upon ourselves as our minds only. The very liberation is dependent on breaking this hrudaya granthi – the 'knot' because of which I mistakenly look upon myself as the mind. And, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya is now engaged in establishing "I' am different from the mind". And for this purpose, he is employing a particular argument.

For understanding the argument, certain basic principles are to be remembered. First and foremost principle is: "a substance and its attributes can never be separated". The reason: if they are separated 'attributes' cannot even exist – guna is always dravyaasraya: ('attribute' is dependent on 'object'). This principle has been established in Tharka Saasthram and, therefore, the Achaaryaa assumes this principle for 'granted' (he does not intend to establish this principle here).

Once we know this principle viz., 'subject and attributes cannot be separated', we can come to the second principle: 'since a subject and its attributes are not separable, objectification of one, automatically means the objectification of the other; i.e. if a substance is objectified, its attributes are also objectified and conversely, if the attributes of a substance are objectified, the substance is also objectified'. And, therefore, all the known attributes can belong to only known objects; all experienced attributes can belong to the experienced objects only; and, therefore, no experienced attribute can belong to the 'experiencer', the subject. And, therefore, all the attributes that you talk about do not belong to 'you', including sorrow or fear or worry or anxiety or stress.

Having enunciated the principles, what is the Achaarya's argument? : If you talk about any attribute, it means that the attribute is 'known'. You cannot talk about unknown attribute. In other words, the very fact that you talk about an attribute makes it a 'known' attribute, and it has been seen that the 'known' attribute can belong to a 'known object' only; never to the 'knower-subject'. And, therefore, all the emotions belong to the known sookshma sareeram; the 'known' mamakaaraa and the known ahamkaaraa (the individuality, the 'I' sense) also belong only to the mind or sookshma sareeram.

And, as an extension of this, Sureswaraachaarya said: "If any one of the attributes belongs to 'me', the subject, I can never know or experience that attribute, because to know my own attributes, I have to remain as the subject and the attributes will have to be made the objects; and to make the attributes the objects, I will have to remain here as the 'subject' and the attributes will have to be separated from 'me', to make them as objects, but, unfortunately the attributes cannot be separated from me to objectify and therefore, I can never have any attribute ; if I have any attribute, I can never know it or experience it. Therefore, you have never experienced your attribute and therefore, you have no proof to say that you have got attributes, like samsaarithvam, purushathvam, brahmanathvam, raaghitvam, dveshithvam etc. You have no pramaanam for saying this".

When the Achaarya said this, the poorva pakshi comes up with an argument (in the sambhandha gadhyam to verse 24). He says: "You are saying that attributes belong to the object sookshma sareeram only, based on inference - anumaana pramaanaa. 'That, 'I', the subject, cannot be objectified and my attributes also cannot be objectified and therefore, I can never know or experience myself as an object' is established by you, based on anumaana pramaanam. Whereas, prathyaksha pramaanam proves, that, we all know about ourselves; that, we are able to know about ourselves; that, we are able to have 'self-knowledge' (not the Vedhaanthic self-knowledge; but the conventional self-knowledge – we introduce ourselves to others). That we have 'self-knowledge', in which 'self' is the subject and the 'self' is the object also, is proved by our experience – prathyaksha pramaanam. When prathyaksha proves self-knowledge, anumaana cannot negate the knowledge of the self. Therefore, what you say is wrong; therefore all the emotions are my emotions only. I have the self-knowledge of myself as a samsaaree". (It is interesting to note, that most philosophies try to establish samsaaraa, with the claim that they can only teach the 'means' to get out of the samsaaraa and attain liberation. The Advaithin alone is truthful and says 'you do not require a means for liberation, because you are not a samsaari.' And, he teaches Vedhaantha not as a 'means' for liberation, but, to prove or establish that you do not require liberation.)

The poorva meemaamsaka wants to prove that I am knowing myself as a samsaari, therefore, there is a self-knowledge, in which I am the subject and I am the object also. Therefore, here the poorva pakshaa is: "The self can be both the subject of knowledge and the object of knowledge. And, since the Self can be the object of knowledge, its attributes can also be objects of knowledge. And, therefore, 'I' sense belongs to the aathmaa alone". This contention has to be refuted by Sureswaraachaarya.

What is Sureswaraachaarya's answer? He tells the poorva meemaamsaka: "Certainly anumaanam is weaker than prathyaksham. And, therefore, if you can quote prathyaksham, then, I agree, my anumaanam will be defeated. But, what you talk about, is not real prathyakshaa – but, only prathyaksha aabhaasaa, a seeming prathyakshaa - like rajju-sarpaa. I can boldly negate your stand, since what you claim or think as prathyakshaa is only prathyaksha aabhaasaa. When you talk about self-knowledge, what you are actually objectifying is not the aathmaa but your mind. In the term, 'self-knowledge', the 'self' should be 'I', the subject saakshi – i.e. the real self. But, what you are objectifying is not the saakshi - saakshi is never objectifiable - you are objectifying your own mind, because mind is the object of the saakshi, termed saakshyam. And, that mind is endowed with chidh aabhaasaa and therefore, it is sentient. And, the sentient mind is only an object; but, because of its sentiency, it appears as 'I', the subject. What you are objectifying is the mind with chidhaabhaasa, the pseudo 'I', the ahamkaaraa, while, the subject is the real 'I', which is neither the mind nor the chidhaabhaasa – but, 'I' the chith, am the Self – but, because of the confusions explained above, objectifying the mind, you have mistaken it as objectifying your 'self' and you are calling it 'self-knowledge'. In that (i.e. your objectification), there is no self-knowledge; but, only knowledge of the mind and its attributes".

To convince the poorva meemaamsaka of this, we quote the example of the sthoala sareeram. The poorva meemaamsaka accepts that sthoala sareeram is an object different from one's self and even though sthoala sareeram is the object, when one talks about the attributes of the sthoala sareeram, one does not take them as attributes of the object (sthoala sareeram), but of oneself – for example, if one's body is fat, one does not say "my body is fat", but, says "I am fat". So also the age of an individual; nobody claims "my body is old"; instead claims "I am old" i.e. the biography of the sthoala sareeram is mistaken as the biography of the 'self'. In the same manner, the Achaaryaa points out, the biography of the mind is mistaken as the biography of the 'self' by the poorva meemaamsaka, who quotes this mistakenly as prathyaksha pramaanam, which it is not; but, is prathyaksha aabhaasaa only.

Prathyaksha pramaana, on the other hand, only proves that all the 'known' attributes belong to 'known' objects; and the 'self' or its features can never be objectified. What is the example? The consciousness of the aathma is never objectifiable. Have you ever objectified the consciousness of the aathmaa in any particular experience? No particular experience can objectify consciousness. Similarly, if aathmaa had any other attribute, we would not have experienced it; therefore, all experienced attributes do not belong to aathmaa.

- यत्र यः गुणः द्रुस्यते – Whatever attribute is experienced in whatever locus (substance),

(That attribute belongs to that locus only and never to the experiencer subject)

- द्रष्टा - by the saakshi aathmaa

Ya: guna: - whatever attribute (refers to ahamkaaraa, mamakaaraa, raghaa, dveshaa etc.– mentioned in verse 22 – as aham, mama, yathna, icchaa)

Yathra dhrusyathe – where experienced (the mind or sookshma sareeram)

- असौ (गुणः) - that attribute (aham, mama, yathan, icchaa etc.)
- तस्यैव (भवति) - will belong to that mind or sookshma sareeram only,

The mind or sookshma sareeram is also an object of observation.

The gunas (attributes) can never belong to 'I', the observer.

The Achaaryaa further says: "If, 'I', the observer has any attribute (purely hypothetical – 'I' do not have any attribute) it can never be experienced at any time or place or under any condition. Sarveshu deseshu, sarveshu kaaleshu, sarvaasu avasthaasu – you can never experience. Therefore, you can never prove the attribute of the aathmaa."

- यस्मात् द्रष्टुस्थं – since any attribute which is located in the observer,

'Any' implies 'if, at all, there is an attribute located in the observer'; there can be no such attribute; the argument is only hypothetical. In such a theoretical situation,

- द्रुश्यतां न एव इयात् – can never become an object of your experience,

Any dimension you can talk about does not belong to you. "If you have pain, you will never experience it" Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa points out in his treatise Upadesa Saahasri – Gadhya Baagham, "you are experiencing pain, because you do not have it".

- द्रष्टुबोधवत् – like the 'consciousness' of the observer.

You would have never objectified – seen, heard, touched, smelt- Consciousness, because Consciousness happens to be your very nature.

The conclusion: 'I' do not have any attribute.

This raises a question (which is not intended to be discussed in this context) "How do then Vedhaanthins talk about self-knowledge? How are we supposed to gain aathma jnaanam, if aathmaa is not an object of knowledge?"

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) of Verse 26:

प्रत्यक्षेण एव भवदभिमतस्य प्रत्यक्षस्य आभासीकृतत्वात् सुस्थम् एव अनुमानम् ।

As perception itself falsifies your perception, the reasoning distinguishing the Self from the ego is quite secure.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "I have established that your prathyaksha pramaanam is not real pramaana, but, prathyaksha aabhaasaa only. The 'self-knowledge' you are talking about is a false self-knowledge, in which I am not the subject and the object simultaneously, but, I am the subject and mind is the object. To repeat: Subject and object are not identical. Chaithanyam is the subject and mind is the object. Therefore, there is no prathyakshaa to prove that subject and object are identical.

"And, since your pramaana is prathyaksha aabhaasa, my prathyaksha pramaanaa which is real prathyaksha pramaana proves that subject and object are different only. I always experience that the experienced attributes belong to experienced objects only and never to the experiencer-subject. This is prathyaksha pramaanam.

"And, since your pramaana is only prathyaksha aabhaasaa, not real prathyakshaa – but, pseudo prathyakshaa, you cannot challenge my anumaana pramaanam with your prathyaksha aabhaasa pramaanam. Therefore, my anumaana pramaanam stands unchallenged."

- प्रत्यक्षेण एव – By quoting real prathyaksha itself,
- भवदभिमतस्य प्रत्यक्षस्य – your so-called prathyakshaa,
- आभासीकृतत्वात् - has been falsified by me ; because of this,
- अनुमानम् सुस्थम् एव - my anumaana pramaanam stands unchallenged / safe.

"My anumaanam – Raaghaa, dveshaa, ahamkaaraa, mamakaaraa etc. should belong to the 'known' mind alone; they never belong to me" the Achaaryaa contends. There is also sruthi and smruthi pramaanam for this stand, though Sureswaraachaarya does not quote them in this context. He tries to establish his contention, purely by yukthi – logic. There is a vaakyaa in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – "Kama:, sankalpa:, vichikithsaa, icchaa, dhruthi:, adhruthi: sarvam mana: eva". As for smruthi pramaanam, verse 6 – Ch. XIII of the Bhagavadh Githa declares: "Icchaa dvesha: sukham dhu:kham samghaatha: chethanaa dhruthi: ethath kshethram samaasena savikaaram udhaahrutham" - "desire, hatred, pleasure, pain, the body-mind complex, sentiency, fortitude – all this enumerated above briefly, is Kshethram with its modifications", whereas you are the Kshthragnya: / All the three, sruthi, smruthi and yukthi confirm that " 'I' am free from dhu:kham".

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 26:

अतः तदेव प्रक्रियते । तत्र च विकल्पदूषणाभिधानम् ।

Therefore, the same is supported in another way and alternative formulations of the prima facie view are criticized:

- अतः - Therefore (since my anumaanam is safe and sound),
- तदेव प्रक्रियते - the same subject (anumaanaa topic) is continued with.

Since the 'mind-I' separation is a tough topic, the Achaaryaa wants to elaborate on this.

- तत्र च - In the anumaanam discussion,
- विकल्प दूषणाभिमानम् - I am going to talk about the defects of the poorva pakshaa, by dividing my arguments.

Vikalpa: - division; dhooshanam – picking holes / finding the deficiencies.

Very intricate discussions follow. The same line of analysis is presented in the Upadesa Saahasree of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa - Ch. XVI and XVII. This treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi is heavily based on the Upadesa Saahasree, as indicated earlier also.

Ch. II: Verse 26–

नात्मना न तदंशेन गुणस्वस्थोवगम्यते । :

अभिन्नत्वात्समत्वाच्च निरंशत्वादकर्मतः ॥ २६ ॥ :

A quality residing in the Self is not grasped either by the Self as a whole or by a part of it, for, there is no difference between what grasps and what is grasped, the 'grasper' and the 'grasped' are homogeneous in nature, the Self is not composite and it is not an object.

The Achaaryaa is now making a vikalpa – a 'division'. "Suppose, 'I', the aathmaa, have to know 'my' attributes, how will I know the attributes of aathmaa?" He gives two options. (1) Does the whole aathmaa know its attributes, by objectifying the attributes? OR (2) Does one part of aathmaa see the attributes of the other part – one amsa of the aathmaa know the attributes of the other amsaa?

How does aathmaa know its own attributes, if the Bhaataa Meemaamsaka is talking about aathmaa knowing itself and talking about its attributes?

And, Sureswaraachaarya says both are not possible. If the whole of the aathmaa has to know its attributes, then aathmaa should become the 'subject' and the 'attributes' should become the 'object'. And, if the aathmaa should be the subject and attributes the 'object', you will have to separate them. 'Objectification' requires 'separation' of the object. Unfortunately, the attributes can never be separated and kept in front, for the whole aathmaa, to see the attributes. The first option is thus ruled out.

The second option is now considered. Divide the aathmaa into two parts. One part will objectify the second part and its attributes and vice versa. The Achaaryaa says this is not possible, since aathmaa does not have parts – niramsa:, unlike the gross body, which has parts and therefore, one part can objectify another.

The Achaaryaa goes one step further. Assuming that the aathmaa has two parts, (which is not possible and therefore the argument is purely hypothetical), on what basis would you say, which part is the subject and which part is the object? Both parts are equally chaitanya svaroopam – self effulgent parts. One cannot or need not 'objectify' another; similar to a tube-light, which cannot be divided into two parts, claiming that one part lights up or illumines the other.

- आत्मना - By, the whole Self,
- तदंसेन - or by one part of the Self,
- गुणः स्वस्थः न अवगम्यते – attributes can never be known.

The attribute is neither known by the aathmaa by itself; the attribute is not known by the aathmaa through division also – i.e. neither wholly nor partially can the aathmaa know its attribute. Therefore, you can never prove saguna aathmaa; therefore, it should be remembered, that, in Vedhaanthaa, we never believe in saguna aathmaa and therefore, we never believe in saguna Brahman also. Sagunam Brahman is not acceptable; this statement may give rise to a doubt. In the entire Karma Kaandaa, saguna Brahma Puja and in the entire Upaasanaa Kaandaa, saguna Brahma Upaasanaa are talked about. How do you explain this? Ans: There is no such thing called saguna Brahman at all; but, saguna

Brahman is temporarily accepted, by transferring the mithya attributes of anaathmaa to aathmaa. Sagunam Brahman is only temporarily accepted by falsely transferring the attributes of matter to the Consciousness Brahman, for the purpose of Puja / Upasanaa, hoping, that, ultimately, the seeker will mature for 'de-masking' the saguna Isvara – i.e. understanding, that, in reality, there is only the asabdam, asparsam, aroopam, arasam chaithanyam, which is 'myself' and which is never objectifiable – 'I' am the Truth.

Attributes of the aathmaa can never be known. Why?

- अभिन्नत्वात् - Because there is no subject-object division between aathmaa and its(hypothetical) attributes
- निरंशत्वात् - and, because, there is no division in Consciousness or the aathmaa for one part of the aathmaa to objectify the other,
- समत्वाच्च – and, also because, even if there is a division (purely hypothetical) in the aathmaa, both parts are samam (and therefore, there cannot be a subject-object division)

The example of the light, given earlier, should be remembered. The light example has been cited in the Upadesa Saahasree.

Consciousness is indivisible and therefore, invisible also. You cannot 'see' Consciousness. "Vignyaathaaram are kena vijaaneeyaath?" Yagnyavalkya asks Maithreyi, in Maithreyi Brahmanam – meaning "Who will 'know' the 'knower'?" or "Who will 'experience' the 'experiencer'?" Never work for self-experience; there is no question of self-experience as a particular experience.

अकर्मतः - Therefore, aathmaa is never an object of knowledge.

'Karma', in this context, means 'object' and 'akarma' means 'not an object'.

64. Chapter II, Verse 25 to 28 (25-08-2007)

In these important verses, Sureswaraachaarya establishes, that, aathmaa is ever experienced in the form of 'I', the Conscious principle, all the time and this form of athmaanubhava is universal, available for all. And, this universal Athmaanubhava, we need not work for, at all. Other than this universal aathmaanubhava, there is no other separate and specific aathmaanubhava; a time-bound aathma experience is not all possible. To consolidate : Other than the universal aathmaanubhava, available for everyone, in the form of 'I' , the Conscious principle, for which aathmaanubhava, we need not work at all, there is no separate, specific, special and time-bound aathmanubhava possible for any one, at any time.

And, this is because, aathmaa is never an object of experience; aathmaa does not have two divisions also, for one part of aathmaa to experience the other part. Therefore, aathmaa cannot experience itself at a particular time; other than the universal aathmaanubhava, which everybody has all the time, a separate, specific experience is not possible, because it is not an object of experience, which will come in front of me at a particular time, give an experience for a particular time and disappear from me, for me to lose the aathmaanubhava. All specific and time-bound experiences deal with anaathmaa and only anaathmaa.

And, therefore, in the 26th verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa strongly refuted aathmaanubhava as a specific event, giving the reasons, "abhinnathvaath, samathvaaccha niramsathvaath", (1) abhinnathvaath - because, aathmaa is not an object different from me, for me to experience (2) niramsathvaath – because aathmaa does not have divisions, for one part objectifying the other and (3) samathvaath cha - and, because even if hypothetically you make a division, one part of aathmaa cannot illumine the other part of aathmaa, because, both parts of aathmaa are already self-shining – how can one part illumine the other? It is similar to claiming that one part of a flame illumines the other parts of the flame.

And, from that, the corollary is, that, since aathmaa is not an object of experience, we are not going to experience the attributes of the aathmaa also. Only if aathmaa is going to become an object of experience, then you can experience the attributes of the aathmaa, assuming that the aathmaa has got attributes. To repeat: If aathmaa were an object of experience, at that time, you could have experience of the attributes of the aathmaa also, if aathmaa had any attributes. Since aathmaa is not an object, aathmaa's possible attributes also cannot be the objects; and, therefore, objectified attributes cannot belong to aathmaa. And, since objectified attributes cannot belong to aathmaa, they should belong to anaathmaa and, therefore, ahamkaara, mamakaara, prayathna, icchaa (verse 22) – the 'I' sense, the 'mine' sense, raaghaa, dveshaa, depression, worry etc. – all these objectified attributes belong to the sookshma sareeram, belong to the mind, belong to the kshethram; they do not belong to 'I', the kshetragnya: / Then, what attributes belong to 'me'? 'I' am absolutely attributeless.

This process of enquiry is called "aathma-sookshma sareera viveka:" - "segregating sookshma sareeram and 'myself'" – "segregating emotions and 'myself' and claiming 'I' am emotion-free". And, therefore only, I am sorrow-free and I am ever-free. This sookshma sareera viveka: is the topic, being discussed currently. `

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 27:

न युगपत् न अपि क्रमेण उभयथा च एकस्य धर्मिणः ग्राह्य ग्राहकत्वम् उपपद्यते इति प्रतिपादनाय आह ।

To demonstrate that the same substantive entity cannot be both the cognizer and cognized, either simultaneously or in succession or both ways, the following is stated:

The same idea is elaborated further for more clarity.

- एकस्य धर्मिणः ग्राह्य ग्राहकत्वम् न उपपद्यते – One and the same entity cannot serve as the subject and the object in one cognition or experience.

In a particular cognition, I can be the subject and your body can be the object; and, in another cognition, you can be the subject and my body can be the object. But, there is no one single cognition, in which, one and the same entity can be both the graahakam and graahyam.

Graahakam - 'subject' / 'experiencer' / 'knower' / 'grasper'; graahyam - 'object' / 'experienced' / 'known' / 'grasped'; 'dharmi' means 'entity' and dharma: means 'of the entity'; na upapadyathe - is not possible.

"Graahyam and gaaahakathvam cannot be of one and the same entity" is the direct meaning.

This negation is done in two different ways: it is not possible 'simultaneously' nor sequentially.

- (न) युगपत् (उपपद्यते) – (not) simultaneously (possible)

In one cognition, (at the samaana kaalaa), 'I', the aathmaa becoming the subject and 'I', the aathmaa itself becoming the object, is not possible, because, when aathmaa is the subject, it cannot be the object and when aathmaa is the object, it cannot be the subject. Therefore, ugapath na sambhavathi.

Then the question may be asked: "If it is not possible 'simultaneously', why cannot it be 'sequentially'? Initially, aathmaa will be the subject and later, aathmaa will be the object. Thus, aathmaa will serve as the subject at a particular time, say at 8-00 AM, and a little later, at 8-01 AM, will serve as the object." But, this is also obviously not possible, since, when aathmaa serves as the subject at 8-00 AM, (in the example assumed) there is no object, since aathmaa starts serving as the object only later, at 8-01 AM. At 8-00 AM, for cognition to take place, there is the 'subject' aathmaa, but, there is no object. In the same manner, at 8-01 AM, aathmaa is available as the object; but, there is no subject for the cognition to take place. At no time, are the subject and object available together, for the aathmaa cognition to take place. Therefore, sequentially also aathmaa cannot experience itself.

- न अपि क्रमेण - - nor sequentially also ,
- उभयथा - both ways (i.e. simultaneously or sequentially)

Anybody talking about getting aathma anubhavaa has only had some anaathma anubhavam and has mistaken it as aathma anubhavaa. Extraordinary anubhavaas are possible; but, all extraordinary anubhavaas are only anaathma anubhavaas. Aathma anubhavaa, on the other hand is the most ordinary, universal anubhavaa, which, we always have in the form of 'I am a Conscious entity'. That Consciousness is ever 'experienced'/ ever available for all the people, all the time, referred to as 'self-evidence', 'svayam prakaasathvam', 'saamaanya aathma anubhava:' etc.

- इति प्रतिपादनाय - To establish this,
- आह - the author explains.

Chapter II: Verse 27 –

द्रष्टृत्वेन उपयुक्तत्वात् तदा ऐव स्यात् न द्रश्यता ।

कालान्तरे चेत् द्रश्यत्वं न हि अद्रष्टृकम् इष्यते ॥ २७ ॥

As the Self is taken up wholly in being the cognizer, it cannot fall outside itself and be at the same time, the cognized also. If it becomes the cognized at a different time, the act of that cognition must take place without a subject to cognize.

This idea is clarified.

- द्रष्टृत्वेन उपयुक्तत्वात् तदा ऐव द्रश्यता न स्यात् - In any particular experience, since aathmaa is playing the role as the 'experiencer', in that same experience, simultaneously, aathmaa cannot have the status of 'experienced' / 'object'.

Dhrashtruvam – the role of the 'subject' / 'experiencer'

Upayukthathvaath - since utilized / employed

Thadhaa eva - (vyaakyaanam for ugapath) – simultaneously (i.e. while playing the role of the subject)

Dhrusyathaa na syaath – (aathmaa) cannot have the status of the experienced / object

In any specific experience, aathmaa is already employed as the subject. Since thus aathmaa is already utilized / employed as the subject, it cannot simultaneously serve as the 'experienced' / 'object' also. (It is like wanting to see one's own eyes, when one looks through a telescope or microscope, which, is obviously not a possibility.)

The first line of the verse (27) thus negates ugapath aathma anubhavaa – an aathmaa anubhavaa, in which aathmaa is the subject and the object simultaneously.

What about 'sequential' aathmaa anubhavaa?

Sureswaraachaarya says:

- कालान्तर – At a different time / at a later time,
- द्रश्यत्वं चेत् – if aathmaa becomes the object,

This is a purely hypothetical argument; aathmaa can never become the 'object' at any time – dhruk eva na thu dhrusyathe – but, for argument' sake, suppose we imagine, that aathmaa becomes an object later, what will happen?

- अद्रष्टुकम् (भवति)) - (Will become) 'subject'less.

When the aathmaa becomes the object, then, who will be the 'subject' of the perception of the aathmaa? Subject will not be there. It will become 'adhrashtrukam vijnaanam' - meaning 'a subjectless perception'. Because, when aathmaa becomes the 'object', what can be the 'subject'? There are three possibilities.

Possibility (1): Another part of the aathmaa can become the subject. But, this has been ruled out, in the earlier verse, since aathmaa does not have another part to become the 'subject'.

Possibility (2): Can you say that anaathmaa can become the 'subject', observing the aathmaa? No, anaathmaa cannot become the 'subject' – 'anaathmana: jadathvaath-anaathmaa' being inert. How can jadam objectify chethanam? Thus, the second possibility has to be ruled out.

Possibility (3): Then, why cannot we have another aathmaa objectify the first aathmaa? Aathmaa No. 1 objectifying aathmaa no. 2, similar to one person 'seeing' another and the second person 'seeing' the first? This is also not possible, reasoned as follows: When one person 'sees' another, the first person's aathmaa (chithanyam), through the mind, sees the second person's body only and not the second person's aathmaa and, in the same manner the second person's aathmaa, through his mind, sees only the first person's body and not his aathmaa. Never does one aathmaa see another, aathmana: ekathvaath - since there is only one Consciousness behind all the bodies objectifying all the anaathmaa. (The statement of Lord Krishna, in the Bhagavadh Geetha – "Kshethragnyam chaapi maam viddhi sarva kshethreshu" – "May you understand Me as the Consciousness in all bodies" (Verse 3 – Ch. XIII) is relevant here.) Therefore, one aathmaa objectifying another aathmaa is also not possible.

In a nutshell, (1) aathma amsaa cannot objectify aathmaa, (2) anaathmaa cannot objectify aathmaa and (3) anya: or dveethiya aathmaa also cannot objectify aathmaa. Therefore, there is no specific experience, in which aathmaa becomes the 'object' of your experience. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says (the second half of the verse is being recast into two sentences):

- कालान्तरे द्रुस्यत्वं चेत् (तत्) अद्रष्टुकं (विज्ञानम् भवति) - If, at a later time, aathmaa becomes an 'object', that perception will become 'subject'less perception.
- अद्रष्टुकं न इष्यते - A 'subject'less perception (in which perception, the 'subject' has become the 'object') is not acceptable.

What the Achaaryaa conveys: The 'object'ness of an object is possible, only when there is a 'subject'. (Without the 'subject', the 'object' loses its status of 'object').

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 28:

सन्तु कामं अनात्मधर्मा :मम्त्वादय :यथोक्त न्याय बलात् अनात्मतयैव च तेषु व्यवहारात् अहंरूपस्य तु प्रत्यक् आत्मसंबधितयैव प्रसिद्धे :अहम्ब्रह्मास्मि इति श्रुते :च अनात्मधर्मत्वं अयुक्तं इति चेत् तत् न ।

"Let qualities like 'mineness' be ascribed to the non-Self on the argument stated as they are perceived as non-self. But the 'I' (ego) presents itself as integral to the inner cognizing Self itself. Sruthi also says 'I am Brahman'. As such, to relegate ego to the non-self is untenable" – this argument is rejected as follows:

The poorva pakshi continues his dialogue, making another suggestion- a compromise. What is that compromise? He says: "Among the various attributes enumerated, I am willing to accept most attributes, as belonging to anaathmaa, the mind, the attributes such as raaghaa, dveshaa, yathna and as not to the aathmaa". (It is to be noted, that, in nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosophy, raaghaa, dveshaa etc. are properties or attributes of the aathmaa. This conclusion of the nyaaya-vaisheshikaa philosophers, who are considered to be highly rational thinkers and who also hold Vedas as pramaanam, being aasthikas, may surprise a Vedhaanthin. The poorva pakshi, in this context, is not a nyaaya-vaisheshika philosopher, but a meemaamsaka of a particular school.). The poorva pakshi continues: "Inasmuch as I have conceded on this aspect, that most attributes belong to the mind and not to the aathmaa, I expect you also to make a compromise. I desire to retain one attribute, as belonging to the aathmaa – the attribute ahamkaara: - the 'I' sense or individuality. This is because ahamkaaraa is intimately associated with 'I', the Self. Even mamakaaraa, I am willing to accept as anaathma dharma / sookshma sareera dharma / mano dharma; but, you should accept aham sabda: or aham prathyaya: as the intrinsic nature of aathmaa." The poorva pakshin claims that this is admitted by the Upanishad also, which, after negating everything, teaches "aham brahma asmi". He argues: "Though the sruti statement runs 'Athatha aadeso neti, neti – kama:, sankalpa:, vichikithsaa, sraddha, asraddha, dhruthi:, adhruthi:, hree:, dhe:, adhee: ethath sarvam mana: eva'– sruthi, though, after thus negating everything else, still retains 'aham brahma asmi' – aham, 'I', as different from 'you', the madhyama purushaa and 'he' the prathama purushaa. The 'second person' and the 'third person' are all negated; but 'I', the 'first person' is retained and that 'first person' is the ahamkaaraa. Therefore, that ahamkaaraa is aathma dharma, you have to accept". This is the topic (of the current sambhandha gadhyam).

- सन्तु कामं - As you wish, let them be (i.e. let most of the properties belong to anaathmaa.)

Santhu – Let them be; kaamam – as you wish (an indeclinable word, in this context)

What are the properties (referred to)?

- ममत्वादयः - all the attributes other than ahamkaaraa (referring to verse 22 – among the properties mentioned therein, 'aham, mamathva, yathna, icchaa etc.' - properties other than aham)
- अनात्मधर्मः (सन्तु) - (let them) belong to anaathmaa (i.e. sookshma sareeram or mind),

The poorva pakshin considers this as a compromise / a big concession to the Advaitin. He says to the Advaitin: "I admit your arguments, in favour of that".

- यथोक्त न्याय बलात् – because of the reasons given by you (in verses 26 & 27)

Yathoktha – mentioned (in the previous two verses); nyaaya – reasoning; balam - force/ strength.

- अनात्मतया एव तेषु व्यवहारात् च -- and also since all of them (i.e. all attributes other than ahamkaaraa) are looked at, only as anaathmaa."

An example of the reasoning, behind the attributes being considered anaathmaa: In the word mamathvam, the very word mama indicates that I am claiming them as 'belonging to me', thereby admitting that my 'belongings' are not 'me'. I am the 'possessor'; my belongings are the 'possessed'. My 'belongings' are different from 'me'; the duality is there. This fact reveals the anaathmathvam of mamathvam.

Anaathmathayaa eva – only as objects to be claimed or possessed; thesu vyavahaaraath – they (mama, yathna, iccha etc.) are transacted with / referred to / appreciated / recognized.

Upto this, is the 'compromise' part of the poorva pakshin. What follows is that stand of the poorva pakshin, on which he is not willing to make any compromise.

- अहं रूपस्य तु - On the other hand, the individuality / the 'I' notion / the ahamkaaraa/ the ego,

'Thu' indicates 'unlike those attributes - mamathvaadhaya: - earlier referred to'.

The Vedhaanthin believes that 'ego' is the cause of samsaaraa and therefore, desires to get rid of the 'ego', so as not to be bound by samsaaraa. On the other hand, the poorva pakshin wants to retain 'ego' as an attribute of the Self (as aathma dharma).

- प्रसिद्धे: - as is well known,
- संबन्धितया एव – is intimately associated with
- प्रत्यगात्म - 'I', the innermost Self.

The prasiddhi (awareness) is not only loukika prasiddhi (i.e. well known in the common parlance). It also has saasthra prasiddhi (claims, the poorva pakshin). He says:

- 'अहंब्रह्मास्ति' इति श्रुते: - Sruthi also says 'I am Brahman'.

"Even the upanishad, after negating everything, retains the word aham in the mahaa vaakyam – when it wants to reveal the 'liberating' Brahman. This fact indicates that the 'I' sense, ahamkaaraa, is connected with Brahman. Therefore, Brahman has one attribute – aham" is the poorva pakshin's view.

Because of these two reasons – loukika prasiddhi and the Upanishad Mahaa Vaakyam 'aham Brahma asmi' (Brahadaaranyaka Upanishad – I.iv.10), (the poorva pakshin concludes):

- (अहंरूपस्य) अनात्म धर्मत्वम् अयुक्तं - (Taking ahamkaaraa) as an attribute of anaathmaa / mind is improper.

'Ahamroopasya' / 'ahamkaarasya' is to be supplied; Anaathma dharmathvam – attribute of anaathmaa / mind; ayuktham – is improper.

This is the poorva pakshin's argument. A corollary, according to him, follows: "If ahamkaaraa is not an attribute of the anaathmaa, it has to be the attribute of aathmaa". The result: Aathmaa is saguna: and ahamkaaraa is its attribute.

- इति चेत् तत् न - If you argue like this (Sureswaraachaarya tells the poorva pakshin), it is not so.

His argument is given in the verse that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 28 –

अहंधर्मस्त्वभिन्नः चेत् अहंब्रह्मेति वाक्यतः ।

गौरः अहं इति अनैकान्तः वाक्यं तद्व्यपनेत्रु तत् ॥ २८ ॥

On the authority of the text 'I am Brahma', if the ego is identified with the Self, the same should hold in the case of the idea 'I am fair'. But, the sentence 'I am Brahma' removes that supposition.

- अहंधर्मः अभिन्नः चेत् - If you consider the ahamkaaraa as the attribute belonging to the aathmaa, Abhinna: - aathma abhinna: - 'identical with aathmaa' / one with aathmaa.

- अहंब्रह्मेति वाक्यतः - based on the saasthra prasiddha vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi',

'And also because of loka prasiddhi (universal experience)' – though not explicitly mentioned by Sureswaraachaarya, is to be understood. (When I say 'I', the 'I' is associated with the inner Self)

"Then there is doshaa (in both)" says the Achaaryaa. What is the doshaa?

The Achaaryaa first deals with the doshaa in the loka prasiddhi claim of the poorva pakshin. The poorva pakshin had said: "I use the word 'aham', along with the aathmaa, the Self. Therefore, ahamkaaraa is associated with aathmaa." The Achaaryaa replies: "You are using the word aham with anaathmaa also. If you say ahamkaaraa belongs to the Self, because ahamkaaraa is associated with aathmaa, I will argue that ahamkaaraa belongs to anaathmaa, because you use the word aham with the body also. So, who is right? You do not have conclusive evidence. That the word aham is used in association with the body is also loka prasiddham".

65. Chapter II, Verse 28 to 30 (01-09-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is now continuing with sookshma sareera viveka: | He does this in a particular fashion. First he is taking all the attributes of sookshma sareeram, which are in the form of various emotions like iccha etc. And, he points out that all these emotions are very clearly 'experientable' to us, because we are able to clearly express these emotions. And, if the emotions are 'experientable', they should belong to some substance, which also must be an object of experience, because, without experiencing the substance, you cannot experience the attributes. So, from 'attribute experience' Sureswaraachaarya goes to 'substance experience' – the attributes being 'emotions' and the substance being the sookshma sareeram or the mind. And, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya concludes that all the emotions, as well as, the locus of the emotions, viz., the sookshma sareeram or the mind, must all be 'objects of experience' and therefore, 'I', the 'experiencer', am someone different from the all of them.

While making this statement, Sureswaraachaarya enumerated various attributes of the mind, where he included ahamkaara and mamakaara also, the 'I'- sense and 'my'- sense, which clearly give one an individuality/ an ego/ a crystallized personality. This ahamkaara and mamakaara pair also belongs to the mind or sookshma sareeram only, because it is also clearly experienced and one is able to express it also, in the form of a bio-data.

When the Achaaryaa made these statements, the poorva pakshin is almost convinced; he accepts that most attributes, except ahamkaara, belong to the mind - the sookshma sareeram – and not to the aathmaa. But, he is not able to accept ahamkaara as anaathmaa. He wonders: "How can ahamkaara be categorized as anaathmaa? The very word 'aham' means 'I', the very word 'I' means the Self and the very word 'Self' means aathmaa. Ahamkaara = 'I' = the Self = Aathmaa." Therefore, the poorva pakshin holds that ahamkaara must be accepted as an attribute of aathmaa. He is willing to compromise on even maamkaara being an attribute of the mind – but, not ahamkaara - the 'I' sense. In support of his contention, he gave two pramaanams – (1) loukika prasiddhi and (2) saastreeya prasiddhi. Loukika prasiddhi is the worldly expression "I, myself". One uses these words 'I', 'myself' etc., in which use, there is a saamaanaadhikaranyam between aham and the aathmaa. "This saamaanaadhikaranyam (i.e. usage in apposition – I, myself) indicates ahamkaara is an attribute of aathmaa" claims the poorva pakshin. "And, there is not only loukika prasiddhi; but there is Saastra prasiddhi also, in the well-known mahaa vaakyam of the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad- aham brahma asmi. In that vaakyam, aham and brahma are in saamaanaadhikaranyam, indicating ahamkaara is an integral attribute of Brahman or aathman. And, because of this prasiddhi dvayam, ahamkaara is an attribute of aathmaa" he contends.

Sureswaraachaarya replies : "I cannot accept even your compromised stand (i.e. while conceding that all other attributes other than ahamkaaraa as belonging to anaathmaa, but insisting that ahamkaaraa can only be an attribute of aathmaa), since, neither of the two reasonings given by you, in support of your contention - loukika prasiddhi and saasthra prasiddhi is sound".

The loka prasiddhi argument is first negated by the Achaaryaa, by the statement, "goura: aham ithi anaikaantha:" (2nd line of verse 28). By this statement, the Achaaryaa implies: "worldly expressions cannot be taken as serious supports, because they are quite often 'confused'. The word 'I' is, of course, sometimes, used with the Self, when one says 'I, myself did this' etc. – the ahamkaaraa joining the aathmaa during such occasions; but, on most other occasions ahamkaaraa, the aham, joins the anaathmaa – the sareerams also. For example, in the statement, 'aham goura:' (I am fair), 'aham', obviously, is used to refer to the gross body. The same is true about the mind also; one may say 'I am disturbed' or 'my mind is disturbed', both conveying the same message, but, causing a confusion as to whether the speaker is the 'mind' or 'possessor of the mind'. There is, thus, anaikaantha dosha:, in your argument. Whether ahamkaaraa joins the anaathmaa or the aathmaa can never be conclusively said, based on our worldly expressions, because in worldly expressions, aham is loosely used to mean either aathmaa or anaathmaa".

Anaikaantha: means 'non-conclusive' or 'indefinite'; in technical language, it is called vyabichaara dosha: / Five fallacies in reasoning are enumerated in Tharka saasthraa, called hethvaabhaasaa: / One of the fallacies is called anaikaanthikathvam or vyabichaara dosha: – non-conclusiveness.

- गौर :अहं इति अनेकान्तः - (The statement) 'I am fair' etc. is indicative of non-conclusiveness (with regard to the meaning of aham).

After thus refuting the loukika prasiddhi argument of the poorva pakshin, the Achaaryaa proceeds to negate the second argument, viz., saasthra prasiddhi.

"While clarity or conclusiveness may be found wanting in worldly usages, saasthraa being pramaanam, saasthraa has to be taken as valid. In the saasthraa, 'aham brahma asmi' is a well-known and accepted statement. Therefore, the word aham, referring to ahamkaaraa must be an attribute of Brahman, the Aathmaa" is the second reasoning of the poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraachaarya gives a samkshepa uttharam – a brief answer – to this saasthra prasiddhi argument, in this verse. He elaborates his answer in later verses.

- तत् वाक्यं - That mahaa vaakyam (that you are quoting)
- व्यपनेत्रु (भवति) – (is the) eliminator (of)
- तत् - ahamkaara: |

“This Mahaa vaakyam does not give ahamkaaraa as an attribute of aathmaa; but, on the other hand, is eliminating ahamkaaraa as attribute of aathmaa; it is not an ‘including’ mahaa vaakyam; but, is an ‘excluding’ mahaa vaakyam. It has to be interpreted properly” is the brief answer, given by the Achaaryaa, in this verse. He proceeds to elaborate on this samkshepa uttharam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 28:

कथं वाक्यं तद्व्यपनेत्रु तदिति । उच्यते ।

How does the sentence remove that supposition? As follows:

- कथं तत् - How does this mahaa vaakyam (aham brahma asmi)
- तद्व्यपनेत्रु (भवति) - (become) eliminator/ remover of ahamkaaraa?
- इति - (If) thus (you ask),
- उच्यते - I will explain.

Chapter II: Verse 29 –

य :अयम् स्थाणुः पुमान् एष पुंशिया स्थाणुधी :इव ।

ब्रह्म अस्मि इति धिया अशेषा हि अहंबुद्धिः निवर्त्यते ॥ २९ ॥

When one says ‘this post is a man’, the idea of the post is cancelled by the idea of man. Similarly, the sentence ‘I am Brahman’ sets up the idea that sublates the whole idea of the ‘I’.

Here, Sureswaraachaarya is discussing a technical aspect.

Consider the example of two sentences. Suppose a visitor to a country asks a citizen “who is the king of this country?” and the citizen answers “the king is Raama”. In this reply, both the nouns ‘king’ and ‘Raama’ are in nominative case; there is no proposition at all; both nouns refer to one and the same entity. Such a statement is called a Samaanaadhikaranyam Vaakyam. What is the idea conveyed by this saamaanaadhikaranyam “The king is Raama”? The attribute or status of ‘kingship’ is added to Raama. Raama is an already known person; but, that he is king, is not known and by the saamaanaadhikaranyam vaakyam, the kingship is included in Raama. Therefore, this is an ‘inclusive’ saamaanaadhikaranyam.

Now, consider a second sentence, in a different context, the well-known rajju sarpa context. There is a rope in a dimly lit area and a person mistakes the rope for a snake and in fear, tries to run away. He persuades his companion also to get away. But, the companion points out "the snake that you are seeing, is a rope". In this sentence also, both nouns 'snake' and 'rope' are in nominative case. Similar to the earlier sentence, "The King is Raama", this sentence also is a saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyam. The difference is, in the earlier sentence, the 'kingship' was included in Raama as a status or attribute; but, in the current sentence "the snake is rope", the 'snakeness', a falsely seen attribute, is excluded from the rope. Therefore, though this sentence is also saamaanaadhikaranyam, the intention is 'exclusion' and not 'inclusion'. Thus, saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyams can be of two types – (1) 'inclusive' saamaanaadhikaranyam, otherwise known as eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam and (2) 'exclusive' saamaanaadhikaranyam, known as baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam.

"The king is Raama" is an example of eiyya saamaandhikaranyam, where 'kingship' is added to Raama, while "the snake is rope" is an example of baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam, where 'snakehood' is eliminated from the rope. Therefore, whenever a saamaanaadhikaranya vaakyam is come across, care should be taken to analyse the nature of the saamaanaadhikaranyam. Saasthraas elaborately discuss this subject and enumerate sixteen types of saamaanaadhikaranyam, though, only two types, eiyyam and baadhaayaa are relevant in this context. In the statement, 'pragnyaanam brahma', 'pragnyaanam' is Consciousness and 'brahman' is 'brahman' and in this sentence, the saamaanaadhikaranyam is eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam, because Consciousness is 'included' in Brahman. Sureswaraachaarya says, in the sentence 'aham brahma asmi', the ahamkaaraa or ego, the vaachyaartham (the primary meaning) of the word aham is not included in Brahman, but is excluded and therefore, you cannot take ahamkaaraa as an attribute of Brahman or aathmaa. This statement 'aham brahma asmi' is a baadhaayaa saamaanaadhikaranyam, when you take aham padha vaachyaartham. When you consider the aham padha lakshyaartham, the sentence will become eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam, though, in this portion, the Achaaryaa talks only of the aham padha vaachyaartha, which is ahamkaaraa, in which circumstance, the sentence is baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam.

For baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam, Sureswaraachaarya gives the example of an individual mistaking a person for a post, in a dimly lit area and his companion pointing out to the individual, that, it is a man and not a post. (This is in contrast to the usual example given in Vedhaanthaa, of a post being mistaken for a thief. In the Viveka Chhodaamani also, Adi Sankara uses the well known rajju sarapa example, in the reverse manner – instead of 'mistaking a rope for a snake', 'mistaking a snake for a rope').

- यः - When (the statement is made, that)
- अयं स्थाणुः पुमान् - "This post is a man",
- पुंधिया - through the knowledge of the 'man' (that the post is, in fact, a man),
- स्थाणुधीः निवर्त्यते- the notion of the post is eliminated/ removed.

In the same manner,

- ब्रह्म अस्मि इति धिया - By the knowledge 'aham brahma asmi',

By this knowledge, the ahamkaaraa is not included as an attribute; on the other hand, the Upanishad eliminates ahamkaaraa – the individuality, the ego, the 'I' notion.

- अहं बुद्धिः (निवर्त्यते) – the ahamkaara notion / the individuality/ the ego/ the 'I' sense is eliminated,
- अशेषा - in totality.

"After mahaa vaakyam the 'ego' should not be included in aathmaa – but, must be excluded" is the final idea conveyed by the Achaaryaa. In fact, even the "I am jnaani" sense will go away, as conveyed by the Sruthi vaakyam "Brahmaiva na brahmavith". Because, even the word jnaani is an attribute belonging to the ahamkaaraa, while aathmaa can neither be a jnaani or ajnaani. And, therefore only, a jnaani will not claim to be a jnaani – nor claim to be an ajnaani – but only say "I am 'I'".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 30:

अहंपरिच्छेद व्यावृत्तौ न किञ्चिदव्यावृत्तं द्वैतजातम् अवशिष्यते द्वितीयसंबन्धस्य तन्मूलत्वात् । अत आह ।

When once the determination of oneself as the 'I' is sublated, no quality whatever remains unsublated, for all relation to an 'other' is rooted in that. Therefore, it is said:

The primary point to be noted here, is, that, Sureswaraachaarya has taken the sentence 'aham brahma asmi' as baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam vaakyam. This is an important topic discussed by several Achaaryas in several contexts, whether, 'aham brahma asmi' should be taken as baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam or eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam. The answer: Both are right, but, depending on the meaning of aham. If the primary meaning (vaachyaartham) of the word 'aham', which is 'ahamkaaraa' is given to the word aham, then the sentence 'aham brahma asmi' is baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam, which means, that, 'ahamkaaraa' must be eliminated through the mahaa vaakyam. On the other hand, if the word 'aham' is taken to give its implied meaning (lakshyaartham) of 'saakshi chaithanyam', through baagha thyaaga lakshanaa, 'aham brahma asmi' will become eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam. The mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi', vaachyaarthe sathi baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam bhavathi, lakshyaarthe sathi eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam bhavathi.

Sureswaraachaarya proceeds: "Once you have taken 'aham brahma asmi', as baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam and have eliminated the ahamkaaraa, then all the mamakaaraa also will automatically go". Mamakaaraa means 'relationship with the world'. Sureswaraachaarya says: "This has to automatically go away, when, the individuality, the ahamkaaraa, is eliminated, since, through ahamkaaraa alone, mamakaaraa comes into existence."

Identification with sthoola sareeram and sookshma sareeram as 'I', results in all the attributes of the sthoola and sookshma sareerams becoming 'mine' – 'fatness', 'leanness', raaghaa, dveshaa, family relationships etc., resulting in samsaaraa, further resulting in worry etc. Any worry, in any context, is the result of mamakaaraa, which, is itself, a result of ahamkaaraa. Ahamkaaraa continues because the baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam of the maha vaakyam has not worked and the real meaning of the maha vaakyam has not been grasped and assimilated. It should be realized that ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa do not belong to me, but, to the totality Iswara, and, therefore, there is no need to 'worry'. 'Worrying' is 'trespassing into Iswara's territory'.

- अहंपरिच्छेदव्यावृत्तौ - Once 'aham abimaanaam' (ahamkaaraa) has been eliminated (through 'aham brahma asmi' baadha saamaanaadhikaranya wisdom)

Parichcheda – abhimaana; vyaavrutthau – by elimination.

- न किञ्चित् द्वैत जातम् अव्यावृत्तं अवशिष्यते- Dvaitha jaatham vyaavruttham bhavathi -

Relationship with the entire dualistic universe (mamakaara;) is also eliminated.

Dvaitha jaatham – sarva dvaitha sambhandha: /relationship with every single person or object / sarva mamaakaara; vyaavruttham – elimination.

Sureswaraacharya presents it as "No sambhandha is un-eliminated" meaning "every sambhandha is eliminated".

And, that is the reason, in jnaana yoga, even the triangular format – jagath, jeeva, Iswara - should go, since, in the triangular format the jeeva-Iswara sambhandha: is retained. In prayers, ahamkaaraa is activated, Iswara, as an object, is activated and baktha-Iswara sambhandha is activated. Therefore, a jnaana yogi cannot even pray in crisis. Swami-bhruthya sambhandha is permitted in Karma Yoga, whereas, a Jnaana Yogi should not resort to prayers in crisis; but, to the nidhidyaasanam "I am free from ahamkaaraa; crisis belongs to ahamkaaraa". During crisis, for a Jnaana Yogi, 'Asongoham' is the invocation. He responds with the conviction: "All the crisis belong to ahamkaaraa; ahamkaaraa does not belong to 'me'; it has been eliminated by baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam." Any crisis activates the nidhidyaasanam for a jnaana yogi "Asongoham asongoham sarva karma vimukthoham". The day a seeker takes the vow that thereafter, in a crisis, he will not pray, but, only invoke his asangasvaroopam, he enters the 'binary format' - he becomes a jnaana yogi. Not praying during a crisis is a difficult proposition; but, a jnaana yogi is expected to do just that (i.e. not to resort to prayers to Isvara; but, to resort to nidhidhyaasanam as "asanga: aham"). Isvara comes only when jeeva, the ahamkaaraa comes. (For a jnaana yogi) jeeva-jagath-Isvara is not there. Only 'I', the sathya aathmaa and mithyaa prapanchaa (anaathmaa) are there. (For him) crisis belongs to anaathmaa. The jnaana yogi always remembers "Asangoham". Jnaana Yoga goes with sannyaasa, which is renunciation of prayers (also); if a sannyaasi does a Puja as a ritual, during the time of the Puja, there is the temporary invocation of the triangular format and during the Puja time, the jnaani will thank the Lord for giving the binary format – for the 'knowledge'. Triangular format is temporary for a jnaani, during Pujas or temple visits, when he thanks the Lord for this wisdom (of the binary format) and thereafter, all the time he has the conviction "I am asanga aathmaa; sarvam mayyeva jaatham, mayi sarvam prathistitham, mayi sarvam layam yaathi. Thadh brahma advayam asmi aham". The internal lifestyle of a jnaani is, thus, totally different from that of a karma yogi or a mere karmi.

Reverting back to the text, the Achaaryaa asserts, that, with the elimination of ahamkaaraa, the mamakaaraa should go away. Why?

द्वितीय संबन्धस्य तन्मूलत्वात् - since the root of mamakaaraa is ahamkaaraa.

Dvitheeya sambhandha: - mamakaaraa; thath – ahamkaaraa.

Once ahamkaaraa goes away by baadha samaanaadhikaranyam, mamakaara goes away. Samsaaraa also goes away.

66. Chapter II, Verse 30 to 33 (08-09-2007)

Chapter II: Verse 30 –

निवृत्तायां अहंबुद्धौ ममधी :प्रविलीयते ।

अहंबीजा हि सा सिध्येत् तमो अभावे कुत :फणी ॥ ३० ॥

When the idea of 'I' is removed, the idea of 'mine' dissolves. The latter idea emanates from the I-consciousness. When there is no darkness, how can there be the (illusory) snake?

As a part of thvam pada vichaaraa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is dealing with sookshma sareera aathma viveka. As a part of that, Sureswaraachaaryaa is doing antha: karana-aathma-viveka:, because, antha: karanam is a part of sookshma sareeram. And, as a part of that, the Achaaryaa is doing antha: karana dharma aathma viveka: - "discrimination between the mental properties and aathmaa". To put in other words: as a part of anaathmaa, Sureswaraachaarya has taken sookshma sareeram, as a part of sookshma sareeram he has taken antha: karanam and as a part of antha: karanam he has taken antha: karana dharmaa: or properties. And, Sureswaraachaarya said that all of them are anaathmaa, because, they are all objects of experience and aathmaa is the 'experiencing' Conscious principle.

When all the antha: karana dharmaa: were negated, the poorva pakshin came for a compromise: "we are willing to accept that all the antha: karana dharmaa: are anaathmaa; but, the ahamkaaraa or the 'I' notion or sense – the individuality should not be taken as anaathmaa, because, the very word 'I' refers to I, myself, the ultimate subject". Now, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya has entered into ahamkaara – aathma – viveka: (to refute this stand of the poorva pakshin).

And, Sureswaraachaarya said "you cannot go by worldly experiences, because, in the worldly common parlance, you use the word 'I' for aathmaa also and often we use the word 'I' for the body also; therefore, the worldly usage cannot be taken as conclusive evidence for proving anything; and, therefore, we have to see whether saasthraa gives any support (either for or against)".

The poorva pakshin quoted the saasthric support of the well-known Brahadhaaranyaka vaakyam – "aham brahma asmi" and, he said "in this vaakyam, aham refers to 'I' sense, ahamkaaraa and brahma refers to my original nature, Paramaathmaa or aathmaa. Because of saamaanaadhikaranyaa usage, we come to know that ahamkaaraa is included in Brahman or aathmaa, as an attribute. And, therefore, 'aham brahma asmi' reveals that ahamkaaraa is aathma dharma:"

It is this interpretation of the poorva pakshin that Sureswaraachaaryaa is refuting now; and, the point he conveys is: "in `aham brahma asmi, the saamaanaadhikaranyam used is baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam".

There are four types of saamaanadhikaranyam (as earlier pointed out - also discussed in detail in Brahma Suthra classes, under Suthra no. 3.3.9, "vyaapthe: cha samanjasam").

The four saamaanaadhikaranyams are:

- (1) Upaasanaayaam saamaanaadhikaranyam: in which the idea conveyed, is 'deliberate superimposition for Upaasanaa'. The well known example is 'man is fire' – 'purusho vaa agni:' | This is a typical example of samaanaadhikaranyam, in which 'fire' and 'man' are equated. There cannot be eikyam between man and fire. Here, it is meant for Upaasanaa. The Upanishad says: "May you meditate upon man, as a fire principle – as a part of panchaagni vidhya". (The subject is dealt with, in Chaandhogya Upanishad, Brahadaranyaka Upanishad, Brahma Soothraas and Anuboothi Prakassaa). This "Man is fire" is an example of Upaasanaayaam saamaanaadhikaranyam.
- (2) Baadhaayaam saamaanaadhikaranyam: where two words are used, one negating the other. Sureswaraachaaryaa himself had used this saamaanaadhikaranyam, when he said (in verse 29) "You have mistaken a man for a pillar and somebody points out that the so-called pillar is nothing but a man". Here pillar and man are used in saamaanaadhikaranyam – the 'man-knowledge' negating the 'pillar-notion'. This saamaanaadhikaranyam is, therefore, called 'negation-saamaanaadhikaranyam' or 'baadhaayaam saamaanaadhikaranyam".
- (3) Eikya saamaanaadhikaranyam: is the main one – where two things are equated; otherwise called mukya saamaanaadhikaranyam also, since eikyam is mukyam. The well-known example is 'soyam devadhattha:' – 'that young Devadhatta whom you experienced twenty-five years ago, is the same aged Devadhatta you see now, though physically changed'. "thathvamas" and similar vaakyaas, will come under eikya saamaanaadhikaranyam.
- (4) Viseshana-viseshya bhaave saamaanaadhikaranyam - when an attribute and a substance are mentioned together. The well-known example is 'blue lotus' – 'neelam uthpalam' – where both the words neelam and uthpalam are in nominative case. There is saamaanaadhikaranyam - not in 'eikyam', because 'blue' and 'lotus' are not one and the same, since one is an attribute and the other is the substance. Such a saamaanaadhikaranyam is termed 'viseshana-viseshya bhaave saamaanaadhikaranyam'.

Of these four saamaanaadhikaranyams, in what category would 'aham brahma asmi' fall? Normally, we would take it as eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam; but, in this portion (of the treatise), there is a difference.

The poorva-pakshin takes the vaakyaa as viseshana-viseshya bhaave saamaanaadhikaranyam, aham referring to ahamkaaraa and brahma referring to aathmaa – the statement, thus meaning (according to him) 'ahamkaaraa is the dharma or attribute of aathmaa', just as in the term 'neelam uthpalam', neelam refers to the attribute of uthpalam. This is the interpretation given by the poorva pakshin (vide verse 28).

From verse 29, Sureswaraacharya is refuting the viseshana-viseshya bhaave saamaanaadhikaranyam and is establishing the Advaitin's siddhaanthaa.

In this process of refuting, the Achaaryaa does not categorise the vaakyaa 'aham brahma asmi' as eiyya saamaanaadhikaranyam (as is usually done), but, as baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam (this being a speciality of this text Naishkarmya Siddhi). He takes 'aham' to mean its vaachyaartha – i.e. as ahamkaaraa (as the poorva pakshin does). Ahamkaaraa is mithya and Brahman is sathyam; and, (the Achaaryaa contends) by using baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam, the mithyaa -ahamkaaraa is displaced or negated like negating the sthanubraanthi upon the purushaa. Thus the individuality is a misconception superimposed on Brahman or chaithanyam and through the mahaa vaakyam the individuality-notion is to be negated and the pure chaithanyam alone remains – which is free from prathama purusha: - the first person, second person and third person.

A beautiful verse in Sad-darsanam runs: "Thath yushmathor asmathi samprathishta thasmin vinashtesmathi moola bodhaath thath yushmadhasman mathi varjithaika sthithir jvalanthi sahajaathmanasyaath".

Second person and third person are dependent on the first person, which itself is a misconception; you need not negate the second person and third person separately; it is enough, if you negate the first person ahamkaaraa, since 'thath yushmatho: asmathi samprathishta' – asmath means ahamkaaraa.

- Thasmin vinashte asmathi moolabodhaath – by knowing the aathma chaithanyam, when the ahamkaaraa is negated,

What remains?

- Thath yushmadhasman mathi varjithaa – without the first person, second person and third person

- Aathmana: sahajaasthithi: syaath-That aathmaa is neither 'me', nor 'you' nor 'he'.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says (in the 29th verse) "through baada saamaanaadhikaranyam, ahamkaaraa is eliminated; not included through viseshana-viseshya-bhaavaa."

And, what is the corollary of this understanding? It is given in the 30th sloka: "Once ahamkaaraa is negated, all others are automatically negated, without the need for separately negating them". How? As mentioned in the Sad-darsanam verse above, all the 2nd persons and 3rd persons rest on ahamkaaraa alone. That's why, Shri Ramana Maharshi concentrated on ahamkaara vichaara: | "Ahamayam Kutho bhavathi chinva: ayi pathathyaham nijavicharanam" – "Oh! seeker! For the one who enquires thus 'where from does this 'I' arise?', the I-notion drops. This is self-enquiry" (Verse 19 – Upadesa Saaram of Shri Ramana Maharshi).

This is what is referred to by the Acharyaa. Instead of using the words '2nd person' and '3rd person', Sureswaraachaarya says that all the mamakaaraas are born out of ahamkaaraa only. 'My' father, 'my' mother, 'my' husband, 'my' wife, 'my' company – all the 'mines' are possible only when 'I', the ahamkaaraa is born. What is the proof? In the sushupthi avastha, when the ahamkaaraa is resolved, the mamakaaraa also gets resolved. In jagrath and svapna, ahamkaaraa rises – the mamakaaraa also rises.

This is also said in sad-darsanam: "dhiyaa sahodhethi dhiyaasthamethi lokas thatho deepra vibhaasya esha."| In fact, for ahamkaara vichaara., the ideal granthaa is Sad-darsanam. A very thorough vichaaraa is done in the granthaa.

Reverting to the text,

- अहं बुद्धौ निवृत्तायां - When the 'I' false notion goes away,
- ममधीः - the 'mine' notion (also) / mamakaaraa
- प्रविलीयते - resolves;

When ahamkaaraa goes away, even one's family is negated. That's why, Gowdapaadhaa calls it asparsha yoga: (in Maandookya Kaarika) - 'relationless yoga.' – no more relations, including 'my' Bhagavaan. (When the seeker attains this stage) Bhagavaan is no more an object of mamakaaraa, but remains as the essence of ahamkaaraa – 'I', the saakshi.

The reason for 'mine' notion getting resolved, is given in the second line of the verse.

- सा हि - The mamakaaraa surely (Saa refers to mamadhee.),

- सिध्यते - emanates,
- अहं बीजा – with aham as the seed (kaaranam),

'Ahamkaaraa' is kaaranam and 'mamakaaraa' is kaaryam; 'kaarana naase kaarya naasa.'|

That's why Gowdapaadha said that Advaita Vedhaanthaa is scary to most people, because all relationships are negated by Advaita Vedhaanthaa, whereas it is the nature of human beings to find 'security' in one relationship or other - worldly relationship or relationship with Bhagavaan or relationship with Guru. Visistaadvaitam and dvaitam appear 'safe', because they retain relationship with God. Even in Mokshaa, according to these philosophies, though worldly relationships are dropped, there is lasting relationship with Bhagavaan. Therefore, many people are happy with Visistaadvaitam and Dvaitam, while, to them, Advaitam appears as a 'terrible' philosophy, because, in Mokshaa, it negates all relationships, including relationship with Bhagavaan. Gowdapaadha refers to such people as 'bhayadarsina.' – 'who look upon Advaita Vedhaanthaa as bhayam'. "Kaschith dheera: prathyak aathmaanam eikshathu" – "Only a rare dheera: is able to 'drop' all relationships and 'discover' an aathmaa, which does not require a 'relationship' for security". Relationshipless security is the ultimate goal of Advaita.

"When the kaarana ahamkaaraa goes away, kaarya mamakaaraa also goes away" is the essence. The Achaaryaa explains this with an example; i.e. to establish the principle 'kaarana naase kaarya naasa.', he gives an example.

- तमो अभावे - When the rope ignorance goes away,
- कुतः पणी - where is the snake? (There cannot be a snake)

The Achaaryaa keeps in mind the well-known rope-snake (rajju-sarpa) example. Thamas implies (in this context) rajju ajnaanam. Panee means snake. 'Kutha:' (again, in this context) is not a question; 'where is the snake?' is in the meaning of negation - 'there cannot be a snake'

The 'false' snake is born out ignorance. 'Ignorance' is kaaranam. 'Snake-notion' is kaaryam. Ignorance-naase snake-naasa:; therefore, kaarana naase kaarya naasa:; therefore, ahamkaara naase mamakaara naasa: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 31:

विवक्षित द्रष्टान्तांशजापनाय द्रष्टान्तव्याख्या ।

The analogy is interpreted to bring out the intended point in it:

In the previous sloka, Sureswaraacharya briefly referred to 'ignorance and snake'. Though this is a well-known example known to Advaita Vedhaantha students, he elaborates on the example.

- दुष्टान्त व्याख्या - A brief note on the example (is given in the following verse),

For what purpose?

- दुष्टान्त अर्थ जापनाय - for clarifying the example part (of the previous sloka),

A brief note on the example is given, so that the vivakshitham will be known. Vivakshitham means 'the message to be communicated'.

- विवक्षित - (so that) the message to be communicated (is very clear).

'Mamakaara naasa:' is the original message; to clarify that message, the Acharya clarifies the example given.

Chapter II: Verse 31 –

तमो अभिभूत चित्तः हि रज्ज्वां पश्यति रोषणम् ।

भ्रान्त्या भ्रान्त्या विना तस्मात् न उरगम् स्रजि वीक्षते ॥ ३१ ॥

He whose intelligence is hampered by darkness, sees the snake in the rope in illusion. In the absence of the illusion the snake would not be seen.

This is the well-known rajju-sarpa (rope snake) example explained.

There is a rope lying in semi-darkness (mandha anathakaara:) and is curved also. If the area is brightly lit, there will be no problem, since the rope will be clearly seen for what it is; and, if it is total darkness, the rope will not be seen at all. But, because of the semi-darkness (thama:), the eyes and the mind are stultified (abhibootham); i.e. capacity for clear vision and clear understanding are obstructed.

- तमो अभिभूत चित्तः - A person whose mind (and sense-organ) is overpowered/ obstructed, by darkness ,
- रज्ज्वां रोषणम् पश्यति - perceives a snake in a rope,

Rajju - rope; roshanam - snake (in this context – though the word is not generally used in this meaning).

This is called anvayaa logic, which reveals the co-existence of ignorance and erroneous perception: 'Wherever ignorance exists, error is also there'.

The snake is seen. How?

- भ्रान्त्या - falsely / erroneously.

The word `bhraanthyaad` is used twice. The first `bhraanthyaad` is to be connected to the first line, as `bhraanthyaad pasyath/` – 'erroneously perceives'.

- भ्रान्त्या विना - When the delusion born out of ignorance is not there / goes away,
- तस्मात् - because of that reason (because delusion goes away),
- स्रजि उरगं न वीक्षते - the snake is not seen upon the rope.

Uragam – snake; sraji – upon the rope. (Srak means rope or garland)

This is vyathirekaa logic: 'in the absence of ignorance and delusion, error goes away'.

Ignorance alone is the cause (kaaranam) for error (kaaryam). When kaaranaa goes, kaaryaa also goes away.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 32:

अनन्वया :च न आत्म धर्म अहंकार :।

The ego is not the character of the Self, for it does not attach itself to the Self always.

Now, the previous topic is over. What is the previous topic? "'Aham brahma asmi is baadha saamaanaadhikaranyam and through 'aham brahma asmi', ahamkaaraa is not included in the aathmaa'; on the other hand, ahamkaaraa is eliminated from the aathmaa. When ahamkaaraa goes away, mamakaaraa also goes away; therefore, both ahamkaaraa and mamakaaraa are not attributes of aathmaa' is the previous topic.

Now, the Achaaryaa enters into a new argument. The aim is (still) 'negation of ahamkaaraa from aathmaad'. What is the argument?

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Suppose ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic property of aathmaa (as claimed by the poorva pakshin, who is willing to eliminate all other attributes - raaghaa, dveshaa and even mamakaaraa - but, insists that ahamkaaraa should be accepted as an intrinsic part of aathmaa), in that case, at all times, ahamkaaraa must be associated with aathmaa, similar to heat, the intrinsic nature of fire, being always associated with fire. Then in sushupthi avasthaa also, ahamkaaraa must continue, since aathmaa is eternally there.

Still worse, during mokshaa also, ahamkaaraa will continue. What is the consequence? If during mokshaa, ahamkaaraa continues, samsaaraa being an intrinsic property of ahamkaaraa – because ahamkaaraa is karthaa-bokthaa and has got infinite, inexhaustible sanchitha karma – samsaaraa also will continue; such a mokshaa is meaningless”.

In the sambhandha gadhyam, the Achaaryaa says:

- अनन्वयाः च - Because of non-accompaniment (of ahamkaaraa with aathmaa)

Anvaya: means 'accompaniment'; ananvaya: means 'non-accompaniment'. When (is the non-accompaniment)? During sushupthi and vimukthi – especially during vimukthi /mokshaa. Therefore,

- अनन्वयाः च - Because of non-accompaniment (of ahamkaaraa with aathmaa)

The essence: “In mokshaa, samsaaraa does not continue; therefore, ahamkaaraa does not continue; therefore, ahamkaaraa is not aathmadharmaa”.

This is the brief introduction to Verse 32, which elaborates the argument further.

Chapter II: Verse 32 –

आत्मनः चेत् अहंधर्मः यायात् मुक्तिसुषुप्तयोः।

यतो न अन्वेति तेन अयं अन्यदीयः भवेत् अहम् ॥ ३२ ॥

If the ego characterizes the Self, it must persist in deep sleep and the state of liberation. Since it does not so persist it must be construed as belonging to something alien.

- अहं आत्मनः धर्मः चेत् – Suppose ahamkaaraa is the attribute of aathmaa, Aham – ahamkaaraa; dharma – property / attribute ; aathmana: - of the aathmaa ; cheth – suppose.

Then what will be the tragedy?

- मुक्ति सुषुप्तयोः यायात् - (that ahamkaaraa property) will accompany (the aathmaa) in mokshaa and in sushupthi.

Yaayaath - will accompany/ would have accompanied.

This is a hypothetical situation, visualized by the Achaarayaa. "Ahamkaaraa does not accompany aathmaa in mukthi and sushupthi. It would have accompanied, if ahamkaaraa were an intrinsic attribute of aathmaa" is what he the Achaaryaa conveys.

But, the fact is:

- न अन्वेति - (the individuality – the ahamkaaraa) does not accompany (the aathmaa in sushupthi and moksha:)

Sushupthi is the 'deep sleep' state. In dream, ahamkaaraa is there ; but, in deep sleep state, ahamkaaraa is not there; this absence of ahamkaaraa in deep sleep state, is proved by our own anubhava pramaanam. This has been said in Chaandhogya Upanishad also i.e. sruthi pramaanam is also there for this fact.

In mokshaa also, ahamkaaraa is not there. How do you prove this? "If ahamkaaraa continues in mokshaa, karma also would have continued, samsaaraa also would have continued; it cannot be mokshaa at all".

Na anvethi – (mukthi sushupthayo: ahamkaara: aathmaanam na anvethi) –ahamkaaraa does not accompany aathmaa in mukthi and sushupthi.

- यतः तेन – Because of this reason,
- अयं अहम् अन्यदीयः भवेत् - ahamkaara: can belong to something else (other than aathma) only.

Aham – ahamkaara:; anyadeeya: - something else only. If it cannot belong to aathmaa, it can belong to some other anaathmaa only.

Which anaathmaa does it belong to?

Ans: To the mind or the sookshma sareeram anaathmaa. Therefore, 'I' have no individuality; what self-experience we have in sushupthi is 'our' real nature, while, the self-experience we have in jaagrath and svapnaa is the vesham that we put on - as father, mother, spouse etc. The 'I' of sushupthi is 'my' real nature.

But, we tend to believe that the 'I' of jaagrath is our real nature and what we experience in sushupthi is temporary – we tend to interchange the two – 'fact and faction'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 33:

आत्म धर्मत्व अभ्युगमे अपरिहार्य दोषप्रसक्तिः च ।

If it is regarded as belonging to the Self inherently, unavoidable difficulties issue therefrom.

This is the next argument of the Achaaryaa.

The first argument was "the vaakyaa should be interpreted with baadhayaam saamaanaadhikaranyam". The second argument was "if ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic attribute of aathmaa, in mokshaa also, ahamkaaraa will continue, samsaaraa will continue, in which case mokshaa will not be mokshaa".

Now the Achaaryaa goes to the third argument.

- (अहंकारस्य) आत्म धर्मत्व अभ्युगमे - Suppose you accept ahamkaaraa to be the attribute of aathmaa, abhyugamam – acceptance; 'ahamkaarasya' is to be supplied.
- दोष प्रसक्ति :च - there will also be another doshaa or defect in your interpretation,
- अपरिहार्य - which defect can never be remedied.

Aparihaarya dosham – Unremediable problem.

What is that problem? That is stated in the sloka.

Chapter II: Verse 33 –

यध्यात्मधर्मो अहंकार :नित्यत्वं तस्य बोधवत् ।

नित्यत्वे मोक्षशास्त्राणां वैयर्थ्यं प्राप्नुयात् ध्रुवम् ॥ ३३ ॥

In case the ego inheres in the Self, it will have to be considered eternal like consciousness. If it is eternal, the scriptures preaching liberation would all be futile.

The doshaa that Sureswaraachaaryaa points out is called "moksha saasthra vaiyarthya prasanga:" – "redundancy of all the spiritual scriptures". Vaiyarthyam means 'uselessness/ redundancy'. Prasanga: means 'possibility/ contingency'. "The possibility/ contingency of all the spiritual literature becoming redundant/useless", because, in mokshaa also ahamkaaraa will continue and therefore, samsaaraa also will continue.

67. Chapter II, Verse 33 to 36 (15-09-2007)

Suresvaraachaarya is continuing with thvampadhaartha vichaaraaa, as a part of mahaa vaakya vichaaraa.

Thvampadhaartha vichaaraa consists of aathma anaathma viveka: - separating aathmaa from anaathmaa. Anaathmaa consists of three sareerams – sthoola, sookshma and kaarana sareeraani and, therefore, aathmaa has to be separated from all the three.

In this portion, the Achaaryaa has come to sookshma sareera – aathma viveka: (realization of the distinction between the anaathma sookshma sareeram and aathma).

Within sookshma sareeram, anatha:karanam is a very important component and, therefore, he is doing antha:karana-aathma viveka:

Again, within the antha:karanam, the most important aspect is ahamkaara: - the 'I' sense/ the individuality/ the ego. And, since ahamkaaraa is the most powerful factor and since ahamkaaraa is the cause of samsaaraa, it is very important to separate 'I' the aathmaa from the pseudo 'I', the ahamkaaraa.

It is relevant to note here, that, Ramana Maharishi mainly concentrated on the aathma-ahamkaara viveka: The principle is "once ahamkaaraa is separated, the entire samsaaraa has to collapse", because, ahamkaaraa is the foundation, on which mamakaaraa and all the problems are resting.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya is taking pains to establish that ahamkaaraa is not an integral part of aathmaa. The topic under discussion is "ahamkaara: na aathmadharma."

In these verses, the Achaaryaa is giving a suppositional argument – an abhyupedhya vaadha:

What is that vaadha:? "Suppose we take ahamkaara, the individuality, as an intrinsic nature of aathmaa, what will be the adverse consequences?" Sureswaraachaarya points out "If ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic nature of aathmaa, ahamkaaraa will never go away from aathmaa, at any time, since what is intrinsic, cannot be lost ('what cannot be lost' alone is called 'intrinsic'). Therefore, ahamkaaraa also will become as much nithyam as aathmaa is".

That "aathma is nithyam; mokshaa is nithyam" is a common understanding in all systems of philosophy. And, now, if you say ahamkaaraa is also nithyam, then during mokshaa also, along with aathmaa, ahamkaaraa also will continue. What is the further consequence? Sureswaraachaarya replies "Since samsaaraa is the intrinsic nature of ahamkaaraa, if ahamkaaraa continues, samsaaraa also will continue".

The question may arise: "Why do you say that samsaaraa is an intrinsic nature of ahamkaaraa?" (The Achaaryaa does not discuss this aspect, in this portion; nevertheless, it is relevant). The answer: "Ahamkaaraa means recognition of karthruthvam, which means the individual is still prone to the inexhaustible, infinite sanchitha karma, and therefore, to praarabhdha karma and therefore, to samsaaraa".

Sureswaraachaarya concludes: "If ahamkaaraa pursues you, samsaaraa will also pursue you, wherever you go". An example is that of the crow (as the well-known story goes) which had an eatable in its beak and was, therefore, chased by a number of other crows and when it dropped the eatable, the other crows rushed for the prey, leaving the crow alone, in peace. Drop the ahamkaaraa, comparable to the prey – the samsaaraa crows will not chase you.

"Retaining the ahamkaaraa, one can never gain mokshaa. This would mean that all moksha saasthraas will become futile, if ahamkaaraa is 'my' intrinsic nature and therefore, 'undroppable'" says the Achaaryaa, in this verse.

- अहंकारः यदि आत्मधर्मः (स्यात्) - If ahamkaaraa: is the intrinsic nature of aathmaa,
- तस्य नित्यत्वं (स्यात्) - then, the ahamkaaraa will also be eternal (as aathmaa)

'Thasya' refers to ahamkaaraa:

The Achaaryaa gives an example.

- बोधवत् – similar to chaithanyam (which is the intrinsic nature of aathmaa and as eternal as aathmaa)

If ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic nature of aathmaa, it will also be as eternal as chaithanyam, which is the svaroopam of aathmaa.

Bodha: - svaroopa chaithanyam.

What is the consequence of ahamkaaraa being eternal?

- नित्यत्वे (सति) – If ahamkaaraa is eternal,
- मोक्षशास्त्राणां वैयर्थ्यं प्राप्नुयात् – all the scriptures that preach liberation and guide the seeker to liberation, will become futile,
- ध्रुवम् - certainly.

Vaijathyam – futility; praapnuyaath – will be attained.

Another poorva pakshaa (objection) is raised by the Visishta advaitins and dvaithins, in this context. This aspect is also not discussed by Sureswaraachaarya here; but, some commentators of the treatise, have referred to this poorva paksha vaadha:

This poorva pakshin – visishtaadvaitin / dvaithin - argues: "We have to retain individuality in mokshaa also. If the individuality goes away in mokshaa, such a mokshaa is not attractive. When I, as a seeker of mokshaa, do any spiritual saadhana, it is because I look for results. Therefore, for me to enjoy the moksha palan, the 'I' sense should be there; if it is not there, why should I work for such a mokshaa at all? Since ahamkaaraa is destroyed in Advaita mokshaa, resulting in denial of the moksha palan, working for Advaita mokshaa is itself not desirable. On the other hand, ahamkaaraa should continue in mokshaa and it does continue in our mokshaa – i.e. in Vaikuntaa"

The Advaitin, in reply, says: "At the time of mokshaa, the destruction of ahamkaaraa, is destruction of only the false or pseudo 'I'. The real 'I', 'aham padha lakshyaartha:', will continue. In mokshaa, 'I', the aathmaa, the muktha:, free from ahamkaara and samsaaraa problems, am eternally there, eternally enjoying freedom from samsaaraa. Therefore, ahamkaaraa need not be and will not be there in mokshaa".]

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 34:

स्यात् परिहारः स्वाभाविकधर्मत्व अभ्युपगमे अपि आप्रादिफलवत् इति चेत् तत् न ।

The difficulty may be sought to be solved by supposing, that, though a natural character of the Self, the ego-hood, can be subject to cessation like the passing, though natural qualities of fruits like the mango. It cannot be so:

The poorva pakshin comes up with another suggestion. He says: "Let us grant that ahamkaaraa should go away in mokshaa. But, why cannot I assume that ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic nature of the aathmaa and, that, that intrinsic nature, ahamkaaraa, goes away in mokshaa ? In other words, during samsaara kaalam, ahamkaaraa will be there, while during moksha kaalam, it goes away. I will give you examples of the intrinsic natures/properties 'going away'. As in the case of those examples, in the case of aathmaa also, ahamkaaraa, will go away during mokshaa. So we will consider ahamkaaraa as an intrinsic nature of aathmaa".

- स्वाभाविक धर्मत्व अभ्युपगमे अपि - (The poorva pakshin says) Even after accepting ahamkaaraa as the intrinsic (not incidental adhyaasaa) nature of aathmaa,
- परिहारः स्यात् - there is an answer to your (the advaitin's) question/objection.

The advaitin had said: "If ahamkaaraa is intrinsic to aathma, it will continue in mokshaa also". The poorva pakshin responds: "Even if ahamkaaraa is intrinsic, it will go away".

"Parihaara:" can be interpreted in two ways:

- (1) As 'answer/remedy to your question' and
- (2) As 'remover of / remedy to ahamkaara:' (ahamkaarasya apavaadha:)

The poorva pakshin gives the example of fruits.

आम्रादिफलवत् - similar to fruits like the mango.

A raw mango has certain qualities. It produces a particular noise when tapped, is hard to the touch, green in colour, has a particular taste and a particular smell. These - sabda, sparsa, roopa, rasa, gandhaani – are intrinsic to the mango i.e. the substance and the properties are inseparable. But, in the same mango, when it ripens, all the properties – the colour, smell, texture, taste etc.- change. i.e. the intrinsic properties of the raw mango gave way to other intrinsic properties of the ripe mango, the substance, mango, being the same. From this, a general rule may be arrived at: svaabhaavika dharmasya api parithyaagha: sambhavathy.

The poorva pakshin argues "the samsaari aathmaa is like the raw mango, with the ahamkaara dharma present as intrinsic property, while in the moksha avasthaa, like the ripe mango, drops the ahamkaara dharma, the mamakaara dharma and the samsaaraa".

- इति चेत् - If the poorva pakshin gives such an argument,
- तत् न - that argument will not work.

Verse 34 – Chapter II:

आम्रादे :परिणामित्वात् गुणहानि :गुणान्तरै :।
अविकारि तु तद्ब्रह्म" न हि द्रष्टु "ःइति श्रुते :॥ ३४ ॥

The fruits like the mango are subject to change and hence the taste of one condition may be replaced by other tastes in other conditions. But Brahman is unchanging and the sruthi says 'the seer's seeing is inextinguishable' (B.U.IV.iii.23).

Sureswaraachaarya explains why: "If a substance has got an intrinsic property and if that property is dropped and is replaced by another intrinsic property, it means, that the substance itself is undergoing a change. To repeat: if a substance has a particular intrinsic property at any given time and the intrinsic property is replaced by some other intrinsic property at some other time, it means that the substance itself is undergoing change." And Sureswaraachaarya gives the rule: "Any substance that loses its original intrinsic property and gains a new intrinsic property is a 'changing substance' – a parinami dhravyam na thu kootastha dhravyam".

And, extending this Rule, if ahamkaara is an intrinsic property of aathma, and, if aathma enjoys or possesses this intrinsic property at some time and, at another time, loses this intrinsic property and gains some other property, replacing the previous property, that would mean aathma itself is a parinaami - a changing substance acquiring and losing properties.

But, all the scriptures uniformly say that aathma is nirvikaara: / "Avyakthoyam achinthyoyam avikaryoyam uchyathe - nithya: sarvagatha: sthaanu: achaloyam sanaathana." – "This Self is unmanifest, inconceivable and unchangeable – is eternal, all-pervading, changeless, immovable and unborn" declares the Bhagavadh Githa (verse 25 & 24 – Ch. II). So also do all the Upanishads declare that aathma is nirvikaara: / And, that's why we do not look upon consciousness (chaithanyam) as a changing property of aathma; we say, that, consciousness is the very nature of aathma; in fact consciousness is aathma.

- आम्रादे :परिणामित्वात् - Because of the changing nature of fruits like the mango,
- गुण हानि) :भवति (- losing of intrinsic property (is possible),
- गुणान्तरैः - (caused) by the arrival of new properties / by new properties replacing old properties / by a fresh set of properties.

This is similar to the human body which constantly acquires new sets of properties replacing old sets of properties, because of which nature, the body is considered a parinami dhravyam. If aathma also is of a similar nature – acquiring new properties and dropping old properties – it will also be a parinami dhravyam.

Whereas:

- तद्ब्रह्म - The Brahman we are talking about
- अविकारि (अस्ति) – is free from all forms of change.

What is the pramaanam for this?

"न हि द्रष्टु "ःइति श्रुतेः - Based on the well-known Brahadharanyaka Upanishad Vaakyam (Ch. IV – Sec 3: svayamjothi braahmanam- manthra 23)

The relevant portion of the quoted manthraa runs: "na hi dhrashtu: dhrushte: viparilopa: vidhyathe avinaasithvaath". In this manthraa, "dhrashtu:" means "aathmana:" (not ahamkaarasya) and "dhrushte:" means "of the Consciousness". The essence of the manthraa is: "Consciousness of the Witness aathmaa, is never lost at any time. Even in sushupthi avasthaa and even in videha mukthi, aathmaa is endowed with Consciousness".

The nature of aathmaa is consciousness; it is not a losable property; it is the very nature of aathmaa. Since thus (1) aathmaa does not lose the consciousness, (2) consciousness is not the property of aathmaa and (3) it is not lost also, aathmaa does not undergo any change.

In the case of the body, changes do occur; the chethana sareeram will become achethana sareeram. Such a change cannot happen to aathmaa – it is nirvikaara:; it is ever chethana vasthu ; in fact, it is chaithanya aathmaa.

While the Aachaaryaa has quoted this particular Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad manthraa to reinforce this view, the Bhagavadh Githa Sloka (quoted above) "avikarya: ayam" and the Katopanishad manthraa (I.ii.18) "na jaayathe mriyathe vaa vipaschith na ayam kutha:chith na babhoova kaschith ajo nithya: saasvatha: ayam puraana: na hanyathe hanyamane sareere" – "This omniscient one (the Self) does not originate or die. It did not originate from anything. It did not become anything. It is birthless, deathless, decayless and growthless. It is not afflicted when the body is afflicted", are equally powerful. More such Upanishadic manthraas can also be quoted.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 35:

अहंकारस्य च आगमापायित्वात् धर्मिणः च अनित्यत्वं प्राप्नोति ।

Since the ego appears and disappears, the Self in which in which it is supposed to inhere, would not be eternal:

The same idea is clarified further. If you look upon aathmaa as something with changing properties, similar to a mango, whose properties (like colour etc.) in a raw stage, change to other properties, when it ripens, what will be the consequence? It is elucidated.

अहंकारस्य आगमापायित्वात् - Since (if, as the poorva pakshin claims) ahamkaaraa is subject to arrival and departure,

In sushupthi avasthaa, ahamkaaraa goes away. This need not be proved by sruthi, since every one knows this, by personal experience. Nevertheless, there is sruthi pramaanam for this fact also. Chandhogya Upanishad (in verse 2 – Section 11 – Chapter VIII) states, that, in sushupthi, nobody has a sense of aham. That's why, in sushupthi avasthaa, mamakaaram

and samsaara also are not there. The conclusion: Ahamkaara: jagrath avasthaayaam aagachhathi; sushupthi avasthaayaam apagachhathi |

Aagama – arrival; apaayee – departing (apaaya: - departure)

- तत् धर्मिणः च - the substance on which the arriving & departing ahamkaara property is resting (i.e. the aathmaa), will also be subject to change.

Can you say that aathmaa has changing properties? Visishtaadvaita and advaita do look upon aathmaa, as acquiring new properties while attaining mokshaa, such as sathya kaama:, sathya sankalpa: etc. But, Sureswraachaarya points out, that once you accept vikaara: (change), aathmaa will also be subject to the six types of modifications (asthi, jaayathe, vardhathe, viparinamathe, apaksheeyathe and vinasyathi) including vinaasam.

- अनित्यत्वम् (च) प्राप्नोति - (aathmaa) will (also) become perishable.

On the other hand, sruthis say "aathmaa nithya:".

This is further explained in the verse 35.

Verse 35 – Chapter II :

आगमापायि निष्ठत्वात् अनित्यत्वं यात् ध्रुसिः।

उपयन् अपयन् धर्मः विकरोति हि धर्मिणम् ॥ ३५ ॥

Consciousness, if it contains what comes into being and goes out of being, would not be eternal. A quality, if it could arise and cease to be its substratum, would infect the latter with change.

- ध्रुसिः : अनित्यत्वं यात् - Aathmaa, the substance, will be subject to mortality/ finitude/ impermanence,

Dhrusi: - means "chaithanya svaroopaa aathmaa".

When will aathmaa be subject to finitude? If aathmaa is a substance possessing the temporary ahamkaara. Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- आगमापायि निष्ठत्वात् - because it (the aathmaa) is the possessor of the arriving and departing attribute of ahamkaara (according to the poorva pakshin)

Nishtaa - means "aasraya:"// possessor.

We do not look upon chaithanyam (consciousness) as an 'arriving and departing' property of aathmaa. If consciousness is an 'arriving & departing' property of aathmaa, then aathmaa will also become a changing substance.

Sureswaraachaarya gives the law: "Any substance which has properties subject to arrival and departure, is perishable".

Sureswaraachaarya says this, in the 2nd line of the verse, which is a very important statement quoted very often: "upayan apayan dharma: vikarothi hi dharminam".

This is a very important law, because, in all systems of philosophy, a very crucial and subtle topic is discussed: "What is the relationship between aathmaa and consciousness?"

All the 12 darsanaas – the 6 naasthika darsanaas and the 6 aasthika darsanaas – talk about the relationship between 'I' and 'consciousness'. They have different theories, but, many of them conclude "Consciousness is a property".

But Advaita differs; and argues: "Once consciousness is considered a property, the upayan-apayan problems will arise. Therefore, aathmaa is not having the property of chaithnyam. It is chaithanyam itself".

All the discussions are based on this very important law (in the 2nd line of verse 35).

- धर्मः - Any property / attribute,

(Nyaaya saasthraa talks of 24 attributes, in which, they include 'consciousness' as a property of 'matter'. Adhvaithaa opposes this vehemently, in all Vedhaanthic scriptures.)

- उपयन् अपयन् – which is subject to arrival and departure,

Upayan – arriving property; apayan – departing property.

- धर्मिणम् विकरोति - modifies the substance, which is the locus of the attribute.

"An arriving and departing attribute will modify the locus of the attribute" is the essence. It follows, that, if chaithanyam is an arriving & departing property of aathmaa, then, aathmaa will be subject to changes, including death.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 36:

अस्तु अनित्यत्वम् कम् उपालभेमहि प्रमाण उपपन्नत्वात् इति चेत् न ।

Let the Self be non-eternal. Whom can we reproach about it, if it is a hard fact, established by unimpeachable evidence? This is not so:

The poorva pakshin says: "Let it be so; i.e. let aathmaa be non-eternal".

"Dropping of ahamkaaraa results in death" is a very common misconception.

All sources of pain are also sources of joy. So is ahamkaaraa and it is very difficult to drop ahamkaaraa, since, though it is the cause of samsaaraa, it also enables the individual to enjoy pleasures, including svarga.

The poorva pakshin, therefore, wants to maintain that ahamkaaraa as an intrinsic property of aathmaa, even if it means that aathmaa will become non-eternal.

68. Chapter II, Verse 36 and 37 (22-09-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is establishing that ahamkaaraa, the individuality, can be an attribute of only anaathmaa, the antha:karanam and that, ahamkaaraa cannot be the intrinsic attribute of aathmaa. If ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic attribute of aathmaa, then, even during mukthi, along with aathmaa, the ahamkaaraa also will continue; and, if ahamkaaraa continues, karma will continue; then, samsaaraa also will continue. Therefore, ahamkaaraa should not be an intrinsic attribute of aathmaa.

For this, the poorva pakshin gave a suggestion: "Why cannot we assume that, ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic attribute of aathmaa; but, at the time of mokshaa, the aathmaa loses ahamkaaraa, even though it is an intrinsic attribute? This is very much possible, since, for example, in a mango or any other fruit, during raw condition, it has a particular set of attributes like colour, taste etc, but, when the fruit ripens, that set of intrinsic attributes are lost; but, is replaced by a new set of intrinsic, inseparable attributes. Why cannot the aathmaa be like this, losing the ahamkaaraa attribute, during mokshaa?"

Sureswaraachaarya answers this doubt in the 35th verse: "If ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic attribute and is lost at the time of mokshaa, as in the case of a mango ripening, then there will be a new problem. Whenever a substance loses its intrinsic attribute, then the substance itself undergoes change; because, any intrinsic attribute cannot arrive at and depart from a substance, without making a change in the substance. If it is an incidental or superimposed attribute, it will not bring about a change in the substance; but, if it is an intrinsic attribute, which comes to the substance and goes away from the substance, then the substance itself will undergo a change, just as the mango itself undergoes a change, when it ripens. Similarly, if aathmaa is having ahamkaaraa now, but, loses it, at the time of mokshaa, then it will mean that aathmaa itself is subject to change". Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa gave an important law "upayan apayan dharma: vikarothi hi dharminam" – "Any property/attribute, subject to arrival and departure, will modify the substance, which is the locus of the attribute".

- द्रुसि :अनित्यत्वं यात् - Aathmaa, the substance, will be subject to mortality/ finitude/ impermanence,

Dhrusi: - means "chaithanya svaroopaa aathmaa".

When will aathmaa be subject to finitude? If aathmaa is a substance possessing the temporary ahamkaaraa. Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- आगमापायि निष्ठत्वात् - because it (the aathmaa) is the possessor of the arriving and departing attribute of ahamkaaraa (as claimed by the poorva pakshin)

Nishta - means "aasraya:" / possessor.

Why should aathmaa be subject to change and finitude because of the possession of the temporary attribute? One has to remember the law, given in the second line of the verse, "upayan apayan dharma: vikarothi hi dharminam" – "whenever a changing attribute is located in a substance, as even the attribute comes and goes, it will bring about a change in the substance".

A simple example is an individual getting affected by a viral fever – even after the fever is got rid of, it leaves the individual changed – he is weak and listless. When dharma comes and goes, dharma will become 'changing' and 'perishable'. This law "upayan apayan dharma: vikarothi hi dharminam" is a very important law, often quoted in Vedhaanthic discussions.

- धर्मः - Any attribute,
- उपयन् अपयन् - arriving and departing,
- विकरोति - will bring about a change in / will modify
- धर्मिणम् - the substance upon which it comes and goes.

When this much was said by Sureswaraacharya, the poorva pakshin raises another question, which is given in the Introduction to verse 36. He says: "Let it be so; but, I will still hold on to my view. Even assuming aathmaa is anithya:, it does not matter. Let us assume that ahamkaaraa belongs to aathmaa only and let it be subject to change also. And, therefore, let aathmaa become anithyam also. So what? We will have to accept aathmaa is anithyam, if that is the conclusion that is arrived at by logical discussion. We should not blindly hold on to nithya aathmaa; we should accept aathmaa as anithyaa if it is proved by logic. Logically, it has been proved that ahamkaaraa is my property, and therefore, ahamkaaraa belongs to aathmaa and, therefore, aathmaa is anithyam. If it has been logically proved, you will have to accept the anithyathvam also of aathmaa. What is wrong, in accepting a fact? "

- अस्तु अनित्यत्वं - Let us accept the impermanence of the aathmaa.

If it is logically proved (that aathmaa is anithyam), because, what is a fact should be accepted. One cannot go by emotions. Facts do not depend on likes and dislikes. Intellectual honesty is an important virtue every seeker should have; a compulsory necessity. Even if advaita philosophy is disproved in a convincing manner, a seeker should be willing to accept it, since he is a 'seeker of truth' and not of any particular philosophy. Of course, there had been so far, no convincing proof or argument against the philosophy of Advaitam.

- कम् उपालभेमहि - Whom can one find fault with / angry with (just because he has proved a theory not in consonance with one's views)?
Why should one accept the anithyathvam of aathmaa? The poorva pakshin says:
- प्रमाण उपपन्नत्वात् - because it is logically proved.

The logical proof (as presented above by the poorva pakshin): Ahamkaaraa is an intrinsic attribute of aathmaa; ahamkaaraa is 'changing'; therefore, aathmaa must also be 'changing'; and, if aathmaa is 'changing', aathmaa must be anithyam.

The Achaaryaa replies:

- इति चेत् - If this is the argument (of the poorva pakshin),
- तत् न - that cannot be accepted (by me).

"asthu anithyathvam kam upaalabhemahi pramaana upapannathvaath" is the poorva pakshin's averment. "Ithi cheth thath na – if that is the argument, it is not acceptable" is the Achaaryaa's rejoinder.

Why cannot you accept the anithyathvam of aathmaa?

The Achaaryaa presents his argument in the verse.

Verse 36 – Chapter II:

सदा विलुप्त साक्षित्वं स्वतस्सिद्धं न पार्यते ।

अपह्नोतुं घटस्य इव कुशाग्रीय धियात्मनः ॥ ३६ ॥

The self-evident fact of the Self being a timeless observer cannot be denied. Even the subtlest intellect cannot prove that the Self is subject to change like objects such as a jar.

Here, Sureswaraacharya says: "That ahamkaaraa is subject to change, is proved by our own experience and that saakshi is not subject to change, is also proved by our own experience. The changeless nature of the saakshi is self-evident. And, therefore, aathmaa is eternal. You cannot, therefore, claim, that the impermanence of aathmaa- the saakshi - is proved".

- आत्मनः अविलुप्त साक्षित्वं – The status of 'being the changeless saakshi' of the aathmaa

Aviluptha – changeless; saakshithvam – the status of being a saakshi.

- स्वतस्सिद्धं - (is) self evident.
- सदा - all the time / eternal

“The eternal, changeless saakshi status of aathmaa, the real ‘I’ is self-evident”, which, nobody can challenge.

What does the Achaaryaa mean by this? It is a subtle topic. When the word ‘I’ is used, in that word, sometimes the changing ahamkaaraa is evident; and, at some other times the changeless saakshi is evident. It has to be carefully discerned, as to, when is ‘I’, the ahamkaaraa evident and when is ‘I’, the saakshi evident. And, how?

Suppose, by the word ‘I’, I am referring the present ‘I’, ‘I’ as the happy or sorrowful ‘I’, ‘I’ who am of a certain age, ‘I’, who has got particular raaghaas or dveshaas, ‘I’ as perceiving an object in front etc., the ‘I’ that is being referred to , is the ‘present experienced I’, because, I am referring to the ‘I’, which is associated with this particular time (kaala:), this particular place (desa:) and also this particular set of attributes (dharmaa:). This is the ahamkaaraa ‘I’, called the ‘experienced I’.

Suppose I am referring to another ‘I’, which was in the past – ‘I’ went to a particular function and had a very thrilling experience- and I am referring to that ‘I’, which was at that time, at that place and also having those attributes (thrill etc.), then I am referring to the ahamkaaraa ‘I’ of the past time, past place and past attributes. This ‘remembered I’ is also ahamkaaraa ‘I’.

The present experienced ‘I’ is ahamkaaraa ‘I’, and the past remembered ‘I’ is also ahamkaaraa ‘I’; but, these two ahamkaaraas are different – due to kaala beda:, desa beda: and also because of difference in attributes.

Now, suppose I am saying “that ahamkaaraa of the past time, that ‘I’ alone am the present ‘I’” – i.e. when I am equating the past ahamkaaraa and the present ahamkaaraa – sa: aham asmi – that ‘I’ is called ‘recognized I’; i.e. ‘recognized I’ is that ‘I’, which is equating the past ‘I’ and the present ‘I’.

In every recognition, we are always equating the past and the present. When I say, ‘now, I recognize you’, what I mean is that ‘the past person, that I saw a few years before, and the present person whom I am experiencing now, that person is this person’. Only when you are equating the past and the present, you can use the word ‘recognition’. Suppose I am seeing a person for the first time, the word ‘recognition’ cannot be used; only the word ‘cognition’ can be used. The verb ‘recognize’ is extremely important in Vedhaanthee, because only through this verb, saakshi, is to be proved.

“When I ‘remember’ a person not in front of me, there is only a past person; in ‘cognition’, there is only the present person in front of me ; only in ‘recognition’, there is an equation of the ‘past’ person and the ‘present’ person. Similarly, when I say the last Saturdays’ Naishkarmya Siddhi teacher was me and the present Naishkarmya Siddhi teacher is also me, i.e. when I recognize as ‘sa: aham asmi’, in that self-recognition, I am equating the remembered ahamkaaraa and the experienced ahamkaaraa i.e. in this ‘self-recognition’, I am equating the remembered past ahamkaaraa (last week’s Naishkarmya Siddhi teacher) and the experienced present ahamkaaraa (this week’s Naishkarmya Siddhi teacher”.

But, here, we have a problem. Past ahamkaaraa and present ahamkaaraa can never be equated, because, the kaala, desa and attributes are different. To solve this problem, Vedhaantha points out: “Whenever you are recognizing a present person in front of you, as an old friend of yours, you are equating the old and the present person, by recognizing ‘my classmate of the old days, is the present person in front of me’ ; in this equation, even though the attributes are different – the friend’s physical body, including the complexion of his skin, has undergone changes due to old age – you claim ‘that person is this person’; this claim is the result of your removing the differentiating attributes – not physically, but, intellectually. Both the past and present attributes are removed and you are recognizing the common factor between the old friend and the present person.”

Whenever there is ‘recognition’, the superficial differences are removed and the essential common factor is taken. This is what is happening in ‘soyam devadattha:’ (a popular phrase in Vedhaantha).

Vedhaantha contends: “Whenever you are equating your past ahamkaaraa and your present ahamkaaraa as ‘sa: aham asmi’, you are removing the time, the space and all the attributes; you are considering only the common factor between the past ahamkaaraa and the present ahamkaaraa. This changeless common factor in the ‘changing’ ahamkaaraas, is the *saakshi, which has been continuing without any change in the changing ahamkaaraa. Body, mind, emotions etc. undergo change; only the saakshi remains unchanged. This ‘recognized I’ is the saakshi; the ‘experienced I’ is ahamkaaraa; the ‘remembered I’ is also ahamkaaraa. ”

Part of verse 6 of the Dakshinamoorthy Sthothra of Sri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadha refers to this as: “Praak asvaapsam ithi prabhodasamaye ya: prathyabhijnayaayathe” – “who, on waking up, remembers to have slept”.

In Sanskrit, 'recognized I' is called 'Prathyabhijnyaatha aham'. 'Anubhootha aham' (experienced I) is ahamkaaraa; 'smrutha aham' (remembered I) is ahamkaaraa; 'Prathyabhijnyaatha aham' (recognized I) is saakshi.

"When I say 'I am experiencing this class', I am referring to ahamkaaraa; but, when I say 'to-day's class is better than last week's class', I am referring to the common 'I', which is the saakshi aham. Therefore, if you ask 'Is saakshi experienced or not?', the answer is 'yes, it is experienced'; 'how is it experienced?' 'changelessly experienced'. 'how is it recognized?', the answer is 'Soham. Dehino asmin yathaa dehe kaumaaram, youvanam, jaraa thathaa dehaanthara praapthi:'. In the next janma, the ahamkaaraa will be different, body will be different, time and place will be different; but, the saakshi will continue. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says: "The permanent saakshi is ever evident as 'recognized I'"

Svatha: siddham - The eternal 'I' is ever available as recognized 'self'.

What is its nature?

Aviluptha saakshi - It is the changeless 'witness' which was behind the remembered 'I' also and which is behind the experienced 'I' also,

- आत्मनः (साक्षित्वं) अपह्नोतुम् न पार्यते - (The witnesshood of aathmaa) can never be negated,

Na paaryathe – cannot be/ na sakyathe; apahnothum – to negate.

- घटस्य इव - in the manner of negating any object like a jar,

Any object in the world can be negated; even the ahamkaaraa can be temporarily negated during sushupthi, moorchaa etc.; but, the saakshi can never be negated.

- कुशाग्रीयधिया - (even) by a person of a very sharp intellect.

Kusaa is a type of grass, with very sharp edges, and, often used in saasthraas to emphasize intellect, similar to the use 'razor-sharp intellect' in English.

"The changeless 'witnesshood' of the real 'I' can never be negated by any one" is the message of the verse. From this, we get a corollary. If the changelessness of the real 'I' is established, then its immortality is also established; because, death is also a form of change. If change is negated, death is also negated; if aathmaa is changeless, it is deathless also – therefore 'eternal'. Therefore, aathmaa cannot have the 'changing' ahamkaaraa as its attribute.

Aathmaa is saakshi; aathmaa is changless; therefore, nithya: /

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 37:

एतस्मात् च हेतोः अहंकारस्य अनात्मधर्मत्वम् अवसीयताम् ।

On this further ground also, let it be understood that the ego is the character of something other than the Self:

It was seen that, according to Vedhaantha, when the word 'I' is used, it may mean the 'recognized 'I' saakshē or the 'experienced 'I' ahamkaara'. The recognized 'I' is original Consciousness; the experienced 'I' is reflected Consciousness; the two are 'mingled' together. The original Consciousness is all-pervading, while the reflected Consciousness is confined to the body only – though, both types of Consciousness pervade the body. Unfortunately, the guru cannot physically separate and 'show' the original Consciousness – saakshi and the reflected Consciousness - ahamkaara. Because, thus, they cannot be physically separated, the seeker has to do the 'separation' only intellectually. The guru can only help the student in this intellectual effort.

How to do the 'separation'? Recognized 'I' is the Original Consciousness; experienced 'I' is the Reflected Consciousness. When you say 'this is Devadatta', it is 'experienced' Devadatta ; when you say 'that Devadatta (whom you have met elsewhere) is this Devadatta', the 'remembered' Devadatta had certain attributes – for instance, he was 'younger' , the 'experienced' Devadatta also has certain attributes - again, for instance, he is 'older'; but, the 'recognized' Devadatta has no attributes- neither 'young' nor 'old'. If the 'recognized' Devadatta had any attribute, no equation can be made.

Similarly, the recognized 'I' is 'nirguna aham'; with this recognized 'I' only (as the meaning of 'I'), one should claim 'aham brahma asmi'. Bhagha thyaagha lakshananaya (by the well-known means of excluding one part of the direct meaning of a sentence, but, retaining another part) remove all attributes and claim 'aham, the attributeless Consciousness is Brahma'. This ahamkaara-aham-viveka has to be very carefully done. And, therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "I will dwell on this topic a little bit more, because that is the last step before 'aham brahma asmi". Therefore, he says:

- एतस्मात् हेतोः च – Because of the following reason also (the reason is given in verse 37)
- अहंकारस्य अनात्मधर्मत्वम् – the ahamkaara belongs to the anaathmaa only.

The experienced 'I' and the remembered 'I' are both ahamkaaras; both these ahamkaaras belong to anaathmaa only.

The experienced 'I' is associated with present samsaaraa (problems of the present), while the remembered 'I' is associated with past samsaaraa (problems of the past) and both the ahamkaaraas having the present or past samsaaraa belong to anaathmaa – the kshethram only. They do not belong to the recognized 'I' – the saakshi - but to the anaathma kshethram or mind only.

- (इति) अवसीयताम् - Let this be very clear.

The moment you understand this, you can claim: "I' the saakshi, do not have past samsaaraa, which samsaaraa belonged to the past ahamkaaraa and is now gone; nor do I have the present samsaaraa, which samsaaraa belongs to the present ahamkaaraa and will also go away. Samsaaraa belongs to the arriving-departing ahamkaaraa; but, 'I' am the recognized 'I', which was behind the past ahamkaaraa and which is behind the present ahamkaaraa - but, similar to the screen in a movie which continues unaffected during all types of actions in the movie, 'I' the saakshi continue during all the changing circumstances as an asamsaaree".

A seeker is likely to react: "If I know this, will I get mukthi?" But, he should know, that, the very understanding "'I' am nithya muktha:" is moksha: | Since only the ahamkaaraa is bandha., while, 'I' the saakshi is nithya muktha., there is no need even to be rid of your surroundings and circumstances. The ahamkaaraa will ever be a samsaari, while the saakshi will never be a samsaari. Ahamkaaraa will never get liberated; sakshi need not get liberated. Other than thoroughly understanding "I am the ever-liberated saakshi", there is no other 'liberation'. Therefore, the Achaaryaa stresses "avaseeyathaam" – "let this be clearly grasped by you".

Chapter II: Verse 37 –

प्रमाणैः च अवगम्यत्वात् घटादिवत् अहं द्रुसेः।

यतो राद्विः प्रमाणानां स कथं तैः प्रसिध्यति ॥ ३७ ॥

The ego is to be cognized like a jar through means of knowledge like perception, and, hence, in relation to the Self, stands on the same footing. But, that which is presupposed by means of such knowledge, as their very foundation is not to be established through them. (The Self is not dependent on proofs, for all proofs depend on it.)

Here, the Achaaryaa says "because ahamkaaraa is subject to arrival and departure and it is an attribute belonging to the mind (the anaathmaa only), the ahamkaaraa also should be classified under 'objects'. You should learn to classify ahamkaaraa also, as one of the objects in Creation".

By the term 'Abhimaana thyaaga:', what is implied is "learn to look at the ahamkaaraa also, as an object belonging to the world. Never include ahamkaaraa in the real 'I'".

And, how do you 'classify' ahamkaaraa as just an object? The Achaaryaa says: "Just as a pot is an object perceived through a pramaanaa (i.e. the pot is a pramaana vishaya:), in the same manner, ahamkaaraa is also an object proved through a pramaanaa. Ghata: is a prameyam – an object proved by a pramaanam. Ahamkaaraa is also a prameya – an object proved by a pramaanam. There is no difference".

A 'blunder' often committed is, to include very intimate 'objects' in the 'subject'. For instance, if a person using spectacles for 'constant wear' is asked to list out the objects in front of him, he is most likely to overlook his spectacles, since it is his very intimate object. This same 'blunder' is committed with regard to ahamkaaraa also; I include ahamkaaraa also in 'me'. Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya points out "ahamkaaraa api prameya: pramaana vishayathvaath ghataavath" – "ahamkaaraa also is an object, since it is also only perceived through a pramaanam, similar to a jar". Therefore, it will come under anaathmaa only.

- अहं (अपि) – ahamkaaraa: (also)
- घटादिवत् – similar to a pot

69. Chapter II, Verse 37 to 40 (29-09-2007)

As a part of thvampadhaartha vichaara, Sureswaraachaarya is now engaged in aathma-anaathma-viveka: Anaathma consists of sareerathrayam and therefore, he has to do sareeratthraya-aathma viveka: In the sareera thrayam, sookshma sareeram is one anaathmaa and in sookshma sareeram, ahamkaaraa is one of the important attributes. And, therefore, as a part of sookshma sareera viveka:, Sureswaraachaarya is now doing ahamkaara-aathma-viveka: /

Sureswaraachaarya is paying special attention to this topic, since differentiating aathmaa and ahamkaaraa is extremely difficult, because, wherever aathmaa is, there ahamkaaraa also is. Aathmaa is chidhroopam and ahamkaaraa is chidaabhaasa roopam. The chith and chidaabhaasa separation has to be done carefully.

But, the two cannot be separated physically, whatever avasthaa we are in – even in thureeyaa and samaadhi. In all avasthaas, there will be both chith and chidaabhaasaa. Chidaabhaasaa can never go away, as long as one is alive. During the entire life, whatever avasthaa we go through, chidaabhaasaa will be there. Physical separation of chith and chidaabhaasaa is, therefore, never possible. We have to do it only intellectually.

Sureswaraachaarya is giving various arguments in support of this 'separation'. Here, in this portion, he is establishing that ahamkaaraa is the attribute of only sookshma sareeram and not an attribute of aathmaa.

He had already given two arguments.

The first argument was 'dhrusyathvaath'. To elaborate: ahamkaaraa is an object of experience. Applying the law that any experienced attribute should belong to an experienced object only and never to the 'experiencer' subject, ahamkaaraa can only be a part of kshethram, the anaathmaa and cannot belong to kshethragnya: /

The second argument given was 'anirmoksha prasanga': If ahamkaaraa were an attribute of aathmaa, then mokshaaa itself will not be possible, because as long as aathmaa is there, so long ahamkaaraa also will continue; if ahamkaaraa continues, karthruthvam will continue; as long as karthruthvam continues, thrividha karmaani will continue; as long as karma continues, samsaaraa will continue. Therefore, if ahamkaaraa belongs to aathmaa, mokshaa will be impossible.

If, (to counter this line of argument), it is claimed, that ahamkaaraa does belong to aathmaa, but will go away during mokshaa, then also there is a problem. If and when, thus ahamkaaraa goes away, it will bring about a change in the aathmaa itself, because of the important law 'upayan apayan dharma: vikarothi hi dharminam'- 'when attribute comes and goes, the substance will have to necessarily undergo change'. If aathmaa is thus subject to change (because of initial association with ahamkaaraa and subsequent dissociation) it will be subject to death also and if it is subject to death, it will never have an eternal mokshaa. How can a mortal aathmaa have eternal mokshaa? This 'anirmoksha prasanga dosha:' was the second argument.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa is giving the third argument. What is the third argument?

"Ahamkaaraa is proved by pramaanaas; whereas, aathmaa is not proved by any pramaanaa. Ahamkaaraa is pramaana siddha:, while aathmaa is svathas siddha: And, therefore, they are totally different and therefore ahamkaaraa cannot belong to aathmaa" is the third argument, given in verse 37.

- अहं द्रुशेः अवगम्यत्वात् - Since, for aathmaa, the subject, ahamkaaraa is knowable / provable,

Aham – ahamkaaraa:; dhrusi: - chaithanya svarooopa aathmaa ; dhruse: - chaithanyasaya / aathmana: / of the chaithanyam.

Through what?

- प्रमाणैः - through different pramaanaas,

Ahamkaaraa: pramaana siddha: - ahamkaaraa is proved / established through different pramaanaas.

What are the pramaanaas which prove ahamkaaraa?

There are three pramaanaas, as explained below:

- (1) "Prathyaksham": Ahamkaaraa is revealed through 'I' thought; ahamkaaraa: is aham prathyaya siddha: During 'waker' stage and during 'dream' stage, 'I' thought is there; therefore, ahamkaaraa is known both during waking and dream stages. During deep sleep (sushupthi), 'I' thought is absent; therefore, ahamkaaraa also disappears. Therefore, 'I' thought is the first pramaanam. "Saakshi prathyaksha pramaana siddha:", is another manner in which, this is referred to, apart from "aham prathyaya siddha:"
- (2) "Anumaanam": Ahamkaaraa happens to be the pramaathaa, the knower principle, who is the agent operating all pramaanams – prathyaksha, anumaana, saasthram, arthaapatthi etc. In other words, all pramaanams are instruments operated by the karthaa – the subject, the pramaathaa ahamkaara:. The pramaathaa can be inferred from the operations of the pramaanam; from the pramaana vyaapaara (operations), the 'operator' (pramaathaa) can be inferred. (This is similar to the fact that by seeing a car running, the driver of the car can be inferred.) Pramaana vyaapaaraa is the clue for knowing the pramaatha. This means, that, 'Anumaanaa' or 'inference' is the second pramaanam for the proof of ahamkaaraa.

In this context, the following should be carefully noted: From the pramaana instrument, one can infer the pramaatha. It should not be asked: "you can only infer the pramaathaa; but, we are talking about ahamkaaraa here". Ahamkaaraa is pramaatha; pramaatha is ahamkaaraa. Both are identical. Pramaatha inference is ahamkaaraa inference. That's why during jagrath and svapna, pramaana vyaapaaraa is there; therefore pramaatha is there. In sushupthi, pramaana vyaapaara is not there; pramaatha is also not there. Yathra yathra pramaana vyaapaara:, thathra thathra pramaatha. So, pramaatha asthi pramaana vyaapaarathvaath.

- (3) The third pramaanam for ahamkaaraa is sruthi pramaanam. The sruthi is Brahadhaaranyaka Vaakyam I.iv.1 – Purusha vidha Brahmana: - "aathma eva idam agra aaseeth purusha vidha: sa: anuveekshya na anyath aathmana: pasyath soham asmi ithi agre vyaaharath thatha: aham naama abhavath" etc. There, the Upanishad says Brahmaji, the Creator used the word 'aham', in the beginning and therefore, all the later beings, especially the humans following in the paramparaa, use the word 'aham' – 'aham naama abhavath'. Thus, from sruthi pramaanam also, we know that, there is ahamkaaraa, known by the word aham.

By these three pramaanams - prathyaksha, anumaana and saasthra - ahamkaaraa is known and therefore, ahamkaara is called pramaana siddha: - i.e. 'proved through a pramaanam'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "In contrast, aathmaa is totally different. Aathmaa is not proved by any pramaanaa; on the other hand, aathmaa is self-evident, even before we plan to operate the pramaanaa."

The 2nd line of verse 37 –

- प्रमाणानां राद्धिः यतः (भवति) - Because of (that aathmaa, by) which the very pramaanaas themselves are proved,
Raadhvi: - proof / siddhi:; yatha: - literal meaning is 'because of which' and implied meaning, in this context, is 'aathmaa'.
- कथं स तैः प्रसिध्यति - how can that (aathmaa) be proved by those pramaanaas?

Ahamkaaraa is proved by pramaanaas; aathmaa is not proved by any pramaanaa. On the other hand, pramaanaas themselves are proved only by aathmaa.

Then the question arises: "If aathmaa is not proved by any pramaanaa, then what is the proof for aathmaa?" The answer is: "Aathmaa is self-proved; it is svayam-siddha:".

"Because of which aathmaa, all the pramaanaas are proved, how can that aathmaa be proved by pramaanaas? How can the 'prover' of the pramaanaas, be proved by the pramaanaas?" is the essence of the second line.

The conclusion drawn by the Achaaryaa: "Ahamkaaraa and aathmaa are totally different; therefore, ahamkaaraa cannot be an attribute of aathmaa".

(Repeated for emphasis: What is the difference, between ahamkaaraa and aathmaa? Ans: Ahamkaaraa is pramaana siddha:. Aathmaa is svathas siddha.)

In the second line, the words 'yatha:' and 'sa:' denote aathmaa, while the word 'thai:' denotes pramaanaas.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 38:

धर्म धर्मिणो :च इतर इतर विरुद्धात्मकत्वात् असङ्गतिः।

Further, the Self and ego are mutually opposed in nature and therefore that cannot be really related as substance and attribute:

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering the 4th argument. The 3rd argument was: "pramaanaas siddha ahamkaara: svathas siddha aathmana: dharmas: na bhavathi."- "the pramaanaa-proved ahamkaaraa cannot be an attribute of the self-proved aathmaa".

The 4th argument is almost similar to the 3rd argument: "ahamkaara: and aathmaa have got totally different natures; because of that reason, one cannot become the attribute of the other".

- इतर इतर विरुद्धात्मकत्वात् - Because of the totally opposite natures,
- धर्म धर्मिणो: - of the ahamkaaraa and the aathmaa,

'Dharma' (attribute) here refers to the ahamkaaraa, based on the stand of the poorva pakshin, though not accepted by the Achaaryaa. So also, the 'dharm' (substance with the attribute) refers to aathmaa, again based on the stand of the poorva pakshin only; the Achaaryaa does not consider the aathmaa as the 'substance' possessing the 'attribute' of ahamkaaraa. The mere usage of the word dharmas, to denote ahamkaaraa and the word dharmi, to denote aathmaa, does not mean that the Achaaryaa has accepted this view of the poorva pakshin. The usage 'dharmadharma.' should be understood as addressed to the poorva pakshin as 'what you call dharmadharma and what you call dharmi.'

- असङ्गतिः - they can never be intimately associated as 'substance' and 'attribute'.

What is the 'opposite nature' referred to above? Ahamkaaraa, being an object of experience, is jadam/ achethanam in nature; and aathmaa, being the subject of experience, is chethanam by nature. Therefore, chethana-achethana-roopa-virodha: asthi. That is what Sankaraachaarya said in the Adhyaasa-Bhaashyam – Introduction itself. This is how the Adhyaasa Bhaashyam begins: "Yushamadhasmath prathyayagocharayo: vishaya vishayino: thama: prakaasavath viruddhasvabhaavayo." They (aathmaa and ahamkaaraa) are of opposite nature, like light and darkness – darkness cannot be the attribute of light; light cannot be the attribute of darkness, because they are totally different. Therefore, 'asamgathi'.

This idea is further clarified in the sloka.

Chapter II: Verse 38 –

धर्मिणश्च विरुद्धत्वात् न द्रुस्यगुणसङ्गतिः ।

मारुतान्दोलितज्वालं शैत्यं न अग्निं सिसृप्सति ॥ ३८ ॥

Even as cold cannot belong to fire blazing by the aid of the wind, the attribute that belongs to the realm of the seen, cannot belong to the seer, for they are mutually opposed in nature.

What has been said in the Introduction, is more clearly presented in the sloka.

- धर्मिणःविरुद्धत्वात् - - Since aathmaa is totally opposed to Dharmi – Aathma, the substance, which is supposed to possess the ahamkaaraa as attribute, according to the poorva pakshin.

- द्रुस्यगुणः - the nature of the ahamkaaraa,

Dhrusyam – object of experience and in this context refers to ahamkaaraa; dhrusya guna: - ahamkaaraa guna: (meaning achethanathvam).

- सङ्गतिः न (भवति) - association (between the two) is not possible.

Samgathi: - association. "Because they are of opposite natures, aathmaa and ahamkaaraa cannot have association. In short, chethana aathmaa cannot have achethana ahamkaaraa as its attribute".

Sureswaraachaarya clarifies this through an example.

- शैत्यं अग्निं न सिस्नुप्सति - Coolness cannot even desire to join agni as an attribute,

Saithyam – Coolness; na sisrupsathi – does not desire to approach.

The root srup means 'to approach' or 'to go near'. Its 'desiderative form' (the dictionary meaning of 'desiderative form' is 'formed from another verb to express desire of doing the act denoted') is 'sisrupsathy' meaning 'desires to approach'. Na sisrupsathy would, therefore, mean 'does not desire to approach'.

The Achaaryaa says saithyam cannot even desire to join agni, let alone joining. If coolness has to be an attribute of agni, it should be intimately present in agni. How would it be ever possible for coolness to be intimately associated with fire?

To give emphasis to the example, the Achaaryaa gives an adjective to agni.

- मारुत आन्दोलित ज्वालं - (adjective to agni) endowed with fierce flames, fanned by the wind.

Jwaalam - fierce flames; aandholitha – fanned / kindled / moved. Aandholanam – mass movement; aandholikaa – swing; the Carnatic raaghaa, aandholikaa, is supposed to be a swinging raaghaa, to put a child to sleep. 'Aandhole' is the root for these words.

From this example, it should be understood that, 'ahamkaaraa (similar to saithyam in the example) cannot even come near aathmaa (exemplified by the huge conflagration of fire) to become its attribute'.

Thus, 'viruddhasvabhaavathvaath' is the fourth argument.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 39:

तस्मात् विस्रब्धम् उपगम्यताम् ।

Therefore, let this be confidently acknowledged:

- तस्मात् - Therefore (because of the four powerful arguments given by me),
- उपगम्यताम् - let it be accepted (by all the poorva pakshins)

- विस्रब्धम् - confidently / without any doubt.

Visrabdham is an indeclinable word.

What is to be understood?

"Aathmaa is ever the 'observer'; it can never become the 'observed'; ahamkaaraa is ever the 'observed' and can never become the 'observer'. Therefore, the two are never to be mixed up. They are, no doubt, in proximity. But, the 'proximity' should not lead to 'confusions'".

In fact, ultimately, the very mokshaa is determined by how one looks at oneself. The reaction or approach to any crisis that one faces in life, with regard to one's own health or with one's family or with one's occupation, is an indicator of whether one takes oneself as aathmaa or ahamkaaraa. If during such a crisis, one can confidently claim "I am the free aathmaa; I am not the praarabhdaa-tormented ahamkaaraa", then such a claimant has certainly advanced in his Vedhaanthic pursuit. Aathma-ahamkaaraa vivekam is very crucial and that's why Sureswaraacharya says "Let it be boldly accepted".

The Achaaryaa's exhortation (upagamyathaam) is further stressed in the verse.

Chapter II: Verse 39 –

द्रष्टृत्वं द्रुस्यता चैव नैकस्मिन् एकदा क्वचित् ।

द्रुश्य द्रुश्यो :न च द्रष्टा द्रष्टुर्दर्शी द्रुसिर्न च ॥ ३९ ॥

The self-same principle cannot be at once the seer and the seen. The seer is not seen by what is itself seen by him. The seen cannot see its own seer.

The following verses are only upasamhaara slokaa: - concluding verses. The Achaaryaa is not giving new ideas; but, reinforcing the idea that, "ahamkaaraa is ever the dhrusyam; aathmaa is ever the dhrashtaa. Ahamkaaraa is ever the object and aathmaa is ever the subject. You can never objectify the aathmaa."

- एकस्मिन् (वस्तुनि) - In one and the same entity called aathmaa,
- एकदा - at one and the same time/ locus,

Two opposite attributes cannot exist in one and the same entity, at one and the same time or locus. What are the opposite attributes here?

- द्रष्टृत्वं - the observer status / the nature of being the subject or observer
- द्रुश्यता च - and the 'observed' status / the nature of being the object,

The 'subject' status and the 'object' status can never exist in one and the same entity, at one and the same time.

- क्वचित् - under any circumstance
- न - is not possible.

Therefore, the conclusion is: "Aathmaa is ever the 'seer'; never the 'seen'".

All these are important, because many people practice meditation, waiting for the 'aathmaa experience' to come. They either believe "aathmaa has not come; therefore experience has not come" or believe "aathmaa has come; but, the experience of aathmaa has not come" i.e. they are either waiting for aathmaa or for aathmaa experience. Both are wrong expectations. Aathmaa need not come, since it is ever evident as the recognized 'I'.

The experienced 'I' is present ahamkaaraa; the remembered 'I' is past ahamkaaraa; the recognized 'I' is neither the present ahamkaaraa nor the past ahamkaaraa. Because, In the recognized 'I', I am equating that past ahamkaaraa with this present ahamkaaraa; i.e. I say that 'past ahamkaaraa is the present ahamkaaraa'; whenever, thus, the present ahamkaaraa and the past ahamkaaraa are equated, what is done, is, that, the present attributes and the past attributes are removed. If the attributes are retained, the 'equation' cannot be done. At the time of 'equating', both the past and present attributes are removed and this "ahamkaaraa minus attributes" is the very saakshi.

Therefore, when is saakshi available? Not in samaadhi – but, all the time, as self-recognition roopena; not experience roopena nor remembrance roopena; but prathyabhijnyaa roopena.

Prathyabhijnyaa roopena nithya upalabdhi roopa: aathmaa.

"(This being the fact) why are you waiting for aathmaa anubhava?" asks Sureswaraachaaryaa.

Therefore, aathmaa can never be seen. This fact, the Achaaryaa presents in two ways:

- (1) "If aathmaa has to be seen, it has to be seen either by anaathmaa or by aathmaa (since, there are only these two divisions). Both are not possible".

द्रष्टा द्रुश्य द्रुश्यः न (भवति) - The subject can never become the object of the object (i.e. aathmaa, the subject can never become the object of anaathmaa, which is an object.)

If subject becomes the object of the object, the object will not be object any more; it will become subject and since, that is not possible, subject can never be objectified by any object including ahamkaaraa. Therefore, we should not expect ahamkaaraa to experience aathmaa, in meditation, since, it amounts to attempting to 'objectify' the aathmaa, which is impossible, because 'aathmaa dhrusya dhrusya: na bhavathi'.

(2) The second option or question: Can the aathmaa be seen by the aathmaa itself? This is also not possible. If the aathmaa is seen by the aathmaa, then the one and the same aathmaa will become both the 'seer' and the 'seen', which is not possible. Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- द्रष्टुःद्रुशिः - The Consciousness of the aathmaa

Dhrusi: - chaithanyam or Consciousness; Dhrashtu: - of the aathmaa

- (द्रष्टुः) दर्शी न भवति - cannot become the 'seer' of the aathmaa.

It means that aathmaa can never see the aathmaa itself; therefore, aathmaa is neither seen by anaathmaa nor seen by aathmaa itself; and, therefore, aathmaa will never come under 'seen' category; it is ever the 'seer'.

'Dhrashtu: dhrusi: (dhrashtu:) dharsee na (bhavathi)'; in other words, 'aathmana: chaithanyam aathmana: dhrashtaa na bhavathi'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 40:

सर्व संव्यवहारलोपः च प्राप्नोति । यस्मात् ।

If the position is not accepted, life becomes impossible. Why?

Now, Sureswaraachaarya goes into more intricate details.

In the previous sloka, he asserted that two opposite attributes cannot exist in one and the same locus or substance, simultaneously i.e. at the same time; just as heat and coldness cannot exist in one locus simultaneously; but, they can exist in the same locus, at different times. For instance, water can be the locus of heat at a given time and at a later time, the same water, can be the locus of coldness. Based on this, the poorva pakshi can suggest: "Why don't we say that, Aathmaa becomes dhrashtaa for some time; and, thereafter becomes dhrusyam. When aathmaa is dhrashtaa, ahamkaaraa is dhrusyam and when ahamkaaraa is dhrashtaa, aathmaa is dhrusyam. Therefore, aathmaa becomes dhrashtaa and dhrusyam alternatively".

Once the poorva pakshin proves that aathmaa can be both (dhrashtaa and dhrusyam), he can say that ahamkaaraa can be an attribute of aathmaa, his aim being to somehow stress his view that ahamkaaraa is an attribute of aathmaa.

“But”, Sureswaraacharya says “that is also not possible”.

- सर्व संव्यवहारलोप :च प्राप्नोति - If aathmaa becomes alternatively or sequentially dhrashtaa and dhrusyam, all the transactions will break down.

How? The Achaaryaa explains in the verse that follows.

Samvyavahaaraa - Transactions; sarva - all.

Sarva samvyavahaaraa means “jnaana vyavahaaraa” done with the help of jnaanendriyaas and “karma vyavahaaraa” done with the help of karmendriyaas.

Lopa: - means breakdown / destruction / disruption.

Yasmaath - for the following reason.

Chapter II: Verse 40 –

द्रष्टापि यदि द्रश्याया :आत्मेयात्कर्मतां धियः।

यौगपध्यम् अद्रश्यत्वं वैयर्थ्यं च आप्नुयात् श्रुतिः॥ ४० ॥

If the seer were to be objectified by the intellect, which itself is seen in relation to the seer, then both the seeing self and the seen intellect, should simultaneously be both seeing and seen. As both are seers, there should be no object of seeing. And sruthi would be useless in that case.

In the first line, Sureswaraacharya presents the poorva pakshin's supposition.

- यदि - Suppose
- द्रष्टा आत्मा - the ‘seer’ aathmaa
- कर्मतां इयात् - becomes the ‘seen’ aathmaa, karmathaa – ‘seen’ / object; ijaath – becomes / attains.

In other words, ‘if the subject aathmaa, gets ‘objecthood’ status also’.

Object of what?

धियः - of the mind or ahamkaaraa,

If, as the poorva pakshin suggests, the 'seer' aathmaa becomes the object of perception of the ahamkaaraa, what will happen? Three doshaas will result: (1) yougapadhya dosha: (2) adhruyathva dosha: and (3) sruthi vaiyarthya dosha..

70. Chapter II, Verse 40 to 42 (06-10-2007)

In these verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is discriminating between aathmaa and ahamkaaraa. What he wants to establish is: "ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa; it is a property of antha:karanam i.e. the mind ; ahamkaaraa and the mind have no connection with aathmaa at all."

Therefore, the samsaaraa that is experienced by the ahamkaaraa will have no connection with aathmaa and therefore, aathmaa is nithya asamsaari.

On the other hand, the poorva pakshin, here, wants to maintain that ahamkaaraa is an attribute of aathmaa. Sureswaraachaarya argues: "If ahamkaaraa is an attribute of aathmaa, ahamkaaraa can never become an object of experience; because, if ahamkaaraa has to be a property of aathmaa, then, to experience ahamkaaraa, I have to objectify the aathmaa also. But, aathmaa being the 'observer' – the 'subject' – aathmaa can never be the 'object' of experience. Therefore, ahamkaaraa cannot be an attribute of athmaa; it has to be an attribute of some other object only. This is based on the law, that, all experienced attributes belong to experienced objects and never to the experiencer 'subject'. Aathmaa is ever the 'experiencer' and never the 'experienced', whereas ahamkaaraa is ever the 'experienced' object only".

Thereafter, for the sake of argument, Sureswaraachaaryaa assumes that aathmaa also is an object of experience. This is called abhyupedhya vaadha: "let us assume for argument's sake, that, aathmaa is an object of experience". If so, aathmaa will have two statuses

- (1) experiencer – the 'dhrashtaa' and
- (2) (according to the poorva pakshin's contention, temporarily accepted by the Achaaryaa, for argument's sake) an object of experience – dhrusyam also.

Thus, aathmaa will become both dhrashtaa and dhrusyam. Of this, 'that aathmaa is dhrashtaa' is not disputed at all. Both the Vedhaanthin and the poorva pakshin accept this. The controversy is only on "along with the dhrashtaa status, does aathmaa have the dhrusyam status also?" The Vedhaanthins say that aathmaa never has the dhrusyam status (dhrusyam means 'object of experience'), while poorva pakshin says that aathma has dhrusyam status also. Sureswaraachaarya struggles to establish that it cannot be so.

In the 40th verse, the Achaaryaa is discussing the problems that arise, if aathmaa is accepted as a dhrusyam also. What will be the problems?

- यदि - Suppose we assume (indicating abhyupedhya vaadha;) that,

What is the assumption?

- द्रष्टा आत्मा अपि धियः द्रश्यायाः कर्मतां इयात् - the 'observer'/ subject aathmaa also becomes the object of the intellect, which intellect itself is an object of experience,

Karmathaa – the object.

“Suppose the subject becomes the object of the intellect, which intellect itself is an object”

The intellect is an object of experience and therefore, the Achaaryaa gives the adjective 'dhrusyaayaa:' to 'dhiya:' – 'dhrusyaayaa: dhiya:' meaning 'of the intellect, which is an object'.

When such an assumption is accepted, there will be three problems. What are the three problems?

- योगपथ्यम् - the consequence of two opposite statuses being located simultaneously in one and the same locus ,
- अद्रश्यत्वं - the consequence of 'not being experienced',
- छूतिः वैयर्थ्यं च आप्तयात् - and the consequence of Upanishadic statements becoming invalid will result

To elaborate in detail, on the problems, one by one:

'Yougapadhyam': It has already been seen that opposite attributes cannot co-exist - i.e. exist simultaneously -, in one and the same object; if, for example, a given quantity of water is hot, the same water cannot be cold simultaneously. Hotness and coolness cannot have yougapadhyam in one and the same specimen of water. "Similarly", the Achaaryaa points out to the poorva pakshin, "if we concede your contention, aathmaa will then become simultaneously the 'observer' and the 'observed'. Yougapadhyam – i.e. simultaneous existence of 'subject-hood' and 'object-hood' in one and the same locus aathmaa - will result. But, the 'observer' and 'observed' are opposite attributes. Therefore, such a possibility is logically untenable". This is doshaa no. 1. (That such co-existence is not possible is proved by our own experience also – the eyes which are perceivers of everything can never become the objects of perception. Perceiver- hood and perceived-hood cannot co-exist in one eye.)

'Adhrusyathvam': This 2nd problem has to be comprehended carefully. Suppose the poorva pakshin says "opposite attributes cannot exist in one and the same place simultaneously ; but, they can exist sequentially i.e. at different times. For example, water cannot be hot and cold simultaneously, I agree; but, it can be hot and cold at different times; when it is heated, it becomes hot water. When it is removed from the fire and placed in a refrigerator, it becomes cold water. This proves that opposite attributes can exist in the same object, at different times, though not simultaneously". "Why cannot we say, that, in the same manner" the poorva pakshin argues, "aathmaa is the dhrashtaa at one time, when the mind becomes dhrusyam; and after some time, reversing the roles, aathmaa becomes dhrusyam and mind becomes dhrashtaa? Thus, why cannot aathmaa become sequentially dhrashtaa and dhrusyam - dhrashtaa during certain times and dhrusyam during other times - just like water being hot and cold, though at different times?" Sureswaraachaarya replies: "The problem is, when aathmaa is enjoying the dhrashtaa status, at that time, aathmaa will not be enjoying dhrusyam status. And, when aathmaa does not enjoy the dhrusyam status, how will you know 'I', the aathmaa am existent? How will I know the existence of myself, when I am not enjoying the dhrusyam status?"

In Vedhaanthaa, it can be said 'aathmaa is self-evident'. But, for the poorva pakshin, aathmaa is not self-evident. The consequence: The non-self-evident aathmaa, when serving as dhrashtaa, cannot be dhrusyam or 'observed'; and, when it is not observed, the very existence of aathmaa will be unproved. Therefore, the problem is called adhruyathvam status. "When aathmaa is dhrashtaa, there will be no proof for the existence of aathmaa, because it is not seen, at that time". This adhruyathvam is the second dosha:

Sruthi: Vaiyarthiyam: This is the third problem. When, as assumed, aathmaa becomes dhrashtaa and dhrusyam in sequence, when it is dhrusyam, at that moment, aathmaa's existence is proved by the mind. To elaborate: First, aathmaa was dhrashtaa; then aathmaa became a dhrusyam; when aathmaa becomes a dhrusyam, the dhrusyam's existence is proved by some other dhrashtaa – mind or any other dhrashtaa (who the dhrashtaa is, is not very material for this argument). But, the very position that, "when aathmaa is dhrusyam, its existence is proved by some other dhrashtaa" would mean "aathmaa is non-self-evident". Whenever aathmaa is considered a dhrusyam, it will result in aathmaa being not self-evident. Any dhrusyam, for that matter, is not self-evident; somebody else has to prove its existence. What is the consequence of this conclusion? Sureswaraachaaryaa points out: "Once you say aathmaa is dhrusyam and (therefore), non-self-evident, you are contradicting the Upanishadic statement, which says 'aathmaa ever being of the nature of Consciousness, is ever self-evident.' Consciousness need not be proved by something else; it is self-evident and ever evident. That sruthi statement will be contradicted, when aathmaa becomes dhrusyam and therefore, non-self-evident".

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out this third dosham: "Vaiyarthiyam cha aapnuyaath sruthi:". Sruthi:, here, refers to the Brahadharanyaka Upanishad Vaakyam "Na hi dhrashtu: dhrushte:

viparilopo vidhyathe avinaasithvaath – (Svayamjothi Brahmanam) , which means “the Consciousness of the saakshi is never lost. (Therefore Consciousness is ever associated with saakshi; therefore, saakshi is ever self-evident; therefore, never proved by anything else and therefore, never becomes a dhrusyam)”. This sruthi vaakyam will attain invalidity; it will become meaningless (if aathmaa were to become a dhrusyam).

The Achaaryaa explains the same further, in the next sloka.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 41 :

कुत :। यस्मात् ।

The reason for this follows:

- कुत :- Why (do I say that the Brahadhaarnayaka vaakyam will invalid)?
- यस्मात् - Because of the following reason (explained in the sloka).

Chapter II: Verse 41 –

नालुप्तद्रष्टे :द्रुश्यत्वं द्रुश्यत्वे द्रुष्टता कुत :।

स्यात् चेत् द्रुक् एकं निर्द्रुश्यं जगद्धा स्यात् असाक्षिकम् ॥ ४१ ॥

What is characterized by inextinguishable seeing, can never be an object to be seen. If it is an object to be seen, how can it be the seer? Either there should be only the seer with nothing to be seen, or the world should be seer-less.

What is the concept here? When you say ‘a light is illumining an object’, the light is called ‘illuminator’ and the object is called ‘illuminated’. The moment you say ‘illuminator’, you should understand ‘illuminator’ is one which is associated with its own self-illumination/ original illumination / permanent illumination. In the same manner, the moment you say ‘illuminated object’, you should understand that an ‘illuminated object’ is that which borrows illumination from the illuminator and it gets temporarily associated with illumination.

An illumined object

- (1) does not have its own illumination
- (2) has a temporary association with illumination, and
- (3) has the illumination from the illuminator, temporarily spread over its body.

“In the same manner” Vedhaanthaa says “the moment you say ‘knower’, the ‘knower’ is always illuminator of objects and therefore, ‘knower’ is one who is permanently associated with the illumination called ‘consciousness’”. Therefore, ‘knower’ has to be permanently associated with Consciousness; in this example of light, the word ‘illumination’ is used; in the context of ‘knowledge’, the word ‘illumination’ should be replaced by ‘consciousness’.

Therefore, 'knower aathmaa' is ever associated with 'illumination consciousness'. What is the definition of 'known'? Just as an illumined object has got borrowed illumination, any 'known' object has got borrowed 'consciousness'. Therefore, the moment you say 'dhrusyam', it means it has got 'borrowed consciousness'. "My consciousness, through my sense organs, is spreading over the inert objects of the world and when the Consciousness spreads over an object, the object becomes a dhrusyam and only when the object becomes a dhrusyam, its existence is known. Thus, a dhrusyam becomes known, because of borrowed Consciousness. And, if aathmaa becomes dhrusyam, it will mean that aathmaa is known because of borrowed consciousness. Sureswaraacharya says: "How can you say aathmaa has got borrowed consciousness, when sruthi proclaims that aathmaa has got un-borrowed original Consciousness? Therefore, aathmaa can never become a dhrusyam."

- आलुप्त द्रुष्टे: (आत्मनः) - For the aathmaa, which enjoys unbroken consciousness, as its very nature

Aaluptham – nithyam; dhrushti: - chaithanyam ; aluptha dhrushti: - nithya chaithanyam.

Why should the Achaaryaa use the term 'aluptha dhrushti:', in place of 'nithya chaithanyam', which is a simpler term? There is a significance. The Achaaryaa wants us to remember the Brahadharanyaka Vaakyaa "na hi dhrashtu: dhrushte: viparilopo vardhathe" - wherein the word 'lopa:' appears; Sureswaraacharya wants us to remember this word 'lopa:'; therefore, he uses the term 'aaluptha dhrushti:'.

- दृश्यत्वं न (संभवति) – can never become an object of experience;

Because, to become an 'object of experience', it will have to borrow consciousness; but, why should aathmaa borrow consciousness? To understand this easily, consider the sun. The sun can never become an 'object of illumination', because to become an 'object of illumination', it should borrow 'light' from some other source; but, why should the sun borrow 'illumination', when it has its own, original and permanent illumination? In the same manner, aathmaa need not borrow consciousness, when it enjoys unbroken consciousness, as its very nature.

- दृश्यत्वे - Suppose the aathmaa has got dhrusyathvam,
- द्रुष्टता कुतः - it cannot be the saakshi aathmaa, (with permanent Consciousness).

Dhrashtruthaa – saakshi status.

If aathmaa is an object of experience (dhrusyam), it can never be the saakshi aathmaa with permanent consciousness; but, the sruthi says that saakshi aathmaa has permanent Consciousness. Therefore, you will be contradicting the sruthi, if you say, that aathmaa is an object of experience.

These are very important portions, because, many Vedhaanthic students (mistakenly) look for aathma anubhavam even after a lengthy study of Vedhaantha. If a student claims "I have aathma jnaanam, because of long years of study of Vedhaantha; but, I have still not had aathma anubhavam", he is committing a major blunder, because, he is trying to make aathmaa an 'object of experience'. Sureswaraachaarya is struggling to make the seeker understand that aathmaa is never an object of experience, which means "aathma anybhava does not exist as an event in time". All these are established by this sloka.

In the second line of the verse, the Achaaryaa is establishing the yougapadhya dosha:, referred to, in the previous verse.

The poorva pakshin had suggested that aathmaa is the dhrashtaa (observer) and also dhrusyam ('observed'). He wants to say that everything in the creation is both 'observer' and 'observed' simultaneously. "Yougapadhyam" means aathmaa is 'observer' and 'observed' simultaneously ; and, once you say, aathmaa is 'observer' and 'observed' , the mind also becomes both the 'observer' and 'observed' ; then, by extension, everything in the creation, should have 'observer' and 'observed' status, by logic. So, "Ghata: dhrashtaa dhrusyathvaath aathmavath". Everything should become simultaneously 'observer' and 'observed". What is the consequence? Sureswaraachaarya says: "If everything in creation is 'observer' and 'observed' simultaneously, when everything in the creation enjoys 'observer' status, from that angle, there will be no 'observed' at all; there will be only 'observer'. There will be no 'object of experience'; there will be only total darkness. In like manner, when everything enjoys 'observed' status, there will be no 'observer' at all, which means there is no creation at all; since, to say 'there is a creation', there must be some 'observer'.

Therefore, either

- (1) there will be nothing in the world, when there is only 'observed' and no 'observer' or
- (2) there will be total darkness, when there is only 'observer' without having anything to be 'observed', if there is yougapadhyam".

- (यौगपध्ये सति) एकं द्रुक् निर्दृश्यं स्यात् - (When everything has got 'observer' and 'observed' status simultaneously) everything is observer, with nothing to be observed

Ekam dhruk (syaath) – There will be one collective observer; nirdhrusyam (syaath) – without anything for 'observation'.

According to aashrama dharma, brahmacharins, vaanaprasthaas and sanyaasins are supposed to live on bikshaa, while, the grihasthaa is supposed to be the pillar of the society supporting the other three aasramaas. He is not supposed to live on bikshaa. If the grihasthaas also are allowed to and choose to live on bikshaa, then, who will be giving the bikshaa?

Sureswaraachaarya's query here is similar: "If everything in the creation enjoys the 'observer' status, where will be the 'observed'?"

This is the first problem (of everything including aathmaa being the 'observer' and the 'observed' simultaneously), resulting from assuming everything as dhruk.

The second problem results from assuming everything as dhrusyam. What will happen? Aathmaa or anaathmaa, everything will become dhrusyam ('observed') and, when everything becomes the 'observed', there will be no observer at all. In such an eventuality, you cannot even talk about the existence of the 'observed', because, to talk about the 'observed', you need an 'observer'.

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- जगत् वा - (Or) the entire universe (consisting of both aathmaa and anaathmaa)
- असाक्षिकम् स्यात् - will be without a saakshi / an 'observer'.

In both cases, sarva vyavahaara lopa: bhavathi / If everything is 'dhruk', there will be no vyavahaaraa. If everything is 'dhrusyam' also, there will be no vyavahaaraa.

This is what the Achaaryaa said, in the introduction to verse 40 - "sarva samvyavahaara lopa:" – "all transactions will end, if everything is 'subject'; all transactions will end, if everything is 'object'".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 42:

उक्तयुक्तिं द्रुढीकर्तुं आगम उदाहरण उपन्यासः।

To confirm the reasoning fomulated, scriptural statements are advanced:

Now, Sureswaraachaarya says "I am giving all these arguments, only with the back-up of the sruthi-pramaanam".

- उक्तयुक्तिं द्रुढीकर्तुं - To reinforce all the reasoning, given before,
- उपन्यासः - (there is) the presentation (of)

- आगम उदाहरण – quotations from the sruthi.

Dhrudee karthum – to reinforce; uktha yukthi – the reasoning given earlier.

It should be noted, that, without the backing of the Veda pramaanaa, pure logic can never prove Advaita. For establishing Advaita or for establishing aham brahma asmi or for establishing jagan mithyaathvam, pure logic alone will not help. Logic will lead the seeker a long way to the goal; but, the final clinching evidence will be only saasthra pramaanam. Therefore, if a challenge is thrown "Can you establish 'brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa jeevo brahmaiva naapara.' without taking recourse to Veda pramaanam in any manner?", such a challenge cannot be accepted.

For a Vaidhika, Advaitam is a fact and knowledge because of Veda pramaanam; for those, who do not accept Veda Pramaanam, Advaitam is, at best, a wonderful hypothesis, which science cannot negate nor prove. Such a person will be an agnostic, with regard to Advaitam. That's why, the Upanishad itself says: "Naishaa tharkena madhi: aapaneeya". This 'brahma sathyam-jagan mithyaa' teaching can never be established with the help of pure logic or pure science; finally we have to take the support of aagama udhaaharanam. Hence, the Achaaryaa gives sruthi quotations.

Chapter II: Verse 42 –

आर्तं अन्यत् द्रुशे :सर्वं" नेति नेति "इति चासकृत् ।

वदन्ती निर्गुणं ब्रह्म कथं श्रुति :उपेक्ष्यते ॥ ४२ ॥

How can the sruthi be ignored which repeatedly asserts the attributeless Brahman and denies everything other than the seeing consciousness as insubstantial by saying 'Not this, not this' (B. U. II . iii. 6).

A relevant note: In his beautiful commentary to the 2nd soothraa of the Brahma Soothraas, "Janmaadhyasya yatha:", Shri Sankara Bhagavadh Padaa presents a discussion on "whether God can be proved through reasoning . Can God be proved logically or scientifically or not?". The Nyaayaa philosophers, who are great logicians, claim that God can be logically / scientifically proved. In their Nyaaya saasthraa, the logical proof is given, which is quite convincing to most interested students of the philosophy. But, Sri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, addresses the Naiyaayikaa: "Oh! Thaarkikaa! you can give reasoning and prove God to other unintelligent people. But, we, intelligent Advaitins will prove that all the logical reasoning you give to prove the existence of God, is fallacious reasoning". He proceeds to establish the fallacies in the Naiyaayikaa's argument. And, he concludes "the Advaitin's view is, that, God can never be proved by science or logic". And, therefore, we should never enter into logical discussions on the existence of God but take Veda as the pramaanam for Isvara. If an opponent says "I do not accept Veda pramaanaa", the Vaidhika has to say "I cannot otherwise prove God; if you do not accept God, you need not accept". The moment saasthraas are dropped, God also will become a blind belief. That we should remember here: "Sruthi is pramaanam for Brahma sathyam jagan mithyaa".

Sureswaraachaarya presents the related saasthra pramaanam.

- आर्त अन्यत् द्रुशे :सर्व - Everything else other than saakshi chaithanyam (aathmaa, the Observer) is insignificant/ mithyaa

Aartham – insignificant (meaning mithyaa, in this context) ; sarvam – everything else; dhruse: anyath - other than aathmaa.

'Everything else' includes ahamkaaraa also. Therefore, from the sruthi vaakyam, we come to know, that, ahamkaaraa is also mithyaa. Ahamkaaraa is property of the mind; ahamkaaraa, the mind, the chidh aabhaasaa are all mithyaa. How can the mithyaa ahamkaaraa be the property of the sathya aathmaa? The riches of the dream cannot become the attribute of the 'waker'. And, therefore, "ahamkaaraa is not the attribute of aathmaa", according to sruthi pramaanam also.

71. Chapter II, Verse 42 to 45 (13-10-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya, in these verses, is continuing with ahamkaara-aathma-viveka:. He wants to establish that ahamkaaraa is totally different from aathmaa and is not even a property of aathmaa. Ahamkaaraa is nothing but the anaathmaa mind, which is associated with the current body, because of Praarabhdhaa. The mind associated with the current body alone is responsible for the individuality; and that individuality alone gives an 'I' sense and that 'I' sense must be associated with anaathmaa alone – kshekthram alone.

Until now, the Achaaryaa gave logical reasons in support of that, the primary reason being, that, ahamkaaraa is an object of experience – 'dhrusyathvaath'. The second and equally important reason is 'aagamaapaayithvaath' - because ahamkaaraa arrives in jaagrath and svapnaa and ahamkaaraa dissolves in sushupthi. Because of this reason also, ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa; it is not 'I', the aathmaa.

Having given the reasoning, Sureswaraachaarya, is now giving sruthi support, in verses 42 (currently under discussion) and 43.

He started this portion with the introduction (sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 42)

- uktha yukthim dhrideekarthum - To reinforce the reasoning,
- aagama udhaaharana upanyaasa : - the presentation of Vedic statements / quotations (is done).

The first quotation (given in verse 42) is 'artham anyath'.

This is the well-known statement in Brahadhaaranyakaa Upanishad 'atha: anyath artham'. It occurs in three places (III.iv.2, III.v.1 and III. vii. 23) in the Upanishad.

What is the meaning of this statement?

The word 'atha: anyath' means 'everything other than this'. Naturally, the question "what does 'this' refer to?" will arise. For this, the context in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad is to be studied; we find, that, the Upanishad has described the ultimate observer Consciousness and; not only has it talked about the 'ultimate observer Witness Consciousness', but the Upanishad has also clearly said that the Consciousness can never become an 'object of experience' – adhrushto dhrashtaa, asrutha: srothaa, amatho manthaa, nanyothosthi dhrashtaa nayothosthi srothaa etc. – 'Consciousness is ever the observer, never the observed; ever the experienced, never the experienced' etc. Thus, Consciousness has been presented as 'un-experiencable Experiencer', which is ever evident, whose 'evidence' does not require any evidence; but, which, on the other hand, is the evidence for everything else.

(If every evidence requires another evidence, there will be a problem – 'infinite regress' - i.e. one particular thing will have to be evident from a second thing and the second from a third and so on. Therefore, there will have to be one ultimate 'evidence' which will not require any more further evidence or proof. This ultimate evidence of everything is Consciousness, which itself does not / need not / should not require another evidence.)

Thus, Consciousness is brilliantly defined in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad III. iv- Ushastha Braahmanam. After that, the Upanishad states "atha: anyath aartham" – "other than this changeless Witness Consciousness, everything else is mithyaa".

Anyath – 'everything other than'; the literal meaning of 'artham' is 'apam' and in this context 'mithyaa'.

Thus, the Upanishad clearly states that 'everything else, apart from Consciousness, is mithyaa'. When the Upanishad says 'everything else', the 'mind' is also included in the term 'everything else'. And, if the mind is included, the individuality sense also must be included. Therefore, the ahamkaaraa is also as much mithyaa, as any other object in the world.

Sureswaraacharya asks (the purva pakshin) "Are you not noting those powerful sruthi statements?"

- दुसे :अन्यत् सर्व आर्तम् - Everything else other than Consciousness is mithyaa.

Dhrusi: - Consciousness. What type of Consciousness? Which is aviluptha dhrusti:

Verse 41 also made a reference to a Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad statement. The term 'Na aluptha dhrushte.' is a reference to IV. iii. 23 (of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad) part of which runs – "na hi dhrashtu: dhrushte: viparilopo vidhyathe", which means "the Consciousness of aathmaa is never subject to end".

This sruthi quotation, incidentally, is important from modern science angle also. Modern science is trying to find out how Consciousness is created out of matter; because, scientists believe, that, before life arrived upon this cosmos, matter was always there. Therefore, for scientists, matter is always fundamental and (according to them) there was a time when matter was present, but, Consciousness was absent. They believe, that, at a particular moment of time, matter got into an unique combination and in that unique combination, Consciousness was one of the products generated. They are, therefore, trying to find out how to 'artificially' create Consciousness. Vedhaantha has an one-line answer to the scientists – this Brahadhaaranayaka vaakyam – 'na hi dhrashtu: dhrushte: viparilopo: vidhyathe'- "Consciousness is as eternal as matter".

The scientists may then raise a query: "If Consciousness is as eternal as matter, how come, before life came on this earth, Consciousness was absent? Immediately after 'big bang', there was no life; there could have been no Consciousness because there was no life". For this query also, Vedhaantha has an answer. It says: "Even before life came, Consciousness did exist; when life arrived, Consciousness did not 'arrive' along with life. When life arrived, Consciousness only became 'manifest' in the matter. 'Manifest Consciousness' is the 'arrival of life'. Even before life arrived, aathmaa, the Eternal Consciousness was there. All 'living beings' were there; but, when certain particular praarabhdha karmas are ready, then alone the karmaas will 'ripen', then alone there is the condition for 'manifestation of life'.

Therefore, Consciousness is eternal and other than that, everything else is aartham.

What is the conclusion based on this? Ahamkaaraa is mithyaa; how can mithyaa ahamkaaraa be the property of sathya, nithya aathmaa, as claimed by the poorva pakshir?

Sureswaraacharya is refuting ahamkaaraa as an attribute of aathma, based on sruthi. His first reference is "aathmaa is sathyam. Ahamkaaraa is mithyaa. Mithyaa ahamkaaraa cannot be the attribute of sathya aathmaa."

"Dhruse: anyath sarvam aartham" is one sruthi quotation.

The second quotation (given by the Achaaryaa) :

- "नेति नेति "इति च – Not this, not this also.

In the previous quotation, the Upanishad said, that, everything else other than Consciousness is aartham; and the Advaitin defines aartham as mithyaa (in this context). Then, all the other philosophers, including the Visishtadvaitins and Dvaitins may vociferously protest. They may say "the dictionary meaning of the word 'aartham' is 'alpam'. The word alpam only means 'finite'. Sruthi only says that, others apart from Consciousness, are 'finite'. How or why do you interpret alpam as mithyaa? We will interpret the statement only as 'aathmaa is mahaa sathyam; others are alpa sathyam'. Why do you say that they are mithyaa?"

Sureswaraacharya, in anticipation of such an objection, gives this quotation `nethi nethi'. He points out, that, not only does sruthi say `everything else is alpam'; sruthi negates them also.

`Na ithi - `Na' means `non-existent'; the statement is repeated twice – na idham, na idham. `ithi means `idham– idham referring to the objective universe, including the body, the mind and the ahamkaara. "All of them" the Upanishad says "are non-existent (na asthi)".

Whatever the sruthi negates, has to be mithyaa, because, what is sathyam can never be negated, since, if sathyam is also negated, ultimately, aathmaa also will be negated.

"Therefore", Sureswaraacharya says, "the statement `nethi, nethi' indicates `everything else is mithyaa'; therefore, ahamkaara is mithyaa".

`Nethi, nethi occurs in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (II. iii. 6) and is also repeated several times in the Upanishad. Therefore, ahamkaara is mithyaa – unreal – and can never be an attribute of aathmaa. And, therefore, the Acharya asks:

- कथं उपेक्ष्यते - How are you ignoring
- निर्गुणं ब्रह्म वदन्ती श्रुतिः - the Upanishadic statements revealing the attributeless Brahman?

Sruthi: - In this context, refers to the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad statements quoted ; vadhantee – revealing / those which reveal (adjective to sruthi- not a verbal form, but a noun, describing the sruthi vaakyams as `revealing') .

nirgunam – (adjective to Brahman) attributeless. The purva pakshin claims that Brahman or aathmaa has the attribute of ahamkaara. Since the Acharya does not agree, he uses the adjective "nirgunam", for Brahman, to stress his view.

Katham upekshyathe - How can such statements be ignored?

And, therefore, "I am not ahamkaara also" is the final conclusion, very difficult to accept and assimilate, but the absolute fact.

Chapter II: Verse 43 –

"महाभुतान्यहंकार "इत्येतत्क्षेत्रमुच्यते ।

न द्रुशे :द्वैत योगोस्ति विश्वेश्वरमतादपि ॥ ४३ ॥

The Lord says that the gross element, the ego etc., are constitutive of the field (Githa - XIII. 5 – 6). Even in His view the ultimate Consciousness does not get mixed up with the realm of duality.

In the previous verse, Sureswaraachaaryaa quoted sruthi pramaanam. In this verse, he quotes smruthi pramaanam - a support from the Bhagavadh Githa.

He says in the second line:

- विश्वेश्वरमतादपि – From the teachings of Lord Krishna also (we get the same conclusion).

Visweswara: - Lord of the Universe, meaning Lord Krishna (in this context); matham – teachings; mathaath – from the teachings.

What is the conclusion?

- द्रुशेः द्वैतयोगः न अस्ति – (that) for the witness Consciousness, 'association with ahamkaaraa' is not at all there.

Dhrusi: - The witness Consciousness (which is the real 'I'); dhruse: - For the Witness Consciousness .

The word 'yoga:' means 'sambhandha:' - 'association (as attribute)'. 'Dvaita yoga:' means 'association with dvaita prapancha'. Ahamkaaraa also is an integral part of dvaita prapancha and therefore, in this context, 'dvaita' must be understood as the ahamkaaraa, part of dvaitam. The final meaning of 'dvaita yoga:', is, therefore, 'ahamkaara sambhandha:' or 'association with ahamkaaraa'.

How and where does Krishna communicate this idea?

"महाभुतान्यहंकार" इत्येतत्क्षेत्रमुच्यते - (the Lord) says that the gross elements, the ego etc. are constituents of the objective universe (including the body)

The reference is to verses 5 & 6, of Chapter XIII, of the Bhagavadh Githa, in which, the Lord says – "Mahaa bhoothaani ahamkaara: buddhi: avyaktham eva cha | Indhriyaani dhasaikam cha pancha cha indhriya agocharaa: || Icchaa dvesha: sukham dhu:kham samgaatha chethanaa dhruthi: | Ethath kshethram samaasena savikaaram udhaahrutham" – "The five subtle elements , Ahamkaaraa, Mahath, Prakruthi, the ten sense organs, the mind, the five gross elements, desire, hatred, pleasure, pain, the body-mind complex, sentiency, fortitude – all this, enumerated above briefly, is Kshethram together with its modifications".

This is a very, very important quotation, since the Advaita Vedhaanthins refute the Nyaaya-Vaisheshika philosopher, with the help of these two verses.

Sureswaraachaarya, in this portion, uses the above two Githa verses to point out: 'ahamkaaraa: kshethram uchayathe' - 'Ahamkaaraa is presented as kshethram'.

In the quotation, the word ahamkaaraa is to be highlighted. Since ahamkaaraa is presented (by Lord Krishna) as kshethram, it has nothing to do with Kshethragnya: - 'I', the aathmaa.

To establish the fallacy in the notion 'ahamkaaraa is an attribute or part of aathmaa', Sureswaraachaarya, elsewhere (in his Brahadhaaranyaka Vaarthikam), says: "Suppose the ahamkaaraa is an integral part of aathmaa, then one need not waste one's time working for mokshaa. All philosophies and all moksha sashtraas can be given up; instead, one's time may be fully utilized in the pursuit of worldly pleasures, as long as one lives; because, if ahamkaaraa is an integral part of 'I', karma also will be an integral part of 'I' and if karma is an integral part of 'I', samsaaraa also will be an integral part of 'I'. Samsaaraa, with its consequent problems will become eternal – one will continue for ever to be subject to punar api jananam punar api maranam."

Mokshaa is possible and attainable only when ahamkaaraa is not an integral part of 'I'. Vedhaantha firmly believes and establishes that ahamkaaraa is not an integral part of 'I'; but, it is a part of only the objective universe – "ahamkaara: kshethram uchayathe". Kshethram means 'objective universe'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 44:

अधुना प्रकृतार्थ उपसंहारः।

Now, the discussion on hand is being concluded.

- अधुना - Now (after giving so many arguments),
- उपसंहारः - I would like to consolidate
- प्रकृतार्थ - the topic under discussion.

What is the topic under discussion? Aathma- anaathma viveka::; particularly aathma-sookshma sareera viveka::; and, more particularly, aathma-ahamkaaraa viveka::. (The Achaaryaa says:) "I would like to consolidate this topic" (in the following sloka).

Chapter II: Verse 44 –

एवम् एतत् हिरूक् जेयं मिथ्यासिद्धं अनात्मकम् ।

मोहमूलं सुदुर्बोधं द्वैतं युक्तिभिः आत्मनः ॥ ४४ ॥

Thus, this world of duality, falsely presenting itself, phenomenal in nature, rooted in error and eluding rational scrutiny, must be clearly distinguished from the Self through reason.

So, what is the important idea to be noted, and should also be part of our nidhidhyaasanam? It is "I' am sathyam; 'I', the Experiencer am sathyam and whatever I experience, the entire dvaitha prapanchaa is mithyaa"; dvaitha prapanchaa includes three things - the world, my own mind and my own body. All of them are mithyaa. When the word mithyaa is used, two important messages should be noted.

- (1) The word mithyaa means 'beyond comprehension'. Mithyaa is logically undefinable. In fact, what is logically undefinable only is called mithyaa-beyond comprehension.
- (2) 'Mithyaa is beyond control also'.

Whenever you are disturbed by an event and ask 'why did such an event happen?', the answer will be 'because of your karma'; if you persist in raising queries about karma, the explanation will be about your earlier janmas, the cause for the earlier janmaas being explained as karma in still earlier janmaas and so on; with the ultimate reply that Creation / karma etc. are anaadhi (beginningless). Human intellect is not able to get to the final answer; it meets a dead end, with the explanation - "jeeva is beginningless; jagath is beginningless; samsaaraa is beginningless; karma is beginningless; Isvara is beginningless" etc., which, the intellect does not seem to be able to appreciate also. That's why, it is said that all these are non-comprehensible and therefore beyond control also. After all, you can control a situation, only when you truly understand the situation.

Mithyaa being 'beyond one's comprehension' and 'beyond one's control' are the 'negative' facts about mithyaa.

The 'positive' fact (or saving grace) about mithyaa is: "Whatever happens in mithyaa field, irrespective of it being beyond my comprehension and my control, cannot, affect the real 'I'; asangoham, asangoham". If this fact is assimilated, life is an 'entertainment'; otherwise, life becomes a 'struggle'.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- जेयं – (This fact) should be ascertained repeatedly.

What fact?

- "एतत् द्वैतम् आत्मनः हिरुक्" – The entire dvaitha prapanchaa is distinct from the Self (aathmaa).

Hiruk – distinct; bhinnam.

What type of dvaitha prapanchaa? Brilliant descriptions are given.

- मिथ्यासिद्धं - It is falsely appearing.

One can never explain its (the dvaitha prapanchaa's) appearance in a logical manner. The more it is probed, the more mysterious it gets.

- अनात्मकम् - It is different from aathmaa.

Dvaitha prapanchaa is an object of experience (in contrast to aathmaa, which is ever the 'experiencer' and never the 'experienced')

- मोहमूलं - Its only source is 'ignorance'.

What a powerful statement? It means, that, as long as you are 'ignorant' of aathmaa, the dvaitha prapanchaa will exist for you; when you clearly 'know' the aathmaa, the dvaitha prapanchaa will also be reduced to aathmaa only.

Moha: (in this context) means ajnaanam and mohamoolam means ajnaana kaaryam – "that, which is the result of ignorance".

Therefore only,

- युक्तिभिः सुदुर्बोधं - It is extremely difficult to be explained, through logic.

That's why the Advaita Vedhaanthin uses the words maayaa, anirvachaneeyam etc. to describe the world. Other philosophers criticize the Advaitin over this: "The words maayaa, anirvachaneeyam etc., are used by the Advaitin, only because he is not able to give proper explanations; mayaa is a crucial word in Advaita philosophy; but the Advaitin is unable to explain the concept in clear terms; instead, he describes it as anirvachaneeyam (as that which cannot be explained); this amounts to his acceptance of his inability to explain the Creation / Universe".

The Advaitin's reaction (as Gouda Paadhaa does in his Maandookya Kaarika) to this criticism of the other philosophers, is, to, in turn, ask them to explain jagath, srushti etc. satisfactorily. But, the other philosophies also find themselves unable to meet this challenge. Their attempts at logical explanations meet with endless problems and dead ends.

World/ creation can never be explained by any one, at any time, including modern science, which agrees that 96% of the world is 'dark matter' i.e. 'inexplicable contents'.

Advaita honestly accepts this fact, denoting it as maayaa and anirvachaneeyam.

The dvaita prapancha can never be explained logically, but, is perceptually available. "That mithyaa prapancha is different from 'me', may you understand" (says the Achaaryaa).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 45:

कुतो मित्यासिद्धत्वं द्वैतस्य इति चेत् ।

How it is established that duality is a false presentation?

The Achaaryaa introduces Verse 45.

- कुतो द्वैतस्य मित्यासिद्धत्वं - "Why do you say that the clearly experienced dvaita prapancham is falsely established/ unreally existent?"
- Kutha: - Why? Mithyaa siddhathvam – falsely established / unreally existent.

'Jagan mithyaathvam' is a difficult proposition to understand, while 'brahma sathyam' is more easily accepted by most people. This is true both at the intellectual and emotional levels. "When the jagath is tangible i.e. available for perception, how can it be mithyaa?" is the doubt at the intellectual level. At the emotional level, when pleasure or pain (especially pain) is experienced, the very suggestion that the experienced pleasure or pain is mithyaa, appears absurd. No system of philosophy, other than Advaitam and one branch of Buddhism, accepts the mithyaathvam concept. Because thus the unreality of the world is accepted by one branch of Buddhism, Advaita philosophy faces the further criticism of being dubbed as pseudo-Buddhism, by other philosophies.

What is the answer? It is in the sloka that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 45 –

न प्रुथङ् न आत्मना सिद्धिः आत्मनोन्यस्य वस्तुनः।

आत्मवत् कल्पितः तस्मात् अहंकारादिः आत्मनि ॥ ४५ ॥

Nothing that is other than the Self, is found apart from the Self, nor in the Self. Therefore phenomena like the ego are fictitious constructions wrongly imagined to be the Self.

Why do you say that the dvaita prapancha is mithya? Sureswaraachaarya says: "Because I am not able to clearly define the dvaita prapancha as different from the 'observer' or as identical with the 'observer'".

Is the world existing as different from the 'observer' or as identical with the 'observer' aathma? i.e. dvaitam aathma bhinnam vaa aathma abhinnam vaa – bhinnam means 'separately existing' and abhinnam means 'existing as identical'. The Achaaryaa says "when you try to probe into this, you meet with problems".

This alone Adhi Sankaraachaarya said in his famous Viveka Choodaamani verse: "Sannaapyasannaapyubhayaathmikaa no. bhinnaapabhinaapyubhayaathmikaa no. saangaapyanangaa hyubhayaathmikaa no. mahaathbuthaa anirvachaneeya roopa" – "Maayaa is neither existent nor non-existent nor both; neither same nor different nor both; neither made up of parts nor whole nor both. Most wonderful it is and beyond description in words" (Verse 109).

"Can you say the world is existing independent of the observer?" is the question. And, Vedhaantha says "you can never prove the existence of the world independent of the observer"; because, "the existence of anything is proved only when it becomes knowable to someone, at some place and at some time" (a very important law).

There cannot be a thing which is not knowable to any one at any place and at any time i.e. the existence of an 'unknowable' thing is not possible. The very fact that you talk about a thing proves the possibility of someone 'knowing' the thing, at some place and at some time. This is what was said in Advaita Makarandhaa – an important verse – "nahi bhaanadruthe satthvam" – "Existence presupposes knowledge". Therefore, anything can be said to be existent, only when it is available for some observer at some time and some place. There are millions of stars existing, not known to us, at the present moment. But, they can all become 'knowable' to someone, at some time in the future. Therefore, we accept their existence.

The criterion for existence, in short, is 'knowability'.

'Knowability' requires a 'knower'; and 'knower' means the 'observer – aathma'.

Summing up, “anything can become existent only when it is ‘knowable’ to the ‘observer’; it can never exist separate from the ‘observer’, away from Consciousness. Therefore you cannot say anything is aathma bhinnam – separate from observer.

Then, can you say, therefore, that, things are identical with the observer? You cannot say this also – because one is subject to change and jadam, while the other is chethanam and not subject to change. Therefore, achethana, savikaara dvaitha prapancha cannot be identical with chethana, nir vikaara chaithanyam also.

The conclusion: The world cannot exist as different from the observer; world cannot exist as identical with observer.

Modern science is coming closer to Vedhaanthaa – it says: “we are not able to clearly know an object, because when it becomes minute particles, the very process of observation changes the nature of the object”. Then, can the solution be: “If you want to know an object, do not observe it”? Obviously not, since without observation and study you cannot know an object. (“You can never, never define the world; it is maayaa” says Vedhaanthaa.)

What is the solution? How to know what exactly is the world? Your instruments can never observe and understand, because, the very observation changes the world. So, drop your attempt – we have got an apouresheya pramaanam, which tells you what exactly is this world. What is that pramaanam? You, yourself. You are the observer and you are the observed. There is only one chaithanyam playing the roles of the observer and the observed. What is the example? Svapna. We enter the dream, divide ourselves into the observer and the observed. The same is true about this world also, as Verse VIII of the famous Sri Dakshinamoorthy Slokam of Adhi Sankara asserts- “Visvam pasyathi kaarya kaaranathayaa sva swami sambhandhatha: sishyaachaaryathayaa thathaiva pithru puthraadhi aathmanaa bhedhatha: svapne jaagrathi vaa esha: purusha: maayaaparibrahmitha:” – “He, who is the Purushaa, whirled in maayaa, sees in himself, the world of cause-effect diversely related as possessor and possession, father and son, and as teacher and taught, both in the states of waking and of dreaming”

72. Chapter II, Verse 45 and 46 (27-10-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is dealing with the topic of aathma-anaathma viveka; there also particularly aathma-sookshma sareera viveka; and there also particularly aathma-antha:karana viveka; and there also particularly aathma-ahamkaara viveka.

Within anaathmaa is sookshma sareeram; within the sookshma sareeram is the mind; and within the mind is ahamkaaraa. Therefore, ahamkaaraa also comes under anaathmaa only, and, therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa is taking pains to differentiate ahamkaaraa from aathmaa.

This, he said, in verse 44, "ethath aathmana: hiruk jneyam" (this world of duality is different from the Self) – he used a peculiar expression hiruk, meaning bhinnam or 'different'. Anaathmaa including ahamkaaraa should be understood as different from aathmaa.

Thereafter, the Achaaryaa makes an incidental point, but a very important point to be noted in the course of acquiring advaita jnaanam, which is this : when we clearly distinguish aathmaa and anaathmaa and establish that they are two totally distinct entities, we have partially achieved the goal of aathma-anaathma viveka: / But, in the process, we have created a new problem; since we have clearly accepted the existence of two independent and separate entities – one is aathmaa and the other is anaathmaa - and we are taking pains to differentiate them, it might appear that we ultimately accept dvaitam. To avoid arriving at such a wrong conclusion, the Advaitin has also to take pains to realize and say, that, even though anaathmaa is different from aathmaa, it does not mean it is independently existent; just as in the rope-snake example, though the rope-snake is different from the rope, the rope-snake does not exist separate from the rope.

Rope-snake is different from the rope, but, cannot exist separately from the rope; dream is different from the 'waker', but, dream cannot exist separate from the 'waker'; mirage water is different from the dry sand; but, mirage water cannot exist separately from the dry sand. In the same manner as in these examples, though the anaathma-prapancha is different from me (I am the 'observer' and the world is the 'observed'; the 'observed' world is different from 'me'), it cannot exist independent of or separate from 'me'.

"Though anaathmaa is different from aathmaa" the Advaitin has to realize and assert "anaathmaa is not existent separate from or independent of aathmaa".

Whatever is different but not separately / independently existent is called mithyaa; therefore, the world is mithyaa.

Since the world/ anaathmaa is mithyaa and though, thus, there is one sathya aathmaa and another mithyaa anaathmaa, the sathya vasthu is advaitam. In other words, though the sathya vasthu and mithyaa anaathmaa are seemingly 'two', since anaathmaa, though separate from 'me', cannot separately exist from 'me', I have to count only the aathma vasthu as sathyam. Therefore, the anaathma prapanchaa is called anirvachaneeyam.

This anirvachaneeyathvam – the 'inexplicability' – of anaathmaa, is presented by the Achaaryaa in the 45th verse, in a technical language.

The Achaaryaa says (in verse 45): "Anaathmaa is different from aathmaa; but, at the same time, it is not separately existent from aathmaa; therefore, you cannot say that anaathmaa is bhinnam from aathmaa; nor can you say it is abhinnam from aathmaa – because of this, it is anirvachaneeyam - 'bhinaa-abhinnathvaabhyaam anirvachaneeyam'".

- आत्मनः अन्यस्य वस्तुनः - Any entity other than the aathmaa
- प्लुतक् न सिद्धिः - does not exist separate from aathmaa;

At the same time:

- न आत्मना (सिद्धिः) - it does not exist as identical with aathmaa also.

Why do we say that anaathmaa does not exist as identical with aathmaa? Because,

- (1) anaathmaa is jadam ; aathmaa is chethanam;
- (2) anaathmaa is savikaaram; aathmaa is nirvikaram, and
- (3) anaathmaa is saavayavam; aathmaa is niravayavam.

Since, thus, their svaroopaas are of different natures, just as natures of darkness and light are different, anaathmaa and aathmaa cannot exist as identical - "thamas prakaasavath viruddha svabhaavayo: na aathmanaasiddhi:"

At the same time, you cannot say it is separate also, because it does not exist separately.

- आत्मवत् - Unlike the aathmaa (in this context, 'unlike' is the interpretation; not 'like' or 'similar to')

"Unlike aathmaa which is independently existent, anaathmaa is not independently existent" is the essence. Therefore, what is the conclusion?

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- अहंकारादिः आत्मनि कल्पितः : - the entire anaathma prapanchaa , beginning with ahamkaaraa is superimposed on aathmaa.

"Superimposed on aathmaa" means "superimposed on myself".

That's why Swami Dayananda Saraswathi makes an important observation. There is a popular meditation verse, known as 'nirvaana shadkam', which many Vedhaanthic students learn by heart and use for meditation. That sloka says: "Mano bhuddhi ahamkaara chitthaani na aham; na cha srothra jihve na cha ghraana nethre" etc. – "I am different from the pancha kosaas". Thereafter, the sloka goes on to say: "I am different from the pancha bhoothaas also". Thus, consistently, the Vedhaanthic meditator says: "I am different from all of them (anaathma vishayaani)". Though there is truth in the statement, because, 'I', the aathmaa, is different from the entire anaathma prapancham, this meditation can create a serious problem also. Because I am separating myself from the world, this meditation can create a sense of isolation (from the world) and consequent limitation (to oneself).

"Therefore", Swami Dayananda Saraswathi suggests "this meditation should be followed by another compensatory meditation. Whichever object in the Creation, you have separated yourself from, should be brought back into your meditation and you should claim 'maayeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathishtitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi' – implying 'the whole world is not away from me; it is included in me; it is superimposed on me'".

"I am different from the world" is one meditation it should be compensated by the equally important meditation "the whole world is rising from me / existing in me / resolves in me".

In fact, the whole world is nothing but 'I' + different naamaas and roopaas; and therefore, "I, myself, am the mind also", contrary to the earlier statement "I am not the mind". "aham annam; aham annaadha.; aham slokakrith; aham bhoomi.; aham aapa.; aham eva idhagum sarvam". Maithrayee Brahmanam (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad - II.Iv.6) asserts "idhagum sarvam yadhayam aathmaa" – "this all are this Self".

Thus, there are two meditations: 'I am different from all', followed by 'I, myself, am all'. And, when I say "everything is resting in me", I should add "even though everything rests in me, I am not affected by anything – either my body or mind - by whatever happens to my body (old age or pains) or by whatever happens in my mind. In fact, I am appearing in the form of mind with naama roopa and whatever happens in my mind cannot touch me". In short, the consolidated meditation is: "I am different from all; I am all".

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says: "ahamkaaraadhi: aathmani kalpitha:", implying, "do not run away from the mind. Comfortably include the mind in you, without being disturbed by thoughts." Only when everything is included, the problems of isolation and limitation will be resolved. Therefore, it is very important to realize "*(idham saravam) aathmani kalpitha:" – "(all are) superimposed on me". "Mathsthaani sarvabhoothaani – na cha mathsthaani bhoothaan' – (As the Lord said in the Bhagavadh Githa – Ch. IX – verses 4 & 5). This meditation is a seeming contradiction – but, has to be done.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 46:

तस्मात् अज्ञानविज्जुम्भितम् एतत् ।

Therefore, all this is the display of ignorance:

- तस्मात् - Therefore (since the entire anaathmaa is mithyaa / unreal)

Anything unreal is a product of ignorance. Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- एतत् - the entire anaathma prapanchaa (is)
- अज्ञानविज्जुम्भितम् - projected by / generated by / created by ajnaanam.

The only difference is: the praathibhaasika prapanchaa, the 'illusory rope-snake / mirage water' etc. are created by the ignorance of worldly things like rope, dry sand etc., i.e. anaathmaa ignorance causes the illusory rope-snake etc., whereas the world (vyaavahaarika prapanchaa) is projected by aathma ajnaanam. In the context of this sambhandha gadhyam, the word ajnaanam should be understood as aathma ajnaanam, which is otherwise called moolaavidhyaa or maayaa. 'Ignorance of the waker' projects the dream world; 'ignorance of the thureeyam' projects the waker's world. Therefore, the Achaaryaa says: ajnaanam / aathmaa ajnaanam / thureeya ajnaanam, (otherwise called moolaavidhyaa, otherwise called maayaa) alone projects this anaathma prapanchaa.

Chapter II: Verse 46 –

द्रुश्या :शब्दादय :क्लुप्ता द्रष्टु च ब्रह्म निर्गुणम् ।

अहं तदुभयं बिभ्रदभ्रान्तिमात्मनि यच्छति ॥ ४६ ॥

The objects are false constructions. The seer of them, namely, the Brahman is attributeless. The ego, which bears within itself both of them, sets up illusions within the Self.

So, since aathmaa is sathyam and anaathma prapanchaa is mithyaa, the existence and continuity of anaathma prapanchaa need not bother us; because, the continuation and existence of mithyaa cannot affect sathyam.

We talk about videha mukthi, freedom from punarjanmaa etc., only to a 'beginning seeker'. Because, in the beginning stages, the seeker is afraid of punar janmaa, sareeram, prapanchaa etc., because for such a seeker, the sareeram and prapanchaa are sathyam; but, ultimately, when a student clearly understands Vedhaanthaa, that, everything other than aathmaa is only mithyaa, his fear of punar janmaa and fear of the continuity of the universe should totally go away. Videha Mukthi should become irrelevant.

In other words, while the student is called to the study of Vedhaanthaa, with the promise of Videha Mukthi, ultimately, the teaching is complete only when Videha Mukthi becomes irrelevant, with the student losing his fear of sareeram or prapanchaa, when he is convinced of their mithya nature and their consequent inability to affect him in any manner. In fact, the prapanchaa turns into an entertainment, when its mithyaa nature is assimilated by the advanced seeker. For him, the anaathmaa can continue; sareeram can continue; prapanchaa can continue; even punar janmam can come. He need not worry about anything, since he has the conviction that aathmaa alone is sathyam and anaathmaa is mithyaa.

The prapanchaa will bother one only as long as one is not able to give up the sathyathva buddhi in the mithyaa prapanchaa.

Even though this is the truth, problems are created, where there are no problems, by the mind alone. The mind alone is combining the 'un-combinable' sathyam and mithyaa and is worried about the anaathmaa affecting the aathmaa – sathyam. Therefore, "mana: eva manushyaanaam kaaranam bhandha mokshayo:" – "the mind alone is the cause for the bondage or freedom of the individual".

That's why, during sleep, when the mind is resolved temporarily, no problems are experienced.

Since the problem is in the mind, the solution is also only in the mind.

Now, the question is: "How is the mind creating problems"? This is being diagnosed.

- शब्दादयः द्रुश्याः क्लुप्ताः - The external universe is ever a distinctly demarcated object (and never a subject)

Sabhdhaadhaya: dhruasyaa: - the external universe (consisting of sabhdha, sparsa, roopa, gandha etc.); Klupthaa: - Well defined objects / clearly distinguished objects / distinctly demarcated objects.

- निर्गुणम् ब्रह्म - The attributeless Consciousness(is)
- द्रष्टु च - (on the other hand) clearly, eternally and distinctly the Observer / subject.

Consciousness is distinctly the subject; the world is distinctly the object. Consciousness never becomes the object and the world never becomes the subject. The difference is clear (black and white).

Where does the 'grey' area come?

- अहं तदुभयं बिभ्रत् – The mind which carries both (Objecthood & Subjecthood)

Aham – the mind / the ahamkaaraa (in this context); ubhayam – both objecthood and subjecthood / dhrusyathvam, dhrashttruthvam cha; bibhrathu – that carries / that bears within itself.

"The mind is the carrier of both (creating problems)" is the statement. This has been interpreted by two different commentators in two different ways. Both interpretations are beautiful and therefore, both deserve study.

The difficult approach is taken up first: What do you mean by 'the mind carrying both'? Sureswaraachaarya says "the mind has got the reflection of both aathmaa, the subject (which is clearly the subject) and also the reflection of world, the object". This is a new concept; but beautiful. How do you say so? Aathmaa is reflected in the mind as chidaabhaasaa. Chidaabhaasaa is aathmaprathibhimbha: / And, the external world is reflected in the mind, in the form of the worldly thoughts. Every object forms a relevant thought in the mind, shown as vishaya aakhaara vritthi: / "If I am experiencing all of you, how does the experience take place?" Shri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, brilliantly discusses this topic in a particular chapter Buddhi Arooda Prakaranam in his Upadesa Saahasri – "really speaking, I am not perceiving you directly; but, what is happening is, that, when my eyes are open, you are entering my mind in the form of thoughts. The aakhaara vritthi – in the form of men, women, furniture etc. - is formed in the mind. The vritthi is the reflection of the (perceived) object, in the mind."

Thus, vritthi roopena anaathma prapancha: prathibhimbhitha: and aabhaasa roopena aathmaa prathibhimbhitha: - the mind carries the reflections of both aathmaa and anaathmaa. Aathmaa reflection is aabhaasaa; anaathmaa reflection is vritthi (meaning 'thought').

These two aathma prathibhimbha (the chidaabhasaa) and anaathma prathibhimbha (the vritthi) are intimately present in one mind – a common framework. And, because both of them are intimately present in the mind, we think that aathmaa and anaathmaa have got a sambhandha.

Actually speaking, aathmaa and anaathmaa – sathyam and mithyaa – asangha chaithanyam and jada prapanchaa - do not have any connection (sambhandha) at all. But, when they are present in one 'sheet' of mind, there seems to be a connection. Thus, bokthru-boghya - 'experiencer-experienced' relationship - is falsely created.

An example is a photograph of an individual taken along with a statue of a celebrity, which photograph creates a false impression that the individual and the celebrity in person have been photographed together. The film carries ubhayam – asangathve api sasanghavath. The celebrity in the example is the aathmaa, the individual is the prapanchaa and the film is the mind - even though there is no aathma-anaathma sambhandhaa, in the film called the mind, the chidhabhaasaa (the aathmaa statue) and the vritthi – which is the picture of prapanchaa - co-exist and hence the false claim is made "I am the bokthaa and the world is bhogyam", resulting in perception of problems.

The Achaaryaa says: "The problems are in the mind – (in the film of mind)". But, why the problems? Because the mind has got the capacity to carry both. Bhagavaan is a cosmic photographer, who has created this particular possibility.

Therefore:

- अहं – The mind (in this context)
- बिभ्रत् – holding / containing / carrying / possessing
- तदुभयम् – Dhrustruthvam (in the form of aathma prathibhimbaa, as chidhaabhaasaa) and dhrusyathvam (in the form of anaathma prathibhimbaa as vritthi),
- आत्मनि भ्रान्तिम् यच्छति - (and) creates a confusion regarding the real aathmaa.

Carrying the images of aathmaa and anaathmaa, the mind creates confusion/ gives a delusion regarding the real aathmaa – bhraanthim yaacchathi. What is the confusion? "Even though the real aathmaa has no connection with the world as bokthru-bhogya-sambhandha, the mind creates a feeling 'I have relationship with the world'. The consequence: Many 'relationships' are struck, resulting in mental disturbances, even though 'I' am asangha: - "asangoham asangoham na maathaa na pithaa na bandhu: na puthram na guru: na sishya:"

This is one interpretation of 'ubhayam'.

There is a second interpretation, relatively simpler, (discussed elaborately in an earlier Upadesa Saahasri class).

Originally speaking, 'I', the aathmaa, am the Subject / illuminator / observer Consciousness, and mind is the 'object' of my experience; i.e. 'I' am the 'observer' / 'subject' and the mind is the 'observed' / 'object'. But, when I am observing the mind, through the observation, I do another job; I lend my reflection- the 'chidhaabhaasaa' - to the mind and when my reflection is formed in the mind, the inert mind becomes a sentient mind; and, once the mind becomes sentient, the mind is capable of observing the world.

'I' am not observing the world ; 'I' am observing the mind only; and, while 'I' am observing the mind, the mind gets the chidhaabhaasa and with the chidaabhaasa, mind becomes the 'observer' and mind observes the world; in effect, the mind becomes the 'subject' and the world becomes the 'object'.

Thus, the mind is standing in between 'I' and the world and the mind being an intermediary entity, it has got both the 'object' status and the 'subject' status. From the standpoint of 'I', the aathmaa, the mind is the 'object' and from the standpoint of the world, mind becomes the 'subject'. It is therefore both 'subject' and 'object'.

To understand this, an example can be cited: The moon on a full moon day, when the bright moon illumines the earth; but, does the moon have 'brightness' or 'light' of its own? It is a well known fact, that, the moon does not have an illumining capacity of its own; it only has borrowed illumination from the sun. Therefore, the sun is illumining the moon and when the moon is illumined by the sun, it borrows the light from the sun and becomes the illuminator of the earth. So, if the query 'is moon an object of illumination or subject?' is made, it has to be clarified 'from which standpoint?'. From the standpoint of the sun, moon is the 'illumined object' and from the standpoint of the earth, the moon is the 'illuminator subject'. Therefore moon ubhayam bibhrathu. Just as the moon, in the example, has got twofold characteristics, the mind also has got twofold statuses – it is dhrusyam, as well as dhrushtaa.

So what? The mind is dhrashtaa with borrowed Consciousness; aathmaa is also dhrashtaa but with original Consciousness. Thus, within the body, there are two 'observers' – one is aathmaa, the 'observer' of the mind, with original Consciousness and the second is the 'mind', the 'observer' of the world, with borrowed Consciousness – similar to two illuminators – the sun and the moon – being in the sky. "Ritham pibhanthau sukruthasya loke guhaam pravishtau parame paraardhe; chaayaa thapo brahmavidho vadhanti" – "The knowers of Brahman say, that, jeevaathmaa and Paramaathmaa, which are like shade and light, have entered the intellect within the supreme abode of Paramaathmaa, experiencing the result of their own actions in the body" (Kathopanishad – I. iii.1); "dvaa suparnau sayuja sakaayaa" – "Two birds with beautiful wings, which are close friends" (Mundakopanishad – III. I. 1) – all such Upanishadic statements refer to the two observers – (1) aathmaa and (2) the mind.

Because both of them are 'observers', 'confusion' results. We get confused between the secondary 'observer', the mind and the primary 'observer', the aathmaa. Wisdom consists in 'discrimination' between the two. This is the essence.

73. Chapter II, Verse 46 to 49 (03-11-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya, in this 46th verse, is pointing out that the mind is the cause of all the problems; because, the mind happens to be the intermediary entity which stands between aathmaa, the eternal dhruk / 'observer' and the external world, which is eternally the 'observed'.

With regard to the aathmaa and the world, their statuses are well defined and distinct. Aathmaa – the Consciousness, is ever the 'observer'; the external inert world is ever the 'observed'; whereas, only the mind, which is the intermediary entity, is enjoying the dual status of both the 'observer' and the 'observed'.

This dual status of the mind is responsible for the creation/emergence of ahamkaaraa, the pseudo-self/ the false self/the secondary self, otherwise called the ego. And, this ego, the secondary self, alone is causing the havoc, which is called samsaaraa. Therefore, until we clearly understand the pseudo-self and dismantle it properly, the problems of samsaaraa will not be solved.

Now, the next question is: "how does the mind enjoy the dual status?"

We have already seen that the mind also happens to be as inert as the external world and therefore, the mind should really come under dhrusyam – an object of observation only. For 'me', the aathmaa/ saakshi, the mind is dhrusyam – an object of observation/experience. But, even though the mind is really a dhrusyam and therefore, must be as much part of the world as a table or a chair or a pot, the mind enjoys another status also.

What is that status?

In the proximity of the primary Self ('I', the aathmaa) the mind not only gets illumined/experienced; but, since the mind is capable of borrowing 'consciousness' from 'me', 'I' lend 'consciousness' to the mind, as even as 'I' become aware of the mind. This is not a job that 'I' do; but, by 'my' mere presence, the mind not only gets awared or experienced; but also borrows chaithanyam from 'me'. With this borrowed chaithanyam, known technically as chidhaabhaasaa or prathibhimbha chaithanyam, the mind, which is intrinsically inert, becomes, for all practical purposes, a sentient entity – so sentient, that it is capable of becoming 'observer' no. 2 – the second or pseudo-self. To cite an example, the moon, which is intrinsically non-luminous, in the presence of the self-luminous sun, becomes bright and also acquires the capacity to illumine the earth. In a similar manner, the mind borrows sentiency from the primary Self and with this borrowed sentiency, the mind (the pseudo self) becomes capable of functioning as the secondary 'observer', which is called ahamkaaraa. It is this mind which operates through the five sense organs and perceives the world.

Thus, within every individual body, there are two observers – one is the primary observer, which is the non-localized all-pervading Consciousness and the other is the secondary observer, which is the localized pseudo ahamkaaraa.

This primary 'I' and the secondary 'I' are very elaborately discussed by Adi Sankara, in his treatise, Upadesa Saahasri, in almost every chapter, even to the extent of tiring the student with the subject, since he considers it extremely important for the Vedhaantic seeker to differentiate between the saakshi 'I' and the ahamkaaraa 'I'.

The two – the saakshi 'I' and the ahamkaaraa 'I' - are physically inseparable. The nearest experience of the primary 'I', unadulterated with the pseudo 'I', is in the 'deep sleep' state - sushupthi avasthaa. In the 'deep sleep' state alone, one remains as the primary 'I', the saakshi 'I', the non-localized 'I', the non-individualized 'I', the akartha-aboktha-asanghaa 'I'. But, the moment one wakes up, the pseudo secondary 'I' also rises and the primary 'I' gets mixed up with the rising, the problem-causing pseudo secondary 'I'. In jaagrath avasthaa, one experiences a mixture of the real 'I' and the pseudo 'I'.

Sureswaraachaarya says, that, it is this ahamkaaraa, enjoying the dual status of (1) dhrusyam, i.e. the 'observed', from the point of the primary 'I' and (2) dhruk, the 'observer', from the standpoint of the world, that is causing the problems:

- अहं तदुभयं बिभ्रत् - The mind /the ahamkaaraa / the pseudo 'I', carrying the dual status (and in the process missing the original 'I'- described in the Maandookya Upanishad - verse 7 - as na antha: pragnyam na bahi: pragnyam etc.)
- भ्रान्तिं यच्छति - becomes the cause of confusion/ delusion,
- आत्मनि - with regard to the primary Self.

Ahamkaaraa can be a blessing, if it is utilized deliberately with the knowledge 'it is a temporary vyaavahaarika medium that I am using'. If with the firm knowledge and conviction 'it is the pseudo I and not the real I', one uses ahamkaaraa, then one is a jeevan-muktha: | Every transaction / vyavahaaraa – even Vedhaanthic study – requires ahamkaaraa. Using ahamkaaraa with wisdom is jeevan mukthi: / Messing up with ahamkaaraa, because of confusion, is samsaaraa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 47:

ततः एव अयं अभिन्नस्य आत्मनः भेदबुद्धिः ।

It is by virtue of this that there is the idea of plurality with reference to the Self, though intrinsically it is absolutely one and undivided:

ततः एव - Because of this alone /the delusion caused by the pseudo Self alone (is the following problem).

What is the problem?

If the questions "Is 'I', the aathmaa singular or plural? How many aathmaas /Selves are there?" are raised, if one is aware of the primary Self/ the aathmaa / the saakshi chaithanyam, such a jnaani will reply: "aathmaa is only one, even though bodies are many". And not only would such a jnaani have aathma advaita darsanam; this advaita darsanam would lead to aathma samathva darsanam also.

Verse 29 – Ch. VI of the Bhagavadh Githa, "sarvabhoothastham aathmaanam sarvabhoothaani cha aathmani eekshathe yoga yukthaathmaa sarvathra samadarsana:" – "One whose mind is disciplined through meditation perceives the Self in all beings and all beings in the Self. He has the same vision everywhere" and Verse 18–Ch.V. "Vidhyaa vinaya sampanne braahmane gavi hasthini suni chaiva svapaake cha pandithaa: samadarsina: - "The wise see the same Brahman in a brahmin who has knowledge and humility, in a cow, in an elephant, in a dog and in a dog-eater", are both relevant and may be recalled, in this context.

Advaita darsanam and sama darsanam will be the consequences of 'knowing the primary Self'.

If, on the other hand, the primary Self is lost sight of and one is carried away by the pseudo secondary self, then, for such an individual, aathmaa will not be One, but will be plural. Advaita darsanam will be overpowered by dvaita darsanam and sama darsanam will be overshadowed by visama darsanam. The dvaita, visama darsanam is the cause of all the mischief in the mind; the tendency for comparison with others, jealousy, attachment, hatred etc. are all results of this dvaita-visama darsanam. Adi Sankara, in his Bhaja Govindam, remarks: "thvayi mayi cha anyathra eko Vishnu: vyartham kupyasi mayi asahishnu:" - "In you, in me, everywhere, there is but one Vishnu. Unable to bear with me, you get angry with me in vain". "Eko Vishnur mahadbhootham pruthangboothanyanekasa: threen lokaan vyaapya bhoothaathmaa bhungthe visvabhugavyaya:" is another well-known sloka, conveying a similar message.

Sureswaraachaarya says, that, all these are lost sight of, because of ignorance of the primary Self (thatha: eva).

- आत्मनः इयं भेदबुद्धिः - there is this misconception of plurality and divisiveness, with regard to aathmaa, the Self,

Iyam – this (a pronoun and adjective to beda buddhi:); Beda buddhi: - sense of plurality and divisiveness.

- अभिन्नस्य - (which Self is , really speaking) undivided / indivisible .

This is further clarified in the verse that follows.

Verse 47 – Chapter II :

- द्रुक् एका सर्वभूतेषु भाति द्रुश्यैः अनेकवत् ।
- जलभाजनभेदेन मयूकसूक् विभेदवत् ॥ ४७ ॥

Consciousness, which is one, appears as manifold owing to association with the multiplicity of objective phenomena. It is like the same sun appearing many owing to reflection in many vessels of water.

- सर्वभूतेषु द्रुक् एका - In all physical bodies, the original Self / the observer is only one.

The 'observer' talked of here, is the Kshethragnya:, mentioned in Ch.XIII, of the Bhagavadh Githa - "Idham sareeram kshethram ithi abhidheeyathe; ethath ya: vetthi tham thadhvidha: kshethragnya: ithi praahu:"- " This body is known as Kshethram. There is a conscious principle, which knows this body. Wise men declare that knower principle to be Kshethragnya:" (verse 2) and "Kshethragnyam cha api maam viddhi sarvakshethreshu"- "May you also know this Kshethragnya: to be Myself obtaining in all the bodies" (verse 3 – part).

The observing, changeless Consciousness is the only one 'Self'. But, even though the chaithanyam is only One,

- अनेकवत् भाति - (It) appears as though pluralistic / many / divided,

Who is responsible for this aberration?

- द्रुश्यैः - because of the mind which is really an object only.

Though the mind is only an 'object', it appears as a 'subject', because of chidh aabhaasaa ; instead of 'perceiving' the all-pervading 'Original Consciousness', the individual has a tendency to turn his attention to the localized 'Reflected Consciousness' in the mind, which is limited and subject to arrival and departure etc.

Why does the mind create the problems, but, the external objects do not? Because, the external objects do not have chidhaabhaasaa, while the mind has.

An example is given by the Achaaryaa, for this phenomenon.

- मयूकस्सक् विभेदवत् – (This is) similar to the (apparent) plurality of the sun,

Mayookam – rasmi: / beam of light / ray of light; sak – maala / garland ; mayookassrak – the one that is wearing the maalaa of beams of light and, therefore, meaning 'the sun']
Vibedham – plurality.

- जलभाजनभेदेन - caused by reflections in many vessels of water.

Jalabhaajanam – vessel of water.

Even though the original sun is ekam (only one), its reflections can be anekam (many).

In the treatise Hasthaamalakeeyam, the author, Hasthaamalakaa, an immediate disciple of Adi Sankara, teaches the entire Vedhaanthaa - conveying all important topics - in just twelve verses, with the single dhrushtaantham of the sun and its reflections.

(An incidental note: On this well-known simile of the sun and its reflections, Swami Chinmayananda brings out a fact in a humorous manner. When the sun gets reflected in a bucket of water, the bucket can be compared to the sthoola sareeram, the water to the sookshma sareeram, the sun to the Original Consciousness/ the chaithanyam and the soorya prathibhimham in the water to the chidhaabhaasaa. If the bucket is kicked and the water disturbed, the reflection of the sun is obviously lost, but, the real sun is, of course, not affected. Punning on the phrase 'kicking the bucket', "when death occurs", Swamiji points out, "the sthoola sareeram loses the sookshma sareeram/ the mind – and consequently the chidhaabhaasaa. But, just as the physical action of 'kicking the bucket' disturbs only the reflection of the sun and not the original sun, the metaphorical 'kicking the bucket' (used in the sense 'occurrence of death') does not affect the existence of the original Consciousness / chaithanyam, but only the chidaabhaasaa").

In the example given by Sureswaraacharya, in this verse, the plurality of the containers, is transferred to the soorya, which itself is really not plural. Aathma bahuthvam is also a similar misconception. This confusion is not only for lay-people; it is maintained even by certain other systems of philosophy. Saankhyaa talks about pluralistic aathmaa. Pathanjali Maharishi, who is considered to be a great philosopher, who has given the Yoga soothraas and who has talked about nirvikalpaka samaadhi, also talks of aathma darsanam in samaadhi; but, the aathmaa he talks about is pluralistic aathmaa. Nyaayaa, vaiseshikaa, poorva meemaamsaa, dvaitha darsanam of Madhvaachaaryaa and visishtaadvaita darsanam of Ramaanujaachaaryaa – all of them talk of 'many' aathmaas. In Advaita alone, Aathma ekathvam is stressed, plurality being accepted by Advaitam only in relation to chidhaabhaasa, the fake aathmaa/pseudo self.

The example "in spite of the plurality of the reflection, the non-duality of the sun is continuing", also stresses "the dvaitha aathmaa need not become advaitam; advaitam is not a goal to be accomplished; but, the 'oneness' is an established fact, and will continue, in spite of the seeming plurality at the level of the pseudo self".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 48:

- यथोक्त अर्थस्य प्रतिपत्तये दृष्टान्तः ।

To facilitate the understanding of the principle enunciated, an analogy is offered:

- दृष्टान्तः - ('I shall give you', the Aachaaryaa says,) 'an example',
- प्रतिपत्तये - for the clear understanding
Prathipatthi: - jnaanam
- यथोक्त अर्थस्य - of the above-mentioned idea (the non-duality of aathma, in spite of the plurality of the chidhabhaasaa / reflection).

"Plurality of ahamkaaraa cannot disturb the non-duality of the real 'I'" is the message, which Sureswaraachaarya wants to establish/clarify with an example. The Aachaaryaa gives the example in the verse following.

Chapter II: Verse 48 –

मित्रोदासीनशत्रुत्वं यथैकस्यान्यकल्पनात् ।

अभिन्नस्य चित्ते :तद्वत् भेदोन्तःकरणाश्रयः ॥ ४८ ॥

The same individual becomes a friend, a stranger and an enemy, in relation to three classes of other individuals. Even so, the same undivided consciousness appears divided owing to association with a plurality of minds.

What is the example? Imagine a particular person observed by different people; each one judges/assesses the person according to one's own raagha-dvesha (we are judged by people all the time; we can never stop others from judging / categorizing / labeling us – since 'judging' is the job of human intellect – especially intellects which are not otherwise employed); each observer gives a label to the observed person. Sureswaraachaaryaa says "whatever labels the others give me, are not going to affect me at all".

- यथा - In the same manner as
- मित्र(त्वं) - feeling of friendship (or)
- उदासीन(त्वं) - feeling of indifference (or)
- शत्रुत्वं - feeling of enmity
- अन्यकल्पनात् - is superimposed by different people,
- एकस्य - on one and the same individual,

Whatever be the 'labels' given by others to a particular individual and however much the 'labels' differ, there is no real bedha or difference in the individual himself. His personality will be the same. If the 'labels' really belong to the individual, he will have to have inconsistent attributes, which is logically not possible. One and the same locus cannot have opposite attributes. Mithrathvam and sathruthvam cannot co-exist; they are not the individual's attributes; but are only super-impositions – mithyaa attributes, which cannot cause any difference in the locus. (This fact will have to be applied to the aathmaa also).

In to-day's context, marriages and divorces furnish typical examples. Even as a married couple push for a divorce, because of misunderstanding between the two, there may be suitors waiting to marry the divorcee, proving that one and the same person evokes different feelings in different people. Also incidents are not lacking, where a love-marriage ends in a divorce and separation – proving that the same person can have different feelings towards his/her spouse at different times.

(An incidental moral: One cannot be carried away by others' opinions about oneself, since others' opinions will necessarily be very varied and one cannot please all others. The best option is to live according to saasthric injunctions, turning a blind eye to others' reactions.)

- तद्धत् - in the same way,
- भेदः - differences
- अभिन्नस्य चित्तेः - of one and the same chaithanyam,
- अन्तःकरणाश्रयः - are all attributes belonging to the mind (but are transferred to 'I').

Looking at the properties of the reflected Consciousness (chidhaabhaasaa), we have a tendency to transfer the attributes of the chidhaabhaasa to the chith, which is the real 'I' and which is free from all attributes – Na me dvesha raaghau, na me lobamohau, madho naive me naive maascharya bhaava: na dharmo na chaartha na kamo na moksha: chidhaanandha roopa: sivoham sivoham. Because of the antha:karanam – the mind – we transfer or super-impose attributes to the attributeless chith.

Even an advanced Vedhaanthic student sometimes says: "I know I am Brahman, but, I have got vipareetha bhaavanaas which I have to remove. I have to do vaasanaa kshayam". But this statement is fallacious. Vipareetha bhaavanaas and vaasanaas belong to anatha:karana only and once the student has disengaged himself from the anatha:karana (as he claims he is Brahman), how can he talk about vaasanaa kshaya and vipareetha bhavaanaa nivritthi:? Such a statement will only show that saasthraas have not still been properly internalized and that more intensive sravanam, mananam and nidhidhyaasanam are called for.

Chapter II: Verse 49 –

अपहारो यथा भानो :सर्वतो जलपात्रकै :।

तत्क्रियाकृतिदेशाप्ति :तथा बुद्धिभि :आत्मन :॥ ४९ ॥

Just as the sun is taken possession of, as it were, by several vessels of water and seems to enter into the place, form and operations of each of them, so it seems to happen to the Self, in relation to the minds.

Here, Sureswaraachaarya says "ahamkaaraa is fake self and the fake / false self consequently should have no power and the original / real Self must be strong. i.e. normally speaking the 'weak' fake self, should not have the capacity to overshadow the 'strong' real Self. But, because of maayaa, the ahamkaaraa which is really mithyaa, becomes so powerful as to overshadow the real, free 'I'; the result: what is prevalent is the samsaari 'I', the ahamkaaraa only". In day-to-day transactions, the mithyaa ahamkaaraa robs the real 'I'.

- यथा - Just as
- भानो: अपहार: - the 'taking away' (hiding) of the real sun
- सर्वत: - totally (takes place)
- जलपात्रकै: - by the bowls of water,

How do they (the bowls of water) do that? They create reflections – 'pseudo' suns; and we are absorbed in the 'pseudo' suns and consequently miss the original sun.

The sun, which has now 'descended' to the bowl (the fake sun), borrows the attributes of the holder.

- तत् क्रिया आकृति देशाप्ति: - by the sun acquiring the movements, the shapes and places of each of the containers,

When the bowl is moved from one place to another, the sun (reflected in the bowl) also seems to move from place to place.

In the same manner, when the chidaabhaasaa goes from one place to another, the real 'I' also seems to go from one janma to another. In reality, 'I' am incapable of punarjanama, which, in essence, is 'traveling from one body to another', which is possible only for the chidhaabhaasa – the pseudo 'I'. The real 'I' does not go from one janma to another and therefore does not require videha mukthi. An informed Vedhaanthin will not, therefore, desperately work for avoidance of punar janma. Such an attempt would be similar to remove poison from the rope-snake.

- तथा - in the same manner

The sthoola sareeram is the vessel; the buddhi is the water in the bowl ; 'I' am the original sun – not the temporary reflection.

- बुद्धिभिः - because of the minds / intellects,
- आत्मनः (क्रियाकृतिदेशाप्तिः भवति) - for the Self, (the acquiring/ borrowing of the shape, form and locus of the chidhaabhaasaa occurs)

Really speaking 'I' am sathyam, jnaanam, anantham brahma.

74. Chapter II, Verse 49 to 52 (10-11-2007)

In these verses, Sureswaraachaarya points out that ahamkaaraa is the cause of all the problems.

In this context, by the word ahamkaaraa, we mean the 'mind with chidaabhaasa' - especially the mind. Though in Thathva Bodhaa, ahamkaaraa is defined as a particular type of thought, known as 'I' thought, here, the word ahamkaaraa does not mean the 'I' thought, but, means the object of 'I' thought.

The object of 'I' thought is the ahamkaaraa, which is the 'mind plus chidaabhaasa'. And, in this also, the Achaaryaa is concentrating on the mind, which is the cause of all problems.

Sureswaraachaaryaa also gives the reason for that, the reason being "mind is standing in between the aathmaa and the world". The world is always an 'object' for me; aathmaa is always saakshi, the 'subject'; aathmaa is ever the dhruk and the world is ever the dhrusyam; the intermediary mind, like the doorsill, is in between the dhruk and the dhrusyam and because of this intermediary status, it enjoys both the subjecthood as well as the objecthood. From the standpoint of aathmaa, the saakshi, the mind becomes the object and from the standpoint of the world, the mind becomes the subject. Thus, the mind is 'observed' by the saakshi and is the 'observer' of the world. This 'observer' makes the cause for the confusion. How does this confusion come? Because the mind also serves as observer, there are two observers within the individual – one is the original observer, the aathmaa - saakshi and the second is the mind which has got the observer status, blessed by the aathmaa. And, because of the proximity of the two observers, the attribute of one observer is transferred to the other - similar to water, added to milk, acquiring the colour of the milk, because of its proximity to the milk. The attributes of the secondary observer, i.e. the mind, are transferred to the aathmaa, the primary observer. Thus, there is an interaction between the aathmaa and the mind - aathmaa lends chaithanyam to the mind and the mind seemingly lends its attributes to the aathmaa. What are the attributes transferred? The limitation of the mind is transferred to the limitless aathmaa; the modifications of the mind are transferred to the non-changing aathmaa; the plurality of the mind is transferred to the non-dual aathmaa. Because of these 'transfers' (the attributes are not really transferred; but, appear transferred because of confusion) the original aathmaa is obscured, since we lose sight of the original aathmaa, just as the screen is lost sight of, when we are lost in the movie.

Sureswaraachaarya gives the well-known example: "just as the original sun is forgotten, when we are absorbed in the images of the sun reflected in containers of water and the attributes of the reflecting media are transferred to the sun, even though the sun does not have these attributes". He mentions (in verse 49) three attributes of the reflecting media, that are transferred to the sun – (1) kriyaa – motion (2) aakruthi – shape and (3) desa - location. The motion, the form and the location of the water containers are transferred to the sun. In the same way, the attributes of the mind (comparable to the water containers) get transferred to the aathmaa (comparable to the sun).

Does that mean that the essence of the teaching is 'to abolish or ban the secondary observer, the mind?' No; we need not, in fact, should not destroy the ahamkaaraa / mind, since transactions are possible only through the mind. The concept of mano naasam is self-deception. "Keep the mind; but, understand that the attributes of the mind do not belong to 'me'". This is called aathma – anaathma viveka: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 50:

न च विरुद्धधर्माणाम् एकत्र अनुपपत्तिः। किं कारणम् ।

There is no impossibility in contradictory attributes co-inhering in the same substratum. Because:

Sureswaraachaarya foresees an objection: "If aathmaa is the limitless entity, how can the attribute of 'limitation', belonging to the mind, be transferred to the aathmaa? One of the attributes of the mind is limitation and if 'limitation' is transferred to the aathmaa, then, in that event, aathmaa will have two opposite attributes – the original attribute of 'limitlessness' and the transferred attribute of 'limitation'. How can one and the same aathmaa possess two opposite attributes? How can both parichchinnathvam and aparichchinnathvam co-exist in one aathmaa? Similarly, how can plurality and non-duality co-exist in one and the same aathmaa - non-duality being the original nature of aathmaa and plurality, an attribute transferred from the mind? There is a law that 'opposite attributes cannot co-exist in one locus'. And, therefore, how can totally opposite attributes be transferred from the mind to the aathmaa?"

Sureswaraachaarya says "I will answer".

- विरुद्धधर्माणाम् एकत्र अनुपपत्तिः - Co-existence of contradictory attributes in the same locus/substratum

Viruddha dharmaanaam – of contradictory/ opposite attributes; ekathra – in one and the same substratum/ locus; anupapatthi: - co-existence.

"Viruddha dharmaanaam ekathra anupapatthi:" - "(Is this) co-existence of opposite attributes in the same locus (possible)?" - is the doubt of the student.

The teacher's answer is:

- न च - Such a doubt need not be entertained .

In the case of aathmaa, these opposite attributes - such as 'advayathvam – sadhvayathvam' – can co-exist. Why? Because, one attribute is sathyam and the other is mithyaa (super-imposed). Super-imposed opposite attribute can happily co-exist with the sathya original attribute. The dry sand can have mirage water flowing over the sand – the sand can continue to be dry and the mirage water can continue to flow over the dry sand. If a question 'how can dry sand and wet water co-exist?' is raised, the reply will be 'the water is mithyaa, while the sand is relatively sathyam. Therefore, the sand can continue to be dry, in spite of the mithyaa water flowing over it'. The 'limitlessness' of aathmaa can co-exist with the super-imposed 'limitation', because the super-imposed 'limitation' is mithyaa, while the 'limitlessness' of aathmaa is sathyam.

- किं कारणम् - Why (is there no problem in this co-existence)?

The answer is given in the following verse.

(Chapter II): Verse 50 –

कल्पितानां अवस्तुत्वात् स्यात् एकत्र अपि संभवः।

कमनीया असुचिः स्वाद्वी इति एकस्यां इव योषिति ॥ ५० ॥

Fancied constructions, even if contradictory, can very well be referred to the same locus. The same maiden may be looked upon as charming, impure and delicious.

When it is said, that, the 'limitation' of the mind is transferred to the aathmaa, it is not really transferred; but, because of delusion, it is 'imagined' as transferred to aathmaa ; in other words, aathmaa acquires only 'imaginary' limitation; so also plurality of aathmaa, which is also only 'imaginary'.

- कल्पितानां अवस्तुत्वात् - Because of the mithyaa nature of the imagined /superimposed attributes,

Avasthu – mithyaa; Avasthuthvam – nature of being mithyaa; kalpithaa: – what are imagined or superimposed.

An example is the mirage water.

Therefore only:

- एकत्र अपि संभवः स्यात् - (they) can co-exist in the same substratum

Ekathra – in one and the same locus; sambhava: syaath - is possible.

An imaginary attribute can co-exist in the same substratum with the real nature of the substratum, even if the imaginary attribute is opposite/ contradictory to the real nature.

Sureswaraachaarya gives an example; a similar example has been given earlier (in verse 48): 'one and the same person is looked upon as a friend by someone and as an enemy by certain others'. "Enemy status' and 'friend status' are opposite attributes; how can one and the same person simultaneously enjoy these opposite statuses? Is it not illogical? " If such a question is asked, the answer is "both statuses are not intrinsic properties / attributes present in a person, unlike height, weight etc. of the person (which are intrinsic), but, they (sathruthvam and mithrathvam) are superimposed by others; i.e. they are mental projections of others. Therefore, they can co-exist in one and the same person".

Here, in this verse, a slightly different example is given by the Achaaryaa.

- एकस्यां इव योषिति - In one and the same woman, Yoshiith – sthree / naaree / woman.

In one and the same innocent woman, three different personalities are seen.

- कमनीया - (One person sees) a woman worthy of being loved / deserving to be loved.
- अशुचिः - (Another person, having developed an aversion for worldly desires, sees her as) a filthy person.
- स्वाद्धी - (A dog sees the woman as) delicious food.
- इति (स्यात्) - Such a thing happens.

The body of the woman itself does not have any one of these attributes as intrinsic ; but, from the different viewpoints of the different viewers, it 'acquires' the three different attributes and even though the attributes are of contradictory / opposite nature, they co-exist in the same person. Kamaneeyaa and asuchi: respectively denote lovability and filthiness – which are of opposite nature; but, co-existing in the same person. This is because they are imaginary mental projections – kalpithathvaath.

In the same manner, though aathmaa does not have attributes of its own ("na me dvesharaagau na me lobhamohau madho naiva me naiva maathsaryabhaava: / na dharmo na chaartha na kaamo na moksha: chidaanandaroopa: sivoham sivoham" – Nirvaana shatkam of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadaa) attributes are transferred to it from ahamkaaraa - as raaghee, dveshee etc. Even mokshaa is the attribute of the mind only; confused mind is baddha: and enlightened mind is muktha:; aathmaa is neither baddha: nor muktha: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 51:

न च अयं क्रिया कारक पलात्मक आभास ईषदपि प्रमार्थवस्तु स्पृशति तस्य मोहमात्र उपादानत्वात् ।

This fictitious presentation of the nature of action, factors involved in action and the result of action, do not affect ultimate reality in the least, being solely the products of delusion.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is leading the student to the 'binary format' perception, since, if one develops the 'binary format' perception, one's problems cease.

What is meant by the term 'binary format' perception? The conviction: "I am the saakshi-aathmaa and everything observed by 'me' is anaathmaa". 'Binary' means 'dual' or 'consisting of two' – (1) aathmaa - 'I' and (2) anaathmaa – everything else, the world, which is 'observed', the body, which is 'observed' and the mind, which is also 'observed'. This entire anaathmic prapanchaa, consisting of the world, the body and the mind, is only aabhaasa:/mithyaa / of a lower order of reality. Compared to the aathmaa/thureeyam, mind is of a lesser order of reality and is called vyaavahaarika sathyam.

- अयं – This entire universe
- आत्मकः - which is in the form of the three components,

What are the components?

- कारका(णि) – various objects which are used for performing karma / accessories for Karma

Kaarakam is an expression used in the saasthraas to denote objects that are used for performing action; body is a kaarakam, since it is used for karma. Mind is a kaarakam, used for karma; sense organs are also kaarakaani, used for karma. Even family members are kaarakaani, used for samashti karma.

When the kaarakaani join together, what is born?

- क्रिया - Varieties of karmaani – loukika or vaidika / actions – secular or sacred (whether kaayikam, maanasam or vaachikam)

The 'kriyaa-kaarak' in the text is consciously has been changed as 'kaaraka-kriyaa', while interpreting, since kriyaa is born out of kaarakam. Kaaraka janyaa is kriyaa.

And, kriyaa janyam is palam i.e. action produces result. Varieties of actions produce varieties of results.

- पलानि - results.

This body itself is a palam of poorva janma karma, and will become a kaarakam, with regard to the next janma. Thus, every object is both kaarakam and palan. The whole dhrusya prapancha is, therefore, Kriyaakaarakapalaathmaka: - of the nature of (1) factors involved in action, (2) actions and (3) the results of action.

Such an universe is,

- आभासः - mithyaa (from the standpoint of thureeya chaithanyam – the aathmaa).

If the question "Is the world real or unreal?" is raised, it cannot be answered straightaway. It has to be countered: "Is the question from the stand-point of the body-mind or from the standpoint of aathmaa?" If it is from the standpoint of the body, the world is mahaa-real, since whatever happens in the world affects the body; from the standpoint of the mind also, the world is very real, since events in the world influence the mind also. From body-mind standpoint, the world is, therefore, real. From the thureeyam standpoint only, the world is unreal. In the un-enlightened stages (when the perception is the triangular format of jeeva-jagath-Isvara), the world would be real; but, when the binary format (of aathmaa and anaathmaa) is reached, the universe is aabhaasa: / mithyaa.

But, why is it aabhaasa: / mithyaa? Sureswaraachaarya points out:

- मोहमात्र उपादानत्वात् - Because, it is created by avidyaa or maayaa.

It is a product of ignorance; at the samashiti level it is a product of maayaa.

- Moham (in this context) – ajnaanam / moolaavidhya / maayaa
- Upaadhaanam – Kaaranam.

The universe is projected by ignorance and is therefore mithyaa.

If, then, the question "how do you call this tangible / perceived / useful world as mithyaa?" is raised, the answer can be found in the Maandookya Kaarika, where Goudapaadaachaarya has discussed this elaborately, by giving the example: "Just as a dreamer, in dream, will never accept the dream as unreal, in a similar manner, the ignorant, during ignorance, will never accept the world as unreal. But, on waking up, i.e. on getting enlightened, the world will be perceived as mithyaa." (The reference is to Kaarikaa 16 – Aagamaprakaranam – Maandookya Karikaa: "anaadhimaayaya suptha: jeeva: prabudhyathe ajam anidram asvapnam advaitham budhyathe" – "having slept, due to beginningless maayaa, when the individual wakes up, then, he knows the non-dual Self, which is birthless, dreamless and sleepless".)

The conclusion: "'I', the aathmaa, is sathyam; the anaathmaa, including the mind is mithyaa; therefore, the anaathmaa cannot affect me in any manner. 'I' am asanga."

- ईषदपि - even a little bit / even in the least (just as the mirage water cannot wet the dry sand, even a little bit)
- न स्पृशति - cannot taint or affect,

What cannot taint? The kriyaakaarakapalaathmaka prapancha: - the world including the mind.

Cannot taint what?

- परमार्थ वस्तु - the absolutely real entity (called aathmaa) .

That's why, it is pointed out, that, if a seeker makes a statement: " I know I am aathmaa; but, I have to do long nidhidhyaasanam – I have to practice meditation - to remove my vipareetha bhaavanaa or for vaasana kshayam", such a statement is considered fallacious, since, obviously the seeker has not realized that aathmaa has no vaasanaas. It is true, that, the mind has vaasanaas; but, neither the mind nor the vaasanaas of the mind can touch 'me'. Claiming this i.e. "'I' am untouched by vaasanaas" is the 'meditation' to be done. 'Removing the vaasanaas' is not the meditation required. Sureswaraachaarya explains this in the verse following.

Chapter II: Verse 51 –

अभूत अभिनिवेशेन स्वात्मानं वञ्चयति अयम् ।

असत्यपि द्वितीयेर्धे सोमशर्मपिता यथा ॥ ५१ ॥

Even though there is nothing second to the Self, the world deceives itself by interesting itself in the unreal, just as the father of Somasarman did.

Abhootha abhinivesa: is an idiom used by Goudapaadhaachaarya in his Mandookya Kaarikaa – Chapter IV (verses 75 and 79). The expression means 'a strong feeling that there is a real world existing outside me'. This intense notion /obsession – is called abhinivesa; abhootha: means 'even though it is not there'. (This is similar to 'megalomania', due to which, a perfectly healthy individual, after reading about a health disorder, gets a strong notion, that he is affected by that disorder, because 'fear' can project non-existent things; greater the fear, greater the projection; and the unreal projection may become a reality, even creating the disorder.)

Sureswaraachaarya says: "There is no world outside you really existing; but, the abhinivesa, that, 'there is a real world existing outside me' is strongly there. In effect, I, myself, give existence to this world; and having provided existence to the world, I, myself, am persecuted by the very same world. I project the world – I empower the world – I get persecuted by the world – I complain – I cry out 'Hey Guro ! thraahi maam ! rakasha maam durvaara samsaara davaagni thaptham'. This is the drama called samsaaraa".

This fact seems to be unbelievable; but, can be better appreciated by the example of the dream. Out of my own vaasanaas /my own samskaaraas, I, myself, project a dream world, I give existence / reality to the unreal dream world and I feel persecuted by my own dream and pray to Bhagavaan for dhussvapana naasanam.

- अभूत अभिनिवेशेन - By the strong projection of the non-existent/ because of the obsession with regard to the non-existent

This is similar to a game played by children. One child presses a coin hard on the forehead of another and quietly removes the coin, leaving the second child with the feeling, because of the pressure exerted, that the coin is still on its forehead. Then the first child will make an offer to the second, that, if the second child is able to make the coin fall down by a hit on the rear of the head, the coin will become the property of the second child; the first child will also generously offer three chances. Obviously, the second child cannot win the stake, though, in the process, it gets three self-inflicted violent hits on the back of its head.

- स्वात्मानं अयं वञ्चति - an individual fools/ cheats himself (doing varieties of loukika / vaidhika / vedhaantha parihaaraas for solving non-existent problems),
- द्वीतेये अर्थे असति अपि - even though there is no second entity other than 'me', the aathmaa,

This should be carefully understood: From the standpoint of the mind, second entity is there – the world is separate from the mind; but, from the aathmaa standpoint, there is neither the mind, nor is the world separate from the aathmaa.

But, even though a second entity is not there, the 'ignorant' continue in self-delusion and as a result continue to harm themselves. Sureswaraachaarya gives the example from a well-known, traditional story, of a brahmachaari, who lived on bikshaa collected from various households. One afternoon, after collecting bikshaa, the brahmachaari felt drowsy and sitting under a tree, indulged in day-dreaming of his future: "After brahmacharyam, I will become a scholar, get married and also become a father of a boy, whom I will name Soma Sarma. And, if, any time, my wife ill-treats my dear child, I will kick her". While thus imagining, he really kicked out violently ; the kick landed on the mud-pot in which he had collected his day's bikshaa, breaking the pot and spilling out all the bikshaa also. Thus, he landed himself into a real problem, because of imaginary circumstances.

- सोमशर्मपिता यथा - in the manner of the father of the (non-existent /imagined) Soma Sarma.

Just as the father of the non-existent Soma Sarma got into a problem, because of his imagination, the 'ignorant' also are hurting themselves through imagination of non-existent entities (the world / body / mind etc.)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 52:

वस्तु याथात्म्य अनवबोध पटल अवनद्धाक्षः सन् ।

One whose vision is blocked by the non-apprehension of Reality –

The idea is almost repeated here, with another example. What the Achaaryaa wants to emphasize is, that, the whole problem is one of ignorance. Because of ignorance alone, the secondary observer mind, the ahamkaaraa, has become real. The ahamkaaraa, which, in reality, is unreal, is causing all the problems. To solve the problems, one need not destroy the ahamkaaraa, but only 'understand' the ahamkaaraa and learn to 'use' the ahamkaaraa. Understand that the ahamkaaraa is only a veshaa and that you are only taking part in a 'drama', while, in reality, you are the saakshi aathmaa. Live the life of the saakshi, with ahamkaaraa veshaa, when life appears as an entertainment; on the other hand, if one loses sight of the saakshi nature and 'becomes' the ahamkaaraa, then life also 'becomes' a struggle. This is the only solution, the Achaaryaa says.

- अवनद्ध अक्षः - With the eyes of wisdom covered,
Avanadaa – covered. By what?
- अनवबोध पटलः - by the film of ignorance,
Patalam – membrane / film; anavabodha – ignorance. Ignorance of what?
- वस्तु याथात्म्यं - of the real nature of things.

What is meant by the real nature of things?

That, I am a composite entity, consisting of two components (1) 'I', the Real saakshi and (2) the unreal vesha ahamkaaraa. And, that, I am playing the drama of life, with ahamkaara vesha: |

One should watch events in life, as one watches a movie or play; you get engrossed with the characters in the movie/play, but, never forget that they are only imaginary characters in the movie / play. Even a jnaanai can cry; but, should have the capacity to rise himself to the binary format, at will.

75. Chapter II, Verse 51 to 54 (17-11-2007)

Verse 52 – Chapter II:

सुभ्रूःसुनासा सुमुखी सुनेत्रा चारुहासिनी ।

कल्पनामात्र संमोहात् रामेति आलिङ्गते असुचिम् ॥ ५२ ॥

Embraces, under the delusion born of mere fancy, a thing impure, calling it a beautiful woman, with eyebrows, nose, face and smiles all charming.

Sureswaraachaarya is talking about the nature of ahamkaaraa – how it is only anaathmaa and how this ahamkaaraa is becoming the cause of samsaaraa.

First, he points out, that, ahamkaaraa is the pseudo 'I' / the false 'I', when the mind, the anaathmaa is mistaken as 'myself'.

The mind is mistaken as 'myself', because of a reason, which is a legitimate reason. And, what is that? Sureswaraachaarya said: "Mind is nothing but an 'object' of my experience only; and it is jadam only; and it is also made up of the pancha bhoothaas, like the external world; and, the mind is illumined by 'me', the aathmaa, by 'my' mere presence. Illumination is not a job that 'I' do; but, in 'my' presence, the mind gets illumined. And, the mind has got a subtle and refined nature, because it is made of sookshma bhoothaani, and, therefore, while the mind gets illumined by me, it also receives a reflection of 'me', the Consciousness, which reflection is called chidhaabhaasa:. Thus, 'I' illumine the mind and lend chidhaabhaasaa to the mind simultaneously. 'Illumination' and 'lending chidhaabhaasaa' are both simultaneous, which 'jobs' 'I' do, without 'doing' anything, without willing/ wishing / planning / desiring / acting etc., but, merely by 'my' presence. The moment the mind receives chidhaabhaasaa, the mind also gets the capacity to illumine the external world; the mind, the 'illumined', also becomes an 'illuminator', though 'secondary'. Thus, the mind has a dual status – it is 'illumined' by 'me', the aathmaa and it is the 'illuminator' of the world. Because of this reason, there are two illuminators within the body – one is 'I', the original illuminator, aathmaa and the second is the 'secondary illuminator', the mind – dhrashtaa 1, the primary and dhrashtaa 2, the secondary. And, because the mind functions similar to aathmaa, in being a dhrashtaa, it can be said to 'imitate' the aathmaa in being a dhrashtaa / an illuminator/ a sentient observer; And, because the mind imitates the aathmaa, the mind is mistaken as 'I', the aathmaa'.

The mind is thus the pseudo 'I' and since it is the pseudo 'I', it is called ahamkaaraa: - the suffix 'kaaraa' indicating that, it is the pseudo 'I' and not the real 'I'. The real 'I', the aathmaa, in reality, has no connection with the bhogyaa prapanchaa. Therefore, the original 'I' / the real 'I', being the asanga aathmaa, is not a bokthaa, whereas, the mind/ the ahamkaaraa / the pseudo 'I', has got connection with bhogya prapanchaa – is a sasangha: - and is, therefore, a bokthaa. But, because of the confusion as explained above, I have taken the ahamkaaraa/ the pseudo 'I', as the real 'I' and look upon myself as a bokthaa and claim sambhandha with boghya prapanchaa. Having thus mistaken 'me' as a bokthaa and mistakenly claiming sambhandha with boghya prapanchaa, I commit a third, the most dangerous blunder – of concluding that I get aanandaa through boghya sambhandha.

The blunders are, thus, (1) conversion of an abokthaa into a boktha (2) creation of a non-existent sambhandha with the boghya prapanchaa and (3) concluding that boghya sambhandha gives happiness.

The consequences of the third - the most dangerous - blunder above, are (1) the perpetuation of bokthaa and bhogya sambhandhaa and (2) seeking of aanandaa from the world.

According to Vedhanthaa (though Sureswaraachaaryaa does not mention it here), the boghya prapanchaa does not have any aanandaa to be given to 'me'; all the aanandaa belongs only to the original 'I' ; and, this original aanandaa alone gets manifested, when certain boghya vasthus – objects of enjoyment - serve as 'mirrors'. For every person, depending upon innumerable factors, including praarabhdaa, different objects serve as 'mirrors' and when those 'mirrors' are looked upon, the aanandaa of 'I' get reflected in / manifested by/ appear in those 'mirrors'; but, the wrong conclusion is reached that the objects themselves possess the aanandaa, as absurd as concluding that, when one looks into a (real) mirror, the mirror has got one's 'face'. Every enjoyment is only a manifestation of the intrinsic aanandaa of the Self. But, the samsaaree commits the blunders (1) becoming boktha (2) developing boghya sambhandhaa and (3) concluding that aanandaa comes out of the boghya sambhandhaa and (4) therefore, struggling to retain that sambhandhaa – all the blunders resulting from the basic mistake of considering the pseudo 'I' / the ahamkaaraa, as myself.

This is what has been concisely expressed by the Achaaryaa, in the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 52, as "vasthu yaathaathmya anavabodha patala avanaadha aksha:" – "blinded by the thin membrane of ignorance of the svaroopam of the aathmaa".

"anava bhoda patala avanadda aksha:" means "blinded by the veil/membrane of ignorance", similar to "Ajaana thimira andha:" (from the Guru Sthothra). Patalam and thimiram are synonymous. Ignorance of what?

Vasthu- Reality / aathma

Yaathaathmyam means `svaroopam`.

The svaroopam of aathmaa is aanandam. Vasthuyaathaathmyam means aathma aananda svaroopam. The ignorance of the fact "I am the only source of aananda" is the problem. Because of this, the 'ignorant' consider themselves as bokthaas and look for bhogya vasthus.

In this verse 52, the Aachaaryaa is talking about one's wife, as the bhogyam.

- सुभ्रूः - One with beautiful eyebrows,
- सुनासा - One with beautiful nose,
- सुमुखी – One with beautiful face,
- सुनेत्रा - One with beautifully eyes,
- चारुहासिनी – One with charming/ endearing smiles.

The ajani samsaari, who takes the pseudo I / bokthaa / ahamkaaraa as himself and relates to the bhogya pathni, looks upon his wife, as endowed with beautiful eyebrows, nose, face, eyes and smiles and therefore considers her as a raamaa / sukha hethu: / source of happiness.

- रामा इति – Considering (the wife) as sukha hethu: / source of happiness,

This is sammoha: - 'delusion'. The belief "the wife gives aananda" cannot be true, because, 'wife' is anaathmaa and anaathmaa does not have even an iota of happiness of its own. At best, the 'wife' serves as a mirror, (reflecting the intrinsic aananda of the Self). Not knowing this,

- कल्पना मात्र संमोहात् - because of the delusion caused by wrong perception,

Kalpanaa – sobhanaadhyaasa: / wrong perception / superimposition / perception of a non-existent (object / situation). The 'wife' may be existent ; but, the perception that the 'wife' is raamaa (a 'source of happiness/ peace/ security') is only a wrong perception – kalpanaa maathram.

Then, what is the source of happiness? Aathmaa alone is raama: - aathmaa raama: aananda ramana: | The only raamaa is aathmaa; nothing else in the creation deserves the title raama: or raamaa.

But, because of this kalpanaa maathra sammoham, the wrong perception that 'wife' is a source of happiness, the ajnaani,

- आलिङ्गते अशुचिम् (देहं) - embraces (the body), a thing impure.

The body which he embraces as sukha hethu:, is nothing but a container of all kinds of filth, carefully covered.

(The invention of perfumes and the success of perfume industry declare the Vedhaanthic truth, that, the body is not raamaa.)

All these are results of considering oneself as the ahamkaaraa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 53 :

सर्वस्य अनर्थजातस्य जिहासितस्य मूलं अहंकारः एव तस्य आत्म अनात्म उपरागात् । न तु परमार्थतः आत्मनः अविध्यया तत्कार्येण वा संबन्धः अभूत् अस्ति भविष्यति वा तस्य अपरिलुप्तद्रष्टिस्वाभाव्यात् ।

The root-cause of all the evil in the world, hated by creatures, is the ego, for it brings together in itself, the Self and the non-Self. In reality, the Self transcends all connection with nescience and its effects in the past, present and future, for the self has as its essential nature pure consciousness that is eternal and inextinguishable.

Sureswaraachaaryaa comes back to his topic: therefore, the kingpin, who is the cause of all problems, is the ahamkaaraa only.

What is the meaning of ahamkaaraa (in this context)? It does not have the meaning in which the word is used in Thathva Bodha, where, it is a name given to a particular thought which is invoking the individuality. In this portion of Naishkarmya Siddhi, ahamkaaraa does not refer to the thought, but, refers to the entire antha:karanam, along with the chidhaabhaasa.

Because of the chidhaabhaasaa alone, the mind has become sentient and has also become the locus of 'blunders'.

- मूलं - The root cause,
- सर्वस्य अनर्थ जातस्य - of all the multitudes of problems,

Jaatham means samooha: / collection / bundle / multitude (does NOT mean 'born' , in which meaning it is used in the famous Bhagavadh Githa sloka – jaathasya hi dhruvo mrithyu:); Anartha means problems / evils / pains / sufferings; Anartha jaatham means 'multitude of problems' .

- जिहासितस्य - which every human being is universally struggling to get rid of / which is desired to be given up, by everybody

Jihaasitham - That which everybody wants to give up. In this verse, it is used as an adjective to anartha jaatham.

With regard to the problems of samsaaraa, the response is universal – every human being wants to get rid of the problems. Therefore, the Achaaryaa uses the description / adjective 'jihaasithasya' to 'anartha jaathasya'

- अहंकारः एव - is only ahamkaaraa (which means, the mind with chidaabaasaa),

Why is the mind the moolam (the root cause)?

Because, the mind or the pseudo 'I' has got dual status.

- तस्य आत्म अनात्म उपरागात् – because of its (the mind's) connection with aathmaa also and with anaathmaa (the world) also.

How is the mind connected to aathmaa? The mind is an 'object' of observation by the aathmaa; i.e., the mind is connected to aathmaa, as a dhrusyam; and, in addition, the mind also receives chidaabaasaa from the aathmaa.

How is the mind connected to the world? The mind forms the thoughts of various objects in the world; by forming the thoughts, ghata vrutthi, pata vrutthi, manushya vrutthi etc. By receiving the thoughts from the world, the mind becomes an observer of the world and is thus connected to the world as 'observer' – as dhrashtaa.

Thus, the mind is dhrusyam from the standpoint of the aathmaa and dhrashtaa from the standpoint of the world. Therefore, it seemingly has connection with both and also seemingly brings together the two.

But, what is the truth?

- तु - But,
- परमार्थतः आत्मनः - for the real supreme 'I',
- संबन्धः न अभूत् – there had never been any connection at all in the past,
- (संबन्धः न) अस्ति - there is no connection at all in the present (and)
- (संबन्धः न) भविष्यति - there can be no connection at all in the future,
- अविध्यया वा तत्कार्येण वा - either with ignorance or with the products of avidhya/maayaa.

Avidhyaa – Ignorance.

Aathmaa is asanga: Just as space cannot have any connection with anything, so also aathmaa cannot have sambhandha with anything.

Why is there never any connection between aathmaa and avidhyaa? Because, aathmaa is paaramaarthika sathyam and avidhyaa is vyaavahaarika sathyam. Their degrees of reality vary – 'I' belong to a higher order of reality and avidhyaa/maayaa belongs to a lower order of reality. That is why, Krishna said, in the 13th chapter of the Bhagavadh Githa: "jyothishaam api thajjyothi: thamasa: paramuchyathe" – "It (Brahman / aathmaa) is the light of all lights : it is said to be beyond ignorance" (verse 18).

Therefore, 'I', do not have connection with avidhyaa / maayaa.

Thath kaaryam – the products of avidhyaa / maayaa.

What are the products of avidhyaa / maayaa? The entire jaagrath universe and the entire dream universe are both products of maayaa only. Everything, including the mind, is a product of avidhyaa only. And, since avidhyaa, the cause itself is of a lower order of reality (vyaavahaarikam), it follows, that, all its products also, including the mind / the body/ the family can only be vyaavahaarikam.

Therefore, there can never be any connection between aathmaa and the products of avidhyaa also.

In Ashtaavakra Githa, Ashtaavakraa makes a startling statement: "The very idea of sanyaasaa is born out of ignorance". In all the other Vedhaantha scriptures, sanyaasaa is glorified and is presented as the goal of life/ the ultimate saadhanaa / the 4th and final Aashrama, to be taken to, by every seeker, whereas, Ashtaavakraa seems to effortlessly brush aside this view, when he says " whoever wants to take sanyaasaa is an ajnaani". His view is based on the logic "If I have relationships, I can renounce them; but, when I do not have any relationship at all, even to begin with, how/ why / what can I renounce?" The real sanyaasaa is, therefore, the 'understanding' that 'I' am a nithya asangha: - na maathaa/ na pithaa/ na bhandhu: etc. The 'wise' person is ever a sanyaasi.

Sri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadaa also, in his Brahma Jnaanaavali Maalaa declares: "asangoham, asangoham, sachidaananda roopoham".

The use of abhooth, asthi and bhavishyathi, by Sureswaraachaaryaa, in this sambhandha gadhyam, is to indicate the past, the present and the future respectively.

The Achaaryaa succinctly gives the reason (as to why there can be no relationship for the aathmaa):

- अपरिलुप्त द्रष्टिस्वाभाव्यात् – Because of the nithya chaithanya nature
- तस्य - of the real 'I'.

In contrast, avidhyaa and all the products of avidhyaa are neither nithyam, nor of the nature of chaithanyam (the Achaaryaa does not mention this specifically here).

Apariluptham - nithyam / unbroken; dhrushti: - chaithanyam; apariluptha dhrushti: - nithya chaithanyam ; svaabhaavyam – svaroopam.

Apariluptha dhrushti svabhaavyam – nithya chaithanya svaroopam.

In Hasthaamalakeeyam, Hasthaamalakaa talks about nithya chaithanya svaroopaa aathmaa, in the following manner (verse no. 7): "mana: chakshuraadher mana: chakshuraadhi: mana: chakshuraadher viyuktha: svayam ya: mana: chakshuraadher mana: chakshuraadhir mana: chakshuraadher agamyasvaroopasya nithyopalabधि: svaroopoham aathmaa".

The Achaaryaa uses the term "apariluptha dhrushti:", intentionally, instead of the simpler term nithya chaithanyam, to remind the student of the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – Svayamjothi Braahmana Vaakyam, "na hi dhrashtu: dhrushte: viparilopo vidhyathe avinaasithvath".

Chapter II: Verse 53 –

द्रुस्य अनुरक्तं तद् द्रष्टुं द्रुस्यं द्रष्टुनुरञ्जितम् ।

अहंश्रुत्योभयं रक्तं तन्नाशेऽद्वैतमात्मनः ॥ ५३ ॥

That seer is conjoined to the seen and the seen is conjoined to the seer. Both of them are conjoined in and through the functioning of the ego. On the elimination of the ego, the Self abides in perfect non-duality.

In the introduction to this verse (in the first line), Sureswaraacharya said that the mind has got dual sambhandha - with the aathmaa, as the 'observed' and with the world as 'observer'. Thus the mind has aathma anaathma uparaagaa, similar to a door/window sill, which has got connection with the outside world and the inside of the building. It is difficult to say whether the door/window belongs to the outside or inside. In the same manner, ahamkaaraa lies between baahya prapanchaa and anthara aathmaa. "Therefore" the Achaaryaa had said "antha:karanam has ubhaya sambhandha". He explains this statement further in the verse.

- तद् - That ahamkaaraa / the mind
- द्रष्टु (भवति)- (becomes) the observer
- द्रश्य अनुरक्तं - which is related to the external universe (as a perceiver)

When the mind is connecting itself with the external universe, through the five sense organs – (“paraanchi khaani vyathrunath svayambhoo: thasmaath paraang pasyath!” – “The Lord destroyed the sense organs, by making them extrovert; therefore, every one perceives outside” – Kathopanishad – II.1.1) the mind enjoys the status of the observer; it has ‘observer’ – ‘observed’ relationship with the world.

Dhrusyam - baahya prapancham / the external world; anuraktham – sambhandham/ connection.

Thadh (antha:karanam) dhrusyaa anuraktham (sath) dhrashtru (bhavathi) – That (mind becomes) the ‘observer’ when it is connected to the external world.

Whereas,

- (तद् एव) द्रश्यं (भवति) द्रष्टु अनुरञ्जितम् - (that very same mind becomes) the ‘observed’ (object) when it is connected to the aathmaa.

Dhrusyam - observed object; anuranjitham – sambhandham / connected; dhrashtru anuranjitham – when connected to aathmaa.

When is the mind connected to the aathmaa? When it is illumined by the aathmaa and when it receives chidhaabhaasaa from aathmaa. As a ‘borrower’ from aathmaa it becomes dhrusyam and as ‘lender’ of consciousness to the external world, it is a dhrashtaa.

Between the aathmaa and the mind, there is an ‘observer-observed’ connection and similarly between the mind and the external world, there is an ‘observer-observed’ connection. But, between the aathmaa and the world there is no direct connection at all; there is only an indirect connection, brought about by the intermediate entity called the mind or ahamkaaraa. This is similar to the connection between a husband / wife and his/ her in-laws, through the spouse, the intermediary entity.

Thus, the aathmaa has no direct connection with the bhogyaa prapanchaa; through the mind alone, the aathmaa seemingly has connections with the bhogyaa prapanchaa.

The Achaaryaa says:

- अहंवृत्त्या उभयं रक्तं - By means of ahamkaaraa, the mind (which serves as the linking factor) the aathmaa and anaathmaa (the baahya prapancham) are linked.

Ahamvrutthyaa - By means of ahamkaaraa; ubhayam – both (aathmaa and the baahya prapancham (anaathmaa)); raktham –sambhandham /linked/ connected.

How is this proved?

It can be very easily demonstrated: during jaagrath and svapna, the mind, the linking factor, is alive and active and therefore, the world is experienced; all kinds of experiences are received and consequently samsaaraa is active. In deep sleep, when the mind is resolved, the linking factor is gone; "I am no more a bokthaa; I am abokthaa aathmaa; that's why sukham aham asvaaptham".

In Aathmabodhaa of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, using anvaya vyathirekha logic this fact is established – "raagha ichha sukha dhu:kaadhi buddhau sathyaam pravarthathe sushupthau naasthi thanaase thasmaath budhesthu naathmana." - "Attachment, desire, pleasure, pain etc., arise when intellect is present. They do not exist in deep sleep, when intellect is absent. Hence they are of the intellect and not of the aathmaa" (verse 23).

That's why it is said, "mana: eva manushyaanaam kaaranam bandha mokshayo:" and "bandhaaya vishayaa sattham mukthyai nirvishayam smrutham".

- तन्नाशे (सति)- When the mind / ahamkaaraa is destroyed,
- आत्मनः अद्वैतं (सिद्धयति) - the advaita (non-dual) aathmaa alone is left.

But, it should be carefully understood, that the mind can never be physically destroyed; that, mano naasa: is only a figurative expression; that, it only means mano mithyaathva nischaya: - i.e. firmly understanding that the mind belongs to a lower order of reality, from the standpoint of the real 'I'. This understanding alone is called mano naasa: | There can be no other mano naasa: |

"Manasa: mithyaathva nischaye sathi aatmana: advaitam bhavath"(is the essence).

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 54:

इह केचित् चोदयन्ति योयं अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां अनात्मतया उत्सारित अहंकार वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तये सोयं विपरीतार्थः संवृत्तः।

Here, some raise this objection: The ego has been discarded as the non-Self, by reasoning, for the sake of comprehending the meaning of the Vedhaanthic sentence 'I am Brahman'. But, the upshot comes to be contrary to the purpose on hand.

Here, Sureswaraachaarya is introducing a possible doubt, which he had briefly mentioned before, in verses 28 and 29. He is re-introducing the same doubt for further clarification.

- इह - In this context,
- केचित् - some people
- चोदयन्ति - raise an objection.

What is the objection? They say : "In all your teachings, you have been saying that mind is the ahamkaaraa and ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa, only to facilitate the understanding of mahaa vaakyam – your original purpose being thvam pada vichaara and thath pada vichaaraa, to clearly understand the mahaa vaakyam 'thatvam asi' . But, instead of facilitating /supporting the mahaa vaakya jnaanam, your teaching is only counter-productive. Without your realizing it, you are arguing against your own final conclusion".

- अहंकार :उत्सारितः - Ahamkaaraa is negated (by you)
- अनात्मतया - as anaathmaa
- वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तये - for the sake of knowing mahaa vaakyam.

Vaakyartham – mahaa vaakyartham; prathi patthi: - jnaanam.

सोयं विपरीतार्थः संवृत्तः - (But) all of them have become counterproductive / they will only obstruct the knowledge of the mahaa vaakyam.

76. Chapter II, Verse 54 to 56 (24-11-2007)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 54, 55 and 56:

इह केचित् चोदयन्ति योयं अन्वय व्यतिरेकाभ्यां अनात्मतया उत्सारित अहंकार :वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तये सोयं विपरीतार्थ :संब्रुत्त :यस्मात् अहं ब्रह्मास्मीति ब्रह्महंपदार्थयो :सामानाधिकरण्यश्रवणात् अनात्मार्थेन सामानाधिकरण्यं प्राप्नोति । वक्तव्या च प्रत्यगात्मनि तस्य वृत्तिरिति सोच्यते प्रसिद्धलक्षणागुणवृत्तिभिः ।

Here some raise this objection: This ego has been discarded as the non-Self by reasoning, for the sake of comprehending the meaning of the Vedhaanthic sentence: 'I am Brahman'. But the upshot comes to be contrary to the purpose on hand. In the sentence, 'I am Brahman', the imports of 'I' and 'Brahman' are identified and that would amount to an identification of Brahman with what is other than the Self. For clearing the position, how the term 'I' signifies the innermost Self must be explained, by a consideration of the three types of signification, i.e., the primary reference through implication and reference through attributive affinity. This is going to be done now:

Until now, Sureswaraachaarya established that the ahamkaaraa, which is referred to, by everyone, as 'I' or aham, is the cause of all the problems and that, this ahamkaaraa or I is anaathmaa only, because it is nothing but the mind with borrowed chidhaabaasaa. The mind becomes sentient because of the presence of aathmaa and because of the borrowed sentiency, the mind becomes the observer / experiencer of the universe; and, because, the mind has got the observer/ experiencer status, it is referred to as I, the ahamkaaraa; and in reality, it is only anaathmaa.

When this much was established, a serious objection is raised by the poorva pakshin. "If you say the meaning of the word aham is ahamkaaraa, if you say that the meaning of the word aham is the 'mind with chidhaabhaasaa' and if you say that the meaning of the word aham is only anaathmaa (i.e. aham = ahamkaaraa; aham = chidhaabhaasa sahitha antha:karanam; aham = anaathmaa), then, how do you explain the famous mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi'? Because (in the light of your above statements), 'aham' is anaathmaa, whereas, Brahman is not anaathmaa; how, then, do you explain the saamaanaadhikaranyam or equation obtaining between aham the anaathmaa and Brahman?"

Sureswaraachaarya has to give a convincing answer to this poorva paksha vaadam.

- इह केचित् चोदयन्ति - In this context some students / people raise an objection.

What is the objection?

- अयं अहंकारः - This ahamkaaraa
- उत्सारितः - has been negated (by you)
- अनात्मतया - as anaathmaa (jadam / maayaa kaaryam/ mithyaa etc.)
- अन्वय व्यतिरेकाभ्यां - by using the arguments of anvaya (that which is subject to change) and vyathirekha (that which is not subject to change).

The poorva pakshi concedes to the Achaaryaa: "All this you have done with a noble motive". What is the motive?

- वाक्यार्थप्रतिपत्तये - For the generation of knowledge / jnaanam of the meaning of mahaa vaakyam

Prathi patthi: - jnaanam / knowledge.

- (यः) सः - (But) all this (effort that you have undertaken)
- विपरीतार्थः संबुद्धः - has only become counterproductive (because this topic will not assist 'understanding' of the mahaa vaakyam; on the other hand, will only obstruct the 'understanding')

Vipareethaartha: - counterproductive; samvruttha: - has become.

- यस्मात् - The reason is this (why do I say that your teaching is counterproductive?)

The poorva pakshin explains:

- अहं ब्रह्मास्मीति (महा वाक्ये) - In the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi' (Brahadaaranyaka Upanishad 1.4.10)
- ब्रह्म अहं पदार्थयोः सामानाधिकरण्यं श्रवणात् - since an equation between the words brahma and aham is declared,

Saamaanaadhikaranam - can be understood as 'equation'

Therefore, what is the problem?

- अनात्मार्थेन सामानाधिकरण्यं प्राप्नोति – Brahman attains equation with the meaning of ahamkaaraa, which is anaathmaa.

Anaathmaroopa: artha: - anaathama artha: |

According to the arguments so far presented by the Achaaryaa, the meaning of the word aham is ahamkaaraa and ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa. Therefore, it would follow, that, Brahman has been equated with the jada anaathmaa; in which case, Brahman would also become jadam, savikaaram etc. Then, how can be there mokshaa through mahaavaakya jnaanam?

Thus, the essence of the poorva pakshin's question is this: "Scriptures declare that Brahman is sathyam, chaithanyasvaroopam, nirvikaaram etc. And, you have now elaborately established that aham is ahamkaaraa, aham is the mind, aham is mithyaa, aham is savikaaram etc. In short, 'Aham', (from your statements) has a diagonally opposite nature to that of Brahman. How can, then, there be equation between the two? Yushmath asmath prathyayo: thamas prakaasavath viruddha svabhaavayo: saamanaadhikaranyam katham bhavathy? "

The situation can be saved only by giving a new meaning to the word aham. The conventional meaning of the word – the vaachyaartha – is 'chidhaabhaasa sahitha mana: '. A different meaning has to be given to the word aham, by which the equation will be salvaged and also will benefit all the seekers.

- तस्य - For the word aham
- वृत्ति: वक्तव्या - a new implied meaning has to be given.

What type of meaning? That new meaning should not refer to any one of the anaathmaa, because once it refers to anaathmaa, aham-brahma-eikyam will not be possible. The new meaning should refer to the chethana thathvam behind the anaathmaa.

- प्रत्यक् आत्मनि – For the inner self / svaroopaa aathmaa (also)
- वृत्ति: (वक्तव्या) - connotation / indication / significance is to be given.
- इति - thus (the objection has been raised)

Up to this is the poorva pakshin's question.

Sureswaraachaarya answers:

- सा उच्यते - (if the student raises such an objection) I will answer.

What is the new meaning of the word aham?

The word aham can be used to denote the chaithanyam also - the chaithanyam, which (1) is not a product or part or property of the body (2) is an entity entirely independent of the body; but, pervading the body and lending sentiency to the body (3) is not limited by the boundaries of the body; but, extends beyond the body – thus not limited by SPACE (4) continues to survive even after the fall of the body and thus, not limited by TIME also and (5) though, continues to survive even after the fall of the body, is not available for transactions, in the absence of the medium, the body.

The Achaaryaa has to establish that the word 'aham', in the mahaa vaakyam refers to that chaithanyam, by the appropriate interpretation.

And how does he derive this new meaning? How is it going to be said?

- प्रसिद्ध लक्षणा गुणवृत्तिभिः - By the (three) methods known as prasiddha vrutthi, lakshanaa vrutthi and guna vrutthi.

Vrutthi – can be interpreted as 'method' (of connotation for the word aham) ; Prasiddha (vrutthi:) - otherwise called mukhya vrutthi:, is one method of communication; Lakshnaa (vrutthi:) - 'method of implication' is the 2nd method; Guna (vrutthi:) – is the 3rd method of communication.

The Achaaryaa himself elaborates the methods in the next three verses.

Verse 54 – Chapter II :

न अजासिषं इति प्राह सुषुप्तात् उत्थितः अपि हि ।

अयोदाहादिवत् तेन लक्षणं परमात्मनः ॥ ५४ ॥

One who wakes up from deep sleep says 'I did not know anything in sleep'. Here the term 'I' signifies the pure Self, as the ego is suspended in sleep. When we say that the iron burns, we mean that fire, by which the iron has become red-hot burns, and not the iron as such. Similarly in the sentence 'I am Brahman', the term 'I' signifies the Self and not the ego.

The method of communication referred to, in this verse, is 'lakshanaa vrutthi:', which is also known as jahath lakshanaa or jahathi lakshanaa, by which the primary meaning of the word is rejected and the secondary meaning, which is closely associated with the primary meaning, is taken. And, Sureswaraachaarya gives an example for this practice.

- अयो दाहादिवत् - Similar to the 'burning' by 'iron',

An iron ball has been kept in the fire for some time; somebody, by accident, touched the red-hot iron ball and said "the iron ball burned my hand". On analysis, this statement is incorrect, since iron does not have the capacity to burn. What do we understand by this statement? The meaning of the word 'aya:', in this context, is not the iron; but the fire principle which had been associated with the iron, in and through. In effect, the word 'aya:', by lakshanaa, means 'agni:' ; aya: sabdasya agni: ithi artha: The sentence can become meaningful only through this interpretation. In this example, agni happened to be intimately associated with the iron, lending 'heat' to the iron, which is not an intrinsic quality of the iron.

Similar to the iron ball, in the example, not possessing 'heat' as its intrinsic quality, but, borrows it from the fire, because of close and intimate association with the fire, the body-mind complex does not have sentiency of its own, but, borrows sentiency from the Self.

The word aham primarily refers to the sentient body-mind complex; but, when the Upanishad or a jnaani says "aham brahma asmi", the word 'aham' cannot refer to the body-mind complex, since the body-mind complex is finite and Brahman is not. Therefore, the word 'aham' should refer to something which is in and through the body-mind complex, but, which is distinct from the body-mind complex and which is not limited by the body-mind complex ; therefore, in the vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi', for the meaning of the word 'aham', the body is rejected by jagathi lakshanaa, the mind is rejected by jagathi lakshanaa, even the chidhaabhaasaa is rejected by jagathi lakshanaa – the chidh, the Consciousness principle alone is retained as meaning of the word aham. 'Aham' (in the vaakyam) therefore, is the chaithanya svaroopam.

Citing the example of the 'iron burning', Sureswaraachaarya says "the word 'aham' can refer to the body-mind complex, which is 'located' and can refer to the 'unlocated' Consciousness also".

The next question is "Is there such an usage in our day-to-day life?". The example used, 'iron burns ' is quite commonly said; in fact, even 'burning' by 'water' , is quite a common incident and statement. Is there a loutika prayoga: (a common usage) , in a like manner, in which the word 'I' refers to the Consciousness principle, and not to the body-mind complex?

Sureswaraacharya claims "such an usage is there in common parlance". Where?

When a person wakes up from a deep sleep state, he says "I slept well, I did not know / experience anything". What is the meaning of 'I' in this context? It cannot refer to the localized ahamkaaraa or the localized mind, because, during sleep, the ahamkaaraa or mind is resolved. If the mind and ahamkaaraa had been active in sleep, the sleeper would have felt 'localized' in sleep; but, in sleep, the sleeper does not have a localized entity; but an unlocalized Consciousness alone. And, therefore, the person waking up from the deep sleep, in his statement "I slept well; I did not know anything", is using the word 'aham' for the unlocalized Consciousness only. This means, that, 'aham' has got a primary meaning – 'localized mind' and a secondary meaning – 'unlocalized Consciousness' also. Therefore Sureswaraachaarya says

- सुषुप्तात् उत्थितः - one who wakes up from deep sleep
- इति प्राह - declares thus:

- न (अहं) अजासिषं - "I did not know anything / I did not function as the knower 'I' or the 'observer' I (the ahamkaaraa 'I' function has resolved; I existed in sleep as unlocalized Consciousness only)"

The person who had woken up from the sleep, not being a Vedhaanthin, does not explicitly say "I existed as unlocalized Consciousness only"; but, what he means/ implies is "I was unlocalized Consciousness ; I did not function as 'knower', because the mind was resolved; I am the chaithanya svaroopaa."

Such a statement, the Achaaryaa points out, is exactly like a person claiming that he was burnt by red-hot iron - ayo daahadhivath (ayo dahathi ithivath) - , though, in reality, what burnt him was the fire principle.

- तेन - Because of this reason,
- अहं (शब्दः) परमात्मनः लक्षणं (भवति) - (the word 'aham' will be) the lakshanam for paramaathmaa.

Briefly, Achaaryaa's contention is as follows: "The word 'aham' can be used for pure Consciousness, which is inherent in the body, just as the word 'iron' can be used in the sense of the 'fire' principle, which is inherent in the red-hot iron; when you mean the fire principle by the use of the word 'aya:' , in the statement 'aya: dahathi', the iron part is rejected , because iron does not have burning power; similarly when I say 'I am Brahman' , I mean the inherent Consciousness principle by the word 'I' and reject the body-mind complex, because the body-mind complex does not have Brahmathvam. There is absolutely no difficulty or logical fallacy in such an understanding".

In this portion of this treatise, this is taken as jahathi lakshanaa; In Vedantha saaraa, it is taken as Bhaaga Thyaaga Lakshanaa. Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa makes a subtle difference and interprets it as Jahathi lakshanaa.

Chapter II: Verse 55 –

प्रत्यक्त्वात् अतिसूक्ष्मत्वात् आत्मद्रष्टि अनुशीलनात् ।

अतो वृत्ती :विहाय अन्या :हि अहंवृत्त्या उपलक्ष्यते ॥ ५५ ॥

Secondly, as the ego is inwardly felt, is very subtle and is blended with the conception of the Self, the Self is conveyed by the concept of the ego, abandoning the concepts of 'that' (and 'thou').

Sureswaraachaarya gives another method of interpretation here, called gounee vrutthi: / Gounee vrutthi: is another method by which a word conveys a different meaning. The famous example given in the Saasthraas, is, 'simho maanavaka:' - 'the student is a lion'. Here the words 'student' and 'lion' are equated ; strictly speaking the equation is not correct, because the primary meaning of the word 'student' is a human being and the primary meaning of the word 'lion' is an animal; they are totally different, but, are equated in this statement. People, nevertheless, accept the equation, even though they know that the lion and the student can never be equal. How do they understand the sentence / equation, when they accept the statement? When the words Lion and student are used in this equation, people do not take the 'complete' meanings of the words; but, take only the common characteristics, which are there between the student and the Lion. The common characteristics between the two are called saamaanya dharma: or saamaanya gunaa: and, if there are, thus, common characteristics, one particular word can be used to convey another meaning, because of the commonness of characteristics.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "The word 'aham' normally does not mean Brahman ; it refers to the chidhaabaasa sahitha mind only ; it is ahamkaaraa only ; it is anaathmaa only. Really speaking, therefore, the word 'aham' cannot be used for aathmaa or Brahman, just as the word 'lion' cannot be used for a 'student' ; but, it has been so used in the example 'simho maanavaka:'; because of some common characteristics between the lion and the student. Similarly, the word 'aham' can be used for aathmaa, because there are some *saamaanya gunaa*s between aathmaa and ahamkaaraa. In context, you understand 'aham' as 'aathmaad', because of some common characteristics existing between aathmaa and the mind, just as there are some common characteristics between the lion and the student."

This gives rise to another question. The common characteristics between a lion and a student may be courage, majesty etc. But, what are the common characteristics between the mind and aathmaa? Sureswaraachaaryaa lists them out:

- प्रत्यक्त्वात् – Because both of them (aathmaa and mind / ahamkaaraa) are internal, with regard to the body and sense organs;

Prathyakthvam – nature of being internal (aathmaa is called the 'inner' self); this is one common characteristic between aathmaa and the mind.

- अतिसूक्ष्मत्वात् – Because both aathmaa and mind are very subtle in nature;
Athisookshmathvam – nature of being very subtle.

Aathmaa and the mind are both invisible / not indriya gocharam; in fact, they are not even mano gocharam.

Can the mind be objectified by the mind? This is not a topic commonly discussed in the Vedhaantha; but, in the Vichaara Sagaraa this question is raised "Can the mind be objectified by the mind?" and also answered with appropriate supporting logic: "Never, mind can never see the mind."

Both the mind and aathmaa are indriya agocharam and mano agocharam. Both are, therefore, extremely subtle.

This is the reason, that, scientists do not accept the existence of a mind which will survive the death of a body or brain. They do not accept a mind other than the brain; whereas, in the Saasthraas, the word 'mind' does not mean the brain, but, a principle which will survive even after the body and the brain perish and are cremated. According to the Saasthraas, the mind is even supposed to 'travel'. As for science, no scientific instrument has so far perceived a mind that leaves a dead body. This establishes, that, the mind is beyond observation. So is the aathmaa. Both are athisookshmam. This is the second common characteristic (saamaanya dharma) between the aathmaa and the mind.

What is the third common characteristic?

- आत्मद्रुष्टि अनुशीलनात् - Both of them (aathmaa and the mind) have got sentiency;

Aathma dhrushti – svaroopā chaithanyam; anuseelanam - resemblance / imitation.

The mind resembles the aathmaa, in the sense, that both have sentiency and both are eternally sentient. The difference, of course, is that, mind has got eternal 'borrowed' sentiency, while aathmaa has got eternal 'original' sentiency. The use of the word anuseelanam – imitation/resemblance – emphasizes this distinction.

The mind 'imitates' the aathmaa in being sentient; nevertheless, both are sentient. Thus, 'sentiency' ('original' in the case of aathmaa and 'borrowed' in the case of the mind) is the third common factor.

This third common characteristic, in fact, is the most important, since, only because the mind is a conscious entity, one mistakes oneself to be the mind. This misconception has a further consequence – the worry of what happens to an individual after death? Where does he/she head? There is a well-known prayer: "I want to have Vedhaantha as pramaanam in every janma and Sankaraachaaryaa as guru in every janma". This prayer is resorted to, even by a student of Vedhaantha, obviously because the vedhaantha vichaaraa has not been fully effective on the person who prays thus; such a person obviously takes himself / herself as the 'mind' and not as the chaithanyam, because of the 'resemblance' between the sentient localized 'I' (ahamkaaraa) and the sentient non-localized 'I' (chaithanyam).

- अतः अन्याः वृत्तीः विहाय - Therefore (because of these three common characteristics), rejecting all other thoughts,

Anyaa: - all other (adjective to vrutthee:); vrutthee: - thoughts ; vihaaya – rejecting / setting aside.

- अहं वृत्त्या - by the 'I' thought,
- अहं शब्देन च - also with the help of the word 'I' / aham)
- उपलक्ष्यते - aathmaa can be referred to (in the mahaavaakyam).

"There is no logical fallacy in so understanding, because of this reason also" the Achaaryaa asserts.

- अतः अन्याः वृत्तीः विहाय - Therefore (because of these three common characteristics), rejecting all other thoughts,

Anyaa: - all other (adjective to vrutthee:); vrutthee: - thoughts ; vihaaya – rejecting / setting aside.

- अहं वृत्त्या - by the 'I' thought,
- (अहं) शब्देन च - also with the help of the word 'I' / aham)
- उपलक्ष्यते - aathmaa can be referred to (in the mahaavaakyam).

"There is no logical fallacy in so understanding, because of this reason also" the Achaaryaa asserts.

Gounee vritthi: is translated as 'attributive affinity' in English, which is, in fact, more difficult to comprehend than the original Sanskrit word.

Chapter II: Verse 56 –

आत्मना चाविनाभावमथवा विलयं व्रजेत् ।

न तु पक्षान्तरं यायादतस्चाहंधियोच्यते ॥ ५६ ॥

Thirdly, the ego either fuses with the Self or simply disappears (unlike other presentations which may occur apparently independent of the Self). The ego has no third alternative and hence the ego-sense signifies the Self.

What is covered in this verse is what is called mukhya vrutthi:; means even the primary sense, we can take and the word 'I' can refer to the Consciousness part in the individual. The all-pervading Consciousness has to pervade the body –mind complex also and all the pervading Consciousness exists inseparably in every body and inseparably in every mind.

The body or the individual has got several components; the sense organs are there, which go wherever the individual go. The mind / the legs / the hands and such so many other components are there in every individual, which do not stand separately, but are integrally in the individual. And, in that group, chaithanyam is also there, non-separable from the individual.

Now Sureswaraachaarya points out, that, we use the word 'aham' to any component of the individual. For example, when one claims 'I am writing', one uses the word 'I' not for one's whole body, since, obviously the whole body is not writing, but, it is only the hand that is writing – that too, not even the whole hand but only a particular part of the hand. Still it is only the word 'I' which is used to denote (in the context of writing) that particular part of the hand which is writing, because that part does not exist separately from the individual. This only shows that the word 'aham' can be used to refer to any part / component of the individual. In fact, it is only very rarely, that, the word 'aham' / I is used to denote to all the five kosaas of the sareeram put together. The word 'I' is used to denote any one of the kosaas or any one part of any one of the kosaas, because they are inseparable from the individual.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "In that group chaithanyam is also there. Chaithanyam and ahamkaaraa being non-separable, the word 'aham' can refer to chaithanyam also. Who can question that?" He says:

- (अहंकारः) आत्मना अविनाभावं (प्राप्नुयात्) - Ahamkaaraa, during its existence (i.e. during jagrath and svapna avasthaas, when the ahamkaaraa is functional and active) has got 'non-separation from the aathmaad, in other words, 'intimate association with chaithanyam'

Avinaabhaavam – Intimate association / non-separate existence.

Like what? Like any one of the kosaas; just as the word 'I' includes the pancha kosaas, it includes chaithanyam also. In fact, one cannot use the word 'I', if chaithanyam is not there.

When the ahamkaaraa is resolved, we do not use the word 'aham' / 'I'.

- अथवा (अहंकारः) विलयं व्रजेत् - When ahamkaaraa is in a resolved state, i.e during deep sleep (sushupthi) state,

What the Achaaryaa is trying to communicate is this: "Either ahamkaaraa exists in association with chaithanyam or it does not exist at all. There is no condition / a third alternative, in which ahamkaaraa can exist, without association with chaithanyam". Therefore, whenever ahamkaaraa is, consciousness is also an integral part of that. Therefore, the word 'aham' can be used to refer to chaithanyam, just as it (aham) can be used to refer to any component of ahamkaaraa.

- न तु पक्षान्तरं यायात् - There is no other alternative for ahamkaaraa (an alternative in which ahamkaaraa exists without association with chaithanyam)
 - अतः - Therefore,
 - अहंधिया – with the help of 'I' thought and 'I' word
 - उच्यते - aathmaa can be referred to (through primary sense itself – even lakshana vrutthi or guna vrutthi need not be used)

The subject ahamkaara: is to be supplied to all the three sentences:

(1) ahamkaara: aathmanaa avinaabhaavam (praapnuyaath)

(2) athavaa ahamkaara: vilayam vrajeth and

(3) ahamkaara: pakshaantharam na yaayaath.

The justification given in this verse for the word 'aham' to be interpreted as aathmaa, in the mahaavaakyam, is called mukhya or prasiddha vrutthi.

77. Chapter II, Verse 56 to 58 (01-12-2007)

As a part of aathma-anaathma viveka, Sureswaraachaaryaa established that ahamkaaraa, or the individuality is also a part of anaathmaa only. In fact, this is evident, because this individuality exists only during jaagrath and svapna, while, during sushupthi, it gets resolved. It is, thus, subject to arrival and departure; and in mokshaa, it is subject to total destruction also. Therefore, ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa only, aathmaa being ever-existent and non-destructible.

When this much was said, a poorva pakshin raised a question: "If ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa, the word aham, which refers to ahamkaaraa, should refer to anaathmaa only; i.e. the word aham or 'I', is, ultimately, connected to anaathmaa, according to you. If, thus, the word aham refers to anaathmaa, how can you explain the mahaa vaakyam`aham brahma asmi`? How can the jada mithyaa anaathmaa and Brahman be equated? Prove the mahaa vaakyam,`aham brahma asmi`."

Sureswaraachaarya gave the answer to this question of the poorva pakshin, in the three verses 54, 55 and 56. He said: "Even though the word aham generally refers to ahamkaaraa, it can, in context, refer to saakshi chaithanyam also. The unlocalized Consciousness can be referred to, by the word aham, through lakshanaa or implication". And, pointed out: "This we regularly do, whenever we talk about our own sleep. When we use the word 'I', in the sentence 'I slept well', in that context, the word 'I' is referring to the unlocalized Consciousness only, rid of its individuality. Therefore, by implication `aham' can refer to the chaithanyam."

He supported his contention (that `aham' can refer to chaithanya aathmaa) by two other methods also, known as gounee vrutthi: and mukyaa vrutthi:, mukyaa vrutthi: meaning 'direct method'.

For the use of the mukyaa vrutthi: , the Achaaryaa gave his argument in verse 56: "The word 'I' generally refers to ahamkaaraa only; but, since, the pure Consciousness is ever in association along with ahamkaaraa, the word aham can also refer to the inseparable Consciousness, which is in and through the ahamkaaraa. Therefore, the mahaa vaakyam`aham brahma asmi` is very much valid (when the word `aham' is interpreted as chaithanyam)".

This (i.e. establishing, that 'aham' can mean 'aathmaa' also) is only an incidental topic. The main / primary topic is: "ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa". The incidental topic was discussed at length, because the poorva pakshin had raised an objection here.

While on the incidental topic, Sureswaraachaarya also wants to give the meaning of the word Brahman, which is revealed through the word 'aham'. That Brahma lakshanam, the Achaaryaa gives in the next sloka.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 57:

कीदृक्पुनर्वस्तु लक्ष्यम् ।

What is the nature of the principle thus signified indirectly?

The Achaaryaa gets into the subject with an assumed question from the poorva pakshin: "In the mahaa vaakyam, 'aham brahma asmi', if the word aham reveals not ahamkaaraa, but is revealing the brahma vasthu only, then, tell me what is that brahma vasthu, revealed indirectly through the word 'aham'."

- कीदृक् वस्तु – What is the nature of that entity,
- लक्ष्यम् - which is indirectly revealed (through the word 'aham') ?

The poorva pakshin's question: 'ekaathmaa prathyaya saaram kim?'

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "That's the subject of all the Upanishads. I will give you an example."

Chapter II: Verse 57 –

नामादिभ्यः परो भूमा निष्कलोऽकारकोऽक्रियः ।

स एवात्मवतामात्मा स्वतस्सिद्धः स एव नः ॥ ५७ ॥

The principle, that transcends the empirical determinations like name, is infinite, partless, not involved in any action as a factor therein and is actionless, is the Self for those who have mastered themselves. It is self-established for us.

The Achaaryaa says: "It (the word 'aham') reveals the Consciousness principle, which is not a part, product or property of the body; which is not limited by the boundaries of the body; (that's why it is called brahma, the very word brahma meaning not limited by space); and, which is not limited by time also (and therefore Consciousness continues to exist even after the disintegration of the body-mind medium). This pure Consciousness, not limited by time or space is called brahma; the very word brahma means anantham; this ananthachaithanyam is revealed by the word 'aham', in the vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi'".

This ananthachaithanyam is the subject matter of all the Upanishads. Sureswaraachaara takes Chaandhoghya Upanishad to give an example in this context. In Chaandhoghya Upanishad, there are eight chapters; the last three chapters deal with Brahman. In the 6th chapter, Brahman is revealed as sadhroopa brahman - as "pure existence"; in the 7th chapter, it is revealed as "Pure Aananda" (aananda roopa); and, in the 8th chapter, it is revealed as "pure Consciousness (chith roopa)". The five principles which are applicable to the aathmaa, are applicable to sath (existence) also, to aanandaa (happiness) also and to chith (consciousness) also.

In the context of aananda, the five principles apply as follow:

- (1) happiness is not a part, product or property of the mind;
- (2) happiness is an independent entity which pervades and manifests in modha and pramodha vrutthis;
- (3) happiness is not limited by the boundaries of the mind;
- (4) happiness continues to exist, even after the destruction of the mind, and
- (5) pure happiness, in the absence of mind, is not recognizable .

In short, aanando brahmethi vyajaanaath.

Aanandaa exists even before the Creation was born; happiness is not something generated in your mind; aanandaa is the jagath kaaranam; from aananda, the pancha bhoothaas are born (aanaandaath hi eva kalu imaani bhoothaani jaayanthi).

In other words, happiness is not an adjective qualifying the mind; but, is a noun which is "pure existence"/ "pure Consciousness". This aananda - pure aanaanda/ non-experiential aanandaa - is called Bhooma in the 7th chapter of the Chandhoghya Upanishad. (That's why, the 7th chapter of Chaandhoghya Upanishad, is, itself, called "Bhooma Vidhyaa".)

Sureswaraachaarya refers to that Bhooma Vidhya here.

भूमा पर :नामादिभ्यः - Brahman is the pure aananda or chaithanyam which is beyond the entire Creation, starting with naamaa;

In the 7th chapter of the Chaandhoghya Upanishad, the Creation is referred to, with the help of 15 entities, beginning with naamaa.

First, the teacher says “naamaa is infinite. Naamaa being name, is infinite, because there is name everywhere; because every object is associated with some naamaa or other. Therefore, naamaa is infinite.”

Then, the teacher introduces vaak, which is bigger; then, he introduces mana:, which is still bigger; thereafter, he goes on to sankalapa:, chittham, vijnaanam etc. Thus, the teacher Sanathkumara goes through 14 stages of teaching to Naaradaa, beginning with naamaa (naamaadhibhya:), and, finally comes to the 15th stage, called bhoomaa, which is “pure Consciousness” or aanandam.

Declares the teacher: “Yo vai bhoomaa thath sukham na alpe sukham asth” – “No object in the Creation can be happiness / no object in the Creation can have happiness, because every object is alpam; alpam cannot have sukham; happiness is an entity beyond the universe, beyond time and beyond space, which gets reflected in the mind; the experiential happiness is prathibhimbha aanandaa ; bhimbha aanandaa, which is called bhoomaa can never be experienced”.

Then, when the student eagerly asked: “Where is that unexperientable bhimbha aananda?”, the teacher replied “thath thvam asi – you are that original limitless happiness”.

At best, you can only get a reflected version of that original happiness, an example being one’s own face, which one can never look at directly; but, has to be satisfied with a reflection through a mirror.

“I am the original aananda, which can never be experienced. I have to be satisfied, with a reflected pleasure, which is subject to arrival and departure” is the teaching of Sanathkumara in the Chaandhogya Upanishad.

Therefore, “Paro bhoomaa” in this verse 57, means aananda svaroopaa:, which is ‘infinite’, which is :

- निष्कलः - (This aananda aathmaa is) without divisions.

Pure happiness does not have divisions as ‘my joy’, ‘your joy’ etc. It is only eka: | “Sa ya:schaayam purushe ya:schaavaadhithye sa eka:”. Original happiness is one indivisible whole.

- अकारकः - (This aananda aathmaa is) not one of the entities which is used for transactions.

The very question “how to experience that pure Bliss?” is fallacious, since the moment one ‘experiences’ any bliss, it will not be pure bliss, because it has become one of the entities of the creation / an object of experience. Aananda aathmaa is beyond all transactions / experiences.

- अक्रियः - (This aananda aathmaa is) not a kriyaa or action / unassociated with any action.

Whatever is applicable to Consciousness is applicable to aananda also.

- सः एव— That pure aananda aathmaa / chaithanya aathmaa
- आत्मवतां आत्मा — is the essential nature of all living beings.

It follows, therefore, that, whenever somebody says "I am unhappy", the 'unhappiness' referred to, can only mean the "unmanifested happiness". In other words, the statement should only be: "I am happiness; but, my mind is not serving as an ideal reflecting medium; therefore, in the disturbed mind, happiness is not manifest. But, even when it is not manifest, I am aananda aathma svaroopā: alone".

What is the proof for that aananda aathmaa?

स्वतस्सिद्धः (स एव) - (That pure aananda) is always self-evident (in the form of pure Chaithanyam).

Because "sath eva chith, chith eva aananda:", we do not require a separate proof for aananda - existence is ever evident, Consciousness is ever evident, that alone is the proof for aananda also, because aananda is chaithanyam.

In the Kathopanishad also, Nachikethas asks: "How can that pure aananda be known or experienced by me?" – "Thad ethath ithi manyanthe anirdesyam paramam sukham katham nu thadh vijaaneeyaam kimubhaathi vibhaathi vaa" (II.2.14) and the teacher Yamadarmaraja replies "Na thathra suryo bhaathi na chandrataarakam na imaa: vidhyutha: bhaanthi kuthoyamagni: | thameva bhaanthamanubhaathi sarvam thasya bhaasaa sarvamidham vibhaath!" (II.2.15), which verse implies "Pure aananda can never be experienced, because it is in the form of the 'experiencer' Consciousness principle".

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says "svathasiddha: sa: eva" – "That is always self-evident". For whom (is it self-evident)?

नः - for all of us.

And, this Brahmaananda alone is revealed through the mahaavakyam, 'aham brahma asmi'; and, in that mahaavaakyam, the word 'aham' does not refer to ahamkaaraa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 58:

अज्ञानोत्थबुद्ध्यादिकर्तृत्वोपाधिमात्मानं परिगृह्य एव अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां अहं सुखी दुःखी चेत्यहंकारादेः
अनात्मधर्मत्वं उक्तं केवल आत्म अभ्युपगमेऽशक्यत्वात्पलाभावाच्च । अथेदानीमविध्यापरिकल्पितं
साक्षित्वमाश्रित्य कर्तृत्वाध्यसेषपरिणामप्रतिषेधायाह ।

Accepting the Self, as conditioned by the mind, agency etc., which are emanations of ignorance, that the ego and such other phenomena involved in feelings like pleasure and pain, are other than the Self has been demonstrated, through reasoning. Such a procedure would be impossible and purposeless, if only the unconditioned Self were attended to. Similarly, now, taking our stand on the fact that the Self is the witness, which fact itself is a projection of nescience, we are going to deny of the Self, all the transformations of the nature of being an agent in action etc.

In this involved passage, Sureswaraachaarya is trying to convey an important message: "The pure aathmaa, which is eternal and all-pervading, is never available for any transaction; therefore, it is not even available for teaching or communication, since, communication is also only a form of transaction".

That's why, it is said: "Yatho vacho nivarthanthe apraapya manasaa saha" – "Words, along with the mind, return without reaching that" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Brahma Valli – 4).

The all-pervading aathmaa is avyavahaaryam; therefore, beyond communication; therefore, in the course of Vedhaanthic teaching, for the sake of communication, "aathmaa, enclosed in the mind (buddhi upahitha aathmaa)" is first talked about, since "buddhi upahitha aathmaa" is vyavahaaryam / i.e. "aathmaa, enclosed in the mind" is available for some form of communication. In effect, a compromise is made and the "enclosed aathmaa" is initially talked about, with the hope, that, the student will ultimately understand the "un-enclosed aathmaa".

This is somewhat similar to the well known fact, that, pure all-pervading space is not useful in any manner and that only enclosed space (enclosed, as a room or as a container) can have utility.

Since pure aathmaa is avyavahaaryam – therefore, not available even for communication - the teacher first brings in the sopaadika aathmaa, which is revealed in the first stage as the 'experiencer' of everything, as in verse 23, Ch. XIII of the Bhagavadh Githa: "Upadrashtaanumanthaa cha barthaa bokthaa maheswara: paramaathmethi cha api uktha: dehesmin purusha: para: " – "The supreme Purushaa in this body is said to be the close witness, the supporter, the sustainer, the expereincer, the great lord and the supreme Self".

That all-pervading aathmaa, enclosed in the mind, is revealed as the experiencer 'I'-dhrashtaa aathmaa. Who is dhrashtaa? Not the all-pervading aathmaa, but, the aathmaa enclosed in the buddhi. Even this is a compromise made by the teacher, who comes down and calls the aathmaa a dhrashtaa.

To repeat: as a first step, the teacher says "You are the aathmaa, which is dhrashtaa and everything else is dhrusyam- the anaathmaa." Thus, in the initial stages, aathma-anaathma viveka is in the form of dhrashtru-dhrusya viveka / experiencer-experienced distinction.

The teacher further says: "The world / body / mind / thoughts are all anaathmaa. But, who are you? You are the experiencer – the aathmaa".

This is the first level of teaching called dhruk-dhrusya-viveka or dhrashtru-dhrusya-viveka.

But, in this teaching, there is a problem, even though there are advantages. The advantages are: Through this teaching the world is negated; the mind is negated; the body is negated; the thoughts are negated and the conviction "I am the pure experiencer of even the blank mind" is instilled. But, there is a problem.

What is that problem? The moment you use the word 'experiencer', the very word creates an impression that aathmaa is doing the action of experiencing; since, the suffix 'er' added to any verb, refers to an agent doing the action indicated by the verb – examples being talker, speaker, walker etc. etc.

So also, in the word 'experiencer', we have added the suffix 'er' to the verb 'experience' and have thus presented aathmaa, as the 'experiencer' principle.

The moment you understand aathmaa as a dhrashtaa – experiencer – action is implied; and, once action comes, modification is involved, because any action results in vikaaraa. Therefore, the word 'dhrashtaa' conveys savikaarathvam; and once you talk about the modification on the part of aathmaa, then the question 'if athmaa has modification, who is 'watching' the modification?' rises. Such a question cannot have answers, the result being 'confusion' instead of 'clarity'.

Therefore, in the second stage of teaching, the word 'experiencer/ dhrashtaa' is abolished. Initially, the word is used as a compromise, which, the teacher knows will create a doubt and therefore, later, replaces the word 'experiencer' by the word saakshi. What is taught initially as the 'experiencer', is, later, taught as 'saakshi', the 'witness' principle. Once you use the word 'saakshi', the confusion is cleared, since a 'witness' is that which is not involved in any activity; which is impartial; which is only a bye-stander spectator. 'Witnessing' is not a job done by the 'witness'. The incident falls within the range of the witness, who does not 'look' into it."

Therefore, the word 'saakshi' would indicate 'nirvikaara dhrashtaa'; it is not an 'experiencer'; it is the pure Consciousness principle, in whose presence, things are known; but, it is not a 'knower'.

Aathmaa is not a 'knower'; but, in its presence, things get known; therefore, you call it a 'knower', though no 'knowing' action is involved on the part of the aathmaa. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadaa gives the beautiful and apt example of 'fire' to this fact.

When we say 'fire burns paper'; we use the verb 'burn', as though fire is doing the action of 'burning'; while, in fact, fire does not will to/ does not plan to/ does not do, the action of burning; because, if 'burning' is an action done by the fire, the 'action' will have a beginning and an end; but, the reality is "fire is ; and, in the presence of fire, the paper gets burnt". Because of this, from the standpoint of paper, fire is said to be a 'burner'- though the suffix 'er' does not convey an action. In a similar manner, do we say : "Consciousness is a knower/ an experiencer".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Consciousness does not 'know'; it does not 'experience'; it simply is; but, in its presence, mind gets known; thoughts get known; and, through the thoughts, the world also gets known. And, to this Consciousness, which is actionless experiencer, a different name should be given and that name is saakshi".

Previously aathmaa was named dhrashtaa and anaathmaa was referred to as dhrusyam; now, in the advanced stage, aathmaa is called saakshi and anaathmaa as saakshyam. The term dhruk-dhrusya-viveka is also dropped; saakshi-saakshya-viveka is the term used.

And, who am 'I'? 'I' am not a knower or experiencer; 'I' am and in 'my' presence things get experienced / known / awared.

This is the change of topic now: Dhrashtru-dhrusya-viveka to saakshi-saakshya-viveka.

In this portion, not only is the topic complex; the language used is also complex.

- अहंकारादेः अनात्मधर्मत्वं उक्तं - Until now, it had been taught, that, ahamkaaraa etc. are the attributes of anaathmaa / that, individuality is not the attribute of aathmaa.

What type of individuality?

- अहं सुखी (अहं) दुःखी च इति (अहंकारादेः) - (the ahamkaaraa) which expresses in the form of 'I am happy' / 'I am unhappy' etc.

By what method was this established?

- अन्वय व्यतिरेकाभ्यां - By using the reasoning of anvaya and vyathirekha.

'Anvaya' means 'continuity' and 'vyathirekha' means 'discontinuity'. 'Continuity' is of the dhrashtaa, the experiencer and 'discontinuity' is that of the dhrusyam, the experienced. In 'I', the experiencer, there is 'anvaya' and in whatever is experienced, there is 'vyathirekha'. As in verse 13 – Ch. II of the Bhagavadh Githa: 'Dehino asmin yathaa dehe kaumaaram youvanam jaraa' – kaumaaram, youvanam, jaraa are all vyathirekhaa ; 'I' am anvayaa. By using this method, ahamkaaraa has been separated.

On what basis, were all these done?

- आत्मानं (द्रष्टारं) परिग्रह्य - By taking the aathmaa as the experiencer / dhrashtaa.

The word 'Dhrashtaaram' is understood. Parigrhya – by taking / assuming.

"Aathmaa is the 'experiencer'" is a compromised definition.

What type of aathmaa? Not the pure, un-enclosed, all pervading aathmaa, which cannot be the experiencer. The aathmaa enclosed within the buddhi, is the experiencer-aathmaa. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- बुद्ध्यादि कर्तृत्वोपाधिं - The aathmaa which is enclosed within the buddhi, which gives the aathmaa the qualification of the 'experiencer'

'Karthruthva upaadhi' means the medium (the mind) which gives aathmaa the 'experiencer' status.

What type of mind?

- अज्ञान उत्थं - which is born of pure ignorance.

'Ajnaana uttham' is an adjective to the mind. Ignorance here means the thaamasica aspect of maayaa.

The Achaaryaa uses this adjective for the mind, since, only as long as 'I' am enclosed within the mind 'I' can be called an 'experiencer' and when jnaanam comes and the mind is negated 'I' cannot be called 'experiencer'. Finally, aathmaa cannot have any of these statuses. Only to indicate this fact, Sureswaraacharya uses this adjective 'ajnaana uttham'. This aathmaa (enclosed by the buddhi) has been talked about, so far. Why? The Achaaryaa answers:

- केवल आत्म अभ्युगमे - If the pure un-enclosed, all-pervading aathmaa has been taken,

Kevala aathmaa – pure un-enclosed, all-pervading aathmaa.

This pure, all-pervading aathmaa is not available even for communication, just as pure space is not utilitarian in any way. Even an open land has to be enclosed at least by a fence, to be claimed as one's property; thereafter, space has to be further enclosed to be utilized as a house / rooms etc. 'House' is the name of 'enclosed space'; so also is 'room', 'hall' etc. Somewhat in a similar manner, dhrashtaa is the name of 'enclosed aathmaa'; the pure aathmaa is, as Gouda Paadhaacharya declares in his Maandookya Karika – Advaita Prakaranam – Verse 36, "na upachara: kathanchana" – "There is no transaction at all, with regard to the Self".

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- अशक्यत्वात् – since, it is not possible to teach / communicate (about pure aathmaa)
- पल अभावात् च – and also since the aathmaa cannot enjoy the benefit of being known about

Palam – indicates 'knowledge', in this context; "'knowledge' (of aathmaa) is not possible" is the essence.

Aathma can be neither taught about; nor can it be known. Neither teachable nor knowable.

Therefore, we have compromised and we are communicating the 'enclosed aathmaa' as dhrashtaa.

But, in this method, as mentioned earlier, there is the following problem: "Once you say aathmaa is a dhrashtaa, it seems to be doing the action of experiencing"

"Therefore" the Achaaryaa says "I want to go to a different method". What is that?

- अथ इदानीम् - Therefore, hereafter,

- साक्षित्वं आश्रित्य - by resorting to the saakshi status (to the aathmaa, after knocking off the dhrashtaa status),
- कर्तृत्वादि अशेष परिणाम प्रतिषेधाय – to negate all modifications, including the modification involved in the action of experiencing,

Asesha parinaama – all modifications without exceptions

- आह - this is being said (in the following verse)

The word 'experiencer' conveys the 'action of experience'; that 'action of experience' (dhrastruthvam) is called 'karthruthvam' in this context. That 'experincerhood' involves 'experiencing' modification. That modification also, the Achaaryaa wants to negate, by pointing out that the aathmaa is not doing the job of 'experiencing'. Then, what is it, that the aathmaa 'does'? It is not doing anything; it just is; it exists. Using the verb 'exist' also may create an impression that the aathmaa does the act of existing, since a verb always denotes action. To avoid this eventuality, use of the verb 'exist' is also avoided, in the context of aathmaa ; instead aathmaa itself is denoted by the noun 'Existence' (sath)

"To negate all modifications, including the modification involved in the action of 'experiencing', I am going to define aathmaa as a saakshi", the Achaaryaa says.

But, this also causes another problem. Once you say aathmaa is a saakshi, it is true, that, it is not doing any action and therefore, it is changeless saakshi. But, even this status, changeless saakshi, is a relative status- i.e. it has relation to saakshyam. Therefore, the poorva pakshin may argue: "Saakshi also cannot be the absolute truth; because, saakshithvam is also a relative status and secondly saakshi also will be limited, because there is duality – saakshi and saakshyam." Therefore, later, the word saakshi also will have to be removed. This is the approach made in Advaita Makarandhaa.

But, here, in this portion, Sureswaraacharyaa limits himself to dropping the dhrashtaa status for the aathmaa, bestowing it with the saakshi status, with the intention, to stress on the 'changeless' nature of the aathmaa; but, he does indicate, that the saakshi status is also false, as follows:

- अविध्या परिकल्पितं (साक्षित्वं) – the saakshithvam status, which is also temporarily superimposed, because of ignorance.

Both, saakshi and dhrashtaa statuses are false. But, between the two, the saakshi false status is better than the dhrashtaa false status, since dhrashtaa implies 'change' and saakshi implies 'changelessness'.

77. Chapter II, Verse 56 to 58 (01-12-2007)

As a part of aathma-anaathma viveka, Sureswaraachaaryaa established that ahamkaaraa, or the individuality is also a part of anaathmaa only. In fact, this is evident, because this individuality exists only during jaagrath and svapna, while, during sushupthi, it gets resolved. It is, thus, subject to arrival and departure; and in mokshaa, it is subject to total destruction also. Therefore, ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa only, aathmaa being ever-existent and non-destructible.

When this much was said, a poorva pakshin raised a question: "If ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa, the word aham, which refers to ahamkaaraa, should refer to anaathmaa only; i.e. the word aham or 'I', is, ultimately, connected to anaathmaa, according to you. If, thus, the word aham refers to anaathmaa, how can you explain the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi? How can the jada mithyaa anaathmaa and Brahman be equated? Prove the mahaa vaakyam, 'aham brahma asmi."

Sureswaraachaarya gave the answer to this question of the poorva pakshin, in the three verses 54, 55 and 56. He said: "Even though the word aham generally refers to ahamkaaraa, it can, in context, refer to saakshi chaithanyam also. The unlocalized Consciousness can be referred to, by the word aham, through lakshanaa or implication". And, pointed out: "This we regularly do, whenever we talk about our own sleep. When we use the word 'I', in the sentence 'I slept well', in that context, the word 'I' is referring to the unlocalized Consciousness only, rid of its individuality. Therefore, by implication 'aham' can refer to the chaithanyam."

He supported his contention (that 'aham' can refer to chaithanya aathmaa) by two other methods also, known as gounee vrutthi: and mukyaa vrutthi:, mukyaa vrutthi: meaning 'direct method'.

For the use of the mukyaa vrutthi:, the Achaaryaa gave his argument in verse 56: "The word 'I' generally refers to ahamkaaraa only; but, since, the pure Consciousness is ever in association along with ahamkaaraa, the word aham can also refer to the inseparable Consciousness, which is in and through the ahamkaaraa. Therefore, the mahaa vaakyam 'aham brahma asmi is very much valid (when the word 'aham' is interpreted as chaithanyam)".

This (i.e. establishing, that `aham` can mean `aathmaa` also) is only an incidental topic. The main / primary topic is: "ahamkaaraa is anaathmaa". The incidental topic was discussed at length, because the poorva pakshin had raised an objection here.

While on the incidental topic, Sureswaraachaarya also wants to give the meaning of the word Brahman, which is revealed through the word `aham`. That Brahma lakshanam, the Achaaryaa gives in the next sloka.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 57:

कीदृक्पुनर्वस्तु लक्ष्यम् ।

What is the nature of the principle thus signified indirectly?

The Achaaryaa gets into the subject with an assumed question from the poorva pakshin: "In the mahaa vaakyam, `aham brahma asmi`, if the word aham reveals not ahamkaaraa, but is revealing the brahma vasthu only, then, tell me what is that brahma vasthu, revealed indirectly through the word `aham`."

- कीदृक् वस्तु –What is the nature of that entity,
- लक्ष्यम् - which is indirectly revealed (through the word `aham`)?

The poorva pakshin's question: 'ekaathmaa prathyaya saaram kim?'

Sureswaraachaarya replies: "That's the subject of all the Upanishads. I will give you an example."

Chapter II: Verse 57 –

नामादिभ्यःपरो भूमा निष्कलोऽकारकोऽक्रियः।

स एवात्मवतामात्मा स्वतस्सिद्धःस एव नः॥ ५७ ॥

The principle, that transcends the empirical determinations like name, is infinite, partless, not involved in any action as a factor therein and is actionless, is the Self for those who have mastered themselves. It is self-established for us.

The Achaaryaa says: "It (the word `aham`) reveals the Consciousness principle, which is not a part, product or property of the body; which is not limited by the boundaries of the body; (that's why it is called brahma, the very word brahma meaning not limited by space); and, which is not limited by time also (and therefore Consciousness continues to exist even after the disintegration of the body-mind medium). This pure Consciousness, not limited by time or space is called brahma; the very word brahma means anantham; this ananthachaithanyam is revealed by the word `aham`, in the vaakyam`aham brahma asmi`".

This ananthachaithanyam is the subject matter of all the Upanishads. Sureswaraachaara takes Chaandhoghya Upanishad to give an example in this context. In Chaandhoghya Upanishad, there are eight chapters; the last three chapters deal with Brahman. In the 6th chapter, Brahman is revealed as sadhroopa brahman - as "pure existence"; in the 7th chapter, it is revealed as "Pure Aananda" (aananda roopa); and, in the 8th chapter, it is revealed as "pure Consciousness (chith roopa)". The five principles which are applicable to the aathmaa, are applicable to sath (existence) also, to aananda (happiness) also and to chith (consciousness) also.

In the context of aananda, the five principles apply as follow:

- happiness is not a part, product or property of the mind;
- happiness is an independent entity which pervades and manifests in modha and pramodha vrutthis;
- happiness is not limited by the boundaries of the mind;
- happiness continues to exist, even after the destruction of the mind, and
- pure happiness, in the absence of mind, is not recognizable .

In short, aanando brahmethi vyajaanaath.

Aananda exists even before the Creation was born; happiness is not something generated in your mind; aananda is the jagath kaaranam; from aananda, the pancha bhoothaas are born (aanandaath hi eva kalu imaani bhoothaani jaayanthi).

In other words, happiness is not an adjective qualifying the mind; but, is a noun which is "pure existence"/ "pure Consciousness". This aananda - pure aananda/ non-experiential aananda - is called Bhooma in the 7th chapter of the Chandhoghya Upanishad. (That's why, the 7th chapter of Chaandhoghya Upanishad, is, itself, called "Bhooma Vidhya".)

Sureswaraachaarya refers to that Bhooma Vidhya here.

भूमा पर :नामादिभ्यः - Brahman is the pure aananda or chaithanyam which is beyond the entire Creation, starting with naamaa;

In the 7th chapter of the Chaandhoghya Upanishad, the Creation is referred to, with the help of 15 entities, beginning with naamaa.

First, the teacher says "naamaa is infinite. Naamaa being name, is infinite, because there is name everywhere; because every object is associated with some naamaa or other. Therefore, naamaa is infinite."

Then, the teacher introduces vaak, which is bigger; then, he introduces mana:, which is still bigger; thereafter, he goes on to sankalapa:, chittham, vijnaanam etc. Thus, the teacher Sanathkumara goes through 14 stages of teaching to Naaradaa, beginning with naamaa (naamaadhibhya:), and, finally comes to the 15th stage, called bhoomaa, which is "pure Consciousness" or aanandam.

Declares the teacher: "Yo vai bhoomaa thath sukham na alpe sukham asth" – "No object in the Creation can be happiness / no object in the Creation can have happiness, because every object is alpam; alpam cannot have sukham; happiness is an entity beyond the universe, beyond time and beyond space, which gets reflected in the mind; the experiential happiness is prathibhimba aanandaa; bhimbha aanandaa, which is called bhoomaa can never be experienced".

Then, when the student eagerly asked: "Where is that unexperientable bhimbha aananda?", the teacher replied "thath thvam asi – you are that original limitless happiness".

At best, you can only get a reflected version of that original happiness, an example being one's own face, which one can never look at directly; but, has to be satisfied with a reflection through a mirror.

"I am the original aananda, which can never be experienced. I have to be satisfied, with a reflected pleasure, which is subject to arrival and departure" is the teaching of Sanathkumara in the Chaandhogya Upanishad.

Therefore, "Paro bhoomaa" in this verse 57, means aananda svaroop:, which is 'infinite', which is :

- निष्कलः - (This aananda aathmaa is) without divisions.

Pure happiness does not have divisions as 'my joy', 'your joy' etc. It is only eka: | "Sa ya:schaayam purushe ya:schaavaadhithye sa eka:". Original happiness is one indivisible whole.

- अकारकः - (This aananda aathmaa is) not one of the entities which is used for transactions.

The very question "how to experience that pure Bliss?" is fallacious, since the moment one 'experiences' any bliss, it will not be pure bliss, because it has become one of the entities of the creation / an object of experience. Aananda aathmaa is beyond all transactions / experiences.

- अक्रियः - (This aananda aathmaa is) not a kriyaa or action / unassociated with any action.

Whatever is applicable to Consciousness is applicable to aananda also.

- सः एव – That pure aananda aathmaa / chaithanya aathmaa
- आत्मवतां आत्मा – is the essential nature of all living beings.

It follows, therefore, that, whenever somebody says "I am unhappy", the 'unhappiness' referred to, can only mean the "unmanifested happiness". In other words, the statement should only be: "I am happiness; but, my mind is not serving as an ideal reflecting medium; therefore, in the disturbed mind, happiness is not manifest. But, even when it is not manifest, I am aananda aathma svaroopaa: alone".

What is the proof for that aananda aathmaa?

स्वतस्सिद्धः (स एव) - (That pure aananda) is always self-evident (in the form of pure Chaithanyam).

Because "sath eva chith, chith eva aananda:", we do not require a separate proof for aananda - existence is ever evident, Consciousness is ever evident, that alone is the proof for aananda also, because aananda is chaithanyam.

In the Kathopanishad also, Nachikethas asks: "How can that pure aananda be known or experienced by me?" – "Thad ethath ithi manyanthe anirdesyam paramam sukham katham nu thadh vijaaneeyaam kimubhaathi vibhaathi vaa" (II.2.14) and the teacher Yamadarmaraja replies "Na thathra suryo bhaathi na chandrataarakam na imaa: vidhyutha: bhaanthi kuthoyamagni: | thameva bhaanthamanubhaathi sarvam thasya bhaasaa sarvamidham vibhaath!" (II.2.15), which verse implies "Pure aananda can never be experienced, because it is in the form of the 'experiencer' Consciousness principle".

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says "svathasiddha: sa: eva" – "That is always self-evident". For whom (is it self-evident)?

नः - for all of us.

And, this Brahmaananda alone is revealed through the mahaavakyam, 'aham brahma asmi'; and, in that mahaavaakyam, the word 'aham' does not refer to ahamkaaraa.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 58:

अज्ञानोत्थबुद्ध्यादिकर्तृत्वोपाधिमात्मानं परिगृह्य एव अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां अहं सुखी दुःखी चेत्यहंकारादेः
अनात्मधर्मत्वं उक्तं केवल आत्म अभ्युपगमेऽशक्यत्वात्पलाभावाच्च । अथेदानीमविध्यापरिकल्पितं
साक्षित्वमाश्रित्य कर्तृत्वाध्यसेषपरिणामप्रतिषेधायाह ।

Accepting the Self, as conditioned by the mind, agency etc., which are emanations of ignorance, that the ego and such other phenomena involved in feelings like pleasure and pain, are other than the Self has been demonstrated, through reasoning. Such a procedure would be impossible and purposeless, if only the unconditioned Self were attended to. Similarly, now, taking our stand on the fact that the Self is the witness, which fact itself is a projection of nescience, we are going to deny of the Self, all the transformations of the nature of being an agent in action etc.

In this involved passage, Sureswaraachaarya is trying to convey an important message: "The pure aathmaa, which is eternal and all-pervading, is never available for any transaction; therefore, it is not even available for teaching or communication, since, communication is also only a form of transaction".

That's why, it is said: "Yatho vacho nivarthanthe apraapya manasaa saha" – "Words, along with the mind, return without reaching that" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Brahma Valli – 4).

The all-pervading aathmaa is avyavahaaryam; therefore, beyond communication; therefore, in the course of Vedhaanthic teaching, for the sake of communication, "aathmaa, enclosed in the mind (buddhi upahitha aathmaa)" is first talked about, since "buddhi upahitha aathmaa" is vyavahaaryam / i.e. "aathmaa, enclosed in the mind" is available for some form of communication. In effect, a compromise is made and the "enclosed aathmaa" is initially talked about, with the hope, that, the student will ultimately understand the "un-enclosed aathmaa".

This is somewhat similar to the well known fact, that, pure all-pervading space is not useful in any manner and that only enclosed space (enclosed, as a room or as a container) can have utility.

Since pure aathmaa is avyavahaaryam – therefore, not available even for communication - the teacher first brings in the sopaadika aathmaa, which is revealed in the first stage as the 'experiencer' of everything, as in verse 23, Ch. XIII of the Bhagavadh Githa: "Upadrashtaanumanthaa cha barthaa bokthaa maheswara: paramaathmethi cha api uktha: dehesmin purusha: para:" – "The supreme Purushaa in this body is said to be the close witness, the supporter, the sustainer, the expereincer, the great lord and the supreme Self".

That all-pervading aathmaa, enclosed in the mind, is revealed as the experiencer 'I'-dhrashtaa aathmaa. Who is dhrashtaa? Not the all-pervading aathmaa, but, the aathmaa enclosed in the buddhi. Even this is a compromise made by the teacher, who comes down and calls the aathmaa a dhrashtaa.

To repeat: as a first step, the teacher says "You are the aathmaa, which is dhrashtaa and everything else is dhrusyam- the anaathmaa." Thus, in the initial stages, aathma-anaathma viveka is in the form of dhrashtru-dhrusya viveka / experiencer-experienced distinction.

The teacher further says: "The world / body / mind / thoughts are all anaathmaa. But, who are you? You are the experiencer – the aathmaa".

This is the first level of teaching called dhruk-dhrusya-viveka or dhrashtru-dhrusya-viveka.

But, in this teaching, there is a problem, even though there are advantages. The advantages are: Through this teaching the world is negated; the mind is negated; the body is negated; the thoughts are negated and the conviction "I am the pure experiencer of even the blank mind" is instilled. But, there is a problem.

What is that problem? The moment you use the word 'experiencer', the very word creates an impression that aathmaa is doing the action of experiencing; since, the suffix 'er' added to any verb, refers to an agent doing the action indicated by the verb – examples being talker, speaker, walker etc. etc.

So also, in the word 'experiencer', we have added the suffix 'er' to the verb 'experience' and have thus presented aathmaa, as the 'experiencer' principle.

The moment you understand aathmaa as a dhrashtaa – experiencer – action is implied; and, once action comes, modification is involved, because any action results in vikaaraa. Therefore, the word 'dhrashtaa' conveys savikaarathvam; and once you talk about the modification on the part of aathmaa, then the question 'if athmaa has modification, who is 'watching' the modification?' rises. Such a question cannot have answers, the result being 'confusion' instead of 'clarity'.

Therefore, in the second stage of teaching, the word 'experiencer/ dhrashtaa' is abolished. Initially, the word is used as a compromise, which, the teacher knows will create a doubt and therefore, later, replaces the word 'experiencer' by the word saakshi. What is taught initially as the 'experiencer', is, later, taught as 'saakshi', the 'witness' principle. Once you use the word 'saakshi', the confusion is cleared, since a 'witness' is that which is not involved in any activity; which is impartial; which is only a bye-stander spectator. 'Witnessing' is not a job done by the 'witness'. The incident falls within the range of the witness, who does not 'look' into it."

Therefore, the word 'saakshi' would indicate 'nirvikaara dhrashtaa'; it is not an 'experiencer'; it is the pure Consciousness principle, in whose presence, things are known; but, it is not a 'knower'.

Aathmaa is not a 'knower'; but, in its presence, things get known; therefore, you call it a 'knower', though no 'knowing' action is involved on the part of the aathmaa. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadaa gives the beautiful and apt example of 'fire' to this fact.

When we say 'fire burns paper'; we use the verb 'burn', as though fire is doing the action of 'burning'; while, in fact, fire does not will to/ does not plan to/ does not do, the action of burning; because, if 'burning' is an action done by the fire, the 'action' will have a beginning and an end; but, the reality is "fire is; and, in the presence of fire, the paper gets burnt". Because of this, from the standpoint of paper, fire is said to be a 'burner'- though the suffix 'er' does not convey an action. In a similar manner, do we say: "Consciousness is a knower/ an experiencer".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Consciousness does not 'know'; it does not 'experience'; it simply is; but, in its presence, mind gets known ; thoughts get known; and, through the thoughts, the world also gets known. And, to this Consciousness, which is actionless experiencer, a different name should be given and that name is saakshi".

Previously aathmaa was named dhrashtaa and anaathmaa was referred to as dhrusyam; now, in the advanced stage, aathmaa is called saakshi and anaathmaa as saakshyam. The term dhruk-dhrusya-viveka is also dropped; saakshi-saakshya-viveka is the term used.

And, who am 'I'? 'I' am not a knower or experiencer; 'I' am and in 'my' presence things get experienced / known / awared.

This is the change of topic now: Dhrashtu-dhrusya-viveka to saakshi-saakshya-viveka.

In this portion, not only is the topic complex; the language used is also complex.

- अहंकारादेः अनात्मधर्मत्वं उक्तं - Until now, it had been taught, that, ahamkaaraa etc. are the attributes of anaathmaa / that, individuality is not the attribute of aathmaa.

What type of individuality?

- अहं सुखी (अहं) दुःखी च इति (अहंकारादेः) - (the ahamkaaraa) which expresses in the form of 'I am happy' / 'I am unhappy' etc.

By what method was this established?

- अन्वय व्यतिरेकाभ्यां - By using the reasoning of anvaya and vyathirekha.

'Anvaya' means 'continuity' and 'vyathirekha' means 'discontinuity'. 'Continuity' is of the dhrashtaa, the experiencer and 'discontinuity' is that of the dhrusyam, the experienced. In 'I', the experiencer, there is 'anvaya' and in whatever is experienced, there is 'vyathirekha'. As in verse 13 – Ch. II of the Bhagavadh Githa: 'Dehino asmin yathaa dehe kaumaaram youvanam jaraa – kaumaaram, youvanam, jaraa are all vyathirekhaa; 'I' am anvayaa. By using this method, ahamkaaraa has been separated.

On what basis, were all these done?

- आत्मानं (द्रष्टारं) परिग्रह्य - By taking the aathmaa as the experiencer / dhrashtaa.

The word 'Dhrashtaaram' is understood. Parigruhya – by taking / assuming.

"Aathmaa is the 'experiencer'" is a compromised definition.

What type of aathmaa? Not the pure, un-enclosed, all pervading aathmaa, which cannot be the experiencer. The aathmaa enclosed within the buddhi, is the experiencer-aathmaa. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- बुद्ध्यादि कर्तृत्वोपाधि - The aathmaa which is enclosed within the buddhi, which gives the aathmaa the qualification of the 'experiencer'

'Karthruthva upaadhi' means the medium (the mind) which gives aathmaa the 'experiencer' status.

What type of mind?

- अज्ञान उत्थं - which is born of pure ignorance.

'Ajnaana uttham' is an adjective to the mind. Ignorance here means the thaamasica aspect of maayaa.

The Achaaryaa uses this adjective for the mind, since, only as long as 'I' am enclosed within the mind 'I' can be called an 'experiencer' and when jnaanam comes and the mind is negated 'I' cannot be called 'experiencer'. Finally, aathmaa cannot have any of these statuses. Only to indicate this fact, Sureswaraacharya uses this adjective 'ajnaana uttham'. This aathmaa (enclosed by the buddhi) has been talked about, so far. Why? The Achaaryaa answers:

- केवल आत्म अभ्युगमे - If the pure un-enclosed, all-pervading aathmaa has been taken,

Kevala aathmaa – pure un-enclosed, all-pervading aathmaa.

This pure, all-pervading aathmaa is not available even for communication, just as pure space is not utilitarian in any way. Even an open land has to be enclosed at least by a fence, to be claimed as one's property; thereafter, space has to be further enclosed to be utilized as a house / rooms etc. 'House' is the name of 'enclosed space'; so also is 'room', 'hall' etc. Somewhat in a similar manner, dhrashtaa is the name of 'enclosed aathmaa'; the pure aathmaa is, as Gouda Paadhaacharya declares in his Maandookya Karika – Advaita Prakaranam – Verse 36, "na upachara: kathanchana" – "There is no transaction at all, with regard to the Self".

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- अशक्यत्वात् – since, it is not possible to teach / communicate (about pure aathmaa)
- पल अभावात् च – and also since the aathmaa cannot enjoy the benefit of being known about

Palam – indicates 'knowledge', in this context; "'knowledge' (of aathmaa) is not possible" is the essence.

Aathma can be neither taught about; nor can it be known. Neither teachable nor knowable.

Therefore, we have compromised and we are communicating the 'enclosed aathmaa' as dhrashtaa.

But, in this method, as mentioned earlier, there is the following problem: "Once you say aathmaa is a dhrashtaa, it seems to be doing the action of experiencing"

"Therefore" the Achaaryaa says "I want to go to a different method". What is that?

- अथ इदानीम् - Therefore, hereafter,

- साक्षित्वं आश्रित्य - by resorting to the saakshi status (to the aathmaa, after knocking off the dhrashtaa status),
- कर्तृत्वादि अशेष परिणाम प्रतिषेधाय – to negate all modifications, including the modification involved in the action of experiencing,

Asesha parinaama – all modifications without exceptions

- आह - this is being said (in the following verse)

The word 'experiencer' conveys the 'action of experience'; that 'action of experience' (dhrastruthvam) is called 'karthruthvam' in this context. That 'experincerhood' involves 'experiencing' modification. That modification also, the Achaaryaa wants to negate, by pointing out that the aathmaa is not doing the job of 'experiencing'. Then, what is it, that the aathmaa 'does'? It is not doing anything; it just is; it exists. Using the verb 'exist' also may create an impression that the aathmaa does the act of existing, since a verb always denotes action. To avoid this eventuality, use of the verb 'exist' is also avoided, in the context of aathmaa; instead aathmaa itself is denoted by the noun 'Existence' (sath)

"To negate all modifications, including the modification involved in the action of 'experiencing', I am going to define aathmaa as a saakshi", the Achaaryaa says.

But, this also causes another problem. Once you say aathmaa is a saakshi, it is true, that, it is not doing any action and therefore, it is changeless saakshi. But, even this status, changeless saakshi, is a relative status- i.e. it has relation to saakshyam. Therefore, the poorva pakshin may argue: "Saakshi also cannot be the absolute truth; because, saakshithvam is also a relative status and secondly saakshi also will be limited, because there is duality – saakshi and saakshyam." Therefore, later, the word saakshi also will have to be removed. This is the approach made in Advaita Makarandhaa.

But, here, in this portion, Sureswaraacharyaa limits himself to dropping the dhrashtaa status for the aathmaa, bestowing it with the saakshi status, with the intention, to stress on the 'changeless' nature of the aathmaa; but, he does indicate, that the saakshi status is also false, as follows:

- अविद्या परिकल्पितं (साक्षित्वं) -the saakshithvam status, which is also temporarily superimposed, because of ignorance.

Both, saakshi and dhrashtaa statuses are false. But, between the two, the saakshi false status is better than the dhrashtaa false status, since dhrashtaa implies 'change' and saakshi implies 'changelessness'.

78. Chapter II, Verse 58 and 59 (08-12-2007)

Chapter II: Verse 58 –

एष सर्वधियां नृत्तमविलुप्तैकदर्शनः।

वीक्षतेऽवीक्षमाणोऽपि निमिषत्तद्ध्रुवोऽध्रुवम् ॥ ५८ ॥

This seer of the inextinguishable and undivided awareness witnesses the insentient dance of the operations of all minds, though in reality there is no such thing as the act of witnessing on his part. He is the abiding spectator of phenomena that are transient.

In this portion, Sureswaraachaarya points out, that, the Vedhantic teaching, especially the thvam pada vichaaraa will start with dhruk-dhrusya-viveka – the experiencer-experienced-discrimination. And, after some time, the discussion will be elevated to the level of saakshi-saakshya-viveka, the witness-witnessed-discrimination.

In the beginning stages, I look upon myself as an 'experiencer' and later, I learn to look upon myself as the 'witness'; and, why this change is made, should be made very, very clear : as an 'experiencer', I am a changing entity and as a 'witness', I am a changeless entity.

And, the principle of this difference should also be clearly understood: 'I' am the pure Original Consciousness principle, which is not subject to any change or action; in 'my' presence, the inert mind gets revealed / illumined; this revelation / illumination of the mind is not a job 'I' do; 'I' am innocently present and in 'my' presence, the mind gets the capacity to reveal itself. Because, 'my' reflection is formed in the mind, the mind gets chiddabhaasaa, just as the moon gets the reflection of the sun, without the will of the sun. And, therefore, I say "The mind is 'experienced' in 'my' presence/ the mind is 'experienced' because of me". ('Because of me' only means 'because of my sheer presence'). Since the mind gets experienced because of 'my' presence, I am figuratively called the 'experiencer' of the mind.

To repeat : In reality, 'I' am not doing the job of experiencing the mind and therefore, the use of the word 'experiencer', as an adjective to 'me', is, strictly speaking, not correct. Still the word is used, because, in 'my' presence, the mind reveals itself; in 'my' presence, the mind is experienced; because of 'my' presence the mind is experienced.

This changeless 'experiencer' is called saakshi. Primarily, I am the saakshi thathvam.

There are a few other facts also, to be considered and discussed.

While in 'my' (the saakshi's) presence, the mind 'reveals' itself (as explained so far), the mind also simultaneously gets the capacity to experience the world ; i.e. the mind becomes the 'experiencer' of the world ; this is also, again, only because of 'my' blessing, by 'my' mere presence; thus, the mind is verily the 'changing secondary experiencer' called pramaathaa, while 'I' am the 'changeless primary experiencer', called saakshi. 'I' am the 'experiencer' of the mind and the mind is the 'experiencer' of the world.

The next (third) fact: When we use the word 'I', before our exposure to Vedhaanthalaa, we are not aware that there are two 'experiencers', one the primary, changeless experiencer 'I', called saakshi and the other, the 'secondary, changing experiencer 'I' called pramaathaa. We are not aware of the existence of this 'mixture'; and the consequence is that, I mix up the two and therefore use the general term that 'I' am the dhruk / dhrashtaa, the observer.

Vedhaanthalaa does not want to sort out this 'mess' initially ; therefore, in the initial stages, the Vedhanthic teacher very loosely uses the words 'dhruk / dhrashtaa' and 'dhrusyam' and teaches " I am the 'observer' and everything else is the 'observed' – I am the aathmaa and everything else is anaathmaa" etc. Only after the student has had considerable exposure to Vedhaanthalaa, the teacher will point out: "the word dhrashtaa is a generic and confusing term. In reality, you are not dhrashtaa in the conventional sense; normally, dhrashtaa means 'the changing observer'. In Vedhaanthalaa, 'dhrashtaa' means the 'changeless awareness' / saakshi, from which the mind is excluded. So, in Vedhanthalaa, the word 'I', the 'experiencer', refers to the saakshi 'I', who is changelessly present and who excludes the mind also – even the mind comes under 'dhrusyam' or to be precise, 'saakshyam'".

Therefore, in a nutshell: (1) Who am 'I'? I am the 'saakshi? and (2) what do 'I' do ? 'I' do not do anything.

But, 'I' am called the 'witness', even though 'I' do not do anything and also there is no change involved in 'me', for 'me' to get the status of 'witness'.

This fact can be better appreciated with a simple analogy: Imagine a person, with a number of brothers and sisters, and living far away from his brothers and sisters; if this person gets married, his/her brothers and sisters acquire the statuses of brothers-in-law or sisters-in-law, as the case may be, without themselves planning or doing any action and in spite of the distance separating them from the individual getting married. The statuses are superimposed, incidental statuses attributed to the brothers and sisters, without any contribution on their parts to gain the statuses.

In a similar manner, 'I' am the Consciousness, not involved in action; but, in 'my' presence, the mind gets the capacity to reveal itself and also becomes the 'experiencer' of the world. And, in the mind, 'I' get the status of saakshi - the 'changeless witness'.

But, even this superimposed title / status of saakshi, which does not belong to me, is retained only until the Vedhaanthic teaching is complete. Once the Vedhaanthic teaching / communication is complete and the conviction 'aham brahma asmi' takes root, the saakshi title is also dropped / removed.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya said (in the introduction to verse 58):

avidhyaa parikalpitham saakshithvam aasrithya – Resorting to this (temporary, incidental and superficial) status called saakshithvam, which itself is a projection of ignorance karthruthvaadhi asesha parinaama prathishedhaaya - to negate all the parinaamaas / changes associated with karthruthvam (the agency of observation) etc.

To enjoy the status of saakshi / to gain the status of an 'observer', no change is required on my part. I am an 'observer', without doing the action of observation, similar to one getting the status of an 'in-law' consequent on one's sibling getting married, even if thousands of miles away.

Prathishedham – negation; parinaamam – change; karthruthvam - agency of observation; asesha - all.

'I' am not an observing agent; but I have the title 'observer' now, because, the mind happens to be in front, gets the chidhaabhaasa, becomes 'live' and undergoes changes. The changes in the mind are called emotions and the world is called 'object'. All these events happen in the mind and the world; and, based on these events happening in the mind and the world, 'I' am given the title saakshi; but, importantly 'I' am free from vikhaara: | "Nirvikhaara chaithanyam saakshi aham asmi".

To establish this,

- Aaha – the author gives the following (sloka).
- एषः अविलुप्त एक दर्शनः - This saakshi chaithanyam which is of the nature of eternal, non-dual / divisionless / unbroken awareness,

Esha: - This (referring to saakshi chaithanyam); darsana: - of the nature of awareness; eka- non-dual /divisionless/unbroken/all-pervading; aviluptham – eternal.

Aviluptham ekam darsanam yasya sa: - aviluptha eka darsana: |

The essence of this above statement: 'Awaring' is not a job that 'I' do; 'awareness' is my 'svaroopam'.

What do 'I' do or what do 'I' seem to do?

- वृत्तं वीक्षते - observes the 'dance'

The treatise Panchadasee has a chapter entitled Naataka Deepa Prakaranam. The mind is a stage and in the mind stage, thoughts 'dance' around; the mind is like a stage and every thought is like a 'dancer'. Raagha vrutthi, dvesha vrutthi, kaama vrutthi, krodha vrutthi, ghata vrutthi, pata vrutthi etc. are different types of thoughts.

'I' am aware (veekshathe) of the emotions in the mind ; in 'my' absence, the thoughts will be only electrical impulses; they cannot be called 'emotions'; because, mind itself is only inert matter , thoughts are nothing but material disturbances; they cannot be called emotions; thoughts are called emotions, only when there is life in them. Who is lending life to them? Vedhaantha gives the answer: "By 'my' mere presence, 'I' give life to the body, the mind and the thoughts and through the material body, I 'experience' the material world". Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says: 'nruttham veekshathe'. This 'nruttham' takes place, all the time, except during 'deep sleep' avasthaa.

- सर्वधियां - taking place in all the minds,

The use of the term 'sarva' is significant. It implies: "'I' am the Consciousness principle, witnessing not only the nruttham (emotions) in my mind; but 'I' am the 'chaithanyam' behind all the minds – 'Kshethragnam cha api maam viddhi sarva kshekthreshu bhaaratha' - 'Oh ! Arjuna! May you understand Kshekthragnyaa as Myself obtaining in all the bodies' (Verse 3 –Ch. XIII – Srimadh Bhagavadh Githa)".

- अवीक्षमाणः अपि - without doing the job of observation.

Similar to one becoming a brother-in-law, consequent on one's sibling getting married, though one does not do anything to become a brother-in-law (the analogy already cited), it is only the mind which does the job of 'observation' and 'I' am called the 'observer'.

This is the aathmaa – the thvam padha lakshyaartha:. Then, what is ahamkaaraa? The secondary observer – the mind – is called ahamkaaraa. 'I' am not ahamkaaraa; but, 'I' am the saakshi.

But, it has to be very carefully noted, that, even though 'I' am the saakshi, who excludes ahamkaaraa, when I want to claim that 'I' am the saakshi, I have to make use of ahamkaaraa. Saakshi cannot claim 'I' am the saakshi; it uses ahamkaaraa but excludes the ahamkaaraa. This is somewhat similar to writing – I have to use a pen to write; but, I claim that I am writing; I do not include the pen in myself. In a similar manner, 'I', the saakshi, use ahamkaaraa; but, baagha thyaagha lakshanayaa, I exclude ahamkaaraa and say "'I' am the saakshi."

This gives rise to an eternal question "Who claims 'aham brahma asmi'? Is it the saakshi or is it the ahamkaaraa?" If you logically analyze, ahamkaaraa cannot do anything, if saakshi is absent – in fact, ahamkaaraa cannot even exist without saakshi. Therefore, pure ahamkaaraa cannot claim 'aham brahma asmi'; similarly pure saakshi also cannot do anything without the medium of ahamkaaraa and, therefore, pure saakshi also cannot make this claim. It is the mixture (of saakshi and ahamkaaraa) alone which can make this claim – though ahamkaaraa has to be excluded from the claim. 'I' use the ahamkaaraa to make the claim, but, mentally exclude the ahamkaaraa and say "'I' am the saakshi."

- ध्रुवः - The changeless (saakshi)
- (वीक्षते) - (observes)
- तद् अध्रुवं (द्रुत्तं) – that constantly changing 'dance' of thoughts,
- निमिषत् - (which is) jadam / blind.

In this context, 'nimishath' means 'jadam'. Nimesham means winking or closing of the eyelids; when the eyelids are closed, one becomes temporarily 'blind'. Thoughts are 'blind' i.e they are jadam, by themselves.

Adhruvam and nimishath are adjectives and thad is the pronoun to nruttham.

The 'dance' of the inert thoughts are observed by the sentient saakshi, on the stage of the mind; and, in observing the inert thoughts, 'I' convert the inert thoughts to sentient thoughts, by lending chidhaabhaasaa to the thoughts. And, every thought becomes 'knowledge' or 'emotion' and I become 'aware' (of objects, emotions etc.)

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 59 :

- ननु सर्वसिद्धान्तानामपि स्वस्वद्रष्टापेक्षयोपपन्नत्वात् इतरेतर द्रष्टापेक्षया दुस्स्थितसिद्धिकत्वात् न एकत्रापि विश्वासं पश्यामः।

Here it may be objected: But all theories are reasonable from their own respective points of view. (But) they exhibit themselves as untenable when viewed from other points of view. Therefore, we have no confidence in any school of thought.

An interesting observation is made by a listener, who addressing Sureswaraachaaryaa, says: "Oh! Advaitin! According to you, aathmaa is the changeless 'observer', the saakshi, and that aathmaa is the absolute Reality. This is your siddhaantha – your teaching i.e., "I am the aathmaa; I am of the nature of changeless Consciousness ; I get a temporary status of saakshi; everything else is saakshyam ; saakshyam is mithyaa; saakshi 'I' is sathyam ; and, 'I' the sathyam is not affected by the 'dance' that goes on; 'I' am not affected by any event that happens in the material world or in the material body ; 'I' am the changeless Reality etc.' But, every system of philosophy claims that its conclusion is the ultimate truth – whether it is saankhyaa, yogaa, nyaayaa or vaiseshikaa. Every group of philosophers claims that their teaching alone is the truth. Every group has poorva paksha siddhaantha also – i.e., while establishing their school of thought as the 'truth', they dismiss all other systems as 'untruth', presenting valid arguments. In this situation, I have the problem of deciding as to which philosophy is the real truth, since, every school has arguments in their favour and also arguments against all the other schools. What is established by one system of philosophy is negated by all the other systems. So, whatever truth we know is only relative truth. How can we know the absolute truth, which is non-controversial and which will be non-debatable? Does such an absolute truth exist or not? Can you help me out?"

- ननु - But, there is a problem.
- सर्वसिद्धान्तानामपि स्वस्वद्रष्टापेक्ष उपपन्नत्वात् - Since all schools of thought are perfectly logical, from their own standpoints,
- इतरेतर द्रष्टापेक्षया दुस्स्थित सिद्धिकत्वात् - (but, while) from the stand points of the other schools of thought, they cannot stand scrutiny / enquiry,

Dhu:sthitha siddhika: – one which cannot survive the test of enquiry (dhu:s sthithaa siddhi: yasya sa: siddhaantha: - dhu:sthitha siddhika:)

Saankhyaa is 'Truth', from its standpoint ; but, naiyaayikaa will vehemently reject it ; in a similar manner, nyaayaa is 'Truth', from its standpoint; but, saankhyaa will vehemently reject it.

Maandookya Kaarika (verse 4 – Alatasaanthi prakaranam) refers to a particular viewpoint of the two philosophies nyaayaa and saankhya, each contradicting the other: “Bhootham na jaayathe kinchith abhootham naiva jaayathe vivadhantha: dvayaa: hi evam ajaathim khyapayanthi they” - “The existent is not born; the non-existent is not at all born; disputing thus, these dualists reveal birthlessness indeed”. (Of the two statements, ‘the existent is not born’ and ‘the non-existent is not at all born’, the former is a viewpoint of nyaayaa philosophy, while the latter is a viewpoint of saankhya philosophy).

एकत्र अपि विश्वासं न पश्यामः - we are not able to trust / rely upon even one school of thought.

If an individual limits himself only to an academic study of the differing systems of philosophy, he does not have a problem. But, the problem arises for a serious mumukshu, who has to follow one particular philosophy, for the attainment of his goal, and, therefore, has to make a definite choice with regard to his path, and should be able to rely totally, on the philosophy he chooses. But, the different philosophies, with their varied but convincing arguments, may create confusions for such a serious mumukshu.

(Further) sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 59:

न च सर्वतार्किकैः अदूषितं समर्थितं सर्वतार्किक उपद्रव अपसर्पणाय वर्त्म संभावयामः ।

We see no path-way that has not been refuted by any logician and is defended by all logicians and is competent to repulse the onslaught of all logicians.

“So, my problem is, which path to take? Which school of thought to follow? Whom should I consider as my guru?” (asks the listener).

- वर्त्म न संभावयामः - We are not able to visualize /arrive at any particular path to follow, Varthman - path (philosophy / school of thought, in this context).

What sort of path?

- अदूषितं सर्वतार्किकैः - (which path is) not criticized by any philosopher, Sankaraachaarya may be glorified by many aachaaryaas; but, there are equally numerous aachaaryaas and their works, severely critical of Sankaraachaarya and his approach. No system of philosophy has totally escaped criticism.

- समर्थितं (सर्वतार्किकैः) - (or) validated / accepted (by all philosophers).

Essence: “There is no system of philosophy which has not been criticized by any philosopher/ universally uncriticized; nor is there a system, which is universally accepted/validated by all philosophers". In short: "A non-controversial system of philosophy / school of thought is not to be found (na sambhaavayaama:)".

Why does the seeker look for such a system (i.e. an universally validated system)? Because, if he follows a non-controversial system, he will never be criticized by any one. Sureswaraachaarya points this out:

- सर्व तार्किक उपद्रव अपसर्पणाय - for the purpose of avoidance of harassment by all schools of thought / philosophies.

Upadravam - harassment; apasarpanam - avoidance.

In Vairaaghya Sadakam, the author Bharthru Hari writes: "Saasthre vaadhi bhayam", along with "boghe roga bhayam, kule chuthi bhayam" – "everything causes bhayam in this world".

Up to this is the poorva pakshin. Sureswaraachaaryaa replies:

(Further) sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 59:

उच्यते विस्रब्धः सम्भाव्यतामनुभवमात्रशरणत्वात्सर्वतार्किकप्रस्थानानाम् । तदभिधीयते ।

This charge is refuted now: Let experience be admitted with confidence, for the theories of all the logicians, ultimately take refuge in experience. This is explained now:

Sureswaraachaarya gives a subtle and profound answer.

Whenever there is a controversy and a debate is on, the tendency of the participants is to try to establish their viewpoints by one methodology or another. This is true of any field – law, science etc. In every field, a particular method is used to settle the controversy and arrive at the finality.

In scientific debates, scientific experimentations are resorted to – scientific proof or pramaanam is furnished. Observations are made, data is collected, theories are projected, predictions are made and then, the predictions based on the theories are again proved by observations, before the final truth is arrived at. In fact, theories formulated by some scientists were established much later, even after their lifetimes, by other scientists. This is in relation to scientific matters.

In Saasthric matters, six types of pramaanam – shad pramaanaani- are talked about. (Pramaanam is the means to prove one particular theory or another, whenever there is a controversy or debate). But, even though there are supposed to be six pramaanams, ultimately, most of them boil down to one pramaanam – prathyaksha pramaanam, since anumaanam, upamaanam etc. are themselves based on prathyaksham only. Thus, if 'observation' is the pramaanam in Science, 'prathyaksham' is the ultimate pramaanam in philosophical matters; both terms, 'observation' and 'prathyaksham' denoting 'direct experience'. It follows, therefore, that ultimately, 'direct experience' is the pramaanam that is used to settle controversies in all matters.

'Direct experience' is thus comparable to an umpire or referee in the field of sports. Sureswaraachaarya uses the word 'praasnika:', which means a 'referee' , one who is referred to, in all controversies and who is the final authority.

In all debates, universally – in all the fields – law, medicine, science, astrology, astronomy and so on – 'direct experience' is the referee, the ultimate authority.

Sureswaraachaarya argues: "A referee, who is referred to, for settling controversies, should himself be non-controversial and acceptable to everyone concerned. There is only one thing in the Creation, which is non-debated / non-controversial - that is 'direct experience' and 'direct experience' means nothing but Consciousness principle. 'Experience' means 'awareness'; 'awareness' means 'Consciousness'; therefore, chaitanyam alone is never questionable / undebatable; therefore, that alone can be the absolute Reality." This is to be the essence of the Achaaryaa's arguments in this portion.

79. Chapter II, Verse 59 to 61 (15-12-2007)

When Sureswaraachaaryaa established that the svaroopam of the individual is the saakshi chaithanyam, which is free from all changes, which is asangha svaroopam, which does not have samsaaraa in any of the three periods of time, which is identical with the all-pervading Brahman - when such a saakshi chaithanyam was revealed, a student or a poorva pakshin raises a doubt: "Every philosopher claims that his philosophy / teaching alone is absolutely correct. If all the philosophers have got the same view point, there will be no problem. But, they do not. They have discordant views regarding all the fundamentals. Whether we look at the six naasthika darsanams or the six assthika darsanams or even the three schools of thought within Vedhaantha – dvaitha, visishtaadvaita or advaita schools – all of them hold different views, with regard to the nature of jeeva, with regard to the nature of Isvara, with regard to the nature of jagath, with regard to bandhaa, mokshaa, saadhanaa etc. With regard to all these six fundamentals – jiva, Isvara, jagath, bandhaa, mokshaa and saadhanaas - there are differences. Further, if the various systems confine themselves to only establishing their own view points there may not be much of a problem; unfortunately, every system carries out a two-fold task – the first task being 'establishing its views' and the second more vehement task being 'refutation of other darsanams', in the name of mananam. In Brahma soothraas – Ch. II – paadhaa 2, the whole paadhaa deals with aasthika-naasthika- darsana - bedhaani. Consequently, the lay student faces problems ; he does not have sufficient resources to thoroughly analyze all the twelve darsanams and arrive at one of them as the Truth for him to follow; at the same time, he is unable to accept any of them as 'the Truth', without analysis also, since his intellect questions him 'if this is the Truth, how is it that other philosophies refute it?'. For instance, if the mahaa vaakyam, 'Thathvam asi' is interpreted based on Advaita, a sincere seeker after Truth would wonder how the Achaaryaas of Visishtaadvaita or Dvaita - viz. Raamaanujaachaarya or Madhvaachaarya would have dealt with this mahaa vaakyam. Such intellectual curiosity is natural and inevitable. Under such circumstances how am I to accept your teaching as the absolute, non-controversial Truth?"

This question of the poorva pakshin is covered in the sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 59:

- Varthma na sambhaavayaama: - We are unable to visualize /arrive at a path (for us to follow)
- sarva thaarkikai: adhooshitham – which is not criticized by other systems;
- (sarva thaarkikai:) samarthitham - (or) which is universally accepted (by all philosophers),
- sarva thaarkika upadrava apasarpanaaya – in order to avoid harassment from any philosopher.

It is common knowledge, that, when a serious seeker holds on to a particular system, quite often he is criticized or attacked by followers of other systems, even if the seeker sincerely wants to avoid any confrontation. Obviously, this fact is in the poorva pakshin's mind, when he says "sarva thaarkika upadrava apasarpanaaya".

(In this context, it is worth noting that Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Saadhanaa Panchakam, gives a warning to all the Vedhaanthic students: "Budha janai: vaadha: parithyajyathaam" – "Do not enter into arguments with other systems". Similarly, Naarada Bakthi Soothraas also says "vaadha: sarvathaa thyaajya:" – "never get into arguments". Swami Chinmayaanaanda (jocularly) remarks: "Vaadhaa produces 'heat' rather than 'light'".)

When this much was said by the poorva pakshin, Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "I will present you with a fact, which you will have to accept, since, what I am going to say is non-controversial / cannot be found fault with".

- उच्यते - I shall teach you (and)
- विस्रब्धः संभाव्यतां - may you accept my teaching without any doubt / diffidence / suspicion.

But, why (is the statement to be presented by the Achaaryaa acceptable without doubt)? Because of a particular reason.

What that reason is, is being explained below:

"Whatever is controversial can, at best, be, only a relative truth, not the absolute truth, because, the controversial view is considered the truth, from the standpoint of one particular vaadhi, but not considered as the truth, from the standpoint of the prathi vaadhi.

Then, what constitutes the absolute truth? Naturally that which is non-controversial.

"Sureswaraachaaryaa points out, that, to arrive at the absolute truth, any system must use some pramaanam or other, since, obviously, without a pramaanam, and there will be no means to establish or accept a truth. It follows, that, if the view of any system is to be accepted as the absolute non-controversial truth, the pramaanam given by the system, should itself be non-controversial or universally acceptable, similar to a referee in the field of sports, who has to be absolutely non-controversial or dependable if the game should go on.

"Thereafter, Sureswaraachaaryaa asks 'what are the various pramaanams used?'. And, points out that the first and foremost pramaanam is prathyaksha pramaanam or 'direct experience', which Sureswaraachaaryaa calls anubhava pramaanam.

"Prathyakshaa or anubhavaa is the primary referee acceptable to all aasthika and naasthika darsanaani. There are other pramaanams like anumaana, upamaanaa etc. But, they are also based on data derived from prathyakshaa only. Every one, without exception, agrees with anubhava pramaanam. In other words, 'direct experience' can serve as a non-controversial referee for all darsanams. Sureswaraachaaryaa uses the word praasnika:, which means 'a non-controversial referee, who is referred to, in controversies/ doubts / suspicions/ problems/ differences of opinion etc.', similar to an honest witness in courts of law, which term 'witness' also implies 'direct experience'.

"Therefore, the first point that Sureswaraachaarya asserts, is, that, 'direct experience' is a non-controversial factor and therefore, it has to be acceptable pramaanam from the standpoints of all the darsanams. There may be controversies with regard to what 'direct experience' reveals; but, that 'direct experience' itself is a non-controversial pramaanam, is accepted by every one. 'Direct experience' is the praasnikam – a referee that reveals the truth.

"Thereafter, Sureswaraachaaryaa asks the question "What do you mean by 'direct experience'? i.e. what is the content of every 'direct experience'?"

"The answer to this question: When one observes or experiences an object – for instance, a 'clip' - and talks about the 'direct experience' of the clip, the definition of the 'clip-experience' is nothing but the association of one's 'Consciousness' with the 'clip'. To quote one more example, 'music experience', is nothing but 'Consciousness associated with / conditioned by music'. Thus, every experience is the name of 'Consciousness conditioned by the relevant object of experience' - thadh thadh vishaya avachchinna chaithanyam eva anubhava: Therefore, the content of any 'direct experience' – any anubhava – is chaithanyam alone.

"Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya argues chaithanyam alone is the non-controversial truth to be accepted by all the darsanams – eastern or western – naasthika or aasthika – everyone will have to accept the referee named Consciousness.

" In fact, in the absence of Consciousness, no controversy is possible; the only place where there are no controversies or differences of opinion is the graveyard – 'chaithanya abhivyakthi abhaavaath' – 'because of the seeming absence of chaithanyam' (obviously, you cannot say chaithanya abhaavaath, since chaithanyam is omni-present). All controversies / systems are possible only in the presence of chaithanyam; and, attempts to resolve all controversies are also possible only with the help of chaithanyam alone".

“The conclusion of the above course of arguments is: Chaithanyam is non-controversial that alone has to be the Reality - sathyam, jnaanam, anantham brahma. What is sathyam? Sathyam is nothing but jnaanam, which means ‘anubhava: chaithanyam’. What is its nature? ‘anantham brahma’.”

Based on this line of argument, Sureswaraachaarya asserts “Nobody can question Consciousness and that is what, we, Advaitins, are trying to establish. You cannot question Consciousness. In fact, even to question Consciousness, there has to be Consciousness. Therefore, chaithanyam alone is the truth of jagath, Isvara and jeeva. You have to necessarily accept this / arrive at this non-controversial fact - sambhaavyathaam”.

- अनुभव मात्र शरणत्वात् – Because the ‘direct experience’/ Consciousness is the only referee / refuge to resolve the issues,

For whom?

- सर्व तार्किक प्रस्थानानाम् - for all schools of thought / all systems of philosophy.

Different darsanams accept different number of pramaanams. Advaita accepts six pramaanams, Visishtaadvaita accepts eight, certain others accept two, certain others three etc.- but, all darsanams accept ‘direct experience’ as a pramaanam. In fact, the Chaarvaaka matham does not accept any pramaanam other than ‘direct experience’; to express it differently, even chaarvaka matham accepts ‘direct experience’ as the pramaanam.

While systems of philosophy other than Advaitam are engaged in vehement arguments, the Advaitin has no quarrel with any philosophy – (Goudapaadhaa in his Maandookya Kaarikaa – verse 17, Advaitaprakaranam – remarks “parasparam virudhyanthe, thai: ayam na virudhyathe” – “the other philosophers contradict one another. This – my teaching – is not in conflict with any of them”), because he accepts the ‘Witness Consciousness’ of the quarrels, as the truth. And, as far as the quarreling contentions are concerned, advaitin points out “that is called maayaa – anirvachaneeyam. From a particular angle one philosophy is right; from another angle, another philosophy is right. Maayaa is relative truth; chaithanyam is absolute truth. Arguments are unnecessary or they are useless. In matter, arguments cannot be avoided; but, in Consciousness, arguments cannot exist”.

तदभिधीयते - That is being said (in the verse that follows).

Chapter II: Verse 59 –

इमं प्राश्निकं उद्दिश्य तर्कज्वरभुशातुरा :।

त्वाच्छिरस्कवचोजालैः मोहयन्तीतरेतरम् ॥ ५९ ॥

By an appeal to this impartial witness i.e. experience, all theorists, in the grip of the fever of dialectics, weave webs of arguments and confound each other in consequence.

- तर्कज्वर भ्रुशानुराः - (All the eleven darsanams, apart from Vedhaanthaa) extremely afflicted / disturbed by the 'fever' called argument, Aathuraa: - afflicted; bhrusa - extremely / strongly.
- इमं प्राश्निकं उद्दिश्य - appealing to this referee/ impartial witness (called Consciousness)
Uddesam - (in this context, means) appeal.
- त्वाच्छिरस्क वचो जालैः - by the use of networks of arguments which contain the suffix 'thvaath' as the prominent component,
Vacho jaalam – network of arguments.

In tharka saasthram, every argument has got five components – of which the main component is 'reason'/ 'cause'. (Details of the other components are not relevant here and are, therefore, not discussed). For instance, in the statement "there is fire in the mountain, which is understood because of the smoke that is seen, as in the kitchen fire", all the five components mentioned by the tharka saasthram are there; but, the main component is the reason or cause 'dhoomavathvaath'- the 'cause' expressed with the suffix 'thvaath'. Any reason or cause is expressed, in the same fashion, with the suffix 'thvaath', further examples being, 'nithyathvaath', 'janyathvaath' etc. The 'reason' / 'cause' will end with the expression /suffix 'thvaath', (thvaath is not a word) the use of which suffix, reveals that evidence is being furnished, for proving a view.

The Achaaryaa refers to this common usage – "thvaath chiraska vacho jaalaai:"- "all the vacho jaalani of the different theorists have the suffix thvaath as their prominent component, as evidence for proving their views" मोहयन्ति इतरे इतरम् - confuse each other.

On the other hand, the Advaithin says: "We have no arguments. The Consciousness, which is the Witness of all the arguments is the Truth; the arguments themselves are mithyaa, since they deal with the relative, empirical world."

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 60 and 61:

अत्रापि चोदयन्ति । अनुभवात्मनोऽपि विक्रियाभ्युपगमेऽनभ्युपगमेऽपि दोष एव । यस्मादाह ।

Concerning even this experience a further objection is raised: There are fallacies, whether the Self, of the nature of experience, is admitted to be changing or unchanging. Therefore, this point is brought forward:

Even though the Advaitin tries to put an end to all the controversies, by pointing out that (1) the referee to all the controversies, viz. 'direct experience', is non-controversial (2) 'direct experience' is nothing else other than the Consciousness principle (3) therefore, the referee Consciousness, praasnika chaithanyam, is the non-controversial Truth and (4) the essential nature of every one of us is this referee Consciousness, the poorva pakshin is not convinced ; he says "even there, there is a controversy".

- अत्र अपि - Even with regard to the non-controversial Consciousness
- चोदयन्ति - several objections are raised by some people.

What is that (objection)? "Consciousness is the Truth; this is accepted. But, what is the nature of that Consciousness? Is it a substance or a property or a relationship? Is it one or is it many? There can be controversies on all these aspects".

- अनुभव आत्मनः अपि - Even with regard to the aathmaa which is of the nature of Consciousness,

Anubhavaa – chaithanyam ; aathmaa – svaroopam.

- दोषः एव - there will be further problems and fallacies,

"Is Consciousness subject to change or not? If you say that Consciousness is subject to change, there will be a set of problems; if you say that Consciousness is changeless, then also, there will be another set of problems" says the poorva pakshin.

- विक्रिय अभ्युपगमे - if you accept that the Consciousness is subject to change
- (विक्रिय) अनभ्युपगमे अपि - or even if you accept that it is changeless.

"Therefore, who am 'I'? Am 'I' changing Consciousness or changeless Consciousness" is the doubt implied.

Some philosophers, like Naiyaayikaas, say that Consciousness is subject to change. Some other philosophers hold that Consciousness is changeless. Visishtaadvaitam talks about two types of Consciousness – dharma bhootha jnaanam and dharmi bhootha jnaanam. Therefore, the poorva pakshin says: "dosha: eva" - "there are still controversies".

यस्मात् आह - Because of the reasons, which the author presents in the following verses.

Chapter II: Verse 60 –

"वर्षातपाभ्यां किं व्योम्नश्चर्मण्येव तयोः पलम् ।

चर्मोपमश्चेत्सोऽनित्यः खतुल्यश्चेदसत्समः" ॥ ६० ॥

"What is it to the sky, whether there is rain or sunshine? Their effects are seen on the skin, the organ of touch. If the Self is analogous to the skin, it must be non-eternal and if analogous to the sky, it is as good as non-existent".

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa is quoting a verse from one of the textbooks of the Buddhistic philosophy, called Vainaasika Kaarika. Vainaasika: means a Buddhist; kaarika means 'a collection of verses'. In this verse of the kaarika, the Buddhist author gives two examples – aakaasa: (space) and charman (skin) - for comparison with aathmaa and asks "Is aathmaa like the first example, aakaasa.; or is it like the second example, charman?"

- वर्ष आतपाभ्यां – Because of the rainy and summer seasons,

Varsha: – rain; aathapa: - sunshine. The words stand for the rainy and summer seasons respectively.

What happens to the human skin, when repeatedly exposed to the rainy and summer seasons? It is common knowledge, that, the skin undergoes textural changes due to the exposure. (Of course, it ultimately perishes.) Charmaa undergoes vikhaaraa, caused by varshaa and aathapaa and is, therefore, savikhaara: |

On the other hand, what about vyomaa (space)? Any number of alternating seasons cannot affect space, although it is in constant touch with seasons. It is nirvikhaaram.

The Vainaasika Kaarika query is: "Is aathmaa savikaara: charmavath? Or, is it nirvikhaara: aakaasavath?" This query from the Buddhist granthaa is quoted by the Achaaryaa.

- व्योम्नः किं (भवति) - what will happen to aakaasaa (space)?

Vyoman – aakaasa: /space.

This is not a question proper; but, only an assertion, that, nothing happens to space, because of exposure to rains and sun. Aakaasa: nirvikaara: nithya: cha bhavathi |

- चर्मणि एव तयोः पलं (भवति) - The consequences of the seasons will be felt only on the skin.

Thayo: - Theirs (referring to the rainy and summer seasons).

This means that, Charma is savikhaaram and anithyam |

“Is aathmaa similar to the skin or to the space?” is the question, with a further statement, that, in either case, there is a problem.

- चर्म उपमः चेत् - If aathmaa is like the skin, Upama: - like / similar to.
- सः अनित्यः (भवति) - it will be savikhaara: and therefore anithya: |

On the other hand,

- खतुल्यः चेत् - If aathmaa is similar to space,
Kham - space.
- असत्समः - it will be as good as non-existent (because it cannot do any vyavahaaraa)
Sath – existent; asath – non-existent; sama: - equal to/ as good as.

The very existence of space is very often overlooked / not noticed, because space is not involved in / not available for any transaction (avyavahaaryathvaath). In a like manner, if aathmaa is considered similar to space, aathmaa will also be asathsama:, i.e. as though non-existent; it cannot become pramaathaa, karthaa, bokthaa etc. It cannot even perform mokshaa saadhanaani.

This topic is further explained in the next verse.

Chapter II: Verse 61 –

बुद्धिजन्मनि पुंसश्च विकृतिर्यध्यनित्यता ।

अथाविकृतिरेवायं प्रमातेति न युज्यते ॥ ६१ ॥

When an intellectual operation arises in man, if he changes, he is non-eternal and if he does not change, he is not the knower of the knowledge in question.

Let us consider the two options – (1) 'I', the aathmaa, as similar to nirvikhaara aakaasaa and (2) 'I', the aathmaa, as similar to savikhaara charmaa. “Which one should I take myself as? Either way, I will have problems” says the poorva pakshin, based on the Vainaasika Kaarika.

- बुद्धिजन्मनि - When cognitions / experiences (like ghataa jnaanam, pata jnaanam etc. arise, during our transactions),

Buddhi: - experience / cognition / knowledge

- पुम्सः यदि विक्रुतिः (भवति) – if changes result to 'me', the aathmaa, because of the experiences (i.e. if, 'I', the aathmaa, associated with the experiences – sukham, dhu:kham, raagham, dvesham etc. - as the 'experiencer' of those experiences, undergo changes, as sukhee, dhu:khee, raaghee, dveshee etc.)

Pumsa: - for 'me', the aathmaa; yadhi – in case / if; vikruthi: - changes / modification from one state to another state.

A hypothetical case is considered: At a given moment 'I' was unhappy and at a subsequent moment, 'I' become happy; and 'I' admit 'changes' in 'me', what is the consequential problem?

- अनित्यता (स्यात्) - (like the skin/ charmaa) 'I' will be an anithya subject.
- अथ - On the other hand,
- अयं अविक्रुतिः एव (चेत्) – (if) 'I' am the space-like Consciousness Principle, not subject to any modifications / not connected to any experience,
- (अयं) प्रमाता इति न युज्यते - - (then) I cannot be called an 'Experiencer' of the events of life.

If aathmaa is the 'experiencer' it becomes anithyam; if aathmaa is nithyam it cannot be the 'experiencer'.

Nithyathvam and 'experiencerhood' do not seem to co-exist.

What is our observation? "I am the 'experiencer'" is the general observation. Once this is accepted, then, "I am charmavath vikhaara.; aathmaa will become anithya:", but, aathmaa is nithya: /

And, if 'I' have nithyathvam and 'I' do not have the 'experiencer' status, how can 'I' be called Consciousness? Being 'conscious' means, 'undergoing varieties of experiences', the consequence of which is 'modifications'. But, aathmaa is nirvikhaara: |

Then what exactly is the nature of aathmaa?

Sureswaraachaarya has to establish that 'I', the aathmaa, am the eternal Consciousness also and I can enjoy 'experiencer' status also without undergoing any change, because of my mere 'presence' – saannidhya maathrena. This is Vedhaanthaa.

80. Chapter II, Verse 61 to 63 (22-12-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya pointed out that the only non-controversial entity in the entire Creation is Consciousness. With regard to everything else we experience, there are controversies and differences of opinion; the only thing which is non-controversial is Consciousness.

What is the reason for that? The reason is explained as follows: for resolving all controversies, we use one pramaanam or another; the basic unquestionable pramaanam is direct experience (anubhava:); and, direct experience (anubhava:) is nothing but Consciousness (chaithanyam) associated with a particular object. Therefore, it follows, that, chaithanyam alone is unquestionable. In fact, in the absence of Consciousness, there will be no controversies at all and there will be no requirement for the resolution of controversies also. Chaithanyam is the Absolute Reality and everything else is controversial. And, what is controversial, can be, only relative reality.

If Consciousness is the absolute truth of everything, it has to be the truth of Isvara, it has to be the truth of the Jagath and it has to be the truth of the Jeeva.

The truth of the Jeeva, thus, being Consciousness alone, "aathmaa anubhava roopa: / chaithanya roopa:" This was established by Sureswaraachaarya in verse 59.

Based on that, a poorva pakshaa was raised: "Let us accept and assume that I am of the nature of Consciousness; that, I am anubhava aathmaa / anubhava svaroopta: | Still, the controversies cannot be said to have been totally resolved; because, the next question is 'what is the nature of Consciousness? Is it anithyam or nithyam? Is it anithyam like charma (skin), which is affected by varsha (the rains) and aathapaa (the hot sun)? Or, is it nithyam like aakaasaa (space), which is not affected by seasons?'"

"Am I changing Consciousness or changeless Consciousness?" the poorva pakshin asks "When the cognitions / vrutthaya: are born in the mind, am I (the Consciousness), associated with them, and affected / influenced by them or not affected by them, at all?"

Buddhi janmani - Buddhi, in this context, is to be taken as 'cognitions in the mind' i.e. 'buddhi vrutthaya:' he poorva pakshin further proceeds: "Either way, I will have problems". He explains:

"Suppose I say, I am the changeless Consciousness, who does not have any connection to whatever happens in the buddhi, it would mean that 'I' cannot be the 'experiencer'; this is obvious, since, if I do not have any connection with 'experiences', I cannot be called an

'experiencer'; i.e. if I am pure, changeless chaithanyam, I cannot be an 'experiencer'; but, if I am not an 'experiencer', it is contradictory to what I experience, which experience is that 'I am an experiencer'. In my day-to-day experience, I find that I am an 'experiencer'.

"So, if we go by our daily anubhava and say that I am an 'experiencer' and that I have connection/ association with every experience, it would mean that I am subject to modification / change – sukhaa experience at times, dhu:kha experience at other times etc. i.e., 'I' am subject to vikaaraa. And, if 'I' am subject to vikaaraa, 'I' will become anithyam. In short, if I am 'experiencer' I will become anithya: and if I am nithya:, I cannot be an experiencer. Nithyam cheth na dhrashtaa (experiencer); dhrashtaa cheth na nithya:. But, you are saying aathmaa is nithya: and also that aathmaa is experiencer – dhruk of everything. Is this not a contradiction? Therefore, tell me clearly, is aathmaa an 'experiencer' and (therefore) anithyam or is it nithyam and (therefore) not an experiencer."

These objections / questions from the poorva pakshin, were dealt with, in verses 60 and 61. In verse 61:

- यदि पुम्सः विकृतिः (भवति) - If aathmaa undergoes change (by getting connected to every experience),
- Pumsa: - aathmana: (in this context)
- बुद्धिजन्मनि - when the experiences are rising in the intellect,
- अनित्यता (भवति) - mortality will result to the aathmaa ('I' will become a changing 'experiencer' and whoever is changing, is also mortal, because one of the six changes - asthi, jaayathe, vardhathe, viparinamathe, apaksheeyathe, vinasayathi- is 'vinasyathi'. A changing 'experiencer' will have to perish in course of time)
- अथ - To avoid this problem (i.e. to claim that aathmaa is nithya:)
- अयं अविक्लृतिः (चेत्) - (if) aathmaa is considered as 'changeless' Consciousness
- प्रमाता इति न युज्यते – aathmaa cannot be an experiencer of anything (because, to be an 'experiencer', is to undergo change)

How do you resolve this issue? Sureswaraachaaryaa gives the answer, in this very, very important portion.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 62 & Verse 62:

अस्य परिहारः

ऊर्ध्वं गच्छति धूमे खं भिध्यते स्विन्नं भिध्यते ।

न भिद्यते चेत्स्थानसुत्वं भिध्यते चेद्भिदास्य का ॥ ६२ ॥

This charge is answered in what follows:

When a column of smoke ascends upwards in the sky, is the sky cut up thereby or does it remain one and unbroken? If it remains unbroken, it means that the smoke is not rising up at all; and, if it is broken up, what is the nature of the division, that has taken place?

It is desirable, at this stage, to consider, in totality, the gist of the answer given by the Achaaryaa, in the following few verses, since, he gradually builds up his arguments.

The Achaaryaa wants to say "I am the changeless Consciousness and I changelessly experience everything and therefore, I am a changeless 'experiencer'. This seems to be a contradiction in terms; but, it is not a contradiction. It is possible in a peculiar manner, though not in a normal manner".

The truth is: 'I' am the changeless Consciousness is the fact. Really speaking, I am not an 'experiencer', because, I am not doing the job of 'experiencing'. What is happening is, that, in my presence, the inert mind gets experienced and revealed. The inert, insentient mind cannot reveal itself; it cannot know anything by itself. But, in 'my' presence, the inert mind gets sentient and inert thoughts get experienced. Since the mind gets experienced, from that standpoint, I am figuratively called an 'experiencer'".

The correct expression should, in fact, be: "In my presence, the mind becomes known; the mind becomes 'awared'; the mind becomes sentient; the mind becomes 'experienced'."

Since the mind becomes experienced in my presence, from that standpoint, I call myself an 'experiencer', without doing anything, similar to the example earlier cited – an individual acquiring a new status as a brother-in-law or sister-in-law, sometimes even without the individual's knowledge, consequent on a sibling marrying.

"Status-change can happen without an actual change of the object".

In a similar manner, 'I' am the non-experiencer Consciousness and when the mind is in front of 'me', from the standpoint of the mind, which gets experienced in 'my' mere presence, 'I' get a new status without undergoing any change – the new status being 'experiencer' status. During sushupthi, when the mind is resolved, 'I' have non-experiencer status. During the waking and dream states, the mind comes alive and active and 'I' get 'experiencer' status. There is no change in 'me'; the change is only in the 'arrival' of the mind and 'departure' (resolution) of the mind; mind comes and 'I' get the status of 'experiencer'; mind goes and I get the status of 'non-experiencer'; thus, 'I' can be said to be the primary, changeless, but, 'experiencer' aathmaa. Since, thus, the aathmaa is changeless, it is eternal and therefore, it is ever free also. Vedhaantha is talking about that aham as Brahman. "Where is the problem, in this?" wonders the Achaaryaa.

This mystery – the change of status, without an actual change - or the mystery of aathmaa being a changeless experiencer, can be understood with the example of another mystery.

The Achaaryaa gives a brilliant example, never cited earlier anywhere, in verse 62. These uncommon examples give an unique strength to this treatise, Naishkarmya Siddhi.

- अस्य परिहारः - I am giving the solution to your question.

What is the example? When there is fire, say a forest fire, smoke is formed. The smoke goes upwards in the sky. Up there, is aakaasa; which is an all-pervading principle. Aakaasaa is not nothingness; it is a subtle substance, a positive entity and is existent. Tharka saasthraa accepts bhaava roopa akaasaa as one of the five elements; Vedhaantha saasthraa talks about aakaasaa as a bhava roopa padhaartha; therefore, aakasaa is a substance, all-pervading.

"When the smoke is going up, does the smoke pierce the aakaasaa and go up or does it not pierce the aakaasaa to go up?" is the question.

Sureswaraacharya asks the question: "Does the smoke pierce the aakaasaa to go up?" and proceeds: "Any way you answer, you are in trouble. If you say, the smoke does not pierce the aakaasaa, it will mean, that the smoke will not go up; it will stand arrested in position. But, since it is going upwards, you have to say that it 'pierces' aakaasaa. And, if you say so i.e. 'since smoke is going upwards, it is dividing/ separating aakaasaa to go upwards', then tell me where is the 'partition'. You have to show me the separation / the division. And, if you reply that there was a temporary division in aakaasaa and later the 'divisions' joined, do you mean to say, that there is an activity in aakaasaa – of 'giving way' to the smoke and 'joining' later? Therefore, you cannot say aakaasa is pierced also. The smoke goes up; it does not pierce aakaasaa also. Without piercing aakaasaa, the smoke goes up. Can you explain how the smoke goes up, without piercing aakaasaa? If, thus, aakaasaa can give way to the smoke, without getting pierced/ without any change, in an exactly similar manner, chaitanyam can 'experience' and can allow the experiences also to take place, without getting affected / undergoing any change".

- धूमे ऊर्ध्वं गच्छति (सति) - (When) the smoke is going upwards,

The word 'gacchathi' is not used as a verb here. It is 'present active participle -sapthami vibhakthi' – the noun being 'gacchari'. Locus of time is indicated – 'when the smoke is going upwards'.

- खं भिध्यते - Is the aakaasaa (which is a positive entity, a subtle material substance) pierced / partitioned/ divided
- स्वित् - athavaa / or
- न भिध्यते - is it (aakaasaa) not split/ pierced / penetrated ?

Suppose the space is divided into two, we have to accept that there are now two pieces of space and then the question arises "When, thus, space is divided or portioned, what is there in between the two portions?" When any material, say a loaf of bread, is split, what is in between the split pieces, can only be 'space'. Therefore, if it is assumed that 'space' is divided, what is in between the 'divided' portions of 'space' can also be nothing other than space; then it follows that space has not been divided/ partitioned at all. The conclusion: Space is, therefore, indivisible.

This is the question Sureswaraachaarya asks of the poorva pakshin, and proceeds:

- न भिध्यते चेत् - If the space is not pierced / portioned / separated,
- स्थासुत्वं (भवति) – the smoke will become stationery (similar to its upward movement being obstructed by the ceiling in a covered hall).
- भिध्यते चेत् - If it is presumed that the smoke is piercing the space,
- भिदा अस्य का - what is the nature of the division that has taken place?

Bhidaa – partition; asya – aakasasya; kaa – what (is the nature)?

No convincing explanation can be given, because, if 'space' is partitioned to allow the smoke to go up, it would mean that 'space' provided some space, in between its two portions, to accommodate the smoke, in which case, it would not have been partitioned at all, since there is only space in between the two split portions of the space.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 63:

इत्येतत्प्रतिपत्त्यर्थमाह ।

This is rendered intelligible by the following:

- इति एतत् - If we arrive at this mysterious, inexplicable situation,

At the level of space, how smoke or any other object goes upwards in space is a mystery. Similarly, how Consciousness is a 'changeless experiencer' is also a mystery. Both mysteries appear inexplicable. But, the Achaaryaa says "I will explain the mystery".

- प्रतिपत्त्यर्थम् – for understanding this conundrum,
- आह – I will give you the answer.

Prathipatthi: - Right understanding.

Chapter II: Verse 63 –

अविक्रियस्य भोक्त्रुत्वं स्यादहंबुदिविभ्रमात् ।

नौयानविभ्रमाध्यद्वन्नेषु गतिकल्पनम् ॥ ६३ ॥

The unchanging Self becomes the experiencer of pleasures and pains through the illusion of egohood, even as one going in a boat become subject to the illusion that the trees on the banks are moving.

This topic is elaborated by the Achaaryaa, in several verses that follow and has to be studied step by step.

Here (in this verse), Sureswaraachaarya explains the Vedhaantha siddhanthaa, the salient features of which are broadly as follow:

"That I am the space-like Consciousness is the fact; just as space is everywhere, 'I' am also everywhere. And, Consciousness is 'my' nature. The Creation is existing in 'me', because, I am all-pervading like space; the Creation which is existing in the space, is existing in the all-pervading Consciousness, 'me'. And, one of the things in the Creation is the mind, which is also made up of subtle forms of matter only. (In modern science, they talk about energy – how energy is a non-tangible, subtle form of matter only. The mind is also a non-tangible, subtle form of matter, like energy.) And, the mind gets the capacity to generate thoughts when blessed by the all-pervading Consciousness. (This is similar to an electrical gadget getting the capacity to function, when blessed by the presence of electricity.) When 'I' am available, because of 'my' saannidhyam, the mind gets activated / sentient and becomes capable of generating raaghaa, dveshaa, kaamaa, krodhaa etc.; in short, the mind gets 'experienced' – i.e. it reveals its existence. When the mind is, thus, experienced, 'I' am temporarily called (in the presence of the mind) an 'experiencer' (to remember the example of an individual becoming a 'brother-in-law'). 'I' get the 'experiencer' status, not by doing any job, but, because the mind reveals its existence/ experiences / thoughts etc., in 'my' presence.

"Once the mind gets experienced and sentient, the mind gets the status of the 'experiencer' of the world (this fact had, of course, been covered earlier), not by itself, but because of the presence of 'I', the primary experiencer. Because of the presence of 'me', the primary experiencer, who is a changeless experiencer, the mind has become experienced, sentient, alive, capable of generating thoughts and capable of experiencing the external world through the five sense organs. Thus, in 'my' presence, the mind becomes a secondary observer – called ahamkaara:

"Ahamkaaraa is, thus, the secondary experiencer. And, how does the mind carry out the job of the (secondary) experiencer? By undergoing thought modifications – i.e. for the mind to experience sound, sabda vrutthi has to take place, for the mind to experience 'form', roopa vrutthi has to take place and so on. So, the mind is the changing, secondary experiencer, while, Consciousness is the changeless, primary experiencer. But, just as there is no 'distance' separating space and any object in space, there is no 'distance' between the mind, the secondary experiencer and Consciousness, the primary experiencer. Because of this (i.e. the close proximity between the two), the word 'I' includes both the secondary and primary experiencers; i.e. 'I' is a mixture of saakshi (changeless primary experiencer) and ahamkaaraa, (the changing secondary experiencer) – this mixture, amsa dvaya yuktha: aham asmi |

"But, even though both of them, the saakshi aathmaa and ahamkaaraa, are there in the word 'I', - the primary changeless experiencer saakshi, is invariably lost sight of / taken for granted . A typical example is that, when an object is within one's sight, one observes the object, and, when questioned "what is in front of you?" will mention the object – but, invariably will not mention the 'space' in which the object is located. There are actually two things where the object exists – the object and the aakaasaa accommodating the object; since, without the aakaasaa to accommodate, the object cannot exist. But, though it is aakaasaa which accommodates the object, the observer has a tendency to ignore its existence. The changeless, formless aakaasaa and the changing, formed object are in existence together; but, the observer loses sight of the changeless accommodator aakaasaa. In a similar fashion, when the word 'I' is used, invariably, the word is taken as referring to the changing mind / ahamkaaraa experiencer, losing sight of the changeless Consciousness saakshi aham.

"And, Vedhaantha is struggling to turn our attention towards that 'I', the changeless experiencer, in whose presence the mind is awared – roopam dhruyam lochanam dhruk thadh dhruyam dhruk thu maanasam dhruyaa: dheevrutthaya: saakshee dhruk eva na thu dhruyathe."

The Achaaryaa wonders: "How could you miss this saakshi 'I'? Is it not similar to experiencing the various objects around you, accommodated in space, but, always missing the space, in which the objects are accommodated?" And, says "because of this preoccupation with the secondary 'I', losing sight of the primary 'I' and also taking the changes of the secondary 'I', as changes of the primary 'I', we suffer samsaaraa - losing the binary format, in which I am the primary 'I', and descending down to the triangular format , in which I am the secondary 'I'". Taking the attributes of the secondary 'I', as those of the primary 'I' is the source of all problems.

- अहंबुद्धिविभ्रमात् - Because of the confusion caused by the secondary 'I', which is the mind,

Aham buddhi: - indicates the secondary 'I'; vibhrama: - confusion.

- भोक्त्रुत्वं - the bokthaa status,

Bokthaa - experiencer of pains and pleasures

- अविक्रियस्य स्यात् - results to 'me', who is 'changeless' (and, who, in reality, does not have bokthaa status at all).

Mind undergoes changes; but, 'I' am called a sufferer.

The Achaaryaa gives an example:

When a boat moves along a river, the movement of the boat is wrongly transferred to the trees on the banks, by the passenger in the boat, who mistakenly thinks, that, the trees are moving in the opposite direction.

Another example is the arrival of a train at its destination, when the traveler remarks that the destination has arrived, while, in fact, it is the train that has arrived at the destination.

Na me dvesha raaghau na me lobha mohau - 'I' do not have any sorrow or anger or jealousy. So, 'I' do not require any saadhanaa to get over them; nor am 'I' capable of any saadhanaa. The emotions, attributes and even the saadhanaas are of only the mind, which, I mistake as 'mine'. In reality, 'I' do not require saadhanaas; nor, do 'I' require mokshaa, because, "saadhana saadhya rahitha nithya siddha moksha svaroopaa aathmaa asmi aham".

81. Chapter II, Verse 61 to 67(29-12-2007)

Sureswaraachaarya is talking about the nature of the aathmaa, as the saakshi chaithanyam, the changeless Consciousness principle, which alone has to be the Ultimate Reality, because Consciousness alone is not subject to any form of controversy. Whatever I am conscious of / whatever is objectified by the Consciousness, has to be only relative reality, because everything else, other than Consciousness, is subject to some controversy or other.

Chaithanya aathmaa is the Reality, the svaroopam of everything, the svaroopam of myself also. And, what is the nature of that chaithanyam? Sureswaraachaaryaa points out, that it is nirvikaaraa saakshi, the changeless 'experiencer' of everything. And, the first thing that is 'experienced' by the Saakshi, is the mind.

"But", Sureswaraachaarya points out "when we say, that, 'I' the saakshi is the 'experiencer' of the mind, it is not that the saakshi 'I', is actually doing the job of experiencing; the Consciousness 'I' need not and does not do any job to experience – but, in 'my' very presence, mind is able to form the chidhaabhaasaa; and reveals itself. This self-revealing of the mind, is, what we call 'saakshi experiencing the mind'; in fact, it would be more appropriate to say "in 'my' presence, the mind gets experienced"; and, from that standpoint, 'I' am figuratively called the 'experiencer'".

While the mind gets experienced, simultaneously, it gets another faculty also; it becomes capable of experiencing the world. Thus, in 'my' presence, mind becomes the 'experienced'-cum-'experiencer'; i.e. the mind gets both statuses of the 'experienced' and the 'experiencer'. Conversely, in 'my' absence, neither status will be possible for the mind – neither can it be 'experienced', nor can it become 'experiencer'. This mind, which, thus has these two attributes of 'experienced' and 'experiencer', is called ahamkaara: |

Sureswaraachaarya further says "ahamkaaraa is the secondary and changing experiencer of the world and 'I' am the primary and changeless 'experiencer' of the mind". And, whenever I use the word I, the word denotes the composite entity, consisting of the primary 'experiencer' saakshi and the secondary experiencer ahamkaaraa. Saakshi-ahamkaaraa mixture is what is obtaining in the one word I, though the saakshi content is, very often, lost sight of.

Of these two entities or amsaas, one amsaa, the mind, is subject to changes, while, the other amsaa, the saakshi-aathmaa, the real primary 'I', is changeless. But, because of the proximity between the changing ahamkaaraa and the changeless saakshi, we commit the blunder of transferring the changes of the ahamkaaraa 'I', to the primary saakshi 'I'. And, this blunder is the cause of samsaaraa.

Ahambuddhi vibhramaath – Due to the 'mixing up' of aham and ahamkaaraa,
Bokthurthvam syaath - the status of the changing bokthaa is given Avikriyasya - to this changeless primary 'I'.

"I am sorrowful; I am disturbed; I am calm" etc. are not 'my' attributes; 'I' am neither disturbed; nor do 'I' have the need to become calm; nor do 'I' have the need to sit in meditation to become calm. Saantham, sivam, advaitam are 'my' eternal natures. Disturbance and calmness are attributes, coming and going, only for the ahamkaaraa, the secondary I. Therefore, the secondary I (and not the primary 'I') may have the necessity for meditation and may attain calmness because of the meditation – but, that, too, only during meditation.

Vedhaanthaa warns: "Do not get lost in the vyaavahaarika calmness of the ahamkaaraa; be interested in the paaramaarthika calmness of the saakshi".

Aapekshika saanthi of ahamkaaraa is not the Vedhaanthin's goal; but, 'claiming' the aadhyanthika saanthi of the saakshi – saanthim nirvaana paramaam madhsamsthaam adhigacchathi – (madhsamsthaam means saakshisamsthaam, denoting aadhyanthika saanthi). The effort should be for 'claiming' this aadhyanthika saanthi of the saakshi and declaring "'I' am nithya saantha:", irrespective of the 'arrival' and 'departure' of the aapekshika saanthi in the ahamkaaraa". This is because 'I' am not the ahamkaaraa; ahamkaaraa is an incidental attribute, which is controlled not by 'me' but, by ever so many factors, including praarabhdhaa.

An example is given by the Achaaryaa, to aham buddhi vibhrama: /

"When a boat moves along a river, the movement of the boat is wrongly transferred to the trees on the shore, which, of course, are incapable of moving". The choice of the word naghaa:, in verse 63, to denote the trees, instead of vrukshaa: or other words, is significant; the Achaaryaa's intention is to emphasize the incapacity of the trees, for any movement, since, 'Na gacchathi' is 'nagha:'

Another apt example, drawn from a more common experience of the present days, is the illusory impression, which a passenger waiting in a stationery train gets, of his train moving, when he watches another train on a parallel railway track, moving in the opposite direction.

- नौयानविभ्रमात् – Because of illusion, (for a passenger in) a moving boat

Nau – boat; yaana – movement

- नगेषु गतिकल्पनम् - movement of the trees (on the banks) is imagined.

The movement of the boat is superimposed on the trees. In a similar manner, raaghaa, dveshaa, kaamaa, krodhaa etc. are all attributes of ahamkaaraa alone - the attributes are subject to arrival and departure also - but are wrongly superimposed on 'me' ; whereas, the fact is, "Na me dveshragau, na me loba mohau" – this (absence of attributes) is 'my' nature.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 64 :

यथोक्तार्थाविष्करणाय द्रष्टान्तान्तरोपादानम् ।

To make the point stated clearer, another analogy is given:

- यथोक्तार्थाविष्करणाय -- For the purpose of further clarification of the idea already given (in the previous verse),

Aavishkaranam – further clarification; yathoktha arthaa – the idea which had been given earlier.

What was the idea given? "I' am the changeless, primary 'experiencer'/ 'observer'" The Geetha sloka "Upadrishtaa anumantaa cha bharthaa bokthaa maheswara: paramaathmaa ithi cha api uktha: dehe asmin purusha: para:" - "The Supreme Purushaa in this body is said to be the close witness, the supporter, the sustainer, the experiencer, the great Lord and the supreme Self" (verse 23 – Ch. XIII) is relevant, in this context.

- द्रष्टान्त अन्तर उपादानम् - another example is given.

Dhrushtaantha: - example; dhrushtaantha anthara: - another example.

The previous example is "nau yaana" – "the moving boat". Now another example is given, in the following verse.

Chapter II: Verse 64 –

यथा जात्यमणे :शुभ्रा ज्वलन्ती निश्चला शिखा ।

संनिध्यसंनिधानेषु घटादीनामविक्रिया ॥ ६४ ॥

The brilliance of a natural diamond is pure and steady, whether objects like a jar be near it or not. Similarly the light of Consciousness in the Self remains changeless, whether objects are in its proximity or not.

The example is a jaathyamani - a high quality gem, which is very radiant and bright – so bright that it can illumine the objects around. Normally a flame is taken as an example; Sureswaraachaaryaa chooses to change the example to a “high quality gem”, obviously, with a purpose. In the case of the flame, motion is there - there is a vikaaraa, whereas Saakshi is changeless. Therefore, the Achaaryaa considers the gem as a better example, because, once the gem is placed in a particular place, it has no movement at all.

- शुभ्रा शिखा – The brilliant / pure radiance

Sikhaa - ray of light / radiance; subraa – brilliant / pure

- जात्यमणे: - of a high quality gem,

Jaathya – high quality (adjective); jaathau bhava: jaathya: / Jaathi: - high quality ; mani: - a radiant gem or a precious stone or a diamond .

- ज्वलन्ती - (which gem is)shining all the time, without fluctuations in its brightness,

In the case of a flame, the brightness may fluctuate; but, a gem shines uniformly, all the time.

- निश्चला - (and which gem is) motionless,

‘Motionless’ implies, that, the gem cannot do any job, since any action requires motion.

The gem or the light of the gem just “is”; it does not do any action. But, even though the gem does not do any job, generally, it is referred to, as ‘shining’ gem; of course, the status of ‘illuminator’ is not given to it, when there are no objects around, to be illumined by the gem; in other words, the gem is a non-illuminator, shining gem, when there is no illuminable object in its proximity.

In such a situation, if and when an object, earlier stored in a dark area, is brought in front of the gem, though the gem itself does not do any job, but is just ‘shining’, the object becomes ‘illumined’ in the presence of the gem. The object, which was in darkness earlier, has ‘moved’ from darkness to the presence of the gem and the earlier non-illumined object, has also become ‘illumined’ because of the presence of the gem. Even so, i.e. while it is the object that has moved and has got illumined, while the gem itself did not do anything, the moment the object comes into the presence of the gem, the gem gains a new/ different status – it is called an ‘illuminator’ gem. There is a change in the status of the gem – from ‘non-illuminator’ to ‘illuminator’. Peculiarly, the change in the status is not caused by any change in the gem; ‘changelessly’ the gem acquired a new status; conversely, when the object is removed from the vicinity of the gem, 'changelessly', the gem loses its status of 'illuminator'. 'Acquiring' a new status and 'losing' that status, have been both achieved by the gem, without itself doing any job.

In the same manner, 'I' am the 'changeless' Consciousness, without any inherent status. But, 'I' am still called the 'experiencer', when the mind becomes active, in the jaagrath and svapnaa states. I become the 'experiencer' of the mind and through the mind, 'I' become the 'experiencer' of the world also, though 'I' do not undergo any change. First, 'I' become the 'experiencer' of the mind, without doing any job; later, I assume the attributes of the experienced mind on myself and consider 'myself' an 'experiencer'. In reality, 'I' do not have any attributes, though, assuming the attributes of the ahamkaaraa, 'I' claim "I do not have saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi; I do not have liberation" etc. The fact is: "'I' do not require saadhanaas; 'I' do not require mokshaa; 'I' am the nithya-muktha aathmaa, requiring neither saadhanaas nor saadhyam (mokshaa). My mokshaa does not depend on the conditions of my mind. 'Asangha chaithanya svaroopaa: thath thvam asi, Svethaketho' as in the Chaandhoghya Upanishad."

- अविक्रिया - is without any vikaaraa,
- सनिध्यसनिधानेषु – either in the presence or in the absence
- घटादीनाम् - of objects like a pot etc.

In the presence (sannidhi) of an object, the gem gets the status of an 'illuminator'. In the absence (asannidhi) of an object, it loses its status of 'illuminator'. But, either during the arrival and or during the departure of the status, the gem itself does not have any change (vikaaraa).

If this is understood with regard to the example of a gem, the same principle can be extended to the saakshi chaithanyam.

- यथा - - In a similar fashion (the light of Consciousness in the Self remains changeless, whether objects are in its proximity or not).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 65:

अयमत्रांशो विवक्षित इति जापनायाह ।

The point intended by the analogy is brought out in the following:

Sureswaraachaarya is anxious, that, from the example, the right conclusion is arrived at, by the listener; since, quite often, the essential message intended to be conveyed through the citing of an example is missed by the listener, who "catches at the shadow and loses the substance" (as the proverb goes). All criticisms of Advaitam, by the Visishtaadvaitins and the dvaithins are based on such wrong extensions of the examples given by the Advaitin. The rope-snake example, svapnaa dhrishtaanthaa, the mirage-water example etc. are all wrongly extended by the poorva pakshins and based on the wrong extensions, they criticize advaitam. The Achaaryaa is aware of this aspect and is therefore more explicit in his explanations.

- अत्र - In the context of this example,
- अयं अंशः - the following aspect
- विवक्षितः - is intended to be clarified.
- इति जापनाय - With this purpose ,
- आह – the author gives the following verse.

Chapter II: Verse 65–

यदवस्था व्यनक्तीति तदवस्थैव सा पुनः।

भण्यते न व्यनक्तीति घटादीनामसंनिधौ ॥ ६५ ॥

Exactly in the same state in which we say the diamond illumines objects, we say it does not illumine, if the objects to be illumined are not in the required proximity.

What the Achaaryaa wants to say, is this: "In the mani-sikhaa dhrishtaanthaa – the example of the light of the gem - the mani sikhaa, changelessly acquires the 'illuminator' status and changelessly loses that status. Therefore, that status is not 'intrinsic' to the sikhaa – it is only an 'incidental', superimposed status. In the same manner, the saakshi status (for aathmaa) is also a superimposed status which aathmaa enjoys, only in the presence of the mind. If the mind is not there, aathmaa cannot even be called saakshi, because , to term it as a 'witness', it has to be the 'witness' of something.

"(Chethyoparaagha roopaa me sakshithaa api na sathvikee upalakshana meveyam nistharangha chidambhutha)"

In the presence of ahamkaaraa, I understand 'I' am the saakshi and in the absence of ahamkaaraa, 'I' am not even a saakshi – I cannot and I need not claim that 'I' am a saakshi. Therefore, the proof for "'I' am the saakshi' is the presence of ahamkaaraa.

- यदवस्था - Whatever be the condition (of the mani sikhaa),
- व्यनक्ति इति (उच्यते) - when it is said to be the 'illuminator',
- तदवस्था एव पुनः - again, the same condition continues (when it is said to be the non-illuminator),
- सा – (for the) mani sikhaa.

The import of this statement: The beam of light from the gem, is the same, when the 'illuminator' status is attributed to it or and when the 'illuminator' status is taken away from it - the attributing and the removal of the status to the beam of light, being based on the arrival and departure of the objects of illumination. The change is in the 'object' of illumination and not on the 'subject' – the beam of light.

- भण्यते - Only the statements are made,
- (व्यनक्ति इति घटादीनां संनिधौ) - that the gem illumines, in the presence of the objects of illumination; and
- न व्यनक्ति इति – that the gem does not illumine,
- घटादीनां असंनिधौ - in the absence of the objects of illumination.

When you say "the gem 'illumines'" it appears that the gem "gets ready and starts the job of illumination" and when you say the gem "does not 'illumine'", it appears that the gem "stops its action of illumination", whereas, in either situation, the gem does not do any action. The verbs used (vyanakthi / na vyanakthi) cause a confusion, that the gem is engaged in the action of 'illumining' and 'not illumining'.

In the same manner, when I say, 'I' am the illuminator of the mind, it appears as if 'I' do the job of 'illumining' / 'experiencing' the mind. But, the fact is: 'I' just am; the mind is 'awared'.

There is one more similarity between the mani sikhā and aathmaa:

When either of the two statements about the mani sikhā (1) "vyanakthi" (illumines) and (2) "na vyanakthi" (does not illumine) is made (bhanyathe), the gem remains in the same condition. There is no change in the condition of the gem, though different perceptions (that it "illumines" and that it "does not illumine") are made by the observer.

In the same manner, when one says "I am sorrowful / I am happy" etc. , i.e. when one talks of varieties of situations in life, it should be clearly understood that these changes are happening only at the objective world level, while 'I' remain free of all the changes, 'I' remain only as an 'illuminator'. I need not even work for liberation; I am nithya-muktha: |

The structure of this verse throws a challenge to the student of Sanskrit language. It may be restructured as follows, for clarity:

"Yadh avasthaa (sathi) saa (sikhā gataadheenaam sannidhau) vyanakthi (ithi bhanyathe) thadh avasthaa eva(saa) puna: gataadheenaam asannidhau na vyanakthi ithi bhanyathe ."

Though the two verbs (vyanakthi and na vyanakthi) are associated with the subject of the sentence (mani sikhaa), really speaking, the two verbs indicate a change only in the condition of the objects of illumination (ghataadheenaam), though it appears that they indicate changes in the condition of the subject.

Up to this is the example. The Achaaryaa now proceeds to extend this example to aathmaa, in wonderful verses, ideal for nidhidhyaasanam.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 66 & 67 and Verse 66:

तत्र च ।

सर्वधीव्यञ्जकस्तद्वत्परमात्मा प्रदीपकः ।

संनिध्यसंनिधानेषु धीवृत्तीनामविक्रियः ॥ ६६ ॥

This being so: The supreme Self is the light that reveals all minds. Whether the functions of minds take place in its vicinity or not, it remains immutable.

- तत्र च - This being so (i.e. a change in 'object' attributed / transferred to the subject, which is adhyaasaam),
- तद्वत् - as in the case of the gem,

Three examples were cited in the preceding verses: (1) aakaasaa seemingly 'pierced' by smoke rising upwards from a fire (2) trees incapable of movement, seemingly appearing to move, to a passenger on a boat and (3) a gem seemingly 'illuminating' the objects in its vicinity, because of its shine.

- तत्र च - This being so (i.e. a change in 'object' attributed / transferred to the subject, which is adhyaasaam),
- तद्वत् - as in the case of the gem,

An important principle of Vedhaanthaa (referred to, as the 3rd capsule of Vedhaanthaa, by Swamiji): "By 'my' mere presence, 'I' give life to the body, mind and thoughts and through the body I 'experience' the external world 'changelessly'". Another important principle (the 4th capsule, as referred to, by Swamiji): "'I' am not affected by any event that happens in the material world or in the material body".

'I' am the changeless witness of the thought, when the thought is there; and when the thought is not there, I either say that I am a non-witness or I say that I am the witness of the absence of thoughts. But, of course, even to say this, I require a thought – I have to use a thought to say this.

Pradeepaka: implies svayam prakaasa pradeepaka: To 'illumine' objects, the gem needs the presence of the objects to be illumined. But, to 'shine', it does not need any external factor. 'Shine' is its inherent quality. In the same manner, 'I' do not 'illumine', all the time, because, to 'illumine', 'I' require objects / thoughts (i.e. 'illuminating' is dependent on other factors); but 'I' am 'shining' all the time, without any dependence on any external factor. Svayam prakaasa pradeepaka: ayam (chaithanyam).

And, what is 'my' 'job' (!)?

- सर्व धी व्यञ्जकः (भवति) - am the 'changeless' revealer/ illuminator of all thoughts / emotions that arise in the mind.

Vyanjaka: - revealer; dhee - vrutthi: / thought / emotion etc. (in this context).

The thoughts or emotions do not belong to 'me'; they belong to the mind. 'I' am only the 'illuminator' of the disturbed or calm mind, as the case may be. But, 'I' am never disturbed.

- संनिधि असंनिधानेषु - Either in the presence or in the absence,

Sannidhi - presence; asannidhi - absence.

- धीवृत्तीनां - of thoughts / emotions of the mind,
- (परमात्मा) अविक्रियः - 'I' am absolutely unaffected / untainted. ('I' am Nirvikaara:)

"Thadhvath pradeepaka: Paramaathmaa sarvadhee vyanjaka: (bhavathi)" is the content of the first line of the verse, while, "Dheevruttheenaam sannidhi asannidhaaneshu (Paramaathmaa) avikriya: (bhavathi)" will be the structure of the second line.

When thought arises, 'I' become the 'illuminator' of the thought ; but, 'I' do not do (nor do I have to) do anything, to become the 'illuminator'; it is the thought that gets 'illumined', in 'my' presence.

This is said in the next verse.

Chapter II: Verse 67 –

न प्रकाशक्रिया काचिदस्य स्वात्मनि विध्यते ।

उपचारात्क्रिया सास्य यः प्रकाशस्य संनिधिः ॥ ६७ ॥

In the Self, there is no such thing as the act of illumining. The approach of the object to be illumined within its range of illumination is figuratively spoken of as the act of illumination on the part of the Self.

Earlier, in the case of the example of the jaathya mani, the Achaaryaa made a statement:

“‘Illumination’ is not a ‘job’ done by the jaathya mani”. Now, he makes a similar statement with regard to aathmaa: “‘Experience’ is not a ‘job’ done by the aathmaa. Things get ‘experienced’; ‘I’ do not do the job of ‘experiencing’”.

- अस्य - For this Paramaathmaa,
- काचित् प्रकाशक्रिया न विध्यते - there is no job / action / function in the form of ‘experiencing’ / ‘knowing’ / ‘awaring’ etc.
- स्वात्मनि - in itself.

Then why does one use the word saakshi for aathmaa – implying it witnesses/ illumines/ experiences etc.? Sureswaraachaaryaa explains that, it is a figurative usage, which is not to be understood in a literal sense.

- उपचारात् - Figuratively,
- सा (अस्य) क्रिया भवति - that (illumination) is said to be the ‘function’ (of the saakshi),

When is this status given, even figuratively?

- यः प्रकाशयस्य संनिधिः - when an object comes in front of ‘me’.

Therefore, I am ‘actionless’ – not even a saakshi.

82. Chapter II, Verse 67 to 69 (05-01-2008)

Sureswaraacharya continues with the topic of saakshi-ahamkaara vivekaa, saakshi being the changeless 'experiencer' of the mind and ahamkaaraa being the changing 'experiencer' of the world.

It should be remembered that the words ahamkaaraa and mind, are interchangeably used in these discussions. When the mind becomes alive in the presence of the saakshi, the live mind is called ahamkaaraa. And, to make the mind alive, the saakshi is providing the mind with its own reflection called chidaabhaasa: . Once chidaabhaasa is received by the mind, that live mind is called pramaathaa-ahamkaaraa /

It should also be remembered, that, the mind gets the chidaabhaasa , not because of the will or desire of the saakshi'I'; but, it does so, by the mere presence of the saakshi.

Similarly, the very presence of the mind makes the saakshi, the 'observer' of the mind. The saakshi does not 'do' anything to become the 'observer'. The mind becomes alive, the mind becomes known, the mind becomes experienced, the mind becomes 'awared' – all in the presence of 'I', the changeless saakshi. And, since the mind becomes 'observed', Consciousness 'I', is figuratively called the 'observer', akin to the example already cited - one getting a brother-in-law status, without any action on one's part, but consequent on one's sibling getting married.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says "the presence of the mind makes 'me' an 'observer'", (in this important verse 67).

- Prakaasyasya sannidhi: - The (mere) presence of the mind
- Prakaasyam - the 'witnessed' mind; sannidhi: - presence.

Since the mere presence of the 'witnessed mind' makes 'me' the 'observer' and to be the 'observer', no action is involved on 'my' (the saaksh/s) part, the 'observation' by the saakshi is only a figurative action. The Acharya uses the expression 'upacharaath', to mean 'figuratively'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 68:

मैवं शङ्किष्ठा :सांख्यराद्धान्तोऽयमिति । यत :।

Let it not be thought that this is the system of Saankhya; For:

The Achaaryaa established that 'I' am the changeless 'observer', the saakshi and the mind is the saakshyam, the 'observed' and also that the saakshyam mind itself, later, becomes the 'observer' of the world and is, therefore, called pramaathaa.

'I' observe the mind; the mind 'observes' the world. This can be presented in a different manner also, as follows: 'I' observe the mind directly and 'I' myself observe the world indirectly, through the mind.

An example to this: During full moon nights, the sun illumines the moon and the moon illumines the earth. This can also be expressed as "the sun illumines the moon directly and the sun itself is illumining the earth also, indirectly, through the moon, (because the moon does not have light of its own)".

Thus it can be said: 'I' observe the mind directly and 'I' am the observer of the world indirectly; therefore, mind is also 'observed'; world is also 'observed'; therefore, the entire inert universe is saakshyam. In effect, there are only two factors in the world (1) 'I', the saakshi and (2) everything else, the saakshyam – directly or indirectly.

When this much is said, it gives rise to a major doubt: Would not all these arguments, accepting the existence of two things (namely, (1) saakshi, the purusha.; the chethana thathvam and (2) saakshyam, the prakruthi.; the achena thathvem) amount to accepting the dvaita siddhaanthaa of the Saamkhyaa philosophy, which also talks about Purushaa and Prakrithi / Chethanam and Achethanam / 'observer' and 'observed' etc.? And, after all, the description of chaithanyam is the same in Vedhaanthaa and Saamkhyaa philosophies - asangha chidh vibhu: sakshi. Saakshi is asangham in both systems; saakshi is chaithanya svaroopam in both systems; and saakshi is of all-pervading nature, in both systems. Then, what is the difference between Vedhaanthaa and Saamkhyaa? How can a Vedhaanthin, then claim, that, he is an advaitin, different from the saamkhyaa?

Sureswaraachaarya foresees this objection and gives his answer: "In saamkhyaa philosophy, Purushaa and Prakrithi - the 'observer' and the 'observed universe' - have got the same order of Reality; and, therefore, they have to be counted as 'two', whereas, in Vedhaanthaa, Purushaa belongs to the highest order of Reality – the paaramaarthika sathyam and Prakrithi belongs to a lower order of reality – the Vyaavahaarika or Praathibhasika sathyam.

"Also, in saamkhyaa philosophy, the world is a product of Prakruthi, whereas, in Vedhaanthaa, the entire universe is said to be a product of Brahman / chaithanyam / aathmaa."

In his Baashyam to the 2nd Soothra of the Brahma Soothraas – "Janmaadhyasya yatha:"; Sri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa firmly asserts that Consciousness alone is the cause of the universe. Saamkhyaa philosophy holds that 'matter' is the cause of the universe, while, Vedhaanthaa declares that 'matter' is not the cause, but, Consciousness alone is the cause of the universe.

Manthraa 1 of Brahmavalli of the Thaithreya Upanishad runs: "Thasmaadh vai ethasmaadh aathmana: aakaasa: sambhootha: | aakaasaath vaayu: | Vayo: agni:" etc.–From that Brahman, which is this Aathman, space is born; from space, air is born, from air, fire is born" etc. And, again, in Manthraa 1 of Bhruguvalli of Thaithreya Upanishad, Varuna exhorts his son and disciple, Sage Bhrughu: "Yatho vai imaani bhoothaani jaayanthe | Yena jaathaani jeevanthi | Yath prayanthi abhisamvisanthi | Thadhvijignyaasasva| Thadh brahmethi" - " Seek to know that Brahman, from which indeed, all these beings are born, by which all the born-beings exist and unto which they go back, while resolving".

Thus, that "aathmaa is kaaranam and jagath is kaaryam" is an established fact for Vedhaanthaa. It follows, therefore, that, the world or the mind does not have a separate existence from 'me', the 'observer', and therefore, the world and the mind are of a lower order of reality, as against aathmaa.

Thus, the basic difference between Saamkhyaa and Vedhaanthaa is: "The world is as real as 'me', the 'observer', is Saamkhyaa; the world is less real than 'me', the 'observer', is Vedhaanthaa".

(An aside: It should be noted, that, when Vedhaanthaa says "the world is less real", the claim is not "the world is not there at all". When the Vedhaanthin says the world is mithyaa, Visishtaadvaitam misunderstands the word mithyaa as 'non-existence'. But, the use of the word mithyaa, with reference to the jagath, only means "jagath is very much available for experience; but has got a lesser order of reality and therefore, cannot be accounted as true. It is comparable to one's reflection in the mirror, which is experiencable, but not countable").

"Therefore, Vedhaanthaa is not Saamkhyaa" asserts Sureswaraachaaryaa.

- मा एवं शङ्किष्ठा :- - May you not entertain the following doubt,

Maa – do not; evam – the following; sankaa – doubt; sankishta: (aasankishta:) - people who doubt.

What is the doubt?

- अयं सांख्य रद्धान्तः इति - that my teaching is saamkhya siddhaantham,

Raaddhaantha: - siddhaantha: / teaching; ayam - This (teaching given by me).

"Do not mistake my teaching as saamkhyaa philosophy" says the Achaaryaa.

- यतः - because of the following (basic difference between saamkhyaa and Vedhaanthetaa given in the sloka that follows).

Chapter II: Verse 68 –

यथा विशुद्ध आकाशे सहसैवाभ्रमण्डलम् ।

भूत्वा विलीयते तद्ब्रह्मात्मनीहाकिलं जगत् ॥ ६८ ॥

Just as, in the uncontaminated sky, clouds suddenly appear and dissolve, even so the whole phenomenal world appears and disappears in the Self.

The Achaarya presents the basic difference.

The saamkhyaa philosopher is called achethana kaarana vaadi - the philosopher who subscribes to the view 'matter is the cause of the universe'. The term 'achethana kaarana vaadha:' means a 'philosophy which assumes matter as the cause of the universe'.

Saamkhyaa, Yoga, Nyaayaa, Vaiseshikaa, Bouddhaa are all achethana kaaranaa vaadhaas, whereas, Vedhaanthetaa is unique; it is chethana kaarana vaadha:. 'Chethanam/ Consciousness is the cause of the universe' is the principle of Vedhaanthetaa.

But, what is that Consciousness? It is 'I'; 'I', the Consciousness principle, is the cause of the universe. "Mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sakalam prathistitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi thadh brahmaadhvayam asmi aham" – "Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything resolves into me alone. I am that non-dual Brahman" declares Kaivalya Upanishad (verse 19).

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- अकिलं जगत् - This entire universe,
- इह आत्मनि भूत्वा - arising out of / in 'me', the saakshi chaithanyam,

Aathmani – sakshi chaithanye /

The universe arises from 'me' and arises in me. Why is it said "in 'me'" (apart from saying "from 'me'")?. It is because, the world which arises out of 'me', cannot remain outside 'me', there being no 'outside' for 'me', 'I' being the all-pervading Consciousness. The world comes from 'me' and it rises in 'me'; both the words 'from' and 'in' are important. 'Aathmani jaayathe, aathmana: jaayathe' |

After arising from 'me', what does this whole cosmos do, "in 'me'"? It dances about for some time, giving me entertainment or struggles, depending on my attitude, an essential principle of Vedhaanthalaa being: "By forgetting 'my' nature, I convert life into a struggle and by remembering 'my' nature; I convert life into a sport / entertainment"

(An interesting aside: When things go well for an individual, the individual does not ask the question 'why did Bhagavaan create this world?' Only when problems abound, the individual, in despair, raises this question. But, if only the individual cares to remember 'his' nature, even when problems are met with, the question would not be raised at all.

Vedhaanthalaa does not answer/ solve the question 'why the world was created?' Instead, Vedhaanthalaa 'dissolves' the question by convincing the seeker, that there is no need for such a question at all, through its efforts in making the seeker realize 'his' true nature, because of which realization, he does not see life as a struggle.)

Thereafter, i.e., after 'dancing about for sometime, giving entertainment or pain',

- विलीयते - resolves (in 'me').

When all these things happen, what happens to 'me'? Sureswaraachaarya says 'I' am not affected by all these changes, the word 'I' meaning neither the body (which undergoes comforts or sufferings) nor the mind (which also enjoys pleasure or suffers pain), but, 'I', the asangha chaithnyam, free from any contamination. The Achaaryaa gives a beautiful example, in the first line of the verse.

- यथा अभ्रमण्डलम् इव - Just as patterns of clouds
- सहसा (भूत्वा विलीयते) - suddenly (appear and dissolve)
- विशुद्धाकाशे - in the uncontaminated / pure sky,
- तद्वत् - in the same manner (this entire universe, arising in 'me' resolves in 'me').

The sky is not affected by the nature of the clouds. If the clouds are rain-bearing, akaasaa does not become wet; and, if there are impurities in the clouds, akaasaa does not become impure.

Also, how do the clouds behave? They seem to appear from nowhere and also to disappear to nowhere. The perceiver of the clouds does not perceive the origin of the clouds, nor its destination.

This example (of the clouds) is given in the Chaandoghya Upanishad, and Sureswaraachaarya uses the example.

In the same fashion as the clouds appear and disappear in the sky, without, in any way, affecting the sky, the clouds of 'galaxies' appear in 'me' (for my entertainment) and disappear, (without affecting 'me', in any way)

What is the conclusion based on these statements? "According to us (Vedhaanthaa), aathmaa is jagath kaaranam. According to saamkyaa, aathmaa is not jagath kaaranam; therefore, we (Saamkyaa and Vedhaanthaa) are not identical" establishes the Aachaaryaa.

The anvayam of the verse: "Yathaa visudde aakaase abhramandalam sahasaa eva (boothvaa praleeyathe) thadvath akhilam jagath iha aathmani boothvaa praleeyathe".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 69 :

तस्मादेष कूटस्थः न द्वैतं मनागपि स्मृशति । यतः ।

Thus the unchanging Self does not so much as touch the realm of duality:

The topics covered in this portion are all highly technical. In Gouda Paadha Kaarika also this topic is beautifully discussed.

The world is the kaaryam; and, even though it appears, that, 'I', the 'observer', am contacting the world, the 'observed', i.e. though there appears to be a kaarana-kaariya sambhandha: / observer-observed contact / Consciousness-matter contact, Vedhaanthaa asserts that one can never talk about 'contact' between chaithanyam and the achethana prapancham.

What is the reason? Two important reasons are given, though there are even more reasons.

(1) Like aakaasaa, which is asangha;, chaithanyam is also asangha svaroopam. Asangha: means 'relationless' / 'contactless'. Just as space cannot contact or touch any object, similarly chaithanyam cannot have sambhandha.

Suppose an object, say, a clip, gets connected with clip-space, when the clip is moved, the particular space in which the clip was located should also 'move' along with the clip. But, it does not happen. The clip is 'in' space; but, is not 'connected' to space. Similarly, the world is 'in' chaithanyam; but, the world does not get 'connected' to chaithanyam. Gouda Paadha calls this asparsa yoga: - 'untouchability' philosophy. Every Vedhaanthin should strive to become 'untouchable', in this sense i.e. should not be affected by any object / event.

(2) The second reason: Aathmaa is kaaranam and jagath is kaaryam. Kaaryam cannot have contact with kaaranam, because there is no kaaryam separate from kaaranam. For instance, clay cannot contact pot, for the simple reason, that, the pot does not exist as a substance separate from clay. If clay and pot were two distinct substances, the possibility of 'contact' between the two may be there. Vedhaantha says, that, in the same manner, the world cannot have contact with chaithanyam – because there is no world, kaarya prapancha, separate from the only substance called aathmaa, the chaithanyam. "Chaithanya vyathirikthasya prapanchasya abhaavaath eva chaithanya-prapancha sambhandha: naive sambhavath". Therefore, chaithanyam will not have problems caused by contact with the world (since, it does not have contact at all).

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- एष कूटस्थः - this 'changeless' Consciousness ('I', the saaksh),
- द्वैतं न स्पृशति - does not contact the world,

That is the reason: "na me dvesha raaghau, ne me lobha mohau, madho naive me naiva". But, the seeker may question: "I do not contact; but, my mind contacts (the world)". The counter-question will be: "Is there a mind separate from chaithanyam?; when it is said that, there is no world separate from chaithanyam, the 'world' includes the mind also".

- मनाग् अपि - even a little bit.
- यतः - Therefore (the following sloka)

Verse 69 – Chapter II:

शब्दाध्याकारनिर्भासा :क्षणप्रध्वंसिनीर्द्रुशा ।

नित्योऽक्रमद्रुगाल्मैको व्याप्नोतीव धियोऽनिशम् ॥ ६९ ॥

The one, eternal and non-successive seer, through his consciousness, pervades, as it were, all the perishing functions of the mind always, which take up forms of objects like sound and colour.

What is the phenomenon that is taking place? Sureswaraacharya says "the world, which is kaarya prapancha, is entering the mind through the sense organs".

The mind also comes under kaarya prapancha: (which word means the 'projected world'). The external world, through the sense organs, enters the mind and as even as it enters the mind, the mind is able to have thoughts, which thoughts are in keeping with the external objects – for instance, when a ghata: (pot) is seen, ghataakaaraa vrutthi: (thought of the pot) is generated; in the same manner, pataakaara vrutthi:, mataakaara vrutthi: etc. are generated.

How is the mind able to do all these things? The mind does not have the capacity to do all these by itself, but the mind becomes capable because of 'my' saannidhyam, just as, in the presence of one magnet, another piece of iron will get 'induced magnetism', with the capacity to serve temporarily as a magnet. If the original magnet is removed from the vicinity of the iron piece, the 'induced magnetism' in the iron piece will also be removed. In a similar manner, in the presence of 'I', (the Original Consciousness), the mind gets 'induced consciousness' and is able to entertain sabda vrutthi, sparsa vrutthi, roopa vrutthi etc. As even as a speaker talks continuously without a break, the words are absorbed by the listeners' minds.

(An interesting aside: In an experiment, written sentences with a number of words consciously mis-spelt, with the first and last letters of the words in proper position, but all the other letters intentionally jumbled, were presented to a number of readers. It was observed, that, majority of the readers sub-consciously re-arranged the words properly and received the message conveyed by the sentences, without even noticing the 'jumble' of the letters, thus proving the versatility of the 'mind'. This is a unique power of the mind.)

But, all the vrutthis (thoughts) are only jadam i.e. inert – they are not 'knowledge' by themselves; they are not 'cognitions', by themselves. But, in 'my' presence, these inert thoughts become particular cognitions / varieties of knowledge. "Not only that" Sureswaraacharya points out "the thoughts are capable of producing reactions." One particular cognition / information / piece of knowledge, generates raaghaa vrutthi. Another generates dvesha vrutthi – still another kaama vrutthi and so on. These are also thoughts and in 'my' presence, they become 'experiences' in life.

Sureswaraacharya asks "When these experiences, what do 'I', the Chaithanyam do?" and replies "'I', the Chaithanyam, do not do anything".

Do the emotions affect 'me'? The answer is: "No; emotions are thought disturbances only in the mind and are not disturbances in 'me' - the Chaithanyam". Who am 'I'? 'I' am the 'illuminator' of the disturbances. In the 10th chapter of Panchadasa, Vidhyaaranyaa compares this (chaithanyam) to 'naataka deepa'; the mind, with the thoughts, is the dancer, 'sweating' because of the strain, while, the chaithanyam just 'watches' and also 'lights' the dance, without 'sweating' or 'getting tired'. The mind sweats / frets / fumes – but, 'I' am not the mind; 'I' am the untiring, unaffected chaithanyam.

- शब्दाधि आकार निर्भासा: - Thoughts in the form of objects in the world

Aakaara - form; Sabhdhaadhi - sound etc. (implying objects in the world); Nirbhaasaa: - thoughts / experiences / vrutthi jnaani / vrutthaya:

Only when the relevant thoughts occur, the relevant experiences take place. That's why it is said "You are not actually seeing the external world; but, you are seeing the mind, in which imprints of the external world are given". The imprints are called thoughts; 'I' am watching the world thought and not the world. To repeat: What I perceive is nothing but the thoughts that are generated by the world.

Constantly thoughts are formed in the mind; metaphorically speaking, the 'imprints' keep changing. Therefore, what type of thoughts?

- क्षण प्रध्वंसिनी: - (which thoughts are) fleeting (adjective to 'nirbhaasaa.')

'Kshana pradhvamsinee:' literally means 'those which die every moment'.

- धियः - belonging to the mind

"Dhiya: sabhdhaadhi aakaara nirbhaasaa: kshana pradhvamsinee:" is the anvayam. The meaning, in simple English: "Fleeting thoughts that are generated in the mind, in keeping with the objects outside".

And, what am 'I' doing? 'I' am not entertaining any thought; thoughts are entertained only by the mind. 'I' do not have any emotions also, which, again, belong only to the mind. 'I' am, all the time, by 'my' mere presence, making these experiences known / aware.

- एक :आत्मा - One non-dual Consciousness,
- नित्यः - which is eternal,
- अक्रम् द्रुक् - and is the 'changeless' observer,
- व्याप्नोति इव - pervades (the thought and illumines the thought without will or desire).

The non-dual, eternal, changeless saakshi chaithanyam 'I' pervade the thought and illumine the thought.

- अनिशम् - constantly / continually / always

Even in the deep sleep state, when the mind does not experience any external world and is silent, this silent mind also is illumined by 'me', the saakshi.

The word akrama dhruk is a significant word. Mind is called krama dhruk and aathmaa is called akrama dhruk.

The term Krama dhruk for the mind implies that the mind has to perceive the world sequentially only – one by one. It may do it quickly ; but, has to do it only sequentially - because, the first observation requires one thought, the second observation requires a second thought and so on. Each observation requires a thought, which should arrive and depart. Thus, mind's observation of the world is a successive, gradual and sequential process. Whereas, chaithanyam does not 'observe' through any action; chaithanyam's observation is not a process, not a sequential observation. Therefore, it is called akrama dhruk. Sequence belongs to the thought and not to the Consciousness.

- दृशा - svaroopā chaithanyena / with its own original Consciousness

"Saakshi illumines the thoughts, with its own original Consciousness" is the meaning.

What is the significance of the usage of this expression - dhrusā? In contrast to the aathmaa, which illumines the world with its original Consciousness, the mind illumines the world, not with its original Consciousness; but, with borrowed Consciousness.

(Anvayam of the verse: Eka: nithya: akramadhruk aathmaa anisam kshanapradhvamsinee sabhdhaadhi aakaara nirbhaasaa: dhrusaa vyaapnothi iva |)

83. Chapter II, Verse 69 to 72(12-01-2008)

Sureswaraachaarya is continuing with the topic of saakshi-ahamkaara-viveka:, the word ahamkaaraa referring to the mind, which has become alive in the presence of saakshi. Saakshi is a dhrashtaa / observer, therefore also called dhruk; the mind / the ahamkaaraa is also a dhrashtaa / an observer / a dhruk. Saakshi is the observer of the mind and the mind is the observer of the external world, through the five sense organs.

Sureswaraachaarya is talking about the differences between the saakshi-dhruk and the ahamkaaraa-dhruk. This differentiation is important, because, both saakshi and ahamkaaraa are physically together – they are inseparable physically; and, therefore, we have to do the separation cognitively, in the form of 'understanding'. Several differences are being pointed out, by the Achaaryaa.

One important difference: Ahamkaaraa becomes the 'observer', by undergoing change, which is called thought modification / vrutthi parinaama. Therefore, ahamkaaraa is savikaara-dhruk. On the other hand, saakshi illumines the mind, not through a particular action. Really speaking, saakshi is not even an 'illuminator'; but, is called an 'illuminator', because in its mere presence and also only in its presence, the mind becomes 'illuminated'. Saakshi, by its mere presence, illumines the mind as well as the thoughts (which are changing all the time); but, while illumining the mind, saakshi does not do any action, nor does it undergo any 'change', and is therefore called nirvikaara-dhruk.

Based on this, another observation is also made by the Achaaryaa. Since the mind / the ahamkaaraa has to illumine the world by entertaining the relevant vrutthis, the mind can illumine the world only sequentially, since, every specific perception requires a specific thought mode. Gataa (pot) perception requires ghataakaara vrutthi:, pataa (cloth) perception requires pataakaara vrutthi: and so on. The mind can deliberately entertain only one thought at a time; therefore, mental perception is sequential / gradual / time-governed. Perception 1 will be mental Act 1; perception 2 will be mental act 2 and so on. Each act is thadh thadh aakaara vrutthi parinaama roopaakriyaa vikriyaa | Wherever perception involves an action, there is sequence or succession. On the other hand, saakshi 'illumines' not through a particular act; therefore, saakshi's perception is non-sequential and therefore, saakshi is called akrama-dhruk, as against the mind / ahamkaaraa, the sequential observer or krama dhruk.

To understand this, an example is cited: The sunlight pervades the whole class room and all the students, who are falling within the range of the light, are 'illuminated' by the sunlight simultaneously. The sunlight does not illumine each single person, one by one, through specific acts done in a sequential manner. Because, thus, all students fall within the range of sunlight, the sunlight is akrama-dhruk i.e., non-sequential, simultaneous 'illuminator' of all the objects falling within its range (i.e., of the sunlight). But, even though the sunlight is illumining all the students simultaneously, if an individual wants to take cognizance of the students, the individual's mind cannot register all the students simultaneously ; but, can perceive and record the findings, only one by one i.e. the mind can perceive only 'sequentially'.

Not only the sunlight, but, the perceiver's Consciousness also has the same faculty as the sunlight. Once the perceiver opens his eyes in front of the students, the students fall within the range of his perception or Consciousness. The eyes of the perceiver have a range of perception; all the students fall within that perceptual Consciousness, the moment the perceiver's eyes are opened. But, even though, thus, all the students fall within the range of the perceiver's eyes or Consciousness simultaneously, if the perceiver's mind has to perceive the students, the mind has to entertain only one thought after another. In short, in this example, the sunlight is akrama dhruk, the Consciousness is akrama dhruk and the mind is krama dhruk. The perceiver might have his entire audience within his perception for a length of time; but, if he has to remember particular members of the audience, his mind should have registered the presence of the members separately, one by one, or sequentially i.e. the mind requires thadh thadh aakaara vrutthi.

To cite another example: Imagine an individual attending a bharatha naatyam concert. Even when the individual's hearing faculty is fully activated and is simultaneously exposed to all the musical instruments accompanying the artist - i.e. all of them fall within the range of the individual's chaithanyam, which 'illumines' all of them simultaneously - if the individual desires to judge the individual performances of the various artists, his 'perception' of the individual performances has to be necessarily one by one i.e. sequential. This example also shows that chaithanyam is akrama dhruk i.e. everything / every one falls within its range simultaneously, whereas, the mind is krama dhruk – which can perceive and register only one by one.

One more example is the simultaneous 'illumining' of an entire page of a book, by sunlight. Though the entire page is simultaneously 'illumined', the mind cannot register the entire page simultaneously. It has to register the contents only word by word / line by line / sentence by sentence – i.e. only sequentially. Sunlight is the simultaneous illuminator of the entire page; but, the mind cannot read the entire page simultaneously. The mind is krama dhruk.

But, when, thus, the mind reads the first line first and then moves on to the second line, it cannot be said that sunlight also initially 'illumined' the first line, when the first line was being read and 'illumines' the second line later, when the second line is being read; in other words, the sunlight does not illumine the lines in the page in sequence ; it illumines all the lines – the entire page – simultaneously. 'Illumination' by the sunlight is not bound by time. When the reader is reading the second line, reading of the first line is 'past'; reading of the second line is 'present'; reading of the third line is 'future'. There are 'past', 'present' and 'future' with regard to the reading process; but, as far as 'illumination' is concerned, the sunlight is not conditioned by 'past', 'present' and 'future'. In a similar manner, saakshi (comparable to the sunlight) is 'timeless illuminator' and the mind is 'timed', sequential, process-involving 'illuminator'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is struggling to communicate this message, through this wonderful sloka 69, in which verse, the crucial word is 'akrama dhruk'. Aathmaa is akrama dhruk and the mind is krama dhruk. This is further clarified in the following verses.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 70:

एवं च सति बुद्धेः परिणामित्वं युक्तम् ।

Such being the case, it is logical to suppose that the mind is subject to modification:

Sureswaraachaaryaa is interlinking three important concepts: the first is krama: - sequential illumination / perception; the second is parinaamaa – change; wherever there is kramaa, there is parinaamaa / vikriyaa / modification / change. Since the observation is sequential, there must be a difference between the first observation and the second observation and therefore, there must be a modification - sabda sravanam, roopa darsanam etc. - each one must be a different act on the part of the mind. Therefore, krama dhruk is parinaami dhruk. Krama and parinaama go together. The third concept is 'time'; wherever there is krama and parinaama, there is 'time', in the form of past, present and future. Our experiences through the mind involve time – I was unhappy / now I am happy and so on. Since the boghaa is mental, it has got varthamaana, bhootha, bhaavi kaala thrayam. Thus - krama:, parinaama: and kaala: - all these three, are associated with ahamkaaraa, the mind.

But, as far as the Consciousness is concerned, it is free from krama: (sequence), parinaama: (change) and therefore, most importantly, free from kaala: (time) also. Saakshi is timeless. The brilliant manthraa of Kathopanishad " Anyathra dharmath anyathra adharmaath anyathra asmaath kruthaakruthaath anyathra bhoothaascha bhavyaascha yath thaath pasyasi thadh vadha" - " Tell me that which you see as different from dharmath, different from adharmaath, different from this cause and effect and different from past and future" (Ch.I . Sec.2. Verse 14), declares this fact, viz., "aathmaa is timeless". Aathmaa does not have varthamaana, bhoothaath, bhaavi – it non-sequentially illumines the sequential past, present and future.

Anaathmaa has got kaalam; aathmaa is kaala atheetha: / Yascha anyathrikaala atheetham thadapi Omkaaraa eva |

- एवं च सति - This being so,
- बुद्धेः परिणामित्वं - the change / modification of buddhi, otherwise called Ahamkaaraa,
- युक्तम् – (is) logical .

This is because buddhi is a gradual perceiver. This is said in the verse that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 70 –

अतीतानागतेहृत्यानुगपत्सर्वगोचरान् ।

वेत्यात्मवन्न धीर्यस्मात्तेनेयं परिणामिनी ॥ ७० ॥

The mind is subject to modification, because it does not cognize all objects, past, present and future in a simultaneous apprehension, as the Self does.

The idea, that, ahamkaaraa (the mind) alone is associated with time, because ahamkaaraa experiences the events gradually, as a krama dhruk, is clarified.

- धीः न वेत्ति - The ahamkaaraa (the mind) does not experience / perceive / know / cognize
- सर्व गोचरान् - all the events /objects of the world (which themselves have got krama or time),

"Avyakthaath vyakthaya: sarvaa: prabhavanthyaharaagame raathriyaagame praleeyanthe thathraive avyaktha samyake".

The events unfold gradually; buddhi perceives gradually. Therefore, events have kaala thrayam; buddhi's experiences also have kaala thrayam. "But, do not extend that kaala thrayam to the chaithanya aathmaa, (which chaithanya aathmaa you are)".

What do the events / objects belong to?

- अतीत अनागत इहृत्यान् - belonging to the past, future and the present,

Atheetha - past; anaagatha – future (literally means 'that which has not yet arrived'); ihathyaa: - iha bhavaa: / the present. 'Atheetha anaagatha ihaathyaan' is adjective to 'sarva gocharaan''.

- युगपत् - simultaneously.

Essence: The mind does not cognize all events or objects simultaneously.

In what manner, then, does the buddhi know/ experience / perceive / cognize? "Kramatha: / kramena vetth'" – "knows gradually" is to be supplied.

- यस्मात् तेन - because of which reason,
- इयं – this buddhi: / ahamkaara:
- परिणामिनी – (is) subject to change.

Therefore, ahamkaaraa has past, present and future; ahamkaaraa of the past birth is different from the ahamkaaraa of the present birth and similarly of the future birth, because it undergoes change. On the other hand, aathmaa is not a gradual observer.

This is what the Achaaryaa says:

आत्मवत् (धीः युगपत् न वेत्ति) - (the buddhi does not illumine things simultaneously) as the aathmaa does.

But, even though there is no kaala thrayam in the saakshi and there is kaala thrayam in the saakshyam (the world), we commit the mistake of transferring / extending the kaala thrayam of the world to the saakshi also (wrongly presuming, that the past saakshi witnessed the past saakshyam, the present saakshi is witnessing the present saakshyam and the future saakshi will witness the future saakshyam. The adjectives 'past', 'present' and 'future', which belong to the saakshyam are transferred mistakenly to the saakshi).

"Athmaa vaa idham eka eva agre aasseeth; sadheva soumya idham agra aaseeth'" are Upanishadic statements, in which aaseeth (meaning 'was') is the verb. But, strictly speaking, you can never say "Brahman was" or "Brahman is" or "Brahman will be", since Brahman is kaala atheetha:

Though Brahman is kaala atheetha:, since in the past, the world was in potential form and at present, is in a manifest condition, and, therefore, has 'association' with time, we (wrongly) think that Brahman also has kaala sambhandha: .

Vidhyaaranya Swami says in a beautiful sloka in his Panchadasee: "Kaalaatheethe puraa ithi mukthi: | kaala vaasanayaayutham sishyam prathyeva bandhee|"

Strictly speaking, "Brahman was" is a wrong usage ; still, saasthraas and the guru use the verb 'was', for Brahman, since the sishyaa has got kaala vaasanaa. In any sentence, the subject is associated with a verb and any verb has one of the three tenses – past or present or future. Therefore, when Brahman is associated with a verb, Brahman seems to have

'time'. But, really speaking, for Brahman, kaala: naasthi. "That kaala atheetha brahma aham asmi" is the Vedhaanthic teaching.

And, "When will I become that Brahman? If I do my saadhanaas regularly, will I become Brahman?" are (wrong) questions, resulting from the time-oriented intellect, which connects even Brahman and Mokshaa, as a 'timed' event.

"Dhee: aathmavath yugapath na vetthi ; paranthu kramatha: vetthi ; thasmaath parinaami bhavathi" is the message of this verse.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verses 71 to 75 :

ततश्चैतसिद्धम् ।

Therefore this is established:

The corollary is extremely important. Therefore, the Achaaryaa addresses the student: "Oh! Student! Note the corollary of this teaching".

- ततश्च - Therefore (if the two previous verses have been thoroughly understood),
- एतत् सिद्धम् - the following is the conclusion/ the following is established.

What is this conclusion? "All the changes belong to ahamkaaraa; emotions are nothing but thoughts (which is obvious, since, when one goes to sleep, one's mind and thoughts are resolved and, therefore, one has no emotions); thoughts are 'changing'; and therefore, emotions are 'changing'; saakshi is 'changeless'; and, therefore, emotions do not belong to the saakshi chaithanyam; saakshi is the 'changeless illuminator' of the changing emotions belonging to the mind or ahamkaaraa. The real 'I', saakshi is free from emotions".

"Na me dvesha ragau na me loba mohau madho naiva me naive maathscharya bhaava: |"
And, therefore only, "na dharmo na chaartha na kamo na moksha: chidhaanandha roopo siva: kevalo aham|"

This has to be assimilated by a seeker: (that), "I am only the 'observer' of the troubled mind; 'I' am not troubled". The Achaaryaa stresses this idea, in the next five verses, so that a seeker will remember this, when he meets with problems in vyaavahaarika life. These five beautiful slokaas, if meditated upon, during difficult and stressful situations in life, will help the meditator maintain his composure and poise.

Chapter II: Verse 71 –

अपश्यन्पश्यतीं बुद्धिमश्रुण्वन् श्रुण्वतीं तथा ।

निर्यत्नोऽविक्रियोऽनिच्चनिच्चन्तीं चाप्यलुप्तद्रुक् ॥ ७१ ॥

(The Self) which does not see, does not hear, does not will, does not change, does not desire and does not lose awareness at any time, (perceives in all the bodies) the mind, which sees, hears and desires.

All these five verses (71 to 75) are extensions of one known idea only. The Achaaryaa presents the idea in different languages, so that, the seeker can prepare himself for the 'binary format'.

The binary format is a mindset, wherein the seeker learns to look at himself as the saakshi all the time, and learns to consider everything else, including his mind also, as anaathmaa.

Vedhaanthaa is not against any action towards 'improvement' of the seeker's mind ; but, only warns against connecting the mind to mokshaa, since the seeker is always the nithya muktha saakshi. 'Improvement of the mind' is for the benefit of others around the seeker – a 'loka kshema kaaryam' ; but, the mental conditions of the seeker should not be connected with the original nature of the seeker, since, as pointed out already, the seeker is always a nithya muktha saakshi and his mukthi is not dependent on the conditions of his mind.

To repeat : It is true, that, the mind can never be in perfect condition all the time, since it is subject to influences of the world and influences of one's own body (the physical conditions of the body, the harmones in the body, the chemicals in the body, the three gunaas etc.). And, of course, one should try to keep one's mind as healthy as possible, which is a loka kshema kaaryam; but, the condition of the mind should not be connected with one's nithya muktha saakshi svaroopam.

This is called 'living in binary format' – "i.e. the conviction that only (1) 'I', the saakshi and (2) the saakshyam (everything else other than saakshi) are there; that Saakshyam is never free from problems and saakshi is ever free from problems. And, therefore, both of them do not require freedom. Saakshyam cannot be free; saakshi need not become free". In fact, this understanding itself is 'freedom'. The seeker is relaxed, once this attitude is attained, with a proper understanding of the saakshi and the saakshyam.

"Prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha mohameva cha paandava | Na dveshti sampravrutthani na nivrutthaani kaankshath'" (Verse 22 – Ch. XIV - Bhagavadh Githa) – "The three gunaas will continue to change; when the mind is 'fine', one should not get attached to the 'fine' mind and when the mind 'throws tantrums' one should not hate the mind also. One should learn to be objective". Dayananda Swamiji advises, in his inimitable manner: "Be kind to your own mind".

- आत्मा - (taken from the next verse i.e., verse 72) – The Self,

- अलुप्तद्रुक् - (which is) the unbroken / continuous Witness,

Aluptha - unbroken / continuous; dhruk - Witness.

- निर्यत्नः - (which is) the effortless (Observer) / / prayathna rahitha:,

Niryathna: (dhruk) - Effortless (Observer). The saakshi-aathmaa does not put forward any effort to become a Witness / Observer.

- अविक्रियः - (and, therefore, which is) free from any form of vikriyaa / parinaamaa/ change,

Niryathna:, avikriya: and alupthadhruk are all adjectives to aathmaa.

Such a saakshi – aathmaa:

- पश्यति - (from verse 75) - illumines
- सर्वदेहेषु - (also, from verse 75) – in all the bodies.

Not only is the saakshi witnessing one particular mind, but, is the 'Witness' of all the minds. By this statement, the Aachaaryaa implies that the saakshi is one and the same, in all the minds, even though it has got a seeming division caused by the intellect - "in every body, one and the same saakshi 'illumines' everything" – "sarva deheshu pasyath" (verse 75).

This leads to the doubt "If I am the saakshi and saakshi is illumining all the minds, it must be illumining the minds of all the scientists also, would it not mean, that I should have all their knowledge also?" The clarification to this doubt : "When you say, "I should have all the knowledge" what is meant by the word 'I'? If the word 'I' is taken to mean the mind, such a claim, viz. 'I have all the knowledge', is absurd, since the mind will certainly continue to have limitations. If, on the other hand, the word is interpreted as referring to Saakshi (aathmaa), the claim is right, since saakshi illumines all the minds ; saakshi is sarvagnya: ; the individual mind is certainly alpagnya:."

What all does the athmaa perceive? Coming back to Verse 71 (first line):

- पश्यतीं बुद्धिं (पश्यति) - (Perceives) the seeing buddhi / mind,
- अपश्यन् - without doing the action of seeing.

The mind is seeing (registering) forms through the sense organs, eyes. That buddhi / mind, with the roopa vrutthi, is referred to as 'pasyathee buddhi – 'seeing mind' (in this verse). The saakshi is perceiving the 'seeing mind', without doing the action of 'seeing'.

All these five slokaas are trying to convey only one message: "The changeless Saakshi observes the mind, which is a changing observer".

- तथा - In the same manner,
- (आत्मा - the Self)
- अश्रुण्वन् - without doing the action of hearing
- (पश्यति - perceives / srnothi)
- श्रुण्वती (बुद्धि) - the 'hearing' mind.

Again, saakshi 'hears' / perceives the 'hearing' mind, without doing the job of hearing – srunvatheem buddhim pasyathi (srnothi).

The following manthraa (no. 21) from Kaivalya Upanishad is relevant in this context: "Apaanipaadoham achinthyaa sakthi: pasyaamachakshu: sa srnothyakarmana:" – "I am without hands and legs; yet, I am endowed with incomprehensible power. I see without eyes; I hear without ears".

- (तथा - in the same manner)
- (आत्मा – the Self)
- अनिच्छन् इच्छन्ती (पश्यति) - (perceives) the desiring mind without doing the job of desiring.

Anicchan - without desire.

The aathmaa does not have any desire to 'observe' a particular type of world. icchaa also is a problem of the mind only. Verse 7, Ch XIII of the Bhagavadh Githa points out: "icchaa dvesha: sukham dhu:kham samgaatha: chethanaa dhruthi: ethath kshethram" – "Desire, hatred, pleasure, pain, the body-mind complex, sentiency, fortitude - all this is Kshethram". Saakshi does not desire to observe either a 'nice' mind or a 'disturbed' mind – it does not have any type of desire, similar to the sunlight not having any desire to 'illumine' any particular object / event.

Various other activities of the mind are covered in the next few verses.

Chapter II: Verse 72

द्विषन्तीमद्विषन्नात्मा कुप्यन्तीं चाप्यकोपनः ।

निर्दुःखो दुःखिनीं चैव निस्सुखः सुखिनीमपि ॥ ७२ ॥

(The Self) which does not hate, does not get angry, does not suffer and does not enjoy (perceives in all the bodies the mind) which hates, gets angry, suffers and enjoys.

The Achaaryaa holds forth in the same strain.

The Saakshi perceives the 'hating' mind, without getting associated with 'hatred'; the non-hating saakshi perceives the hating mind.

Aathmaa (pasyathi) - The Self (perceives)
Dvishantheem (buddhim) - the hating mind,
Adhvishan - without hating.

Similarly,

-)आत्मा पश्यति - The Self perceives)
- कुप्यन्तीं बुद्धिं (- the mind which gets angry,
- अकोपनः - without itself getting associated with anger.

Again, in the same manner,

- निर्दुःखः (आत्मा सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति) -The sorrowless (Self perceives in all the bodies),
- दुःखिनिं (बुद्धिं) – the sorrowful mind.

Even when the mind is full of sorrow, the individual in the binary format, should be able to declare "I am sorrow-free".

- निस्सुखः (आत्मा) - (The Self) which is free from the emotion of happiness also,

Interpreting 'nissukha:' as 'unhappy', (as an adjective to aathmaa) is not appropriate. Aathmaa cannot be unhappy; but, is 'free from the emotion of happiness also', just as it is free from all types of emotions.

- (सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति - perceives in all the bodies)
- सुखिनीं बुद्धिं) - the joyful / joyous mind.

This may result in a doubt. How is it that aathmaa can be said to be joyless, while the mind is joyful? Does not Vedhaantha declare aanandha aathmaa and anandho brahmethi vyajaanaath etc.? The explanation: When the word 'happiness' is used in common parlance, it only refers to experiential temporary aanandaa, which is only prathi bhimbha aanandhaa, which prathi bimmbha aanandha is the arriving and departing / the fleeting joy, belonging to the mind alone, more precisely, to the aananda maya kosaa alone, whereas, 'I' the Saakshi, do not want to claim that 'fleeting' joy but the original, non-experiential aanandhaa – aathmaanandhaa.

Nobody can 'experience' aathmaananda; only aathma prathibhimbha aanandhaa can be 'experienced'. If a person claims "I experienced the aathman bliss in nirvikalpa samaadhi", such a statement is only erroneous. The 'bliss' experienced, which arrived and departed, was not aathmaanandaa, but only prathi bhimbha aanandhaa, which belongs to the kosaa, whereas aathmaanandha is 'yourself'. This sloka refers only to the prathi bhimbha aanandaa, belonging to the kosaa.

84. Chapter II, Verse 72 to 75 (26-01-2008)

Sureswaraachaarya is differentiating saakshi and ahamkaaraa, in these important verses. He wants to point out that ahamkaaraa is nothing but the mind and saakshi is the Consciousness, in whose presence, the mind is able to reveal itself. The saakshi does not 'do' anything to reveal the mind; but, in the mere presence of saakshi, the mind gets revealed. And, because the mind gets revealed in the presence of saakshi, the saakshi is given the name of 'revealer', though, the name 'revealer' does not refer to any specific 'action' or 'status' of saakshi; the name 'revealer' only indicates, that, in the presence of saakshi, the mind gets revealed.

This mind alone is called ahamkaaraa and this mind- ahamkaaraa alone undergoes varieties of experiences, each experience being only a thought modification. What is called a 'flow of experiences' is nothing but 'arrival and departure of thoughts'. The vrutthi is called a thought, when it is by itself; when the vrutthi 'reveals' itself, in the presence of the saakshi, the 'revealing vrutthi' is called an experience. In other word, a 'thought' itself is called an 'experience', when the thought is capable of revealing itself, in the presence of saakshi.

Since by the word saakshi, what is referred to is 'I', the real aathmaa, it can be also be said "in the presence of 'I', the real aathmaa – the chaithanyam, the mind has got 'arriving' - 'departing' thoughts."

In 'my' presence, the mind entertains arriving – departing thoughts and every thought is called an experience, because, the thought is able to reveal itself, not because of its glory, but, because of 'my' saannidhyam.

Since, thus, 'experiences' are 'revealing thoughts' and since thoughts belong to the mind, all the experiences belong to the mind alone. Therefore, all the experiential adjectives - such as 'happy', 'unhappy', 'hateful', 'jealous', 'calm' – are attributes belonging to the mind alone. They do not belong to 'I', the revealer aathmaa and therefore 'I' am 'attributeless'; 'I' am the 'sorrowless revealer' of the 'sorrow thought' of the 'sorrowful mind'. (So also of every emotion). 'I' am without sorrow, without hatred and so on; I am 'nirguna chaithanyam'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa takes up some of the common and familiar thoughts and experiences that happen in the mind. In these five verses, 71 to 75, the Achaaryaa talks about the 'flowing' experiences / thoughts of the mind, which the saakshi reveals, without itself getting 'contaminated', in any manner, by the experiences / thoughts / emotions.

"Na me dvesha raagau na me lobha mohau, mado naive me naiva maathsaryabhaava: na dharmo na chaartho na kaamo na moksha: chidhaananda roopa: sivoham sivoham" (verse 3 of Nirvaana Panchakam of Adi Sankara Bhangavadh Paadha) is the essence of these five beautiful verses 71 to 75.

Chapter II: Verse 73 –

अमुह्यमानो मुह्यन्तीं कल्पयन्तीमकल्पयन् ।

स्मरन्तीमस्मरंश्चैव शयानामस्वपन्मुहुः ॥ ७३ ॥

(The Self) which does not get deluded, does not indulge in imagination, does not remember and does not slumber (perceives in all the bodies, the mind) which gets deluded, indulges in imagination, remembers and slumbers.

The idea is the same in this verse, as in the verses 71 and 72; the Achaaryaa is talking of varieties of experiences, and, asserts, that, 'I', the Aathmaa , is free from all the experiences.

The next experience he talks of, is moha vrutthi; 'moha:' meaning 'delusion' or 'mental conflict', which is common to all human beings, all the time. Every 'conflict' is a 'thought' and that is the reason in the 'deep sleep' state, when 'thoughts' are not there, there are no 'conflicts' also. 'Conflict' or 'confusion' is also an 'experience' belonging to the mind alone; 'I' am the 'confusionless revealer' of the 'confusion- thought' of the 'confused mind'. The adjective 'confused' is applicable only to the mind; not to 'I', the chaithanyam / saakshi / aathmaa.

-)आत्मा(– The Self
- (सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति(- perceives in all the bodies,
- मुह्यन्तीं बुद्धिं(- the intellect that gets deluded (confused),
- अमुह्यमानः - without itself getting deluded (confused).

Aathmaa reveals the deluded / confused intellect, without itself being affected / tainted by the attribute called 'confusion'. An example is the sunlight which illumines a dirty object, without being contaminated by the dirt of the dirty object. In the same manner, 'I' illumine the confused mind, without getting contaminated by the 'confusion' of the confused mind.

Other 'experiences' are similar.

- (आत्मा) - The Self
- (सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति) - perceives in all the bodies,
- कल्पयन्तीं (बुद्धिं) - the fanciful / imagining mind,
- अकल्पयन् - without indulging in imagination / fancying.

Sureswaraachaarya says "every fancy is also a thought belonging to the mind alone". The 'fancy-less' aathmaa, 'I', reveal the 'fancy' thought of the 'fancying' mind, uncontaminated by the 'fancy'. Therefore, the anxiety resulting from the fancy, is, also only for the mind; not for 'me', the aathmaa.

- अस्मरन् (आत्मा) - The Self, which does not 'remember'
- (सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति) - perceives in all the bodies,
- स्मरन्ती (बुद्धि) - the remembering mind.

The 'non-remembering' Self reveals the 'memory-thoughts' of the 'remembering' mind.

In the same manner:

- अस्वपन् (आत्मा) - The Self, which does not sleep/ rest / relax,
- (सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति) - perceives in all the bodies,
- शयानं (बुद्धि) - the mind that sleeps / rests / relaxes / is passive,
- मुहुः - again and again.

Sleep belongs to the mind alone. That mind, which does not entertain any thought, to illumine either the sthoola prapancha or the sookshma prapanchaa – i.e. that mind, with 'subsided' thoughts – is called the 'sleeping' mind. And, that 'sleep' does not belong to the saakshi, which, however, 'reveals' the 'sleeping' mind.

Verse 8 - Sec. II - Ch. II of Katopanishadh also points out: "Ya esha: suptheshu jaagarthi kaamam kaamam purusho nirmimaana:" – "The Self is this Consciousness, which keeps awake projecting various (dream) objects, when all senses are asleep".

When all the organs, including the mind are sleeping, the non-sleeping Consciousness reveals the 'sleeping' mind, uncontaminated by the sleep-avasthaa.

Chapter II: Verse 74 –

सर्वाकारां निराकारः स्वार्थोऽस्वार्था निरिङ्गनः ।

निस्त्रिकालस्त्रिकालस्थां कूटस्थः क्षणभङ्गुराम् ॥ ७४ ॥

(The Self) which does not have any form, is for itself, is unmoving, is time-less and is immutable (perceives in all the bodies, the mind) which assumes all forms, subserves the ends of another, is subject to time, past, present and future and perishes every moment.

Two important laws or principles, on which the entire Vedaantha is resting, are:

(1) 'I' am different from everything that 'I' experience, because 'I' am the 'experiencer'-subject and everything else is the 'experienced'-object, and

(2) all experienced attributes belong only to 'experienced'-objects and never to the 'experiencer'-subject.

Sureswarachaaryaa, in these verses 71 to 75, is applying the above-mentioned second important law by pointing out : "All emotional states - like anger, worry, anxiety, stress etc. - are 'experienced' attributes belonging to the experienced object – the 'mind' (which, it should be remembered, is only an 'object' of experience) and never to the 'experiencer' saakshi chaithanyam."

Most of the thoughts correspond to external objects and since each object in the external world has got 'aakaara:' - a finite form – the thought also has got a form; and in fact, the form of the thought alone decides the 'experience'. Sabda aakaara vrutthi corresponds to sabda anubhavaa; sparsa aakaara vrutthi refers to sparsa anubhavaa and so on. Every experience gets specified only because of the specific form of thought. If (this is purely hypothetical) all the thoughts are the same, all the experiences will also be the same. Experiences are differentiated by different types of thought; every thought has got an individuality of its own and is therefore 'finite' in nature.

This is what the Acchaaryaa also points out: "Every vrutthi is saakaara vrutthi and every saakaara vrutthi has got an individuality of its own and that saakaara vrutthi is 'revealed' by the saakshi chaithanyam, without the saakshi itself getting contaminated / tainted by that aakaaraa / individuality".

'Experience' has got a specific nature; but, the Consciousness does not have any specific nature and is therefore called nirvishesha chaithanyam.

- निराकारः (आत्मा) - The formless / 'individuality'less Consciousness
- (पश्यति) - perceives / illumines
- सर्वाकारां (बुद्धिं) - the mind that assumes different forms.

Further:

- स्वार्थः निरिङ्गनः (आत्मा) - The Self which is self-valid and is without any motion,

Niringana: - adjective to aathmaa, meaning the 'one without any motion'; ingathi is the verbal form, meaning chalathi – 'moves'.

Aathmaa is the only thing which is valid by itself; i.e. whose existence is justifiable by itself. Nothing else is self-valid. Everything else has to validate itself, by proving its usefulness/ utility for others. The moment an object is found useless, it is rejected and is therefore called paraarthathaa.

This principle, is, in fact, applicable even to people. "Yaavath vitthopaarjana saktha: thaavath nijaparivaaro raktha:"- "As long as you are able to earn, so long will your kinsfolk be attached to you" warns Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa in his famous Bhaja Govindam. "Athmanasthu kaamaaya sarvam priyam bhavathi" asserts Sage Yaagnyavalkyaa also, in the Brihadhaaranyaka Upanishad.

Therefore, anaathmaa is called paraartha vishayaa, while aathmaa is considered svaartha vishayaa.

Like everything else apart from aathmaa, the mind is also non-self-valid. This is the reason that, as long as the mind is enjoying happiness, is calm, is efficient and is not a burden, an individual loves his mind, considering the mind as a wonderful instrument serving him; but, the moment the mind becomes heavy, because of worry, fear or grief, the individual thinks in terms of 'removing'/ 'eliminating' the mind, by sleep or recourse to liquor or drugs or even to suicide. This establishes the fact, that the mind is paraartha

- पश्यति – perceives / illumines
- अस्वार्था (बुद्धि) - the mind that subserves the ends of another.

The next experience taken up by the Achaaryaa is the 'experience of kaala thathvam', which is an attribute of every object in Creation. The past / present / future tenses are associated with every object in the Creation.

"Avyakthaath vyakthaya: sarvaa: prabhavanti aharaagame" - "On the arrival of the day (of Brahma) all the manifest beings come forth from the unmanifest" declares the Lord in the Bhagavadh Geetha (verse 18 – Ch. VIII). Every object had a dormant past state, has an active present state and will again have a dormant future state. The entire Creation – micro and macro – is associated with kaalathathvam. Therefore, kaalaa can be taken as an 'attribute' and this attribute of kaalaa is associated with the mind also. This fact can be proved by anvaya vyathirekha logic – when the mind comes alive, kaala thathvam also comes alive – either in jaagrath avasthaa, with jaagrath kaalaa and in svapna avasthaa with svapna kaalaa. But, when the mind resolves in sushupthi, kaalaa experience also disappears.

Manas sathve kaala sathvam; mano abhave kaala abhaava: ; thasmaath mana: eva kaalena sambhadhyathe. But, aathmaa is not associated with Time; it is ever existent.

And, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- निस्त्रिकालः (आत्मा) - The time-less Self
- (पश्यति) - perceives
- त्रिकालस्थां (बुद्धिं) - the mind which is associated with the three - varthamaana, bhootha, bhaavi - kaalams.

Applying the second 'law' enunciated earlier, 'time' is an 'experienced' attribute, belonging to the 'experienced' mind and therefore, it does not belong to the 'experiencer' aathmaa. 'I' do not have association with past tense, present tense or future tense. "Deadlines" are associated with kaalaa; "deadlines" cause stress. In other words, stress is associated with kaala thathvam. Therefore, Goudapaadhaachaaryaa declares in his Mandookya Karikaa, "as long as you are associated with time, you have samsaaraa". The relevant verse runs: "Yaavath hethupalaavesa: samsaaras thaavath aayatha: / ksheene hethupalaavesa: samsaaram na prapadhyathe //" – "As long as there is obsession with cause and effect, so long samsaaraa is extended. When the obsession with cause and effect is subsided, one does not attain samsaaraa" (verse 56 – Alathasaaanthiprakaranam).

The moral: Stand aloof and watch the flow of time and the flow of events / thoughts in time, with the conviction "I have no connection with either time or the flow of events / thoughts in time. In a river, the riverbed is stationery, while the water keeps flowing ; 'I' am like the flowless, stationery river bed and on 'me', time flows, events flow and thoughts flow". This 'claiming' of 'timelessness' is verily moksha :

Ironically, people get tensed up, by the thought of mokshaa itself, fearing the consequences (punarapi jananam, punarapi maranam) of not achieving moksha in this very life. Sureswaraachaaryaa points out "you' are the 'nithya muktha aathmaa'. It is your mind that is bound and suffers from kaalaa also. 'You' are yourself ever free".

The saadhakaa should be free from the 'tension' of attaining mokshaa also, since this 'tension' also is a form of samsaaraa, even though the desire for mokshaa is the noblest desire possible, compared to all other desires.

That's why, in the Kathopanishad, Yamadharmarajaa warns "anyath sreyah: anyath uthaiva preya: the ubhe naanaarthe purushagum sineetha:"- "Sreyas is one path; Preyas is quite another; but, both, though with different destinations, bind a person" (Verse 1 – Ch. I- Valli 2).

Does this mean that one should choose to remain a samsaaree? No; the message is "Claim that 'I' do not require mokshaa, because 'I' am nithya asamsaaree; samsaaraa is also only an adjective and is applicable to the mind only; "Aham samsaara-mukthi-atheetha-saakshi asmi."

'Nisthrikaala.' is a very meaningful adjective to the Self; 'Self' is free from all the three periods of time.

Dayananda Swamiji points out that the word nithyam, as applied to aathmaa, should not be interpreted as 'eternal'. The word 'eternal' means 'that which exists in all the three periods of time' and therefore, when the adjective 'eternal' is used to refer to an object, it implies that the object is 'associated' with all the three periods of time/ kaalaas. Of course, the word / adjective 'non-eternal' implies association with one or two kaalaas only. Aathmaa is neither eternal nor non-eternal; Aathmaa is neither associated with one kaalaa; nor, associated with three kaalaas, since it is asangha: - 'un-associated with anything including kaalaa'. Therefore (Dayananda Swami points out), the right and more appropriate interpretation of the word 'nithya.', in the context of aathmaa, should be 'timeless' and not 'eternal'. Sureswaraacharya's adjective 'nisthrikaala' to aathmaa, in this verse is, therefore, very appropriate, meaning 'timeless Consciousness'.

Gowdapaadaacharya also expresses in his Maandookya Kaarika – "Aathmaa na saasvatha asaasvatha abhidhaa" – "You cannot refer to aathmaa as saasvatham or assaasvatham", because while asaasvatham is eka kaala sambhandhi and saasvatham is thrikaala sambhandhi, aathmaa is kaala asambhandhi.

This kaala atheetha chaithanyam illumines the mind, which is thri kaalsthaam – associated with the three times.

The next thought / experience referred to by the Achaaryaa:

कूटस्थः (आत्म क्षणभङ्गुराम् बुद्धिं पश्यति)

- कूटस्थः (आत्मा) -The 'changeless' aathmaa (the 'changelessness' nature of the aathmaa has already been referred to earlier, by the use of the adjective 'niringhana.')
- (पश्यति) - reveals
- क्षणभङ्गुरां बुद्धिं(- constantly changing mind / fleeting thoughts.

The thoughts, like kaama vrutthi, krodha vrutthi, lobha vrutthi etc. move constantly in the mind, while the saakshi remains changeless / unaffected by the thoughts.

Chapter II: Verse 75 –

निरपेक्षश्च सापेक्षां परार्चीं प्रत्यगद्वयः ।

सावधिं निर्गत्यतः सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति ॥ ७५ ॥

(The Self) which is not relative, which is the inner undivided Reality and which is infinite, perceives in all bodies (the mind) which is relative, which is external and which is finite.

- निरपक्षः (अत्मा)- -'I', the chaitanyam, the independent Self,
- सर्वदेहेषु पश्यति - illumines in every body,
- सापेक्षां (बद्धिं) - the mind, which is dependent.

The mind is considered 'dependent' because of two aspects; it (the mind) is insentient and becomes sentient only because of the consciousness (chidaabhaasa) borrowed from the Self; this is chith apekshaa – 'dependence' for sentiency. The other aspect, which is more often missed, is the fact, that, even the very existence of the mind is dependent on 'I', the observer only. The mind 'borrows' its very existence also from the saakshi.

85. Chapter II, Verse 75 to 77 (09-02-2008)

In these verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is doing saakshi-ahamkaara viveka, which is an extremely subtle process, because saakshi and ahamkaaraa are intimately together and both of them are experienced together, in the very word and thought 'I'. The separation will have to be done cognitively, by the process of careful analysis, and therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa is writing several verses with regard to this topic.

The Achaaryaa points out: "In the very word 'I', there is the experience of the Consciousness principle, which is changeless, which is formless and which is paaramaarthika sathyam. And, in this very word 'I', not only is the saakshi chaithanyam experienced, simultaneously, the mind is also experienced"; which mind alone, the Achaaryaa is calling here, ahamkaara: | The words 'mind' and 'ahamkaaraa' are used interchangeably here, because the mind is included in the word 'I' (aham). To repeat: In the word 'aham', saakshi is also 'shining experience' and mind also is 'shining experience'; both are simultaneously experienced.

"But" Sureswaraachaaryaa also points out "even though they are simultaneously experienced, one is self-evident and the other has got borrowed experience".

Which one is self-evident? It is the saakshi thathvam, which, for its experience, does not depend upon anything else, because chaithanyam is the intrinsic nature of saakshi; on the other hand, the mind is experienced, not because of its natural sentiency, but, because of borrowed sentiency.

Since the mind is shining with Consciousness 'borrowed' from the saakshi, we make the statement "the saakshi is illumining the mind". The verb 'is illumining' creates an impression that the illumination was not there earlier, that the process of 'illumination' started at a particular time and that the process will continue for some time etc.; but, such an impression / understanding is erroneous. The verb 'illumines' does not have this connotation, in this context; it should be understood to only mean that "in the presence of saakshi, the mind is evident".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "the saakshi is experienced continuously; the mind is also experienced continuously. But, between the two, one is 'non-changing' and the other is 'changing'; one is 'spirit' and the other is 'matter'; one is 'sathyam' and the other is 'mithyaad'; the sathya-anrutha-viveka between the saakshi and the mind is crucial."

Therefore, in these 5 verses (71 to 75) Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Constantly, when I am using the word 'I', a process is happening. What is that? 'I' the saakshi am shining and simultaneously in that self-shining Consciousness, the mind is also experienced constantly. But, even though both are intimate and both are simultaneously shining, their natures are totally different. One is aathmaa; the other is anaathmaa. One is chaithanyam; the other is jadam. One is sathyam; the other is mithyaa. One is nirvikaaraa; the other is savikaaraa. The nirvikaaraa sakshi, the higher 'I', is illumining the savikaara ahamkaaraa, which is the lower 'I'. To use Krishna's expression "my own paraaprkrithi is illumining my own aparaaprkrithi". This mixture is referred to by the word 'aham'.

Aham padha lakshyaartha: is nirvikaara saakshi; aham padha vaachyaartha: is savikaara ahamkaara; / antha:karanam.

To differentiate between the two, saakshi and ahamkaaraa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is giving many adjectives to both the mind and the aathmaa (in verses 71 to 75).

In verse 75 (under study now), the use of the adjective 'nirapeksha:' to aathmaa indicates that aathmaa has got independent sath and chith – aathmaa enjoys 'Existence' of its own and 'Consciousness' of its own. Whereas, the mind, when it illumines, it only has 'Consciousness' borrowed from aathmaa, popularly known as chidhaabhaasaa. Not only does the mind have only chidhaabhaasaa (i.e., only borrowed Consciousness), it also has only sath aabhaasaa (only borrowed Existence); the 'isness' of the mind also, does not belong to the mind; its 'isness' also is given only by 'I'. And, whatever has got borrowed 'isness', is called mithyaa.

An example is a 'dream tiger': "When I see a sentient tiger in dream, the sentiency of the tiger is given by me alone, with the Consciousness 'taken' from the mind ; the tiger is nothing but a thought; and that inert thought - tiger vrutthi – is given chaithanyam by 'me'. The 'thought tiger' becomes a 'live tiger', because of the chith borrowed from 'me' through the mind; more importantly, not only does the tiger borrow 'Consciousness' from 'me'; the tiger borrows 'existence' also from 'me' alone". As Kaivalya Upanishad declares "mayyeva sakalam jaatham; mayi sarvam prathishtitham; mayi sarvam layam yaathi" - "Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything is resolved into me alone". No doubt, the tiger appears tangible; but, its 'isness' is borrowed from me; this is called mithyaa. "In the same manner" Advaitam says "when I look at the world and sentient people, 'I', the aathmaa – the saakshi chaithanyam - lends not only 'Consciousness' to everybody and everybody; the very 'Existence' is lent by the aathmaa. Therefore, the world is mithyaa. This fact – saapekshathvam / mithyaathvam of the mind - (in contrast to the nirapekshethvam of the aathmaa) is brought out by the Achaaryaa, in this verse, by the use of the adjective saapekshaa to buddhi – meaning mithya ahamkaaraa / mithya antha:

karanam. The sathya saakshi perceives (illuminates) the mithya ahamkaaraa / mithya antha:karanam.

(But, to what purpose? The answer can only be: "for entertainment"; similar to watching an unreal 'movie' for entertainment. But, the 'entertainment' should not become a serious 'nightmare'. Therefore the exhortation in the Kathopanishad: "Utthishtatha jaagratha praapya varaan nibhodhata" – "Arise ! Awake ! Having approached the great ones, know the aathmaa" (manthraa 14 – Sec. 3 – Ch. I).)

Nirapeksha: aathmaa saapekshaam buddhim pasyathi |

Sureswaraachaaryaa proceeds:

प्रत्यक् अद्वयः(आत्मा) - the inner non-dual Self Prathyak – Inner.

By the word 'inner Self', what is meant, is the ultimate Subject – aathmaa.

Even though the mind is 'inner' from the standpoint of the body, compared to 'I', the saakshi, the mind is 'outer'.

- पश्यति - perceives / illumines
- पराचीम् (बुद्धिं)- the 'outer' mind.

The Achaaryaa refers to the mind as 'outer' (paraachee), even though, to all perception, from the standpoint of the body, it is 'inner' (inside). It is because, as explained already, from the standpoint of the saakshi, the mind is outer (outside).

'Outside' and 'inside' are, after all, relative.

The 'absolute' inside is only saakshi; all the others are relatively inside or outside; but, from the 'absolute' standpoint, everything is 'outside' only.

Following is another explanation, from the Vedhaanthic angle, as to the 'inner' nature of saakshi and the 'outer' nature of the mind:

What is the definition of 'outer' in Vedhaantha? What is objectifiable is 'outer'. Therefore, world is 'outer'; body is 'outer'; mind is 'outer'; ignorance is 'outer'; even the silence in deep sleep state is 'outer'. And, therefore, from the Vedhaanthic angle, the mind is 'outer' (because mind is an objectifiable entity).

Roopam dhruyam lochanam dhruk thath dhruyam dhrukthumaanasam dhruyaadhee vrutthaya: saakshi dhrugeva na thu dhruyathe |

Similarly, in Vedhaanatha, what is unobjectifiable is referred to as 'inner'. What is unobjectifiable? There is only one unobjectifiable entity, the subject saakshi.

Therefore, on both the above counts, viz., the 'relative' angle and the Vedhaanthic viewpoint, the Achaaryaa refers to aathma as prathyak and buddhi as paraachee.

As for the adjective 'adhnaya:', the ultimate 'Subject', aathmaa, is the only Subject, according to Vedhaanatha. There cannot be a second Subject. Therefore, aathmaa – saakshi is uncountable as one among many; in other words, 'non-dual'. And therefore, the Achaaryaa uses the adjective 'adhvaya:', to the Self.

"Saakshi chethaa kevalo nirgunascha" ithi Svethaaswatharas sruthe: |

Then, the Achaaryaa moves on to the next pair: Saavadhim nirgatha: yattha: |

- निर्गत :यत्त) :आत्मा(- The dimensionless / immeasurable/ limitless/ infinite Self

Yatthaa - means dimension or measurement, such as height, width, weight etc.

- पश्यति - perceives / illumines
- सावधिं (बुद्धिं) - the 'limited' mind.

Avadhi: - also means measurement / dimension etc.; in fact, yatthaa and avadhi: are synonyms. Sa avadhi: - means 'with measurement' and therefore 'limited'.

The 'limitless' saakshi experiences the 'limited' mind.

When an individual claims that he is in a particular place or location, then his reference is only to his body and mind. The Achaaryaa points out "the mind's limited location does not belong to the saakshi". From the saakshi angle, one can and should claim "I am sarvagatha:".

This statement is proved by the axiom "all experienced attributes belong to the experienced objects and never to the Experiencer-Subject". All experienced measurements (height / weight / location etc.) can belong only to a known body or to a known mind and never to the saakshi.

The saakshi perceives the mind in every body – “sarva deheshu”. But, even though bodies are divisible and are divided, the saakshi is indivisible like space – aakaasavath. Saakshi is sarvagatha:

“Kshethragnyam chaapi maam viddhi sarvakshethreshu bhaaratha” – “Oh! Arjuna! May you know Kshethragnyaa to be Myself alone obtaining in all bodies” Lord Krishna declares in the Bhagavadh Geetha (verse 3 – Ch. XIII).

And, what is the aim of Vedhaantha?: “Training the seeker to claim the saakshi as himself and as a consequence, enjoy the emotional drama around”.

Verses 71 to 75 form a single sentence – aathmaa buddhim pasyathi -, with aathmaa as the subject, buddhi as the object and pasyathi as the verb. The other words are adjectives to aathmaa and buddhi.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 76:

एतस्माच्च कारणादयमर्थो व्यवसीयताम् ।

For this reason also, the following principle is to be admitted:

“So, from these discussions, we have to derive a corollary. That is the aim of my writing this book (treatise)” (implies the Aachaaryaa).

What is that corollary? The adjective “dhu:kee” or “samsaari” can apply only to the mind and never, never to the real ‘I’, the Saakshi. Therefore, ‘I’, the Saakshi need not remove sorrow – need not remove samsaaraa - to become ‘liberated’. I have only to claim that ‘I’ am the nithya-asamsaari-muktha: /

But, a person may argue “All right! I grant that the saakshi is free from dhu:kham or samsaaram and also that it is nithya muktha: / But, what I am now more interested in, is the well-being of my body-mind complex”.

Sureswaraachaarya replies: “The body-mind complex will always be un-predictable, uncontrollable and un-sustainable. You can never have total control over anaathmaa. Therefore, the more you try to develop ownership and controllership over them, the more miserable your life will become. Even if you manage to control the conditions of the anaathmaa at a given point of time, you cannot maintain the controlled conditions for ever, because anaathmaa is subject to the influence of infinite factors – many unknown and many known but uncontrollable ; therefore, instead of trying to 'control' the body-mind complex, dedicate it to Viswaroopa Isvara; and, having dedicated your body-mind complex to Viswaroopa Isvara, make your 'contribution' to family and society, with the help of the body-mind complex as 'borrowed' instrument. This verily is aanthara sanyaasam. Let the body-mind complex wear off in the process; you need not worry about it. Never entertain the illusion of controlling the mind or body, in entirety, since it is impossible".

Aanthara sanyaasaa is the attitude "I am a contributor and never a controller". And, also the realization "even when I try to keep the condition of my body and mind as fit as possible, I should always note that my 'liberation' is not connected to the condition of the body-mind anaathmaa complex."

"By forgetting my real nature and by connecting my mokshaa to the fluctuations of anaathmaa, I will look upon life as a 'struggle' and therefore suffer samsaaraa. By remembering my real nature, and by disconnecting my mokshaa from the conditions of anaathmaa, I convert life into sport / entertainment" is an essential lesson in Vedhaantha.

This is what the Aachaaryaa also points out in this portion.

- एतस्मात् कारणात् - Because of this reason,
- अयं अर्थः - this following conclusion
- व्यवसीयताम् - is to be internalized .

The internalisation is achieved by preserving and promoting the saankyaa mindset, which saankyaa mindset consists in: "Looking upon myself as nithya muktha: and looking upon all my activities as loka kshemaartham - i.e. as intended for the benefit of the society. I do not look upon my activities as my spiritual saadhanaas, since I do not require any saadhanaa, because I am already a muktha: / I look upon mokshaa not as a goal, but, as my very nature. I maintain my bakthi also as nishkaamyaa bakthi, since I have nothing more to accomplish in life".

This is the idea given in the sloka that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 76 –

दुःखी यदि भवेदात्मा कस्साक्षी दुःखिनो भवेत् ।

दुःखिनः साक्षितायुक्ता साक्षणो दुःखिता तथा ॥ ७६ ॥

If the Self suffers, who is it that witnesses the subject of suffering? The subject of suffering cannot himself be the witness. Similarly the witness cannot be the subject of suffering.

This is a very beautiful verse.

The "dhu:khee" adjective or attribute can belong to the mind alone, because the word "dhu:kham" refers to a particular pattern of changing thoughts. Sorrow is nothing but a particular pattern of thought alone; there is no sorrow other than thought. That's why, quite often, one and the same experience is called 'sorrow' or 'pain' by a particular individual, while another individual may consider the same experience as 'happiness' or 'pleasure'. An example is the pop or rock Western music which is commonly seen to be enjoyed by youngsters, while people of the earlier, traditional generation may find the same music a real 'pain'.

'Sorrow' and 'happiness' are only two types of thought; thought belongs only to the mind; therefore, it follows, that, dhu:kha vrutthi yuktha antha:karanam alone can be dhu:khee; the saakshi which 'illuminates' the dhu:kha vrutthi cannot be the 'possessor' of the sorrow. The 'illuminator' of the 'sorrowful' thought of the mind – the saakshi – cannot be the 'possessor' of the sorrow. Therefore, whenever one undergoes 'sorrow', one should practice to think on the lines: "I am only the 'illuminator' of the sorrowful mind; I am not sorrowful; I am ever the happy 'witness' only; chidhaanandha roopa: sivo ham. I am the aanandha aathmaa illumining the unfortunately sorrowful mind. The consolation is 'this will also pass'. It is the mind's job (or lot) to enjoy or suffer – not 'mine' ".

- यदि आत्मा दुःखी भवेत् - Suppose you say sorrow is the attribute of Aathmaa,

What will happen then? The sorrow is an object of experience; if the sorrow is the attribute of aathmaa, the 'sorrowful' aathmaa will also become an object of experience, since the axiom is 'along with the attribute, the substance, which has that attribute, also becomes an object'. If, thus, both aathmaa and 'its' sorrow become objects of experience, who or what is the Subject? Another witness or saakshi will be required. Such a possibility is untenable. This is what the Achaaryaa points out.

- कः दुःखिनः (आत्मनः) साक्षी भवेत् - who will become the Witness of that sorrowful aathmaa?

This is not a question, but, a negation, based on the fact, that, there can be no further Witness/ observer than aathmaa.

Therefore, the dhu:khee cannot be the aathmaa; it can only be the mind. Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- दुःखिनः साक्षिता अयुक्ता - A dhu:khee object can never become the Subject (of the dhu:kham)

- साक्षिणः दुःखिता तथा (न युक्ता) - Similarly the Subject cannot be the 'sorrowful' object.

The essence: Sorrow can never belong to 'I', the observer, because 'sorrow' is an observed / experienced object. Not only is 'sorrow' an experienced object; it is subject to arrival and departure, whereas 'I' am constant.

Therefore, since, thus, I do not have sorrow, 'I' need not eliminate 'my' sorrow. As for the sorrow of the mind, it cannot be totally eliminated, because, mind has got praarabhdā and therefore has to go through various emotions without any choice.

That's why, in his Panchadasi, Vidhyaaranya Swami beautifully states: "In certain choiceless emotional situations, we cannot remove the emotions; we can only 'blunt' the emotions – reduce the intensity – by remembering 'our' higher nature." This is called abhibhava: |

An analogy: In the day-time, the stars are not extinct; they are very much there, in the firmament; but, in the presence of the overwhelming light of the sun, they appear non-existent.

In the same manner, in some situations, certain mental conditions cannot be deliberately removed – fear, for instance, which even turns into panic – and the attempt need not be for 'removal' or negation of the mental conditions, but, should be for reminding oneself of one's higher nature. In the light of the higher Self – when the aathma svaroopam is invoked – the mental emotions get weakened or become feeble, if not eliminated. The only way of 'liberation' from the emotions, is the conviction "I am not that mind (which undergoes the emotions)".

Therefore the Achaaryaa asks: "saakshina: dhu:kithaa katham?" - "How can 'I' have sorrow? Sorrow is an emotion arriving helplessly, but only to my mind".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 77:

पूर्वस्यैव व्याख्यानार्थमाह ।

In interpretation of what is said, the following is added:

- व्याख्यानार्थ - For elaborating / clarifying / reinforcing / corroborating / substantiating,
- पूर्वस्य एव - what has been said in the poorva sloka / earlier verse,
- आह - the following is added.

"I am ever free; the mind is never free; and, I have only a limited control over the mind" are the implied messages of the earlier verse.

"Prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha moham eva cha Paandava na dveshti sampravrutthaaani na nivrutthani kaangshath!" – "Oh! Arjuna! He (a person beyond the three Gunaas) does not hate brightness, activity and delusion as they arise; not does he desire for them as they withdraw" declares the Lord (Verse 22 – Ch. XIV – Bhagavadh Geetha) , pointing out the fact that the three Gunaas will keep fluctuating.

What is the conclusion? "I am ever free. My body-mind complex is never free. Therefore hand over the body-mind complex to Isvara - Viswaroopa Isvara."

Chapter II: Verse 77 –

नर्ते स्याद्विक्रियां दुःखी साक्षिता का विकारिणः ।

धीविक्रियासहस्राणां साक्ष्यतोऽहमविक्रियः ॥ ७७ ॥

Without change, there can be no suffering. How can he who changes, be the Witness? Therefore, the Self is the unchanging Witness of the thousand modifications of the mind.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "Sorrow is a form of thought and thought is an attribute of the mind. Thought is 'changing' and therefore mind is also 'changing', since changing attributes will change the substance (endowed with the attributes) also. The mind is therefore savikaara vishaya: - a changing object, distinctly witnessed by us. And, therefore, mind, the changing, witnessed object is never the Subject".

- विक्रियां रुते - Without undergoing change,

The word 'narthe' in the verse is to be split as 'na ruthe'. 'Ruthe', an indeclinable word, means 'without'.

- दुःखी न स्यात् - (the mind) cannot become a dhu:khee .

What type of change? Ans: 'Thought modification'.

"Vruthhi parinaama roopa vikaaram vinaa – without thought modifications, the mind or ahamkaaraa cannot become dhu:khee".

- विकारिणः का साक्षिता - How can that changing / sorrowful / objectified mind be the Subject or Saakshi?

"How (kaa) is it possible for the changing mind (vikaarina;) to have subjecthood (saakshithaa) " is the literal translation of this Sanskrit question or "How can the changing mind have the status of the Subject".

"I am not the mind", as in Nirvaana Shadgam of Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa "mano bhudhyahamkaara chitthani na aham. Chidhaananda roopa: sivoham".

- धीविक्रिया सहस्राणां साक्षिन् अहम् - I am the saakshi of thousands of thought fluctuations of the mind

Dheevikriyaa sahasraanaam – Of thousands of thought fluctuations belonging to the mind.

Dhee – mind; vikriyaa – fluctuating; sahasra – thousand.

'Thought fluctuations' mean 'emotional fluctuations'.

- अतः - Therefore,
- अविक्रियः (साक्षिन्) अहं (अस्मि) - I am the unchanging witness / nirvikaara: aathmaa aham asmi

'I' do not have the six modifications that 'matter' has – asthi, jaayathe, vardhathe, viparinamathe, apaksheeyathe, nasyathi etc.

Nor do the emotional fluctuation belong to 'me'; they belong only to the mind.

My aim is not to 'remove' the emotional fluctuations of the mind; but, to disclaim the emotional fluctuations as 'not mine' and to hand them over also to Viswaroopa Isvara.

This is sanyaasaa - the result of which is saanthi.

86. Chapter II, Verse 77 to 80 (16-02-2008)

In these verses, as a part of aathma anaathma viveka, Sureswaraachaaryaa is making the subtle distinction between aathmaa and ahamkaaraa, ahamkaaraa also falling within anaathmaa only. But, even though ahamkaaraa is also within anaathmaa, we are not able to distinguish it from aathmaa, because, both ahamkaaraa and aathmaa are understood as the meaning of the word I. All the other anaathmaas are referred to by the words 'you' or 'this'; ahamkaaraa alone is the unique anaathmaa entity, which is included in the meaning of the word 'I'. And, since, thus, the aathmaa and ahamkaaraa are integrally together as the meaning of the word 'I', one has to take pains to carefully sort out the two. And, therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to emphasise to the student, that, the word 'I' has got two components - one is the changeless/ invariable component, aathmaa, and the other the changing / variable component, ahamkaaraa.

Both are there, in the word aham or I; i.e. whenever we use the word 'I', we are experiencing both (1) the changeless component called aathmaa / saakshi and (2) the changing component called ahamkaaraa. It follows, therefore, that, we do not lack the experience of saakshi, which is experienced along with ahamkaaraa, every time we use the word 'I'. The problem is, that, we are not conscious of the experience of saakshi.

Therefore, the aim of Vedhaantha in thvam padha viveka is not 'giving' the experience of the saakshi, because we already do have the experience, but, only sorting out the experienced ahamkaaraa and the experienced saakshi. To repeat: The ahamkaaraa is always experienced in the form of the changing component of 'I' and the saakshi is always experienced as the changeless component of 'I'. But, the problem we face is, that, we are, all the time, so much interested in / absorbed in the changing component, that we do not pay attention to the changeless component, though we are experiencing it all the time.

The following analogy will make this fact clearer: when we look at any object – say, a moving hand – in our experience of the hand, there are, in fact, two components (1) a changing component, the moving hand and (2) the light, the changeless / motionless component, which is spread all over the hand. But, thus, though our experience is of both the components – the moving hand and the light, which light, in fact, is the factor that reveals the hand - generally, our attention is only on the moving hand; invariably, the light that makes the moving hand visible, is lost sight of, though it is also experienced along with the moving hand. In a similar manner, when the word 'I' is used, the tendency is to understand the word, as referring to the ahamkaaraa component alone, overlooking the truth that the aathmaa component is also very much behind the 'I' and is, in fact, the more important component.

A further extension of the analogy: Suppose that a second individual attempts to deflect the attention of the observer of the moving hand, from the moving hand to the non-moving light, which lights up the hand. But, even so, a new experience is not given by the second individual and need not also be given, since the observer already has the experience of the non-moving light, but, only has lost sight of it. The second individual is only drawing the attention of the first individual – the observer of the hand – from the hand to the light, which is revealing the hand.

The aim of Vedhaantha is similar to the attempt of the second individual in the above analogy – to point out that when one uses the word 'I', one is experiencing the invariable component 'chith' also, in addition to the variable component called 'ahamkaara', ahamkaara consisting of changing body, changing mind, changing thoughts, changing emotions – in short, the fluctuating 'chidh aabhaasa'.

'Chidh aabhaasa', in keeping with the condition of the body, becomes bright in jaagrath avastha and dull in sushupthi avastha. The chidh abhaasa is therefore fluctuating; the conditions of the body, of course, keep fluctuating; and so are the conditions of the mind fluctuating.

And, when one uses the word 'aham', one, is experiencing this savikaara ahamkaara and the nirvikaara saakshi - the variable and invariable dvayam.

But, most of the time, we do not turn our attention to the saakshi. Therefore, the teacher has to struggle to establish that we do refer to saakshi also, by the use of the word 'I'.

How does one establish this fact, that the word 'I' refers to the saakshi component also? Or, in other words, in which situation or context, is this fact most obvious? The answer: "Whenever we are equating the past 'I' and the present 'I'". For example, when the statement "'I' who attended yesterday's class on Githa Bhashyam am attending to-day's class on Naishkarmya Siddhi" is made, or in any such similar context, whenever the past 'I' and the present 'I' are equated, at the time of equation of the past 'I' and the present 'I', the attention is turned only on the invariable component, saakshi.

This 'equation' of the past 'I' and the present 'I', is technically known as prathyabhijnaanam. In verse 6 of the Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, this word, prathyabhijnaanam, is used, by the author of the Sthothram – "Praak asvaapsam ithi prabhodha samaye ya: prathyabhijnaayathe" – "who, on waking, remembers to have slept well".

Prathyabhijnaanam = "equating the past 'I' and the present 'I'".

Whenever one equates the 'yesterday's 'I' to the 'present 'I' or the 'dreamer 'I' to the 'waker 'I', one's attention is not upon the varying / variable components, because, if one's attention is on the variable components, one cannot equate the past 'I' and the present 'I' (since, obviously, an equation is not tenable between variables). But, quite often, we do equate the past 'I' and the present 'I', which means, that, at the time of equation, we are only unknowingly / unconsciously, referring to the changeless saakshi thathvam.

In a purely hypothetical situation, if all the components of the past 'I' and all the components of the present 'I' are totally variable, the result will be that the past 'I' and the present 'I' can never be equated; the past 'I' cannot even be referred to as 'I'; only the present 'I' alone can be referred to as 'I'.

But, it is common knowledge, that, we do refer to the past 'I', using a past tense verb, the present 'I', using a present tense verb and the future 'I' also, using a future tense verb. The conclusion of this fact is obvious: Thrikaala sambhanda roopena (by virtue of the relationship of 'I' to all the three times - past, present and future-) , the reference made, is, to one enduring 'I'; and that enduring / continuous thri kaala avasthaayee 'I', the non-variable component of aham, is the saakshi thathvam. Soothre maniganaa iva - similar to the invisible thread running through the visible beads in a necklace – this invisible, non-variable aathmaa thathvam runs through the visible, variable ahamkaaraa, which is comparable to the maniganaa - the beads – in the necklace.

And, Sureswaraachaarya says: "We are experiencing this non-variable, enduring component, all the time, without requiring a special thought. Experiencing every thing else or anything else – which is anaathmaa - requires a directed thought pattern. For instance, to be aware of the Naishkarmya Siddhi class, the student's mind should entertain a specific thought, as even as the teacher addresses the class. The changing / variable words require thoughts to register them; but, the changeless 'I'- saakshi - does not require any specific, well directed attempt to register it . Without any effort, the continuous saakshi is ever available; to quote again the Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram of Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa, verse 7 of the Sthothram runs "Baalyaadishvapi jaagradhaadhisu thathaa sarvaavasthaastvapi vyaavrutthaasu anuvarthamaanam aham ithi antha: spurantham sadhaa" – " (The Self) persists in all stages of age (childhood, boyhood, youth and old age), in all states (waking, dreaming and deep sleep) and in all other conditions and manifests itself inwardly as 'I'". Saakshi anubhavaa is effortlessly happening all the time.

Vedhaanthee wants to talk more about the ever-experienced saakshi. It does not give the experience of saakshi; it only gives the knowledge about the ever-experienced saakshi.

What is that knowledge? It avers: "Only in the presence of non-variable 'I', the body is experienced, the mind is experienced and the world is experienced; the experience of the mind and of the body requires the saakshi; whereas, the saakshi experience itself does not require any specific attempt. And, this saakshi is one with the jagath kaaranam Brahman (the maha vaakyam)".

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya is turning our attention to the non-variable 'I' – saakshi athoham avikriya. That 'I' is available at all times; for instance, at the beginning of the class, half-way through the class and also at the end of the class; and if a student (who was in the class, all the time) is asked "were you continuously present in the class?", he replies, without a second thought: "Yes; I was continuously present". But, the body (of the student) had been changing all the time; the thoughts (of the student) had been changing. The student's confident reply, therefore, that he was in the class all the time, obviously refers to the invariable / avikriya chaithanyam, the saakshi.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 78:

एवं सर्वस्मिन् व्यभिचारिण्यात्मवस्त्वेवाव्यभिचारीत्यनुभवतो व्यवस्थापनायाह ।

Thus, to establish by experience, that the principle of the aathman, is the invariable factor in and through all variable phenomena, the following is enunciated:

Sureswaraacharya repeats the idea, that, one does not have to work for saakshi anubhavaa, because it is always there; and, that, Vedhaantha is only turning one's attention to the ever-experienced, non-variable saakshi.

- एवं - In this manner,
- सर्वस्मिन् व्यभिचारिणी) सति(– when everything else in the world / the entire anaathmaa is changing,

Even when everything else is changing, 'I', the saakshi alone, am not changing. When it is said, that 'everything' is changing, it should be understood that the body is changing, the mind is changing and the thoughts are also changing. This group put together is called ahamkaaraa – in other words, ahamkaaraa is a collective name for the body-mind-thought-sense complex. All these are of changing nature.

What is the one thing, which is changeless? 'I', the saakshi. That prathyabhijnaanam is always in the form of soham. Soham is a maha vaakya manthraa; but, it can also be interpreted as "the past 'I' is the present 'I'", in which statement, the common factor is the saakshi alone.

- आत्म वस्तु एव - the chith / Consciousness component alone
- अव्यभचारि - (is) changeless.

What is the proof for this? Ans: If the present 'I' is a totally changed 'I', the past 'I' cannot even be referred to as 'I'; the past 'I' has to be referred to as 'he' or 'that' (i.e., in third person). The very fact, that, the word 'I' is extended to the past entity also, along with the present entity, indicates that there must be a common factor.

This is technically known as bhaagha thyaagha lakshanam. Baagha thyaagha lakshanayaa, the vaachyaartha 'I' cannot be equated; Baagha thyaagha lakshanayaa, the lakshyaartha invariable component alone can be equated. We are doing that equation, whenever we equate the past 'I' and the present 'I'. The saakshi anubhavam is constantly there, though, of course unconsciously - similar to the experience of the light, whenever an object is observed (as in the analogy of the 'moving hand' earlier cited). The further unfortunate irony is, that even though, thus, the saakshi anubhavam is constant, we tend to wonder as to when we will ever get the anubhavam of the saakshi, and also yearn for saakshi anubhavam.

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

इति अनुभवतः - This is (realized) through our daily experience.

What is the perfect example, in our experience? In the three avasthaas – jaagrath, svapnaa and sushupthi - the ahamkaaraa is variable; but, if we equate the waker, dreamer and sleeper, which we quite often do – i.e. we refer to the same individual, including oneself, as 'awake', as one who had dreams and as one who had sound sleep etc. - the equation can take place only through the awareness of the non-variable chith amsaa. Otherwise, the waker cannot refer to his dreamer state as 'I' – he should refer to himself in the dream state, as 'that dreamer', in the third person. But, it is common knowledge that an individual, in the jaagrath avasthaa, always refers to his/ her dreams, as "I dreamed". The very fact that the 'waker' and the 'dreamer' are equated, indicates, that something different from both the 'waker' and the 'dreamer', but inherent in both, is being referred to. That something, referred to, is the 'awareness' component. While the body/ mind/ senses/ thoughts in the waking and dream stage are totally different, what is common is the chaithanyam.

- व्यवस्थापनाय - To assert this saakshi or to turn our attention to this saakshi,
- आह - the following verse is presented.

Chapter II: Verse 78 –

प्रमाणतन्निभेष्वस्या नोच्छित्तिर्मम संविदः।

मत्तोऽन्यद्रूपमाभाति यत्तत्स्यात्क्षणभङ्गि हि ॥ ७८ ॥

My Consciousness knows no cessation in all the valid modes of knowledge and also whatever else merely appears as valid knowledge. If anything appears as related to me and other than myself, then it may be transient and momentary.

Sureswaraacharya says: "In and through the changing/ variable thoughts, there is the changeless Consciousness, because of which, the inert thoughts are converted into live experiences".

Generally, Consciousness the five features of Consciousness are said to be:

- (1) Consciousness is not a part, product or property of the body.
- (2) Consciousness is an independent entity which pervades and enlivens the body.
- (3) Consciousness is not limited by the boundaries of the body.
- (4) Consciousness continues to survive / exist even after the death of the body.
- (5) But, the Consciousness surviving the death of the body is not accessible (available for transactions) because of the absence of the body-medium.

In the context of this verse, these five principles have to be applied, replacing the word 'body' with the word 'thoughts', as below:

- 1) Consciousness is not a part, product or property of any thought.
- 2) Consciousness is an independent entity, which pervades every thought and converts every thought into an experience i.e. makes the thought 'live'
- 3) Consciousness is not limited by the boundaries of thoughts; thoughts have locations; Consciousness does not.
- 4) Consciousness continues to survive even when the thoughts end and therefore, even after the experiences end along with the thoughts causing the experiences.
- 5) But, the surviving Consciousness is not available for a specific experience, because it requires the medium of 'thoughts' ; the surviving Consciousness continues, even when the thoughts and experiences end, thought it is not objectifiable.

- प्रमाण तन्निभेषु - (सत्सु उच्छिन्नेषु) When varieties of thoughts (come and go),

The words "Ucchinneshu" and "sathsu", meaning "subsiding" and "arising" respectively, are supplied, for easier understanding. Alternately, the word "gathaagatheshu", meaning the same, can also be supplied. "Varieties of thoughts" would also include "varieties of experiences".

Pramaanam - (in this context) jnaana vrutthaya: / varieties of knowledge, which take place in the form of thoughts, when the various pramaanams are operated. When chakshu pramaanam is operated, roopa vrutthi results. So also rasa vrutthi, ghandha vrutthi etc. result, when the respective pramaanams (tongue, nose etc.) are operated. The vrutthis are referred to, here, as pramaanam.

Thannibham - similar to that (i.e. similar to jnaana vrutthaya:).

The implied reference by this usage (thannibham) is to "other vrutthis similar to jnaana vrutthaya:, such as samsaya (doubts) vrutthi:, viparyaya (wrong understanding) vrutthi:, moha (delusion) vrutthi: etc." Samsayam, viparyayam and moham are not jnaanam and therefore, cannot be included in the meaning of pramaanam. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya, desiring to include all varieties of thoughts, uses the term 'pramaana thannibheshu', referring to all varieties of thoughts.

- उच्छिति(अस्ति) न : - either departure or arrival (is) not there,

Ucchitthi: - the literal meaning is naasam (destruction); in this context, may be taken, as denoting 'arrival and departure'.

- अस्या :मम संविदः - for this non-variable component saakshi (the Awareness) of mine.

Thoughts go away and experiences end, temporarily in sleep and more permanently during maranam; but, the end of experiences is not the end of saakshi-chaitanyam.

But, once it is said that "Consciousness endures (the destruction/ erasure of thoughts)" a problem arises. The seeker tends to sit in meditation, because, quite often, the seeker forms a strong and firm but, wrong opinion that saakshi will 'come' only in meditation and after 'removal' of thoughts. He will strive to remove all the thoughts and 'look for' the Consciousness.

Sureswaraacharya is anxious to warn the student against this tendency. He, therefore, uses the adjective 'mama' for the saakshi, stressing "I, the invariable component is my real nature. Allow Ahamkaaraa to come and go – as, in any case, it will. Do not claim ahamkaaraa as yourself. Let ahamkaaraa be only a medium for transaction- but, not you yourself".

मत्त :अन्यत् रूपं आभाति - Whatever experience, other than the non-variable enduring 'I', appears

'Roopam' means entity. 'Anyath roopam' means 'any other entity'. In the word roopam, are included the physical body, the mind, the thoughts, the emotions and the individuality. 'Mattha: anyath' - 'anything else other than 'me'', which is the variable component of the word 'aham'.

- यत् तत् - that variable component
- क्षणभङ्गि स्यात् - is fleeting / changing in nature.

The physical body of any individual undergoes changes all the time; on a medical analysis, it can be confirmed that, over time, every component continuously undergoes decay; and, that, the cells get replaced as a continuous process. Under the circumstances, if an individual claims that his present 'I' is the same as his past 'I' of twenty years earlier, the 'equation' that is made, cannot be at the body / physical level; since every cell, over the years, had got replaced. Even so, one continuous 'I' is being recognized and that continuous 'I' is the saakshi chaithanyam.

'Kshana bhanghi' means 'quickly perishing'; kshanam bhanjyathe ithi kshana bhanghi.
Bhangha: means naasa: |

"Take the word 'I'; remove the variable components; turn your attention to the non-variable component, which is always available as 'I'; that 'I' is the saakshi – the real aathmaa' - is the message of this verse.

Chapter II: Verse 79 –

उत्पत्तिस्थितिभङ्गेषु कुम्भस्य वियतो यथा ।

नोत्पत्तिस्थितिनाशास्स्युर्बुद्धेरेवं ममापि च ॥ ७९ ॥

Just as space (i.e. ether) remains unalterably the same through the origin, subsistence and destruction of the pot, even so the origin, subsistence and destruction of mental operations do not enter into my being.

The Aachaaryaa conveys this with an example. He compares ahamkaaraa (consisting of the sareerathrayam endowed with chidhaabhaasa, the borrowed Consciousness - in other words, the live, sentient sareerathrayam, which has got three layers viswa, thaijasa and praagnyaa) to a pot. Just as a pot undergoes wear and tear, by usage, this three-layered ahamkaaraa also undergoes wear and tear i.e. the ahamkaaraa is proved to be 'variable'. And, Sureswaraachaaryaa compares the non-variable component, chaithanyam, to the akaasaa within the pot.

This concept can be used for meditation also: "'I' am the 'space' and ahamkaaraa is the 'pot' around me. And, 'I', the space, is, all the time, effortlessly available as 'aham'; the other components (of `aham'), on the other hand, are undergoing change constantly, similar to the pot which has got uthpatthi, (because of the 'pot-maker'), sthithi and laya. In the context of aham and ahamkaaraa, the 'pot-maker' is Isvara. "Brahma ena kulaalavath niyamitha:" - "Brahma, similar to a potter, has made this pot (our body) according to (our own) karma" , Barthurhari says in his Vairaaghya Sathakam.

This ahamkaaraa, may be slowly, but, surely, is fading away; on the other hand, 'I', the saakshi which enlivens the ahamkaaraa does not have uthpatthi, sthithi, bhangha: etc.

This is a beautiful verse, which can be used for meditation.

- यथा - Just as,
- कुम्भस्य उत्पत्तिस्थितिभङ्गेषु - (even) when there are the rise, existence and destruction of the pot,

Uthpatthi: – emergence; sthithi - existence – bhangha: - naasa: (destruction).

(An interesting Tamil song runs: "Nandavanatthil ore aandi naalaaru maathamaaik kuvanai vendi kondu vanthaan oru thondi" – in which the literal meaning of the word thondi is mud-pot and the implied meaning is the human body, which "mud-pot", unfortunately, most of us do not know how to make use of. This "mud-pot", the 'body', should be used only for one purpose - to claim "'I' am the pot-space and not the pot". Ironically, to make this claim that "'I' am the pot-space and not the pot", I need the "pot". But, instead of using the body-pot for this purpose of claiming "'I' am the pot-space", we pamper or misuse the body, to which fact, the song points out, by concluding the verse as "athaik kooththaadik kooththaadip pottu udaithaandi").

वियतः (न) - for the space inside the pot, there is no change,

Viyath - space / sky / ether / atmosphere.

- एवं अपि च – in the same manner,
- बुद्धेः (उत्पत्तिस्थितिनाशेषु) - when the ahamkaaraa is constantly appearing and disappearing (in the forms of viswa, thyjasaa and praagnyaa daily and in the forms of baalyam, kaumaaram, youvanam, jaraa etc. throughout one's life),

Buddhi: - to be understood as ahamkaaraa, in this context.

Ahamkaaraa's temporary naasam takes place during sushupthi and maranam. In sleep, one does not have individuality, but, the invariable 'I' continues, the proof being (as already mentioned), one claims "Yesterday's I, is to-day's I". This shows that, the continuity of saakshi does not require the ahamkaara's deliberate effort / invocation. This is called svayam prakaasa: | Saakshi's invocation does require ahamkaara as a medium, but its continuity does not require ahamkaara. Going back to the example earlier cited, the experience of the light (on any object) does not require one's deliberate effort ; to express it differently, without one's deliberate effort, the light on an object in front is 'experienced'; but, to 'talk' about the 'experienced' light, one needs to put in effort i.e. ahamkaara must turn its attention to the light. In the same manner, while saakshi'experience' is continuous, 'invocation' of saakshi requires ahamkaara.

मम उत्पत्तिस्थितिनाशा :न स्युः - 'I' do not have the three (uthpatthi sthithi naasaa:).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 80:

सुखदुःखतत्संबन्धानां च प्रत्यक्षत्वान्न श्रद्धामात्रग्राह्यमेतत् ।

This need not be admitted on mere faith; it is a matter of direct experience, that pleasures, pains and the relation to them do not pertain to the Self.

The Achaaryaa introduces the 80th verse, in which verse, he further introduces a technical point.

The technical point is : "Whenever you talk about any relationship, you are, in effect, talking about two entities having the relationship, because a relationship is always vidhishta: , which word indicates 'it exists in two entities'. This aspect is analyzed in detail, in tharka saasthraa. There are certain properties which are eka draviya nishtaa and there are certain other properties which are always dravya dvaya nishtaa. But, whenever a 'relationship' is talked about, the 'relationship' requires two entities. In other words, sambhandha jnaanam requires sambhandhi dvaya jnaanam. One can never talk about a sambhandhaa, without the knowledge of sambhandhee (two sambhandhis). One should have the knowledge of both sambhandhis, if one wants to talk about the sambhandham between the two. Even if one of them is not known about, one cannot talk of a 'relationship'. For example, if one wants to talk of Rama's 'relationship', the other member has to be necessarily introduced – when Dasaratha is introduced, the relationship is 'father and son'; if Lakshmana is introduced, the relationship is 'brother and brother'; if Sitha is introduced, the relationship is 'husband and wife'. Sambhandha jnaanam requires sambhandhi dvaya jnaanam - to express it differently, sambhandhi dvaya jnaanam is the prerequisite for sambhandha jnaanam."

Sureswaraacharyaa, therefore, argues: "If sambhandhaa is the object of knowledge, then the sambhandhi dvayam also should be objects of knowledge. And, therefore, whenever one talks of a sambhandhaa, three objects are referred to – sambhandhaa, sambhandhi 1 and sambhandhi 2. But, 'I', the subject, am different from all the three".

Sureswaraachaaryaa further argues: "When a person says 'aham dhu:khee' (I am sorrowful), in this statement, a relationship is talked about. The relationship talked about, is 'possessor-possessed'. For this relationship, two sambhandis are required. Who are the sambhandhis, in this context? 'aham' is one sambhandhi; dhu:kham is another sambhandhi; and the 'relationship' is the 'possessor-possessed' relationship between the two. 'aham' is an object of knowledge; 'dhu:kham' is an object of knowledge; the relationship between the two is the third object of knowledge. All these three are objects; saakshi, on the other hand, cannot be and is not any one of them. 'aham' is 'ahamkaaraa'. There is absolutely no relationship between saakshi and dhu:kham".

87. Chapter II, Verse 80 and 81 (23-02-2008)

Sureswaraacharya is continuing with the topic of saakshi-ahamkaara viveka: He is spending a lot of time on this topic, because discerning the saakshi distinctly from ahamkaara requires special observation.

Saakshi is not a particular object, which can be exclusively experienced at a particular time. If there is a possibility of exclusive saakshi experience, at a particular time/ place or under certain given conditions, the Vedhaanthic guru only needs to explain that conducive time/place and those conditions to the student, guiding the student to that particular time/place and those conditions, to enable the student to get the exclusive experience of the saakshi; the guru would also be able to confidently claim, that, he has himself experienced the saakshi exclusively, at that particular time / place and under those conditions ; and, based on the guru's own experience, the guru can give a description of such time / place and conditions, to enable the seeker/ student to have exclusive experience of the saakshi.

Unfortunately, there is no exclusive saakshi experience ; saakshi experience is invariably mixed up with ahamkaara experience; therefore, the seeker should use discrimination to discern the saakshi, which is always mixed with ahamkaara – like certain pictures in which the artist intentionally draws a hidden object , in and through another explicit object. The picture may seemingly / superficially be that of a forest or a river, but amidst the trees / river there will be a hidden form of a deity or a popular leader. The hidden form has to be carefully 'discerned' amidst the explicit object in the picture. The viewer of the picture may initially miss the hidden form; but, if and after the hidden form is pointed out to him, by another individual, every time the picture is viewed, the hidden form is seen as effortlessly as the explicit object is seen. In the same manner, using the ahamkaara anubhava alone, the saakshi anubhava, which is available all the time, has to be 'discerned'.

Generally, three experiences are introduced to make this 'discernment' easier:

- (1) the present ahamkaara experience - the varthamaana ahamkaara anubhava-, which is 'self awareness' with present attributes
- (2) the past ahamkaara experience - the bhootha ahamkaara anubhava - which is, again, 'self-awareness', with past attributes, the word bhootham meaning the 'past'
- (3) the "experience of the equation of the past 'I' and the present 'I'" - the varthamaana-bhootha-ahamkaara-aiykya-anubhava. This 'equation'/ experience is very commonly expressed in day-to-day conversations; for example, in saying "I attended the class yesterday; I am attending the class to-day"; where the 'past' and the 'present' are connected, it is ahamkaara-dvaya-eikyaa-anubhava. The word 'eikyam', in this context, means 'equation' (of the past and present).

The guru asks the student to study the meaning of the word 'I', based on these three anubhavaas, pointing out, that the vaachyaartha, the primary or literal meaning of the word 'I', cannot be taken for the purpose of eikyam, because the past ahamkaaraa had one set of attributes and the present ahamkaaraa has a different set of attributes and an equation between the two cannot obviously be made.

The 'equation' requires 'dropping' of the past attributes and also of the present attributes.

Of course, the attributes cannot be physically dropped, since the ahamkaaraa is always subject to some attributes or other - past attributes or present attributes or future attributes. The 'dropping' has to be done only intellectually / cognitively. When one thus cognitively distances oneself from the past attributes (desa, kaalaa etc.) of the past ahamkaaraa and the present attributes of the present ahamkaaraa, the only common feature left and available is the 'self-awareness'. This cognitive dropping of the attributes has to be done, by applying, what is technically termed, bhaaga thyaagha lakshanaa – taking the soham-prathyabhignyaa-anubhava: | 'Sa.' (in this term) means 'that (past) ahamkaaraa' and 'aham' means 'this (present) ahamkaaraa' | The past and present attributes, which are only incidental, should be dropped by applying bhaaga-thyaagha-lakshanna, and the remaining 'self-awareness' should be discerned. This nirguna (attributeless / attribute eliminated) 'self-awareness' should be understood as saakshi and later, the seeker should be able to claim "aham saakshi asmi".

But, ironically, while this statement "aham brahma asmi", has to be made by the present ahamkaaraa only, when making the statement, the ahamkaaraa, by the word 'aham', refers only to the continuous 'self-awareness', rid of all attributes - past, present and future. The kaumaaram, youvanam, jaraa etc., in the well-known Bhagavadh Githa Sloka (Verse 13 – Ch. II) are the changing attributes – vyaavruttha anubhavaa., while the anuvruttha (uninterrupted) 'self-awareness' is the saakshi |

This is the major struggle involved, in Vedhaanthic study. If the seeker grasps this, he is saved (from samsaaraa).

Once the seeker has done the saakshi-ahamkaara-viveka, using this prathyabhignyaa-anubhava-vicharaa (soham-anubhava-vicharaa), thereafter, he should go to the scriptures to know more about the saakshi. Sakshi-ahamkaara-viveka: (discrimination between saakshi and ahamkaaraa) does not require saasthra pramanam; it can be arrived at, by reasoning.

But, to know about the nature of saakshi, the student has to resort only to saasthra pramaanam.

And, the Saasthraas say "the saakshi is the real Subject; ahamkaaraa is, in reality, only an object". On this pramaanam, the ahamkaaraa is to be understood as belonging only to the anaathma prapanchaa; this ahamkaaraa consists of the body-mind chidhaabhaasaa or more prominently, the mind; the various types of sorrow, dhu:kham, are also anaathmaa.

The mind is anaathmaa; dhu:kham is anathamaa; anaathmaa mind and anaathmaa sorrow are connected by possessor-possessed sambhandhaa (relationship).

Sureswaraacharya says "(1) the mind (2) sorrow (the attribute) and (3) the relationship between the two, in the form of 'sorrowful' – all these three are the objects of 'I', the saakshi. 'I' am not the mind; nor the sorrow; nor the relationship between the two. But, 'I', the asangha aathmaa, directly and changelessly, illumine the changing mind, the changing sorrow and the changing sambhandhaa".

But, unfortunately, instead of stating "my mind is sorrowful / miserable", one tends to mistake one's mind as "aham", and makes the statement "I am miserable". This is what the Achaaryaa points out, in this portion.

- सुखदुःखतत्संबन्धानां च – The happiness, the pain and their relationships (to the mind or ahamkaaraa),

Sukham means happiness and, in this context, refers only to the "reflected happiness/ the temporary experiential happiness (pleasure), that belongs to the mind / the prathibhimbhaanandaa", and not to the bhimbhaanandhaa, which is 'my' svaroopam. This temporary experiential pleasure (the prathibhimbhaanandaa) has gradations also – "thasya priyam eva sira:; modho dakshina: paksha:; pramodha utthara: paksha:" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Brahma valli - paragraph 6) - all belonging to anaathmaa

- प्रत्यक्षत्वान् - all these three, clearly being objects of experience (of the saakshi, the changeless / anuvruttha Self-awareness),

But they (the mind, the sorrow and the relationship between them) are such 'intimate' objects, that, they are mistakenly included in the Subject; a mundane example is a pair of spectacles, which, though very clearly known as an 'object', once in use, is totally identified with the user and is almost looked upon as the 'subject'.

And, therefore:

- एतत् - this fact (that 'I' am the saakshi 'Subject', different from (1) the mind (2) the sorrow and (3) the relationship between the two)
- न श्रद्धामात्रं - is not a matter just to be believed (but is a crystal-clear fact , directly experienced and to be understood as such).

The statement "I am sorrowful" will only mean that "I am aware of the mind-object, which is sorrowful" or the statement "I am depressed" will only mean "I am aware of the depressed mind". Swami Dayandandaji remarks "Vedhaantic logic and worldly logic are diagonally opposite". Worldly logic is: "I experience sorrow; therefore, I am sorrowful"; whereas, Vedhaantic logic is: "I experience sorrow and therefore I am not sorrowful".

The problem is, that, in general, an individual is not possessed of sufficient vairaghyam and jnaanam, to make this bold claim; and, that is why, Vedhanthaa advises consistent and systematic study - vichaaraa - sravana-manana-nidhidhyaasanaani - so that equanimity of mind will be automatic and natural. Verse 22 – Chapter XIV, of the Bhagavadh Githa runs "Prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha mohameva cha Paandava | Na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaangshathi" – "Oh! Arjuna! He (one who has transcended the three gunaas) does not hate the brightness resulting from sathva guna, the activity resulting from rajo guna and the delusion resulting from thamo guna, as they arise, nor does he yearn for them, as they withdraw".

"'I' am not the mind; mind is unpredictable / uncontrollable / unsustainable; while 'I' am the anuvruttha (uninterrupted) saakshi, not concerned with the mind" must become a firm conviction.

The Achaaryaa clarifies this fact further in the sloka 80 that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 80 –

सुखदुःखादिसंबद्धानं यथा दन्डेन दण्डिनम् ।

राघको वीक्षते बुद्धिं साक्षी तद्वदसंहतः ॥ ८० ॥

A man sees another holding a staff, though he is without one ; in the same way, the witness, though unconnected with what he sees, sees the mind characterized by pleasure, pain etc.

The idea in the sambhandha gadhyam is presented with an example.

- राघकः साक्षी – 'I' the saakshi, the Self-awareness, who proves (the existence of the inert mind) OR the self-evident saakshi

Raaghaka: means saadhaka:, and is a very significant adjective to saakshi – stressing the fact, that, 'the very existence of the inert mind is proved because of the self-awareful or evident saaksh'. The word ('raaghaka:') can also be interpreted as 'svayamprakaasaad' or self-evident.

- वीक्षते - perceives / experiences

But, it should be clearly understood that this 'perceiving' or 'experiencing' is not a willful action done by the saakshi. It only means "in 'my' (saakshi's) presence, the mind gets perceived / experienced / awared". Since the mind gets experienced in 'my' (saakshi's) presence, 'I' (saakshi) get the figurative name 'experienter'.

"I' 'choice'lessly / 'action'lessly / 'change'lessly / 'will' lessly perceive".

What do 'I' perceive? Three things.

- बुद्धिं सुखदुःखादिसंबद्धां - (I perceive) the mind (the 1st object); (I perceive) the pleasure / pain / jealousy / hatred / compassion / sorrow etc. (the 2nd object) and the relationship between the two (the 3rd object), Sukha dhu:khaadhi - the pleasure /pain / jealousy / hatred / compassion / sorrow etc.

"icchaa dvesha: sukham dhu:kham sangaatha: chethana dhruthi: ethath kshethram" – "desire, hatred, pleasure, pain, body-mind complex, sentiency, fortitude are all only kshethram" – Verse 7 – Ch. XIII – Shrimadh Bhagavadh Githa.

Mind is kshekthram; sorrow is kshekthram; their relationship is kshekthram. But, 'I' am kshethragnya: |

And, how do 'I' perceive these three?

- असंहतः - without any connection with any one of these three / asangha: san.

Just as the surya prakaasaa does not get wet by any body of water illumined by it and just as it is not scorched by any fire illumined by it, 'asangha: san aham veekshe' – 'I' perceive without any connection.

The Achaaryaa gives an example for this.

When a person makes a statement "dhandee gachchathi", he refers to a sanyaasi holding a dhandaa - a staff. (The word dhandee generally means a sanyaasi holding a staff.)

The sanyaasi, the staff that is held by him and his act of holding the staff – all these three put together is referred to, by the word dhandee; i.e. the word dhandee has three factors – the person (sanyaasi), the staff (dhandaa) and the connection between the two. But, obviously, the person who observes the sanyaasi and makes the statement, is none of the three – neither the sanyaasi, nor the staff nor the relationship between the two (the holder-held relationship); he is only an observer of all the three. He is asangha., free from all the three, which three come under 'observed' group.

The Achaaryaa says:

यथा दण्डेन दण्डिनम् (वीक्षते) तद्वत् - similar to (a person) observing another holding a staff, as a dhandee (i.e. as one who is holding a staff, though the observer himself does not have / hold a staff).

Just as in the example, the observer is not the dhandee, the dhandaa or the sambhandhaa between the two, but is only the asanghaa observer, sorrow is present in / possessed by, only the mind, but 'I' am myself not sorrowful. 'I' only watch the sorrowful mind; 'I' have no relationship with sorrow.

Therefore, if the question, "when am 'I' free from sorrow?" is raised, the response should be "when did / do 'I' ever have sorrow?". This knowledge / conviction is mokshaa. This knowledge reveals that 'I' am the nithya muktha aathmaa. And, therefore, it follows, that the very common statement and the very common query of a seeker "I have understood that I am the nithya muktha aathmaa; but, when will 'I' get mokshaa?" is totally unwarranted.

Anvayam of the verse: Yathaa (saakshi) dhandene (saha) dhandinam (asamhatha: san) veekshathe, thadhvath raaghaka: saakshee sukha dhu:khaadhi sambaddhaam buddhim asamhatha: (san) veekshathe /

Asamhatha: is the crucial word in the verse, meaning asangha: - i.e. "without being tainted by sorrow etc."

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 81 :

एतस्माच्च हेतोर्धियःपरिणामित्वं युक्तम् ।

For this additional reason, it is right to hold that the mind is subject to modification:

From this, we can get the corollary also. What is the corollary?

The dhandee is walking; therefore, dhandee is vyavruttha swarootpa: - i.e. of the nature of "arriving and departing"; not only does he "come and go", even when he is stationery in a particular place, there are changes in him - his stance, the way of his holding the staff etc. All kinds of modifications are there in the dhandee, but, those dhandee modifications cannot belong to the observer of the dhandee; in other words, the observer is asamhatha: / In the same manner, the raaghaka: asamhatha: saakshee watches the modifications of the mind / the emotions / the relationships between the two etc., but, itself does not have the emotions or the consequent changes. Ahamkaara: parinaami; aham avikriya: /

This is what the Achaaryaa points out (in this sambhandha gadhyam).

- एतस्मात् हेतोः - Because of this reason only,
- धियः परिणामित्वं - (the fact) that the mind is subject to modifications
- युक्तं - is logical.

Mind will be subject to modifications; because mind is associated with emotions, emotions are associated with the world and the world is constantly changing.

Expressing this in the reverse manner: the world is changing; objects, people and situations change; therefore, the emotions, based on the changing world, are bound to change; and the mind, associated with emotions, also, suffers changes.

Anaathmaa mind is exposed to anaathmaa world; Indriyaani indriyaartheshu, gunaa: guneshu varthanthe (as the Lord pointed out in the Bhagavadh Githa). The interaction between the anaathmaa mind and the anaathmaa world is inevitable. Therefore, emotions are also inevitable. The changing world produces changing emotions; which, in turn, cause changes in the mind. And, in addition to the world thus changing the mind, past karmaas and vaasanaas also (which are again anaathmaa) affect the anaathmaa mind. The changing moods of the mind, such as optimism or pessimism, enthusiasm or lack of it etc., when they do not have any apparent cause, are results of the karmas and vaasanaas only. Age also influences the emotions and therefore, the mind. Mind is thus subject to various influences, which are all anaathmaa. The Achaaryaa warns: "Let the mind be subject to such influences; but, remember the fact, that, you are the 'witness' of the mind and not the mind".

Matter is subject to vikaaraa (and mind is matter).

“Naanya: gunebhya: karthaaram yadhaa dhrashtaanupasyathi gunebhyascha param vetthi madhbhaavam sa: adhigacchathi” - “When the seer finds the doer to be none other than the Gunaas and knows the Self, which is beyond the Gunaas, he attains My nature” declares Lord Krishna (in verse 19 – Ch. XIV of the Bhagavadh Githa).

In fact, the whole of Chapter XIV of the Bhagavadh Githa, is conveying the idea, that the mind is subject to the three Gunaas. While we do have some control over the mind, we do not have total control. Therefore, we have to, sometimes, helplessly watch the effects of the world on our emotions and our mind.

This fact that, the mind is subject to modifications, is further explained in the following verse 81.

Chapter II: Verse 81 –

येनैवास्या भवेद्योगः सुखकुम्भादिना धियः ।

तं विदन्ती तदैवान्यं वेत्ति नातो विकारिणी ॥ ८१ ॥

A mind may be associated at a particular time with pleasure or a pot. Now the mind cognizing these, cannot, at the very same moment cognize anything else, Therefore, the mind is ever-changing.

The gist of the verse (i.e. what Sureswaraachaaryaa says in this verse) is : “Since all the experiences are mutually exclusive, you can have only one mental experience at a (given) time; therefore, mental experiences are always in the form of a continuous flow ; you can never have multi-experiences simultaneously”.

When an observer sees a pillar, “pillar-experience” is taking place and the observer cannot have “man-experience” simultaneously. Every single experience excludes all other experiences; therefore, if an individual is having many experiences, they can only be and are ‘sequential’ or ‘flowing’. ‘Experiences’ cannot be simultaneous.

What is the implication of the statement of this fact? It is: “Because the experiences are sequential, mind must be undergoing ‘change’ (vrutthi parinaama:), corresponding to the flow of the sequential experiences”.

Sureswaraachaarya says: “Therefore ahamkaara: - the mind – is parinaami; whereas, ‘I’, the saakshi, ‘watches’ the parinaamam, without itself undergoing the parinaamam. If ‘I’ also undergoes parinaamam, (i.e. if the present ‘I’ is different from the past ‘I’) ‘I’ cannot claim, that ‘I’ had the past experience and the same ‘I’ is currently having the present experience – the equation cannot be made at all”.

- अस्याः धियः - For this mind,

The use of the word 'asyaa:' (meaning 'this') is significant. The Achaaryaa is keen to have the student distant himself from the mind and not claim his mind itself as 'I'.

- योगः भवेत् - when there is sambhandha: / relationship (at a given moment),
- सुखकुम्भादिना - with pleasant thoughts (internal objects) or with (external objects such as) pot etc.

Of course, connection with external object is always struck through one particular sense organ or other. "Naanachchidhra ghatodhara sthitha mahaadeepa prabhaa bhaasvaram jnaanam thu chakshuraadhikaranadvaaraa bahi: spandhathe" – "Indeed knowledge flashes through eyes and other sense organs, just like the bright light of a great lamp placed in a jar having many holes" (Quoted from verse 3 of Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram)

"Asyaa: dhiya: sukhakumbhaadhinaa (saha) yoga: (varthathe)" - "Mind may have association with internal pleasures (due to emotions or karmas / vaasanaas) or knowledge of external objects".

Sureswaraacharyaa says: At any particular time (1) mind (2) object and (3) their relationship are 'one unit'. Mind is fixed; object is fixed; and the emotion is also fixed.

- तं विदन्ती - that mind, which is experiencing the pleasure or the pot (at that specific time),
- तदा एव - at the same time (simultaneously)
- अन्यं न वेत्ति - does not (cannot) experience another object or another emotion.

For this to happen, i.e. if the mind has to experience another object or emotion, it should undergo a change and get connected with the different object, which may result in a different emotion. In short, at one time, the mind can have only one experience; and, at the time of that particular experience, other experiences are absent.

An example: When a father receives the news that his son has passed the examinations with creditable scores, he is elated. But, in a moment, the emotion of elation may give way to the emotion of anxiety- that the son should get a suitable employment. The 'passing of the examinations' caused happiness, while the thought of a suitable job causes anxiety. The 'switch' from happiness to anxiety is fast. The emotions change; as a consequence, the mind changes. But, the conviction of the seeker should be "I' am not this changing mind".

- अतः - Therefore (the conclusion is)
- (धीः) – the mind

- विकारिणी - (is) constantly changing

Obviously, one cannot physically see another's mind changing; but, from the changing experiences, the mental changes can be easily understood. Because the mind is thus ever-changing, it is referred to as kshanikaa buddhi: | "Deham praanam apeendriyaanapi chala buddhim cha"|

The Achaaryaa, in these portions, wants to emphasize that the mind is "changing"; later, he will arrive at the saakshi (the 'self-awareness') as 'not changing'.

88. Chapter II, Verse 81 to 83 (01-03-2008)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is engaged in thvampadavichaaraa, as a part of mahaavaakya vichaaraa / thathvamasi vichaaraa.

The main part of thvam pada vichaaraa is aathma anaathma viveka, the understanding of the real 'I', the aathmaa, separated from all the anaathmaa. Only when 'I', the aathmaa, is totally separated from anaathmaa, I am ready for claiming my oneness with Paramaathmaa. In other words, anaathmaa separation is a pre-requisite for Paramaathmaa claiming.

And, therefore, the saasthraas take lots of pains in segregating anaathmaa from aathmaa.

This segregation is done in two stages, by dividing anaathmaa into two. One is the external anaathmaa, which is outside the panchakosaas - which is outside the sareerathrayam - the external world. Separating the external anaathmaa is relatively easier and during this stage, this anaathmaa, the external world, is called dhrusya prapancha and 'I', the aathmaa, am called dhruk or dhrastaa. This dhruk-dhrusya-viveka is done as the first step.

After separating the external anaathmaa, which, as already indicated, is relatively simpler, we come to the next anaathmaa consisting of sareerathrayam or kosapanchakam. This sareerathrayam is also anaathmaa; is also paancha bhouthikam (made of the five elements); is also jadam (inert); is also savikaaram (subject to modifications) ; but, this anaathmaa is more intimate to 'I', the aathmaa and therefore, separating this anaathmaa from aathmaa becomes a tougher proposal.

One reason is that, the sareerathrayam is serving as the medium for 'I', the aathmaa, to experience the world. To understand this more easily, a pair of 'spectacles' may be considered as an example; even though the pair of spectacles is serving only as an instrument for perception and thus, only an object, albeit an intimate object, it becomes almost part of the Subject, the user of the spectacles. In the same manner, the anaathma-sareerathrayam also, though only an instrumental object, is very close to the Subject 'I', the aathmaa, because of its being the medium (in fact, the only medium) for the aathmaa to experience the external world. Because of this 'intimacy', segregation of the sareerathrayam from the aathmaa is tougher. A Vedhaanthic student may gear himself up to declare "I am not the body"; but, the statement, more often, will be only lip-deep; actual internalization of the fact is not easy.

The second reason for the difficulty in the segregation of the sareerathrayam from the aathmaa, is that, even though the sareerathrayam is also anaathmaa like the external world, it has got borrowed chidhaabhaasa permanently ('permanently' means 'throughout one's life'), unlike the external world, which is explicitly jadam.

(Incidentally, it should be remembered, that, aathmaa need not 'give' chidhaabhaasaa to the sareerathrayam; even without the 'will' of or 'wanton' effort on the part of aathmaa, the sookshma sareeram and kaarana sareeram 'borrow' – in fact, 'snatch' may be a more appropriate term - chidhaabhaasaa from aathmaa).

Because of this permanent chidhabhaasaa, the anaathma-sareerathrayam, is sentient exactly like aathmaa; and, therefore, it 'imitates' aathmaa. The world does not have the capacity to imitate the aathmaa, because it is explicitly jadam, whereas sareerathrayam imitates/ mimics aathmaa, because of its borrowed sentiency. Because of this reason also – that, it is sentient like aathmaa - segregating sareerathrayam from aathmaa is difficult.

Thus, the first uniqueness of sareerathrayam is its 'intimacy' with aathmaa; and, the second uniqueness is, its 'sentiency', similar to / in imitation of aathmaa.

There is one more factor; a third uniqueness, which, actually, is a result of the above two unique factors. Because the sareerathrayam anaathmaa is intimate to the aathmaa and is sentient like aathmaa, the individual invariably uses the word 'I' falsely for this sareerathrayam (instead of using it only for aathmaa, as he should be doing); the sareerathrayam is a pseudo-'I', also called ahamkaara: - the suffix 'kaara:' implying aabhaasam (reflection), the word ahamkaaraa implying "aabhaasam of aham". All through one's life, one falsely uses the word 'I' for this anaathma sareerathrayam. Thus, the third uniqueness of the sareerathrayam is, that, it is serving as aham – ahamkaara, pseudo 'I'.

The intimacy status, sentiency status and pseudo 'I' status are the three unique statuses of sareerathrayam, which statuses, the external world does not possess, even though the external world and the sareerathrayam are both only anaathmaa.

Therefore, saasthraas name these two separately – i.e., they coin two different names for them. The anaathma-prapanchaa (the external world) is called dhrusyam and the anaathma-sareerathrayam (the pseudo-'I', ahamkaaraa) is called saakshyam. There are many common features between the two, as already explained; both are anaathmaa / jadam / savikaaraa / paancha boudhikam etc. Then why differentiate between them? Because, one (the dhrusya prapanchaa) is external, not intimate to aathmaa, not sentient and is not the pseudo 'I', while, the other (sareerathrayam) is more internal, intimate to aathmaa, sentient and is the pseudo 'I'.

The aathmaa also is given two different names in the two different contexts.

“When I separate myself from the dhrusya prapancha and claim that I am the aathmaa different from the dhrusya prapanchaa, I am called dhrashtaa aathma”.

Thereafter, “when I separate myself from the saakshya anaathmaa (the sareerathrayam) and I claim I am the aathmaa different from the saakshya sareerathrayam, I am called saakshi”

The process of segregation – viveka: - is also categorized into two. Even though both are aathma-anaathma-viveka:, the first stage, “segregation from the external world” is called dhrashtaa-dhrusya-viveka: and the second stage “segregation from the more internal, intimate anaathma-sareerathrayam” is called saakshi-saakshya-viveka: | Obviously, the first stage is comparatively easier than the second, similar to disowning a neighbour being easier, than disowning a son. And, one’s sareerathrayam is even closer to one, than one’s son.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya is devoting more time for ‘saakshi-saakshya-viveka:’, (otherwise called ‘aathma-ahamkaara-viveka:’, otherwise called ‘the real ‘I’- pseudo ‘I’ viveka:’), than for ‘dhrashtaa-dhrusya-viveka:’ |

The Aachaaryaa highlights one main distinction between the real ‘I’ and the pseudo ‘I’. He points out: “The pseudo ‘I’ is a constantly changing ‘I’; the real ‘I’ is the continuous / non-changing ‘I’, obtaining in and through the changing ‘I’” and exhorts: “Therefore, may you focus your attention on the continuous ‘I’ which is available now, which was available in the immediate past and which was available in the distant past also. My experiences vary; even the experiencing thoughts vary; but ‘I’, the chaithanyam am the continuous entity.” Sureswaraacharya thus tries to show-case the continuous saakshi.

This topic, viz., saakshi-saakshya-viveka:, started from verse 58.

Saakshyam, as it was explained, consists of sthoala sareeram, sookshma sareeram and kaarana sareeram; and the most important component in the saakshyam is the mind. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya specifically talks of the mind and states “you are not the mind; mind is saakshyam; whereas, you are the saakshi”.

In verse 81, the Aachaaryaa says : “asyaa: dhiya: sukha kumbhadhinaa yoga: bhaveth tham vidhanthee thadaiva anyam vetthi natho vikaarini” implying “when the mind illumines a particular object / experience, it does not experience anything else; if it has to have a different experience, it has to undergo change”. This statement further implies: “but ‘I’ illumine the mind, without undergoing any change”.

(The word 'vidhanthee' is aarsha prayogam or poetic usage. The grammatically right word will be 'vidhathee').

The conclusion: Mind is pseudo-I, the changing I; while 'I', the aathmaa am the real 'I', the changeless 'I'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 82:

अस्याश्च क्षणभङ्गुरत्वे स्वयमेवात्मा साक्षी । न हिकूटस्थावबोधमन्तरेण बुद्धेरेवाविर्भावतिरोभावादिसिद्धिरस्ति ।

In the matter of the mind being ever-changing, the Self itself is the witness. Surely in the absence of an unalterable consciousness, the appearance and disappearance of the mind would not be matters of experience.

The pseudo-I, the mind, is 'changingly' experiencing the world; 'I', the saakshi, am 'changelessly' experiencing the mind.

And, Sureswaraachaarya says "the changes of the 'pseudo- I' are proved, because of the changeless saakshi only and also the proof for the very existence of the changeless saakshi, is, that, we are able to talk about the changing pseudo-I."

When an individual says "I was unhappy; now, I am happy" or "I was disturbed; now, I am calm" etc., such statements, which talk about the different conditions of the changing I, are themselves possible, only because of the presence of the continuous saakshi 'I', which witnessed and illumined the past unhappy / disturbed I, and which witnesses and illumines the present happy / calm I.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- अस्याः (बुद्धेः) च - Of this pseudo 'I' / the mind / the ahamkaaraa / the saakshyam,
- The feminine gender is used for the pronoun (asyaa:), since the noun buddhi: is feminine.
- क्षणभङ्गुरत्वे – in the matter of constant changing,

The pseudo 'I' is constantly changing along with every emotion; raaghee 'I' comes and goes away; dveshi 'I' comes and goes away; kaami 'I' comes and goes away; so also the krodhi 'I', the waker 'I', the dreamer 'I' etc. The ahamkaaraa is continuously changing and is therefore, called kshanabhangura: /

'Bhangha:' mean 'naasa:';

'Bhanguram' means 'dying' / 'fleeting' / 'having momentary existence';

'bhangura:' means 'naasavaar' / 'nasvara:';

'kshana bhangura:' means 'kshana naswara:' / 'one perishing every moment';

'kshana bhangurathvam' means the 'nature of perishing every moment' / 'nature of undergoing changes constantly'

What is the proof for the changing 'I'? Sureswaraachaarya says that the changing I, (the mind / ahamkaaraa), by itself, can never know the changing I, because the present I was non-existent in the past and will be non-existent in the future. The changing I cannot know the previous condition or the future condition. Therefore, there must be a changeless saakshi, which only can know the constantly changing I.

An example from the mundane world can be given. If three trains arrive at and depart from a station successively, the passengers in the trains can never talk about the arriving and departing trains; because, the passengers of the first train will not know of the arrival /departure of the second and third trains; the passengers of the second train will not know of the arrival/ departure of the first and the third trains and, the passengers of the third train will not know of the arrival /departure of the first and second trains. Only a non-passenger, a person not traveling in any of the train, but, standing on the platform (the saakshi, in this case) will know of the arrival and departure of all the three trains.

In the same manner, the viswa, thyjasa and pragnyaa conditions (of an individual) can be talked about only by thureeyam. Therefore,

- स्वयं एव (तुरीय) आत्मा साक्षी (भवति) - the Self itself is the witness.

What is the proof?

- कूटस्थ अवबोधं अन्तरेण – Without a changeless witness Consciousness

Kootastha – changeless; avabodha – witness; antharena – without (indeclinable).

- बुद्धे :आविर्भाव तिरोभावादि – the arrival and departure of the mind (and the thoughts)

Buddhi: - Mind / Intellect; aavirbhaava – arrival; thirobhaavaa – departure.

In the jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaas, buddhi arrives and in the sushupthi avastha, buddhi resolves.

- न हि सिद्धि :अस्ति - can certainly never be proved.

The arrival and departure of the mind, in the three avasthaas cannot be proved without the thureeya aathmaa- the avasthaathraya saakshi. And, that avasthaathraya saakshi is the real 'I', while the avasthaathrayam belong to the pseudo 'I'.

This the Aachaaryaa clarifies in the sloka that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 82 –

परिणामिधियां वृत्तं नित्याक्रमद्गुणत्मना ।

षड्भावविक्रियामेति व्याप्तं खेनाङ्कुरो यथा ॥ ८२ ॥

Just as a plant sprouts up only as pervaded by space, does the activity of the changing mind assume its sixfold forms of change, pervaded by the Self, constituted of eternal and non-successive awareness.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "the pseudo-I (the mind) 'changingly' perceives / experiences the external world, only because the pseudo-I mind is pervaded / illumined / enlivened by the changeless Consciousness/ the Real 'I' / the Awareness". But, the pseudo-I and the real 'I' are so intimately together, that, it becomes impossible to physically separate the mind and the Consciousness. In the case of dhrashtaa-dhrusya-viveka:, there is a clearly perceivable physical distance between the dhrashtaa and the dhrusyam, and therefore the segregation (viveka:) of the two can be physical and therefore easy. But, the saakshi-saakshya-viveka: (segregation of Consciousness and ahamkaaraa) cannot be physical but only cognitive and therefore, appears difficult.

- परिणामिधियां वृत्तं - The changing nature of the changing mind
Vruttham mean 'nature' / svaroopam and in this context, will imply 'changing nature', as it talks of the nature of the changing mind (parinaami dhe:)
- षड्भाव विक्रियां एति - goes through six types of modification,

Yethi – attains / praapnothi.

"Asthi, jaayathe, vardhathe, viparinamathe, apaksheeyathe, vinasayathi" are the six types of modification.

Like a wave rising and setting, the mind also rises and sets. And, when the mind undergoes these changes, every change is a form of its experience. Every change in the mind – minor or major - causes violent emotions, which disturb us in our life.

(It is interesting to note that the mental disturbances cause changes in the chemistry of the body, as modern medical science shows. The emotion 'mental depression' causes reduction of sodium in the body and vice versa; and the very common disorder 'blood pressure' also results from mental disturbances and also vice versa).

Vedhaanthaa says "all samsaaraa is nothing but some fluctuations in the micro-matter or macro-matter. And, 'I' pervade the fluctuating mind and empower the mind to undergo the fluctuations and go through the 'drama'."

"If I remember 'my' nature, all the fluctuations in the material body are only a 'drama'/ sport / entertainment; but, the moment I forget 'my' nature, life becomes a struggle" (Swamiji's repeated exhortation as the fifth capsule of Vedhaanthaa).

And, looking at life as a struggle, sometimes even results in loss of interest in living, and the resultant prayer for early death, to be relieved of the 'struggle'. But, ironically, the prayer for a long life to enjoy the perceived pleasures of life or the prayer for an early death to escape the perceived miseries in life are both samsaaraa, both results of ignorance. "I should not pray for either of the two, because 'I' do not have life; nor do 'I' have death; 'I' am the eka-nithya-muktha-aathmaa in which billions and trillions of minds are going through fluctuations and if, one among these minds (i.e. mine), gets depressed, why should it disturb me? After all, praarabhdtaa has to be gone through" should be the attitude of the informed seeker.

The mind goes through emotional fluctuations (shadbhaavavikriyyam yethi), while:

- व्याप्तं - pervaded
- आत्मना - by the (fluctuation-free) 'Self'.

Parinaamidhiyaam vruttham vyaaptham (sath) aathmaana - The mind undergoes fluctuations, pervaded by the Self.

Let the mind undergo fluctuations; why should 'I' worry about it; because 'I' am not affected. And, what type of 'I'?

- नित्यद्रुक् - ('I' am) the eternal witness (of the mind)
- अक्रमद्रुक् - ('I' am) the changeless (witness of the mind).

'I' am not a sequential observer; but, 'simultaneous', 'changeless' observer.

Again, it should be remembered, that the word 'observer' does not convey the message that 'I' am doing the action of 'observing' deliberately. It only means "in 'my' presence, the mind gets observed". From the point of the enlivened mind, 'I' am figuratively called 'observer'. 'I' am not an 'observer' in the literal sense of the word; 'I' am only a 'witness'.

"Nithya akrama dhruk aathmaa" is a compound word, meaning "the Self, which is the eternal , changeless witness".

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives an example – the best example. He says:

- खेन (व्याप्तः) अङ्कुरः यथा – similar to the seed pervaded by aakaasaa.

Kham – aakaasa; khen - by aakaasaa; the word 'vyaaptha:' is to be supplied for easier understanding.

Ankura: means a 'seed'. A seed has the capacity to undergo changes; it can become a sprout, it can become a plant and it can become a tree; these are all modifications, which are intrinsically there in a seed. But, all these are possible only because the seed has got a place of location, which we always take for granted. If we talk about any object, it requires a location. And, that location is called aakaasa: or space; the very existence of any object presupposes the space which is the locus of that object. And, where is this space? The space is all-pervading, which means, the space pervades the seed also.

The Achaaryaa says "the seed exists, because it has the location of space ; seed grows into a sprout because it has a location of space; in fact, seed exists and undergoes all modifications because of the one thing that pervades the seed and is the locus of the seed but which is taken for granted; that pervading/ locus factor is aakaasa:" | The Achaaryaa further points out " but, even though the seed exists because of space and even though the seed undergoes modifications because of space, the space itself does not undergo any one of the changes"

"I' am similar to the space - aakaasa samaana chaithanyam;" is the meditation required to be done by the seeker. "And, in 'me' and because of 'me', the mind exists, similar to the seed existing in space and pervaded by space ; and the mind which exists in 'me' and because of 'me' undergoes shadbhaava vikaaraa, which is called the play of emotions. Mind undergoes shadbhaava vikaaraa, existing in me and existing because of me". But there is a more crucial fact: "I' do not undergo any one of these fluctuations, even though they happen in 'me'".

"Just as the seed pervaded by aakaasaa undergoes changes, without bringing about any change in the aakaasaa, the mind pervaded by 'me', undergoes changes, without causing any change in 'me'" is the essence of this verse 82. In the well-known Githa verse (Ch. II – Verse 20) "Na jaayathe mriyathe vaa kadhaachith naayam boothva bhavithaa vaa na bhooya: ajo nithya: saasvatha: ayam puraana: na hanyathe hanyamane sareere", the word “ayam” can be replaced by the word “aham”, to suit the context in this portion. And, this thought should be dominant in the sub-conscience, when the mind goes through tribulations.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 83:

सत आत्मनश्चाविकारित्वे युक्तिः ।

The argument for the unchanging character of the Self is this:

That “‘I’, the Consciousness, do not undergo any change”, is regularly proved also by our experience. That “I am changeless” is not merely revealed by sruthi; it is not a matter to be believed based on sruthi vaakyam alone; but is something which is proved through our day-to-day experience. What is that day-to-day experience? The one who talks about the changing ahamkaaraa must be a changeless saakshi. This is what the Aachaaryaa says (in this portion).

- आत्मनः अविकारित्वे - With regard to the changelessness of saakshi,
- सतः - which is the real ‘I’ / which is the paaramaarthikaa ‘I’,

Satha: is adjective to aathmana: |

- युक्तिः च - there is proof also (presented in the following verse)

As earlier discussed, if one equates the past ahamkaara and the present ahamkaaraa, the equation must be only because of something inherent in the past and present ahamkaaraas. That inherent part is the saakshi; emotions are not inherent or intrinsic, because, past emotions need not be present now and present emotions need not have been present in the past. The very fact that emotions are subject to arrival and departure, indicates that they are only incidental. What is intrinsic is the chaithanyam part alone. That is why Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa declared: “Na me dvesha raaghau na me loba mohau madho naiva me naiva maathsarya bhaava: na dharmo na chaartha na kaamo na moksha: chidhaanda roopa: sivoham sivoham” (Verse 3 – Nirvaana Shatkam).

“‘I’ need not be free from emotions, because ‘I’ do not have emotions to be freed from”. If one has rightly understood the Vedhaanthaa philosophy, one will realize this fact; therefore, if a student makes a statement “I have understood the Vedhaanthaa; but, I am not free of emotions”, the statement will only show that, contrary to what he believes, he has not understood the philosophy at all. Proper understanding of the philosophy will lead to the conviction: “‘I’ do not have any emotion to be free of ; the emotions belong to the pseudo ‘I’; and of course, the pseudo ‘I’ can never be free from emotions. It is subject to emotional fluctuations”.

Verse 83 – Chapter II :

स्मृतिस्वप्नप्रबोधेषु न कश्चित्प्रत्ययो धियः।

द्वाशाऽव्याप्तोऽस्त्यतो नित्यमविकारी स्वयंद्रुशिः॥ ८३ ॥

Among remembrance, dream and awakening, not one presentational modification of the mind occurs unpermeated by consciousness and hence, consciousness in itself is abiding and changeless.

The Aacharyaa says "all the emotions which we are calling as samsaaraa, are really speaking not a problem of 'mine'; all the emotions and various states of experiences are conditions of the mind, having varieties of thought pattern".

The mind is akin to the seed and 'I', the aathmaa is akin to the aakaasa, in the seed-aakaasaa example cited.

- स्मृति – When there is remembering condition (of the mind),

Smruthi is a condition, of, not 'me', but the mind. (When the mind has got memory vrutthi, it is termed chittham.)

- स्वप्न - when there is dream-state (of the mind - again another condition only of the mind),
- प्रबोधेषु - (and) when there is the waking condition (also a condition of only the mind, not that of the aathmaa),

Only difference between 'waking mind' and 'dreaming mind' is that, the waking mind has got thoughts generated from external world, while 'dreaming mind' has got thoughts generated from internal vaasanaas.

The types of thoughts are different based on what triggers the thought; the triggering factors are different and the mind gets the different states - of remembering, dream or waking etc. (But, 'I' am not 'waking' or 'dreaming' or 'remembering'. 'I' do not go through any condition).

But, even though the thoughts (and consequently the mind) undergo modifications, they are always pervaded by 'me', the space-like Consciousness.

Sureswaraacharyaa wants to convey this message, that, the mind and every thought are pervaded by Consciousness. Instead of presenting it in positive language, he presents it in double-negative language. Instead of directly saying "every thought is pervaded" the Aacharyaa presents the idea as "no thought is un-pervaded by Consciousness".

"Dhiya: prathyayaa: dhrusaa vyaaptha:" – "the various thought modifications of the mind, which modifications are never uniform, are pervaded by the space-like Consciousness, which is the real 'me'" – is the message being conveyed by:

- न कश्चित् प्रत्ययः धियः - not one of these thought modifications of the mind
- दशा अव्याप्तः - is un-pervaded by Consciousness.

But, who am 'I'?

- स्वयंदृशि :नित्यं अविकारी - I, the Self, am ever changeless.

"The ever comfortable free aathmaa that 'I' am, let me never worry about liberation".

89. Chapter II, Verses 83 and 84 (08-03-2008)

As a part of anaathma-aathma-viveka, Sureswaraacharya is differentiating buddhi and aathmaa, the saakshi chaithanyam and points out that the buddhi alone serves as the knower, when it is pervaded by the saakshi chaithanyam. And, buddhi alone appears as different forms of experiences, when it entertains varieties of thoughts. Therefore, what we call as emotion, knowledge, memory, experiences, the three stages like waking, sleep, dream etc., are nothing but a series of experiences.

All experiences have two components – one is the thought component and the other is the Consciousness component. Consciousness, by itself, does not become an experience; thought, by itself, does not become an experience. Only when Consciousness and thought are together, an experience can result. And, in that experience, the specific nature / attributes/ guna of the experience as pleasure, pain etc., i.e., the quality of the experience, is determined only by the type of thought; whereas, the Consciousness pervading the thought does not have any specific nature. Even the arrival / departure of the experience belongs to the thought alone ; the Consciousness does not have even the arrival / departure nature. But, unfortunately, we look upon every experience as a stable unit, not recognizing that every experience has the two components - thought and Consciousness.

An example was already cited: when a student sees an object, say, the mike on the stage, he takes it as an unitary object experience; but, in the mike experience itself, there are two components, which fact goes unnoticed by the student – one is the 'mike' part and the other more powerful, important, necessary component is the 'light' part, which is spread over the mike but is taken for granted. The 'light' part is significant and therefore when the teacher turns the student's specific attention to the 'light' component, the student, in the mixture of the mike and the pervading light, should pay attention to the nirvikaara, niraakaara, mikeness-rahitha (mikeless) light.

"Similarly" Sureswaraacharya says "in every experience, you are aware of the thought, which determines the quality of experience; but, then, there is the 'awareness' also in that experience, which 'awareness', unfortunately, is taken for granted. The 'awareness' is the truth of the thought and in fact, the 'awareness' is 'you'".

"Smruthi svapna prabodheshu" (in verse 83 – Ch. II) implies "the passing experience-flow".

"na kaschith dhiya: prathyaya: dhrusaa avyaaptha:" literally means "no specific experience is unpervaded by Consciousness" or in effect means "every specific experience is a thought pervaded by Consciousness".

Dhrusaa – chaithanyena (nirvikaara, nirguna, asangha chaithanyena).

Atha: - Consequently (it is understood),

Svayamdhrusi: nithyam avikaaree- Consciousness is the changeless part (and thought is the changing part)

That enduring Consciousness alone is saakshi; that alone is the meaning of the word 'I'. "Baalyaadhisu, jaagradhaadhisu, sarvaasu avasthaasu" (Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram – Verse 7) the only constant part is chaithanyam. All the other physical attributes, emotional attributes and intellectual attributes are subject to arrival and departure. Non-arriving, non-departing, continuous factor is 'I am', in which 'I' is the chith and 'am' is the sath. Sath chith aathmaa is my real nature, which is called svayam dhrusi: (in this verse 83). Svayam dhrusi: means svayam prakaasa chaithanyam. Thought is known because of Consciousness; the converse statement, that, 'Consciousness is known because of thought' should never be made. In the 'mike' example given above, the mike is known because of light; but, it can never be said that light is known because of mike. Light is ever the illuminator and never the illumined. In the same manner, Consciousness is ever the 'experiencer' / 'illuminator' and never the 'illumined'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 84 :

एवं तावत्पराभ्युपगतप्रक्रियाप्रस्थानेन निरस्ताशेषविकारैकात्म्यं प्रतिपादितमुपपत्तिभिः। अथाधुना श्रौतीं प्रक्रियामवलम्ब्योच्यते ।

Thus, the unity of the Self, divested of all changes, has been set forth in terms of reason in the manner adopted by other schools. Now the argument is presented in accordance with the procedure of the sruthi:

This verse 84 is an 'aside' verse. The flow of the current discussion will be picked up from verse 85 again; in this verse (84) is an 'aside' note – a very important and very subtle note.

Sureswaraachaarya says "we have been saying that buddhi, the anaathmaa alone is the changing 'knower', the kartha, the boktha etc., by undergoing changes in the form of 'knowing' thought, 'doing' thought, 'enjoying' thought etc. Thus, anaathmaa has the attributes of 'knower'hood, 'doer'hood, change etc. All attributes including change belong to buddhi, the anaathmaa. Anaathmaa saguna:".

What is the purpose of this approach? The Aaachaaryaa explains: "This method of teaching is employed, so that all the attributes, 'knower'hood, 'doer'hood, 'enjoyer'hood, raaghaa, dveshaa, kaamaa etc. are all dumped on the buddhi, otherwise called ahamkaaraa, the anaathmaa. Once all the gunaas are, thus, transferred to anaathmaa, it can be established that "aathmaa nirguna: asthi"; that, "for the aathmaa, karthruthava guna: naasthi, bokthruthvam naasthi, pramaathruthvam naasthi, raagha: naasthi, dvesha: naasthi etc.; aathmaa nirguna: asthi" / (In a lighter vein, this is similar to one dumping all the household garbage on the road, so that the house can be free of garbage.)

"Transferring the attributes to anaathmaa" helps in establishing the "attributelessness of aathmaa".

"But" Sureswaraacharya says "this method of teaching is a 'compromised' method, borrowed from saamkyaa philosophy". In saamkyaa, a clear differentiation is made between aathmaa and anaathmaa, using the names purushaa and prakrithi, for aathmaa and anaathmaa respectively. And, in the form of purusha-prakrithi-viveka: (differentiation between purushaa and prakrithi), the teaching is done in saamkyaa, that all attributes/gunaas belong only to the prakrithi and that the purushaa is asangha: | "But" Sureswaraacharya again says "this is not the teaching of the Upanishads; this teaching is not srouthi prakriyaa" |

This is because there is a problem in this prakriyaa, (the problem had already been referred to, earlier, in a different context, in the course of these Naishkarmya Siddhi classes), which problem is as follows : Since, in the course of establishing this view, that prakrithi (anaathmaa) is saguna: and purushaa (aathmaa) is nirguna: - ahamkaaraa is samsaari and aathmaa is asamsaari etc. - , the teacher repeatedly talks about prakrithi and purushaa or aathmaa and anaathmaa - the student comes to the conclusion that there are two distinct things. He asks: "I have realized that aathmaa is asamsaari. But, how can 'I', the ahamkaaraa, become free from samsaaraa?" Thus, he ends up in dvaitham. And, in dvaitham, there are further problems – the worst problem being that aathmaa becomes an isolated, remote entity. "The world, the body, the mind are different and 'I' am different" becomes a strong conviction. And, once duality is accepted, body becomes real, mind becomes real and problems become real. Even after Vedhaanthic study, the student will consider the removal of mental problems as a serious task which he has to do. He might think: "I have completed my study of Vedhaantha. Hereafter, my struggle in life is, that, since I have a mind, which is anaathmaa and which has got worries/problems, I have to use Vedhaantha to remove the 'real' problems of the 'real' mind'. So what saadhnaas should I resort to, for this purpose? "

The student may only change his earlier language. He may now (i.e. after Vedhaanthic study) ask: "I have no problem as aathmaa; that I have understood. Now I have problems as anaathmaa; so, what type of saadhanaas / special nidhidhyasanam, should I do, to remove the anaathmaa problems?" Aathma-anaathma-viveka-vichaara may lead to this misperception / misconception. This is the fundamental flaw in aathmaa-anaathma-viveka.

Therefore, even as we use this prakriyaa in the initial stages of Vedhaanthic study, we should be aware of this deficiency in this prakriyaa.

And, if this is a deficient prakriyaa, then what should be the right approach? Sureswaraacharyaa says: "You should never accept buddhi as a separate / second entity at all. The moment you accept anaathmaa / ahamkaaraa/ chidhabhaasa etc. as separate entities and keep on distancing yourself from them – the more you distance yourself from them, the more reality you are giving them. Therefore, though, initially you may apply saamkya prakriyaa, you should really understand that buddhi is not a separate entity; but, aathmaa alone is appearing as anaathmaa . Really speaking, aathmaa is not different from anaathmaa; if aathmaa is different from anaathmaa, there will be duality. Therefore, we should say that anaathmaa is an appearing lower version of aathmaa itself; just as I, the 'waker' myself, am appearing as 'dreamer' in a lower plane of reality, 'I' alone am appearing as the body; 'I' am the seeming body; 'I' am the seeming mind ; 'I' am the seeming thought; and 'I' am the seeming 'knower' also".

To repeat: If you say "mind is the 'knower'; 'I' am not ; 'I' am only the saakshi" the problem of duality results, there being two entities, the 'knower' mind and the saakshi chaithanyami. To avoid this problem of duality, instead of saying that the mind alone is the 'knower', i.e., instead of saying "mind is 'knower'; I am the saakshi", you can probably learn to say: "I am the 'knower' mind also; I am the saakshi also". But, this results in the original problem (of samsaaraa) returning i.e. if I consider myself as the 'knower' mind / ahamkaaraa, I become a samsaari. Therefore (to get over both these problems) the Achaaryaa says "add an adjective 'seeming' to the 'knower'hood etc."

"I' am the real saakshi; 'I' am the seeming knower, seeming doer, seeming enjoyer and seeming samsaari. And, since 'I' am only a seeming samsaari, I do not have to seriously worry about the removal of samsaaraa" should be the attitude.

Thus, who is saakshi? 'I' am. Who is 'knower'? 'I' am. From paaramaarthaka dhrushti, I am saakshi and from vyaavahaarika dhrushti, I am 'knower'. The samsaaraa is only mithya samsaaraa; even when I am experiencing samsaaraa, I am free from samsaaraa.

For easier understanding, an example may be cited: "If you show an old group photograph in which you figure, to one of your friends, and ask him to identify you in the photograph, since your appearance has changed considerably over the years since the photograph was taken, your question invariably will be "where am I in the photograph?" and not "where is my picture?". The friend also understands your question, scans the photograph, identifies your figure and points out "this is you". You agree with his answer. Both you and your friend have not made any distinction between the real 'you' and your figure in the photograph. You have used the word aham, for the real 'you' and also for your picture and your friend has used the word 'you' for the real you and also for your picture. But, then, if, subsequently, the photograph wears out or gets destroyed, you do not say "I have worn out"/ "I have been destroyed"; similarly, if there are ten copies of the photograph, you do not claim that there are ten of 'yourself'. In such circumstances, you make a clear distinction between you and your picture and say "the photograph has worn out/ has been destroyed" or that "there are 10 copies of the photograph". You know that you have earlier used the word 'I' only figuratively for your picture. You are seemingly your picture; but, in reality, you are not".

What Sureswaraacharya says is similar to this. He says: "In reality, 'I' am saakshi the changeless one; but, in the vyaavahaarika plane, I am also ahamkaara. I am not ahamkaara, when I talk about my real nature".

And, just as the photograph has its utility, ahamkaara also has got utility. We use the picture, knowing fully well that the picture is not the real person. So is the ahamkaara useful in the vyaavahaarika plane.

The Aacharya says : "Aathmaa is the saakshi; aathmaa alone appears as buddhi / as the changing 'knower'; but, that changing knower does not make the original 'I' subject to change".

In srouti prakriyaa, there are no two entities as aathmaa and anaathmaa. Aathmaa alone is and that one aathmaa alone appears as anaathmaa. Therefore, initially you say "I am different from the world"; but, later, you claim "'I' alone am in the form of the world". "'I' am different from all" gives way to "'I' am all". This is Vedhaantha darsanam.

Therefore, the Aacharya says:

- एवं तावत् - In this manner,
- पर अभ्युत प्रक्रिया प्रस्थानेन - by temporarily adopting the course of the method of teaching by other schools, (the saamkyaa school of philosophy),

Prasthaana – course; prakriyaa – teaching; abhyupagama: - granting / accepting to be true / admitting. Para – the other; in this context, indicates saamkyaa philosophy.

In saamkyaa philosophy, purushaa-prakrithi-viveka is talked about; in Vedhaantha also, purushaa-prakrithi-viveka is talked about. The whole 13th chapter of the Bhagavadh Githa is dedicated to this topic, in which the Lord exhorts Arjuna "prakrithim purusham chaiva viddhi anaadhi ubhau ap" (verse 20 – Ch. XIII) – "May you know both prakrithi and purusha to be beginningless". "Consciousness" (purushaa) and "matter" (prakruthi) are repeatedly talked about, by the Lord, in this portion of the Githa.

But, there is a difference between saamkyaa and Vedhanthaa philosophies : saamkyaa starts with purushaa-prakrithi and ends with purushaa-prakrithi, whereas Vedhaanthaa starts with purushaa-prakrithi, but ends with purushaa alone; there is no prakrithi or matter, other than purushaa. And, what is that 'purushaa'? 'I' am that purushaa; 'I' appear as the body; 'I' appear as the world; 'I' appear as the 'knower'; 'I' appear as the 'known'. "Aham annam / aham annaadha: / aham lokakrith /" (Thaithireeya Upanishad – Bhrgu Valli).

Therefore, mokshaa is not 'escaping from the world'; if mokshaa is understood as / taken as 'escaping the world, by avoiding punarjanma', it would mean that the world is taken as 'real'. If one prays "I should not come back to this world again", it only means that one has wrongly understood mokshaa. A Vedhaanthic teacher, might start with saying "mokshaa is 'escaping from punarjanma'"; but, that statement is meant to serve only as an incentive to attract the seeker in the initial stages. Really speaking, this definition of mokshaa (that it is 'escape from punarjanma') is not approved by Vedhaanthaa, because, if one wants to escape from punarjanma in the world, that would mean, that, one is afraid of the world, which would further mean that one attributes 'reality' to the world. But, "as a Vedhaanthin, why should 'I' be afraid of the world, when it is 'I', who am appearing as the world, with 'my maayaa sakthi, for the purpose of pure entertainment? (the 5th Capsule of Vedhaanthaa, as enunciated by Swamiji)". Therefore, before a study of Vedhaanthaa, one may say "I do not want punarjanma"; but, if one makes the same statement after a thorough study of Vedhaanthaa, it will only show that one has not understood the import of the philosophy.

"Whatever happens in the world - including janma, mrithyu, jaraa, vyaadhi to my body - asanghoham, asangoham, sachchidaanandha svaroopoham" should be the conviction of a Vedhaanthin. Concern or worry about one's body, is as immature as the concern for one's photograph wearing off, about which photograph at least, one has no doubt at all , that, the photograph is mithyaa. (One should realize that one's body is also equally mithyaa).

In short, what, then, is mokshaa? The conviction: "I am neither worried about birth; nor death; all the changes are happening in the changeless 'me', which is ever free; I am not worried about the continuing process of the world phenomenon".

(The topic of 'mokshaa' and its misconception / right conception, elaborately discussed in the above few paragraphs, is only incidental.)

- निरस्त अशेष विकार ऐकात्म्यं – the unity of the Self, divested of all changes

Eikaathmyam - the non-dual nature (of aathmaa / saaksh); nirastha asesha vikaara— free from all modifications.

By saying it is anaathmaa which is saguna, we could establish aathmaa is nirgunaa. Therefore, we temporarily accept anaathmaa; but this acceptance is only temporary. Really speaking, there is no anaathmaa at all. "Brahma eva idham amrutham purasthaath brahma paschaath brahma dakshinatha: cha uttharena" – "All this in front is the immortal Brahman alone; Brahman alone is behind ; Brahman is on the right as well as on the left" (Mundaka Upanishad – II . 2 . 12).

- प्रतिपादितं - was established
- उपपत्तिभिः - by using the reasoning of dhruk-dhrusya-viveka.

By a compromise method of transferring all modifications to anaathmaa, we established that aathmaa is devoid of changes. This compromise method has an advantage and also a disadvantage. 'Finding a place/ locus for the transfer' is an advantage; the disadvantage is that, it leads to the thinking, that there is a second entity, apart from aathmaa.

A similar predicament, in a different context, is pointed out by Dayaananda Swami. He says, that, though the popular Nirvanaa Shatkam verse "Mano buddhi ahamkaara chitthaani naaham" is very useful for Vedhaanthic meditation, it has a terrible disadvantage also; because, even as the meditator says "I am not the mind, intellect, ahamkaara, chittham etc.", he is attaching a 'reality' value to these. Therefore, Dayananda Swami says, that, this meditation has to be supplemented by a further meditation: "'I' alone am appearing in the form of mano buddhi ahamkaaraa chitthani. They are 'my' own inferior manifestations. I am not worried about their existence. I do not want to 'escape' from them; in fact, there is no question of 'escaping', because, there is no second thing (apart from 'my' Self), from which I need to run away".

A Vedhaanthin should remove the 'running-away' mode of thinking. He should not pray for a long life nor for an early exit from the world, because, for a Vedhaanthin, "the whole life is only a 'drama' happening in 'me', without affecting 'me'; therefore, I am not threatened either by a long life or a short life". (On the other hand, we commonly observe, that, an ordinary samsaari, till he turns fifty, is anxious and eager to live a long life, but, once he turns fifty, tends to pray for an early painless death.)

The definition of Mokshaa is "no raagha-dveshaa towards life; no raagha-dveshaa towards death also". This is sroutha-moksha: /

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- अत अधुना - Now (hereafter in the sloka that follows),

This verse covers an 'aside' (incidental) topic only.

- श्रौतीं प्रक्रियां अवलम्ब्य - by taking recourse to the Vedhaanthic prakriyaa

This Vedhaanthic prakriyaa, of course, resembles saamkyaa. In fact, in the second chapter of the Bhagavadh Githa, Vedhaanthaa itself is called saamkyaa. The very name of the chapter is saamkhyaa yoga:/ But, there is a very important, fundamental difference (bedha), between the two philosophies. Saamkyaa is dvaitha darsanam, while Vedhaanthaa is advaita darsanam.

- उच्यते - (the following) is being said.

Chapter II: Verse 84 –

अस्तु वा परिणामोऽस्य दृसेः कूटस्थरूपतः ।

कल्पितोऽपि मृषैवासौ दण्डस्येवाप्सु वक्रता ॥ ८४ ॥

Let it be admitted that there is even modification ascribed to Consciousness. But, as Consciousness is absolutely changeless, the modification cannot but be unreal, like the seen crookedness in a straight stick placed in water.

Until now, it was said "I am the changeless saakshi; buddhi or the mind is the changing 'knower'". This was the statement being made till now. Now, Sureswaraachaarya says: "I am the changeless saakshi. 'I am the changing 'knower' also". Both statuses are attributed to 'me' only.

- अस्य दृशेः - For this saakshi chaithanyam,
- कूटस्थ रूपतः - which has got the changeless nature,
- परिणामअस्तु : - let there be modification.

Let Consciousness be considered as the parinaami pramaatha i.e., instead of attributing the changing 'knowerhood' to the mind, let it be attributed to the Self (aathmaa) itself.

So, what is the Vedhaanthic teaching? "I am the changeless saakshi; 'I am the changing 'knower'; 'I am the ahamkaara; 'I am the karthaa; 'I am the bokthaa'.

This gives rise to a doubt / question. How can 'I' be both, when the two are diagonally opposite? How can the opposite attributes 'changelessness' and 'change' co-exist in the same substance? How can this 'illogicality' be explained?

The answer: Opposite attributes can co-exist in one and the same substance, if they (the attributes) belong to two different 'orders of reality'. For instance, in the well-known rajju-sarpa example, the 'ropeness' and 'snakeness' can co-exist, 'ropeness' from vyaavahaarika dhrushti and 'snakeness' from praathibhaasika dhrushti. I am the 'waker'; I am the 'dreamer' also. Both 'wakerhood' and 'dreamerhood' can and do co-exist in one and the same person, because one is vyaavahaarikam and the other is praathibhaasikam. Similarly, 'I' am really an asamsaari; but, 'I' am playing the role of samsaari. The 5th capsule of Vedhaantha (as enunciated by Swamiji) runs: "When I remember my real nature, life is entertainment; when I forget my real nature, life is a struggle".

This is what the Achaaryaa says in this verse.

- कल्पितः अपि - Even when the 'knower' status is attributed to 'me', the 'saakshi chaithanyam' / even when the samsaari jeevathmaa status is attributed to 'me', who, (in reality) is the paramaathmaa

Kalpitha: - attributed.

Even under such a situation, I am not worried. Why?

- असौ मृषा एव - this (samsaari status) is of the 'lower order of reality' only,

Asau - this (meaning the samsaari status); mrushaa – mithyaa.

This, of course, can also be expressed as "Saakshi is 'my' higher order of reality". The essence of the statement is: "Brahman or 'I' am not affected by whatever happens at the jeeva-jagath-Isvara triangular level".

Sureswaraacharya gives an excellent example.

दण्डय अप्सु वक्रता इव – similar to the seeming crookedness in a straight stick, partly immersed in water.

It is common knowledge that, when a straight stick (without any bend) is partly immersed in water contained in a transparent bowl or vessel, the stick will appear to be bent at the surface of the water. Though the stick is really straight (avakram), experientially it is bent (vakram) i.e., though vakrathaa is experienced, it is only a 'seeming' vakrathaa, caused by the immersion in the water. The stick does not undergo actual vakrathaa, when immersed in water, for it to become avakram, when removed from the water. Even when the stick appeared vakram, it had all along been and is avakram only. Saakshi is comparable to the stick in the example; and, maayaa or avidhyaa to the water. In the maayaa/ avidhyaa waters, the avakra saakshi appears as vakra ahamkaaraa. 'I' am saakshi; 'I' am the vakra ahamkaaraa also. The vakra ahamkaaraa is not a second entity; it is 'my' own appearance. Therefore, to 'become' saakshi, no saadhanaa is required; but, only the firm knowledge and conviction that 'I' am the nithya avakra muktha svaroopaa: |

90. Chapter II, Verse 84 to 87 (15-03-2008)

In the verse 84, Sureswaraachaaryaa is getting away from the main discussion and is adding an important 'aside' note, so that the student will avoid a misconception.

But, the student should not lose sight of the main topic under discussion, which is aathma-anaathma-viveka, as a part of thvam-padha-vicharaaaa, which, in turn, is a part of mahaa-vaakya-vichaara.

While doing aathma-anaathma-viveka, the Vedhaantic teacher is deliberately creating a division between aathmaa and anaathmaa, which means, that, he is deliberately introducing duality. Even though his ultimate aim is to negate duality and reveal non-duality, this Advaitham teacher himself, is compromising with his teaching. For the sake of the students' benefit, he is making a provisional / temporary division between aathmaa and anaathmaa, drawing a line between the two. The teacher elaborately proves this division by saying, that, anaathmaa is dhrusyam and aathmaa is dhruk / anaathmaa is sagunam and aathmaa is nirgunam / anaathmaa is jadam and aathmaa is chethanam / anaathmaa is savikalpam and aathmaa is nirvikalpam / anaathmaa is dhu:kham and aathmaa is su:kham etc. Thus, he gives a list of opposite qualifications and through all these qualifications, the teacher builds a wall between aathmaa and anaathmaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to make a note: In saamkhyaa philosophy also, a 'wall' is built between aathmaa and anaathmaa and in Vedhaantha philosophy also, this 'wall' between aathmaa and anaathmaa is built. But, the main difference is that, in saamkyaa philosophy, the 'wall' is a permanent, unbreakable 'wall', confirming permanent dvaitham; and because the 'wall' is permanent in saamkyaa philosophy, we call the followers of Saamkyaa philosophy 'dvaithins'. (Madhvaacharyaa is not the only dvaithin; saamkyaa, nyaayaa and vaiseshikaa are also dvaitha philosophies).

In contrast, in advaitam, this 'wall' (the division between aathmaa and anaathmaa) is similar to a temporary, decorative partition, which is installed in position only when required. The Vedhaanthin's ultimate aim is not to segregate the Self permanently from saguna anaathmaa; because, segregation is isolation, isolation is limitation and limitation is samsaara; therefore, only temporarily, the Vedhaanthin says "'I' am aathmaa; the world is anaathmaa"; but, the ultimate teaching of Vedhaantha is: "anaathmaa is also not different from 'me', the aathmaa; it is not a separate entity; it is not a frightening entity; mokshaa is not 'running away from the world'; mokshaa is not 'running away from anaathmaa'; mokshaa is not 'running away from sareerathrayam; mokshaa is understanding that, 'I' alone am appearing as anathmaa also, with non-substantial naamaroopas, which, therefore, cannot threaten 'me' at any time".

To convey this idea, that, " 'I' am the aathmaa; 'I' only appear as anaathmaa ; therefore, there is only one entity ; the division is only a 'seeming' division", Sureswaraacharyaa gives an example: "Just as a straight stick appears as a vakra: (a crooked one), when partly immersed in water, (the illusory crookedness disappearing, when the stick is pulled out of the water), 'I' alone am aathmaa also; and, when I look through the mind / maayaa waters, I alone appear as anaathmaa also. 'I' am aathmaa, the changeless saakshi; I am buddhi, the seeming 'knower' also".

Sureswaraacharyaa warns: "Do not make this 'wall' (division between aathmaa and anaathmaa) strong and permanent. When the mahaa vaakyam 'thathvamasī' is to be assimilated, this division should go".

He says:

- Kalpitha: asau mrushaa eva - This division between aathmaa and ahamkaaraa is only an apparent division,
- apsu dhandasya vakrathaa iva - similar to the crookedness of a straight stick placed (partly immersed) in water.

The student should remember, that, in the example, to make the dhandaa avakram (i.e. to straighten the stick), what he has to do, is not necessarily 'removal of the stick from the water'; but, to cognitively see the stick for what it is - avakram -, even while the stick is under water. In the same manner, to be 'liberated', one need not give up the body / one need not wait for videha mukthi. Even when the body is there / even when many bodies 'come and go' (i.e. even when caught in the cycle of punarapi jananam punarapi maranam), the muktha., even if he appears to be a vakra samsaari, would not be frightened or disturbed. This is "jnaanaath / jnaana maathrena kaivalyam". "Do not look for videha mukthi; you are ever / even now a muktha." is the Advaitic teaching and not 'running away' from sareeram or prapancha!]

Chapter II: Verse 85 –

षट्सु भावविकारेषु निषिद्धेष्वेवमात्मनि ।

दोषः कश्चिदिहासक्तुं न शक्यस्तार्किकश्वभिः ॥ ८४ ॥

When once the sixfold forms of change are negated of the self, no deficiency or evil can be demonstrated in it by the dog-like logicians.

This verse is a continuation of the 'aside' note.

Therefore only, instead of saying buddhi is the changing 'knower', one can boldly declare "'I' myself am appearing as the changing 'knower'". Instead of saying "there is a buddhi which is an anaathmaa and that buddhi is the changing 'knower'", one can say "'I', the aathmaa alone am the changing 'knower' also; and this changing 'knower' status is a superimposed status; and therefore, 'I' continue to be changeless aathmaa, even when 'I' appear as the changing 'knower' because of the vyaavahaarika maayaa medium; 'I' am not affected by the changes".

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- एवं - In this manner,

Instead of saying buddhi is the changing 'knower', even if and when I say "'I' am the changing 'knower' / the seemingly changing 'knower', none of the changes affects 'me', because my 'knowerhood' is mithyaa and the changes are also all mithyaa .

- षट्सु भावविकारेषु - (when) all the six modifications (which belong to the changing knower ahamkaaraa or pramaatha)
- आत्मनि निषिद्धेषु - are negated (as mithyaa superimpositions) on the aathmaa (i.e., as not really present in the aathmaa)

Aathmani – in the higher/ real 'me'; nishiddeshu - falsified / negated

When it is said that the changes are negated, it does not mean that the changes are not experienced; the experiential changes are accepted, because (it cannot be denied, that) "at one moment, I am a pot 'knower' – then from a pot 'knower', I move on to a cot 'knower', to a tree 'knower', to a man 'knower', to a woman 'knower' and so on". The experiential changes will continue; but, the experiential changes are mithyaa and therefore, they are as good as 'not there'. The word 'nishiddeshu' conveys the meaning 'once the modifications are falsified or negated, as mithyaa'

- कश्चित् दोषः - no deficiency (in the form of samsaaraa),

'Knower' includes 'experiencer' also; and the 'experiencer' is called samsaari, because 'experiencer' alone experiences varieties of praarabhdhaa-caused situations; the 'knowerhood' is mithyaa; 'experiencerhood' is mithyaa; the experiences are mithyaa; the changes also are mithyaa. 'I', the sathya aathmaa, am not affected by any one of them.

- आसक्तुं न शक्यः - can be attributed,

Aasakthum - to attribute; na sanya: - not possible.

- इह – in the aathmaa / in the paaramaarthika 'I' (here upon 'me', the avakra aathmaa)

Even when there is an appearance of vakram, 'I' am a nithya avakra: |

By whom can it not be attributed? By a poorvapakshin who is either a saamkyaa or an yogi or a naiyaayikaa or a vaiseshikaa.

All these four philosophers – *saamkyaa*s, yogis, *naiyaayikaa*s and *vaiseshikaa*s - are generally called '*thaarkikaa*s'. The reason (why they are called *thaarkikaa*s) is explained as below:

No doubt, that, all four of them are vaidikaas - i.e. they do accept Vedaas as pramaanam. (The philosophies of Buddhism and Jainism do not accept Vedaas and are therefore, referred to as avaidhikaas or naasthikaas. Sureswaraachaaryaa is not talking about Buddhism or Jainism here). But, even though the *saamkyaa*s, yogis, *naiyaayikaa*s and *vaiseshikaa*s accept Vedas as pramaanam, they primarily resort to yukthi or reasoning to establish their philosophies. They give more importance to tharkaa and less importance to Vedaas. They are tharka pradhaanaa: veda apradhaanaa: | Because of this fact, these four philosophers are called *thaarkikaa*s.

In contrast, poorva meemaamsakaas and Vedhaanthins (also called utthara meemaamsakaas) are Veda pradhaanas. Vedhanthins do not wholly reject tharkaa, but, consider tharkaa only in keeping with sruthi, i.e., as subservient to sruthi.

And, according to the Advaithin: "The primary teaching of the Vedas is 'thathvamas''; the Vedaas repeatedly emphasize 'jeevaathma-paramaathma-eikyam''; and, therefore, 'I am free' is the primary teaching of the Vedaas. According to the Vedhaanthin, Tharkaa or reasoning should be adjusted to be in keeping with this primary teaching. 'I am free' must be accommodated by any reasoning that is used."

The Vedhaanthin does not approve of changing or compromising the Vedas, to suit tharkaa.

Once the approach is made in this manner, the result will be "I am free', from the perspective of my real nature and 'I am bound' will be from the standpoint of the lower vyaavahaarika svaroopam".

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "once you thus have two orders of reality, the thaarkikaa can never challenge the teaching". He says:

- तार्किकश्रुतिः - by the 'barking' thaarkikaas.

The literal meaning of 'Sva' is a dog; but, the Achaaryaa does not use the word here, in a derogatory sense; but, only to highlight the constant / continuous loud proclamations of these philosophers "you are samsaari; you have to be liberated". In contrast, the Vedhaanthin claims "I am not samsaari; I do not need to be liberated"; because, to him, samsaara is like the seeming vakra dhandaa, while "aham nithya avakra aathmaa asmi".

Sureswaraachaaryaa declares: The saamkya, yoga, nyaaya and vaisesika thaarkikkaas can never challenge the Advaitic teaching "I am free, here and now".

"Even when tears roll down the eyes, the rolling tears are, like vakra dhandaa; whereas 'I am the tearless, fearless, tireless, divisionless aathmaa' is the Vedhaanthic teaching.

Sambhanda gadhyam to Verse 86 :

प्रकृतमेवोपादाय बुद्धेः परिणामित्वमात्मनश्च कूटस्थत्वं युक्तिभिरुच्यते ।

Taking up this matter, the changeable character of the mind and the changelessness of the Self are urged through arguments.

Now Sureswaraachaaryaa comes back to the original topic.

In the previous three verses, his aim was to show that "aathma-anaathma division is not there at all" is our destination.

"But" he says "now provisionally I am making a division, that, 'I am the aathmaa; buddhi is anaathmaa; I am the saakshi; buddhi is the 'knower'. This division I am temporarily allowing".

Therefore, he says:

- प्रकृतं एव उपादाय - Coming back to / reverting back to our present topic of aathma-anaathmaa division,

Prakrutham means 'duality' (the temporary duality of aathmaa and anaathmaa); upaadhaaya – accepting.

- बुद्धेः परिणामित्वं - the changeable character of mind

(The Achaaryaa says:) "We are going to establish that anaathmaa buddhi alone is the changing 'knower' principle, called pramaathaa ahamkaaraa"

How does the anaathmaa buddhi become the 'knower'? By itself, it cannot become a knower because it is jadam; only, blessed by 'me', borrowing chidhaabaasaa from 'me', the insentient buddhi becomes the sentient changing ahamkaaraa pramaathaa 'knower'.

And, who am 'I'? "I am the "Original Consciousness"; neither the chidhaabasaa, nor the buddhi, nor the 'knower', nor a changing entity" is the current approach.

- आत्मनः कूटस्थत्वं च - and the absolute changelessness of the Self

In contrast to the 'changing' mind, what about athmaa? How do 'I' stand? 'I' stand as the saakshi – this athmaa is saakshi; he is neither the mind, nor the chidhaabaasaa, nor the ahamkaara, nor the 'knower', nor the changing entity, but kevala saakshi.

And as a saakshi, 'I' am kootastha; which means, 'changeless entity'. 'I' am the 'observer'; the knower is 'observed'.

- युक्तिभिः उच्यते - are established using appropriate 'reasoning'.

Chapter II: Verse 86 –

प्रत्यर्थं तु विभिद्यन्ते बुद्ध्यो विषयोन्मुखा :।

न भिदावगतेस्तद्वत्सर्वास्ताश्चिन्निभा यतः ॥ ८६ ॥

The cognitive functions of the mind directed to external objects differ from object to object. But the element of Consciousness in them does not differ in the same way, for all those functions, are forms of Consciousness.

So, Sureswaraacharya says: "Now, we have become dualists; we have accepted dvaitham. I am the saakshi; there is a mind; I am accepting mind as a separate entity; mind is jadam; mind is known by the name buddhi; buddhi has got chidhaabhaasa; because of the chidhaabaasa, buddhi has become sentient; therefore, the buddhi can function as 'knower'; and to know the world, the buddhi can generate thoughts. (Just as, blessed by the electricity, the fan works)".

The thought is also called buddhi. Thus, the word buddhi is used for the mind; and for a thought also.

Now Sureswaraacharya is explaining how the 'knowing' process takes place; how, thoughts are generated ; how every thought gets associated with a particular object; and how, when the thought is associated with the object, thought assumes the shape of the object, 'gataakaara vrutthi', 'pataakaara vrutthi' etc. This sequential vrutthis is the process of 'knowing'.

What do 'I' do in the meantime? 'I' do not do anything – I am just saakshi, in front of which the buddhi develops thoughts (vrutthis), resulting in varieties of cognitions and varieties of experiences.

Thus, the mechanism of the process of 'knowing' is explained here.

- बुद्धयः - (In this context, means) Many thoughts / buddhi vrutthaya:,

In the language of English also, the word 'mind' is, at times, used to mean 'thought'; for instance, when the statement 'I was in two minds' is made, the word 'minds', being in plural, obviously means 'thoughts'. In the same manner, in Vedhaanthaa, when the word 'buddhi' is used in singular, it means 'mind' or 'intellect'; when it is used in plural, as 'buddhaya:', it can denote 'thoughts' also.

What type of thoughts?

- विषय उन्मुखाः - which are directed towards various sense objects (sabda, sparsa, roopa, rasa, gandha etc.),

Unmukhaa: - turned towards / facing.

Many thoughts turned towards many sense objects are generated. These thoughts:

- विभिद्यन्ते - differ,
- प्रति अर्त - in keeping with every sense object.

Though one common word 'thought' is used, the thoughts are not the same; sabda vrutthi is different from sparsa vrutthi; sparsa vrutthi is different from roopa vrutthi and so on. The thoughts are constantly changing in the mind (in fact, even during the one hour of the class).

The conclusion: The 'mind' (the locus of the changing thoughts) is also 'parinaami'.

But, it should be noted, that, every thought is jadam / inert in nature and therefore, the thought, by itself, cannot become 'knowledge' / 'cognition' / 'experience'. What actually happens? Even as the inert thought arises, it gets associated with 'Me', the changeless medium, the all-pervading / space-like Consciousness (just as every created object is in association with aakaasaa, because every object originates in aakaasaa). Every thought, in fact, originates / rises in 'Me', the space-like, changeless Consciousness alone. And, the moment the buddhi vrutthi gets sambhandhaa (association) with 'Me', the thought becomes a specific 'awareness' (This is possible because the thought gets associated with chaithanyam).

Therefore, 'pot-thought' blessed or associated with saakshi becomes 'pot-awareness'.

Changing 'pot-thought' + changeless Consciousness = 'pot-awareness' / 'pot-cognition' / 'pot-experience' / 'pot-knowledge'.

When, thus, 'pot-thought', in the presence of Consciousness becomes 'pot-awareness' / 'pot-cognition' / 'pot-experience' / 'pot-knowledge', we say, that, buddhi is the 'knower' or 'experiencer' of the pot.

Now, Sureswaraacharya says: "When there is a change from 'pot-experience' to (say) 'tree-experience', one type of thought (the 'pot-thought') gets replaced by another type of thought (the 'tree thought'). But, the 'tree-thought' also cannot become 'tree-knowledge' or 'tree-experience' by itself; it has to be associated with Consciousness. This will go to show that even though the 'pot-thought' goes away, to give place to 'tree-thought', the Consciousness cannot go away / disappear along with the 'pot-thought'. If the Consciousness disappears along with the disappearing 'pot-thought' / 'pot-experience', the 'tree-thought' will have to, helplessly, remain as inert 'tree-thought' only and can never become 'tree-knowledge' or 'tree-experience' or 'tree-cognition'".

What is the conclusion? "When the thoughts flow, the Consciousness cannot and should not 'flow', which shows, that, that Consciousness, 'I', am aparinaami (changelessly present)".

The proof is (thus), that the second 'thought' (subsequent to the first thought) has become a 'cognition', only because of 'my' continuity. If 'I' do not continue, when the first thought / knowledge disappears, 'I' also would have disappeared and in 'my' absence, the second and subsequent 'knowledge' would not be possible.

The series of experiences is a result of the changing thoughts, in the presence of the changeless 'Me', the Consciousness. If the changing thoughts are not there, 'changing experiences (or flow of experiences)' cannot be there; and, if the Consciousness is not 'changeless' also, the flow of experiences cannot be there. The flow of experiences, therefore, proves two things: (1) the changing flow of thoughts and (2) the changeless 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam.

"I' am eternally 'changeless'; that is 'my' real nature; do not be carried away by the changing flow of experiences; and do not ever ask 'I have got problems; when will I get freedom from samsaaraa? " is the appeal of the Vedhaanthic guru. The greatest vipareetha bhaavanaa is 'looking for videha mukthi'.

Sureswaraacharya says: "Make liberation the present reality. Do not look for 'that' day, when you will be liberated". (The word 'present', in this statement, is also not quite appropriate, since 'liberation' is ever real.)

This is the essence of the Vedhaanthic teaching, which the Aacharya points out here (in the second line).

- अवगते: भिदा न (अस्ति) - (But, during the flow of thoughts) the Consciousness does not have flow / change / arrival and departure.

Another possible misconception of the student is that, since different types of thoughts flow in the Consciousness, the Consciousness can get sullied and may need to be 'changed' or 'cleansed'. Swamiji warns against this possible misconception citing a simile: "Some people rear goldfish in a glass tank of water, as a hobby. To keep the fish healthy, the water in the tank has to be periodically changed. Unlike this, Consciousness, in which thoughts 'flow' (similar to the goldfish in the water) does not need to be cleansed or changed once in a while". Sankara Bhagavadhpaadhaa, in his Aathma Bodha, declares: "I, the aathma salilam, can be never polluted even by the most terrible form of samsaaraa or biological pains or psychological pains or emotional upheavals, which are all nothing but forms of thoughts, which will come and go".

Avagathi – chaithanyam; avagathe: - for the chaithanyam; bhidhaa – difference / separation.

'I', the avagathi, do not change; 'I' do not get polluted; 'I' do not have to go anywhere. How do you know this? Sureswaraacharya explains "Sarvaa: thaa: chinnibhaa: yatha:" |

What is the proof that 'I' am continuously there? An example can be given: (Sureswaraacharya has not given this example) " Suppose there is a mirror in front of me; I see two things – one is the mirror and the other is my reflection; suppose the mirror is removed and another mirror is placed in its position; I see a different mirror; and I see my reflection also; if thus a series of mirrors is placed, in front of me, one after another, the mirrors 'come and go'; but, I continue to see my reflection in each mirror. The reflection in each mirror is only because of my continuous presence. Every thought is a passing mirror; every thought becomes 'knowledge' because of chidhaabhaasa, which chidhaabhaasaa proves that 'I', the chith, is continuously there".

Going back to the text:

- यतः - because,
- सर्वाः ताः - all the flowing thoughts (which are similar to the mirrors in the above example)
- चिन्निभाः - are endowed with chidhaabhaasa (the reflection)

Chinnibhaa: - chidhaabhaasa vamsa: /

But, what is the proof that the thoughts have chidhaabhaasaa? Ans: If the thought does not have reflected Consciousness, since, the thought by itself is jadam, it will remain jadam. It can never be called 'knowledge' / 'cognition' / 'experience'.

- Avagathe: - saakshi chaithanyasya
- Bhidhaa - modification
- Na (asthi) - is not there.
- तद्वत्- (un)like (the thoughts)

'Like' here should be interpreted as 'unlike'. "Unlike the thoughts, chaithanyam does not have modifications" is the message.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 87 :

स्वसंबद्दार्थ एव ।

The mind is bound up with its change:

Verse 87 – Chapter II:

सावशेषपरिच्छेदिन्यत एव न कृत्स्नबित् ।

नो चेत्परिणमेद्बुद्धिः सर्वज्ञा स्वात्मवद्भवेत् ॥ ८७ ॥

The mind discerns objects by fragments and leaves residues. It is not all-cognizing. If the mind were not subject to modification, it would be omniscient like the Self.

All these verses are profound, beautiful and significant verses, the contents of which are unique, rarely found in other Vedhaantic texts.

Sureswaraacharya points out: "Buddhi gains knowledge by generating thoughts. Buddhi becomes a 'knower' and gains knowledge by generating thoughts. And, every specific knowledge requires a specific thought. For instance, when you see the face of a person, you will get only a general knowledge of the face; if you (say, an ophthalmologist) want to know how the left eye of the person is, you will have to forget all other parts of the face and focus only on the left eye and an 'eye thought' should be generated. The eye also has several parts – the eye lids, the 'black' of the eye, the lower eye and so on. So, again, if you, as an ophthalmologist, have to get the knowledge of the eyelids, you have to focus specifically on the eyelids to get a specific knowledge of the eyelids. Thus a tedious process of entertaining very, very specific, fine thoughts of the object about which 'knowledge' has to be obtained, has to be gone through. (Incidentally, this is what the modern medical science does). This will only go to show that human intellect can never be omniscient – it is only alpagnya." |

Sureswaraacharya says "the very fact that buddhi is alpagnya., shows it is parinaami; (since, it has to gain 'knowledge' of any particular object, only by entertaining a specific thought, which thought is a modification). The Aacharya further says: The very fact that the aathmaa is sarvagnya: (omniscient) proves, that it is aparinaami - free of modifications.

91. Chapter II, Verse 87 to 89 (22-03-2008)

Chapter II: Verse 87 –

सावशेषपरिच्छेदिन्यत एव न कृत्स्नवित् ।

नो चेत्परिणमेद्बुद्धिः सर्वज्ञा स्वात्मवद्भवेत् ॥ ८७ ॥

The mind discerns objects by fragments, and leaves residues. It is all-cognizing. If the mind were not subject to modification, it would be omniscient like the Self.

Here, Sureswaraachaarya gives an unique argument to differentiate saakshi and ahamkaaraa – ahamkaaraa, otherwise known as buddhi, the 'knower'. And, he wants to point out that saakshi is the changeless 'knower' principle and buddhi is the changing 'knower' principle. He has been giving several arguments in support of this. Here, he gives a different argument: "The scriptures point out that the saakshi, the aathmaa, is none other than Paramaathmaa, the sarvagnya: | Therefore, it follows, that, saakshi is described in the scriptures as sarvagnya: or omniscient, whereas, the buddhi or ahamkaaraa, though also a 'knower', we know, by our experience, is not sarvagnya: | Buddhi is asarvagnya : and saakshi is sarvagnya:| And, from this, it is very clear, that one is changeless 'knower' and the other is changing 'knower'". This is the conclusion (drawn by the Achaaryaa.)

The method of thinking must be clear. Whatever or whoever 'knows' things through a process, can never be omniscient, because, 'knowing' is a process for that 'knower', which means every particular 'knowledge', for him, requires a tedious, slow process of focusing. Right from every minute micro-organism to all the macro-galaxies in the universe, wherever 'knower' is a 'knower' through a process, he cannot be an 'all-knower'. Sureswaraachaarya uses the vice-versa argument. And, therefore, whoever is 'all-knower', whether aathmaa or paramaathmaa or Brahman (however you call it), should not have to 'know' things through a process. For the 'all-knower', 'knowing' cannot be a process. And, that's why, Bhagavaan is said to be nithya-sarvagnya: | If Bhagavaan is going to become sarvagnya: through a process, (1) He will not be sarvagnya: before that process and (2) if He was not sarvagnya: before, He is not going to become sarvagnya: through a process also. Therefore, all the systems of philosophy, all religions who accept an 'omniscient' God, also maintain that God is always omniscient. Sarvagnyathvam and nithya sarvagnyathvam go together. And, since, aathmaa (or Paramaathmaa) is sarvagnya: and since paramaathmaa is also ever (all the time) sarvagnya: , it is clear, that Paramaathmaa 'knows' things, without requiring a process of knowing. To recap: Paramaathmaa is sarvagnya:; Paramaathmaa is nithya sarvagnya:; if Paramaathmaa is nithya sarvagnya:, Paramaathmaa should not require a process to know; that means, Paramaathmaa is 'all-knower', without undergoing a change involving the process of knowing; therefore, Paramaathmaa is a changeless 'knower' and therefore, (Sureswaraachaarya says) whoever is 'all-knower' has to be a changeless 'knower'. Buddhi is not an 'all-knower'; not omniscient; therefore, it is not a changeless 'knower'; therefore, it must be a changing 'knower'; therefore, the changing 'knower' buddhi is different from the changeless, omniscient 'knower' aathmaa. Aathmaa is changeless; buddhi is changing and therefore, aathmaa is different from buddhi. This (in effect) is the argument.

- बुद्धिः सावशेषपरिच्छेदिनी (भवति) – Buddhi is a limited & changing 'knower'.

Parichechedhinee means 'knower'; Parichchedha: - a technical word used in tharka saasthraa, means "Jnaanam / objectification"

The word also has the meaning of 'limitation', as in desa parichchedha:, kaala parichchedha: etc.

Why knowledge is also called parichchedha: is explained, in detail, as follows (though the details are not very relevant here): "When I look in front of me, the consciousness coming out of my sense organs does not have any specific knowledge; the consciousness is diffused and unfocussed; it is general. Suppose, among the students, I want to focus on one student, I concentrate my consciousness upon that particular student ; the diffused, general consciousness, which was aware of the entire hall, becomes a converged specific consciousness 'knowing' that particular student. The diffused/ pervading consciousness becomes circumscribed, specific consciousness; that's why, the more I focus upon a particular student, I am not aware of even the hall. It follows, that, in 'knowing', diffused consciousness becomes circumscribed / converged consciousness. This circumscribing process is called parichchedha: | I am giving a shape to diffused, general, shapeless consciousness, which, in tharka saasthraa, is called nirvikalpaka jnaanam – (i.e. at the moment the sense organs are just got ready for receiving information) ; when, subsequently, I focus on an object, it becomes savikalpaka prathyaksham. Thus, in tharka saasthraa, prathyaksham itself is categorized as two – diffused one is called nirvikalpaka prathyaksham and the focused one as savikalpaka prathyaksham. The general consciousness becomes specified consciousness; the 'specification' happens by parichchedha:. Because of this, 'knowing process' is called 'consciousness specification' - parichchedha: |"

Parichchedha: means 'knowledge'; parichchedhinee means 'knower'.

Saavasesha means 'limited'; "buddhi: is asarvagnya:" (is the essence).

- अतः एव न कुत्स्नवित् - Therefore only (i.e. buddhi being a changing 'knower'), buddhi is not an omniscient one.

This statement by the Achaaryaa, 'buddhi is not omniscient' is an anvayaa statement. In the second half of the verse, the vyathirkhaa statement follows.

Suppose the buddhi is not a changing 'knower'.

- (बुद्धिः) न परिणमेत् चेत् - If buddhi is not a changing 'knower' (i.e. if buddhi did not require a process of 'knowing'),

What would have been the advantage? The Achaaryaa says:

- सा बुद्धिः (:सर्वज्ञा भवेत् - That buddhi which is a changeless 'knower', as assumed) would have become omniscient
- स्वात्मवत् – like the aathmaa / Paramaathma / Brahman / Isvara.

This is a hypothetical situation. The fact is: buddhi is not omniscient; therefore, buddhi is not a changeless 'knower'; therefore, buddhi is a changing 'knower'; therefore, buddhi is different from the changeless saakshi.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 88:

अतः अवगतेः एकत्वात् ।

Therefore, as the Self is one –

And, therefore what is the conclusion? Buddhi is a changing 'knower'; therefore buddhi is not omniscient; and therefore, buddhi will be different from person to person. One may be an expert in the subject of Physics - a Physics 'knower'; but, totally ignorant of economics – an economics 'non-knower' (while, in the case of another, the reverse may be true). And, therefore, the buddhi 'knowers' are different from individual to individual; whereas, since saakshi is changeless, omniscient 'knower', that saakshi has to be only one behind all the buddhis.

- अतः - Therefore,
- अवगतेः - of the Saakshi chaithanyam, (which is omniscient & all-pervading),
- एकत्वात् - being of the nature of One only

When it is said "you, the saakshi, are omniscient one", the tendency of the listener is to reply "How do you say, I am omniscient? I do not know many things", the reason behind such a reaction being the fact that the listener has unknowingly 'slipped' to buddhi. It is not the stand of Vedhaantha that buddhi is omniscient; it asserts, that, the saakshi is the One that is omniscient, the 'One' behind all buddhis, the illuminator of all types of knowledge – the knowledge of the subject of Physics of the scholar in Physics, the knowledge of the subject of Chemistry of the scholar in Chemistry and so on. That saakshi is all-illuminator, therefore omniscient - "kshethragnyam cha api maam viddhi sarva kshekthreshu Bhaaritha – Bhagavadh Geetha - Verse 2 – Ch. XIII". Therefore, the Achaaryaa commences the next verse with the sambhandha gadhyam: "avagathe: ekathvaath - Since saakshi is One", giving the conclusion based on this fact, in the verse that follows.

Verse 88 – Chapter II :

चण्डालबुद्धेः यद्द्रष्टु तदेव ब्रह्मबुद्धिद्रुक्।

एकम् तदुभयोः ज्योतिः भास्यभेदादनेकवत् ॥ ८८ ॥

That which is the witness of the mind of a Chandaalaa, is the same as the witness of the mind of Brahma. The light of consciousness is the same in both ; but, it appears as many, owing to the difference of what is illuminated.

Therefore, the omniscient, all-buddhi illuminating saakshi is only One.

- यत् - The aathma chaithanyam,
- द्रष्टु - (which is) the illuminator (the changeless illuminator),
- चण्डालबुद्धेः - of the buddhi of a chandaalaa,

A chandaalaa is one who does not follow or accept the scriptural aachaara. Any person, (even if he is born as a Brahmin,) who does not accept or follow the scriptural aachaara anushtaana is called a chandaalaa.

- तदेव - that same aathma chathanyam (is),
- ब्रह्मबुद्धिद्रुक् - the illuminator of the buddhi of Brahmaji, the chathurmuka

Brahma, the Creator (not nirguna Brahman) also.

Brahma buddhi can be taken as referring to the samashti buddhi of the Hiranyagarbhaa, while, chandaala buddhi can be taken to refer to the vyashti buddhi. The meaning of the sentence would be: "The Consciousness behind the micro-buddhi and the macro-buddhi – that Saakshi is One and the Same".

Alternately, the word Brahma can be taken to mean a Brahmin. 'Brahma' has different meanings – Nirguna Brahman, Brahmaaji (the Creator), a Brahmin, Veda (as in Brahmopadesa), Omkaaraa etc. In this context, the word can be taken to mean a Brahmin, in which case, the verse would mean "the Saakshi behind a chandaala buddhi and the saakshi behind a Brahmana buddhi are one and the same".

Why should the Achaaryaa repeat this idea, as he has already been saying this before? Ans: While for an informed Vedhaanthin, aathmaa is One and does not differ from jeeva to jeeva, all other darsanams, while they accept the concept of aathmaa, vehemently argue, that, aathmaa is different from jeeva to jeeva. The Sankhya philosopher, the great Kapila Muni, after a thorough analysis of the saasthraas, concludes, contrary to the Vedhaanthir's conviction, that aathmaa varies from individual and individual – there are as many aathmaas as there are buddhis. Similarly, Yoga philosopher, Pathanjali, who has talked about the Ashtaanga Yoga and has practiced Nirvikalpaka Samaadhi (which is believed to reveal Advaitham), concludes that every jeeva has a separate aathmaa. The founder of the Nyaayaa philosophy, Gouthama Muni, also maintains that everyone has a separate aathmaa. The Vaiseshika founder, Kanaada Muni, also maintains that the Saakshi aathmaa is different for different persons. The Poorva Meemaamsaka philosopher, Jaimini, also holds the same view. Sri Ramanujacharya, the Visishtaadvaitha philosopher, while granting that One Paramaathmaa pervades all jeevaathmaas, still maintains that the jeevaathmaas are different from one another. This vehement opposition from all other darsanams to aathma ekathvam, makes Sureswaraachaarya repeat his view more than once and assert "Do not think that the aathmaa of a chandaalaa and the aathmaa of a Brahmanaa are different and also that there is a separate Paramaathmaa. It is not so. Jeevaathmaa is Paramaathmaa and that aathmaa (Jeevaathmaa/ Paramaathmaa) pervades all over".

But, the 'all-pervasiveness' of Consciousness is not a matter for experience; what is needed is a 'cognitive negation of limitation' i.e. intellectually negating the misconception of limitations. "Take the stand 'I, the Sakshi, am in all the bodies'. Do not try to 'experience'; drop the notion that 'I am limited'".

- एकम् - There is only one 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam,
- ज्योतिः - which is self-evident Consciousness / the light of Consciousness,
- तदुभयोः - which is in both of them (vyashti and samashti or chandaalaa and Brahmanaa)

There is only one aathmaa in the religiously pure (the devout) or the religiously impure (the non-believer). But, what happens?

- अनेकवत् भाति – But, appears as many,
- भास्य भेदात् – because of the plurality of the manifesting medium called buddhi.

Bhaasyam, in this context, means 'buddhi'. Bhaasya bedhaath – upaadhi bedhaath/ buddhi bedhaath. "Buddhi bedhaath chithanya bedha:".

A mundane example for this phenomenon, is the light-house, where, a single, non-moving light (advaita, achala jyothi:), appears as three or four lights, because of the cylindrical device, provided with three or four slits, rotating round the stationery light. The plurality belongs to the device and not to the light. But, because of the numerous slits and the rotation of the device (the upaadhi), the single, stationery light appears to be many and moving.

(Stanza 4 of Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram goes: "Naanaachchidra ghatodhara sthitha mahaa deepa prabhaa bhaasvaram jnaanam yasya thu chakshuraadhi karanadvaaraa bahi: spandhathe" – "He, whose intelligence 'flashes' outside through the eyes and sense-organs, just like the bright light of a great lamp placed in a jar having many holes...")

Everybody is similar to the rotating device around the light and all the sense organs are like the slits in the device; there appears to be plurality of Consciousness. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says: "Bhaasya bhedhaath anekavath (chalavath bhaathi)". Our aim is to move to the "binary format" (of Athmaa and Anaathmaa) and at the time of practice of the binary format, we have to claim "I am that changeless, unaffected saakshi".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 89 and Verse 89 :

कस्मात् ।

अवस्थादेशकालादिभेद : नास्त्यनयोर्यत : ।

तस्मात् जगद्दियां वृत्तं ज्योतिरेकं सदेक्षते ॥ ८९ ॥

Why is this so?

The Consciousness shining in the two, does not have difference of state, space, time etc. Therefore, the same light sees always all the activities of the minds of the world.

The Achaaryaa continues with the subject of the 'all-pervasive' nature of Consciousness.

All-pervasiveness of Consciousness cannot be experienced, because, the moment you attempt to experience, i.e. the moment you attempt to become an 'experiencer', a pramaathaa, one of the thriputi, you bring in division; you are localized; once you are localized, how can you 'experience' all-pervasiveness? "All-pervasiveness" denotes "divisionlessness", while the process of "experiencing" demands "division" There is thus a contradiction in terms to talk about "experiencing all-pervasiveness"; and, therefore "experiencing all-pervasiveness" is logically untenable.

Then the question arises: "If all-pervasiveness of Consciousness cannot be experienced, what is the proof for the 'all-pervasiveness' of Consciousness?"

Two answers are given to the questioner.

The first answer is in 'negative' form – "You, the questioner, do not have proof to establish the limitation of Consciousness. You have no pramaanam to show the dimensions of Consciousness". Any dimension can be only of sthoolam – the gross matter, while no pramaanam dimensions or limits the Consciousness.

If the questioner argues "beyond the body, I do not experience Consciousness; therefore, Consciousness is not there beyond", the answer will be "lack of experience cannot be proof of lack of existence. Your statement merely confirms only your lack of experience and not the lack of existence of Consciousness. You have not produced, nor can you produce any conclusive proof for the dimensions or limitations of the Consciousness. That being so, i.e. since 'limitation' is not proved by you or any other pramaanam, it is proved that Consciousness is limitless. If at all, at any time, you 'objectify' Consciousness and establish its attributes – colour, dimensions etc., I shall, at that time, accept that Consciousness is 'limited' by the attributes indicated by you. But, this is purely hypothetical, since, at no time, can you 'objectify' Consciousness to establish its dimensions".

The second answer: "The 'positive' proof for the all-pervading nature of Consciousness is Saasthra pramaanam."

This, of course, is on the assumption that the questioner is an Asthika: , i.e. one who believes in Saasthraas, such as a Saankyaa, Vaiseshikaa or a Poorva Meemaamsakaa. To an Asthikaa, but, who is not a Vedhaanthin, the Vedhaanthin can point out, that, according to Saasthraas, "aathmaa is sarvagatha.", as in verse 24, Ch. II of the Bhagavadh Githa, "nithya: sarvagatha: sthaanu: achaloyam sanaathana:"

If, on the other hand, a naasthikaa demands positive proof for the all-pervasiveness of Consciousness, such proof cannot be given. In dealing with a Nasthikaa, the Vedhaanthin has to take recourse to the first answer only i.e. demanding proof from the nasthikaa for the 'limitations' of Consciousness and assert "till such proof is given (if at all) by you, I will rely on the Saasthraas' declarations about the 'limitlessness' or 'all-pervasiveness' of Consciousness". If the nassthikaa can choose to believe in 'limitations' to Consciousness, without any pramaanam, the Vedhaanthin is certainly entitled to believe in the all-pervasive nature of Consciousness, based on Saasthra pramaanam, which is ample evidence and authority for the asthikas.

The conclusion: "aham brahma asmi".

- अनयोः - For the chaithanyam in a chandaalaa and for the chainthanyam in a Brahmana,
- अवस्थादेशकालादिभेदः नास्ति - there are no differentiating attributes or features.

Between the Consciousness in a chandaalaa and the Consciousness in a Brahmana, one cannot find or experience any differentiating attribute. Whatever differentiating attributes are talked about, they do not belong to chaithanyam; but, to some material aspect or other – in the intellect, in the mind or in physical appearance. When one uses the words dhu:khee aathmaa or sukhee aathmaa, the emotions are conditions of the minds only and not of the chaithanyam, which will be clear from the fact that one does not feel dhu:kham or sukham, when in sleep i.e. when the mind is at rest.

Therefore, the Achaaryaa declares “bedha: naasthi”. What are the various bedhaas?

Avasthaa bedha: (naasthi) - There is no differentiation in avasthaa or condition with regard to chaithanyam; the differentiation is again only in the minds. One individual may be in the triangular format of jeeva- jagath- Isvara, while another may be in the athma- anaathmaa binary format, both being the conditions of the minds only. Talking of ‘higher’ state of Consciousness of a jnaani and ‘lower’ state of Consciousness of an ajnaani, is fallacious. The samsaara avasthaa or mukthi avasthaa does not belong to chaithanyam – if they had belonged to chaithanyam, every one, without exception, will be either ever ‘liberated’ or ever ‘bound’; the avasthaa bedhaa belongs to the minds only. “Na dharmo na chaartha na kamo na mokshopi (mahyam naasthi)” – as in the Nirvaana Shatkam (verse 3) of Adi Sankara.

It follows that the belief that, “in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, the saadhakaa is in Advaita avastha, when he can realize the advaita aathmaa, while, in jaagrath avasthaa he is in dvaitha avasthaa, with paroksha jnaanam” is also fallacious. “I am Advaitam in all avasthaas” is the fact.

Similarly, desa bedha: is also only for the gross and subtle body-mind complex and never for chaithanyam. The ‘location’ of the body-mind complex is ‘mistaken’ as that of chaithanyam. The maximum concession that can be made in this context, is, that, the reflected Consciousness – aabhaasa/prathi bhimba chaithanyam can have different locations, an example being the possibility of reflections of the sun having different locations, while the sun is only one - eka: / The prathi bhimba chaithanyam is located in the brain and when the brain dies, what dies or goes away is the prathi bhimbha chaithanyam only- “Na prethya samjnaasthi ithi are maithreyi ithi hovaacha yaagnyavalkya:” (Brahadaranyaka Upanishad: II.iv.12).

Chidhaabaasa chaithanyam has a location in the individual body-mind complex and will cease to exist when the brain dies; but, the original bimbha chaithanyam, continues to survive even after the fall of the body and the death of the brain; it is only not available or accessible for any transaction. This non-availability or non-accessibility of the original Consciousness, is not because it had ceased to exist; but, because of the destruction of the medium of transaction or manifestation, namely, the body-mind complex.

Again, similarly, kaala bedha:, 'differentiation in time' is also not there for chaithanyam. As verse 20 – Ch. II of the Bhagavadh Githa goes "Na jaayathe mriyathe vaa kathaachith naayam boothvaa bhavithaa vaa na bhooya: ajo nithya: saasvathoyam puraana: na hanyathe hanyamaane sareere – "This Self is neither born at any time nor does it die. It will neither come to existence nor will it disappear again. It is birthless, eternal, and free from decay as well as growth. It is not destroyed when the body is destroyed".

(In this context, it is worth contemplating, that, for a true Vedhaanthin, the common, anxious prayer "Let me not have a re-birth" is out of place and meaningless , since, such a prayer would only show that he had not correctly understood the message of Vedhaanthaa, which is that, he is not his sookshma sareeram, that, he need not entertain a relationship with his sookshma sareeram and that he need not have any special concern for his sookshma sareeram , but, that, he is always the nithya muktha aathmaa.)

- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- एकम् ज्योतिः - (I am) one, non-dual Consciousness, the Saakshi,
- सदा ईक्षते - (which) always witnesses / illumines
- वृत्तं – the behaviour / conditions of
- जगद्धियां - all the intellects / all the sookshma sareerams in the entire world/Creation

92. Chapter II, Verse 89 and 90 (29-03-2008)

Sureswaraachaaryaa continues with the topic of saakshi-ahamkaara viveka:, otherwise known as saakshi-antha:karana viveka:, otherwise known as saakshi-sookshma sareera viveka:

The Achaaryaa started this topic in verse 22 and the topic is still in progress (now in the 89th verse). There is significance behind the Achaaryaa's dwelling on the subject, for so long.

By such dwelling at length on saakshi-ahamkaaraa viveka:, all the Achaaryas try to convey a very important message. Adi Sankarachaaryaa also does this in his Upadesa Saahasree - especially in the 18th chapter, where he deals with the subject in a very detailed manner, with the intention of conveying an indirect, hidden message, which is an extremely important message for a seeker. If the student grasps / discerns this hidden message, it can be a break-through / turning point in his saadhanaa / spiritual journey. This is the reason, why the teachers dwell on this topic of saakshi-ahamkaara viveka: for a long time - so that, serious and sincere students can grasp this hidden message.

But, if this message is so extremely important and can cause a break-through / a turning point to the seeker, why should the teachers communicate it as a hidden message? Why cannot they openly convey the message? There is a valid reason for this also : the achaaryaa are worried that junior / immature students or those who make only a superficial study of the Vedhaanthic teachings , may misunderstand the message if it is given explicitly; it is intentionally 'hidden' by the Achaaryas, leaving it to the mature student to 'discern' the message from the their teachings.

What is that message? This is explained in the following few paragraphs.

Every human being generally evaluates/ assesses himself / herself, only from the standpoint of ahamkaaraa or anaathmaa. To repeat in a different form: Self evaluation / self assessment from the standpoint of ahamkaaraa or anaathmaa is natural for every human being. In worldly contexts, every one evaluates oneself only from the standpoint of one's physical/ emotional/ intellectual conditions / characters/ behaviors etc.; in short, anaathmaa is the basis of self-assessment. This basis continues even after the individual comes to Veda Poorva Baaghaa; during that stage also, the individual makes a self-evaluation/ self assessment, only from the standpoint of anaathmaa; every ritual prescribed by the Veda Poorva Baaghaa is based on the individual's varna, aasramaa, gothraa, soothraa, Veda etc. Thus, in the Veda poorva bhaaghaa also one assesses oneself, based on one's body-mind complex, the ahamkaaraa, the anaathmaa.

To the seeker who is a novice in Vedhaanthic studies and practice, i.e., the beginner who has just commenced the practice of Karma Yoga for attainment of mokshaa, Vedhaanthaa gives a definition of mokshaa, in several portions in the Bhagavadh Geethaa and the Upanishads. This definition of a muktha: is: "Veetha raagha bhaya krodha:" or "harsha amarsha bhaya udhvegai: muktha:" – "mokshaa is a state of freedom from attachment, anxiety and anger".

But, this definition of mokshaa is also, only from the standpoint of the mind, the ahamkaaraa, the anaathmaa only. Really speaking, this definition of mokshaa is only a 'provisional' definition; not a 'real' definition.

The 'real' definition of mokshaa concerns the svaroopam of aathmaa - not the condition of the mind, which is anaathmaa.

But, even though, thus, mokshaa is about the svaroopam of aathmaa and not about a condition of the mind, Vedhaanthaa, in the initial stages, compromises with regard to the 'real' definition and gives a 'provisional' definition of mokshaa as "veetha raagha bhaya krodhathvam" – as "freedom from attachment, anxiety and anger".

Not only do the saasthraas give this 'provisional', compromised definition of mokshaa from anaathmaa standpoint, they also prescribe the conditions for attainment of that mokshaa – that, saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is the qualification required for mokshaa. By presenting saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi as essential qualification, saasthraas are obviously saying that mokshaa is possibly only for the qualified students; i.e. these qualifications become the conditions for mokshaa.

But, this, again is only a compromise - a 'provisional' condition. Why (is it to be considered as a compromise or a 'provisional' statement)? Because, the real vedhaanthic teaching is that, mokshaa is your very nature. Whatever is your nature (svaroopam) cannot depend on any condition. Therefore, the truth is "mokshaa cannot have any condition at all; even saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi can never be defined as a condition for mokshaa".

But, Vedhaanthaa, for a beginner / for a novice, presents this 'provisional' condition – saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi. The beginner gathers these two messages - the 'provisional' definition of mokshaa and the 'provisional' conditions for mokshaa. They get well entrenched in his thinking: that the definition of mokshaa is "freedom from attachment, anxiety and anger", and the conditions for mokshaa is "saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi". The consequence: The seeker, who assesses himself from the standpoint of anaathmaa all the time, has a tendency to periodically evaluate himself with these two understandings, to know whether he is a muktha: | And, very often, arrives at the wrong conclusions: "I do not have saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi; therefore, I do not have veetha raggha bhaya krodhathvam; therefore, I do not have mokshaa; therefore, I have to increase the intensity of my saadhanaa".

The saakshi-ahamkaara viveka has the hidden purposes: "questioning the very definition of mokshaa and also questioning the saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi as a condition of mokshaa". If I really go through and assimilate saakshi-ahamkaara viveka and, as a result, I distance myself from anaathmaa / ahamkaaraa / sareerathrayam, I understand that "veetha raagha bhaya krodhathvam" is not the definition of mokshaa (that freedom from attachment, anxiety and anger is not mokshaa) but, the real definition is that "I am free from the mind itself – I am the saakshi thathvam, in which the whole world, including the mind, is falsely superimposed".

The mind and its condition have no bearing on my very nature; and, when I am free from the mind, where is the question of the presence of attachment, anxiety and anger?; and, when there is no possibility of the presence of the three, where is the question of freedom from the three? "Prasakthasya eva prathishedha:" is an accepted rule. Only when there is a possibility of the "presence of", the possibility of "freedom from" arises.

Therefore, mokshaa is the realization that "I am the saakshi chaithanyam, free from sareerathrayam and also from their attributes. There is no question of freeing myself from raaghaa, bhayam and krodhaa". This revision of the definition of mokshaa, is, thus, the first message, received from saakshi-ahamkaara viveka. Only when the seeker is in Karma Yoga, i.e. till the time he comes to thvam-padha-vicharaa, he can consider the definition of mokshaa as "veetha-raagha-baya-krodhaathvam". Once the seeker comes to saakshi-ahamkaara viveka; he has to negate this definition of mokshaa and re-define mokshaa as "I am free from sareera thrayam". This is called apavaadhaa. In contrast, "Veetha raagha bhaya krodhaathvam" definition is acceptable, during (what is known as) adhyaaropa condition; but, once, the seeker comes to thvam padha vicharaa, that definition has to be negated. This is the "shifting" from triangular format to binary format.

This 'revision' of the definition of mokshaa is the first hidden message; it is not explicitly explained by any Achaaryaa, since a seeker in initial stages /a beginner or one makes a superficial study of the subject, may misunderstand this definition of moksha.

When the definition of mokshaa is thus changed, the method of self assessment should also be changed. "Am I free from attachment, anxiety and anger?" is not the question, one should ask oneself. Instead, one should have the conviction, "When I am ever free from mind itself, where is the necessity or question from freeing myself from attachment, anxiety and anger?"

Once I understand that mokshaa is "freedom from mind and that I am ever free from mind and its conditions" mukthi becomes my very nature as a saakshi. And, once I learn to claim mukthi as my nature, I do not look upon saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi as a condition for mokshaa. Looking upon them as condition for mokshaa, is again a misunderstanding of the real teaching of Vedhaanthaa, because, once I know that mokshaa is my very nature, where is the question of any 'condition'?. Nature is that, which is 'unconditional'. Fire is not hot under a given 'condition'. Heat is the 'unconditional' nature of fire. In a similar manner mokshaa or mukthi is the very nature of the 'self' and therefore, the seeker should get out of the idea / the mind set "I am lacking in saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi; therefore, I am lacking mokshaa ; therefore, I have to do more saadhanaa for mokshaa". Instead, he should understand "saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not a saadhanam for mokshaa; 'I' am the nithya muktha saakshi ; I should never assess myself, based on the conditions of the mind, because, 'I', the saakshi, have nothing to do with the entire anaathmaa, the entire sareerathrayam and the conditions of the mind".

This is the second secret / hidden message behind the teaching of saakshi- ahamkaara – vivekaa.

To repeat all the above, in a nutshell: The definition of mokshaa as "freedom from attachment, anxiety and anger" is only a 'provisional' definition and similarly the condition that "saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is an essential qualification for mokshaa" is also only a 'provisional' condition. The ideas of both these 'provisional' definition and 'provisional' condition can/ should be entertained by the seeker, during the initial stages of his spiritual pursuit – during the Karma Yoga practice. But, once the seeker advances to the stage of saakshi-ahamkaara- viveka, as even as the seeker does the study, he should get out of this mindset entertaining the 'provisional' definition of mokshaa and the 'provisional' condition for mokshaa. Instead, he should realize that he is nithya muktha saakshi; and mukthi being his svaroopam, it does not need any qualification or pre-condition such as saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi. This process is called apavaadhaa; all these should be 'discerned' by the student during his study of saakshi-amamkaara-viveka.

This gives rise to the next question: Does this mean that. after study and assimilation of saakshi-ahamkaara- viveka, the seeker should not concentrate on saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi or need not concentrate on veetha-raagha-bhaya-krodhaa ?

The saasthraas and Achaaryaas reply: "If you are a responsible jnaani, you continue to work on saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi and veetha raagha bhaya krodhathvam, not as saadhanaas for mokshaa, (because, for a jnaani, mokshaa is svaroopam and unconditional). But, you continue to work (on these) for the sake of loka sangraham."

"Loka sangraham sampasyan karthum arhasi" – "considering the harmony of the society, you should act" – (Krishna exhorts Arjuna - Bhagavadh Githa – Ch. II – Verse 20). A responsible jnaani is very particular about loka sangraha: | Therefore, for him, saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi and veetha raagha bhaya krodhathvam are not moksha saadhanaani; but are loka sangraha saadhanaani!"

Not only are they loka sangraha saadhanaani; but, as Sage Narada points out in Narada Bhakthi Soothraani, the jnaani has got another responsibility – "Nischayadhaardyaath oordhvam saasthrarakshanam" (soothram 12) – implying "a jnaani has to protect the saasthraa also".

A jnaani is intensely aware, that, whether he likes or not, he is an 'advertisement' for the saasthram. (In fact, in the case of any seeker also, whether he likes it or not, the moment he comes to Vedhaantha, his behaviour is used by others, to judge the glory of the saasthraas and the glory of his guru. The seeker's behaviour is an 'advertisement' to the society) Every jnaani can be a positive 'advertisement' or negative 'advertisement' for saasthraas. A jnaani is intensely aware of this - that the world judges saasthraas, based not on the jnaanam of the jnaani; but, based on his behaviour – on the behaviour of anaathmaa. He has to be, therefore, extremely careful about his behaviour, for the purposes of protection of saasthraas (saasthra rakshanaartham) and the harmony of the society (loka sangrahaartham). Saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi and veetha raagha bhaya krodhathvam, therefore, become important for a jnaani also, though not as moksha saadhanaani.

The jnaani has, therefore, to pay attention to both, though, after saakshi-ahamkaara-viveka, he is perfectly aware that he is a nithya-muktha-saakshi, free of the mind also and that he does not require saadhana-chathushtaya-sampatthi as a saadhanaa for mukthi.

Saadhana-chathushtaya-sampatthi and veetha-raagha-bhaya-krodhathvam belong to anaathmaa; anaathmaa is mithyaa; anaathmaa is adhyastham. They do not even have real existence. Then, where is the question of connecting mokshaa to them?

Theses are the secret / hidden messages; and every seeker should revise the definition of mokshaa and the 'conditions' for mokshaa, after this viveka (saakshi-ahamkaara viveka).

Every teacher dwells at length, on this topic of saakshi-ahamkaara viveka, expecting the perceptive student to drop the 'provisional' definition (of mokshaa) and the 'provisional' conditions (for mokshaa), and also to realize that, these two are relevant only in triangular format and in binary format, are no more relevant.

The question, "when am I likely to get liberated?" is, therefore, meaningless. This question also would automatically lose its relevance, after assimilation of saakshi-ahamkaara-viveka.

Sureswaraachaarya (impliedly) asks (in this verse 89) "Why are you looking for definitions of mokshaa? Why are you looking for 'conditions' for mokshaa? "

(Saakshi) sadhaa eekshathe – you are the saakshi who is the witness of raaghaa, bhayam and krodhaa - you are not the possessor of raaghaa, bhayam and krodhaa. Understand and claim this saakshi as your svaroopam.

The current verses are to be studied and understood, with these hidden messages in mind.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 90 :

सर्वदेहेषु आत्मैकत्वे प्रतिबुद्ध परमार्थतत्त्वस्यापि अप्रतिबुद्ध देहसंबन्धात् अशेषदुःख संबन्धः इति चेत् तन्न ।

Here it is objected: If there is a single Self in all bodies, he who is enlightened about ultimate Reality, must realize his identity with the Self in other bodies, in which this enlightenment has not taken place. Hence he must suffer all the sufferings in the world. The reply is this:

Many students keep missing these hidden messages (elaborated above). This sambhandha gadhyam is about a student who misses the hidden messages and raises a poorvapakshaa.

What is the message given by this teaching of aathma-ahamkaara-vivekaa ?

"I am the saakshi of the mind; therefore, I am different from the mind; therefore, I do not have raaghaa, bhayam, krodhaa etc., in any of the three periods of time; and, therefore, I need not work for freedom from them. I am ever-free saakshi; not only that, I am not even limited to this body. I am the saakshi behind every mind; I am all-pervading saakshi, different from the localized mind".

The student (the poorva pakshin) interprets this wrongly. He argues: "Until now, I thought, I am the samsaari aathmaa suffering from the raaghaa, bhaya, krodha etc. belonging to this (my) mind. But, now you are telling me, that, I am the all-pervading aathmaa; therefore, what conclusion can I come to ? That, I have got the sorrows of not only my mind, but, because I am the aathmaa behind all the minds, I have got the sorrows of all the minds. Previously as a limited aathmaa, I had a limited samsaaraa; now, I have got the samsaaraa of all the minds – mahaa samsaaraa, because saasthraas say 'you should see yourself in all the beings' - 'vidhya vinaya sampanne sarva bhootheshu aathmaanam pasyathi'; since, I have to see myself in all the people, I have to assume the samsaaraa of all the people; therefore, now, I am worried about the entire humanity".

In fact, some people even proudly claim "I do not want to work for my mokshaa alone. It is selfishness. Let me work for the mokshaa of the downtrodden". Such people also claim "we are 'superior' to the Vedhaanthin, since the Vedhaanthin works only for his personal mokshaa, whereas we are so generous, that, we are working for the mokshaa of entire humanity". Thus, people have a misconception, that, "expansion" of aathmaa, is "taking the samsaaraa of all the people and feeling 'I am a mahaa samsaari'".

Because of this misconception, the poorva pakshin says:

- सर्वदेहेषु आत्म एकत्वे - "If there is only one aathmaa which is behind all the bodies,
- प्रतिबुद्ध परमार्थतत्त्वस्य अपि - (then) even for a jnaani, who has understood the Aathmaa,

Prathibuddha paramaarthathathva: - a jnaani ; prathibuddham paramaarthathathvam ena sa: |

In verse 89, the Achaaryaa had said: 'I, the aathmaa, is behind all the minds'. The poorva pakshin, who has understood mokshaa as 'freedom from raaghaa, bhayam and krodhaa', therefore, reacts: "Based on your statement, a jnaani, now has to remove the raagha, bhaya and krodhaa not only from his mind, but, from all the other minds also".

अप्रतिबुद्ध देहसंबन्धात् - because he (the jnaani) has taken association with all ajnaanis' dehaas,

The intention of the Vedhaanthic teaching is that the jnaani has to disassociate himself from his own mind also; but, in the name of 'aham sarvagatha aathmaad', he gets associated with all the minds. What is the basis for this wrong association? "I am the aathmaa behind all the minds; therefore, sarva mana: sambhandha: aham"

Aprathi buddha deha – all the other (ajnaanis) minds also; sambhandhaath – because of association (with)

This association comes after the Vedhaanthic study; instead of seeing eka aathmaa, the student claims sarva aathmaa, extending his problems further. 'Expanding' the ego has resulted in bigger samsaaraa; earlier, the student was selfish, worried about only his samsaaraa; now, he has become a selfless person, identifying with the whole world, therefore, worrying about the whole world. Thus Vedhaanthaa has lead to more worries; 'worry about the self' is replaced by 'worries about the whole world'.

All these are the doubts of the poorva pakshi.

'Aprathi buddha' means an ajnaani; and deha, in this context, specifically means the sookshma deha / the mind and its worries. Aprathi buddha deha means 'all the other minds'.

"Wiping out the tears of all the people in this world" is the agenda of the jnaani (interprets the poorva pakshi). Therefore, what will be the consequence of Vedhaantha, according to the poorva pakshin?

- अशेष दुःख संबन्धः - association with all the sufferings in the world (results)".

By taking upon the 'universal self', the jnaani has taken upon himself 'universal worry' (again only in the perspective of the poorva pakshin).

- इति चेत् - If this is the argument of the poorva pakshin,
- तद् न - this is not the aim of Vedhaantha.

Up to "ithi cheth" is the poorva pakshin. "Thanna" is where the Achaaryaa's reply starts.

'Universal identification' is not the aim of Vedhaantha. The aim, which is different, is covered by the sloka, that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 90 –

बोधात्प्रागपि दुःखित्वं नान्यदेहोत्थमस्ति न :।

बोधादूर्ध्वं कुतस्तत्स्याध्यत्र स्वगतमप्यसत् ॥ ९० ॥

Even before our attaining enlightenment, the sufferings occurring in other bodies do not affect us. How can, what occurs in other bodies, affect us after enlightenment, in which state, the sufferings occurring even in our bodies cease to be for us?

This is a very beautiful, significant verse.

The gist of the verse:

Through jeevathma-paramaathma eikyam, the aim of Vedhaantha is, not to make the seeker identify with the total mind. If with one individual mind, the seeker has got minor worries, by identifying with universal/ total mind, he will have 'total'/ major worries, which, obviously cannot be termed mokshaa, but, will only be bigger samsaaraa.

Then, what is the aim of Vedhaanthaa? Through jeevaathma-paramaathma eiykyam, Vedhaanthaa wants to negate both the individual mind and the total mind from the seeker, through bhaagha thyaaga lakshanaa.

Normally, an individual, an ajnaani samsaari, is worried about the members of his family, when they go through their praarabhdtaa, because of his love / attachment and compassion for them. He find himself unable to get over his worries. When such is the case, if he develops love for and attachment (abhimaanaa) with the whole world, his worries will only multiply infinitely.

From this perspective, Isvara also must be the most disturbed, if He has got abhimaanaa with the macro anaathmaa. But, Isvara is 'liberated'. Why?; because of only one reason : He knows that the whole universe / macro anaathmaa is mithyaa. If Isvara takes the universe as sathyam, the worry / sufferings of all the people must also be sathyam and the compassionate Isvara must be worried all the time, about the sufferings of His children, all over the world, especially since it is not possible to create a world totally free of suffering.

The conclusion: 'Liberation' for jeeva or Isvara, is only through the knowledge "I am neither the micro-mind nor the macro-mind".

Isvara is free, not because He has identified with the whole world; but, because He has dis-identified with the whole world. The aim of Vedhaanthaa is – not identification with the vyashti mind or identification with the samashti mind - but, to imbibe in the seeker, the conviction "I am free from both. I am neither jeeva; nor Isvara. Jeevathvam is mithyaa; Isvarathvam is also mithyaa. I am the aathmaa which is free from both vyashti and samashti". This is the message behind mahaa vaakyam.

Isvara's freedom is from the knowledge that everything, including His Isvara status, is mithyaa. Mokshaa is knowing "I am asanga aathmaa; neither jeeva: nor Isvara."

When am I free? Not after aiykyam; but, all the time.

- बोधात् प्राक् अपि - Even before knowledge,
- अन्यदेहोत्थं दुःखित्वं - the sorrow belonging to other minds(Dhu:kithvam means sorrow)
- न अस्ति - is not there,
- नः - for us (the Vedhaanthic students).

I do not have the sorrows of other minds, even before self-knowledge? When such is the case (that is, when I am not having sorrow of the other minds, before self-knowledge), how can you say, that, after self-knowledge, I will have sorrows of all the minds?

This argument is based on what is known as kaimuthika nyaayam.

An ajnaani never takes others' sorrows as his sorrow, even as an ajnaani.

This being the case (Sureswaraachaaryaa points out),

- बोधादूर्ध्व - After self-knowledge,
- कुतः तत् स्यात् - how can a jnaani can take the sorrows of the total mind, in the name of Isvara eikyam?

The fact is: "After jnaanam, I do not take sorrows of other minds as mine; on the other hand, I reject even sorrows of my mind; I do not take even sorrows of my mind as 'my' sorrow. When, at times, my mind goes through states of sorrow, my jnaanam reminds 'me' that 'I' am 'asanga saakshi'; that, I have no connection with the mind nor the sorrow of the mind; that both of them are mithyaa and I can never be touched by any one of them".

"Amanasthvaath na me dhu:kha raagha dvesha bhayaadhaya:"- "since 'I' do not have a mind, I am free from attachment, aversion and anxiety also" declares Athma Bodha (verse 33) of Adi Sankaraachaarya.

"I do not have mind; therefore, I am ever free from sorrow" is the message.

93. Chapter II, Verse 90 to 92 (05-04-2008)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is answering a poorva pakshaa raised by the saamkhyaa philosopher. This is important, because, saamkhyaa and Vedhaanthaa have got very close affinity. Even the word saamkhyaa is used for Vedhaanthaa and therefore the saamkyaa objections have to be answered by the Vedhaanthin. That's why, in the Brahma Soothras - Chapter I, in the first paadhaa, most of the adhikaranams are refutations of saamkhyaa philosophy only.

When we, the Vedhaanthins, are engaged on the topic of aathma-anaathma viveka, the saamkhyaa philosopher is very happy, because both of us (the saamkyaa and Vedhaanthaa philosophers) agree with regard to aathma-anaathma viveka. Anaathmaa includes the mind also and when the Vedhaanthin dwells on the aathmaa-mind discrimination / the saakshi-mind discrimination, the saamkyaa philosopher approves and appreciates the Vedhaanthin. But, towards the end of the discriminative process, when the Vedhaanthin claims, that, this aathmaa, the 'I', who am different from the mind, happens to be only One (ekam), which is all-pervading and which is behind all the minds (kshethragnyam chaapi maam viddhi sarvekshethrushu Bhaaratha - Srimad Bhagavadh Githa - Chapter XIII - Verse 2) i.e., when the Vedhaanthin talks of aathma ekathvam, the saamkyaa philosopher is shocked.

He objects vociferously: "Until now you were talking sanity and sense; suddenly how can you make this unacceptable claim that aathmaa is One behind all the antha:karanams?" He insists that such a view is untenable, because, according to his reasoning: "if aathmaa is one behind all the minds, it will mean that I am behind all the minds and if I am behind all the minds, then I will be associated with all the minds, and if I am associated with all the minds, then I will be associated with the dhu:kham / pain of all the minds. That means I will have sarva dhu:kithvam. Before aathma ekathva jnaanam I had only eka mano dhu:kha sambhandhaa ; now, after aathma ekathva jnaanam, sarva mano dhu:ka sambhandhaa will result. This will make me more miserable."

The Vedhaanthin answers: "aathma ekaathvam is not my imagination; aathma ekathvam is consistently taught by all the Upanishads, as the thaathparyam. 'Eko deva: sarva bhootheshu bhooma:' and 'Saakshee chethaa kevalo nirgunascha' etc. are examples of such Upanishadic manthraas. That 'there is only one (kevala:) saakshee', is loudly proclaimed by all the Upanishads. In the Isaavaasya Upanishad, where it is said: 'anejad ekam manaso javeeya: nainaddevaa aapnuvan poorvamarshath' (manthraa 4), by the term 'ekam', 'aathma ekathvam' is taught. Again in the same Isaavaasya Upanishad, it is said: 'sarva bhootheshu cha aathmaanam thatho na vijugupsathe' (manthraa 6) - 'jnaani understands aathmaa as the One behind all the bodies and all the minds'. This aathma ekathvam is taught not only in the sruthis; it is taught in the smrithis also; for instance, in the Bhagavadh

Githa (which is the essence of the Upanishads), Lord Krishna says '(yogayukthaathmaa) sarva boothaastham aathmaanam sarva bhoothaani aathmani (cha ikshathe)' – '(the jnaani perceives) the Self in all beings and all beings in the Self' (Ch. VI – Verse 29). Thus, aathma ekathvam is the Upanishadic teaching."

In response, the saamkhyaa philosopher protests: "No, aathma ekathvam cannot be the teaching of the Upanishads. Even if any Upanishad makes a statement to this effect, it should not be accepted as the real Upanishadic teaching ; but, should be interpreted differently; because, if the Upanishadic teaching is 'I am the aathmaa behind all the minds', the consequence will be, as I explained, I will have sarva dhu:kham or maha dhu:kham. Obviously, that cannot be the aim of the Upanishad. Therefore, you have to interpret the teaching properly".

The Vedhaanthin answers: "Our interpretation is only proper. I will explain. You said 'when aathmaa is eka:, it will have sarva dhu:kha sambhandaa (in support of which you had given some arguments)'. You also pointed out: 'sarva dhu:khithvam cannot be the aim of the Upanishads. Sarva dhu:kha sambhandhaa cannot be the teaching of the Upanishad, because that is prathyaksha virodham. Sarva dhu:kha sambhandhaa cannot be taught as a prayojanam of the Upanishads, because nobody seeks the prayojanam of sarva dhu:kha sambhandhaa'. While I agree with your view, that, sarva dhu:khithvam cannot be the prayojanam of the Upanishads. I am firm in my view, that aathma ekathvam is the teaching of the Upanishad, "But, why should aathma ekathvam be understood as the Upanishadic teaching? Because, the Upanishad is consistently teaching aathma ekathvam as its central theme. Therefore, while we should accept aathma ekathvam, at the same time, there should not be sarva dhu:kha sambhandhaa also. How do you manage this? How should the interpretation be made? It should be made in such a way, that aathma ekathvam must be understood as the message / teaching of the Upanishads, at the same time, taking care to see that sarva dhu:kha sambhandaa does not become a consequence.

"There is only one way by which this can be managed ; which is, understanding the fact, that, 'even though aathmaa is eka: and even though aathmaa is behind all the minds, aathmaa is asangha:; and, therefore, aathmaa does not have sambhandhaa with any of the minds. And, since this eka aathmaa does not have sambhandhaa with any mind, aathmaa cannot have sambhandhaa with sarva mano dhu:kam also and therefore there is no scope for the objection that aathmaa will have sarva dhu:kham.

"Not only this; we get some other prayojanam also, because of the asanghaa nature of aathmaa. What is the other prayojanam? Since aathmaa is understood to be asangha:, it does not have sambhandhaa with my mind also ; and, therefore, not only does aathmaa not have sarva dhu:kham , it does not have even eka mano dhu:kham . Even my mind's sorrow is not my sorrow. I do not have the sorrow of any of the minds in the world and I do not have the sorrow of my mind also. Even when my mind goes through sorrow, as a Vedhaanthin, I will declare, that, I am only the saakshi of the mind; I am asangha; ; I have no manas sambhandha; ; therefore I have no sambhandhaa with sorrow; na mey dvesha raaghau na mey lobha mogau madho naive mey naive maascharya bhaava: (Verse 3 – Nirvaana Shatkam of Sankara Bhavadh Paadhaa).

“When do I make this declaration? Even when my mind has raaghadvveshaa, since I should be firmly convinced that I have no sambhandhaa with my mind; I have no sambhandhaa with the raagha-dveshaa also; and, therefore, should declare ‘chidhaannadarooopa: sivo ham sivo ham’ |

“Thus, ekamano dhu:kha sambhandha: api naasthi | This is Upanishadic teaching; when, thus, the Upanishad wants to remove the sorrow of even one’s own mind, how can you say, that the Upanishad wants to give one, all the sorrows of all the minds? Such an interpretation is only the result of not properly understanding the significance of aathma ekathva jnaanam”.

Reverting to the text (sloka 90):

- बोधात् प्राक् अपि - Even before self-knowledge,
- नः - for us (the aathmaa)
- अन्यदेहोत्थं दुःखित्वं न अस्ति - there can be no sorrows, belonging to the entire humanity / there can be no sorrow resulting from sufferings of others.
- बोधादूर्ध्वं कुतः तत् स्यात् - (That being the case) how can that sarva dhu:ka come to me after knowledge ?

When the aathmaa cannot be affected by the sufferings of others, even before self-knowledge, how can sarva dhu:kham come, after the study of the Upanishads?

The aim of the Upanishad cannot be ‘transferring all others’ sorrows upon me’.

Then, what is the result of the knowledge? Certainly not ‘taking’ others’ dhu:kham; but, rejecting even my own dhu:kham. The so-called ‘my’ dhu:kham is, really speaking, not ‘my’ dhu:kham; it is only my mithyaa mind, that suffers some mithyaa dhu:kham, because of some mithyaa problems; but, ‘I’ should not and shall not claim the problems of my mind, as ‘my’ problems.

This can verily be called the ‘practice of the binary format’. The aim is not to ‘remove’ the sorrow from one’s mind; but, the aim is ‘to abstain from claiming’ the sorrow which is in one’s mind, as one’s sorrow. This is a saadhanaa (to be practiced).

- असत् - (is) mithyaa,
- यत्र - where (i.e. aathmani / to 'me' the aathmaa.)
- स्वगतं अपि - Even the sorrow belonging to my mind

'I' have no sambhandhaa with the sorrow belonging to my mind.

And, after thus 'disclaim'ing the sorrow of one's mind as 'one's' sorrow, by deliberate practice of the binary format, thereafter, one can try to improve / refine / cleanse the mind objectively. "Detach the mind, detach from the mind, see the mind as mithyaa or anaathmaa and then try to improve the mind. But, even while trying to improve the mind, do not connect it to your liberation. Your 'freedom' has no connection with the 'level' of your mind" is the ultimate Vedhaanthic teaching.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 91:

न चेयं स्वमनीषिकेति ग्राह्यम् । कुतः । श्रुत्यवष्टम्भात् ।

This is not a thesis fabricated by ourselves. It is based on the authority of the sruthi.

"This is the final teaching of Vedhaantha; this is not my philosophy" Sureswaraacharya tells the saamkyaa philosopher, since, the saamkyaa philosopher is an aasthikaa, who accepts Veda pramaanam.

In the beginning stages of Vedhaanthic study, a provisional definition of mokshaa is given, as "mokshaa is 'the mind being free from sorrow'". This ('mind being free from sorrow is mokshaa') is the definition given in the initial stages, because, a beginner of the Vedhaanthic studies, does not know aathmaa and assumes 'I am the mind'. Therefore a provisional definition 'mind being free from emotional disturbances is mokshaa' and a further provisional definition 'mind not traveling after death is mokshaa' are initially given, to help the student gain saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi; and thereafter to move on to mahaa vaakya vichaaraa. Once this progress to mahaa vaakya vichaaraa is made, the above provisional definitions of mokshaa are to be given up. 'The freedom of the mind from emotions' is not the goal of Vedhaantha, since, the mind will always suffer some emotion or other. You can 'improve' the mind; but, it can never be made totally free from jvara: | In Panchadasi (Chapter VII) Swami Vidyaaranyaa says that the mind has certain jvaraas, which you cannot remove – especially vaasanaa-based jvaraas. Then what is mokshaa? "I am not the mind; therefore, 'I am free from any form of emotional disturbance" is the real teaching of the Upanishad.

“I’ need not worry about ‘traveling after death’ or about ‘not traveling after death’, because, ‘I’ am not the mind, ‘I’ am the ever non-traveling aathmaa and in ‘me’, the non-traveling aathmaa, millions of minds are traveling; and, whether one particular mind travels or not, why should ‘I’ be concerned; if ‘I’ get concerned, it only means that I had not studied Vedhaanthaa properly”.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says: “Note this real teaching of Vedhaanthaa”.

- इयं - (That) “this statement
- न स्वमनीषिका - is not my own thesis”

Maneeshika means jnaanam.

- इति ग्राह्यम् - should be understood.

“This is not my jnaanam / my understanding / my view / my philosophy” states the Acharya.

- कुतः - Why (do I say this)?
- श्रुति अवष्टम्भात् - Since this teaching is based on / supported by sruthi.

Avashtambhanam - base / support / substantiation / reinforcement / corroboration.

The sruthi clearly teaches: “You are not the mind. Therefore, never judge yourself based on your mind. If you are going to judge yourself based on mind, you will never claim ‘I am liberated’. You will have the eternal complaint “I am not a jeevan mukthaa. Something must be lacking in me – probably saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi.”

When jeevan mukthi is itself in doubt, the fear ‘whether videha mukthi will ever come or not’ will be an eternal puzzle (worrying the saadhakaa). Therefore, it should be firmly noted: “‘I’ am free, in spite of the conditions of the mind, because ‘I’ am neither the mind nor is the mind belonging to me”.

Therefore Sureswaraacharya exhorts: “Practice detaching from the mind”, implying, “drop self-judgment based on your mental ups and downs, caused by the fluctuations of satthwa gunaa, rajo gunaa and thamo gunaa. The mind will be eternally fluctuating even for a mahaa jnaani; even for a mahaa jnani, mind is not going to be constant; even the jnaani cannot stop mental fluctuations; but, the difference (between a jnaani and an ajnaani) is that the jnaani has stopped bothering about mental fluctuations. As Lord Krishna said in the Bhagavadh Githa (verse 22- Ch. XIV) ‘prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha moham eve cha paandava na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaankshathf – ‘(The jnaani) does not hate brightness, activity and delusion (results of satthwa gunaa, rajo gunaa and thamo gunaa respectively) as they arise; nor does he desire for them, as they withdraw”.

Verse 91 – Chapter II :

शब्दाध्याकारनिर्भासा हानोपादानधर्मिणी ।

भास्येत्याह श्रुतिद्वष्टिरात्मनोऽपरिणामिनः ॥ ९१ ॥

Sruthi* affirms that there is a seeing illumined by the unchanging Self, which sheds light on external objects like sound and colour and engages in appropriating and avoiding objects.

Sureswaraacharya says: “The consistent Upanishadic teaching is that you are the observer of the mind. The mind is neither ‘you’ nor is it ‘yours’ ”

Because, if the Vedhaanthin states “my mind is not ‘me’”, then a counter-argument can be raised: “I know that ‘I’ am not the mind ; but, since the mind belongs to ‘me’, I am worried” (similar to worrying about one’s children). Thus, the worry can be either ahamkaaraa based or mamakaaraa based. But, Sruthi clearly says “mind does not deserve ahamkaaraa also; mind does not deserve mamakaaraa also”.

Sruthi says:

- द्रष्टिः - “Every experience in the mind,
- शब्दाधि आकार निर्भासा - which resembles the external five-fold sense objects, known as sabdha, sparsa, roopa, rasa and gandha,

Nirbhaasaa – resembling / aabhaasa: / samaana: |

An experience always resembles the external object experienced, because the thought is in alignment with the external object. For instance, if one sees a pot, there is a pot-aakaara-vrutthi; therefore, the pot experience resembles the pot outside. Pot experience is ‘inner’ pot; the pot outside is ‘outer’ pot. One is ‘thought’ pot; the other is ‘material’ pot.

In the same manner, every experience resembles the corresponding external object of the world. And, these experiences will produce varieties of emotions, which are also ‘experiences’. Further, when I see an object, if I get a desire for the object, that desire is also another form of experience, which will be called raagha vrutthi:; (so also dvesha vrutthi:)

Thus varieties of experiences are in the mind, resembling the external objects.

And, what is the nature of these experiences?

- हान उपादान धर्मिणी - and subject to arrival & departure /subject to 'taking' & dropping / subject to reception & rejection,

Upaadhaanam – taking / receiving; haanam - dropping / abandoning / rejection.

You 'take' an experience and 'drop' an experience ; for instance, when you switch on the television, you 'take' the experiences in the mind's frame and when you switch the television off, you 'drop' the experiences.

Both the words 'haana' and 'upaadhaana' are adjectives to dhrushti: (in the second line of the verse). 'Sabhdhaadhi aakaara nirbhaasaa dhrushti:' and 'haana upaadhaana dharminee dhrushti:' (are the two terms descriptive of dhrushti: /)

- भास्या - is an object in the (train of the) mind"

By directing the mind, the external world's image is formed on the mind (similar to getting visuals on the television screen, by operating the television). The mind, like an advanced camera turned towards different objects, casts images on the mental screen; and, who am 'I'? 'I' am the 'illuminator' of these experiences on the mental frame.

And, when there is a 'sorrow' image in the mental frame, there is sorrow; but, the 'sorrow' is only in the mind frame, while 'I' am only the 'illuminator' or 'observer'. Therefore, there is no reason, as to why one should say 'I' am sorrowful'. Instead the reaction should be: "I am never sorrowful, though my mind may be full of sorrow" (again similar to watching a tragic play on the television screen – though I watch the 'tragedy', I am not involved in the tragedy – I am only the 'observer' of the tragedy).

Sruthi exhorts: "Disclaim that 'sorrow' (of your mind)". The aim of Vedhaantha is not 'elimination' of sorrow (or other emotions); but, the teaching "'you' do not have sorrow (or other emotions)" is the central theme of Vedhaantha.

But, unfortunately, this central theme is quite often missed; even after a prolonged study of Vedhaantha, tending to look upon oneself as the mind, which mind certainly is not free of emotions or worries, one fails to realize the fact, that, one is free from emotions or worries, even though one's mind may suffer from the emotions. What is required is a 'shift' in the perspective. A Vedhaanthin can boldly claim that he is free from emotions all the time and that he is ever blissful. Sruthi declares: "Aanando brahmethi vyajaanaath" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Bhrgu Valli – Manthraa 6) "aananda aathmaa" (Thaithreeya Upanishad – Brahma Valli – Manthraa 5).

"Claim that 'I' am bhimbha aanandha: | Prathibhimbha aanandaa in the mind may be there or, on most occasions, may not be there. The arrival and departure of prathibhimbha aanandhaa have nothing to do with the fact that 'I' am aanandha:" is the teaching that the Vedhaanthic guru struggles to impart to the student, even from the initial stages ; the primer in the Vedhaanthic study, "Thathva Bodhaa" defines aathmaa as "sthoola sookshma kaarana sareeraath vyathiriktha:", pointing out "'I' have no sambhandhaa with the emotions in 'my' mind, which mind is a component of 'my' sookshma sareeram".

But, of course, it is difficult (but not impossible) to change to this perspective.

Sureswaraachaarya says: "Dhrushti: bhaasyaa" – "The experiences are objects of your knowledge".

- इति श्रुतिः आह - thus states the sruthi (thus the sruthi is asking you to detach from the mind).

And, who are you? Sruthi states:

- आत्मनः अपरिणामिनः - This mind (with emotional disturbances) is an object of 'aathmaa' who does not have any emotional variations / disturbances / modifications.

The term 'aathmana: aparinaamina:' is to be connected to the word 'bhaasyaa'.

As already indicated earlier, this message "sookshma sareeraath vyathiriktha:", very often, is (unfortunately) not received properly by a seeker. In the Bhagavadh Githa, when Lord Krishna talks of a sthitha prangyaa (in Ch. II), a para bhaktha (in Ch. XII) and a guna atheethaa (in Ch. XIV), He gives a description of the poised mind of the sthitha prangyaa, a para bhakthaa and a guna atheethaa, which leads the student to the conclusion that 'the mind being free from sorrow' is mokshaa. But, it should be remembered that the 'poise of the mind' is only a provisional description of mokshaa; and, in fact, the Lord, in these portions, only describes the mind of a jnaani, and is not giving a description of mokshaa. The real description of mokshaa is the realization "'I' am not the mind".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 92:

का तु असौ श्रुतिः।

Which is this sruthi passage?

In the previous verse, the Achaaryaa had said: "sruthi says you are not the mind; that is the central teaching to be noted. Only when you detach from the mind, you can claim 'I am nithya muktha.'; otherwise, the claim is never possible. This is the teaching of the sruthi".

Then the poorva pakshin asks: "You say that this is the teaching of the sruthi. Where is it taught?"

- का तु असौ श्रुतिः - What is that sruthi vaakyam which says that 'I' am not the mind?

Sruthi., in this context, denotes sruthi vaakyam.

Any number of sruthi vaakyams to this effect (that 'I' am not the mind) can be quoted, which vaakyams, unfortunately, the poorva pakshin seems to have missed, while, a diligent Advaitha Vedhaanthic student will never miss the import of these sruthi vaakyams; in fact, even in meditation, he would endeavour to imbibe the message of these sruthi vaakyams – which message can be briefly referred to, as the 'binary format', i.e. consisting of aathmaa and anaathmaa only.

The well known sruthi vakyam, on this topic, is in the Mundakopanishad (II.i.2) – "Divyo hi amoortha: purusha: sabhaahyaabhyantharo hi aja: apraano hi amanaa: subhra: hi aksharaath paratha: para." – "Brahman is indeed self-effulgent, formless, within and without, birthless, without Praanaa, without mind, pure and beyond Maayaa, which is beyond the world". In this manthraa, the word amanaa: means "Mind is not 'me'; nor is it 'mine'".

Sureswaraachaarya quotes two Brahadhaarnayaka Manthraas, III. iv.2 - Ushastha: Brahmanam and II.iv.14 - Kapola Brahmanam.

Manthraa B.U.III.iv.2, runs: "Na dhrashte: dhrashtaaram pasye:, na sruthe: srothaaram srunyaath, na mathe: manthaaram manveethaa:, na vignaathe: vignyaathaaram vijaaneeyaa." – "You cannot see that which is the witness of vision; you cannot hear that which is the hearer of hearing; you cannot think that which is the thinker of thought; you cannot know that which is the knower of knowledge".

Chapter II: Verse 92 –

द्रष्टे :द्रष्टारमात्मानं न पश्येद्र्श्यमानया ।

विजातारमरे केन विजानीयाद्वियां पतिम् ॥ ९२ ॥

'You cannot see the Seer of the seeing with the help of the mind which itself belongs to the realm of the seen' (B.U. III. iv. 2). 'Through what means can you know the knower, who is the Lord of all minds? (B.U. II. iv. 14).

- आत्मानं न पश्ये: - You will never see the aathmaa,

Of course, this is not very relevant to the present subject; but, it is part of the Upanishadic manthraa quoted by the Achaaryaa.

"You will never see the aathmaa, because aathmaa is not the 'seen', but, it is 'you', the 'seer'. It is never seen."

What type of aathmaa? This is relevant to us.

- द्रष्टे :द्रष्टारं - which is the Witness of all the mental experiences,

Dhraste: - means 'of every experience'; dhrashtaaram - Witness.

"You will never see the 'seer' you, the aathmaa, which is the Witness of all the mental experiences and therefore different from the mind and its experiences".

- द्रश्यमानया - through another mental experience

"You will not see the 'seer' aathmaa, which is the 'seer' of mental experiences, through another mental experience. Through mental experience (the use of the word 'mental' as adjective to 'experiences' is redundant, since all experiences are only mental – but, the word 'mental' is used here, for confirmation / emphasis) you can see the external world ; but, through another mental experience, you cannot see the aathmaa, which (itself) is the Witness of the mental experience".

- Dhrusyamaanayaa means: 'through a particular mental experience'.

Therefore, aathma jnaanam is not a particular experience through which you know the aathmaa.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa emphasizes: "The objectified mental experience cannot objectify the aathmaa".

The anvayam of this (part of) the verse: "(Thvam) dhrashte: dhrashtaaram aathmaanam dhrusyamaanayaa (dhrushtyaa) na pasye:" – "You will not see the aathmaa, through an experience, which experience itself is an object of aathma".

For these verses in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa has written very, very elaborate commentaries. His commentary on the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad is considered to be his magnum opus, most profound, sometimes considered even superior to his Brahma Soothra Bhaashyam.

This (III. iv. 2) is one Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad vaakyam quoted here.

Another Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad vaakyam quoted by the Aachaaryaa is:

- विजातारं केन विजानीयात् - How will anyone know the 'knower'?

Vignyaathaara: - the 'knower'; vijaaneeya - to know.

This is not a question; but, intended to emphasize that 'no one can know the 'knower'. Why not? Because, once you know the 'knower', it will no more be the 'knower' but the 'known'. 'Knower' will ever be a 'knower' only and never be the 'known'.

And therefore, never attempt to 'know' the aathmaa or experience the athmaa, in nirvikalpaka samaadhi etc. The attempts will be miserable failures.

There is no question of 'experiencing' aathmaa; only claiming "I was, I am and I ever will be sacchidhaanada aathmaa".

That 'claiming' is a thought and that 'claiming thought' does not objectify aathmaa but is meant to remove ignorance. Claiming has to take place in the form of a thought "I am ever the 'knower' and never the 'known'". This claiming is a thought in the mind and this claiming thought is called aathma jnaanam.

But, (a doubt may arise) when this 'claiming' thought does not objectify aathmaa, how can it be called jnaanam? Ans: It is called jnaanam, because the thought (or knowledge) is the remover of ignorance. The thought is required, to remove ignorance, since, otherwise (without the thought), the seeker will continue other efforts like meditation, in the search for aathma jnaanam and will be eternally waiting for aathma jnaanam. Whereas, the 'waiting' should and will end with this 'thought'.

To repeat: The thought (that 'I' am ever the 'knower'; but never the 'known'), is ignorance-remover thought and not aathmaa-objectifier thought. And, being ignorance-remover, Vedhaanthee calls it aathma jnaanam. This is what is stated in technical language, as: "There is vrutthi vyaapthi to remove ignorance; there is no pala vyaapthi to objectify aathmaa".

"Vignaathaaram are vijaaneeyath" – "Who will 'know' the 'knower'?", Yagnyavalkya addresses (are is the word indicating address) Maithreyi, in Maithreyi Brahmanam of the Brahadhaarnyaka Upanishad (B.U. II. Iv. 14).

What is that 'knower' aathmaa?

- धियां पतिम् - which 'knower' aathma is the Lord of all the minds (and, therefore, which is different from all the minds)

94. Chapter II, Verse 92 to 95 (12-04-2008)

Sureswaraachaarya points out that the nature of aathmaa, the saakshi chaithanyam, can be derived not only with the help of reasoning, but, it is supported by sruthi pramaanam also.

The first stage of reasoning is, that, 'I', the observer, is different from whatever I am observing, and since the body, the mind and the world are 'observed' objects, 'I', the observer, the saakshi, is different from all of them. The second important stage of reasoning is, that, all the observed attributes can belong to only 'observed' objects and therefore, cannot belong to 'me', the 'observer' subject and therefore, 'I' am free from all types of attributes, including all types of measurements or dimensions; and, since, 'I', the saakshi, is free from all types of measurements and shapes, 'I' have to be one all-pervading saakshi.

Thus, that 'I' am different from the body-mind complex is one knowledge and that 'I' am one non-dual, all-pervading saakshi is the second knowledge. Both these conclusions can be arrived at, through reasoning, otherwise called dhruk-dhrusya-viveka.

This is finally reinforced by sruthi pramaanam also. Sureswaraachaarya (in verse 92) quoted two Brahadhaaranyaka Vaakyani - (1) na dhrashter dhrashtaaram pasye: and (2) vignyaathaaram are kena vijaaneeyath. The first vaakyam is from Ushastha Braahmanam (of Brahadhaaranyakaa) and the other is from Maithreyi Braahmanam (of Brahadhaaranyakaa), both of which clearly establish "'I' am the non-dual chaithanyam".

Thus, even though the sruthi pramaanam, the 'eye' of saasthraa, is revealing this truth very clearly, majority of the people do not use this saasthra chakshu:; and since they refuse to use the saasthra chakshu: (the 'eye') they can be verily considered to be 'blind' people.

And, therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says "majority of people are born 'blind' (ignorant) and they continue to be blind (because they do not use the saasthra chakshu:); and therefore, they do not have a clear knowledge, but only a misconception about themselves.

To convey this – the misconception of the spiritually blind humanity - Sureswaraachaarya quotes the well known example of the 'elephant and seven blind people'; how each one of the seven blind people, physically feels one part or other of an elephant and arrives at a wrong conclusion on the physical nature of the elephant. This example often quoted in the saasthraas, is called jaathi andha gaja dhrushtaantha: | 'Jaathi andha:' means 'born blind' or 'congenitally blind'. The use of the adjective jaathi is significant, since, an individual born with normal sight, but, in later years, becomes blind due to some reason or other, would have seen and known the elephant, when his vision was good. Only a 'born blind' individual will have the problem of properly understanding the physical nature of an elephant.

Saakshi chaithanyam can be likened to the elephant in the example and the humanity at large (who do not have/ use the saasthra chakshu:), likened to the 'born blind'. Such people have mistaken views regarding aathmaa; not only lay people, but, even philosophers - like Bauddaas, Jainaas, Saamkyaas, Vaiseshikaas, Naiyaayikaas, Yogaas etc. - have misconceptions about the nature of chaithanyam / aathmaa. In Vedhaantha Saraa, a whole chapter is exclusively dedicated to the refutations of the misconceptions of the other philosophies – such as dehaathma vaadhaa, praanaathma vaadhaa, indriyaathma vaadhaa, mana aathmaa vaadhaa, buddhi aathmaa vaadhaa, jada aathma vaadhaa, jada-chethana misraathmaa vaadhaa etc. Jada aathma vaadhaa is that of the nyaaya-vaiseshikaa philosophers, while jada-chethana misraathma vaadhaa is that of the poorva meemaasakaa / Bhaata meemaasaka philosophers. Sureswaraachaarya says: "These philosophers refuse to use the saasthra pramaanam and to understand that, 'I' am the non-dual saakshi chaithanyam". This is the content of the 93rd verse, that follows.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 93:

यस्मात्सर्वप्रमाणोपपन्नोऽयमर्थस्तस्मादतोऽन्यथावादिनो जात्यन्धा इवानुकम्पनीया इत्याह।

As this position is substantiated by all modes of proof, the thinkers, who hold otherwise, are to be pitied like the born-blind.

In this introduction to verse 93, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- यस्मात् - Since,
- अयं अर्थः - this particular teaching (that, 'I' am the non-dual saakshi, unaffected by dhrusya prapancha and saakshya prapancha)

What is the difference between dhrusya prapancha and saakshya prapancha? The external anaathmaa is called dhrusya prapancha and the closer anaathmaa in the form of body-mind complex is saakshya prapancha. Both dhrusya prapancha anaathmaa and saakshya prapancha anaathmaa, do not affect 'me', the non-dual saakshi chaithanyam.

- सर्व प्रमाण उपपन्नः - is endorsed / validated / substantiated by all the pramanaas (sruthi, yukthi and anubhava),

For Sruthi pramaanaa, the Aachaaryaa quoted two Brahadhaarnyaka manthraas in verse 92. There are numerous such sruthi vaakyams.

Yukthi, in the form of anvaya-vyathireka has been repeatedly discussed : "The body, mind and thoughts are subject to arrival and departure, whereas, 'I' am the non-arriving, non-departing saakshi." Thus, anvaya-vyathireka yukthi or dhruk-dhrusya yukthi, otherwise called anuvrutta-vyaavruttha-viveka supports this teaching.

'Experience' (anubhava) also supports this teaching, because , during sushupthi, 'I' happily survive, without either dhrusya prapancha or saakshya prapancha.

Thus, this teaching is endorsed by all the pramaanaas.

"Therefore, whoever holds any view other than this, should be pitied. We need not get angry with them; we need not hate them; they only deserve all our sympathy, like the 'born-blind' do" says the Aachaaryaa

- तस्मात् - therefore,
- अत अन्यथा वादिनः - all non-advaitic / non – Vedhaanthic philosophers

Atha: - who have a philosophy other than this (i.e. our vaadha: ' that 'I' am the ever-free saakshi); Anyathaa vaadhina: – advaita vaadha bhinaa vaadhina: |

Atha anyathaa vaadhina: - advaita vaadhaath anyathaa vaadhina: |

- अनुकम्पनीयाः - deserve our sympathy / sochaneeyaa;
- जात्यन्धा इव - similar to 'born-blind' people (deserving sympathy)"
- इति आह - thus declares the author (Sureswaraachaarya himself points out, introducing the following verse).

Chapter II: Verse 93 –

तदेतदद्वयं ब्रह्म निर्विकारं कुबुद्धिभिः।

जात्यन्धगजद्रष्टेव कोटिशः परिकल्प्यते ॥ ९३ ॥

This changeless and secondless Brahman is misconceived in crores of ways, like the elephant by the born-blind.

'I', the aathmaa, the saakshi, is comparable to the elephant (in the dhrishtaantham).

- तद् एतत् - This real 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam,
- निर्विकारं - not subject to janma, jaraa, vyaadhi, mrithyu etc. (i.e. not influenced by time / beyond time) and

- अद्वयं - non- dual (not a localized individual, and, therefore, not conditioned by space also / beyond space)
- ब्रह्म - (and, therefore only) the Infinite Brahman,

Even though this is the fact about 'myself':

- कोटिशःपरिकल्प्यते - is misconceived in crores of wrong forms,

Kotisa: - variously / in numerous ways; parikalpyathe - is imagined /misconceived.

- कुबुद्धिभिः - by people with confused intellect , who lack the saasthra chakshu: / who are spiritually blind / who are ajanaana thimiraandhaa:,

The use of the word 'kotisa:', is significant. As long as I do not know, that, 'I' am the asangha saakshi, I tend to look upon 'myself' as sangavaan, i.e. as related to the world. The relationless 'I' is seen as a 'relative'; and the moment I look upon myself as a relative, I will have hundreds of designations, in relation with every person / object in the universe – father / husband and so on.

Verse 8 of Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothraa of Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa runs : "Viswam pasyathi kaarya kaaranathayaa svasvaami sambandhatha: sishyaachaaryathayaa thatthaiva pithruputhraadhyathmanaah bhedhatha: (maayaa paribhraahmitha: purusha:)"- " (conditioned by maayaa, the individual) sees a world of multiplicity – of cause and effect, diversely related as possessor and possession, father and son, as teacher and taught etc."

"For instance, in relation to the house I own, I call myself as the 'owner' of the house. In the same manner, with regard to every entity, I invoke a corresponding relative 'I'; each relative 'I' gives me an adjective; and every relative 'I' is a type of samsaar'."

This is the reason why Goudapaadhaachaaryaa, in the 3rd chapter of Maandookya Kaarika, defines mokshaa as asparsa yoga: - the 'untouchable' (detached) stage, exhorting the seeker to become an 'untouchable' (i.e. unattached).

Unfortunately, we do not want to do that, because we feel that there is security in relationship, being 'abhaye bhayadarsina:' (ones who perceive 'fear', where there is none).

Goudapaadhaachaaryaa laments in this portion (the 3rd chapter) of the Maandookya Kaarika: "where one should see bondage, there one sees security; and, where one has to see security, there one sees bondage. The perception is 'successfully' reversed, by this powerful 'ignorance', resulting from the absence of saasthra chakshu:" and exclaims "Aho aascharyam!"

Sureswaraacharya also remarks, in this verse (93) of the Naishkarmya Siddhi: "Kotisa: parikalpyathe" – "imagines / misconceives in various manners".

And, for this misconception, he gives the jaathyandha gaja dhrishtaantha: /

- जात्यन्धगजद्रष्ट्या इव - like the misperception of the elephant by the born-blind people.

In this context, the word 'dhrushti' would mean 'wrong perception'; gaja – elephant; jaathi andhaa: - people born blind.

Therefore (because of this misperception), 'I', the nirguna saakshi, am now having several viseshanams (which, I proudly introduce to people). This is said in the following verses.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 94:

प्रमाणोपपन्नस्यार्थस्यासंभावनात्तदनुकम्पनीयत्वसिद्धिः। तदेतदाह ।

They are to be pitied because they do not see what is established by the sources of valid knowledge. This is said further:

Sureswaraacharya points out that such people deserve our sympathy.

The reason as to why they are to be pitied can be explained as below: Self-ignorance results in misconceptions about the 'self'. Ignorance and misconceptions about anything in the universe (other than the 'Self') may be condoned, since ignorance of and misconceptions about the other things may not be generally very serious ; but, one cannot afford 'ignorance' of the Self and the consequent misconceptions about one's Self , since the Self-ignorance and the consequent misconceptions are the causes of all misery.

In Swami Chinmayaanandha's words: "I AM THE HERO OF MY AUTOBIOGRAPHY; THE QUALITY OF MY LIFE DEPENDS UPON 'WHO I AM'; AND 'WHO I AM' DEPENDS UPON 'HOW I LOOK AT MYSELF'". And, therefore, one thing we cannot afford to live with, is 'self-ignorance, and consequent self-misconceptions'.

More unfortunately, such people, firm in their misconceptions, also resist the teachings of the Advaita gurus, who, therefore pity such misguided people (both philosophers and lay-people).

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- प्रमाण उपपन्नस्य अर्थस्य असंभावनात् - Since this teaching, which is reinforced by sources of valid knowledge, is considered as an 'impossibility' (by such people),

Pramaana upapannam - reinforced / supported by valid sources of knowledge; Artham - teaching.

The 'binary' format teaching is a 'strong rope', reinforced by sruthi, yukthi and anubhavaa pramaanaas, capable of saving the 'sinking' samsaaris; but, unfortunately, the format is not accepted by adherents of other philosophies.

Sambhaavanaa - possibility; Asambhaavanaa – impossibility.

Non-advaitins refuse to believe / trust this teaching; they argue: "How is it possible for me to be swam?; I will never claim soham ; I shall ever believe that I am daasa: (dasoham)".

- तद् अनुकम्पनीयत्वसिद्धिः - sympathy results / such people are to be pitied.

Anukampanam - Compassion, pity, sympathy.

The sympathetic Advaita guru tells such people : "You may continue with the dasoham philosophy/ in the triangular format; but, I shall also continue to stand by your side, repeating my teachings / throwing to you the strong 'rope' of the binary format outlook, to save you from the 'well' of 'ignorance', hoping that, some day or other, if not in this janma, at least in some other janma, you will resort to the 'soham' rope, to save yourself".

तद् एतद् आह - This the 'author' is repeating (in the 94th verse).

Chapter II: Verse 94 –

यध्यद्विशेषणं द्रष्टुं नात्मनस्तदनन्वयात् ।

खस्य कुम्भादिवत्तस्मादात्मा स्यान्निर्विशेषणः ॥ ९४ ॥

Nothing that appears as qualitatively determining the Self, does really belong to the Self, as things like a pot appearing as qualifying space do not really belong to space. Therefore the Self is fundamentally unqualified.

Sureswaraacharya says "you can very clearly watch yourself; every time you introduce yourself as a jeeva, you have got jeevathvam, because of the various adjectives or attributes that you are adding". The adjective / attribute is called viseshanam.

And, when I add various attributes or viseshanams to 'I' the Consciousness , this 'I' with the viseshanams, is called jeeva: |

Chaithanyam + viseshanam = jeeva: |

Sureswaraachaarya further points out: "you can yourself observe clearly that each one of these attributes or viseshanam is constantly arriving and departing".

Every adjective is a vyaavruttha viseshanam not an anuvruttha viseshanam.

'Vyavruttham' means 'incidental attribute, subject to arrival and departure' and every viseshanam is to be understood as vyavruttham.

The very fact that they are 'arriving and departing', indicates that they are only incidental and borrowed and not intrinsic. When one claims "I am young" / "I am old" / "I am dying" etc., all these are 'adjectives' borrowed from the incidental body ; "vaasaamsi jeernaani yathaa vihaaya" as the Lord expresses in the Bhagavadh Githa. Only the incidental body-dress has these adjectives, "which adjectives, 'I' am (wrongly) claiming as 'mine'".

And, what is anuvruttham? 'Anuvruttha' means 'persisting'.

"'I' am', 'I' am' 'I' am'" - this saakshi chaithanyam alone is anuvruttham. This anuvruttha "'I' am" alone is my intrinsic nature.

The word 'I' means 'chaithanyam (chith)' and the word 'am' means 'sath'. The sath-chith - 'I am' - alone is anuvruttham. "Baalyaadhisvapi jaagradhaadhisu thathaa sarvaasu avasthaasu api vyaavrutthasu anuvarthamaanam aham ithi" - "In all stages like boyhood etc., in all states like waking etc., similarly in all conditions also 'I' constantly manifests and persists" points out Shri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa in his Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram (verse 7).

"'I am a 'waker'" is an incidental attribute, because, the moment I become a 'dreamer', the 'wakerhood' is dropped and the 'dreamerhood' is put on. So also 'sleeperhood' is another adjective. These adjectives being incidental, they are not 'my' intrinsic nature.

Then who am 'I'?

The Maandookya Upanishad (manthraa 7) declares: "Na antha: pragnyam na bahi: pragnyam na ubhayatha:pragnyam na pragnyaana ganam na pragnyam na apragnyam adhrishtam avyavahaaryam agraahyam alakshanam achinthyam avyapadesyam ekaathmaprathyayasaaram prapanchosramam saantham sivam advaitham chathurtham manyanthe sa aathmaa sa vignyeya:" - "They consider the Thureeya to be (that which is) not that outward consciousness, not the inward consciousness, not the consciousness turned both sides, not a mass of consciousness, not the all-knowing consciousness, not unconscious, beyond perception, beyond transaction, beyond grasp, beyond inference, beyond thoughts, beyond description, traceable through the unbroken self-awareness, free from the world, tranquil, auspicious and non-dual. It is the Self. It is to be known”.

“Is this (teaching) not evident to you, by your avasthaathraya anubhavaa itself? Does not the avasthaathraya anubhavaa clearly reveal this fact that every attribute is only incidental and not intrinsic?” asks the Vedhantic guru.

And, to convey this, Sureswaraachaaryaa gives the fantastic and popular example of ‘space’. ‘Space’ does not have any attribute of its own; but, nevertheless, is given a name, based on the ‘container’ of the ‘space’; for example, when a pot is created, on the arrival of the pot, the ‘space’ within the pot is given a temporary adjective and is referred to as ghataakaasa: | Ghata: can never bring about a limitation to ‘space’; still, we give the adjective ‘ghataa’ to the ‘space’. If this adjective is ‘intrinsic’ to space, the ‘space’ will be eternally ghataakaasa: | On the other hand, once the pot is destroyed, the very same ‘space’ that was in the ghataa becomes ‘space’ in the hall (where the pot existed and was later destroyed) and is called ghoshtaakaasa: | The very fact, that the adjectives ghataa, pataa, ghoshta etc., are subject to arrival and departure, reveals that ‘aakaasa: nirviseshana.’ |

In the same manner, ‘I’ am the aakaasa-samaana-chaithanyam, and my ‘body’ is a temporary ‘pot’. When the body is created, ‘I’ (like the ghataakaasaa) acquire an identity – a Brahmanaa, a kshakthriyaa, a vaisyaa, a brahmachaari etc. and go through the various stages in life - kaumaaram, yuvanam, jaraa - with the adjectives young, old etc. But, in reality, ‘I’ am nirviseshana: | Unfortunately, people (other than advaita vedhaanthins) do not accept / refuse to accept this evident fact. “Therefore, they deserve our sympathy” says the Aachaaryaa.

- यद् यद् विशेषणं द्रष्टं – Whatever adjective you add to yourself (whatever attributes are seen / experienced)

Physical attributes (tall, short, fat, thin etc.), praanamayaa attributes (thirsty, hungry etc.), manomayaa attributes (happy, unhappy, miserable, distressed etc.), vignyaana mayaa attributes (confused , clear etc.) and aananda mayaa attributes (sleepy etc.) are ‘intimate’ attributes; karthaa, bokthaa, pramaathaa etc. are another type of viseshanams; so also husband, wife, in-law etc. are yet another type of attributes.

- न आत्मनः - can never be an attribute / adjective of the true Self, the Saakshi Chaithanyam

What is the reason?

- तद् अनन्वयात् - because the adjective does not persist in me ‘continuously’.

The law is: "What is 'intrinsic' attribute is permanent attribute". An example is the 'heat' of the fire (agne: oushnyavath). Since 'heat' is the intrinsic attribute of fire, fire is always hot.

Conversely, whatever is a temporary attribute is not intrinsic, the example being the 'heat' of 'coffee', which becomes 'cold' with time.

'Ananvayaa' means 'does not travel with, all the time'.

Even viswa, thajasa and pragnyaa are not my 'intrinsic' attributes; only 'thureeyam' is my intrinsic nature, because, the others are ananvayaa (not persisting). 'Anvaya:' means 'continuing / persisting / accompanying'.

The 'space' example is given by the Achaaryaa.

- खस्य कुम्भादिवत् - similar to the 'pot' serving as an adjective of the 'space', within the pot (even though it can never be a 'real' adjective of space)

Kham – aakaasam; kumbham – pot.

(An incidental note: Kham also means indriyam or sense organ. In the words sukham and dhu:kham, kham refers to indriyam. Sukham means 'a stage, in which all sense organs are comfortable' – 'sushtu khaani yasmin thath sukham' - and similarly, the word dhu:kham is arrived at, as 'dhushtaani khaani yasmin thath dhu:kham').

"'Pot' cannot really serve as an adjective to 'space'" means "the dimensions / conditions of the pot cannot become the dimensions / conditions of the space". Still this sort of usage - applying such adjectives to 'space' - is common; we even use the expression "we have got 'limited' space"; the usage is a blunder or absurdity, since 'space', in reality, can never be limited. Even the galaxies are floating in one undivided / indivisible space. The walls of the pot or the walls of hall, can never really divide or separate 'space'. One may refer to the space outside the hall as 'outside space' and space inside the hall as 'inside space'; but, even where there is the wall, there is 'space' also. The wall cannot 'displace' or 'separate' the space. When thus the space is not divided, how can one talk of 'limited' space within the hall and 'limitless' space elsewhere? These are all only misconceptions.

Just as the pot cannot serve as a 'limiting' adjective of space,

- आत्मा - The 'Self'
- निर्विशेषणः स्यात् - is free from viseshanams or adjectives.

'I' can never be a jeeva.; in any of the three periods of time ; one should learn to forget the very adjective jeevaa to athmaa. As long as one looks upon oneself as a jeevathmaa, one cannot escape from the triangular format of jeeva-jagadh-Isvara 'well'.

Anvayam of the verse: Khasya kumbhaadhivath, yadh yadh viseshanam dhrishtam (thadh) thadh, ananvayaath, aathmana: (viseshanam) na (bhavathi) | (Thasmaath) aathmaa nirviseshana: syaath |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 95:

अतश्चात्मनो भेदासंस्पर्शो भेदस्य मिथ्यास्वाभाव्यादत आह ।

Therefore, the Self is free from differentiation, for differentiation is of the nature of falsity.

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "Until now, I established that I am the asanga saakshi chaithanyam and the world is saakshya prapancha: and because I am asangha.; the saakshya prapancha: cannot assert itself and make me a samsaari. And, since I cannot be a samsaari, the question of getting mokshaa, becomes irrelevant. (In other words: "I am asangha saakshi; the saakshya prapancha: cannot give me an adjective / cannot make me a jeeva / cannot make me a samsaari. And, since I am not a samsaari, talking about mokshaa has no relevance). This is what I have been saying so far. I will now reinforce this teaching by giving another more powerful reason also".

अतः च - Because of the following additional reinforcing 'booster' argument.

What is that reason?

"Until now, I saw myself as asangha: / Now, I am seeing myself as paaramaarthika sathya.; who belong to a higher order of reality and the world, from my standpoint, is only vyaavahaarika sathya: | And, the world of a different (lower) order of reality cannot give an adjective to 'me', which is of the higher order of reality.

To give an example, the 'dream son' cannot give 'fatherhood' to the 'waker' (say a brahmachaari / sanyaasi). Nor can the wealth in a dream make the 'waker' really rich. The 'dream' attributes cannot be that of the 'waker'. Vedhaantha refers to this reason cited, using a technical term: 'bhinna satthaa thathvaath'.

Because 'I' and the world belong to different orders of reality – aham sathyam jagan mithyaa - the 'world' cannot affect me.

95. Chapter II, Verse 95 and 96 (19-04-2008)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is doing aathma-anaathma viveka:, otherwise called purusha- prakrithi viveka: | These two terms are used very much in the Saankyaa philosophy also, but with different connotations; therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to establish that the purusha- prakrithi of Vedhanthaa is totally different from the purusha- prakrithi of Saankyaa. Even though the words are the same, the concepts are not. The Achaaryaa wants to reveal two major differences.

The first difference is that the Saankyaa philosopher believes that there are many purushaas or aathmaas - that every living being has got an independent aathmaa and, therefore, aathmaa is 'plural'; purusha- bahuthvam or aathma- bahuthvam is, thus, one of his cardinal principles. Even though the Saankyaa philosopher also admits that aathmaa is all-pervading, he claims, that, the all-pervading aathmaa is many in number. And, since he believes in the plurality of aathmaa, he should talk about the differences between the different aathmaas ; as, otherwise, obviously, he cannot talk about plurality.

This difference between one aathmaa and another, which the Saankyaa philosopher talks about, will come under, what is known as, sajaatheeya bedha: | 'Sajaatheeya bedha: 'can be defined as the 'difference between two things, belonging to the same species'; for example, the difference between one tree and another tree or between one body and another or between one fan and another fan etc., will all come under sajaatheeya bedha: | In short, differences existing between two members belonging to the same jaathi is sajaatheeya bedha: |

For the Saankyaa philosopher, 'aathma jaathl is there, because he believes in the existence of several aathmaas and therefore, the differences between the different aathmaas, that he believes in, is sajaatheeya bedha: |

Sureswaraachaarya negated this sajaatheeya bedha: in verse 94, by pointing out that since aathmaa is free from all attributes and, since differences will have to be talked about in terms of 'attributes' only, one cannot talk about the differences between the attributeless aathmaas; i.e. he contended, that, between one aathmaa and another aathmaa, one cannot talk about differences, because differentiating attributes are not there at all.

The Achaaryaa emphasized (in verse 94) 'aathmaa nirviseshana: syaathl - 'aathmaa does not have any attributes'. He also gave an example: "just as the enclosures cannot become the attributes of the enclosed space, the enclosing bodies and minds cannot become the attributes of the enclosed chaitanyam". Even though we use the expressions ghata aakaasaa, mata aakaasaa etc., in which expressions, the aakaasaa seems to be qualified by the enclosures ghata, mata etc., those attributes are only 'seeming' attributes of the space; but, in reality, the space does not have ghata-mataadhi viseshanaani.

To repeat : Just as the enclosures cannot become the attributes of the enclosed space, even though they seem to be qualifying the space, the Consciousness cannot be qualified by the enclosing kosaas – the enclosing annamaya kosaa, the enclosing praanamaya kosaa, the enclosing manomaya kosaa etc. Even though several enclosures are there for the aathmaa, in the form of pancha kosaas (pancha kosa roopena), none of them can qualify the aathmaa, as 'fat' (annamayakosa attribute) aathmaa, 'hungry' (praanamayakosa attribute) aathmaa, 'disturbed' (manomayakosa attribute) aathmaa or 'confused' (vijnaana mayakosa attribute) aathmaa etc. Even though the kosaas 'seem' to qualify the 'kosee aathmaa', really speaking, Consciousness is attributeless. Therefore, one cannot talk about differentiating attributes between two aathmaas; a further corollary of this, is, that, one cannot also count the aathmaas, as aathmaa 1, aathmaa 2 etc., as there are no distinguishing attributes. Enclosures may be many; but, aathmaa is 'one'. As the Lord says, in the Bhagavadh Githa: "Kshethragnyam chaapi maam viddhi sarva kshekthreshu Bhaaratha", "sarva boothastham aathmaanam, sarva bhoothaani cha aathman" etc.

Thus, in verse 94, Sureswaraacharya dismissed sajaatheeya bedhaa; and also aathma bahuthvam – 'plurality of aathmaa', both convictions of the Saankhya philosopher.

And, now, in this particular sloka (verse 95), Sureswaraacharya is dismissing vijaatheeya bedhaa between aathmaa and anaathmaa. Sajaatheeya bedhaa is 'difference between one aathmaa and another aathmaa'; now, the Aacharya is demolishing aathma-anaathma-bedhaa, which may be termed vijaatheeya bedhaa, which bedhaa also is believed in, by the Saankhya philosopher, because, he believes that there is a real purushaa and there is a real prakrithi – that, there is real Consciousness and there is real Matter. The difference (if any) between Consciousness and Matter will come under Vijaatheeya bedhaa, since Consciousness belongs to chethana thathvam and Matter belongs to achena thathvam – they do not belong to the same species.

Sureswaraacharya says that even vijaatheeya bedhaa, between aathmaa and anaathmaa – dhruk and dhrusyam - is not there.

- अतश्च - (sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 95) - Because of the following reason.

What is the reason?

- मिथ्यास्वाभाव्यात् - Because of the unreal nature (of the Universe) ,

Svaabhaavyam – svaroopam / nature; mithyaa svaabhaavyam – unreal nature.

In Saankyaa philosophy, the dhruk (the Observer) is real and the observed world (dhruasyam) is also real and therefore, the difference / distinction between them is also equally real – (aathmani vijaatheeya bedha: asthi) |

Sureswaraacharya says: "In Vedhaanthaa, 'Observer' is real; but, the 'observed' world is not 'real'. And, therefore, the difference is also not real."

The differentiating world being not real, bedha: is also not real.

The second difference between Saankyaa and Vedhaanthaa, is, thus, "Vijaatheeya bedha: api naasthi" |

In verse 94, sajaatheeya bedha nishedhaa was done and in the 95th verse, vijaatheeya bedha nishedhaa is being done.

- भेदस्य - (mithyaa svaabhaavyaath) - (Because of the 'unreal' nature) of the Universe and the vijaatheeya bedhaa (Vijaatheeya bedasya mithyaa svaabhaavyaath),
- आत्मनः भेद असंस्पर्शः - aathmaa is free from any differentiation (sajaatheeya, vijaatheeya, svagatha bedha rahitha:)

Chaandoghya Upanishad's 'Sadeva soumya idham agra aaseeth ekam eva adhvitheeyam' (VI.2. 1) may be recollected.

The reason is further elaborated upon in the Verse 95.

Chapter II: Verse 95 –

अवगत्यात्मनो यस्मादागमापायि कुम्भवत् ।

साहंकारमिदं विश्वं तस्मात्तत्स्यात्कचादिवत् ॥ ९५ ॥

This world along with the ego, arises and passes away, like a pot in space, within the Self of the nature of awareness. Hence it is not constitutive of the Self and is subject to negation being a false presentation.

What is the reason?

Vedhaanthaa does not accept the world as real, based on the following course of argument: the world is a product of aathmaa; i.e. the world is a kaaryam; kaaryam is nothing but naama roopa; any kaaryam / naama roopa does not have a substantiality of its own; therefore, being a kaaryam and a mere nama roopa, the world cannot be counted as a separate entity.

The popular examples given by Vedhaantic teachers are (1) golden ornaments, which cannot be counted as separate from the gold and (2) wooden furniture, which cannot be counted as separate from wood. If a wooden desk and the wood of which it is made, are separate, when the desk is made from the wood, we should have two weights, – one, the weight of the wood and the other, the weight of the desk. But, we do not find two weights; we find that, there is no separate weight for the desk, other than the wood.

Swami Vidhyaaranyaa gives the same argument in his Anuboothi Prakaasaa: If a wooden chair is separate from the wood of which it is made, after the creation of the chair from the wood, the weight of the wood should increase, since, previously, wood alone was existing and after the creation of the chair, the wood is still existing and the chair has also come into existence; but, we do not observe any such additional weight. In fact, there is a reduction in weight, when wood is converted into chair (or when gold is converted into ornament), due to wastages (sedaaram) in shaping. This conclusively shows that the chair is not separate from the wood but is only naama-roopakam, and also that Kaaryam being naama-roopathkamam, is non-substantial.

In the same manner, the naama-roopaka world / anaathmaa cannot be counted as separate from aathmaa.

- इदं विश्वं - This entire universe (anaathma prapanchaa)
- आगमापायि - is subject to creation and destruction / arrival and departure, aagamanam – arrival; apaaya: - departure.

From where (does the universe arrive)?

- आत्मनः - from the aathmaa ('I'),

What type of aathmaa?

- अवगति - which is chethanam,

Avagathi: - Awareness / knowledge / chaithanyam.

Avagathyaathmana: (prakaasaath) idham viswam aagamaapayi (bhavathi) /

And, what type of universe?

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to stress: "When the word 'universe' is used, do not look at the external world only; the word should include one's body-mind complex (sthoola-sookshma- sareera- dhvayam) also. Only then, when the world is negated as mithyaa, one's own body-mind complex will also be negated as mithyaa".

Therefore, the Achaaryaa adds an important adjective 'saahamkaaram' to viswam.

- स अहंकारं - along with the ego (representing the body-mind complex, with the chidhaabhaasaa),

All these (the world, the body-mind complex, chidhaabhaasaa etc.) should be 'put' into one 'cosmic' basket called mithyaa.

Thereafter, i.e., after 'I' is separated from the mithyaa universe and the mithyaa body-mind complex, one can confidently claim "I have never had any problems in the past; I have no problems now; I will never have any problems in the future also". The 'problems' will also be only mithyaa, similar to the universe and the body-mind complex, while 'I' am only the 'illuminator' of all these – mithyaa jagath, mithyaa body-mind complex and mithyaa problems; but, without this conviction (that the world, body-mind complex etc. are all mithyaa) , one is even reluctant / hesitant to make the statement "I have no problem", since into the word 'I', has 'sneaked' the body-mind complex.

Idham saahamkaaram viswam aagamaapaayi (bhavathi) |

The Achaaryaa gives an example.

- कुम्भवत् - just as pots 'emerge' and 'dissolve' in the space, which space itself is not affected by the 'arrival' and 'destruction' of the pots and the seeming limitation caused by the pot.
- तस्मात् - Therefore,
- तद् कचादिवत् स्यात् - this entire universe is a false appearance like a kacha:|

The word 'Kacha.' literally means a piece of hair; but, in this context, it represents "hair-like visions that appear, when there are certain types of eye-problems". It is common knowledge, that, elderly people 'see' dark spots, because of deterioration of eyesight, due to aging ; the 'dark spots' do not exist in reality, but are only 'false appearances'.

Some people see 'flashes' of light also. Similarly, certain defects in the ear result in 'hearing' non-existent false 'noises'; and, when mountaineers climb high peaks, and reach rarified atmospheres, they experience hallucinations.

A few scientists have contended that the claim of some pilgrims to Kailash and Manasarovar, that they 'sighted' devathaas, is only a result of hallucinations because of the rarified atmosphere and less supply of oxygen to the brain. Without going into the merits and demerits of the pilgrims' claims and the scientists' contentions, what is relevant is, that, Vedhaantha says that the whole world comes under that category of 'hallucinations' caused by the fundamental disease called ajnaana thimira andha: /

'Kacha:', in this context, means 'mithyaa pratheethi:' | (Pratheethi: meaning 'conviction' / 'belief').

The whole universe is mithyaa pratheethi: - hallucination.

What a powerful statement by the Achaaryaa : "the world is only an 'appearance' caused by avidhya" !

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 96 :

सर्वस्यैव अनुमानव्यापारस्य फलमियदेव यद्विवेकग्रहणम् । तदुच्यते ।

This discrimination alone is the consummation of the whole operation of ratiocination. This is stated in the following:

Sureswaraacharyaa says: "Therefore, we do agree with the saankyaa philosopher that, the initial process of spiritual saadhana is aathma-anaathma-viveka or dhruk-dhrusya- viveka. In the initial stages, we also do not discuss whether the dhrusyam is sathyam or mithyaa. We postpone that topic for later analysis. Initially, we join the saankyaa philosopher and talk about dhruk-dhrusya-viveka. And, after this viveka is done, we go to the next stage, "I' am the dhruk; everything else is dhrusyam and this dhrusyam happens to be mithyaa also.' Thus, we come to the binary format – in which, the sathyam 'I' and the mithyaa universe – only these two are there. (In fact, going a step further, we cannot even count as 'two' also, because, the second one is mithyaa.)

Therefore, Sureswaraacharyaa says " sathya-anritha-viveka (real and unreal differentiation) alone is Vedhaantha".

- सर्वस्यैव अनुमानव्यापारस्य फलं – The result of all this process of enquiry

'Anumaana vyaapara:' means 'process of enquiry'. Here, 'anumaana' means 'anvaya-vyathireka logic' (which logic was discussed in an earlier session) – "Whatever is incidental, is not 'my' real nature; whatever is intrinsic alone is 'my' real nature. Going by this reasoning, the expression "I' am" is the only intrinsic nature, because, from birth to death "I' and 'am' " continue without break, 'I' meaning chith and 'am' meaning sath. That alone is anvaya:; whereas, 'I am a boy ; I am an youth; I am old; I am sick ; I am disturbed' etc. – such attributes are only vyaavruttham; even avasthaa-thrayam is vyaavruttham." This argument is called anumaana vyaapara: - anuvruttha-vyaavruttha-vichaara: - enquiry about the 'intrinsic' and the 'incidental'. This enquiry is presented in the Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram in the beautiful verse: "Baalyaadishvapi jaagradhaadhishu thathaa sarvaavasthaasvapi vyaavrutthaasu anuvarthamaanam aham ithi antha: spurantam sadhaa" – "all experiences (stages in life, states like jaagrath etc.) are vyaavruttham (incidental); the only anuvruttham (intrinsic) is "I am"; that alone is un-negatable.

Therefore, "yath abaahyam thath sathyam; yath anuvruttham thath sathyam; yath vyavruttham, baahyam thath mithyaa". This is called anumaana vyaapaara: / Another name (for this) is anvaya – vyathireka – vichaara: / (Yet) another name is anuvruttha-vyaavruttha-vichaara: |

- यद् एव - is only this much :

What is the result?

- यद् विवेकग्रहणम् - which (result) is nothing but discriminative understanding

The distinct understanding is, that, "I am sathyam and whatever 'I' experience is mithyaa; therefore, 'I' can never be touched by whatever 'I' experience".

Then what is the purpose of being presented with these experiences? For 'entertainment' (so, would a jnaani consider them).

"By forgetting my nature, I convert life into a struggle and by remembering my nature, I convert life into a sport / entertainment" is a maxim (the fifth 'capsule', in Swamiji's 'Five Capsules of Vedhanthad' – a list of Vedhaanthic facts highlighted by Swamiji as a 'group').

तदुच्यते - That is being said here (in verse 96).

Chapter II: Verse 96 –

बुद्धेरनात्मधर्मत्वमनुमानात्प्रसिद्ध्यति ।

आत्मनोऽप्यद्वितीयत्वमात्मत्वादेव सिद्ध्यति ॥ ९६ ॥

Reasoning establishes that the mind is not the attribute of the Self. The oneness of the Self is established by the very fact of its being the Self.

As a result of this anuvruttha-vyaavruttha-vichaara:, we dismiss the entire world as vyavruttham / dhrusyam / mithyaa and in this, is included, the very buddhi or sookshma sareeram also, because, that is also dhrusyam and vyavruttham. During sushupthi, I do not experience buddhi and I do not use buddhi as an instrument; only in jaagrath avasthaa, I experience buddhi and also use buddhi as an instrument for experiencing the world. An example (for buddhi) is a pair of spectacles, which the user 'experiences' and through the spectacles, he also 'experiences' other objects and people. The spectacles are 'seen' and 'used' when needed ; but, are subject to removal also. Extending this logic, buddhi is also vyavruttham / dhrusyam / mithyaa.

Therefore, the Aacharyaa says:

- बुद्धे :अनात्म धर्मत्वम् - The anaathmaa / mithyaa / dhrusyam status of the buddhi

Buddhi: (intellect) indicates the entire sookshma sareeram, which is an object and therefore mithyaa.

- अनुमानात् प्रसिद्ध्यति - is established / corroborated by enquiry (anuvruttha- vyaavruttha- vichaara / anvaya-vyathireka-tharkaa).

Prasidhyathi – is established / corroborated.

- आत्मन :अद्वितीयत्वम् अपि सिद्ध्यति - Non-duality of aathmaa is also established,

Once you have separated the anaathmaa and negated the anaathmaa as mithyaa, then aathmaa automatically becomes non-dual or advitheeyam.

Here, Sankaraacharya makes a technical point. He says: "The non-duality of aathmaa cannot be taken as an attribute of aathmaa" - just as nirgunathvam should not be taken as an attribute of aathmaa. This Advaitic belief – aathma nirgunathvam - is disputed by Visishtaadvaitins. When the Advaita Vedhaanthin states that aathmaa is nirguna: / nirvikalapa: etc., the Visishtaadvaitin argues "then, aathmaa has got the attributes of nirgunathvam / nirvikalpathvam etc." In the same manner, some people argue that the non-duality of aathmaa is an attribute of aathmaa. Sureswaraacharya says: "No, it is not an attribute of aathmaa, which I will prove by looking into aathma; because, if non-duality is an attribute of aathmaa, it has to be proved by a pramaanam. And, if the attribute has to be proved by a pramaanam, then the aathmaa itself should be available for the pramaanam; in that case, the aathmaa will become an object of the pramaanam (which it can never be). Therefore, aathmaa's nature is non-duality and upon the non-duality nature of the aathmaa, duality is super-imposed (because of avidhyaa). What we (the Advaitins) are doing, is, that, we are only negating the super-imposed duality through knowledge. Then, what is left behind is the non-dual aathmaa, which non-duality is not an attribute that comes and goes".

The non-duality of the aathmaa, the Aacharyaa says, is established because of its very nature:

- आत्मत्वादेव (सिद्ध्यति) - (is established) because of its very nature.

There is another way of looking at it also – a simpler way. Aathmaa always has to be non-dual; one need not establish the non-duality of aathmaa; because, suppose one says 'there is a second aathmaa', the Advaitic Aacharya will question 'how do you know?' The poorva pakshin has to give an explanation, that he had known the second aathmaa by such and such means (the 'means' need not bother the student). The Advaitic Aacharya's response to the poorva pakshin's explanation will be: "The moment you say that you 'know' the second aathmaa, the second aathmaa will become anaathmaa – since, the second aathmaa (according to you) is 'known' and what is 'known' can only be an object i.e., it is no more the 'subject'; being not the 'subject', it can never be called aathmaa". To repeat: "The moment you count a second aathmaa, that aathmaa becomes 'known'; once it is 'known', it is an 'object'; once it is an 'object', it is not a 'subject'; and once it is not a 'subject', it is no more aathmaa; it has become anaathmaa." Therefore, Aathmaa being the 'subject', it has to be non-dual only; the logic being 'because it is the subject'.

The use of the term aathmathvaadeva (in this verse) implies: The 'subject' because of its very 'subjecthood' has to be non-dual only; one can never count the second 'subject', because the moment one counts the second 'subject', it is no more a 'subject', but an 'object' (and therefore anaathmaa) ; therefore, aathmaa is always matchless. "I am non-dual" ithi sidhyathi.

96. Chapter II, Verse 96 and 97 (07-06-2008)

A methodology of teaching employed in Vedhaantha is called adhyaaropa-apavaadha-nyyaaya: | The word 'adhyaropa' is translated as 'superimposition' and the word 'apavaadaa' is translated as 'negation' or 'sublation'. Thus, the term 'adhyaaropa-apavaadha-nyyaaya.' would mean the 'method of superimposition and negation'. We can also understand it as 'the method of introducing an idea in the beginning and later, withdrawal of the same very idea, in the latter part of the teaching'.

In fact, the whole vedhaantic teaching and saadhana involve this 'introduction of ideas and withdrawal of those very same ideas'. Both together will lead to the desired benefit and therefore, both of them are important and complementary. Adhyaaropaa is incomplete without apavaadaa and apavaadhaa is irrelevant without adhyaaropaa. And, since both of them are important and complimentary, this 'adhyaaropa-apavaadha-nyyaaya.' is a deliberate method used. Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa points out in his Bhagavadh Githa Bhashyam (Chapter XIII): "Adhyaaropa-apavaadhaabhyaam nishprapancham prapanchyathe sishyaanaam sukha bodhaartham thathvagnyai: kalpitha: krama:" |

If this fact, that, this methodology is deliberately employed by Vedhaanthic teachers, is not understood, the Vedhaanthic teachings may appear as a 'bundle of contradictions'. But, it is not so; and, this deliberate methodology is used, because of the uniqueness of the subject matter.

This idea of 'introduction and withdrawal' is sometimes done explicitly – the teacher himself openly / directly/ clearly saying "I have introduced this before and I am now deliberately negating it". An example is "talking about creation in the beginning and later saying 'there is no creation at all'".

But, sometimes, this 'introduction and withdrawal' is not explicitly done by the teacher; it is presented implicitly, in an indirect manner, due to various reasons. When, thus, this 'introduction and withdrawal' is done by the teacher, in an indirect manner, it should be the skill of the student, to understand what has been introduced and subsequently negated.

One example is that of the very mokshaa itself. In the beginning of the Vedhaanthic teaching, the teacher introduces mokshaa as a conditional event. Several conditions are prescribed for mokshaa to 'happen' or to 'take place'. The primary Vedhaanthic treatise Thathva Bodha starts with the declaration "saadhana chathushtaya sampanna adhikaarinaam moksha saadhanaboortham thathva viveka prakaaram vakshyaama:" – i.e., 'saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi' is introduced as the 'qualification' – 'primary condition' for the Vedhaanthic journey. Thereafter also, almost every Vedhaanthic text highlights saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi and even declares "if saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not there, a student will not gain knowledge and mokshaa; if saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is there, then alone, a seeker will attain mokshaa."

For example, in Viveka Choodaamani, anvaya-vyathireka logic is used: "saadhanaan yathra chathwari kathithaani maneeshibhi: yeshu sathveva sannishta yadhabhaave na siddhyath!" – "Great sages have spoken of four qualifications in the presence of which, success in the realization of Brahman is achieved and in the absence of which the Goal is not gained" (Verse 18), clearly declaring "If saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is there, there is mokshaa; in its absence, there is no mokshaa".

Thus, the student, in the initial stages, receives the strong idea / impression that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is a compulsory condition for liberation. This is an idea conveyed to the student by the Vedhaanthic scriptures and teachers, during what can be called the adhyaropa-kaalaa - the adyaropa phase of teaching - the first stage of teaching. But, later, when the teaching progresses, when a shift is made to the second stage, from adhyaropa to apavaadaa / the triangular format to binary format, Vedhaantha wants to refute the very same idea and reveal the fact that mokshaa is not a conditional event. Whatever has been taught to the seeker over a number of years, through several Vedhaanthic texts, is reversed by the saasthraas and the teachers; who, in the advanced stages of teaching, assert 'mokshaa is not a conditional event; but is your very nature / svaroopam'. Whatever is svaroopam, is unconditional; for example, when it is said that 'heat' is the svaroopam of fire, the message that is conveyed, is, that, the 'heat' is in fire and the heat in the fire, is not based on any particular condition – sarva deseshu, sarva kaaleshu, sarvaasu avasthaasu api agni: ushna: eva bhavathi.

Thus, when the teacher says "thath thvam asi", the apavaadaa of the former idea (saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi condition) is done- what the teacher says is "mokshaa is your nature" i.e. "mokshaa is an unconditional fact", which means that you are a nithya muktha svaroopam, which further means that no condition is involved in claiming 'I am muktha.'

Then what about saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi condition? A student during the apavaadaa stage of teaching / the binary format stage, should understand that even saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not a condition that determines his liberation. If 'conditions' have to determine one's 'liberation', than 'liberation' cannot be one's svaroopam. But, on the other hand, Vedhaantha struggles to reveal that mokshaa is every one's svaroopam. And, therefore, every seeker should go through the second phase of teaching, termed apavaadaa stage, and when he shifts from 'triangular' format to 'binary' format, he has to practice this nidhidhyaasanam "saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is also not a condition for liberation; mokshaa is not a conditional event".

And, in nidhidhyaasanam, he has to further repeatedly assert to himself "I will never hesitate to claim my liberation, by saying that I lack saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi"; this aspect is being stressed, because, the problem, very often, of the student is, that, he eternally continues to believe and plead "I am not liberated since I am not yet saadhana chathushtaya sampanna:"|

This is an eternal 'excuse' for the postponement of liberation; every seeker should get out of this 'trap' one day or the other. 'Saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi' condition is a trap. It is, of course, initially required - it is useful at the adhyaropaa stage; but, after a reasonable period (which may vary from student to student) of Vedhaanthic learning, the seeker should not for ever continue in the adhyaropaa stage; but, move to the apavaadhaa stage. Therefore, the nidhidhyaasnam in the binary format is: "I am unconditionally liberated; saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not at all a condition for liberation. I have to deliberately remove the misconception that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is a condition for liberation".

This does not mean that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is useless. It has got utility in various other fields, including worldly transactions – in the vyaavahaarika plane also. The Vedhaanthic Aachaaryaas do not rule out or negate the utility of saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi totally; but, they do negate saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi as a 'condition' for liberation, even though saasthraas themselves present saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi as a condition, in the initial stages of Vedhaanthic teachings. The seeker should realize that this is true only at the adhyaropaa or triangular format stage; but, during the apavaadhaa / binary format stage, the seeker should regularly practice "I am free aathmaa, irrespective of the saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi conditions of the mind".

This is the reason that Sureswaraachaaryaa writes several (96) verses, struggling to separate 'me' from 'my mind and its conditions'. Saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is only an attribute of the mind. What the Aachaaryaa wants the seeker to derive from his treatise Naishkarmya Siddhi, is the conviction: "I' am different from the mind; 'I' am not even connected to the mind; and the conditions of the mind can never determine 'my' freedom. Asangoham ! Asangoham ! Nithya muktha svaroopoham!".

Therefore, whenever the saasthraas dwell upon Saakshi Chaithanyam as asangha aathmaa, different from the mind, what the seeker should understand is that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi has nothing to do with the fact : "I' was free / 'I' am free / 'I' will ever be free'. This (understanding) is called vipareetha bhaavanaa nivritthi, the viphareetha bhaavanaa, in this context, being the belief that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is a condition for liberation. Of course, it is an unique vipareetha bhaavanaa created by saasthraa itself. Most other vipareetha bhaavanaas are developed by the individual ; but, this is an adhyaaropa vipareetha bhaavanaa promoted by saasthraa itself - similar to Brahman's kaaranathvam, which is also an idea, first presented by the saasthraa, which saasthraa itself , later, negates the very same idea that Brahman is a kaaranam. Brahman's Kaaranathvam is an 'introduced' vipareetha bhavanaa, subsequently negated. In the same manner, 'saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi qualification' is a deliberate vipareetha bhaavanaa introduced during 'triangular' format stage; when the seeker moves to the 'binary' format, the seeker has to deliberately get out of this vipareetha bhaavanaa and claim to be a muktha; deficiencies in saadhana chathushtaya samapatthi cannot be an 'excuse' to believe or declare otherwise.

Sureswaraachaarya is struggling to establish this.

The terms 'Buddhe: anaathma dharmathvam' and 'aathmana: api adhvitheeyathvam' (in verse 96) convey the teaching: "I' am the non-dual aathmaa not connected to the mind and its qualifications; why should I connect those conditions with my liberation?" One can try to improve one's mind to a better condition, for the benefit of others or the world. That is a different issue. But, one should never connect that (the condition of one's mind) to one's 'liberation'.

That's why, in (Swami Vidyaaranyaa's) Panchadasee, it is said "for a jnaani (the practitioner of the 'binary' format) saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is a 'hobby' that he enjoys; which he never connects to his 'liberation'".

In brief: Adyaaropaa is "saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is a condition for liberation", while apavaadhaa is "saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not a condition for liberation".

But, the apavaadhaa teaching is only for advanced and mature seekers / students, even to whom, it is not explicitly declared that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not a condition for liberation. The message is implicit from the teaching "Mokshaa is 'your' nature". By saying this, the teacher indirectly negates saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi as a 'condition' for liberation.

Hereafter, Sureswaraachaarya proceeds to negate another type of idea, that is introduced in the beginning stage of teaching and which will have to be negated in the later stages—another adhyaaropa-apavaada-nyaaya: /

What is that (idea)? The very definition of mokshaa. The definition of mokshaa, which is given in the beginning stages of Vedhaanthic teaching is a provisional definition – an adhyaropa definition. In the later stages of learning, the student has to drop that concept of mokshaa.

And, what is that initial (provisional) definition of mokshaa? When the student is initially in the triangular format of jeeva-jagath-Isvara, how does Vedhaanthaa introduce mokshaa? It cannot talk based on binary format, i.e. on the basis that 'the student is Brahmar' (since the student is yet to be prepared for receiving this teaching). Therefore, Vedhaanthaa gives a modified, provisional definition. It introduces the world as a source of sorrow and suffering and introduces Isvara as a source of aanandaa and peace – that "I am a jeeva; there is a jagath, which is the source of sorrow; there is an Isvara, who is the source of aananda; I am, now, trapped in this world of suffering i.e. in samsaara ; my aim is to run away / escape from this world of janma-mrithyu- jaraa vyaadhi-dhu:kha dosha anudarsanam and 'rush to' Bhagavaan who will give me solace and comfort".

Thus, 'running away from the world and running towards God' / 'escaping from the world and reaching the Lord' is considered as mokshaa, in the initial stages of Vedhaanthic teaching.

In verse 15, Ch. VIII, Shrimadh Bhagavadh Githa, ("Maam upedhya punarjanma dhu:khaalayam asaasvatham naapnuvanthy mahaathmaana: samsiddhim paramaam gathaa." – " Having reached Me, those great souls do not take rebirth, which is an ephemeral abode of misery. They have attained the highest goal"), Lord Krishna Himself declares "in mokshaa, you will come to Me; thereafter you will not go back to dhu:khaalayam – the world of suffering".

Thus, the initial definition of mokshaa is a 'great escape', in which approach, a number of adhyaropa misconceptions are involved: that (1) World is 'suffering' (2) I must run away from the world (3) Isvara is somewhere else, away from this world (4) I have to go to Isvara's abode – Vaikunta or Kailasa etc.

As the student advances in his study and his understanding of Vedhaanthaa, he should negate these misconceptions - the adhyaropaa wantonly introduced by Vedhaantha. The advanced seeker has to, deliberately get rid of these misconceptions, which process has two steps.

The first transformation is prescribed in the Viswaroopa Darsana Yoga of the Bhagavadh Githa: "Understanding that the world is not 'sorrow'; but is Bhagavaan's viswaroopa".

It follows from this prescription that 'escaping' from the world is akin to 'escaping' from the presence of the Viswaroopa Isvara. 'Studying this chapter of the Githa and as a consequence, accepting the world as Viswaroopa Isvara' and, at the same time 'praying for piravaa varam (boon for avoidance of re-birth in this world)' is a contradiction.

The seeker, therefore, as a second transformation, should get out of the obsession of 'escaping from the world', realizing that the world is not 'sorrow' or 'harrowing', but is a holy Viswaroopa of the Lord.

In this later stage, the seeker should further change his attitude to 'looking at' the world, as mithyaa naama roopaa. The world is not a horrifying factor; but is a holy viswaroopa and mithyaa naama roopaa.

The necessity of 'running away' from the world, therefore, does not arise at all. The advanced seeker should deliberately get out of the ideas "I should not have punar janma; I should not come back to this world again etc.", by practicing the nidhidhyaasanam "I am not afraid of the world; I am not anxious to 'escape' from the world, since the world is not 'sorrow' – it is not dhu:khaalayam".

Not only is there, thus, any need for an advanced seeker to 'escape' from the world ; but also , if the seeker is assimilating the teaching 'aham brahma asmi', he should know that he cannot also 'escape' from the world - the very idea of 'escape' springs from the misconception that one has of oneself, as a 'finite' mind or chidhaabhaasaa. Whereas, in the 'binary' format stage, the seeker knows that he is the all-pervading adhishtaanam of the world – "mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham, mayi sarvam layam yaathi thadh brahma advayam asmi aham" – "everything is born of 'me', is established in 'me' and resolves in 'me' ; 'I' am that non-dual Brahman" as the Kaivalya Upanishad (verse 19) declares.

"Mithyaa naama roopaa is depending on 'Me' for its very existence; if 'I' go away, the very drama of the world cannot continue; the eternal show of srishti - sthithi - laya continues in 'Me'. 'I' am providing the 'screen' for the world-show to go on. Why should 'I' go away and, in fact, how can 'I' go away? Therefore, mokshaa is not 'escaping from the world'. I should meditate on the fact that the world is in 'me'; and, let it be in 'me' because mithyaa-naama-roopa cannot 'touch' 'me', the asangha aathmaa".

"Therefore, why should I pray "O! Lord! I should not come back. Do not give me any more janmaas."

But, it is also a fact, that, most devotional songs in almost all the Indian languages, in the name of bakthi and prayer, contain the strain: "I am suffering. O! Lord! I want to 'escape' from this world of suffering". This idea is so deeply entrenched, that, quite often, even an advanced student of Vedhaanthaa, with long years of Vedhaanthic study behind him, and quite eager to practice the 'binary' format, tends to pray "O! Lord! This must be my last janma", which prayer only indicates that apavaadhaa has not taken place, the student preferring to permanently remain in the adhyaropa stage. The seeker should 'cap' the teaching with apavaadhaa and develop the attitude "I do not want to escape from the world; mokshaa is not an 'escape'". Even if there is an 'escape', it is an 'escape' from the misconception of 'escape'.

"I will never say 'I want freedom from punarjanma, because, 'I', Brahman, do not have any janma; 'I' am the adhishtaanam in which the janma, vrutthi, parinathi etc. of the universes go on." What a vision! The seeker should assimilate this vision; and if he has to assimilate this vision, he should negate the two ideas (1) 'saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is a condition for mokshaa' and (2) 'I want to escape from this world'.

To sum up: (1) the world is holy Viswaroopa Isvara and therefore, one should not have the desire to run away from the world, as it is akin to running away from Isvara (2) the world is only mithyaa-naama-roopaa and since mithyaa-naama-roopa cannot affect me in any manner, there is no need for me to run away from the world and (3) since 'I' am the sarvagatha Brahman, who, in fact, is the adhishtaanam for the world, there is no possibility also of escaping from the world.

The 'escapist' idea belongs to saamkhya philosophy and is only temporarily 'borrowed' by Vedhaanthaa.

Therefore, in the following section, Sureswaraacharya says: "It is the saamkyaa philosophy, which talks about mokshaa as 'escaping from prakrithi'."

For the saamkyaa philosopher, purushaa is 'real', prakrithi is also 'real', duality is 'real', purusha's association with prakrithi is 'real' and mokshaa is 'getting separated from prakrithi'. Towards this purpose, the saamkyaa philosopher wrongly quotes the Upanishad vaakyam: "ajaamekaam lohithasuklakrishnaam bahveem prajaam janayantheegum saroopaam | ajo hi eko jushamaanonusethe jahaathyenaam bhukthabhoghaamajonya:" (Mahaa Naarayana Upanishad: Dahara Vidhyaa), and says prakrithi sambhandha is bhandhaa (bondage) and 'getting away from prakrithi' is mokshaa (liberation).

This topic is analyzed in Brahmasoothra – in an adhikaranam called chamakaadhikaranam (Ch. I – 4th Paadhaa) - wherein Vyasaacharya refutes the idea of 'escape' from prakrithi and establishes "we need not 'escape' from prakrithi; we need not escape from the world, because world is mithyaa and 'I' am the adhishtaanam; let this continue; why should I worry about the presence or absence of the bodies, the minds and the world?"

Sureswaraacharya analyzes the same topic in the following portion.

Sambhandha gadhyam (part) to Verse 97:

यद्यपि अयं ग्रहीत्रुग्रहणग्राह्यग्रहीतितत्फलात्मकः :आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तः :संसारः :अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां अनात्मतया निर्माल्यवत् अपविद्ः ।

Though this world beginning with Brahma down to the lowest creature, consisting of the knower, the means of knowing, the object of knowledge, the knowing itself and the emergent knowledge, is determined to be other than the Self, by reasoning and is thus discarded like a garland no longer fresh....

Sureswaraacharya says: "the type of teaching that we have employed, is parallel to the saamkyaa methodology of teaching, which is in the form of purusha-prakrithi-viveka: - i.e., "I' am the purusha: - aathmaa; the body-mind-complex and the world are anaathmaa or prakrithi; they are mixed up together; through this purusha-prakrithi - viveka: (analysis), I am to understand that I am purusha: and everything else is prakrithi".

Up to this, there is no difference between saamkyaa and Vedhaanthaa. (In the 13th chapter of the Bhagavadh Githa also – verse 20 – is the declaration of the Lord: "Prakruthim purusham chaiva viddhi anaadhi ubhau ap" – "May you know both Prakrithi and Purushaa to be without a beginning.")

But, the problem with saamkyaa is, that, saamkyaa considers purushaa and prakrithi to be equally real and that, therefore, mokshaa requires 'escaping' from the body-mind-complex. That is why (i.e. based on this approach) people want to avoid punar-janma; if I say 'I want to avoid punar-janma', it is obvious that I believe 'by coming into the body, I am facing the world; by avoiding the body I will escape from the world'.

This idea of 'escape' comes from attributing 'reality' to the world. Sureswaraacharya points out: "On the other hand, Vedhaanthaa says 'Let the world continue; still I am free. Let the body continue; still I am free. Let another body come; still I am free. Let the mind continue; still I am free. Let raagha dveshaa continue; still I am free. The whole thing is a mithyaa drama. Why do you want to escape? Understand that everything is mithyaa. Other than this understanding, no other freedom is required "".

The desire to 'escape' from the world is similar to the fear and anxiety of a person, to run away from the 'rope-snake' (a snake wrongly perceived in a rope). The Acharya wants to point out the 'folly' in this approach: "why do you want to run away from the rope-snake?"

Unfortunately, in spite of repeated appeals of the guru, the seeker is unable to get out of his misconceptions. And, that is why, the guru is expected to be compassionate and understanding, as he has to keep repeating his teachings without getting tired or impatient. "Ahethuka dhayaasindhu: bhandhu: aanamathaam sathaam" – "An ocean of mercy that needs no cause for its expression and an intimate friend of those who have surrendered to him" is the description of such a guru given by Shri Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa (in Viveka Choodaamani – verse 33).

Sureswaraachaaryaa, being such a compassionate teacher says:

- अयं संसारः - This samsaaraa,

Samsaaraa should be translated as 'this so-called (not true) suffering'.

- आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तः - beginning from Brahma-lokaa to a blade of grass,

Brahma - refers to chathurmuka Brahma and his loka; Sthambha - a blade of grass.

The term 'aabrahmastahmbha paryantha:' would mean 'all the lokaas and all the sareerams', which consist of the well-known thriputi – pramathha, pramaanam and prameyam.

The entire world can be reduced into either 'duality' or to a 'triad'. When the world is reduced to 'duality', it is to be understood as 'consisting of subject and object'. When the world is defined as thriputi, it should be taken as consisting of 'subject, object and the instrument, which links the two'.

- Dvaitham - Subject and object.
- Thriputi - Subject, object and instrument.

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- ग्रहीत्रु - (consisting of) the Pramaathaa (the Subject),
- ग्रहणं - the Pramaanam (the instruments of knowledge, which include the sense- organs , mind etc and also prathyakshaa, upamaanaa etc.)
- ग्राह्यं – the Prameyam (the object of knowledge)

Sureswaraachaaryaa includes a fourth one also – ग्रहीतितत्पलात्मकः |

The `that' after graheethi and preceding palaathmaka: may, in fact, be deleted, to give a better reading graheethipalaathmaka: |

- ग्रहीतिपलात्मकः - (and) the consequence in the form of knowledge or experiences (in other words, prama),

Graheethi: - knowledge / experiences born out of the above *thriputi:
Palaathmaka:* - Consequence

All these four (pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and anubhava:) put together is called 'samsaara:'|

This samsaara:

- अपविद्धः - has been negated (by me, in these previous 96 verses),

All the four - Pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramithi: - have been negated.

Pramaathaa is the ahamkaara: or chidhabhaasa; pramaanam means the mind, sense organs etc.; prameyam means 'the world'.

All were negated by,

अन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां - by applying the method of anvaya and vyathirekkaa, /method of anuvruttham and vyaavruttham,

Vyathirekkaa means 'that, which is temporary – subject to arrival and departure' and anvaya means 'that, which is not subject to arrival and departure'.

'I', the saakshi, am anvaya:, changelessly present, whereas pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam are subject to arrival and departure.

As the student may recollect, Maandookya Upanishad avers: In jaagrath avasthaa, the pramaathaa is viswaa; in svapnaa avasthaa, the pramaathaa is thyjasaa; and in sushupthi avasthaa, the pramaathaa is praagnyaa. Viswaa, Thyjasaa and praagnyaa 'come and go', as and when the avasthaas 'come and go'; whereas 'I' am the thureeyam, the non-arriving and non-departing 'Witness' of the three avasthaas.

Thus, avasthaathraya saakshi is purusha:, by anvayaa; avasthaathrayam is prakrithi, by vyathirekkaa. (This has already been established).

Like what? A beautiful example is given by the Aachaaryaa.

निर्माल्यवत् - similar to nirmaalyam,

'Nirmaalyam' is an expression used in the ritualistic field, especially in the context of temples. Flowers offered to the Lord during the course of a Puja are removed the next day. The faded flowers, thus removed, are called 'nirmaalyam'. And, when the nirmaalyam is removed, a darshan of the idol without any upaadhi – nirupaadhika Isvara darsanam is had. That's why nirmaalya darsnam is considered to be sacred, since it is equivalent to 'seeing' the nirguna Brahman.

In the same manner, 'I' am 'Isvara' and the avasthaa thrayam, sareera thryam, guna thrayam etc. are the fading prakrithi – anaathmaa.

Sureswaraachaaryaa removes the prakrithi, nirmaalyavath. How?

अनात्मतया - as anaathmaa.

Now what is left behind?

'I', the purushaa, is left behind.

97. Chapter II, Verse 97 (14-06-2008)

In this important portion, Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that the aathma-anaathma-viveka-vichaaraa of Vedhaanthaa, is very similar to that of the Saamkayaa philosophy; but, with a difference; the difference is that Saamkyaa philosophy stops with aathma-anaathma-viveka:, whereas, in Vedhaanthaa, the journey has to continue further.

In Vedhaanthaa, aathma-anaathma-viveka-vichaaram is only the first stage of learning, known as adhyaaropa-prakaranam. The journey has to continue further and the journey is complete only with apavaadha prakaranam. Only after apavaadhaa, anaathma mithyaathvam is established.

In Saamkyaa philosophy, aathmaa is real; anaathmaa is also equally real. Whereas, in Vedhaanthaa, after apavaadha prakaranam, we say: "I, the aathmaa, am sathyam and the entire anaathma prapanchaa, consisting of pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramaa – the entire dhrusya prapanchaa is mithyaa".

Thus, aathma-anaathma-viveka: should be converted into sathya-mithyaa-viveka: | 'Aham sathyam jagan mithyaa' must be the conclusion. Only then, the seeker is really shifting from the triangular format to the binary format.

Once the seeker comes to 'aham sathyam jagan mithyaa' binary format, then alone is he ready, to revise the definition of mokshaa itself.

Until the seeker comes to the binary format, the definition of mokshaa, which the seeker is given, is only a temporary and provisional definition. In triangular format, the seeker understands mokshaa, as "This world is full of suffering; I should escape from this persecuting world, at the earliest, death providing the escape route; but, I should escape from the world in such a manner as to never come back again into this world."

"Permanent escape from the persecuting world, never to come back again" is the definition of mokshaa, which the seeker follows in the triangular format, in the name of videha mukthi. But, that is only a temporary / provisional definition.

After coming to the binary format, the seeker has to revise the definition. What is that real and primary definition of mokshaa? Sankaraachaaryaa gives the definition in his introduction to the Maandookya Upanishad Bhaashyam, as "svaroopaa avasthaanam moksha:" | 'Svaroopaa avasthaanam' means 'constantly being aware of my sathya-aathma-svaroopam and also being aware of the mithyaa-jagath-svaroopam' | This self-awareness / self-abidance, called svaroopa avasthaanam, must be the definition of mokshaa, which the seeker should use after moving into the binary format.

In this definition, the seeker never thinks of 'escaping from the world', because, he is aware that he is the mithyaa-jagath-adhishtaanam. Being the very adhishtaanam of the entire mithyaa-anaathma-prapanchaa, how can he escape from the world? In fact, 'I' am the one, who is 'lend'ing existence to the entire universe - (viswam dharpana dhruvyamaana nagaree thulyam – Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram).

'I' am 'lend'ing to the universe its very 'is'ness. If 'I' try to escape, the very universe cannot exist. The eternal world show has to continue; and, if the eternal world show should continue, 'I' must be there to 'bless' the world with 'saththaa spoorthy: pradhaanam'. ('Satthaa' means 'existence'; 'spoorthy:' means 'manifestation / display'; 'pradhaanam' means 'granting / bestowing').

Therefore, 'I' cannot escape from the world.

Nor do 'I' need to escape from the world, because, whatever that happens in the mithyaa world, cannot touch the adhishtaanam-sathya-aathmaa - (nahi adhyasthasya gunena dhoshena vaa anumaathrena api sambhadhyathe)|

Thus, the svaroopa-avasthaana-mokshaa comes only after anaathma- mithyaathva-nischaya: |

It is true that this svaroopa-avasthaanam (awareness or knowledge) will not and cannot stop the biological or physical suffering. But, equally true is that, the biological pains also cannot stop 'my' wisdom, that, 'I' am the ever-free sathya-saakshi-aathmaa, which is illumining the world drama, which drama includes these experiences (biological pains) also. No experience can challenge valid knowledge, just as the experience of sunrise can never stop the valid knowledge that 'sun never rises'.

Any amount of biological pain cannot stop the knowledge that 'I' am the paaramaarthika-sathya-aathmaa illumining the drama of the vyaavahaarika prapanchaa, which includes both pleasures and pain. I should never judge the world, based on the biological pains nor on the biological pleasures. Pleasures and pains are integral parts of the mithya-anaathma-prapanchaa, which 'I' am blessing all the time. This wisdom is called svaroopa avasthaanam; this alone is the real mokshaa.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "adhyaropa prakaranam, which is aathma-anaathma-viveka:, is over. Now apavaadha prakaranam, which is anaathma-mithyaathva-nischaya:, has to start."

With this purpose, the Achaaryaa gives this introduction (sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 97), part of which, was studied in the earlier class. To continue:

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 97:

तथापि तु नैवासौ स्वतस्सिद्धात्मव्यतिरिक्तानात्मप्रकृतिपदार्थव्यपाश्रयः सांख्यानामिव । still, it is not something that rests in a self-existent non-self as affirmed by the Saamkhyaa philosophers.

Sureswaraachaarya shows the difference between Saamkhyaa and Vedhaanthaa. The Saamkhyaa philosopher also says that the entire anaathma prapancha / ghata prapanchaa, consists of the four components - pramathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramaa. He groups these four components as prakruthi thathvam; he also says that this prakruthi thathvam, which is anaathmaa, is different from the purusha thathvam, the aathmaa.

Up to this, the Saamkyaa standpoint is very, very similar to Vedhaanthaa.

Thereafter only, the difference arises. The Saamkyaa philosopher holds: "This prakruthi is as much real and as independently existent as purusha: |". So, (according to the Saamkhyaa philosopher): "Purushaa and prakruthi are both equally real; their sambhandha is also equally real; therefore, the sambhandha-born pleasures and pains are also equally real; and, therefore, mokshaa involves 'escaping' from prakruthi".

In fact, all systems of philosophy, other than Advaita, look down upon the world; all of them define the world as 'suffering'; and, therefore, 'escape from the world' is the cardinal principle in all of them. They demonize the world as 'full of suffering'.

Advaita Vedhaanthaa alone says: "Drop the idea of 'demonizing the world' and the idea of 'escaping from the world'. World is wonderful, with its infinite varieties; and life is full of all kinds of events. Let them continue as 'drama'. Imagine, for a moment, that, Brahman alone is there, without the prakruthi or the world; in such an event, the mere Brahman, by itself, cannot even say 'aham Brahma asmi'; Brahman may be aananda svaroopaa: and chith svaroopaa: / But, even to claim 'aham Brahma asmi', we require this wonderful world. Therefore, never demonize the world; realize that the world is wonderful, with infinite varieties and experiences, which, of course include janma, mrithyu, jaraa, vyaadhi, and dhu:kham also. But, all of them are required for the world-drama. Mokshaa is not 'avoiding' the world; but, is 'accommodating' the world. 'Avoidance' is provisional definition (of mokshaa), while, 'accommodation' is the real definition. Let the 'drama' of the world continue; there is no need to 'escape' from it. The idea of 'escape' results only when the world is seen as absolute reality. Once it is viewed as drama / as mithyaa, the idea of 'escaping' will be dropped".

In Saamkhyaa, the world is not looked upon as mithyaa i.e. as 'drama', which attitude naturally results in the experience of real dhu:kham, when circumstances are not favourable; whereas, Vedhaanthaa, by looking upon the world as mithyaa or 'drama', makes world and life , with all their different situations and experiences - even difficult and miserable – enjoyable. The aging process may gradually convert the physical body from an instrument of enjoyment to a liability, causing pain; but, an informed Vedhaanthin will not complain against this, understanding that 'matter' has to undergo changes and will undergo changes. A positive approach to life is understanding that, the 'changes' in 'matter' are inevitable and, in fact, they alone make life interesting. A non-changing matter cannot give us the 'variety show'; the non-changing Brahman also cannot give us the 'variety show'. A healthy attitude is to 'enjoy' life with all its ups and downs, as an 'entertainment'; this attitude will result only from jagath-mithyaathva-nischaya: |

Sureswaraacharya points out that the Saamkyas have missed this fact. He says:

- सांख्यानां - For the saamkyaa philosophers,
- असौ - "The world of four components

The four components, as indicated earlier, are pramaathaa, pramaanaa, prameyaa and pramaa, which four components Sureswaraacharya names as graheethaa, graahyam, graheethi: and palam.

- व्यपाश्रयः - is resting on/ dependent on
- प्रकृतिपदार्थ - the kaarana prakruthi matter (as the basic substance),

What type of prakrithi?

- आत्म व्यतिरिक्त अनात्म (प्रकृति)- (the prakrithi) which is different from aathmaa,

"This world rests on anaathma prakrithi, which is different from aathmaa" is the gist.

And what type of aathmaa?

- स्वतस्सिद्ध - which (aathmaa) is the Self Evident (Consciousness principle)".

When the different systems of philosophy (under sanaathana dharma) are studied in comparison, a gradual progression can be observed. In the materialistic philosophies Nyaaya and Vaiseshikaa (as in modern science) 'Matter' is fundamental / basic and 'Consciousness' depends on 'Matter'. A gradual transition follows. The Saamkyaa philosophy is in the intermediary stage. It says: "Consciousness does not depend upon matter; Consciousness is independent; Matter is also independent". According to saamkyaa, therefore, Consciousness is released from Matter and is given an independent status ; thus, now, in the intermediary stage, there are two independent entities – 'Matter' and 'Consciousness' – while, previously (in Nyaaya and Vaiseshika) there was only one independent entity, 'Matter', with 'Consciousness' being dependent on 'Matter'. When we come to Advaitaa philosophy, there is again only one independent entity – but, with a very important difference. In Nyaaya and Vaiseshikaa, 'Matter' is independent and 'Consciousness' rises and resolves in 'Matter'; but, in Advaitaa, 'Consciousness' is independent and 'Matter' rises and falls in that 'Consciousness'. And, (incidentally) what is that Consciousness? "Mayyeva sakalam jaatham; mayi sarvam prathistitham" (Kaivalya Upanisad – manthraa 19).

Sureswaraachaarya started from 'Matter'; then he segregated purushaa (aathmaa) from anaathmaa; now, again he wants to go back to Advaitam. With that intention, the Aachaaryaa said "*Saamkyaa*s consider 'Matter' and 'Consciousness' as independent"; and, now, refutes that viewpoint. He asserts:

- न - It is not true in Vedhaanthee / this philosophy is not acceptable

If the world is not resting on prakrithi, what really does it rest on?

Sureswaraachaaryaa raises the question and answers it also:

(Sambhandha gadhyam) further to Verse 97:

किं तर्हि । स्वतस्सिद्धानुदितानस्तमितकूटस्थात्मप्रज्ञानमात्रशरीरप्रतिबिम्बिताविचारितसिद्धात्मानवबोधाश्रय एव तदुपादानत्वात्तस्येतीममर्थं निर्वक्तुकाम आह ।

What, then, is it? It rests as a product on the non-apprehension of the Self, which non-apprehension appears through failure of inquiry into the Self, that is constituted solely of absolute Consciousness, changeless, birthless, everlasting and self-established. This point is elucidated in the following:

If the question "If the entire universe, with four components, is not resting on real Matter, prakrithi, what is it?" is raised, Sureswaraachaaryaa answers "The entire world is mithyaa, which has got a lesser order of reality".

Then the next question (that may arise) is: "Why do you say that the entire world is mithyaa or is of a lesser order of reality, even when it is very clearly experienced by us? 'Matter' is very clearly experienced by us. On what basis do you say, that, the world is mithyaa?"

"Even the modern science is not able to negate the world, because, modern science holds that 'matter can neither be created nor destroyed. When matter is, thus, indestructible, on what basis, do you say that the world is mithyaa?" will be the question.

Sureswaraachaaryaa does not answer this question here (in this portion). But, the answer can be found in several other places (in our saasthraas), including the Maandookya Kaarika.

What is our (the Advaitins) answer?

We (the Advaita vedhaanthins) say: "The Upanishads – i.e. the Veda pramaanam - do not negate Consciousness, at any time, during the entire teaching procedure. On the other hand, when you look at the saasthric attitude to 'Matter', you find that the saasthraas' approach to 'Matter' is totally different. Even though the Upanishads accept 'Matter' initially, during the adhyaaropa prakarana, in the latter part of their teaching, they consistently and systematically 'negate' the entire universe. To repeat: Consciousness is never negated (by the Upanishads); but, 'Matter', though not negated in the beginning, is later negated in all the Upanishads.

"For instance, Kathopanishad very clearly asserts 'na iha naanaa asthi kinchana'- (II. I. 11) meaning 'the world that you are perceiving - this plurality consisting of pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-pramaa - is not there'.

"Kaivalya Upanishad is more emphatic – 'na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na chaanilo mesthi na chaambaram cha' (manthraa 22) – 'all the pancha bhoothas are non-existent' (It is to be noted that this averment is not 'the pancha bhoothas will be non-existent some time in the future i.e. in pralayan' – but 'the pancha bhoothas are non-existent even now')

"In the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, four times, it is said "sa esha nethi nethi ithi aathmaa". In addition to that, there is indirect negation (of 'Matter'), by the statement 'the other (aathmaa) is non-dual'.

'Thus, the Upanishads negate 'Matter' directly and indirectly in several places.

"Therefore, there must be a difference between 'un-negated' Consciousness and 'negated' Matter.

"Then, what should be the status of the world? It can never enjoy the same status as Consciousness, because, one (Consciousness) is never negated and the other (the universe) is negated; how can they be treated equally? This difference is what is emphasized by the use of the word mithyaa for the anaathma prapancham. Alternately, it can be termed as vyavahaarika sathyam (empirical reality), while, aathmaa or Consciousness is 'absolute Reality'".

This is the Advaithin's reply.

To repeat the reasoning: "What is negated cannot come under 'existent' category or 'non-existent' category. What is 'existent' cannot be negated, because it is 'existent' and what is 'non-existent' need not be negated, because it is 'non-existent'. Therefore, whatever is negated will have to belong to a third category (other than 'existent' or 'non-existent')".

In Sanskrit, this category is called sadhasath vilakshanam or sadhasadbhyaam anirvachaneeyam; a mysterious, un-categorizable experience is the world, otherwise referred to as 'seemingly existent' or 'mithyaa'.

Advaithic knowledge is complete only when it is understood that the entire anaathma prapanchaa / world (including one's own body and mind) comes under that mithyaa category, while, 'I' am the mithyaa jagadh adhishtaanam chaithanya thathvam. And, therefore, 'aham sathyam jagan mithyaa'.

There is one more important aspect. Sureswaraachaaryaa points this out: "Any mithyaa vasthu / seemingly existent object is always born out of ignorance only; in other words, any adhyasaa is born out of ajnaanam".

Two examples are popularly given: (1) the seemingly existent dream world is born out of the ignorance of the 'waker' (and, the moment the dreamer wakes up, the seemingly existent dream world gets falsified) and (2) the seemingly existent rope-snake is born out of rope ignorance (and is falsified on the 'awareness' of the rope).

Any mithyaa adhyasaa rests on the ignorance of the adhistaanam. This is not the teaching of only Sankaraachaaryaa (or Sureswaraachaaryaa). The Upanishads themselves say this: "For the jnaani, there is no duality at all".

"Thathra ko moha: ka: soka:" queries Isaavaasya Upanishad (verse 7) "there (after realization of Athman) where is the scope for delusion or grief?", while, Chaandoghya Upanishad (VII.24.1) declares: "yathra naanya: pasyathi naanya: srunothi naanya:

vijaanaathi thadh bhoomaa – “The Infinite is that where one does not see anything else, does not hear anything else and does not understand anything else”.

“The dvaita prapanchaa is not resting on ‘matter’; but, is resting on ignorance/ ajnaanam” is the averment of Advaitaa, though the statement appears mind-boggling.

“(Jagadh) Prakruthi aasraya:” is Saamkhyaa definition; “ajaana aasraya:” is the Vedhaanthaa approach to the world.

As Maandookya Upanishad and Mandookya kaarika declare “visva (jaagrath), thyjasa(svapnaa), and praagnyaa (sushupthi) are all based on ‘agrahanam’ . In the thureeyam, “naantha: pragnyam nabahi:pragnyam ..saantham sivam 'prapanchopasamam'” (Mandookya Upanishad – manthraa 7) – “aathmaa is free from the world”.

(Reverting to the text) Sureswaraachaarya raises the question:

- किं तर्हि - Then what is the world based on?

The Aachaaryaa answers, describing the world in one long compound word: “svathassiddhaanudhithaanasthamithakootasthaaathmapragnyaanamaathrasareerap-rathibhimbhithaavicharithasiddhaathmaanavabodhaasraya:”|

- आत्म अनवबोध आश्रयः - The whole universe is resting upon the ‘ignorance’ of the ‘self’;

Anavabodha – ajnaanam; aasraya: - dependent.

What is the ignorance? The fact that “I alone ‘am” is not known; because of this ignorance, ‘I’ lend ‘is’ness to the world, which world does not have an ‘is’ness of its own; this is similar to the ‘waker’ lending existence to the ‘dream world’, which does not have an existence of its own. ‘I’ am ‘lending’ existence to the world; but, not knowing that fact also, I think the world has an existence of its own. Therefore, I say the world ‘is’. This attributing ‘is’ness to the world, is also ajaanam.

Just as the dream world is born out of the ‘ignorance’ of the (vyaavahaarika) ‘waker’, the ‘is’ness of the world is born out of the ignorance of the other ‘waker’- the paaramaarthika ‘waker’/ the un-negated Consciousness.

- अविचारित सिद्ध - the world’s existence is available only as long as one does not make an enquiry (into the Self);

The well-known simile is the rajju-sarpa, in which the snake's existence continues only as long as the rope is seen for what it really is. The 'existence' of the world is dependent on 'non-enquiry'. In his treatise, Panchadas (in the 10th chapter), Swami Vidhyaaranyaa nicely points this out : "non-enquiry is the food for the world".

By 'non-enquiry', we are feeding duality and samsaaraa, and (ironically), having fed the samsaaraa, we want to escape from samsaaraa also. Why should I 'escape' the world, when I am 'feeding' the world for my own entertainment? 'I am supporting the world' is a fact. But the world is 'there' only because of my non-enquiry. This is conveyed by the adjective 'avichaaritha siddha.' |

- प्रज्ञान मात्र शरीर प्रतिबिम्बित - the world appears in the aathmaa, which (aathmaa) is of the nature of pure Consciousness;

Prathibhimbhitha – prathibhaasamaana: / appearing.

"Viswam dharpana dhruyamaana nagareethulyam nija anthargatham (it is within me) pasyan aathmani maayayaaa bahi: udhbootham iva (but appears as if 'existing' outside me)" – "the Self alone plays as the universe of names and forms, like a city seen in a mirror, due to the maayaa power, as though produced outside" – Sri Dakshinamoorthy Slokam (verse 1)

"The world (appears as) existing outside 'me', though, it is (in reality) prathibhimbhitham (prathibhaasamaanam) in the pragyaanamaathra sareeram" (is the message conveyed by this description).

The word 'Sareeram', in this context, means 'svaroopam / chaithanyam'.

And, what is that chaithanyam?

Do not look for that 'chaithanyam' outside. It is nothing but Aathmaa, the very Self, 'I', the Observer. Later, the Aachaaryaa will point out that the chaithanyam is ever the 'Observer' and never the 'Observed' – ever the 'experiencer' and never an 'object of experience'.

What type of Consciousness?

- कूटस्थ आत्मा - the changeless Consciousness,
- अनुदित - (which is) devoid of 'rising' / birth,
- अनस्तमित - (which is) devoid of 'setting' / death,

The term 'anudhitha-anasthamitha' conveys the meaning 'without janma or maranam'. This would also mean that I should not ask for avoidance of punar-janma, since, in the binary format, 'I' do not have even one 'janma' – where is the question of escaping from janma at all? All these facts should be there, in one's awareness, all the time.

- स्वतस्सिद्ध – and (which is) self-established / self-proven

Even though 'Consciousness' is not an object of 'experience', it is ever experienced, as 'I' the Subject, in and through all the arriving and departing objective experiences. Though it cannot be proved, it need not be proved also, because it is ever experienced by 'me'.

Sankaraachaaryaa avers in his Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram – verse 7 - "baalyaadhisvapi jaagradhaadhisu thathaa sarvaasu avasthaasu api vyaavrutthasu anuvarthamaanam" ("constantly and persistently manifests in all stages of age such as childhood, boyhood, youth and old age etc. and in all states - waking, dreaming and deep sleep").

In and through all the changing objective experiences, 'I', the Subject, continue. And, this ever-experienced 'I', am ever free also.

Then what about all the samsaaraa? The wise approach will be to stop calling it samsaaraa and view it as 'entertainment'. It is interesting to note, that, if one opts for videha mukthi, one cannot even claim "'I' am aanandam-brahma" - nor even 'I am a videha muktha: | You need sareera-thrayam to claim that you are a muktha: | You should learn to 'enjoy' your body-mind-complex, in which alone you can claim 'aham brahma asmi', even in the face of biological pain or mental grief. "Let the bodies come and go; I am ever free" should be the conviction.

And, why is this world mithyaa?

- तद् उपादानत्वात् तस्य - because 'ignorance' is the cause of this world.

Thadh – ajnaanam; upaadhaanam – kaaranam ; thadh upaadhaanam – ajaana kaaranam . "ajaanam kaaranam yasya prapanchasya". Thasya – dvaitha prapanchasya.

Therefore "'I' am ever-free Brahman; because of ignorance, 'I' am seeing a duality, as though really existing." Appearance of duality is not the problem; but, attributing 'reality' to the duality is (the problem).

- निर्वक्तुकामः - To introduce

- इति इमं अर्थ - this (apavaadhaa part of) teaching,
- आह - the author declares (the following):

This teaching is unique to Advaita. Saamkhyaa philosophy does not subscribe to this teaching. In saamkhyaa philosophy, prakruthi is real and therefore, (in the saamkhyaa philosophy) to attain liberation, purusha has to detach from prakruthi.

Therefore, the common notion that one has to take to sannyasa asrama for attaining liberation may be right from the Saamkhyaa viewpoint. But, according to Advaita, the saadhakaa need not 'run away' from prakruthi. "Even while engaged in worldly and mundane activities 'I am free' is the Advaita conviction.

Chapter II: Verse 97 –

ऋते ज्ञानं न सन्त्यर्था अस्ति ज्ञानमृतेऽपि तान् ।

एवं धियो हिरुज्योतिर्विचिद्यादनुमानत : ॥ ९७ ॥

Independent of knowledge, there are no objects of knowledge, while independent of them, knowledge can exist. In this fashion should one discriminate the element of consciousness from the objective phenomena presenting themselves to the mind.

Here Sureswaraacharya points out, that, matter does not enjoy existence of its own and that, Consciousness alone lends existence to matter.

This is proved not only by Upanishadic pramaanam, but proved by our experience also, as explained below:

If you have to talk about the existence of anything in the Creation, it must be a known thing; whatever is not known or not knowable - i.e., a thing which can never be known by anybody at any time – you can never talk about its existence. Therefore, 'Existence' presupposes 'knownness' or 'knowability'. So, wherever existence is talked about, there is knowledge (of that object, whose existence is talked about). And, wherever there is knowledge, there must be awareness or consciousness. Existence presupposes knowledge and knowledge presupposes Consciousness; therefore, without consciousness, one can never talk about the existence of matter. Therefore, experientially also, consciousness alone 'lends' existence to matter.

On the other hand, Consciousness exists by itself; it is self-proven; that 'I' am existent, does not require proof. Even when 'I' want to prove myself, the desire to prove myself is proof enough that 'I' exist. As a person who attempts to prove myself, even before the attempt, I am proved. The 'prover' of everything need not be proved or proven.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "Consciousness is self-proven / self evident" This profound idea is expressed by the words 'svathassiddham' or 'svayam siddha:'|

Whatever is svathassiddhaa is sathyam and whatever is proved by something else or whatever is existent because of something else, is parathassiddha: | Matter is parathassiddha:; its existence is lent by Consciousness and it has to be mithyaa.

Yath svathassiddham thath sathyam ; yath parathassiddham thath mithyaa; aham sathyam jagan mithyaa ; chaithanyam sathyam jada prapancha: mithyaa | This awareness is called svaroopavasthaanam; this is moksha: |

98. Chapter II, Verse 97 and 98 (21-06-2008)

Until now, Sureswaraachaarya elaborately did aathma-anaathma viveka, anaathmaa being the entire dhrusya-prapanchaa – the experienced universe – which includes the external world, which includes our own body, as well as the mind. We called it dhrusya prapanchaa. A more precise term would be 'saakshya prapanchaa'; because, when we say dhrusya prapanchaa, generally we understand the term to mean only the external world, excluding the body and mind, with 'I' being the subject; but, once the term saakshya prapanchaa is used, then the body and mind also will fall under anaathmaa; 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam, am the 'dhruka'. This alone, we call, as 'aathma anaathma viveka.' |

Having established this aathma – anaathma distinction, now Sureswaraachaaryaa is entering the important second stage, namely, the relationship between aathma and anaathma. He wants to establish that they do not have the same order of reality – one is sathyam and the other is anrutham or mithyaa - and that their relationship is called adhyaasa sambhandhaa. This adhyaasa sambhandhaa is not accepted by the saamkhyaa philosopher. The saamkhyaa philosopher also talks about aathmaa and anaathmaa; vedhanthaa also talks about aathmaa and anaathmaa; but, the difference is, in one philosophy (Vedhaanthaa), anaathmaa is mithyaa adhyaasa: and in the other (Saamkhyaa philosophy) anaathmaa is also sathyam.

When you confine the discussion to aathma-anaathma vivekaa alone, we may be said to be in the saamkhyaa 'binary' format; but, from this saamkhyaa 'binary' format, we have to move to the Vedhaanthaa 'binary' format, in which it is sathya-aathmaa with mithyaa-anaathmaa. Only when we come to Vedhanthaa 'binary' format, it becomes as good as 'unitary' format. Quite often, people raise the query: "In Advaitaa, how can we stop with the 'binary' format?; should we not move to the 'unitary' format?" This question or doubt arises, because, the word 'binary' implies dvaitam, whereas we are supposed to be advaitins. But, it should be understood and remembered that the Vedhaanthaa 'binary' format is 'unitary' format ; because, in Vedhaanthaa binary format, aathmaa is sathyam and anaathmaa is mithyaa and since mithyaa anaathmaa cannot be counted, it (Vedhaanthaa 'binary') is as good as advaitam.

Sureswaraachaarya's teaching is now moving from the saamkhyaa binary format to the Vedhaanthaa binary format, which, as explained, is 'unitary' or advaitam. This understanding (that advaita binary format is in reality 'unitary') is possible only when we establish that 'I' am the adhishtaanam-sathyam and the entire dvaitam is mithyaa.

The dvaitham consists of four factors. Of course, sometimes, we say that dvaitham consists of two – pramaathaa and prameyam ; and, sometimes we say that the world is three – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam ; the world may be said to consist of four factors also – pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramaa. The 'knower', the 'knowing instrument', the 'known' and the 'knowledge' – all these four come under anaathmaa and this entire anaathma prapanchaa is superimposed on 'me', the aathmaa.

This is the real Vedhaanthaa and only when the seeker assimilates this, he will get out of the conventional mokshaa concept, which conventional mokshaa concept is the belief "I have to escape from the world, through videha mukthi".

At the advanced stage, the seeker has to get out of this conventional belief and learn to look at himself as: "'I' am the adhishtaana chaithanyam, in which pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramaa are all falsely superimposed". This would mean that the relationship between 'me' and the world is like the relationship between rajju and sarpa: (in the well-known rajju-sarpa example). 'I' am the 'rope'; the entire 'frightening' world is the rajju-sarpa, which, in reality, cannot 'touch'/ affect me; 'I' bless the world; 'I' cannot be frightened by the world.

Since Sureswaraachaarya wants to talk about anyonya adhyaasaa, rajju sarpa etc., we have to remember some of the fundamental facts with regard to adhyaasaa or superimposition, which Sankaraachaarya had discussed in his famous adhyaasa bhaashyam. Sureswaraachaaryaa takes these points for granted and does not elaborate on them here; and, therefore, it is up to the student, to clearly recollect them.

When do we experience a rope-snake? The condition is: when the rope is present in a semi-dark / semi-lit place; under which circumstance, I may get the experience of the rope without knowing that it is a rope. This is obviously a situation of partial knowledge with partial ignorance - partial knowledge that 'there is something' and partial ignorance of 'the specific nature of the thing that is present'. The 'rope-ness' is not known ; while 'thisness' (i.e. the awareness of the presence of something) is there. This partial knowledge - that 'there is something' - is called saamaanya jnaanam ; the partial ignorance – 'ignorance of the specific nature of the thing that is present - that it is a rope' - is termed visesha ajnaanam.

There is a consequence to this partial ignorance. As explained, the partial ignorance conceals the specific nature of 'rope-ness' ; when the specific nature is thus concealed, it can create a misconception, and, in turn, the misconception or error can lead to mistaking the rope for a snake or a crack on the floor or a stream of water or a flower garland etc. The mistaken notion is born out of rope-ignorance. Therefore, we say 'ajnaanam is kaaranam;

the mistaken notion (sarpa:, in the example) is kaaryam. Between error and ignorance, the relationship is kaarya-kaarana sambhandha: |

Vedhaantha extends this example to aathmaa. It says "aathmaa is 'partially known' and this aathmaa is partially unknown also".

What is the partial – saamaanya - jnaanam about the aathmaa? "'I am" is known, because everyone is aware of oneself. This "'I am" – i.e. the self-conscious principle expressed as "'I am" - is the saamaanya jnaanam, which is not veiled by ignorance.

Then, what is veiled by 'ignorance'? "My' specific visesha svaroopam" is veiled by ignorance.

And, what is that visesham (my special nature)? From the Upanishads, we come to know that "'I, the aathmaa, am advaitham" – that "advaitam is my svaroopam". And, what type of advaitam? "Sajaatheeya vijaatheeya svagatha bedha rahitham advaitam" is my svaroopam. This is the clear message of the Upanishads.

Kathopanishad (II. 1 .11) says: "Iha na naanaa asthi kinchana" – "There is no plurality at all here"; Kaivalyopanishad avers: "na bhhomiraapo na cha vahnirasth" (manthraa 22) – "there is no earth, no water and no fire (implying 'nothing is there, other than aathmaa') ; and Maandookya Upanishad declares "*naantahpragnyam na bahipragnyam nobhayapragnyam na pragnyaanaganam na pragnyam na apragnyam| adrishtam avyavahaaryam agrahyam alakshanam achinthyam avyapadesyam ekaathmaprathyaasaaram prapanchopasamam saantham sivam advaitam chathurtham manyanthe sa aathmaa sa vignyeya:" (manthraa 7) – " They consider the Thuriyaa to be that which is not the outward consciousness, inward consciousness, not the consciousness turned both sides, not a mass of consciousness, not the all-knowing consciousness, not unconscious and that which is beyond perception, beyond transaction, beyond grasp, beyond inference, beyond thoughts, beyond description, traceable through the unbroken self-awareness, free from the world, tranquil, auspicious and non-dual"|

Advaitam is my svaroopam and ignorance has 'covered'/ veiled the advaita svaroopam, which svaroopam is my visesham. But, (as indicated earlier), The saamaanya jnaanam "'I am" is there; but, the visesha jnaanam "'I am advaitam" is not there.

When did this 'ignorance' start? This 'ignorance' is anaadhi (beginningless); in fact, 'time' itself started because of 'ignorance'; 'ignorance' did not start in 'time'; 'time' itself started in and because of 'ignorance'. Because of this anaadhi ajnaanam, there is misconception; and just as when 'ropeness' is 'covered', 'snakeness' appears, when advaitam is 'covered', the advaita prapanchaa appears. The entire advaita prapanchaa is a false appearance in 'me', the Self, the Conscious principle, because of 'self-ignorance'. In the Bhagavadh Githa, Lord Krishna says "ajnaanena aavrutham jnaanam - (Ch. V – verse 15) – "because of self-ignorance advaita jnaanam is aavrutham (veiled)" and continues "thena muhyanthi janthava:" – "Because of this, the beings are deluded".

Therefore, the first lesson to be noted and which is unique to Advaitam is : "prakruthi is a false projection due to purusha ajnaanam". The saamkhyaa philosopher will never accept this ; for him, prakruthi is also as much real as aathmaa, whereas the Advaitin goes by the Upanishadic teaching, "mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham, mayi sarvam layam yaath" (Kaivalya Upanishad – manthraa 19) – "everything is born of 'me', exists in 'me' and resolves in 'me'".

Therefore, what is the basis for dvaitam? Sureswaraachaaryaa said "aathma anavagama: eva dvaita aasraya:" - a powerful statement – "self-ignorance alone is the basis for dvaitam" – dvaitam meaning "pramaathru – pramaana – prameya – pramaa – chathushtayam".

The second point to be noted:

Vedhaantha says, that, the world comes under sadh-asadh-vilakshana mithyaa category, borrowing existence from 'me', the aathmaa.

To explain: In the example cited, the 'rope-snake', which is a product of rope-ignorance, belongs to an unique category (as discussed in the earlier class also).

The 'rope-snake' does not come under 'existent' category ; because, if the rope-snake comes under 'existent' category, it can at no time be negated ; on the other hand, on proper investigation with better lighting, the rope is seen for what it is, and the 'snake' is negated. Obviously, whatever that can be thus negated, cannot come under 'existent' category.

Nor does the 'rope-snake' come under totally 'non-existent' category, because it is 'experienced'; it does cause fear, it does cause the consequent physical symptoms such as perspiration, palpitations etc. and it does cause the anxiety to 'escape' from the perceived 'rope-snake'.

Therefore, (i.e. since it cannot be called either 'existent' or 'non-existent') the 'rope-snake' will have to be considered as belonging to a third category, neither 'existent' nor 'non-existent' - the 'seemingly existent' category / sadhaasadh vilakshana category, which is termed mithyaa. This concept is unique to Advaitam, which the Visishtadvaitins do not accept. They say that everything should come under either 'existent' or 'non-existent' category only. They reject the very possibility of the third category – mithyaa / sadhasadh vilakshanaa.

And, what is the uniqueness of the sadh-asadh vilakshana mithyaa? It exists only by 'borrowing' existence from an adhishtaanam. Going back to the rajju-sarpa example, the rope-snake does not have an existence of its own; it exists 'borrowing' existence from the rope. When you say 'is', the 'isness' belongs only to the rope, since, if you remove the rope, the snake cannot 'be'; in the other well-known example of the dreamer and the dream-world, if you remove the 'dreamer', the 'dream-world' cannot exist; the dream-world also comes under sadh-asadh vilakshana mithyaa category, borrowing existence from the dreamer-adhishtaanam.

Vedhaantha says, that, in the same manner as in the rope-snake and the dream-world examples, the world also comes under sadh-asadh-vilakshana mithyaa category, borrowing existence from 'me', the aathmaa.

Sankaraachaarya declares in his Maneeshaa Panchakam (verse 2): "Brahmaivaahamidham jagascha sakalam chinmaathravisthaaritham sarvam cha ethadh avidhyaayaa thrigunayaa sesham mayaa kalpitham iththam yasya dhrudaa mathi: sukhathare nithye pare nirmale chaandalosthu sa thu dvijosthu gururithyeshaa maneeshaa mama"—"I am Brahman (pure Consciousness). It is pure Consciousness that appears as the universe. All this universe is only conjured up by me, because of Avidhya (nescience), which is composed of the three gunaas (sathwam, rajas and thamas). One who has attained this definite realization about Brahman, which is bliss itself, eternal, supreme and pure, is my guru, whether he is an outcaste or a Brahmana".

Advaita Vedhaantha expects the adherent not to be a squeaky mouse, trying to run away from the world, but to roar and face the world like a lion.

Thus, "the world comes under sadh-asadh-vilakshana mithyaa category, borrowing existence from 'me', the aathmaa" is the second feature (of Vedhaantha). In other words: "I bless this world with its existence; 'I' do not seek blessings from the world".

The third, final and most important feature is the cultivation of the attitude that "I can allow the world process to continue, because, the mithyaa world cannot affect 'me', the adhishtaanam".

"I do not depend on the world; the world depends on 'me'; therefore, I would like to continue to bless the world, for its un-broken srushti-sthithi-laya march; I need not talk about mokshaa as 'escaping from the world'. Roopamastheha thathobha labhyathe naantho na chaadhir na cha sampradhishtaa | Let the eternal process of srishti-sthithi-laya continue in 'me' " should be the firm conviction of an Advaita vedhaanthin.

If the world will affect 'me', 'I' may desire to escape from the world and to stop the process of creation. The Vedhaanthin does not want to go to a state in which the world will never 'come and go'; he does not want to stop the process; on the other hand, he says 'let the process eternally continue'. That is his vision. Why does he allow it to continue? Because he knows that the world being mithyaa, its continuation is not going to adversely affect him, just as a stage-play does not affect the viewer, who, on the other hand, gets 'entertained' by the stage-play.

"Mokshaa does not mean achieving videha mukthi, in which, world experience ends; let the world continue; let the cycle of birth and death continue for my sookshma sareeram ; or let my sookshma sareeram also be terminated. Either way, it does not bother me; 'botheration' will result only if 'reality' is attached to these. 'Let the vyavahaaraas continue; 'I' am not affected'" – this attitude is mokshaa.

Coming back to the text, the portion that follows, is adhyaasa baagha: /

Sureswaraacharya says (in verse 97):

- ऋते ज्ञानं अर्था न सन्ति - Without 'me' the Consciousness principle, objects do not exist.

Even experience of those objects is possible only because of 'me', the Consciousness principle. On the other hand:

- तान् ऋते अपि ज्ञानं अस्ति - But, independent of the objects (of knowledge), 'I', the Consciousness principle, can exist.

In the rajju-sarpa example, without the snake, rope 'is'; but, without the rope, the snake cannot exist. Another example: – without the screen, movie cannot exist; but, without the movie, the screen can exist. In the same manner, without 'me', the world cannot exist; but, without the world, 'I' can exist. In short, the relationship between 'me' and the world is sathya- anrutha-sambhandha: /

एवं - In this manner,

Sureswaraacharya also warns: "When you say 'the world is mithyaa, depending on 'me', the meaning of the word 'me' should be clearly understood, as saakshi chaithanyam and not as the body-mind complex; you should include the body-mind complex also in the world and should say that the body and the mind are also mithyaa, depending on 'me', the saakshi-chaithanyam'.

This is extremely important, because, initially, the seeker understands mokshaa as manas saanthi, since he tends to look upon himself as the mana: | But, later, when he understands that he is not the mind, but, is the aathmaa / saakshi chaithanyam, whose saanthi is unconditional, the seeker need not and should not look for manas saanthi, but, instead, work on 'claim'ing aathma saanthi | An interesting fact is, that, when the seeker succeeds in 'claim'ing aathmasaanthi, manassaanthi is also achieved, as a bye-product. Of course, the 'claim'ing of aathma saanthi, is done with the help of the mithyaa mind; but, even though the seeker is focused on 'claim'ing aathma saanthi, without paying any attention to manas saanthi, manas saanthi also results, as a bye-product. Every jnaani, therefore, has achieved manas saanthi also – not as a goal, but as a bye-product.

- ज्योतिःविविच्यात् - may you separate the aathma chaithanyam, jyothi: - 'I', the aathma chaithanyam; vivichyaadh – may one separate.

Separate from what?

- धियःहिरूक् - as something different from the mind,

Hiruk– (an indeclinable word) vilakshanam / different; dhiya: - from the mind.

The aathma chaithanyam is different from the mind; therefore, the seeker should not get attached to the mind nor start working for its saanthi; because, the more the seeker works for manas saanthi, the more he has to nourish mano abhimaanaa| However, by 'claim'ing aathma saanthi, (of course, with the help of the mind) the seeker, indirectly, achieves manas saanthi, without working directly for it. An analogy can be given: the ritual of soorya namaskaaraa, where the worshipper's focus is on achieving chittha suddhi; but, his physical body also becomes healthier because of the ritual. Soorya namaskaara is done for chittha suddhi, and physical health is a bye-product. Similarly, 'claim'ing aathma saanthi: is the seeker's direct saadhanaa and manas saanthi: is the bye-product. This is the practice of the 'binary' format.

- अनुमानतः - by using the anvaya-vyathirekha logic.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 98:

यस्मात्प्रमाणप्रमेयव्यवहार आत्मानवबोधाश्रय एव तस्मात्सिद्धमात्मनोऽप्रमेयत्वम् । नैव हि कार्य स्वकारणमतिलङ्घ्यान्यत्राकारक आस्पदमुपनिबध्नाति । अत आह ।

As the empirical life involving means of knowledge and objects of knowledge is thus founded on the ignorance of the Self, it is evident that the Self is not an object of knowledge. The effect cannot go beyond its cause and rest on what is not a factor in its production. Hence the following:

Here, Sureswaraachaarya is talking about a corollary of this discussion. This is not the main discussion, (the main discussion being "aathmaa sathyam; anaathmaa mithyaa ; anaathmaa 'is' because of aathmaa's ignorance").

What is that corollary? Ans: "The Self is not an object of knowledge".

Because of aathma ajaanam or the concealment of the advaita nature of aathmaa alone, there is dvaita anubhavaa – duality existence. Therefore, the existence of dvaitam presupposes the concealment of advaitam – just as, in the rajju-sarpa example, the seeming existence of the snake presupposes the concealment of the rope.

What is dvaitam? Earlier, the Aacharyaa had defined dvaitam as pramaathaa-pramaanam-prameyam-pramaa. Dvaitam in the form of these four, is possible only because of the concealment of the advaita aathmaa and since aathmaa is concealed, aathmaa cannot be one of these four entities.

In other words, because these four entities appear only because of the concealment of the aathmaa, aathmaa cannot be any one of the four. An example for this assertion: Because of the concealment of the 'waker', different entities are experienced in the dream world; therefore, it is clear that the 'waker' cannot be one of the entities in the dream world. If the 'waker' is one of the entities in the dream, the very experience of the 'waker' will make the dream disappear.

To repeat: the appearance of pramaathru-chathushtayam presupposes the concealment of aathmaa and therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, "aathmaa cannot be pramaathaa or pramaanam or prameyam or pramaa".

Though aathmaa is different from all the four – pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-pramaa chathushtayam - the Aacharyaa highlights only one of them here, namely, that, aathmaa is not a prameyam. He states: "Aathmana: aprameyathvam siddham" – "it is evident that the Self is not an object of knowledge". This 'siddham' (or understanding) is possible based on all the detailed arguments given above; the Aacharyaa does not elaborate on these arguments; but, succinctly covers them by the sentence "yasmaath pramaana prameya vyavahaara: aathma anavabodha aasraya: eva thasmaath".

Since aathmaa is aprimeya, a seeker should not expect aathmaa to be revealed in any particular experience ; he should not try to experience aathmaa or endeavour to have the aathmaa revealed in a particular experience; because, if aathmaa is revealed in a particular experience , it will become prameyam. For instance, consider a 'visible' object; it is revealed in a particular experience; the steps to the 'revelment' are: the viewer's vision is directed towards the object, a particular vrutthi is formed, a particular knowledge takes place and the object is revealed. Thus, a particular object is revealed in a particular experience.

If aathmaa is one of the four entities – the pramaathaa, pramaana, prameyam or pramaa - it will also be revealed in a particular experience. But, aathmaa being aprimeya, it is never revealed in a particular experience; therefore, the act of 'working for a particular experience with regard to aathmaa' , is, itself, a misguided pursuit.

Therefore, i.e. "aathamana: aprimeyathvaath (since the Self is not an object of knowledge)", if a Vedhaanthic seeker says "I have completed all the prescribed saadhanaas – like sravanam, mananam etc. Currently, I am sitting in meditation, looking for a particular explosive / silent / mystic / extraordinary experience, in which aathmaa is revealed", it would only show that he has misconceived aathmaa as one of the prameyams. Sureswaraachaarya warns the seeker: "do not commit that blunder".

- प्रमाणप्रमेय व्यवहाराः - All the 'knowledge' activities / epistemological activities / jnaana vyavahaara:,

Jnaana vyavahaara: / pramaana prameya vyavahaara: would mean "all forms of efforts that are taken, for getting a particular knowledge / experience". All the efforts are based on dvaitham, which is born out of aathma ajnaanam. Therefore Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- आत्म अनवबोध आश्रयाः - (are) based on self-ignorance.

All 'knowledge' activities or efforts for specific experiences – all those struggles – are based on 'aathma anavabodhaa' (ignorance of the Self). The very struggle presupposes the concealment of the aathmaa; therefore, aathmaa will not fall within that vyavaharaa.

- यस्मात् तस्मात् - Because of this reason,
- सिद्धं - (the following idea /conclusion is) clear/evident.

What is that conclusion?

- आत्मनः अप्रमेयत्वम् - That aathmaa can never be revealed through any particular experience, (ordinary or extraordinary / mystic or non-mystic).

If at all anybody gets any mystic experience and something got revealed in that mystic experience, we (the Advaita Vedhaanthins) do not negate that mystic experience nor that 'something' revealed; what we say is "it is a mystic prameya, revealed through a mystic experience; but that mystic prameya is not aathmaa".

This is clarified further. It is because:

- कार्य कारणं अतिलङ्घ्य (athilangya) न आस्पदम् उपनिबध्नाति |
- कार्य - Any product
- आस्पदम् न उपनिबध्नाति - does not find its support / basis,
- अतिलङ्घ्य - outside
- स्वकारणं - its cause.

No kaaryam will find its support outside its cause; ornaments do not find their support outside their cause, namely, gold ; waves do not find their support outside their cause, namely, water ; furniture would not find its support outside its cause, namely wood. Extending these examples: "errors are products of ajnaanam and do not find their support outside the cause, ajnaanam". So, all the mithyaa padhaarthaas find their bases upon ajnaanam; all the adhyaasaas / misconceptions (like the rope-snake) find their supports / basis on ignorance. This is proved by anvaya-vyathireka – in the rajju-sarpa example, ajnaana sathve rajju-sarpa sathvam; ajnaana abhaave rajju-sarpa abhaava.; proving that ignorance is the aasrayaa of error; agrahanam is the aasrayaa for anyathaa-grahanam. (All these have been covered earlier in maandookya kaarikaa / maandookya Upanishad classes).

Therefore, all these four (pramaathru- pramaana- prameya-pramaa) have their basis on aathma ajnaanam.

So, in this context, the above general statement is to be interpreted as below:

- कार्य - Pramaathraadhi chathushtayam
- आस्पदम् न उपनिबध्नाति - does not find its support
- अतिलङ्घ्य - outside
- स्वकारणं - its cause, viz, aathma ajaanam,

Kaaryam is to be translated as prameyaadhi chathushtayam and kaaranam as aathma ajnaanam. "Prameyaadhi chathushtayam aathma ajnaanam athilanghya na varthathe" is the message.

- अन्यत्र अकारके - (and) apart from the kaaranam.

This term is used to further emphasize the same message.

And from all these discussions, what is the conclusion? The conclusion is: "aathmaa is never revealed in any particular experience that we have in mithyaa dvaitha vyavaahaaraa".

- अतः आह - Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says this:

Chapter II: Verse 98 –

व्यवधीयन्ते एवामी बुद्धिदेहघटादयः ।

आत्मत्वादात्मनः केन व्यवधानं मनागपि ॥ ९८ ॥

The mind, body and the objects are all mediately presented. But, the Self, because it is the Self, is present without any mediation whatever.

The various objects in the world, which are known as prameyams, are to be revealed by a pramaanam.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

- बुद्धिः - The mind (which is used in the generic sense and includes mana:, buddhi:, Chittham and ahamkaaram – the entire antha: karanaa or sookshma sareeram),
- देहः - the sthoola sareeram -
- घटादयः - (and) all external objects (gata: means a pot and gataadhaya: means 'all external objects such as a pot etc.') -

All these are varieties of prameyams.

- अमी - these prameyams
- व्यवधीयन्ते - are separated away from chaitanyam, (distanced by the pramaanam, which is the connecting link).

All the prameyams are distanced by the pramaanam, which is the link. Until the pramaanam link comes the prameyam is away unseen / unexperienced; the moment the pramaanam link comes, the prameyam is revealed.

The word 'vyaveedhayanthé' literally means 'remain away' (from our Consciousness, because of the connecting link - the pramaanam - missing). The 'distance' is also caused by several layers. Between the sookshma sareeram and 'me', there is one layer – kaarana sareeram; between 'me' and the sthoola sareeram, there are two layers – the kaarana sareeram and sookshma sareeram; between 'me' and the external world, there are three layers, kaarana sareeram, sookshma sareeram and sthoola sareeram. All these are prameyams, which are to be revealed by the chidhaabhaasaa, which has to pervade them to make them 'revealed'. Thus, the objects in the world are to be revealed through a pramaana and through particular experiences. But, aathmaa is different (stated in the second line of the verse).

99. Chapter II, Verse 98 and 99 (28-06-2008)

After dealing with the topic of aathma-anaathma viveka, now, Sureswaraachaarya has entered into the topic of the relationship between aathmaa and anaathmaa. And, in this respect, Vedhaanthaa is quite different from Saamkhyaa philosophy.

In the saamkhyaa philosophy, aathmaa and anaathmaa have the same degree of reality, whereas, in Vedhaanthaa, we have a very different view, viz., "'I', the aathmaa, am of a higher order of reality and the entire anaathma prapanchaa is of a lower order (of reality)"; also, according to Vedhaanthaa, "'I' am the adhishtaanam of anaathmaa and anaathmaa is adhyastham upon 'me'". Therefore anaathma-aathmaa relationship is adhyaasa-adhishtaana sambhandhaa; adhyaasaa means mithyaa and adhishtaanam means sathyam.

Sathya-mithyaa sambhandhaa is the relationship between aathmaa and anaathma prapanchaa and the awareness of this relationship is very much required to practice the binary format successfully. The binary format will never work, if we forget the difference in the degrees of reality. The maxim 'aham sathyam jagan mithyaa' has to be clear.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa highlights this topic. First, he categorized the entire anaathma prapanchaa into four categories – pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramaa. If the entire anaathma prapanchaa consists of these four components, and aathmaa is the adhishtaanam, different from the anaathmaa, then, aathmaa, the adhishtaanam, must be pramaathru vilakshanam, pramaana vilakshanam, prameya vilakshanam and pramaa vilakshanam – different from pramaathaa, different from pramaanam, different from prameyam and different from pramaa. All of them are adhyastham, aathmaa being the adhishtaanam, different from them.

And, among these four components of the anaathma prapanchaa, Sureswaraachaaryaa is focusing on one particular aspect – i.e. 'aathmaa is prameya vilakshanam' – different from prameya - which can be termed as 'aprimeyathvam'.

The Achaaryaa has taken up for discussion, this concept of 'aprimeyathvam of aathmaa'. 'Aprimeyathvam of aathmaa' can be translated in this manner: "aathmaa is not revealed or revealable through a particular experience". Anything revealed through a particular experience is called prameyam; for instance, sabda is revealed through a particular experience caused by the ears - similarly sparsaa, roopaa etc. Any prameyam is revealed or revealable through a particular experience at a particular time. And, if it is a mystical experience, that will also reveal only a prameyam – the only difference is that through mystical experience, is revealed a mystical prameyam – nevertheless, what is revealed is only a prameyam. Aathmaa being aprimeyam, it is neither revealed through a particular ordinary experience nor through a particular extraordinary or mystical experience. This, in essence, is the meaning of the word aprimeyam.

Sureswaraachaarya wants to continue to discuss this topic further in a technical - interesting and subtle - language. This manner of discussion is unique to this text, Naishkarmya Siddhi – not presented by other Vedhaanthic texts. And, what is that unique presentation?

Sureswaraachaaryaa first wants to deal with the query 'what is a prameyam?'; so that, once he explains the word very clearly, he can say 'aathmaa is different from that prameyam'. Therefore, to start with, his focus is on prameyam, later to move to the aprimeyathvam of aathmaa.

The Aachaaryaa says that 'any prameyam is anaathmaa' and that 'any anaathmaa prameyam is hidden / separated from Consciousness by one or more layers of obstacles'.

Now, the question is "What are the possible layers of obstacles for a prameyam to be hidden from Consciousness?"

The first and universal layer of obstacles, which is common to all the anaathmaa is called ajnaanam. Ajnaanam is the first, fundamental and universal obstacle which hides prameyam from Consciousness. When we say 'ajnaanam is the first layer of obstacle', the word ajnaanam is used in a technical sense. Ajnaanam, in this context, means jaadyam = jadathvam = achethanathvam = insentientcy = materiality. The statement, 'ajnaanam is the first layer of obstacle', therefore, means 'the very insentientcy / jadathvam / materiality of anaathmaa is the first obstacle'.

Why do we say that jadathvam is an obstacle? Because, if anaathmaa were chethanam by itself i.e., if anaathmaa had chethanathvam / chaithanyam as its intrinsic nature, then anaathmaa would not have been away from Consciousness, obviously because Consciousness would have been its very nature. But, since anaathmaa is material / insentient in nature, and anaathmaa does not have Consciousness as its intrinsic nature, the very jadathvam of anaathmaa keeps it 'away' / separated from Consciousness. Because of its insentientcy, it can never reveal its existence by itself. It is true of any material object in the Creation, that it can never reveal its existence by itself, because it is obstructed by the layer of ajnaanam / jadathvam and therefore it requires chaithanya sambhandha: - 'pervasion of Consciousness', otherwise called 'chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi.' | If jadathvam were not there, it would not have required chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi: | An analogy can be given : consider the desk (in front of Swamiji) ; it requires the pervasion of light, for revealing its existence ; if the desk were luminous by itself, it would not have required the pervasion of light. In contrast, 'light' does not require a 'pervasion of light', because 'light' is luminous by itself. In a similar manner, every jadavasthu is 'distanced' by jadathvam and therefore, it requires chaithanya vyaapthi / chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi for its existence to be revealed. And, whatever requires chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi, is called 'prameyam'.

The entire anaathma prapanchaa - every material entity – has got jadathvam as an obstacle, requiring chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi., making it a 'prameyam'.

And, there can be and there are more obstacles also.

Sureswaraachaarya says, that, based on the layers of obstacles, prameyams – the anaathmaa material - can be sub-divided into three categories, which he names.

The first is buddhi: / the mind. Mind is material; it has one obstacle - the obstacle of jadathvam / jaadyam; therefore, it requires chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi for its existence to be revealed. We are able to experience our mind and thoughts, because, chidhaabhaasaa pervades the mind, making the 'insentient' mind 'sentient'. The mind is the first type of prameyam.

The next category of anaathmaa is deha: | Deha: also is inert; it has ajnaana prathibhandhaa / jaadya prathibhandhaa; to use Sureswaraachaaryaa's expression, it has ajnaana vyavadhaanam – (the verb 'vyavadheeyante' in the verse is a very technical word). Therefore, the body also requires chaithanya pervasion / chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi, for its existence to be revealed. Only when pervaded by chidhaabhaasaa, body also becomes sentient and recognizable. Body is prameyam No. 2, requiring the obstacle-remover of jadya vyavadhaana nivritthi: | But, between the two prameyams – the mind and the body - there is a difference, which is: even though both borrow chaithanyam from the aathmaa, the body cannot borrow the chaithanyam directly from the aathmaa, whereas, the mind can borrow chaithanyam directly from the aathmaa. If body can directly borrow chaithanyam / chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi from aathmaa, what will be the consequence? Ans: If it were so, even after death i.e. even after the mind 'leaves' the body, the body will continue to exist and will be able to perform its functions. But, experience shows that it is not so. This proves that, between the body and the aathmaa, there is a second layer, the 'mind'. Through the mind alone, the body can borrow chaithanyam from the aathmaa. Thus, the body has two layers of obstacles. The mind has only one layer of obstacle - jadathvam; while, the body has the obstacle of jadathvam / ajnaanam and in addition, a second layer – the mind. Only when the chaithanyam crosses the obstacle of the mind / passes through the mind and comes to the body / sense organs etc., then alone the body will become sentient.

The third category of anaathmaa is the external world of objects. The objects of the world are also prameyams ; they also have jadathvam; they also require chidhaabhasa vyaapthi ; and, they also cannot borrow chidhaabhasa directly from aathmaa. Then, how does chidhaabhasa come to them? In the first stage, from aathmaa, chidhaabhasa should go to the mind; then, it should go to the body, because, only if it goes to the body, sense-organs can operate. Otherwise, i.e., if chidhaabhasa pervades only the mind / is confined to the mind, the recipient will be in svapna prapanchaa. Only when the chaithanyam enters the body also, all the golakams will become active; and, with the activation of the golakams alone, the indriyams will become operational; only when the body, the golakams and the indriyams become operational, the chidhaabhasa goes out (to the external objects) - "Naanaachchidhra ghatodharasthitha mahaadeepaprabhaa bhaasvaram jnaanam yasya thu chakshuraadhikaranadhvaara bahi: spandhathe" - "whose intelligence 'flashes' outside through the eyes and other sense-organs, just like the bright light of a great lamp placed in a jar having many holes" – as verse 4 of Sri Dakshinamurthy Sthothram goes. Thus, the chaithanyam has to cross the mind (obstacle 1), cross the body (2nd obstacle) and then cross the fundamental obstacle – jadathvam. Thus, the external world has three layers of obstacles - three *vyavadhaanam*s - jadathvam, deha: and mana: |

But, what is common to all the three categories of anaathmaa? All are jadam. Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says that all of them are prameyams.

A corollary is also derived: When it is a prameyam with three layers of obstacles, it is called prameya anaathmaa ; when it is a prameyam with two obstacles, it is called pramaan anaathmaa and when it has got only one obstacle, it is called pramaathru anaathmaa. Pramaathaa is also anaathmaa; but, its speciality is that, it is a prameyam with only one layer of obstacle; pramaanam is also anaathmaa; but, it is a prameyam with two layers of obstacles. Prameyam is also anaathmaa, with three layers of obstacles. What is common is that they – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam - are all anaathmaa only, all requiring chidhaabhasa vyaapthi.

If the chidhaabhasaa does not pervade the mind, pramaathaa - the knower – disappears. If the chidhaabhasaa does not pervade the body, all the pramaanams – the sense organs - become non-operational. And, if the chidhaabhasaa does not pervade the external world, prameyams go away. That's why, in sushupthi, the pramaathaa is absent ; the pramaanam is absent ; the prameyam is absent.

To summarize: "Prameyam means that which requires chidhaabhasa vyaapthi; and when the chidhaabhasa pervades , it becomes a particular experience, through which the prameyam is revealed".

Sureswaraachaaryaa points out that aathmaa does not come under prameyam category, because aathmaa does not require chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi for its existence to be revealed. And, it does not require chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi because it is free from all the layers of obstacles. Especially the fundamental obstacle called jadathvam – inertia – is not there, because aathmaa itself is of the nature of Consciousness and why should chith require chidhaabhaasa for revealing its existence? Thasmaath aathmaa aprameya:]

Reverting to the text, verse 97 – Chapter II:

- अमी - These -
- बुद्धिदेहघटादयः - Buddhi (the pramaatha), deha: (the pramaanam) and objects like the pot etc. – i.e. the entire anaathma prapanchaa
- व्यवधीयन्ते - are obstructed from Consciousness.

The obstruction is caused by one or two or three layers; for buddhi, by one layer called jadathvam, for the body, by two layers called jadathvam and buddhi and for the world, by three layers – jadathvam, body and buddhi. Whereas:

- आत्मत्वात् - 'I', the aathmaa, being of the very nature of chaithanyam,
- केन - with what layer of obstacle whatsoever,
- आत्मनःव्यवधानं स्यात्(- can it (aathmaa) be separated / hidden from Consciousness?

This is not a question. It conveys that there is no layer of obstacle for aathmaa, requiring chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi. Therefore, aathmaa is aprimeya: (by definition of prameyam).

(In almost all sahasranaamaas, one of the names for the deity is aprimeya: or aprimeyaa – difference being only in the gender, which difference is also only upaadhi dhrushtyaa and not svaroopaa dhrushtyaa.)

This conclusion - that aathmaa is aprimeya: - gives rise to a few questions, as corollaries, which are worthwhile studying in this context.

It was said that 'aathmaa is not revealed through any particular experience'. In that case, how does one prove the very existence of aathmaa? (This important topic has been discussed earlier, in various other contexts also – but, has to be recollected in this context.) The answer is: "even though aathmaa is not revealed through a / any particular experience, aathmaa is always/ ever experienced / evident in and through all the particular experiences, because all particular experiences are possibly only in the medium of Consciousness".

To drive home this answer i.e. to make this fact clearer, the following example may be given: Perception of any object requires not only the (existence of the) object and not only the (perceiving) eyes; but the medium of light also. All particular perceptions can take place and are taking place only in the medium of light. And, if a question "in which particular perception, is the light revealed?" is raised, the answer can only be "in every particular perception, light is evident". When a person is perceived, the object by his side may not be perceived and when the object is perceived, the person may not be perceived; in other words, when you perceive the person, the object by his side is not revealed; when you perceive the object, the person is not revealed; whereas, 'light' is revealed in every perception, though, this 'availability of light in every perception' is largely ignored, because the focus of the perceiver, is on the person / the object perceived. The fact, that, "in and through every perception, 'light' is being experienced" is lost sight of, by the perceiver. The perceiver does not require a particular perception to experience the light.

In the same manner, as in the above example of 'light' and 'perceptions', aathmaa is not revealed or experienced in a particular event; but, is ever available, in and through all experiences.

Whatever is experienced in one particular event is prameyam. But, aathmaa is 'experienced' in and through experiences of all prameyams. Prameyams are varied; but, in and through all the varied experiences / prameyams, "prathibhodhavidhitham matham" – "(Brahman) is known / discovered (as the witness awareness) in every thought" (Kenopanishad - verse 4 – Ch. II)

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa asks: "Why should you struggle to experience aathmaa?" In fact, aathmaa is unavoidable, just as sunlight cannot be avoided, when objects are perceived in sunlight. Aathmaa aprameyathve api svaprakaasa: bhavathi | Sankaraachaarya also repeatedly says: "If there is one experience which you need not work for / which is given to you freely, it is aathma anubhavaa". That's why, aathmaa is called svaprakaasa: and svathassiddha: |

Lalitha Sahasranaama Sthothraa refers to Devi as "Aprameya svaprakaasaa mano vaachaamagocharaa" | These adjectives are applicable to aathmaa also. Aaathmaa is beyond mana: and vaak.

And after reading this adjective 'manovaachaamagocharam' to aathmaa, people commit a very big blunder. They conclude: "Because aathmaa is not available for mind and sense organs, the seeker has to work for aathma anubhavaa, by removing the mind and sense organs. Nirvikalpa samaadhi has to be resorted to. The seeker has to remove all the sensory experiences; the seeker has to remove all the thoughts; and after removal of all the thoughts, aathma anubhavaa will be attained”.

But, if, thus, aathma anubhavaa were to be ‘attained’ only later, it would mean that there is some obstruction ; and , if there were, thus, some obstruction, aathmaa would become a prameyam. But, aathma anubhavaa being ‘unobstructedly’ available – nithya upalabhdhisvaroopoham aathmaa - why should one work for aathma anubhavaa? No effort is required.

This (i.e., the question ‘why should one work for aathma anubhavaa?’), in turn, gives rise to another question: “in that case, why should, at all, one study Vedhaantha?” Sankaraachaarya eloquently answers this question in his Upadesa Saahasri - Ch. XVIII (verse 4) – “siddhaath eva ahamithi yasmaath yushmaddharmo nishidhyathe rajjvaamvaahidhee: yukthayaa thathvamithyaadhisaasanai:” – “Just as the idea of a snake is negated from a rope (in the rope-snake example), so, everything of the nature of the non-self is negated from the eternally existing Self, implied by the word ‘I’, on the evidence of the Sruthis ‘Thou art That’ etc., in which the implied meanings of the words have been ascertained by reasoning and the scripture”.

It should be clearly understood that aprimeya aathmaa is always experienced by one, as ‘aham’, ‘aham’, ‘aham’ – ekaathma prathyaya saaram’ – ‘baalyaadhishvapi anuvarthamaanam’ etc. This is not the problem.

Then, what exactly is the problem? It is that, “upon the ever-experienced aathmaa, ‘I’, I falsely attribute the properties of anaathmaa”.

To repeat: Lack of aathma anubhavaa is not the problem; the problem is, that, ‘upon the ever-experienced aathmaa ‘I’, I superimpose anaathmaa’s attributes’. The physical body’s attributes – such as gender etc. – are wrongly superimposed on aathmaa; and mental attributes are also superimposed. The seeker tends to complain “ I do not have saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi . Therefore, how can I claim that I am liberated?”. Even as one makes this statement, one is perpetuating the blunder of transferring the attributes of the mind to aathmaa. Even if the converse claim viz., ‘I have saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi’ is made (which claim is generally not likely), the same blunder is committed. Both the bhaavaa and abhaavaa of adhikaarithvam are attributes of anaathmaa only, which attributes one tends to superimpose on aathmaa, little realizing that this ‘blunder’ is an obstacle to one’s progress towards the binary format.

“Drop’ the attributes of anaathmaa (i.e. recognize and ‘realize’ that they are only attributes of anaathmaa and not that of aathmaa) and you are free right now”. ‘Improvement of anaathmaa' can be undertaken as a hobby; but, not as a 'must' for 'liberation'. Sareeradhvayam can be improved or refined, for loka sangraha – for the benefit of the family and community.

The very complaint "I have not achieved saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi and therefore, I am hesitant (to claim that I am liberated)" only shows that the seeker is wrongly identifying himself with his mind – that he is superimposing on his Self, his sookshma sareera dharmaa:|

"I am" is a correct statement; but, adding an / any adjective to this statement – including one's academic achievements and qualifications - is only a loud proclamation of one's ignorance and does not reveal the glory of the true 'I'. Vedhaantha gives the call: "siddhaath eva ahamithi yasmaath yushmaddharma: nivarthathe"- "everything of the nature of the non-self is to be negated from the eternally existing Self, implied by the word 'I'". 'Yushmaddharma:', in this context, is 'anaathma dharmaa' | Vedhaantha does not talk of aathma anubhavaa; but, is for 'cleaning' the aathmaa intellectually, 'recognizing' that every attribute belongs to the anaathmaa and claiming that "I am the nirguna chaithanyam".

The seeker should realize that the attributes of his sareera thrayam are to be utilized only for his 'entertainment' and that his self-worth does not depend on the qualities or conditions of his sareerathrayam / family / profession / business etc.

Study of Vedhaantha is intended for negating anaathma dharmaa i.e. "Adhyaasa nivrithyartham Vedhaantha vichaara:" | This is another corollary to be noted.

(Reverting to the verse) –

- मनाक् अपि – alpam api (the word 'manaak' is 'indeclinable').

"Even the smallest layer of obstruction is not there for aathmaa, with regard to the Consciousness" is the message.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 99:

स्वयमनवगमात्मकत्वादनवगमात्कत्वं च मोहमात्रोपादानत्वात् ।

This is so because they are not of the nature of consciousness by themselves ; and they are not of that nature, because they are products of mere delusion:

In the previous sloka, it was said that the entire anaathma prapanchaa is a prameyam, because it has got the jaadyam obstacle.

Then, the question arises: "Why do they have the jaadyam obstacle?" In other words: "Why is 'matter' material? Why does it have jadathvam? Why does it have the jaadyam layer of obstacle, requiring the chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi, for 'revelment' of its existence?"

Sureswaraacharya answers: "because, the entire prameya / jaadya prapanchaa is born out of ajnaanam".

The very word ajnaanam means 'jnaana virodhi' / opposed to jnaanam or chaithanya svaroopam; i.e. the word itself indicates the opposite of jnaanam, viz., achethanathvam / jadathvam. Similar to a non-luminous object being a non-revealing object, ajnaanam also is non-luminous / non-revealing / non-illuminating.

The Aachaaryaa says that ajnaanam is the cause or kaaranam of the prameya prapanchaa; and, the kaaranam, Ajnaanam, not being of the nature of chaithanyam i.e. being jada-svaroopam, its kaaryam or product, the entire prameya-prapanchaa is also jada-svaroopam. "Kaarana ajnaanasya jadathvaath kaarya prameya prapanchasya api jadathvam" |

To repeat: Ajnaanam is jada-svaroopam, because jnaanam or chaithanyam is not the nature of ajnaanam; the prameya prapanchaa is born out of ajnaanam i.e. it is a kaaryam (product) of ajnaanam. "Kaaranasya jadathvaath kaaryasya api jadathvam", because of the maxim, "kaarya-kaaranayo: samaana svaroopathvam / svabhaavathvam" | An analogy: If gold is the cause and ornaments are the effect, the ornaments will be of the nature of the gold only.

Sureswaraacharya says: "Prameya prapanchaa is born out of ajnaanam; ajnaanam is jadam; therefore, prameya prapanchaa is also jadam; therefore, it requires chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi" |

- स्वयं अनवगम आत्मकत्वात् - Because they (buddhi, deha, ghataadhaya: - the entire prameya prapanchaa / the anaathma prapanchaa) are of the nature of ajnaanam / achethanathvam

This portion of the sentence is to be connected to the earlier verse – as "svayam anavagama aathmakathvaath vyavadheeyanthe" – "The mind, body, world etc. are obstructed from Consciousness, because they are of the nature of achethanathvam".

Then the next question is "How do you say that the world is ajnaana svaroopam?"

The Aachaaryaa gives the answer:

- अनवगम आत्मकत्वं च - The jada svaroopam of the world (is),

- मोहमात्र उपादानत्वात् - because mere ignorance is the material cause (of the entire prapanchaa).

Moham - ajnaanam / ignorance; moha maathram – mere ignorance; upaadhaanam - material cause.

Mere ignorance is the cause of the entire prapanchaa. Ajnaanam, the kaaranam, is jadam. Therefore, the kaaryam, the entire prapanchaa, is also jadam. The kaarya-kaarana vilakshana aathmaa alone is chethanam. And, it has to 'lend' chidhaabhaasa to all prameyams.

Then the next question is "Why do you say that the world is born of ignorance?"

Ans: "If the world was not born of ignorance, it would have been real like aathmaa".

Further question: "So, what is wrong in accepting the world also real, like aathmaa".

Sureswaraachaarya would reply: "If anaathmaa also were as real as aathmaa, the Upanishads would have never negated the universe".

The very fact, that the Upanishads, very deliberately, consciously, systematically and in several contexts, negate the universe, establish that 'the world is not as real as aathmaa'. The negations are not casual; nor are they stray statements.

"Thaathparyathayaa" (as their essential content) the Upanishads have negated the world. To quote only two (among the numerous passages): (1) in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, in four places, the term "neti" is used; (2) in Kaivalya Upanishad the 'negation' is established by the statements "na bhoomi: na aapa: na agni: na sareeram na punyam na paapam" etc.

In stark contrast, the Upanishads never negate aathmaa. Aathmaa is never negated; while the world is repeatedly negated.

"Yath bhaathitham thath mithyaa" | And, therefore, "the world must be born of ajnaanam only; therefore, world is ajnaana kaaryam; ajnaanam is jadam; therefore, the world is jadam; therefore, it requires chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi. Aathmaa is different; it is aprimeyam."

100. Chapter II, Verse 99 to 101 (05-07-2008)

Chapter II: Verse 99 –

प्रमाणमन्तरेणैषां बुद्ध्यादीनामसिद्धता ।

अनुभूतिफलार्थित्वादात्मा ज :किमपेक्षते ॥ ९९ ॥

These phenomena like the mind are not there independent of knowledge probative of them, because they require to be illumined by experience. But, the Self is sentience itself. Hence, what else does it need for presenting itself?

In these profound verses, Sureswaraachaaryaa is pointing out that the entire anaathma prapanchaa is a product of ignorance – ajnaana kaaryam. The Achaaryaa uses a different term – 'moha maathra upaadhaanam', whose ultimate meaning is only 'ajnaana kaaryam'.

Since the entire anaathma prapanchaa is only a product of ignorance, it is only a 'misconception'; it cannot be taken as a fact.

What is the proof / support for Sureswaraachaarya to make this statement, with such courage and conviction? Just as Sugreeva (in the Ramayana) boldly challenged Vaali, because of the backing of Rama, the Achaaryaa boldly declares "the entire anaathma prapanchaa is a product of ignorance and is, therefore, only a misconception - not a fact", backed and supported as he is, by the Upanishad Pramaana Vaakyaani. All the Upanishads consistently and systematically negate this entire universe, both directly and indirectly.

Direct negation is available in several Upanishads:

The declaration "Neha naanaa asthi kinchana" – "there is no plurality at all here" is found in the Katopanishad (II.1.11), and also in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (IV.Iv.19).

Kaivalya Upanishad avers: "Na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na cha anilo mesthi na cha ambaram"- "there is no earth, nor water, nor fire, nor wind, nor space" (negating even the basic pancha bhoothaas). "Nethi nethi ithi aathmaa"– in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad. There are, thus, several anaathma prapancha nishedha vaakyaani, in the Upanishads.

Not only do the Upanishads negate the universe directly, they negate the universe indirectly also. How do they do that?; by pointing out, that Brahman alone is there: "Brahmaiva idham amrutham purasthaath brahma paschaath brahma dakshinatha: cha uttharena" – "All this in front is the immortal Brahman alone; Brahman alone is behind; Brahman alone is on the right as well as on the left" (Mundakopanishad II.ii.12) or "aathmaiva idham purasthaath paschaath" etc. When the Upanishad, thus, says "aathmaa alone is there", it indirectly means that "really speaking, anaathmaa is not there".

With such direct and indirect 'negations' of the universe, as his supports, Sureswaraachaarya boldly declares that the universe is ajnaana kaaryam.

But, when we say that the universe is a 'product of ignorance', the following aspect must be carefully understood: Generally we understand the word 'ignorance' as a condition of the mind; therefore, when we say that world is a 'product of ignorance', many people conclude that the world is a 'product of the mind' – i.e., 'ignorance projection' is misunderstood as 'mental projection'. The well-known example of the 'rope-snake' further adds to the confusion, because, the misconceived 'rope-snake' admittedly is a mental projection. But, this is not what Vedhaanthalaa means to say ; when Vedhaanthalaa says that anaathmaa is a product of ignorance, it means that the mind also is a product of ignorance, because, (according to Vedhaanthalaa), mind itself comes under anaathmaa. The entire universe, including the mind is a product of ignorance. To clearly convey this, the adjective 'moolaa' is used for avidhyaa; and by the use of the term moolaa avidhyaa, the ignorance that Vedhaanthalaa talks about, is the ignorance which projects the world including the mind; it is 'mind-projecting' ignorance. Therefore, this ignorance is called moolaa avidhyaa ; and since the world and the mind are products of moolaa avidhya, the whole world and the mind are non-factual; mind is a misconception; world is also a misconception. They are both ajanaa kaaryam. This is a profound concept, which has to be understood properly: "World is not mental projection; world and the mind, together, are products of ajnaanam". When sruthi negates the world, sruthi negates the mind also; in Kaivalya Upanishad, for instance, world along with the mind is negated.

Therefore, (the first fact that is established, is) "anaathmaa is ajnaana kaaryam".

Then, the next fact that is established is "Ajnaanam is jadam", on the reasoning that follows: Ajnaanam is different from Brahman or aathmaa. What is the reason? "Brahman jnaanaswaroopathvaath" – "because, Brahman is of the very nature of jnaanam." Since, thus, ajnaanam is different from Brahman, Brahman being chethanam, ajnaanam has to be achethanam or jadasvaroopam.

"Ajnaanam is jadam" is, therefore, the second lesson to be noted.

The third lesson or the corollary: Anaathmaa is a product of ajnaanam (1st lesson above); ajnaanam is jadam (2nd lesson above). Therefore, "the anaathmaa which is a product of jada ajnaanam, must also be jadam" is the 3rd lesson or corollary based on 1 & 2 above.

To repeat: Jada ajnaana kaaryathvaath – being a product of ajnaanam, which is jadam - the anaathmaa also must be jadam. And, since the entire anaathmaa, which includes the body-mind complex also is jadam – i.e. since the body, mind and the entire universe are all jadam - they will all come under prameyam. "jadavthvaath prameythvam (anaathmana:)". Whereas, aathmaa is aprameyam; in contrast to anaathmaa, which is ajnaana kaaryam; therefore jadam; and therefore, prameyam.

And, therefore, what? Since anaathmaa is ajnaana kaaryam, jadam and prameyam, anaathmaa requires chaithanya sambhandhaa, for its existence to be revealed. This is similar to a non-luminous object requiring 'connection' with light for its existence to be revealed.

The chaithanya sambhandhaa can be either direct or indirect. This is what the Achaaryaa indicated in the last verse.

The mind gets chaithanya sambhandhaa directly. 'I' am the aathmaa and I spread my 'luminosity' / chaithanyam – directly over the mind. 'I' spread a coating of chidhaabhaasaa directly on the mind and the mind becomes pramaathaa. Later, after penetrating the mind, through the mind, 'I' spread over the body and the sense organs. The sense organs are, thus, indirectly coated by chidhaabhaasaa and they become pramaanams. Thereafter, when the pramaanams perceive the sense objects, through the pramaana sense organs, the prameya prapanchaa gets the chaithanya sambhandhaa. Thus, the pramaathaa mind gets primary coating of chaithanya sambhandhaa, the pramaana sense objects get the secondary coating and the prameya jagath gets the tertiary coating of chidhaabhaasaa. The common factor between the three - the pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam – is that, none of them (the entire anaathma prapanchaa) - is capable of getting revealed without the chidhaabhaasaa coating, which is a blessing of 'I', the chaithanya aathmaa.

"Na thathra suryo bhaathi na chandratharakam nemea vidhyutho bhaanthi kuthoyamagni: thameva bhaantham anubhaathi sarvam thasya bhaasaa sarvamidham vibhaathi" - "The sun does not illumine; the moon and stars do not; these flashes of lightning also do not; how can this fire illumine? Everything shines after that Self alone, which is self-effulgent. By its light, all this shines" declares the Kathopanishad (II. ii.15). 'Thasya' refers to the Self or aathmaa.

Because of 'my' light, pramaathaa mind, pramaanaa senses and prameyam universe – all of them reveal their existence. This is what Sureswaraacharyaa says (in this verse): "you are the aathmaa; and, because of you alone pramaathru-pramaana-prameya anaathmaa reveals its existence". This is the topic of verse 99.

- एषां बुद्ध्यादीनां - All these anaathmaa components / the pramaathaa mind, the pramaanaa sense organs and the prameya prapanchaa (external world)
- असिद्धता - cannot prove their existence
- प्रमाणं अन्तरेण – without the pramaana, (which alone generates the Chidhaabhaasaa).

The terms vrutthi vyaapthi, pala vyaapthi etc., should be recollected in this context. Ghataakaara vrutthi is generated by the sense organs. Ghataa thought pervades the ghataa object and along with the thought, the chidhaabhaasaa pervades and when the chidhaabhaasaa pervades, the pot becomes known.

Antharena - without.

“Without pramaanam, chidhaabhaasaa is not generated; and, without chidhaabhaasaa ‘coating’, the world (anaathmaa) is not revealed”, (to quote the example again) similar to “objects not getting revealed without light ‘coating’ them”.

When chakshurindriyam (the organ of vision) is used, the generated chidhaabhaasaa is ‘coated’ over ‘roopa prapanchaa’ / the world of colours and forms. Use of srothrendriyam (the organ of hearing) generates chidhaabhaasaa, which gives a ‘coating’ on sabda prapanchaa. In a similar manner, each sense organ generates the relevant chidhaabhasaa and that relevant chidhaabhaasaa gets ‘coated’ over the relevant prapanchaa - roopa, sabda, gandha, rasa and sparsa prapanchaa - and the chidhaabhaasaa coating reveals the world. This is what is conveyed by the Aachaaryaa, by the use of the term ‘pramaanam antharena’.

But, an important difference (already indicated) is to be noted. What is that?

The sense organs pramaana are required for the chidhabhaasa ‘coating’ upon the external world to reveal its existence and that’s why they – the roopa, sabda, rasa, gandha, sparsa prapanchaas - are all called indriya prathyaksha siddham. But, in the case of body and mind, sense organs are not required to generate or develop the ‘coating’ of chidhaabhaasaa. Even when the sense organs are not functioning, the body and mind get chidhaabhaasa, directly from the saakshi, even without the functioning of the sense organs. The intervention of the sense organs is required only with regard to the external world, whereas, the body and the mind get the chidhaabhaasaa directly from the saakshi and therefore, the body and mind are called saakshi prathyaksha siddham. All three – the mind, body and the external world – require pramaanam – but, the difference is that the external world is indriya prathyaksha pramaana siddham and the body and mind are saakshi prathyaksha pramaana siddham - meaning that saakshi directly gives chidhaabhaasaa ‘coating’ to the mind and the body.

Therefore, 'pramaanam antharena asiddhathaa' means 'saakshi indriya prathyaksha pramaanam antharena' - 'without either indriya pramaanam or saakshi pramaanam'- the existence (of anaathmaa) is not revealed.

And, why do they require pramaanaa? Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- अनुभूतिफल अर्थित्वात् - Because they need the pervasion of chidhaabhaasaa.

'Anubhoothy palam' means 'chidhaabhaasa palam' otherwise called pala vyaapthi: |

All Anaathmaa require the 'spreading' of 'consciousness' upon them, because they are 'prameyam'; why are they 'prameyam'?; because, they are 'jadam'. Why are they 'jadam'?; because, they are 'ajnaana kaaryam'. Why are they 'ajnaana kaaryam'?; because, they are 'sruthi bhaadhyam' (meaning 'negated by sruthi').

Then what about the aathmaa? Aathmaa does not have any one of these problems. Aathmaa is not 'ajnaana kaaryam'; therefore, not 'jadam'; therefore, not 'prameyam'; therefore, does not require 'chidhaabhaasa' pervasion; therefore, does not require indriya prathyaksham; therefore, aathmaa is self-revealed – not in any particular experience ; but, in and through all particular experiences, aathmaa is revealed as 'aham', 'aham', 'aham ithi ; baalyaadhisu api jaagraadaadhisu – aathmaa is svathas siddha: |

The term 'anubhoothy pala arthithvaath' (in the verse) is to be connected to the first line of the verse as 'eshaam buddyaadheenaam asiddhathaa pramaanam antharena anubhoothy pala arthithvaath' – 'the existence of buddhi etc. cannot be revealed in the absence of pramaanam, since they (buddhi etc.) require the pervasion of chidhaabhaasaa upon them (for their revelation) '.

'Aathmaa jna:' and 'kim apekshathe' are separate sentences.

- आत्मा ज्ञः - Aathmaa is chaithanya svaroop: |

Jna: is the opposite of 'jadam'; opposite of jadam is 'chethanam'.

The chethana aathmaa, the self – evident aathmaa, the 'Consciousness' aathmaa:

- किं अपेक्षते – What pramaanam does it need (for presenting itself)?

What pramaanam does the chethana aathmaa / self – evident aathmaa / the 'Consciousness' aathmaa, need to reveal itself? It does not require pramaathaa, pramaanam or prameyam to reveal it'; on the other hand, all the three are revealed by 'me', the aathmaa .

'I' am beyond the 'thriputi'; 'I' am the illuminator of the 'thriputi' | "Naantha: prangnyam na bahi: prangnyam na prangyaana ganam chaithanyam thureeyam aham asmi" – as Maandookya Upanishad (manthraa 7) declares.

'Kim apekshathe' is not a question; but, a declaration that 'aathmaa does not require a special experience – but, is self-evident'. If, therefore, a seeker says "I want to experience that aathmaa, by sitting in meditation and going into nirvikalpaka samaadhi", it only shows that he has not understood this Vedhaanthic view.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 100:

- वक्ष्यमाणेत्तरेतराध्याससिद्ध्यर्थमुक्तव्यतिरेकानुवादः।

To support, in advance, the idea of mutual superimposition, to be propounded, the distinction stated already, is repeated:

Sureswaraachaaryaa says: "To achieve our grand goal, we have to consolidate, what we have already seen".

What we have seen is: "pramaathaa – the name given to the mind - is anaathmaa, and it has borrowed chidhaabhaasaa; pramaanam – which means the sense organs - is also anaathmaa; and it also has borrowed Consciousness; prameyam, which is the external world, is also anaathmaa and the prameyam also borrows chidhaabhaasa for its existence to be revealed. The pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam – all the three are anaathmaa and all borrow/ have to borrow chidhaabhaasaa".

Sureswaraachaaryaa expresses this in a different language. Instead of using the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi, he gives two divisions – "(1) all thoughts / experiences and (2) all objects of the thoughts / experiences. Both are anaathmaa".

What does one experience in the jaagrath avasthaa? (Ans:) (1) the world outside and (2) the thoughts inside. One cannot experience the world without the corresponding thought and cannot have a thought without the corresponding object. Thus, the thriputi (pramaathaa, pramaana and prameyam) can be reduced to 'thoughts' and 'objects', both being anaathmaa, while the aathmaa / saakshi, by its very presence - saannidhya maathrena – lends Consciousness / chidhaabhaasaa to the thoughts and the objects.

Kanopanishad starts with the queries "Keneshitham thathathi preshitham mana: kena praana prathama: praithiyuktha:" – "Willed by whom does the mind fall (on objects), as though it is forced? Directed by whom does the Praanaa function?" (I.1).

By 'my' very presence, 'I' give the chidhaabhaasaa 'coating' to the thoughts and objects; but, 'I' am neither the thoughts nor the objects.

The Aachaaryaa desires to consolidate these messages, before continuing further. He says:

- इतरे इतर अध्यास सिद्यर्थ - To reveal the superimposition of anaathmaa over aathmaa / to reveal the 'mixing-up' of aathmaa and anaathmaa / to reveal the mutual mixing-up of aathmaa and anaathmaa,
- वक्ष्यमाण - which is going to be said later,
- उक्त व्यतिरेक अनुवादः - the distinction between aathmaa and anaathmaa, which has been already discussed, is repeated.

Anuvaadha: - re-statement / consolidation; vyathirekha – distinction (between aathmaa and anaathmaa, in this context); uktha - already stated.

"The distinction between aathmaa and anaathmaa, which distinction has been already discussed before, is re-stated (in the following verse), for the purpose of talking about the 'mixing-up' of the aathmaa and anaathmaa" – is the gist of this sambhandha gadhyam. The 're-statement' is in the sloka that follows.

Verse 100 – Chapter II :

घटबुद्देर्घटाच्चार्थाद्द्रष्टुःयद्वद्विभिन्नता ।

अहंबुद्देरहंगम्याद्दुःखिनश्च तथा द्रुसे :॥ १०० ॥

The seer of the jar is different from the idea of the jar and the jar. Similarly Consciousness is different from the idea of the ego and from what is signified by the idea of the ego i.e., the individual who is subject to suffering.

The Aachaaryaa says: "'I', the aathmaa is different from the anaathmaa, which consists of thought and the relevant object."

The entire anaathmaa is reduced to 'thought' and 'object'. 'Thought' is the internal world and 'object' is the external world. They are co-existent; they rise simultaneously during jaagrath avasthaa and dissolve simultaneously during sushupthi avasthaa.

As Ramana Mahrishi eloquently presents in sad-darsanam: "dhiyaa sahodethi dhiyaasthamethi lokasthaththo deepraavibhaasya esha: | dheelokajanmakshaya dhaama poornaam sadhvasthu janmakshaya soonyam ekam – “The world rises along with the mind and resolves along with the mind; its existence is revealed by the mind; whereas, the sadvasthu chaithanyam, because of which the world and the mind rise and dissolve, neither ‘rises’ nor ‘resolves’ but is the ever-existent poorna vasthu”.

The world of thoughts and objects – the internal world of thoughts and the external world of objects – are both anaathmaa; and they simultaneously rise in jaagrath and svapnaa and simultaneously resolve in susuhpithi. That is what is being said here, by the Aachaaryaa.

- घटबुद्धेः - From the ghata vrutthi:/ the idea of ‘pot’(‘buddhi’, in this context means, ‘thought’ or ‘vrutthi’)
- घटाच्च अर्थात् - and from the pot, which is the object,

The ‘pot thought’ (the inner world) and the ‘pot object’ (the external world) are both anaathmaa and are illumined / revealed by ‘me’, who is different from both the thought and the object. What is the reason? Thoughts and objects rise – ‘I’ am; thoughts and objects dissolve – then also, ‘I’ am there. ‘I’ am anvayaa ; thoughts and objects are vyathirekhaa. Yath anvaya: (or whatever is anvaya siddham) has to be different from vyathirekha.

Therefore, from ghata buddhi and ghata arthaa,

- द्रष्टुः विभिन्नता - the saakshi chaithanyam is different.

‘Dhrashtaa’ is the saakshi chaithanyam, who is bestowing / giving the ‘coating’ of chidhaabhaasaa, to the thought, which is pramaanam and the object, which is prameyam and thus revealing both. Dhrashtu: - means ‘of the saakshi chaithanyam’; Vibhinnathaa - difference / distinction.

But, the problem is, that, even though the Consciousness and the thought are distinct, experientially, one cannot separate them. They are physically ‘inseparable’; the ‘separation’ has to be intellectual, by applying the five principles / features governing Consciousness, viz., (1) Consciousness is not a part, product or property of a thought (2) it pervades every thought – but is distinct from every thought (3) it is not limited by the boundary of thought (4) it continues even after thought dissolves (5) and that continuing Consciousness – ‘I’ am.

Just as the ‘pot thought’ results in a ‘pot object’, the ‘I’ thought obtaining / rising in the jaagrath avasthaa and dissolving in the sushupthi avasthaa, should also have a corresponding object, which would also belong to anaathma prapanchaa. What is that object? It is nothing but the body-mind complex, also an anaathmaa object, which is revealed by the ‘I’ thought. And, the ‘I’ thought and the object of the ‘I’ thought, viz., the body-mind complex are distinct from 'I', the chaithanya aathma. That is being said here, by the Aachaaryaa

- यद्वत् तथा - In the same manner , as the ghata vrutthi & ghata arthaa are different from the dhrashtaa,
- अहं बुद्धेः - from, the 'I' thought (buddhi:, in this context also, means 'thought')
- अहं गम्यात् च - and from the object of 'I' thought (viz. the body-mind complex)

'Aham ghamya:' means 'the object of the 'I' thought' or the object of 'aham'.

The 'object' of 'aham', as normally understood by an individual, in the jaagrath avasthaa, is the body-mind complex. In other words, what is normally referred to, by the use of the word 'I', is the body-mind complex and not the saakshi chaithanyam.

What type of body-mind complex or sareera thrayam?

- दुःखिनः च - which sareera thrayam anaathmaa (which is the meaning of the word I) is also an embodiment of dhu:kham,

(An aside: If the anaathmaa mind is an embodiment of dhu:kham, how come that one experiences aanandaa, at times? Vedhaanthaa replies: "Just as chidhaabhaasa is 'coated' over the mind, by chaithanyam, the 'experiential' pleasure also is only an aanananda aabhaasaa 'coating' given on the mind, by 'I', the ever-aananda saakshi. The mental pleasure does not belong to the mind. In reality, the external sense objects do not give the aanandaa ; the aanandaa is, now and then, given by 'I', the saakshi, as a 'coating' ".

Thus, the whole world gets three (types) layers of 'coating' – sadhaabhaasaa coating, chidhaabhaasaa coating and aananda aabhaasaa coating, all from 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam.

"Asthi bhaathi priyam roopam naamachethyamsa panchakam aadhyathrayam cha madhroopam jagadhiroopam thathoadvayam" (I am sacchidhaanandha:)

- दुःशेः विभिन्नता - 'I', the chaithanyam, am distinct.

Dhrusi: - aathmaa / chaithanyam.

"The aathmaa / chaithanyam is different from the 'I' thought and the 'I' object, just as the seer of a pot is different from the 'pot thought' and the 'pot object'" is the gist of the verse.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 101:

एवमेतयोरान्मानात्मनो :स्वतः परतः :

सिद्धयोलौकिकरज्जुसर्पाध्यारोपवदविध्योपाश्रय एवेतरेतराध्यारोप इत्येतदाह ।

Thus the self is self-established and the non-self is established by another. They are superimposed on each other, as in the ordinary rope-snake illusion. As in the latter well-known case, this mutual superimposition of Self and non-Self over each other, is based on nescience. This is brought out now:

Here, Sureswaraachaaryaa says "in the previous verse, we have consolidated that anaathmaa has got four components – idham vrutthi:, idham vrutthi vishaya:, aham vrutthi: and aham vrutthi vishaya: - an object 'thought', the object of the thought, 'I' thought and the corresponding object of 'I' thought viz., the body-mind complex. All four are anaathmaa; of these, 'idham vrutthi' and 'aham vrutthi' are internal anaathmaa, while, 'idham vrutthi vishaya' and 'aham vrutthi vishaya' are external anaathmaa. And, who am 'I'? 'I' am different from all the four; 'I' give the coating of chidhaabhaasaa for all the four." That's what the aachaaryaa wants to say.

- एवं - "In this manner,
- एतयोः आत्म अनात्मनोः - of the aathmaa, the single component and the anaathmaa consisting of four components
- स्वतः परतः सिद्धयोः - which are independently and dependently revealed,

Aathmaa svatha: siddha: - Aathmaa is independently revealed / self-revealed

Anaathmaa paratha: siddha: - Anaathmaa is dependently revealed.

'Dependently revealed' means 'it requires the chidhaabhaasaa coating coming from 'me'. Only when the anaathmaa gets chaithanya sambhandhaa, its existence is revealed. Acquisition of Chaithanya sambhandhaa (as discussed earlier) can be in three ways - primary, secondary or tertiary. But, anaathmaa necessarily has to get chaithanya sambhandhaa. That's why, it is called pramaanaa siddham or paratha: siddham.

In contrast, aathmaa does not require chidhaabhaasa sambhandhaa, to reveal its existence, because aathmaa itself is of the very nature of Consciousness ; i.e., it is endowed with the original Consciousness itself and is therefore, called svatha: siddha: |

And, between these independently revealed aathmaa and dependently revealed anaathmaa,

- इतरे इतर अध्यारोपः - mutual 'mixing-up' (occurs),

'Mixing-up' is not only of aathmaa and anaathmaa; their properties are also erroneously 'mixed-up'.

This profound concept/ topic is the beginning of the Brahma Soothraas – Adhyaasa Bhaashyam – "Yushmadhasmath prathyaya gocharayo: vishayavishayino: thama: prakaasavath viruddhasvabhaavayo:"| Sureswaraachaaryaa borrows the idea from his guru, Sankaraachaaryaa.

(Guru alone gives vidhyaa 'coating' on the sishyaa; and, before 'coating', 'scraping' has to be done and that 'scraping' is the saadhana chathushtaya sampaaathi acquisition.)

In describing this mutual 'mixing-up' of aathmaa and anaathmaa, since one is sathyam and the other is mithyaa, 'sathya anrutha mithuni krithya' will be apt.

What is this mutual 'mixing-up' due to?

- अविध्योपाश्रयः एव - because of ignorance only,

What is that ignorance? Moola avidhya – the fundamental basic ignorance.

For this mutual 'mixing-up' of the Real and unreal, Vedhaanthaa, generally gives the example of the 'rope' and the 'snake'. 'Rope' is real and the 'snake' is unreal. The 'real' rope and the 'unreal' snake are 'mixed up' due to ignorance.

But, when this example is given, many people get confused. In the 'rope-snake' example, 'snake' is a mental projection; this aspect is not the essential part of the example. The erroneous 'mixing-up' part alone should be considered important. But, critics of Advaita make the mistake of interpreting the rajju-sarpa example, as the Advaitins' declaration of the world as 'mental projection'. 'Challenge' to the Advaita philosophy is very often made by extending this example wrongly in this manner – unwittingly or wantonly.

It should be noted by any serious student, that whenever an example is given for any fact, there will be some common factors between the two – the fact and the example – and there will be some uncommon factors also. And, it is up to the student to co-operate with the guru and look at the example in the right perspective - appropriate the common factors and ignore the uncommon factors. This, in fact, is sraddhaa. The non-cooperative student, on the other hand, will stress on the uncommon factors and find fault with the example. The guru can never help such a student.

In the rope-snake example, 'snake' is admittedly a mental projection. Through this example, the Advaita Vedhaanthin does not intend to say that the world is a mental projection; on the other hand, he emphasizes that 'the world with the mind' is a projection of moolaa avidhya, and, therefore negatable by saasthraas.

Sureswaraacharya also gives the rajju-sarpa example for the 'mixing-up' of aathmaa and anaathmaa. He gives an adjective to the example

लौकिक - the well-known:

- लौकिक रज्जुसर्प अध्यारोपवत् - similar to the well-known (example of) mixing-up of the rope and the snake (the rope being real and the snake being unreal)"

How does the 'mixing-up' take place? When the rope is mistakenly talked of as 'this is a snake', the word 'this' refers to the rope, which is real and the word 'snake' is the unreal product of ignorance. By the use of the word 'is', existence to a snake is given; which snake, in reality, does not exist. The 'real' and 'unreal' have been mixed up. 'Mixing-up' of aathmaa and anaathmaa and superimposition of the qualities of anaathmaa on aathmaa, are similar.

- इति एतद् आह – This is brought out now.

101. Chapter II, Verse 101 and 103 (12-07-2008)

After separating aathmaa and anaathmaa, now Sureswaraacharya wants to talk about their relationship; and the relationship is sathya-anrutha sambhandha; or adhyaasa-adhishtaana sambhandha; one is of higher order of reality and the other is of the lower order of reality.

The anaathmaa was presented variously by the Aachaaryaa. In one context, he divided anaathmaa into four components – pramaathaa, pramaanam, prameyam and pramithi or prama. On another occasion, he divided it into three – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Later, the aachaaryaa divided anaathmaa into two – in the form of pramaanam and prameyam – i.e. thought and object – internal world and external world.

Whatever be the type of division, the entire anaathmaa is superimposed upon aathmaa, like rajju-sarpaa, it was said. And when the rope-snake example is given, it should be remembered that the example is extendable only with regard to certain aspects and not in entirety. One wrong extension, as already mentioned, is, that, because the rope-snake is a mental projection, the example results in the misunderstanding that the Advaitin says “the world is a mental projection”. But, the Advaita Vedhaanthin does not mean this by the rajju-sarpaa example – he avers that “the world, along with the mind, is a projection caused by ajnaanam”. One should clearly understand the objects of any example – which aspects of the example should be extended to the subject discussed and which should not be. The primary purpose of the rajju-sarpaa example is to show that they (anaathmaa and aathmaa) belong to different orders of reality and that one depends on the other.

And, in this context, it should also be remembered, that when the Advaita Vedhaanthin says that anaathmaa is superimposed on aathmaa he never talks about ‘beginning’ of anaathmaa in time. In the rope-snake example, when we talk about the superimposition of snake on the rope, we can talk of the ‘arrival’ of the snake as if ‘in time’; but, when we talk about superimposition of anaathmaa on aathmaa, we do not mean a fresh and new arrival of anaathmaa at a particular time. The rajju-sarpa example should not be extended, in this aspect of ‘time’; unlike rajju-sarpa, anaathmaa is anaadhi. When we say that anaathmaa is superimposed, we only mean that it is mithyaa; we never talk about the ‘beginning’ of anaathmaa; it is anaadhi; this mithyaa anaathmaa has been there from ‘beginningless’ time; and before its manifestation, the mithyaa anaathmaa existed in potential form.

Aathmaa is also anaadhi; mithyaa anaathmaa is also anaadhi. We are accepting two anaadhis; sathya anaadhi aathmaa and mithyaa anaadhi anaathmaa. And, if there are thus two beginningless things, how does the Advaithin proudly declare his 'advaitam' philosophy? The explanation is that the Advaithin only says that there are no two sathya vasthus, but only one sathya vasthu – aathmaa. He can happily accommodate infinite number of mithyaaa vasthus with one sathya vasthu. Addition of mithyaa does not disturb advaita dhrushti.

This anaadhi anaathmaa is now in manifest form, in the form of internal 'thought' universe and external 'object' universe. And, as mentioned earlier, before manifestation, the anaathmaa existed in potential form. This potential anaathmaa is given different names; one is prakruthi; another is maayaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa uses yet another name 'moola avidhyaa' or 'ajnaanam'.

To repeat: Moola avidhyaa or ajnaanam is potential anaathmaa, also known by the names, maayaa or prakruthi.

Why does Sureswaraachaaryaa call it ajnaanam? When anaathmaa is solidly available as the 'tangible' material world, how dare the Aachaaryaa call it ajnaanam? The Aachaaryaa himself has answered this: "Whatever is negated or falsified by sruthi is called ajnaanam." Sruthi janya jnaanena – i.e. by the knowledge generated by sruthi / by the pramanaam of sruthi - this world is negated. Katopanishad (II. i. 11), for example, declares "neha naanaasthi kinchana" – "There is no plurality at all here".

Whatever is negatable and whatever is negated does not have its own intrinsic existence. If anaathmaa had its own intrinsic existence, sruthi would not 'negate' it, just as it never negates aathmaa, which has got its own intrinsic existence. The very fact that sruthi repeatedly negates anaathmaa, shows that anaathmaa does not have its own existence. Whatever is negatable by jnaanam is called ajnaanam.

The four words – ajnaanam (moola avidhyaa), prakruthi, maayaa and anaathmaa – are synonymous. The only subtle difference is that the words ajnaanam, prakruthi and maayaa are used when anaathmaa is in dormant form, while the word anaathmaa is used when ajnaanam / prakruthi / maayaa is in visible, tangible form; i.e., the three words - ajnaanam, prakruthi and maayaa – are used for avyaktha roopa anaathmaa, while the word anaathmaa, is used for vyaktha roopa anaathmaa. Just as the same material (H₂O, in chemical parlance) is called water in liquid form, is called steam when it is in avyaktha form and is called ice when it is in solid form, mithyaa matter, avyakthaa avasthaayaam (in dormant form), is called ajnaanam or maayaa or prakruthi and the same mithyaa padhaartha, vyaktha avasthaayaam (in manifest, visible form), is called anaathmaa.

Both aathmaa and anaathmaa are experienced simultaneously - 'I', the sathya vasthu / chaithanyam / saakshi am aathmaa; and the experienced world – the internal world of 'thoughts' and the external world of 'objects' – is anaathmaa. What are the resulting problems? Sureswaraacharya points them out: (1) the 'isness' of the aathmaa is mistakenly transferred on anaathmaa, while anaathmaa is mithyaa by itself and (2) we do not realize / recognize this fact, because of the aavarana sakthi of ajnaanam. We have transferred the existence of aathmaa to the anaathmaa and we think anaathmaa has got intrinsic existence.

Experience of anaathmaa itself is not a problem; but assuming that anaathmaa has got its own existence and is capable of hurting 'me', results in anaathmaa becoming a 'threat' to me. What is required is not 'wiping out' anaathmaa ; it can continue ; the erroneous attribution of the threatening power to the anaathmaa alone needs to be removed. This is to be done by 'taking away' the 'existence' from the anaathmaa

i.e., by understanding its mithyaa nature, just as clearly as when viewing oneself in the mirror, the viewer is very clearly aware that his mirror image is not a second entity, having the same order of reality as oneself. This is what the Aachaaryaa points out, that, what is required is a simple 'sorting out'. This is the content of the verse (101).

Chapter II: Verse 101 –

अभ्रयानं यथा मोहाच्छशभृत्यध्यवस्यति।

सुखित्वादीन्धियो धर्मास्तद्वदात्मनि मन्यते ॥ १०१ ॥

Just as, on the moon, is superimposed the movement of the clouds, the qualities of the mind like pleasure and pain are ascribed to the pure Self.

Sureswaraacharya is now explaining the mutual transference of the attributes of aathmaa and anaathmaa, which is called anyonya dharmaadhyasa: |

Experientially, how does this take place? The dharma of anaathmaa is raaghaa, dveshaa, samsaara, sthoolathvam, maleness / femaleness, varnaa, aasramaa etc.; and, these sareerathraya dharma are transferred on to 'me' and I claim shamelessly that I am brahmana, kshakthriyaa etc., even though 'I', the aathmaa, am jaathi-neethi-kula-gothra dhooragam, naama-roopa-guna-dosha varjitham (Viveka choodaamani – Verse 254). But, I am superimposing anaathma dharmaa upon myself.

And, there is a reverse 'transfer' also - 'reality' or 'existence'. 'Reality' or 'existence' belongs to 'me' only; the anaathmaa does not have 'reality' or 'existence' of its own. What is the proof? Sruthi negates the universe; but, even though sruthi does the nishedaa, I am shamelessly attributing 'reality' to the anaathmaa.

If I am merely attributing 'reality' to the anaathmaa, it may not matter. But. this 'attribution' makes the world a 'threat'. The abhayahethuprapancha: becomes baya hethu: / Every moment of anxiety is revealing conversion of abhayahethu anaathmaa into bayahathu anaathmaa. To remember the 5th capsule of Vedhaanthalaa, "when I forget my real nature, the world becomes a threat and life becomes a struggle; when I remember my real nature, the world is an entertainment".

The rajju-sarpa example was given by the Aachaaryaa, in the sambhandha gadhyam to this sloka. In the sloka itself, another example is given. All these examples are given by Adi Sankara in his Aathma Bodhaa, which is a beautiful text. The beauty of that text is, that, every sloka reveals an important concept of Vedhaanthalaa, the first half of the sloka revealing the concept and the second half giving an example, to make the concept easy of understanding. The text is popular because of this fact. Another text, which gives several such examples is Aparokshaanubhoothi/ Sureswaraachaaryaa, being a disciple of Adi Sankara, takes the liberty of 'borrowing' the example given by his guru - Sasabhruthi abhayaanam adhyavasyathi /

Sasabhruth means 'chandra:', the moon. Why is the moon called 'sasabhruth'? The moon has a dark spot, which appears like a rabbit. In Sanskrit literature, the dark spot on the moon, is very often compared to a rabbit – sasa:, in Sanskrit. Since the moon 'carries' a rabbit, it is called a 'rabbit-holder' – sasa bhruth |

Though the moon has got its own motion (as per astronomy), it is 'relatively' stationery in the sky, when compared to the surrounding clouds, which, blown by the winds, move faster than the moon. The fast motion of the clouds creates an illusion that the moon is moving fast. Instead of seeing the clouds as moving fast, away from the moon, which is the fact, the viewer tends to see the moon as moving fast, away from the clouds. This common experience is given as an example for the adhyasam.

- यथा - Just as
- अभ्रयानं - the movement of the clouds,

Abhram literally means 'that which holds / carries water' and is, therefore, a name for the clouds; yaanam means 'travel'.

- शशभृति अध्यवस्यति - is transferred to / superimposed on the moon,
- मोहात् - because of delusion,

Another example that can be thought of is: when one is travelling by train and the train reaches the destination, the tendency is to say "the destination has come", instead of saying "the train has reached its destination".

Yet another example : When I am gloomy, I say that the day is gloomy.

- तद्वत् - in the same manner,
- सुखित्वादीन् धर्मान् - the various attributes like pleasure etc. (including raaghaa, dveshaa etc. belonging to the sareerathraya anaathmaa),

Dharmaa: - attributes such sukithvam, raaghaa, dveshaa, bhayam, krodhaa etc. Sukithvam – happiness; refers to experiential pleasure. 'Experiential pleasure' belongs to anaathmaa only, while only svaroopa aanandaa belongs to aathmaa. I make the mistake of transferring the 'experiential pleasure' to aathmaa. Sathva guna janya sukham also belongs only to anaathmaa. (Sathvam sukhe sanjayathi – Ch. XIV – Bhagavadh Githa).

Where do these attributes belong?

- धियः - belonging to the mind,
- आत्मनि मन्यते - are superimposed on aathmaa.

Manyathe – superimposed.

And, interestingly, after erroneously making this transfer, the seeker complains "I do not have saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi; therefore, how can I claim liberation?" Even as one is negating saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi, one is only reinforcing one's mano-adhyaasaa | Sureswaraachaaryaa says "raaghaa, dveshaa etc. are not 'your' problems". Ironically, saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is required to know that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not required for liberation. From another perspective, saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi has fulfilled its purpose, when the seeker realizes that saadhana chathushtaya sampatthi is not required for liberation, since liberation is the seeker's unconditional nature.

Verse 102 – Chapter II :

दग्धत्वं च यथा वह्नेरयसो मन्यते कुधीः।

चैतन्यं तद्ब्रदात्मीयं मोहात्कर्तरि मन्यते ॥ १०२ ॥

Just as a deluded fellow ascribes the burning propensity of the fire to the red-hot iron, the consciousness that belongs to the Self as such properly, is ascribed, in delusion, to the agent (i.e. the mind or ego).

The previous sloka is to show that anaathma's attributes are erroneously transferred on to aathmaa; this sloka is to show that aathmaa's 'attribute' (essential nature or feature) of 'reality' is erroneously transferred to anaathmaa and anaathmaa is seen as real enough to threaten or hurt. To convey this message also, an example is given by the Aachaaryaa.

What is that example? A red-hot iron ball – which is another popular example given in saasthraas. When an iron ball is placed in fire and taken out after some time, it would have acquired the heat and brilliance of the fire and would have become red-hot; the iron ball, by itself, does not have the heat / burning power or brilliance as intrinsic qualities; the burning power and brilliance are the intrinsic qualities of only the fire, passed on temporarily to the iron ball; even so, they are wrongly attributed to the ball, by an observer, who remarks 'the iron ball burns'. When the remark 'aya: dahathi' is made, the 'burning' nature of the agni is wrongly transferred to the aya: | The Aachaaryaa uses this example in this verse (102).

- यथा - Just as
- वन्हेः दग्धत्वं - the heat / burning power of the agni
- अयसः मन्यते - is wrongly attributed to iron (a ball of iron or a piece of iron),
- कुधीः - by an unintelligent person, (who exclaims 'aya: dhahathi'),
- तद्वत् - in the same manner,
- चैतन्यं आत्मीयं - the sentiency / consciousness which intrinsically belongs to 'I', the aathmaa,

Aathmeeyam - belonging to the aathmaa.

- कर्तरि मन्यते - is falsely superimposed on the karthaa ahamkaaraa (the anaathmaa mind),

Karthari – antha:karane / vijaana maya kose / anaathmani.

Not only the is the chaithanyam erroneously superimposed on the anaathmaa , the existence and reality are also superimposed ; one tends to look upon the anaathmaa and its attributes as real. Because of what?

- मोहात् – because of indiscrimination / non-discrimination.

When this is said, some people ask the fundamental question "when you say 'a person superimposes', who commits this mistake of 'superimposing'? Is it the aathmaa or anaathmaa?"

It should be remembered that aathmaa is akartha and aboktha and therefore, never acts by itself; and, therefore, it can never be said that "aathmaa is committing the mistake" (it cannot commit anything, let alone a mistake).

Then, can it be said that "it is the anaathmaa, which commits the mistake"? Anaathmaa, by itself, is jadam and a jada vasthu cannot do any action. Therefore, the anaathmaa also cannot be said to commit the mistake. Then, what is the answer to the doubt raised?

It should be remembered, that, whenever normally one refers to 'jeeva' or 'I' etc., it is the 'mixture' of aathmaa and anaathmaa, that is being talked out. The meaning of the word 'I' (in general usage) is the aathma-anaathma mixture – amsadvayam. This 'I', which has got amsadvayam, has got a higher, 'real' amsa and a lower, 'unreal' amsa. All transactions are done by this mixture 'I' only – the mixture of the higher real amsa (aathmaa) and the lower unreal amsa (anaathma sareerathrayam)- neither by aathmaa alone nor by the anaathmaa alone.

And, the tendency is to mistake the lower, unreal amsa of 'mine' as the 'Reality'; this tendency in fact, is, samsaara. What, therefore, is moksha? For moksha, one need not 'eliminate' the lower self ; one has to only understand the lower amsa, for what it really is ; to understand the aparaa prakruthy , as aparaa prakruthy, with the awareness that it is of a lower order of reality.

But, at the same time, the anaathmaa should be looked upon with respect also; because, even to claim "I am of a higher order of reality', the lower order – the anaathmaa ahamkaara / mind - is required. The 'lower order' can be made use of, but with the clear understanding that it is of the lower order. This 'clarity' / 'wisdom' is what is required for liberation and not Samaadhi, mystic experiences etc.

The lower 'I' and jagath can be allowed to continue, along with the real, higher 'I', but, with the attitude that the mithyaa sareerathrayam and the mithyaa jagath are all for one's free entertainment only. If the anaathma ahamkaara and mind are put an end to, one cannot even claim to be a nithya-muktha aathmaa and from this perspective, the lower 'I' – the mind – is, in fact, a blessing.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 103:

सर्व एवायमात्मानात्मविभाग :प्रत्यक्षादिप्रमाणवर्त्मन्यनुपतितोऽविध्योत्सङ्गवर्त्येव न परमात्मव्यपाश्रय :।

All this distinction between Self and non-Self falling, as it does, in the field of knowledge like perception, is grounded in nescience and does not rest on the supreme Self.

Because of the understanding of this superimposition, we get (or we are supposed to get) the clarity that the entire duality, that is talked about, is nothing but mithyaa only. Because, 'duality' requires anaathmaa; and anaathmaa is a product of avidhyaa (avidhyaajanyam) and therefore mithyaa; and if a 'second' thing is mithyaa, the duality born out of the 'second' mithyaa thing must also be mithyaa.

Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says:

- आत्म अनात्म विभागः - The 'division' or 'duality' on account of the two components aathmaa and anaathmaa,
- सर्व एव - whatever be the type of division,

The 'division' may be pramaathaa and prameyam division or bokthaa and boghyam division or the 'seer' and 'seen' division or any other similar division. To remember (part of) verse 8 the Dakshinamurthy Sthothram – "viswam pasyathi kaarya kaaranathayaa svaswaami sambhandhatha: sishya acharyathayaa thathaa eva pithru puthraadhi" – "the world is seen variously related - as cause and effect, as possessor and possession, as father and son, as teacher and taught etc." . These are all different types of divisions, simultaneously generating relationships. The unique approach of Vedhaanthalaa, is, that, while people tend to look upon 'relationships' as 'security', Vedhaanthalaa, in a diametrically opposite perception, looks upon them as 'insecurity', because of the reason that the 'relationship' invariably causes constant anxiety that the 'relationship' / 'security' may be lost and in fact, will be lost, one day or other. Sense of insecurity is never removed by 'relationships'; it only reappears in the form of anxiety. Vedhaanthalaa sees relationships as dvaitham and dvaitham as the cause of bhayam – "dvitheeyaath vai bhayam bhavathi" – "It is from a second entity that fear comes" (Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad – I. iv.2). "Therefore", Vedhaanthalaa says "advaitam alone is security"; ironically, the tendency of the people is a fear of advaita darsanam, perceiving it as 'loneliness' in the absence of a second entity to be 'depended' on. Gouda Paadhaachaarya refers to such people, who are afraid of being detached – who are afraid of the 'yoga' of detachment (asparsa yoga, as he names it) - as "abhaye bhaya dharsina:"- "they see fear in the fearless" (Verse 39 – Advaita Prakaranam – Maandookya Kaarika).

In short, the aathma anaathmaa vibhaagha:, the division, results in 'relationships', with consequent anxiety (of the loss of the relationship) and consequent insecurity.

- प्रत्यक्षादि प्रमाण वर्त्मनि अनुपतितः - which division is proved by all the five pramaanams other than Vedhaanthalaa,

The 'division' / duality is proved / corroborated / substantiated / reinforced by all the pramaanams (except sruthi). Prathyaksha pramaanam proves aathma – anaathma division. Once prathyakshaa proves 'division', anumaanaa (logic) also will prove dvaitham only. The Advaitin admits that 'logic' will prove dvaitam only. In the same manner, the other pramaanams – upamaanam, artha patthi etc. also will prove dvaitam only. But, Advaitam has a rather audacious explanation for this: "all pramaanams, other than sruthi, will establish dvaitam only, because, all those pramaanams themselves, are born out of ajnaanam only. Only Vedhaanthaa has the capacity to declare advaitam, because Vedhaanthaa is not ajnaana janyam". This topic had already been discussed, in the 1st chapter of Naishkarmya Siddhi.

Varthma - field; the (pancha) pramaani are referred to as varthmani – the 'fields' of the (five) pramaanams, beginning with prathyakshaa ; Anupathitha: - falls .

The literal meaning of "prathyakshaadhi pramaana varthmani anupathitha:" is "that, which falls within the fields of the pramaanams, beginning with prathyakshaa" and the essence is "that, which is proved by pancha pramaanaani , other than sruthi pramaanam" . This is an adjective to 'aathma-anaathma-vibhaagha.' – 'the division between aathmaa and anaathmaad .

This duality, which is proved by the pancha pramaanaani other than Vedhaanthaa pramaanam, is grounded in ajnaanam (nescience) only. The Aachaaryaa uses a nice expression to convey this:

- अविद्या उत्सङ्ग वर्ती - resting in the lap of avidhyaa (ignorance),

Avidhyaa – ajnaanam; uthsangha: means a lap; varthee - resting in.

Just as a baby rests on its mother's lap, the sense of duality, generated by ajnaanam, i.e. the baby born to the maathaaji of Avidhyaa, rests on the lap of its mother i.e. it (duality) is grounded in avidhyaa or ajnaanam.

'Avidhyaa uthsangha varthee' is also a viseshanam (adjective) of aathma-anaathma-vibhaagha: |

Whatever is within ajnaanam is mithyaa.

- न परमात्म व्यपाश्रय :- does not have real existence on the aathmaa.

Vyapaasraya: - based on / existing upon.

This may give rise to a doubt. It has been repeatedly said that the entire anaathma prapanchaa is resting on aathmaa, aathmaa / brahman being sarva adhishtaanam. But, in this portion, Sureswaraacharya says dvaitham is resting on ajnaanam – not on aathmaa – na paramaathma vyapaasraya: | Are these two views not contradictory? Which view is correct? The explanation is: The dvaitha prapancha is resting on ajnaanam only / mithyaa ajnaanam only / negatable ajnaanam only / negatable mayaa only ; but, then, that maayaa itself is resting only on the sathya adhishtaanam Brahman – because maayaa, for its existence has to 'borrow' from aathmaa / Brahman. Dvaitham is resting on ajnaanam and ajnaanam is resting on aathmaa. Therefore, dvaitham also ultimately rests on aathmaa, though indirectly. There is no real duality which is directly resting on aathmaa. There is a mithyaa duality resting on mithyaa ajnaanam and that mithyaa ajnaanam is upon the aathmaa. That's why, Advaita does not look upon pure aathmaa as the 'creator' of the world; aathmaa with maayaa only is the Creator.

At the same time, though Vedhaanthaa (the Upanishads) repeatedly declares that dvaitham is the cause of fear and insecurity, it must be noted that, dvaitham, by itself, is not a cause of fear. On the other hand, after jnaanam, the Advaitin will declare the same dvaitham as entertainment and therefore, as welcome.

If dvaitham, by itself, is the cause of samsaaraa, and therefore mokshaa requires escaping from the world of duality, it will result in the corollary of Bhagavaan

Himself becoming a nithya-samsaari, since He does not, obviously, have videha-mukthi ; but, is eternally in this world of duality; He has to create, and He has to sustain His creations . If dvaitham is the cause of problems, Bhagavaan will have to be considered a nithya samsaari. But, Bhagavaan is nithya-muktha:

This would make it clear, that, really speaking, dvaitham is welcome 'entertainment'; but, if and when taken as 'Reality', it becomes the cause of samsaaraa.

The technical term used to denote "dvaitham" taken as 'real' is 'abhaadhitha dvaitham' – 'unfalsified dvaitham'.

'Falsified duality' is 'entertainment; 'abhaadhitha dvaitham' or 'unfalsified duality' is samsaaraa.

102. Chapter II, Verse 103 and 104 (19-07-2008)

Sambhandha gadhyam (further) to Verse 103:

अस्याश्चाविध्यायाः सर्वानर्थहेतोः कुतो निवृत्तिरिति चेत्तदाह ।

In answer to the question as to how this nescience, which is the root-cause of all evil, is terminated, the following is formulated:

Sureswaraachaaryaa wants to emphasize that aathmaa and anaathmaa do not have the same order of Reality; that, aathmaa is ever free from the contamination of anaathmaa; and, that, escaping from anaathmaa requires only the mere understanding that anaathmaa is of a lower order of reality; and, that, therefore, the anaathmaa show can be allowed to continue, as it is.

One need not physically escape from anaathmaa, either by oneself running away from anaathmaa, in the name of videha mukthi or by pushing away the anaathmaa. Neither 'running away' is required; nor 'pushing away'. Let everything continue as it is; the 'separation' automatically takes place when the aathmaa is understood as of a higher order of reality than anaathmaa, and as nithya asangha svaroopaa: | An example is the cinema screen, on which the movie can be allowed to continue even permanently, because of the fact that the different scenes of the movie - scenes of flooding or of ravaging infernos - cannot damage the screen. The 'moving' movie cannot 'move' the immovable screen.

"Let the anaathmaa jagath / events / objects / persons continue to act on and on; but, they cannot, in any way, disturb 'me', because they are all only mithyaa". This 'understanding' alone is required. No other extra-ordinary event need take place; of course, this 'understanding' itself is 'extra-ordinary', because, people generally do not understand the value of this 'understanding'. People, who need and look for 'extra-ordinary' events, can take this clarity itself as an extra-ordinary event.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is emphasizing this aspect; because, saamkyaa philosophy, which comes very close to Vedhaanthee on aathma-anaathma-viveka:, misses the last step of falsifying anaathmaa. Therefore, with the intention of falsifying the anaathmaa, the aachaaryaa is writing this introduction.

It has already been seen that the anaathmaa consists of three components: (1) the mind (2) the sense organs and (3) the world. All of them come to existence, by borrowing chidhaabhaasaa from 'me'. The mind directly borrows chidhaabhaasaa from 'me' and becomes pramaathaa; the sense organs 'secondarily' borrow, i.e. they borrow chidhaabhaasaa not directly, but, through the mind, and become the pramaanams; the 'borrowing' of chidhaabhaasaa by the world, is achieved in three steps; jagath borrows chiadhaabhaasaa through the sense organs which, themselves, have borrowed chiadhaabhaasaa through the mind; and the jagath becomes prameyam. But, what is common to all the three, is the fact, that all the three are 'borrowers' of chidhaabhaasaa. Pramaatha is anaathmaa no. 1. Pramaanam is anaathmaa no. 2 and prameyam is anaathmaa no. 3. The entire thriputi anaathmaa is jadam and is mithyaa.

Why do we say that this jada-thriputi is mithyaa? Ans: because, they are products of avidhyaa. Sureswaraachaarya conveys this in a colourful manner: "because all these three 'babies' are lying on the lap of avidhyaa 'mother'".

The avidhyaa referred to here, is the moolaavidhyaa. This moolaavidhyaa is not a condition of the mind; but is the producer of the mind itself.

The moolaavidhyaa is parinaami-upaadhaana-kaaranam for the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi. Moolaavidhyaa being parinaami-upaadhaana-kaaranam (the changing material cause) and thriputi being parinaami kaaryam (the changed product), the thriputi has to rest on the 'lap' of moolaavidhyaa, since kaaranam is the aasrayaa for kaaryam.

And, where, in turn, does this moolaavidhyaa, with the thriputi on her lap, rest? "It is resting on 'me', the saakshi aathmaa". This is an important fact to be noted. Verse 18 of the Kaivalya Upanishad "Thrishu dhaamasu yadhbhogyam bokthaa boghascha yadhbhaveth thebhyo vilakshana: saakshee chinmaathroham sadaasiva:-" "I am distinct from all those which are the subjects of experience, the objects of experience and the instruments of experience, in all the three states; 'I' am the witness, which is pure Consciousness and which is ever auspicious", is very relevant in this context. "In all the three avasthaas, whatever subject/object/instrument are there, all of them are resting on avidhyaa and that avidhyaa is resting on 'me'" is the essence.

Why should moola-avidhyaa be considered as 'resting' on me? The reason: Moolaaavidhyaa not only does not have chith of its own; Moolaaavidhyaa does not have sath (existence) of its own also. I lend 'existence' to moolaavidhyaa, which, in turn, produces the thriputi; and after they come into existence because of 'my' grace, 'I' lend chidhaabhaasaa to all of them - moolaavidhyaa and pramaathru-pramaana-prameyam - and allow the 'drama' to go on.

This power of the moolaavidhyaa to produce the thriputi is called vikshepa sakthi:|

From another perspective, the existence of moolaavidhyaa is a blessing; that it has a vikshepa sakthi is a blessing; that the vikshepa sakthi can produce thriputi is a blessing; and, that because of the thriputi, the jaagrath-naatakam and svapna-naatakam are going on, is a blessing. All these are, in a way, blessings, because, without moolaavidhyaa, Brahman / aathmaa cannot do anything ; even claiming 'I am Brahman' will not be possible.

But, then, there is a problem; the problem is, that, the same moolaavidhyaa has aavarana sakthi (veiling power) also, because of which sakthi, we do not realize that every one of the thriputi is of the lower order of reality / existence. Therefore, what is required is only deft handling / removal of the aavarana sakthi of the moolaavidhyaa; thereafter, one can allow the moolaavidhyaa to continue, allow the thriputi to continue and allow the world to continue.

The aachaaryaa, in the first part of this sambhanda gadhyam, pointed out, that the thriputi is grounded in avidhyaa and does not really rest on the supreme Self – na paramaathma vyapaasraya: / To continue:

- कुतो निवृत्तिः - "How is the removal / termination (to be accomplished),
- अस्याः च अविद्यायाः - of this moolaavidhyaa, which is the producer of the mind (pramaathaa), sense organs (pramaanam) and the world (prameyam) and
- सर्व अनर्थ हेतोः - which is the cause of all the troubles ?"

Anartham – problems (like samsaaraa); hethu: - cause.

When we say that moolaavidhyaa is the cause of all problems, the entire moolaavidhyaa need not be blamed; it should be noted, that, the aavarana sakthi part of moolaavidhyaa alone is the problem ; therefore, what is attempted to be destroyed through scriptural study, is only the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhyaa. The rest of the moolaavidhyaa, i.e., the vikshepa sakthi sahitha moolaavidhyaa need not be destroyed ; it only needs to be falsified and should be falsified.

The job of the seeker is, thus, "to destroy the aavarana sakthi and falsify the vikshepa sakthi", akin to removing the poisonous fangs from a cobra, allowing the cobra to survive and even using it as an aabharanam. The thriputi needs to be only falsified and not destroyed.

'Nivrutthi:' (in the text) literally means 'removal' or 'termination'; and, in this context, 'moolaavidhyaa nivrutthi:' is 'destruction of aavarana sakthi:', and falsification of vikshepa sakthi:' |

'Falsified vikshepa sakthi:' will be called maayaa. Even Bhagavaan allows maayaa to continue and He enjoys srushti-sthithi-laya - as indicated by the Thaithreya Upanishad statement "sokaamayatha" – "He (Brahman) desired" (Brahmavalli – manthraa 6). Therefore, where is the need for a wise seeker – a jnaani – to complain against the world?

- इति चेत् - If this question is asked (that, how the destruction of aavarana sakthi and falsification of vikshepa sakthi are to be achieved),
- तद् आह - that question is being answered:

Verse 103 – Chapter II :

दुःखराशेर्विचित्रस्य सेयं भ्रान्तिश्चिरन्तनी ।

मूलं संसारवृक्षस्य तद्बाधस्तत्त्वदर्शनात् ॥ १०३ ॥

The root of this tree of transmigratory existence, which abounds in extraordinary varieties of evil, is this ageless illusion. That illusion is annihilated by the vision of Reality.

- सा इयं भ्रान्तिः - This moolaavidhyaa

The 'villain' of the samsaaraa vision is moolaavidhyaa, referred to, in this verse, by the word bhraanthi:; moolaavidhyaa is the parinaami-upaadhaana- kaaranam for the thriputi, while Chaithanyam is called vivartha-upaadhaana-kaaranam of thriputi.

When it has thus been said that moolaavidhyaa is the aasrayaa for thriputi and Brahman is the aasrayaa for moolaavidhyaa, the statement, invariably, gives rise to a question: "When and why did this moolaavidhyaa 'arrive' and 'rest' on Brahman?" Natural intellectual questions are 'when / why / where / how etc.'

Sureswaraachaaryaa answers all these questions by the use of the word 'chiranthani', which means 'anaadhi' - 'ageless'. The questions 'when / why / where /how etc.' will be relevant only when moolaavidhyaa 'arrives' at a given time. But, moolaavidhyaa is as beginningless as 'I', the saakshi chaithanyam.

- चिरन्तनी – (which is) anaadhi,

This gives rise to another question. If 'both (the two)' of them (i.e. aathmaa / Brahman and moolaavidhyaa) are considered beginningless, what happens to the concept of Advaitam? Does not this perspective revolt against Advaitam? The Advaitin's answer is that, the anaadhi moolaavidhyaa can never disturb the non-dual status of chaithanyam, since the Advaitin is of the firm conviction that moolaavidhyaa is of a lower order of 'reality', in comparison to chaithanyam. 'Sathyam + mithyaa' = 'ekam' (one) only.

This moolaavidhyaa is:

- मूलं - the root cause
- सन्सारवृक्षस्य - of the samsaaraa tree,

What type of samsaaraa tree?

- दुःखराशेः विचित्रस्य - which tree is a source of different varieties of sorrow.

Till knowledge is achieved i.e. as long as the seeker is in the jeeva-isvara-jagath triangular format, without moving to the aathma-anaathma binary format, the world is looked upon as 'source of sorrow'. World is dhu:kha mayam in the triangular format; but, once the seeker comes to jnaana yoga, he should not use the term 'source of sorrow' to describe the world, since such use would indicate that the seeker is still considering the world as of the same order of reality (as chaithanyam). The adjective 'Dhu:kha raase:' to the samsaara vruksham is applicable only during ajnaana avasthaa. From the standpoint of the ignorant people, who are still in the triangular format, the samsaaraa vrukshaa is a 'bundle of sorrow' (dhu:kha raasi). For that samsaara vrukshaa, this moolaavidhyaa is the cause.

And, therefore, what should the seeker do, to remove the dhu:kha raasi / samsaara vrukshaa? The moola kaaranam, which is the moolaavidhyaa, should be removed. 'Removal of the moolaavidhyaa' is the solution and therefore, the project of the seeker. And, how? Sureswaraachaaryaa answers:

- तद् बाधः - The removal of this moolaavidhyaa (is achieved)

And, (as already discussed) what do we understand by 'removal of moolaavidhyaa? Moolaavidhyaa is not proposed to be totally eliminated, since its total elimination will mean 'removal of the world etc.' What is proposed is only the destruction of the 'aavarana sakthi' part of the moolaavidhyaa.

Whatever has to happen according to our praarabhdhaa karma, we should allow to continue, but, with the firm conviction that the pain (or pleasure) is only a mithyaa response to mithyaa situations, themselves caused by mithyaa praarabhdhaa, which itself is because of the mithyaa vikshepa sakthi of the mithyaa moolaavidhyaa. This conviction, that, all these are mithyaa, is possible, only by the removal of the aavarana sakthi; in fact, only on the removal of aavarana sakthi, the significance of the word 'mithyaa' is also understood properly; that, it is not a mechanically uttered word; but, when used, gives a profound meaning that 'I' am of a higher order of reality, not touched by the events that 'come and go'.

`Thadhbhaadha:' means `thasyaa: (bhraanthe:) bhaadha:' - 'removal of the aavarana sakthi of moolaavidhya'.

And, how will the aavarana sakthi go?

- तत्त्व दर्शनात् - by aparoksha jnaanam of the higher order of reality, called aathma chaithanyam / saakshi chaithanyam / kootastha chaithanyam / brahma chaithanyam / the 'original Consciousness'.

`Thathva darsanaath' means `adhishtaana darsanaath'.

`Darsanam', in this context, means `aparoksha jnaanam', which, in turn, means 'learning to use the word 'I', for the aathma'. If and when a seeker uses the words aathmaa or Brahman for adhishtaanam – i.e., as `aathmaa is the adhishtaanam' or as `Brahman is the adhishtaanam', in the 'third' person, it only goes to show that the seeker is yet to realize that 'I' am, in fact, the aathma/Brahman; and that, even as he craves to experience the adhishtaanam, misapprehends adhishtaanam as an 'object' to be experienced. Even 'craving to experience' is an 'obstacle' (may be the 'final' – nevertheless an 'obstacle'). The seeker should stop 'craving for experience'. Then what is darsanam? 'Learning to use the word 'I' for the adhishtaana chaithanyam – the ever-evident Consciousness'.

"Thathva darsanaath thadhbhadha: (bhavathi)" - "The removal of moolaavidhya is achieved by aparoksha jnaanam".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 104 (Chapter II):

तद्वादस्तत्त्वदर्शनादिति कुतः सम्भाव्यत इति चेदत आहागोपालाविपालपण्डितमियमेव प्रसिद्धिः।

That it is annihilated by the vision of Reality can be understood by this consideration which is universally acknowledged:

- तद्वादः तत्त्वदर्शनात् (इति वाक्यं) –" (This statement, that) 'the negation of moolaavidhya takes place because of thathva darsanam' -

In the last quarter of the last sloka, this statement was made, that, 'the negation of moolaavidhya takes place because of thathva darsanam, i.e., adhishtaana jnaanam'.

- इति कुतः सम्भाव्यते - how is this statement legitimate or logically possible ?

The doubt is: "Why is adhishtaana jnaanam is being insisted on for moolaavidhyaa bhaadha: ? Is there not any other method, that can be tried?"

The doubt is quite common, since, there is a popular, but a contrasting view that there are several paths to mokshaa, - karmaa path, bhakthi path, Raja yogaa path, jnaanaa path etc., (i.e., jnaana maargaa considered as only one of the different paths). "Under such circumstances, why is jnaanaa alone being insisted on?" is the question.

(Swami Dayananda humorously responds to a similar question 'why are you so fanatic about jnaana?', by answering, 'I would better be a fanatic, rather than a lunatic'; because, many different paths are not available for 'removal' of ignorance. The earnest seeker has to be 'fanatic' about jnaana; fanaticism in a legitimate context is permissible. The Advaitin, therefore, insists that 'jnaath eva kaivalyam'.)

- इति चेत् - If such a question is asked,
- अत आह - the answer is given.

What is the answer? It is an obvious and universally known fact that, on any subject, jnaanam (knowledge) alone can remove ajnaanam (ignorance). Whoever has this firm conviction is not a fanatic; but is a wise person. The Aachaaryaa gives this answer, in his own inimitable style.

- आगोपाल अविपाल - Beginning from a cowherd or a shepherd,

Aa – beginning from; gopaala – cowherd ; avipaala – shepherd. The words 'cowherd and shepherd' are used to denote illiterate persons.

- पण्डितं - up to the greatest scholar,

'Aagopaala avipaala panditham' - (in short, means) 'To the entire humanity'

- इयं एव प्रसिद्धिः - this law is well known.

No formal education is needed to understand that only 'knowledge' eliminates 'ignorance'; even a cowherd will know that his 'ignorance' of the number of cows in his herd, will be eliminated by counting the cows i.e. by acquiring 'knowledge' (on the number of the cows), though he may not be able to express this fact, in the form of a law, viz., "'knowledge' eliminates 'ignorance'".

This law is true with regard to moolaavidhyaa also.

In Vedhaantha, all forms of worldly ignorance, other than moolaavidhyaa, are called thoolaavidhyaa. Ignorance of the presence of an object - say a pot or ignorance of a subject – say Mathematics, etc., will come under thoolaavidhyaa, while *brahma- adhishtaana-*ignorance is called moolaavidhyaa. Sureswaraachaaryaa says that the law which is applicable to thoolaavidhyaa is the very same law applicable to moolaavidhyaa also. Thus, an anumaana vaakyam is given – “Moolaavidhyaa jnaana baadhyaa avidhyaathvaath thoolaavidhyaavath” meaning “moolaavidhyaa is removable by knowledge only, because it is also an avidhyaa like any other thoolaavidhyaa”. The statement “Iyam eva prasiddhi:” indicates this fact. It is explained in the sloka that follows.

Verse 104 – Chapter II:

अप्रमोत्थं प्रमोत्थेन ज्ञानं जानेन बाध्यते ।

अहिरज्ज्वादिवद्बाधो देहाध्यात्ममतेस्तथा ॥ १०४ ॥

The cognition springing from error is sublated by a cognition springing from right apprehension in the case of snake-ropes illusion. Similarly, the conception of the body etc., as the Self is sublated by the right knowledge of the Self.

A plain anumaana vaakyam is presented in this sloka. “Moolaavidhyaa jnaanabadhyaa avidhyaathvaath thoolaavidhyaavath” is the logical statement.

- अप्रमोत्थं ज्ञानं - A falsely born perception / cognition jnaanam – cognition / perception ; apramottham – ‘falsely born/ risen’. ‘Apramottham’ should be taken as an adjective, in this context, to jnaanam.

- बाध्यते - is always negated / negatable later,

Even in the scientific field, theories arise as jnaanam ; society accepts the theories and live with the theories , based on the understanding / notion that they are right ‘knowledge’. But, in quite some instances, the scientists themselves, after some time, based on further research, conclude that the originally propounded theory was wrong. When the latter ‘knowledge’, correcting the initial theory, arises, the former ‘seeming knowledge’ is called ‘false knowledge’. Obviously, a ‘false knowledge’ is not considered as ‘false knowledge’, till it is negated or falsified later. Similarly ‘world perception’, even though is ‘false knowledge’, is not ‘false knowledge’ until it is negated later.

An interesting 'aside': This fact, viz., 'a false cognition can be negated later by right knowledge', results in a big problem for the entire humanity, especially in the scientific field. Scientists invent so many theories. After a few years or decades, some of them are falsified, while the other theories may continue for some more time without 'falsification'. In effect, at any given time, all the unfalsified theories constitute, what is considered 'knowledge'. Alternately, present 'knowledge' is nothing but 'currently unfalsified theories'.

Analyzing further, at any given time, the society is not sure as to which current theory will be falsified later and which theory will withstand 'falsification'. The so-called 'knowledge', therefore, is also eternally subject to 'doubts', because, no scientist also can ever confidently guarantee that his theory will never be falsified at any time later; this is because, it is a known fact, that even theories which were once considered to be based on sound footing, have been disproved or falsified later.

Ultimately, the so-called 'knowledge' turns out to be only 'beliefs'. In reality, the society is living on 'beliefs' only; one can only say 'this particular 'knowledge'/ 'belief' is not yet falsified'.

In contrast, the Advaitin claims that advaita jnaanam alone will remain as permanent jnaanam, which will never be / can never be negated later.

But, how? Why is it said "that advaita jnaanam alone will remain as permanent jnaanam ; that advaita jnaanam alone can never be called just a belief ; that advaita jnaanam can never be negated later"?

The explanation: "Once the seeker comes to Advaitam, he negates the very thriputi itself – the thriputi consisting of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Once the thriputi itself is negated, in the absence of pramaathru-pramaana-prameyam, where is the question of the generation of another new knowledge / prama ? When further prama itself is not possible, where is the question of negating the advaita jnaanam? Thasmaath advaitam eva sathyam; advaita jnaanam eva abhaadyam jnaanam".

The Advaitin, therefore, is not worried about any fresh scientific theories also; he is not afraid that any new invention or discovery will negate the advaita jnaanam, since, he has the conviction, that all of them are mithyaa.

In short, while, Science cannot confidently claim any theory as final, in contrast, advaita aacharyaas have confidently declared that advaitam is an irrefutable fact.

Reverting to the text:

Apramottham – apramaya uttham- apramaa roopena uttham - a cognition that has risen falsely / falsely born cognition; similarly, pramottham – pramaya uttham - pramaa roopena uttham - rightly born cognition.

What is the example? The popular and well-known 'rope-snake' example.

अहिरज्ज्वादिवत् - as in the case of 'snake cognition' and 'rope cognition'.

'Snake cognition' is the former cognition and 'rope cognition' is the latter. The later 'rope' cognition falsifies / negates the earlier 'snake' cognition.

A repeated reminder: This example does not convey the message that the Advaitin believes that the world is a 'mental projection'; the example is only with regard to the falsification aspect (i.e. the fact of 'rope cognition' falsifying 'snake cognition'.) It should not be extended to convey that the world is a mental projection, in the manner of the snake being a mental projection. The Advaitin does not say that the world is a mental projection; his contention is that the world and the mind, are the projection of moolaavidhya, which is resting on aathmaa.

Ahi: - snake; rajju – rope.

- तथा - In the same manner,
- देहादि आत्म मते: - the false notion that 'I am the body' / 'there is a real body and I am that body',
- बाध: - will be negated.

By what? By the right knowledge that 'I' am the saakshi chaithanyam.

103. Chapter II, Verse 104 to 106 (26-07-2008)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is discussing the difference between saamkhyaa and vedhanthaa philosophies.

In saamkhyaa philosophy, the entire anaathmaa is sathyam, whereas, in Vedhaanthic teaching, the entire anaathmaa is mithyaa, because the anaathmaa is a product of moolaavidhyaa.

'I', the aathmaa, with the help of moolaavidhyaa, have projected the entire universe, consisting of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. This moolaavidhyaa is called prakruthi – the basic matter.

According to Vedhaanthaa, the moolaavidhyaa does not have the same order of reality, as 'I', the aathmaa, have.

We know this fact, that, moolaavidhyaa / prakruthi does not have the same order of reality as aathmaa, because all Upanishad vaakyams negate prakruthi; and whatever is negated cannot be real.

'I', the aathmaa, which is anaadhi, along with moolaavidhyaa, which is also anaadhi, have projected the thriputi of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Pramaathaa is the mind; pramaanam is the sense organs; and, prameyam is the external universe.

Pramaathaa, the mind, is intrinsically jadam; pramaanam, the sense organs, are also intrinsically jadam; and, of course, the prameya prapancha is also jadam. All these three are jadam, by themselves. The pramaathaa mind gets the pramaathaa status, because, 'I', the aathmaa, bless the mind with chidhaabhaasaa; and therefore, with 'my' blessing, the pramaathaa gets borrowed sentiency; and, in the same manner, with 'my' blessing only, the pramaanam also gets borrowed sentiency; and, prameyam is also known, only when the chidhaabhaasaa pervades objects, through the anatha:karana vrutthi. Thus, all these three – the thriputi – have only borrowed existence (since they are 'projected' by 'I', the aathmaa, along with moolaavidhyaa); all the three have only borrowed Consciousness also. Sath of the thriputi is borrowed – they have sadhaabhaasaa; chith of the thriputi is also borrowed – they have chidhaabhaasaa. (Though generally the suffix 'abhaasaa' is added to 'chith' only – as chidhaabhaasaa – the suffix can be added to sath also – as sathaabhaasaa)

Thus, the thriputi has got sadhaabhaasaa and the thriputi has chidhaabhaasaa; both sath and chith are lent by 'me' only, to the thriputi.

But, the problem that we face, is, that, since the moolaavidhyaa of jeeva has got both aavarana sakthi and vikshepa sakthi, while the vikshepa sakthi projects the mithyaa thriputi, the aavarana sakthi veils the fact that the mithyaa thriputi is mithyaa.

This happens only in the case of jeeva (as against Isvara). Isvara is also aathmaa only ; Isvara also has got moolaavidhyaa ; from Isvara's angle also, the universe is projected by moolaavidhyaa only (what is called as maayaa / what is called as prakruthi is nothing but moolaavidhyaa only).

But, there is an important difference. What is that difference? In the case of Isvara, while the vikshepa sakthi of moolaavidhyaa projects the mithyaathriputi (as in the case of jeeva), Isvara has the advantage, that, in His case, aavarana sakthi is non-functional / in-operative. Therefore, to Isvara, aavarana sakthi cannot and does not cover the fact that the mithyaa thriputi is mithyaa. Isvara 'projects' (the thriputi), with the clear and firm knowledge (that the projected thriputi is mithyaa) - as the Lord declares in the Bhagavadh Githa (verse 6 – chapter IV) : “Ajo api san avyayaathmaa bhoothaanaam Isvaropi san prakruthim svaam adhishtaaya sambhavaami aathma maayaya” – “Even though I am birthless and deathless and even though I am the Lord of (all) beings, still, I come into being through my own maayaa, by resorting to my prakruthi”. Moolaavidhyaa minus aavarana sakthi is called maayaa.

Since, in the case of jeeva, the aavarana sakthi is operational , it follows, that, if jeeva wants to become like Isvara, the jeeva has to eliminate the aavarana sakthi. The jeeva can continue to possess moolaavidhyaa, but, has to convert the moolaavidhyaa into maayaa, by eliminating the aavarana sakthi, since, as indicated earlier, moolaavidhyaa minus aavarana sakthi, but, with the vikshepa sakthi retained, is maayaa. When the aavarana sakthi is eliminated / removed, with the vikshepa sakthi continuing to exist, the thriputi will also continue to exist; but, the jeeva will clearly understand the mithyaa thriputi as mithyaa thriputi.

Thereafter, the jeeva can allow the mind - pramaatha to continue, the senses - pramaanam to continue and the world - prameyam to continue even for eternity, with the firm convictions “I, am the aathmaa” and “mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathishtitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi - everything is born in 'me' alone; everything is based on 'me' alone; everything resolves into 'me' alone – (Kaivalyopanishad – verse 19)”.

At this stage, the jeeva never prays to Bhagavaan to facilitate his (jeeva's) 'running away' from the world, in the name of videha mukthi. The concept of videha mukthi is only in the “jagath-jeeva-Isvara” format - the triangular ajnaani format. The jnaani does not crave for "freedom from re-birth". For him, the world can be allowed to be born again , again and yet again ; even if the srushti-sthithi-laya cycle continues for eternity, the jnaani is not affected.

This (maturity) is accomplished by Vedhaantha Vichaaraa. Therefore, Sureswaraacharya says (in verse 104):

- प्रमोत्थेन जानेन - With the help of knowledge, which arises through Vedhaantha Vichaaraa,
- अप्रमोत्थं जानं बाध्यते – the misconception regarding thriputi is gone.

Twofold misconceptions are there; the first misconception is that "pramaathaa – the ahamkaaraa is sathyam". While this concept itself is a serious blunder, the more serious blunder is the second misconception "'I', am that pramaathaa".

"Pramaathari sathyathva buddhi:" and "pramaathari aathmathva buddhi:" are the two misconceptions. By 'knowledge', the seeker removes both the misconceptions and gets the convictions "pramaathaa is mithyaa" and "pramaathaa is not 'myself'".

- अहिरज्ज्वादिवत् - As in the case of the rope-snake,
- तथा - in a similar manner,
- देहादि आत्ममतेः बाधः (भवति)- the misconception of "the body etc., as the Self ", is eliminated.

Negation of thriputi (by 'negation' is meant 'falsification') takes place; and 'disidentification' from thriputi also takes place. This "falsification-cum-disidentification" is called 'wisdom'. This is an intellectual / cognitive process, because both (negation of thriputi and dis-identification from thriputi) have to take place only in the intellect.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 105:

लौकिकप्रमेयवैलक्षण्यादात्मनो नेहानधिगताधिगमः प्रमाणपलम् ।

Here the product of right knowledge is not the discovery of what was unknown before, because the Self differs from objects of ordinary modes of right knowledge.

This is a very, very important and significant verse. Though the subject matter of the verse has been discussed earlier in various other contexts, it bears repetition and has to be noted and remembered by a serious student.

Here Sureswaraacharya says "the whole wisdom is a sorting-out process - the falsification of pramaathaa and the disidentification from pramaathaa; this wisdom is born out of the analysis, that is done with the help of guru, saasthra vaakyam. It is only an analysis-born clear understanding, in which no new experience is involved. The wisdom is a new understanding based on the available experiences of avasthaathrayam; jaagrath avastha is an available experience, svapna avastha is an available experience and sushupthi avastha is an available experience; based on these available experiences, the student does an analysis, using sruthi, yukthi and anubhavaa. Through the analysis, a new understanding is accomplished; but, there is no new experience involved".

The Aachaaryaa is logically explaining why no new experience is involved. The idea he gives is: "New experience is possible only in the case of anaathmaa; because every anaathmaa is initially an unexperienced anaathmaa and the unexperienced anaathmaa (for instance, a tree or a pot) becomes experienced, when chidhaabhaasaa pervades. This pervasion of chidhaabhaasaa converts the unexperienced anaathmaa into experienced anaathmaa, which is called a new experience. These new experiences are possible, whenever chidhaabhaasaa pervades by the operation of pramaanam. And, if and when one gets extraordinary, mystic experiences, they are also only unexperienced mystic anaathmaa becoming experienced mystic anaathmaa, because of pervasion of chidhaabhaasa. All experiences – whether ordinary or mystic - deal with only anaathmaa; this process of 'experiencing' takes place because of chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi, also known as pala vyaapthi. Conversely, it can be said, that, chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi or pala vyaapthi is responsible for new experiences. But, this happens only in the field of anaathmaa"

And, then continues: "A similar new experience is not possible with regard to aathmaa, the saakshi."

The reason is, that, aathmaa, unlike anaathmaa, is ever experienced; it does not come under unexperienced category; it need not be converted into a newly experienced entity; therefore, it does not require chidhaabhaasa vyaapthi / pala vyaapthi. And, therefore, aathma anubhavaa, as a time-bound, new experience – ordinary or extraordinary – is impossible and illogical. Whoever talks about getting aathma anubhava at a given particular time, has only mistaken some anaathma anubhavaa – he might have got an anubhavaa alright - as aathma anubhavaa. This is what the Aachaaryaa points out, in this portion.

- लौकिक प्रमेय वैलक्षण्यात् आत्मन्ः - Since Aathmaa, the saakshi, is different from all the worldly objects, Vailakshanyam – difference ; loukika prameyam - all the worldly objects, which are called prameyam, which are anaathmaa, which, by themselves, are not available for experience, but, which, therefore, require chidhaabhaasaa for getting 'experienced'.

Aathmaa, on the other hand, is different – it is not prameyam; it is aprameyam; it is self-illuminating - svaprakaasam - and therefore, does not require chidhaabhaasaa to be experienced. (It is interesting to note that the same adjectives are used for Sri Lalithambal in the sacred Lalitha Sahasranaamaa – "aprameyaa svaprakaasaa".)

Therefore, aathmaa being thus different:

- इह – in the case of aathma jnaanam,
- अनधिगत अधिगमः - a new experience of an unexperienced thing,

Anadhigatham – unexperienced; adhigama: - new experience.

- न प्रमाणपलम् – is not the result of Vedhaantha vichaaraa.

A new experience of an unexperienced thing is not involved, in the field of aathma jnaanam.

In short, Vedhaantha sravana manana nidhidhyaasanam is not going to result in a new experience. Therefore, the seeker should stop working for / looking for a new experience ; the effort should be only to accomplish a new understanding which is based on the analysis of already available experiences.

Pramaanapalan - (in this context) result of sravana- manana- nidhidhyaasanam.

This is further explained in the verse that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 105 –

अविध्यानाशमात्रं तु फलमित्युपचर्यते ।

नाज्ञातजापनं न्याय्यमवगत्येकरूपतः ॥ १०५ ॥

Only the destruction of nescience is spoken of here as the effect of knowledge figuratively. It would not be right to describe the effect as the revelation of what is unknown before, for the Self is solely of the nature of awareness itself.

This idea is borrowed from the well-known, oft-quoted verse 4 in Ch.XVIII of Adi Sankara's Upadesa Saahasri : "siddhaath eva ahamityasmaath yushmaddharmo nishidhyathe" – " self-knowledge involves only removal of misconceptions regarding 'myself' , which is all the time experienced as "'I' am, 'I' am, 'I' am'".

The saakshi anubhavaa is always there; from that saakshi, the thriputi has to be separated / distanced. 'Distancing the thriputi' is self-knowledge; and, this 'distancing the thriputi' is not a physical job; it is a cognitive job.

Just as, in the mundane world, an individual wears a pair of spectacles or a pair of contact lenses to view the objects/ persons around, the thriputi is also 'put on', in the jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaas, to experience the jaagrath and svapnaa worlds, while in the sushupthi avasthaa, the thriputi is resolved and only the saakshi exists.

'Removal of misconception' is 'knowledge'.

The misconception, as already indicated, is twofold. First is that "pramaathaa is sathyam" and the second is that "that sathyam pramaathaa is 'myself'".

And, how does the 'removal of the misconception' take place? With the help of a thought process; 'knowledge' involves vrutthi vyaapthi; pala vyaapthi is not required; chidhaabhaasaa is not required; but, vrutthi vyaapthi – a thought process – is required.

And, what is the thought process? "Thriputi is mithyaa; 'I' am not thriputi; 'I' am the saakshi of thriputi ; and therefore different / distinct from thriputi. While thriputi is mithyaa, 'I' am sathyam".

Entertaining this thought process, understanding its significance, is alone wisdom.

Wisdom does not consist in going to a thoughtless stage or going into a nirvikalpaka avasthaa / nirvikalpaka samaadhi. Wisdom is something that takes place in savikalpaka avasthaa, in which guru, saasthraa and pramaanams are involved.

The seeker deliberately entertains the thoughts "this thriputi is incidental; 'I' am using them; but, 'I' am distinct from them. Even though 'I' use them, the thriputi belong to a lower order of reality".

To make this 'understanding' clear, the following line of reasoning helps : "I am perfectly aware, that, when I dream, the dream thriputi that I use and the dream experiences I get, by the use of the dream thriputi, are certainly not real ; in other words, I, the 'waker', use a lower order dream thriputi to have a lower order dream experiences. In the same manner, 'I', the paaramaarthika saakshi, use the lower order jaagrath thriputi to have the lower order jaagrath experiences also".

The resulting convictions are: "Praathibhaasika svapnaa is of lower order of reality; Vyaavahaarika jaagrath is also of lower order of reality; only paaramaarthikaa saakshi is sathyam and that saakshi, 'I' am.

"I make use of the jaagrath thriputi for jaagrath avasthaa experiences and svapna thriputi for svapnaa avasthaa experiences. When I am in sushupthi, I am rid of both types of thriputi and 'I' am saakshi maathram, which 'I' am regularly experiencing in the sushupthi avasthaa - 'sanmaathra: karana upasamharanatha: yobhooth sushuptha: pumaarl' – 'on folding up all the functions of the senses, that Purusha:, enters into a state of deep-sleep and there becomes 'Existence' alone' (Verse 6 – Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram)".

- अविध्या नाशमात्रं तु - Only the destruction of nescience / removal of misconceptions
- फलं इति उपचर्यते - is figuratively said to be a new 'knowledge' (or result).

The 'new knowledge' is nothing but 'removal of the misconceptions'.

Why do we say that there is no new experience? The Aachaaryaa explains:

- अवगति एक रूपतः - Since the saakshi is of the nature of Consciousness and is always experienced as " 'I' am",

Avagathi: – chaithanyam; eka – only; roopatha: - of the nature of .

Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram (verse 7) declares: "baalyaadhisu api jaagradaadhisu thathaa sarvaasu avasthaasu api vyaavrutthaasu anuvarthamaanam aham ithi" – "In all stages of life like boyhood etc., in all states like waking etc., similarly in all conditions also, constantly and persistently manifests as " 'I' am" ".

- अजातजापनं न न्याय्यं - a new experience is illogical / implausible / impossible.

Jnaapanam - a new experience or a new revelation; ajnaatha – unrevealed

In this context, Swamiji quotes a book which he had read, wherein the author had highlighted in red, an experience the author had had in nirvikalpaka samaadhi. He had claimed that in his nirvikalpaka samaadhi, he saw a very, very white light which appeared, gradually pervaded all round, went around his guru's photograph three times and then engulfed the author himself and "after I was in self – experience for a brief period" gradually ebbed away. While Swamiji does not question the veracity of the author's claim, with regard to the author's experience or the light that had appeared to him, Swamiji's contention is that the 'light' or the 'experience' had nothing to do with aathmaa – since the light 'arrived' and 'departed' / the experience 'came' and 'went away'. It must be remembered that aathmaa is anaaghamaapaayee - does not have 'arrival' or 'departure'. But, unfortunately, considering such extra-ordinary experiences as aathma anubhavaa is a mistake commonly committed by people. Sureswaraachaaryaa, through this verse, tries to correct such mistakes / to rectify wrong understandings; he avers "a new experience is not there ; 'knowledge' is only removal of the misconception regarding the ever experienced "'I' am".

"Ajnaatha jnaapanam" - a new revelation of an unrevealed aathmaa; "Na nyaayyam" – is not logically possible.

That's why, Kenopanishad declares "Prathibodhavidhitham matham" – "Brahman is known as the witness awareness, in every thought" (II.4).

"In every experience, aathma anubhavaa is there" - is the essence (of this verse of Sureswaraachaaryaa and this manthraa of Kenopanishad).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 106:

यस्मादात्मानवबोधमात्रोपादानाः प्रमात्रायादयस्तस्मात् ।

Because the phenomena of the knower etc. are the outcome of the non-apprehension of the Self alone, it follows:

In this, Sureswaraachaaryaa says that, one need not have any doubt regarding the existence of 'I', the saakshi, different / distinct from the thriputi.

And, why is it, that there need not be any doubt?

The Achaaryaa gives the reason: "Because the thriputi, by itself, is jadam, while saakshi is chaithanya roopam".

Going to the fundamentals: What is thriputi? Ans: Pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam.

Pramaathaa means mind, in fact, the antha:karanam, consisting of mano-buddhi-chittha-ahamkaaraa ; pramaanam means the sense organs ; and the world is the prameyam.

All the three are jadam, by themselves.

And, why are they jadam? The Aaachaaryaa had given the logic "because they are moolaavidhyaa janyam - born out of moolaavidhyaa, which is also jadam". Jada kaaryathvaath thriputi api jadam |

And, if 'I' am talking about the presence of thriputi in jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaas and 'I' am talking about the absence of thriputi in sushupthi avasthaa, there must be and there is 'I', the saakshi, who am illumining the presence and the absence of the thriputi.

On this, the Aachaaryaa is going to elaborate. These are all very beautiful discussions.

Thriputi, by itself, cannot reveal itself.

Pramaathaa cannot reveal pramaathaa; pramaathaa cannot reveal pramaanam; pramaathaa cannot reveal prameyam.

So also, pramaanam cannot reveal pramaathaa; pramaanam cannot reveal pramaanam; pramaanam cannot reveal prameyam.

Third: Prameyam cannot reveal prameyam; prameyam cannot reveal pramaanam; prameyam cannot reveal pramaathaa.

“Thus” Sureswaraacharyaa says “each one of the thriputi cannot reveal itself and cannot reveal either of the other two also”.

Why? Because each one of the thriputi is jadam. Pramaathaa is mind, which is jadam; pramaanam is sense organs, which is jadam; prameyam is the world, which is jadam.

Then who is revealing them? ‘I’, the saakshi, give chidhaabhaasa to the mind; then alone, the mind is revealed; not only is it revealed, it is able to function as pramaathaa. Then, through the mind, ‘I’ give chidhaabhaasa to pramaanam; then only, pramaanam is revealed and is able to function as pramaanam. Thereafter, through the pramaathaa and pramaanam, ‘I’ lend chidhaabhaasaa to the world and only then, the world is called ‘known’ or ‘prameyam’. Without ‘my’ chidhaabhaasaa, the world can never be prameyam – a ‘known object’.

“Why are you doubting the existence of ‘I’, the only awareness principle, which is making the thriputi ‘known’?” asks Sureswaraacharyaa.

- यस्मात् - Since
- प्रमात्रादयः - Pramaathaa etc. / pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam/ mind, sense organs and world,

It should always be remembered that “pramaathaa = mind”. What is the proof? Because pramaathaa is available only when the mind is active. The moment mind is resolved, in sushupthi, the pramaathaa - the ‘knower’ limb of thriputi is gone; and once the ‘knower’ limb is gone, since through the mind alone, sense organs get chidhaabhaasaa, the pramaanam is also absent / resolved in sushupthi. From this, it is very clear that, when the mind is operative, pramaathaa 'is' and when the mind is resolved, pramaathaa 'is not'. Therefore, mind alone is the pramaathaa.

- उपादानाः - have got their material cause
- आत्म अनवबोध मात्र – as only moolaavidhyaa,

Anava bhodha – moolavidhyaa; maathra – only.

The statement, "The thriputi has got its material cause in the form of moolaavidhyaa" only means "thriputi is a product of moolaavidhyaa" or "moolaavidhyaa is the material cause of thriputi".

The definition of moolaavidhyaa will depend upon the context- whether of jeeva or Isvara ; in the context of jeeva, moolaavidhyaa will be defined as aavaranasakthi-sahitha-moolaavidhyaa and in the case of Isvara, the same moolaavidhyaa is defined as aavaranasakthi-rahitha-moolaavidhyaa, which is re-named as maayaa.

"Moolaavidhyaa being jadam, the thriputi also has to be jadam only"-"Pramaathraadhayaa: jadaa: jada avidhyaa kaaryathvaath" |

- तस्मात् - therefore,

Therefore, what is the conclusion?

None of the thriputi can know itself or any of the other two. But, what is our experience?

The thriputi is known; but, since, it cannot be known by any member of the thriputi ; it follows, that, it must be known by someone outside the thriputi. That someone is called "thriputi saaksh" and "avasthaathraya saakash" etc.; and, that someone alone 'I' am.

This is what the Aachaaryaa says, in the beautiful sloka that follows.

Chapter II: Verse 106 -

न विदन्त्यात्मनः सत्तां द्रष्टुदर्शनगोचराः ।

न चान्योन्यमतोऽमीषां ज्ञेयत्वं भिन्नसाधनम् ॥ १०६ ॥

The seer, the seeing and the object seen, do not by themselves cognize their own being. Nor do they cognize one another reciprocally. Therefore their becoming objects of cognition depends on something transcending them.

- द्रष्टु दर्शन गोचरा :- The thriputi, consisting of the pramaathaa, the pramaanam and the prameyam

Dhrashtru – pramaathaa, the mind; dharsanam – pramaanam, the sense organs; gocharaa: - prameyam, the external objects.

- न विदन्ति - can never know
- आत्मनः सतां - their own existence,

The mind can never know its existence by itself – i.e. as “I, the pramaathaa, is in existence”; so also, the sense organs can never know of their existence, by themselves i.e. as “I, the pramaanam, is in existence”; so also, the world. Then someone may ask “Okay. Each one may not know itself by itself. But, why cannot they know the other two?”.

An aside: “Swami Chinmayaanaadaa used to tell a story, to show the difference between Heaven and Hell. Once, in both Heaven and Hell, the elbows of the occupants were made to be stuck in such a way that they could not bend their arms. Food was served. There was no way that anyone could help oneself to the food, because of the stuck elbows and consequent inability to bend the arms. But, there was a contrast. In Hell, every one sat looking at the food helplessly, starving all the time. In Heaven, each one used his hand to feed the person in front – thus, helping each other mutually. Parasparam bhaavayantha: sreya: param avaapsyathaa (Baghavadh Githa – III.1). This is the difference between the occupants of Heaven and Hell”

The question may be asked: “Granted that pramaathaa cannot know itself. But (as in the story above) why should not the pramaathaa know the pramaanam and prameyam? So also, pramaanam can know pramaathaa and prameyam and so on”.

Even if this happens, no one will know all the three. But, one knowing the other two is also not possible.

The Aachaaryaa says in the second line:

- अमीषाम् अन्योन्यं च न (वेत्ति) Among these three, no one member knows the others also / they do not know each other mutually also.

Ameeshaam - among the three; anyonyam - (in this context means) mutually.

“Ameeshaam (madhye) anyonyam cha na (pramaathradhaya: vidhanthi)” will be the restructured sentence of “ameeshaam anyonyam cha na”|

'Pramaathaa knowing the other two or pramaanam knowing the other two etc.'" is not possible.

Therefore, what is the conclusion now? "To make the thriputi known (since we do know them), we require a saakshi, which is aware of the arrival of thriputi in jaagrath avasthaa (therefore jaagrath avasthaa is called savikalpaka avasthaa), which saakshi is aware of the arrival of thriputi in svapna avasthaa (therefore, svapnaa is called savikalpaka avasthaa) and which saakshi is aware of sushupthi, in which thriputi is resolved (therefore, sushupthi is called nirvikalpaka avasthaa)".

This is what the Achaaryaa says:

- ज्ञेयत्वं - The known status (of the thriputi)
- भिन्न साधनम् - (is) because of some other illumining factor.

Bhinna saadhanam – "bhinnam saadhanam yasya thath".

Thriputi are known because of some illumining factor, which factor, obviously, cannot be jadam, since, if it is jadam, it will require another illumining factor.

That 'illumining factor' is called the saakshi.

And, who is that saakshi? That saakshi, 'I' am.

Thriputi is an incidental addition and an incidental deletion – everyday 'I', the saakshi, am experiencing the arrival and departure of the thriputi.

104. Chapter II, Verse 106 to 108 (02-08-2008)

Sureswaraachaaryaa is talking about the relationship between aathmaa and thriputi.

The entire thriputi consisting of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam, is a product of avidhyaa. Avidhyaa, otherwise known as maayaa or prakruthi is jadasvaroopam.

Since the cause, avidhyaa, is jadasvaroopam, all the effects / products of avidhyaa also have to be jada in nature. Pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam – all these three, are, therefore, jadam by themselves. Pramaathaa referring to the antha: karanam, pramaanam referring to the sense organs and the prameyam referring to the sabdhaadhiprapancha: - all the three are jadam, being products of jada avidhyaa.

Since they are, by themselves, jadam, they do not have the capacity to reveal themselves. Pramaathaa, the mind, cannot say, by itself, "I, am pramaathaa, the mind". Likewise the pramaanam and the prameyam also cannot reveal themselves. None of the three has the capacity to reveal itself.

Further, none of the three will be able to reveal either of the other two also, the reason being the same - jadathvaath; just as, the jadasvaroopam (insentient) clip on the desk (in front of Swamiji) can neither reveal itself nor the desk; and the jadasvaroopam (insentient) desk also cannot reveal itself nor can it reveal the clip.

None of the thriputi can ever reveal itself nor mutually any of the other two also. But, even though this is the truth, we find that we are aware of the presence of the thriputi – pramaathru-pramaana-prameya existence, their jnaana vyavaharaa and its consequent experiences, both in jaagrath and svapnaa avasthaas. This (the fact, that, thriputi cannot reveal itself but thriputi is known to us) means that thriputi is getting revealed by some principle other than thriputi. That principle is thriputi-saakshi. And, that saakshi cannot be a product of avidhyaa, since, if it is a product of avidhyaa, that saakshi also, like thriputi, will be jadasvaroopam and will require yet another principle to reveal it.

Therefore, saakshi is not avidhyaa kaaryam (a product of avidhyaa); therefore, (i.e. since saakshi is not avidhyaa kaaryam), saakshi is not adhyastham (a falsely cognized thing); therefore, (i.e. since saakshi is not adhyastham), saakshi is not mithyaa; and therefore, (i.e. since saakshi is not mithyaa), saakshi is sathyam. Thus, the existence of sathya saakshi, other than thriputi, is firmly established and must be accepted by all the people.

Thereafter, we say: "that sathya saakshi, 'I' am. 'I' am witnessing the arrival of the thriputi, during jaagrath and svapna, from avidhyaa, which avidhyaa is in existence, in the sushupthi avasthaa also. 'I' am not only witnessing the 'arrival' of thriputi in jaagrath and svapna but 'I' am also witnessing the 'resolution' of thriputi in sushupthi. In other words, 'I' am the 'witness' to the savikalpka avasthaa in jaagrath and svapnaa and the nirvikalpaka avasthaa in sushupthi. Thus 'I' am the adhishtaanam and 'I' am the 'illuminator' of the thriputi." That is what is said in verse 106, completed in the earlier class.

- Dhrashtu dharsana gocharaa: - The thriputi (pramaathru-pramaana-prameyaa.)
- aathmana: satthaam na vidhanthi - do not know their own existence.
- Aathmana: - in this context, is a reflective pronoun meaning 'their own' (not, sacchidhaandha aathmaa).
- Ameeshaam anyonyam api (na vidhanthi) – (They do not know the existence) of others also / mutually also they do not reveal their existences.

And, therefore, all these three must be revealed by some non-material principle; pramaathaa is material; pramaanam is material; prameyam is material. These three-fold material must be revealed by a non-material entity, that is called saakshi.

And, therefore,

- (ameeshaam) jnyeyathvam - The 'known status' of the thriputi bhinna saadhanam - is because of some other factor.

Ameeshaam - means 'their' and in this context, 'dhrashtu dharsana gocharaanaam' / 'pramaathru pramaana prameyaanaam'. Jnyeyathvam - 'known status'.

The 'known status' of the thriputi is because of some other 'knower' principle / 'witness' principle, which principle is saakshi.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 107:

द्रष्टादेरसाधारणरूपजापनायाह ।

The distinctive characters of these factors, the seer etc. are brought out:

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "I have been using the words pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam / dhrashtaa, dhrusyam and dharsanam / graahasam, grahanam and graahyam. The words have not been defined so far, assuming that the meanings are well known. But, now, I will define them (the thriputi) to make sure that their meanings are understood".

- ज्ञापनाय – To teach (the student),
- असाधारणरूपं - the unique status / the original nature / svaroopam / lakshanam
- द्रष्टृदे: - of the thriputi,

Dhrashtaa – Pramaathaa; aadhi: - 'etc.'; dhrashtraadhe: - of the pramaathaa etc. i.e. of the thriputi consisting of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam.

- आह - the author says this: (in the verse that follows).

Verse 107 – Chapter II:

बाह्य आकारवान् ग्राह्यो ग्रहणं निश्चयादिमत् ।

अन्वय्यहमिति ज्ञेयः साक्षी त्वात्मा ध्रुवः सदा ॥ १०७ ॥

The object of knowledge is the external factor having sensible form. Knowledge consists of judgment etc. The knower in relation to this, is ego. The witness of all these, is the Self, abiding always.

The Aachaaryaa defines thriputi, in this sloka.

- बाह्यः आकारवान् ग्राह्यः - The object of knowledge, external to the body (i.e. the entire world) is endowed with form.

The word graahyam means prameyam or dhrusyam – the object of knowledge.

And, what is that prameyam?

- Baahya: - which is outside the physical body / the entire world.

Not only is it external, and therefore requires the five sense organs for its getting experienced, the apertures of the sense organs must also be open; only then the external world can be perceived.

And, what is the nature of the prameya prapancha?

- Aakaaravaan – endowed with form.

The word aakaara: means roopam - form or colour. That's why we call the external world naamaroopa prapancha:

The word roopam indicates all the pancha gunaa: - sabda, sparsa, roopa, rasa and gandha.

Therefore only, the saguna prameya: prapancha: or in short, prameyam, is material in nature.

The materiality of the thriputi must be assimilated well. Only then the non-material 'I', the aathmaa, becomes more and more pronounced.

Body is material, mind is material, thoughts are material and the world is material. Among these entire material thriputi, all of us have got one non-material feature. What is that? We are all 'aware'.

The 'awareness' – 'unarvu' in Tamil – will be clear, once we assert the materiality of the body, of the brain, of the thoughts, of all the bio-chemistry required in the brain and of all the neurological impulses belonging to the brain i.e. once we clearly understand that all these are material in nature.

This is the reason why Sureswaraachaaryaa is stressing on the 'materiality' of the thriputi.

The word 'aakaaravaan' means 'saguna matter'. Not only is it sagunaa; prameyam is savikaaraa also, 'continuously changing'.

"Graahya: baahya: aakaaravaan" is the first sentence in the verse, describing graahyam or prameyam.

The next sentence is "grahanam nischayaadhimath".

- ग्रहणं - Pramaanam (in this context)

What is pramaanam?

- निश्चयादिमत् - consists of / is endowed with, varieties of cognitive thoughts / experiencing thoughts.

Varieties of cognitive / experiencing thoughts are termed pramaanam.

Why do you say that a 'thought' is a 'pramaanam'?

Because, only in the presence of 'thoughts' (vrutthis), the prameyaa will be known. If ghatavrutthi is not there, existence of the 'pot' will not be known; if patavrutthi is not there, the existence of 'pata' will not be known. During sushupthi, when thoughts resolve by themselves, or in samaadhi, when thoughts are deliberately removed, the pramaana vrutthis are resolved and the prameya prapanchaa is also simultaneously resolved.

Pramaanam alone reveals prameyam. What is that pramaanam? Ans: 'Thought'.

Is thought material or non-material? We have to very confidently assert that every thought is also material in nature.

Why is 'thought' material? Because, 'thought' is born of the 'mind' and 'mind' is material.

But, why is 'mind' material? Because, it is born out of the sathva gunaa of the pancha bhoothaani, which bhoothaani are material.

Stating the same in the reverse order, Bhoothaas are material; therefore, their product, the 'mind' is material; and therefore 'thought', the product of the mind is material – every pramaanam is material.

'Grahanam nischayaadhimath' means 'the pramaanam consists of cognitive thoughts which are of the nature of nischya jnaanam etc.'

Nischayam means 'conviction' or 'clear knowledge'.

The Aachaaryaa says Nischayaadhi - i.e. 'clear knowledge etc.'; because, thoughts are not only of the nature of clear or valid knowledge; at times, they are of doubting nature also. Even doubtful knowledge is a form of knowledge / is also vrutthi jnaanam. The samsaya vrutthi jnaanam is also a grahanam. In fact, even viparyaya ('viparyaya:' means 'wrong') vrutthi jnaanam is also grahanam.

Nischaya vrutthi jnaanam, samsaya vrutthi jnaanam and viparyaya vrutthi jnaanam are all grahanam only.

Thus, cognition is of several types. Right knowledge / cognition, doubtful cognition, wrong cognition and even memory (smrithi) are all varieties / forms of cognition. Memory, whether it is pramaa or bhramaa, is also a form of cognition.

But, all cognitions are also material or jadam. Pramaanam is also jadam.

In the term 'nischayaadhi math', the suffix 'math' means 'endowed with'.

Then, what about Pramaathaa?

In the second line of the verse:

- अन्वयी अहं इति ज्ञेयः - The pramaathaa is nothing but the ahamkaara: / aham vrutthi:, which associates itself with every form of knowledge.

When there is sabda vrutthi, I claim I know the sound; when sabda vrutthi is replaced by sparsa vrutthi, the sabda vrutthi is gone and the sparsa vrutthi has come, but I still know the sound. The ahamkaaraa, the I-thought, continues throughout all these changing vrutthies.

This I-thought, which is connecting with knowledge 1, knowledge 2, knowledge 3 and so on, corresponds to the sub-stratum of all the thoughts, which sub-stratum is nothing but the mind. That antha: karanam, upon which all vrutthis takes place, is also material and is called Pramaathaa. In other words, Pramaathaa is the ahamkaaraa obtaining throughout the jaagrath avasthaa, connecting with every flowing knowledge. The ahamkaaraa does not obtain in sushupthi.

That ahamkaaraa which connects with every flowing knowledge is called anvayee (in this verse), meaning 'connecting' / 'claiming' ahamkaaraa.

When the antha: karanam is active, the ahamkaaraa is active; when the antha: karanam is resolved, the pramaathaa - the ahamkaaraa is also resolved.

- Anvayee - The persisting / continuous I-thought.

This term 'I-thought', in this context, is used not to refer to the saakshi, but to the mind, in keeping with the common use of the term; since, everybody generally uses the term 'I-thought' to relate to its vaachyaartha, the mind only and not the lakshyaartha, the saakshi. Aham padha vaachyaartha is the mind.

That vaachyaartha mind is the pramaathaa.

Is that mind chethanam or jadam, by itself? Before the arrival of chidhaabhaasaa from the saakshi, the mind is also jadam only. The mind becomes chethanam, only after getting blessed by saakshi, with chidhaabhaasaa.

In this context, it should be understood, that, while it is true, that, "mind is shining with chidhaabhaasa", if a statement that "mind is revealed by chidhaabhaasa" is made, it will be a wrong statement. "Mind is revealed by saakshi alone" is the right perspective.

A parallel can be drawn by the example of the moon and the moonlight. If, to the query "Is moon illumined by moonlight or sunlight?", an answer that "moon is illumined by moonlight" is made, it will obviously be a wrong answer, since, it is common knowledge that it is the sunlight which illumines the moon. It can be claimed that "earth is illumined by the moonlight", but, certainly not "the moon is illumined by the moonlight".

It is an important general law that, "the reflecting medium is never illumined by the reflected light; the reflecting medium is always illumined by the original light". In the same manner: mind is not illumined by chidhaabhaasa; saakshi illumines the mind; and, in this process, chidhaabhaasa is formed and illumines the prameyaa but, not the mind, just as moonlight illumines the earth and not the moon.

Therefore, "anvayee ahamkaara: / aham padha vaachyaartha: / antha:karanam / the mind, commonly denoted by the word 'aham', is the pramaathaa" is what is being conveyed by "anvayee aham ithi jneya:"]

Then, what is saaksh?

Sureswaraachaaryaa says "First note that all these three material entities (the thriputi) whose activity is required for the entire samsaaraa / life process to go on - this material thriputi itself is subject to arrival and departure. This entire universe, which, we consider as a huge entity, is nothing but one of the thriputi arriving and departing".

When does this universe arrive? The entire universe is a prameyam; it is available only when there is pramaanam; that pramaanam is possible only when pramaathaa is; pramaathaa is the mind; but only when 'I' the saakshi, activates the mind, by lending sath and chith, the mind can be pramaathaa.

In the reverse order, when 'I', the saakshi activates the mind, by blessing it with sath and chith, pramaathaa rises; when pramaathaa rises, pramaanam becomes operational; when pramaanaa becomes operational, the world becomes alive.

Thus, all the thriputi is nothing but something which rises in 'me'. The term 'me', in this context, does not refer to either the mind or the sense organs, both of which fall under thriputi - but, refers to the saakshi.

'I', the saakshi, enliven two sets of thriputi – one is jaagrath thriputi and the other is svapna thriputi – (from a mature perspective) just to 'enjoy the show'. And, when I am tired of 'watching', 'I' resolve both sets of thriputi and go to "saakshi chethaa kevalo nirgunascha", which is called sushupthi.

Thriputi is subject to arrival and departure, whereas, 'I', the saakshi, am dhruva: /

- आत्मा साक्षी सदा ध्रुवः - The non-material Consciousness is always there, changelessly present.

In this context, it may be observed, that, because Consciousness is non-material, none of the scientific material instruments is able to study 'Consciousness'. Material instruments can have access only to the material world. Mind is material; sense organs are material. So, they can have access only to the material world. Similar are the Scientific instruments; they cannot have access to the non-material aathmaa, which is available only as the saakshi.

This will give rise to a question (which the Aachaaryaa does not talk of here, but will answer later): "If Consciousness is not available to any material instrument, how do you prove its existence?" This question can be answered by a counter-question "Is this question raised by material entity or non-material entity?" It should be remembered that the question itself – any question - cannot be asked by material thriputi. But, now that the question is raised, it should be realized that there is a non-material medium, in whose presence alone, the very question is raised. That non-material medium in which I am raising the question, that very word 'I', reveals the presence of non-material Consciousness. This topic is discussed by the Aachaaryaa later.

(Having raised the topic here, Swamiji adds a further note. He stretches out his palm and remarks: "Here there are two objects – my hand and the sunlight. If the light is not there, obviously, the hand, by itself, will not be perceived. In the same manner, if the hand is not there, the presence of the light also cannot be appreciated or recognized. Therefore, if one recognizes the light and the hand, it is because of the presence of the mixture. How does one present the concept? The presentation is very important, which goes as this: 'the light reveals the hand, by illumining the hand. Light is also revealed by the hand – not by the hand illumining the light but by manifesting the light. Light illumines the hand ; hand manifests the light'. In the same manner, Consciousness illumines the mind; but, the mind is also very much required, not to reveal the Consciousness but to manifest the Consciousness. Both are required – mind is required to manifest Consciousness and Consciousness is required to experience the mind. The 'phenomenon of getting manifested' is called 'abhivyakthi:' and the 'phenomenon of getting illumined' as 'prakaasaa'; saakshi's abhivyakthi is because of the mind; the mind's prakaasaa is because of saakshi. Therefore, when the word 'I' is used, in that word 'I', the mind is experienced and saakshi is revealed / manifested. The manifested/ revealed saakshi is lakshyaartha and the experienced mind is vaachyaartha, of the word 'I'. In the example, the sunlight is manifested by the hand – if the hand were not there, the presence of sunlight would not have been appreciated; the hand helps you to recognize the sunlight. Sunlight is lakshyaartha, while the hand is vaachyaartha, when you recognize the presence of the hand in the light". In Adhyaasa Bhashyam – Rathna Prabha Teeka, this idea is beautifully brought out.)

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 108:

सर्वकारकक्रियाफलविभागात्मकसंसारशून्य आत्मेति कारकक्रियाफलविभागसाक्षित्वादात्मनस्तदाह ।

As the Self is the witness of the distinctions like (1) the factors of action (2) the action and (3) the results of action, he is free from the relative existence consisting of these distinctions of the causal factors, action and results. That point is stated now:

The entire material thriputi is recognized because of the non-material medium of all-pervading Consciousness. At the same time, this non-material medium is 'manifest' only because of the material thriputi – just as the sunlight is manifest because of the hand (in the example earlier cited). In the absence of a reflecting medium, sunlight cannot be perceived; in pure space, the sunlight will be 'pervading'; but, in that pure space, where there is no reflecting medium, sunlight cannot be 'perceived'. In the same manner, even if 'matter' is not there, Consciousness will 'exist'; but, 'cannot be manifested'.

Consciousness is the light-like, space-like medium, in which thriputi rises and therefore the life-process is going on – in fact, going on and on. Even during pralaya, the 'switching-off' (of the thriputi) is not permanent; it is only temporary, as the 2nd verse of Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram indicates: "Bheejasyaantharivaankuro jagadhidham praanghnirvikalpam puna: mayaakalpithadesakaalalalanaa vaichithriyachithrekrutham" etc. - "The Universe, which, before Creation remains unmanifest like the future tree in a seed and is again projected as the world of endless variety, due to the delusory play of time and space" etc.

Sureswaraachaaryaa warns: "Do not identify with any one member of the arriving and departing thriputi." If you do, life will become a struggle or at the least, a monotony. After fifty or sixty years, life will become a burden and you may either question 'why this life at all?' and even pray to God to end your life sooner than later. Such attitudes result because of absorption in the thriputi. Therefore, one should 'stand aloof' from thriputi - of course, not physically, which is impossible – but 'cognitively'; i.e. the 'standing aloof' is only an 'awareness' or a 'cognitive process'.

As verse 28 – Chapter III of the Bhagavadh Githa proclaims “Guna karma vibhaaghayo: thathvavith gunaa: guneshu varthanthe ithi mathvaa na sajjathe” – “the knower of the truth of gunaas and their functions remains detached with the understanding that gunaas (sense organs) function among gunaas (sense objects)”.

“Let the jaagrath avasthaa, with its problems or the svapnaa avsthaa, with its problems come. Allow them to continue, but, claim the fact “‘I’ am that medium in which all these are possible; but, ‘I’ am nithya asamsaaree saakshi aathmaa asm’. Why can’t you come to this ‘binary’ format?; how long are you going to continue in the ‘triangular’ format, with the attitude “I am victimized; the world is the victimizer ; Bhagavaan is the saviour?” - wonders the Aachaaryaa.

- सर्व कारक क्रिया फल विभागात्मक संसार – The (relative) existence consisting of the distinctions of causal factors, actions and results.

‘Kaarakaad’ means the ‘various accessories responsible for action / transactions – in the forms of ‘subject’, ‘object’, ‘instruments’, ‘location’ etc.’

The kaarakaas are responsible for kriyaas. Every transaction is born out of kaarakam; kaarakam is the parent and kriyaa is the child.

When the jaagrath avasthaa comes, all the accessories also – subject, object, instrument etc. – arrive, resulting in transactions (kriyaas); the transactions / actions, in turn, result in varieties of painful and pleasurable experiences, which Sureswaraachaaryaa calls palam.

Kaarakaa produces kriyaa and kriyaa produces palam. Palam is thus the ‘grandchild’ of kaarakaas.

All the three – the kaarakaas, kriyaas and palaani - fall in thriputi.

And, this cycle of karaka-kriyaa-palaani alone is called samsaaraa. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa calls it ‘kaaraka kriyaa pala vibhaagaathmaka samsaaraa’.

And, why is it called samsaaraa? ; because, it is in constant motion. There is no ‘rest’ in anaathmaa.

“Accepting the constant movement without expecting ‘rest’” (i.e. to continue in life, without complaining) is possible only when one is a saakshi nishta; when life becomes a ‘game’. Otherwise, life will become a bhaara: - a burden; that ‘burden’ is called samsaaraa. If, on the other hand, one can grow old, without considering life as a burden, that attitude itself is called moksha: /

And, Sureswaraacharya says that, that moksha is attainable by only one means – jnaanabalam.

- आत्मा (:जातव्य) इति :शून्य (सर्व कारक क्रिया फल विभागात्मक संसार)- (It should be understood) that Aathmaa is free from samsaara, (described here as karaka kriyaa pala vibhaagaathmakathmaka) – the thriputi. The word 'jnaathavya:' (or a verb 'jnaayathe') is to be supplied, to complete the sentence.

But, this statement should be properly understood. It does not mean that thriputi is physically eliminated by jnaanam – thriputi can never become absent, since it is material in nature and 'matter' can never be created nor destroyed. Since thriputi can never be destroyed, 'freedom from thriputi' is not 'physical removal' of thriputi but 'falsification' of thriputi - the understanding that thriputi is of the lower order of reality. Mithyaathva nischayaa is the 'removal' of thriputi. It is a cognitive process. Whatever is mithyaa, is 'as good as not existent'.

Assimilating the conviction " Thriputi can be and is experienced; but it is uncountable, because of its lower order of reality- mithyaathvam" is advaita siddhi: /

And, why do you say that " aathmaa is free from samsaara"?

Sureswaraacharya gives the reason:

- आत्मन :कारक क्रिया फल विभाग साक्षित्वात् - because aathmaa happens to be merely the (non-material) saakshi of the (material) karakakriyaapalaaathmaka samsaaraa.

Non-material 'witness' cannot be affected by 'material events', just as the 'illuminating medium' is not affected by the 'illuminated objects'. Soorya prakaasaa, the illuminating medium, spreads all over the illumined objects; but, the soorya prakaasa: is " acchedhya:, adhaahya:, akledhya:, asoshya:" | In the same manner, 'I' am chith prakaasa: and why should I be afraid of the 'drama' of life ? Why should I look for videha mukthi:?

Another example (for aathmaa) is aakaasa:, in which all material objects 'exist'; but, aakaasaa itself is not affected by the objects existing in the aakaasaa.

- तदाह - That point is stated now (in the verse that follows)

105. Chapter II, Verse 108 to 110 (09-08-2008)

Verse 108 – Chapter II:

ग्राहग्रहणग्राह्यविभागे योऽविभागवान् ।

हानोपादानयोस्साक्षी हानोपादानवर्जितः ॥ १०८ ॥

He who is undivided manifesting himself through the divisions of the apprehender, apprehension and apprehended and witnesses the acts of appropriation and rejection, transcends all appropriation and rejection.

Sureswaraachaaryaa is here pointing out that pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam – the thriputi – happens to be jadam by itself. Pramaathaa is the antha:karanam, which is jadam, pramaanam is the sense organs, which are also jadam and prameyam is the baahyaprapancham, which is also jadam.

All these three – the thriputi – are 'known' (experienced) and are active, only because of the non-material Conscious principle. This non-material Conscious principle is called the saakshi. And, the saakshi can be recognized in the pramaathaa, in the very word 'I' (as explained in the previous class).

Mind is illumined by the saakshi; therefore, the relationship between the mind and the saakshi is prakaasya-prakaasaka-sambhandhaa | The mind has to be illumined by saakshi, because mind is jadam and saakshi alone is svayam prakaasa: | But, at the same time, saakshi also, by itself, in the absence of mind, can never be recognized, as 'I am'. The mind is very much required for the 'manifestation' of the saakshi. Therefore, the relationship between the mind and saakshi is again (i.e. can also be termed) abhivyanjaka-abhivyangya-sambhandhaa. Mind is the 'manifestor' and the saakshi is 'manifested' because of the mind. Thus, saakshi requires the presence of the mind for its manifestation and the mind also requires saakshi, for its illumination.

Therefore, when the word 'I' is used, in that one word itself, saakshi is manifested by the mind and the mind is illumined by the saakshi. Both are simultaneously obtaining in the one word 'I' – just as (already quoted and explained in detail) in the one experience of an outstretched hand, the sunlight is 'manifested' by the hand (which gets illumined by the sunlight) and in the absence of the hand, the pure sunlight is not manifested by itself. Sunlight requires the hand for its manifestation, while the hand requires the sunlight for its illumination.

Therefore, when one uses the word 'I', one can either refer to the 'illumined' mind or to the 'manifested' saakshi. When the illumined mind is referred to, it is the vaachyaartham of the word 'aham'; and, when the manifested saakshi is referred to, by 'aham', it is the lakshyaartha of the word.

In the sushupthi avasthaa, the illumined mind is resolved. Then, what happens to the saakshi? Is it present or not? The answer: Saakshi is present; 'I', the saakshi is present, during sushupthi also; but, because of the absence of the mind, 'I', the saakshi, though present, is not in manifested form; but, continues as the pure Saakshi. Because it is not available in the manifest version, I cannot use the word 'I'.

And, Sureswaraachaaryaa is saying: "the aim of Vedhaantha is 'claiming the manifested saakshi in the 'I', as the sathyam and seeing the illumined mind, which is the pramaatha, as mithyaa' (because pramaatha is subject to arrival and departure experientially and anything subject to arrival and departure is negated by saasthraas as mithyaa) and further says "after falsifying the pramaatha, 'put on' the pramaatha for vyavahaaraa".

Elsewhere, the Aachaaryaa says: "Wear the ahamkaara kanchukam ('kanchukam' means 'coat') for transactions"; just as 'dressing' is required for coming out in public, 'I' requires the ahamkaaraa kanchukam to come out to jaagrath avasthaa.

For jaagrath avasthaa and jaagrath vyavaahaaraa, and also for svapna avasthaa and svapna vyavahaaraa, 'I' put on the ahamkaara kanchukam, while for and during sushupthi avasthaa, 'I' remove the ahamkaara kanchukam.

During sushupthi, 'I', the saakshi, am self-evidently present, though, to say "'I' am present", I need the ahamkaara kanchukam. In other words, to 'exist', 'I' do not require ahamkaaraa; but, to say that 'I' exist (even without ahamkaaraa), I require ahamkaaraa – the material mind, the pramaatha.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaarya says:

ग्राह ग्रहण ग्राह्य विभागे

- In the thriputi division of
 - (i) graahakam - the pramaatha antha:karanam,
 - (ii) grahanam – the pramaanam sense organs and
 - (iii) graahyam - the prameyam,

It should be remembered, that, the thriputi is jadam by itself; but, becomes chethanam, because of chidh aabhaasaa.

The three divisions obtain in all matter; the anaathmaa matter is divisible; but, the chaithanyam which is manifested in the thriputi does not have the division; the fingers (in the example of the outstretched hand) have the division; but, the sunlight which is manifested in the divided fingers, does not have divisions. In the same manner, the divisionless saakshi is manifested in the divided thriputi; but, the division does not belong to the saakshi chaithanyam.

- यः अविभागवान् - that, which is undivided,

If a question "am 'I' divided or undivided?" is asked, the answer will be "if, by the word 'I', it is the illumined mind that is referred to, then, 'I' am divided; but, if 'I' refers to the manifested saakshi, that saakshi is indivisible". Prakaasya antha:karanam is savibhaagam; abhivyaktha saakshi is nirvibhaaga: |

This divisionless saakshi is self-effulgently present during the arrival of thriputi in jaagrath and svapna and it continues even after the departure of thriputi. That is said in the second line (of the verse):

- हान उपादानयोः साक्षी – the chaithanyam, which is the 'witness' of the 'arrival and departure' of thriputi / 'presence and absence' of thriputi,

Haanam, literally means rejection; in this case, the word 'rejection' means abhaava: (since, when you reject something, it becomes abhaava:), or 'disappearance'. Upaadhaanam literally means 'taking' and in this context, 'taking' means bhaava: or 'arrival'.

"Haana upaadhaanayo:", therefore means "aagama apaayayo:" i.e., "arrival and departure" or "bhaava abhaavayo:" i.e., "presence and absence".

Of what? We have to supply "thriputi".

Chaithanyam is the 'witness' of the 'arrival and departure' of thriputi; and, it should be remembered, that, when the word 'witness' is used, it does not mean that chaithanyam is 'doing' the job of witnessing ; such a conclusion would lead to the misunderstanding that chaithanyam is kartha, pramaatha etc. The statement "Chaithanyam is witness" should be understood as meaning "In the presence of chithanyam, the inert thriputi gets witnessed". The description of chaithanyam as saakshi or 'witness' is thus only figurative. An example of such a situation: "When one's brother gets married, one becomes a brother-in-law or sister-in-law (as the case may be) without doing any action whatsoever. It is the brother who performs an act - the act of 'marrying', and his sibling gets the status of brother-in-law or sister-in-law, without doing any action". In the same manner, the chaithanyam / Consciousness becomes a saakshi, without any action, but, because of the inert thriputi getting witnessed, in the mere presence of Consciousness.

'I' am the saakshi of the arrival and departure of the thriputi. But, what about 'me'? The Aachaaryaa says: "the saakshi itself is not subject to arrival and/ or departure".

- हान उपादान वर्जितः - is (itself) free from arrival and departure.

Varjitha: - one free from.

The 'arrival-departure saakshi' is 'arrival-departure rahitha.' |

Suppose (purely academic) the sakshi itself has 'arrival and departure', what will be the consequence? In such a situation, the 'arrival and departure of the saakshi', will require another saakshi, whose 'arrival and departure' will require yet another saakshi and so on. There will be the problem of infinite regress. The Aachaaryaa refers to this fact, in another context, later.

"And, that saakshi, 'I' am".

Earlier also Sureswaraachaaryaa has discussed saakshi; here, in this portion also, the Aachaaryaa is again discussing saakshi. But, there is an important new addition here.

Previously the Aachaaryaa discussed the saakshi and thriputi, without talking about their 'orders of reality'; whereas, now, the discussion is going on with a new awareness, which is an extremely important awareness, that 'I', the saakshi, am sathyam and the thriputi / the material thriputi / the saakshya prapanchaa / the anaathma prapanchaa is mithyaa.

That's the reason why in spite of the so-called 'binary' format, 'I' remain advaitam. To repeat: "'I' remain advaitam, even in the so-termed 'binary' format, because, of the seemingly two components of the 'binary' format, one ('I', the saakshi) is sathyam and the other (the pramaathraadhi thriputi) is mithyaa (which is as good as non-existent)".

The thriputi is only a vesham for the drama to go on; and 'I', the saakshi, provide the screen for the thriputi drama to go on and on and on.

And, if one asks "when will the drama stop?" (i.e. if one seriously yearns for the cessation of the drama) it only means that one has unfortunately and wrongly attributed reality to the thriputi. Once one has the wisdom, that the thriputi is only mithyaa, one will have no hesitation at all in allowing the drama to go on forever.

And, the firm conviction, that, "That sathya saakshi aham asmI" is "naishkarmya siddhi:"

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 109:

ग्राहकादिनिष्ठैव ग्राहकादिभावविभागसिद्धिः कस्मान्नेति चेत्तदाह ।

Why should not the being and non-being of these divisions, the knower, the knowing and the object of knowledge be regarded as cognizable by these factors themselves? It is said in reply:

Here, Sureswaraacharya is introducing a poorva pakshaa. What is that poorva pakshaa?

The poorva pakshin questions: "Why cannot the thriputi itself know the arrival and departure of the thriputi? Why do you introduce a saakshi outside the thriputi, to illumine the arrival and departure of the thriputi?"

Thriputi, of course, in this context, means pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam.

"Since the thriputi itself has the resources to 'know', i.e., since it is the pramaathaa antha:karanam, which is responsible for ghata jnaanam, pata jnaanam, vraksha jnaanam etc., in fact, including vedhaantha jnaanam also – i.e., since thriputi is capable of knowing all forms of knowledge – paraa and aparaavidhyaa - why can't that thriputi itself 'know' the arrival and departure of the thriputi?" is the question raised by the poorva pakshin.

Sureswaraacharya takes up this question for answering. The poorva pakshin's question is given in this introduction (sambhandha gadhyam).

- ग्राहकादि भाव अभाव विभाग सिद्धिः - The proof of the two conditions – the presence/ arrival of the thriputi and the absence / departure of the thriputi

The two different conditions, viz., the presence / arrival and the absence/ departure is called 'Bhaava abhaava vibhaaga', which can also be termed 'aagamaa apaaya vibhaaga'

'Siddhi:' means 'proof' or 'knowledge'.

'Graahakaad' means 'pramaathaa' and 'aadhi' means 'etc.'. Therefore, 'graahakaadhi' means 'pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam' - the 'thriputi'.

- ग्राहकादि निष्ठा एव) भवतु(- Let it (thriputi bhaava abhaava siddhi:) be known / proved by the thriputi itself.

`GraahakaadhI, as before, means `thriputI.

`Nishtaad' (bhavathu) means 'let it be present'.

What should be present? The thriputi bhaava abhaava siddhi:|

"Let the power of proving the absence of thriputi, be vested in the thriputi itself" is the literal meaning of the statement, while, the essence is "why can't thriputi know its absence?" This is similar to asking the question "why can't I know my absence?"; the fallacy in the question is obvious; "if, I am there to know my absence, it is not my absence".

- कस्मात् - Why is it not possible?
- इति चेत् - If this question is asked,
- तद् आह - the author gives the answer (in verse 109).

`ThadhI means (in this context) `thadh uttharamI.

Verse 109 – Chapter II:

स्वसाधनं स्वयं नष्टो न नाशं वेत्त्यभावतः।

अत एव न चान्येषामतोऽसौ भिन्नसाक्षिकः ॥ १०९ ॥

None of these factors can know how it is brought about and that it is destroyed, because, before its origin and after its destruction, it is not there to know. For the same reason it cannot know the origin and destruction of other factors. Therefore every one of them must be known by a witness other than itself.

What is the question? "Why cannot the thriputi know its own absence, without a saakshi?"

We have previously proved that thriputi cannot know even its presence, without a saakshi. Such being the case, where is the question of thriputi knowing its absence?

When thriputi cannot know even its presence without the saakshi, because, as already explained, in the absence of the sentient saakshi, thriputi, being jadam by itself (jadathvaath) cannot know its presence, even during its existence, Kaimuthika nyaayena, how can it know its absence?

Then, if subsequent question "Granting that thriputi cannot know itself, why cannot thriputi know its presence with chidhaabhaasa? Why is the saakshi required?" is raised, the obvious answer "the very chidhaabhaasaa is itself present, only because of saakshi", makes the question absurd.

Without saakshi, chidhaabhaasaa cannot come into existence. Without saakshi and chidhaabhaasaa, thriputi cannot know its presence. When thriputi cannot know its presence, how can it know its absence? This is argument no. 1 – "jadathvaath".

What is the second argument? Nobody or nothing can know his/her or its absence. Because, if somebody has to know his/her absence, he/she will have to be present, as the 'knower' to know his / her absence. And, if that somebody is present as 'knower', obviously he or she is not absent.

In Advaita Makaranthaa, there is a brilliant argument: "Na cha svajanma naasam vaa dhrashtum arhathi kaschana dhau hi praag uttharaa abhaava charama prathama kshanau" etc.

The theory to be proved is Nothing can know its birth and death. "Svasya (mama) janma and svasya (mama) naasaa, I do not know; because, once I am dead, I am not there to know my death and before my birth also, I am not there to know my birth".

To convey this idea, the author defines 'birth' and 'death' in a remarkable and unique manner. Birth of a person is defined by him, as 'the last moment of the prior non-existence of the person'. To explain: Before the person's birth, the person is absent. The absence before birth is called 'prior non-existence'. Then, what is birth, according to the author? When the 'prior non-existence' ends, that ending moment of the 'prior non-existence' is defined by him as 'birth' - "Praag abhaava charama kshana: janma" – "the last moment of the prior non-existence".

In the same manner, 'death' is "the first moment of the posterior non-existence".

Suppose, I want to witness my birth (the word I, in this context is not the sachhidhaananda aathmaa - the Witness Consciousness – but only the laukika / mundane 'myself'). This means that I should witness the 'last moment of my prior non-existence'. But, only if I am capable of witnessing my prior non-existence, I can witness 'the last moment of my prior non-existence' viz. my 'birth'.

Lakshmidhara kavi, the aacharya of Advaita Makaranthaa points out: (going step by step)" It is common sense that, I cannot witness my own non- existence; that means, I cannot witness my prior non-existence; that means, I cannot witness the last moment of my prior non-existence; therefore, I can never, never talk about witnessing my birth."

That means 'my birth' is never proved by my 'witness'ing it; one may celebrate one's birthday; even the birthday of a sanyaasi jnaani may be celebrated by his 'ignorant' devotees, in their enthusiasm, as jayanthi or vardhanthi. But, in the vision of the jnaani himself: "I have never witnessed my birth; therefore, I am never born".

In the same manner, "I cannot witness my non-existence; therefore, I cannot witness my posterior non-existence; therefore, I cannot witness the first moment of my posterior non-existence; therefore, I cannot witness my death also".

Therefore, the 'witness' of the arrival and departure of a given object has to be only something other than the object; the object itself cannot 'witness' its own arrival and departure.

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says (in verse 109):

- स्वसाधनं स्वयं न वेत्ति - The thriputi cannot know its own origination/ arrival, by itself;

In this context, the word saadhanam means uthpatthi: or janma. Svasaadhanam means 'its own origination / arrival'.

- नाशं वा (स्वयं न वेत्ति - the thriputi cannot know its own departure (also), by itself.;
Svayam is adverbial, qualifying the verb vetthi.

Why (cannot thriputi know its departure)? Because:

- स्वयं नष्ट) :सन्(- because of itself being gone (after its departure);
- अभावतः - and, because, it is absent (before its arrival)

Before its arrival, it is not there and after its departure also, it is not there .Then, how can it witness its birth or death?

In sushupthi avasthaa, thriputi cannot talk about the absence of thriputi. So also, in samaadhi avasthaa or moorchaa etc., thriputi cannot talk about the absence of thriputi.

It follows, therefore, that, there is 'something' other than the thriputi, standing witness to the arrival and departure of thriputi, which 'something' is called saakshi.

In sushupthi, what we experience is the nirvikalpaka saakshi thathvam alone. But, to say that "I am the saakshi", you require the pramaathaa, which obtains only in savikalapka jaagrath avasthaa.

That's why, it is said, that, in nirvikalpaka samaadhi, knowledge cannot be attained. Knowledge requires pramaathaa; nirvikalpaka samaadhi itself means "the pramaathraadhi-thriputi is resolved". Then, how can one talk of anyone attaining jnaanam in nirvikalpaka samaadh?

Jnaanam has to be gained only in savikalpaka jaagrath avasthaa, when guru is available and saasthram is available and when I have to declare "that saakshi, which I experienced in sushupthi avasthaa is my svaroopam and this ahamkaaraa, which I am using for vyavahaaraa is only incidental kanchukam".

- अतः एव – Therefore only,
- अन्येषां (साधनं नाशं) च न (वेत्ति) - any one of the thriputi cannot know the presence or absence of the other two also.

To explain: When pramaathaa is resolved, pramaathaa cannot know the abhaavaa of pramaathaa itself, because it is not there to know its absence. Sureswaraachaaryaa extends this: "Just as pramaathaa cannot know pramaathru abhaava after it has resolved, the resolved pramaathaa cannot talk about the pramaanaa abhaavaa and the prameya abhaavaa also". In short, it (resolved pramaathaa) cannot know the bhaavaa or abhaavaa of the other two (pramaanam and prameyam) also.

Atha: eva anyeshaam (bhaavaabhaavau) na vetthi |

अतः - Therefore,

What is the conclusion?

"This thriputi cannot know the absence of thriputi; at the same time, the absence of thriputi is known or experienced by me in sushupthi avasthaa; therefore, it should be and is witnessed by someone / something other than the thriputi, which someone / something is called saakshi, obtaining in sushupthi (also)".

- असौ - This thriputi

For referring to thriputi, Sureswaraachaaryaa has been using the word 'grahakaadhī' meaning 'pramaathaā' etc. 'Asau', in this context, is the pronoun indicating 'grahakaadhī' (being the same gender as grahakaadhī) or 'thriputī'.

- भिन्न साक्षिकः - has someone (other than thriputi), as the saakshi / illuminator.

And, that saakshi experience we do have in the sushupthi avasthaa, of course, not experiencing it in the form of thriputi, i.e. not as "I am the experiencer of saakshi". Sushupthi anubhavaa / nirvikalpaka anubhavaa / thriputi rahitha anubhavaa is there for everybody; that alone is saakshi anubhavaa, and, therefore, nobody can be said to lack saakshi anubhavaa.

Our problem is that we have taken the saakshi as one of the things in the Creation. Vedhaantha wants to say that "Saakshi is not one of the things; it is the only thing". (But, of course, to make this statement, we require jaagrath avasthaa).

The purpose of Vedhaantha saasthraa is not to give the seeker the experience of saakshi; but it is meant to negate everything else as mithyaa.

Saakshi bhinnasya mithyaathva nischayaartham / saakshya nishedhaartham eva saasthram |
"Yannethi nethi vachanai: nigamaa: avochu:"- (Praatha: smaranam) |

The seeker need not work for saakshi anubhavaa, since he is always getting it; he has to work only for saakshya nishedhaa.

Unfortunately, Mithyaathva nischaya: is difficult, since we do intensely face and feel samsaaraa and its consequential problems and emotions. In fact, mithyaathva nischaya: is tougher than advaita nischaya: |

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 110:

ग्राहकादेरन्यसाक्षिपूर्वकत्वसिद्धेः स्वस्साक्षिणोऽप्यन्यसाक्षिपूर्वकत्वादनवस्थेति चेत्तन्न साक्षिणो व्यतिरिक्तहेत्वनपेक्षत्वादत आह ।

It may be argued that as the factors like the knower become known by another witness, the witness also is to be known by another witnessing agency. In that case, an infinite regress results. In reply, it has to be pointed out that the truth is not so, because the witness does not stand in need of a witness other than itself. This is said in the following:

The poorva pakshin is raising another question, based on this statement (asau bhinaa saakshika:).

"If the thriputi or pramaathaa requires a saakshi to prove itself (its presence and absence), then will not that saakshi require some other principle to know its presence? If ahamkaaraa requires saakshi, will not saakshi require another saakshi?"

What is the answer? Pramaathaa requires a saakshi to prove itself and others, since pramaathaa is the mind, which is jadam by itself; and because of its jadathvam, the insentient mind has to 'borrow' chidhaabhaasaa and with the help of the borrowed chidhabhaasaa alone, it has to prove itself and others. And, therefore, it requires the sentient saakshi to lend it the required chidhaabhaasaa. In short, pramaathaa requires saakshi because of its insentient nature - "Pramaathu: jadathvaath".

(This may give rise to a couple of questions: First question: Kasmaath pramaathu: jadathvam? Answer: Pramaathu: antha:karana roopathvaath.

Further question: Anath:karanasya jadathvam kasmaath? Answer: Bhaudhikathvaath and savikaarathvaath.

'Bhaudhikathvam' means 'born out of pancha bhoothaas'; in addition, the pramaathaa is savikaaram – subject to change also).

On the other hand, saakshi will not require another saakshi to prove itself; because, unlike pramaathaa, saakshi (being chidh roopa:) happens to be svayam prakaasa: |

Not knowing this difference, between pramaathaa and saakshi, viz., the 'Pramaathu: jadathvam' and 'saakshina: ajadathvam', the poorva pakshin raises this doubt.

- ग्राहकादेःसिद्धिः - "The proof / evidence of the thriputi
- अन्य साक्षि पूर्वकत्वात् - is because of some other external witness, an external witness other than the thriputi.

This wonderful compound word 'ग्राहकादेरन्यसाक्षिपूर्वकत्वसिद्धेः' has been recast, as a separate sentence above, for easier understanding.

(In an aside, Swamiji refers to how each sentence in Sanskrit, is to be analyzed by a serious student of Sanskrit grammar, the practice of which analysis will culminate in Sanskrit jnaana nishtaa - a thorough knowledge of the language - and jocularly remarks 'the saving grace is that, for attainment of mokshaa, the seeker does not require Sanskrit jnaana nishtaa, but only aathma jnaana nishtaa.)

The essence of this portion (part of the question of the poorva pakshin): "Since the thriputi requires an external saakshi to prove its presence and absence, therefore":

- स्वसाक्षिणः अपि अन्यसाक्षिपूर्वकत्वात् - (Then) the saakshi also must be proved by another saakshi.

(The compound word 'स्वसाक्षिणोऽप्यन्यसाक्षिपूर्वकत्वात्' has also been recast, as a separate sentence, for easier understanding.)

- अनवस्था - In that case, there will be infinite regress".

This is the poorva pakshin's contention. His stand is that, " Since the existence or absence of thriputi is to be proved only by a saakshi, the saakshi also will not be proved without another saakshi to prove it; i.e., to prove the first saakshi, you require a second saakshi; if this is not accepted, the first saakshi will not be proved. On the other hand, if the necessity of a second saakshi to prove the first saakshi, is accepted, then a third saakshi will be required to prove the second saakshi and this will go on and on".

- इति चेत् - If such a question is asked (the Achaaryaa replies),
- तद् न – it is not true.

Because:

- साक्षिणः - For the saakshi,
- व्यतिरिक्त हेतु अनपेक्षत्वात् – the need of a witness, other than itself, is not there.

In this context, hethu: (normally meaning cause / reason) can be interpreted as saakshi.

In other words: "Saakshi no. 1 does not require saakshi no. 2, to prove it".

Why not? What is the logic? Saakshi is chaithanya roopam. On the other hand, pramaathaa is jada antha:karana roopam and, therefore, requires saakshi.

"Vyathiriktha hethu:" means "another saakshi" and "anapekshathvaaath" means "since not required".

अतः आह - Therefore, the author is making the following statement.

106. Chapter II, Verse 110 to 112 (16-08-2008)

Verse 110 – Chapter II:

धीवन्नापेक्षते सिद्धिमात्मान्यस्मादविक्रियः।

निरपेक्षमपेक्षैव सिद्ध्यन्त्यन्ये न तु स्वयम् ॥ ११० ॥

Unlike the mind which requires to be established by an external agency, the unchanging Self does not require another witnessing agency to become established. Others get established through the Self, which Self itself is independent of such presuppositions and does not require another to establish it.

Sureswaraachaarya is raising the level of teaching very gradually. As a first step, he raised the student, from the triangular format of jeeva, jagath and Isvara, to the level of the binary format of aathmaa and anaathmaa - but to the binary format of the saamkhyaa philosophers. Similar to the Vedhaanthaa philosopher, the Saamkyaa philosopher also talks about aathmaa and anaathamaa and of the clear distinction between the two – i.e., between Consciousness and Matter.

Modern scientists have not yet accomplished this, since they are not able to understand where the Consciousness should be located – whether it should be a part of Matter or a product of Matter etc. They are not able to decipher at all, what this Consciousness is.

But, the Saamkyaa philosopher, by sheer logic, has succeeded in separating Consciousness and Matter and arriving at the binary format, which, in itself, is a remarkable achievement. But, because he relies more heavily on logic and much less on Vedhaanthaa, he has committed two blunders, in spite of arriving at the binary format.

One of the blunders he has committed is: "considering the aathmaas as many" – that, each individual has a separate Consciousness, each experiencing the anaathma prapanchaa. He has thus caused a 'division' in Consciousness. It is perfectly in order to assume 'divisions' in Matter, because, Matter is savikalpam and is divisible. But, making a similar division in aathmaa is a blunder. The result is that 'I' become a localized witness. The discovery, that "'I' am a witness" is a great discovery; but, "localizing 'I'" i.e. "making 'I', 'one of the witnesses'" is a blunder.

The second and the greater blunder of the saamkyaa philosopher is that he gives the same order of reality to Consciousness and Matter, overlooking the fact, that, once they have the same order of reality, one will influence the other. Mutual influence cannot be avoided, if both of them belong to the same plane. Therefore, in saamkyaa philosophy, the aathmaa can never be totally free.

Since, there are, thus, two blunders in the saamkyaa binary format, the Aachaaryaa, after coming to saamkyaa binary format as an intermediary step, is now shifting from the saamkyaa binary format, to the Vedhaanthic binary format, when alone Advaita siddhi will take place.

Once the seeker comes to Vedhaanthic binary format, he should first understand that anaathmaa consists of thriputi – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam. Pramaathaa is the 'mind', pramaanam is the sense organs and prameyam is the world. All these three – mind, sense and world – should be bracketed by the seeker as one unit and understood as anaathmaa, and, thereafter, (it should be understood) that, 'I', the observing Consciousness can never be pluralistic, because plurality of the Consciousness, is possible only if Consciousness exists within space. Space is included in anaathmaa, since space is one of the pancha bhoothaas. 'I' am the observing Consciousness, who am 'outside' space / not falling within space; and therefore 'I' cannot be divided into many. "I am non-dual Witness".

The second important point to be noted, is, that, anaathmaa has to be of a lower order of reality, since, if anaathmaa and aathmaa belong to the same order of reality, aathmaa will be subject to the influence of time, space and causation.

To sum up, in the Vedhaanthic binary format, "I am of a higher order of reality, 'witnessing' the thriputi lower order".

Jnaana vyavahaara and karma vyavahaaraa are taking place in the thriputi alone, while 'I' am not affected by either of the vyavahaaraas – 'I' am avyavahaaryam; "na antha: pragnyam, na bahi: pragnyam, na pragnyaana ganam, avyavahaaryam", as the Maandookya Upanishad declares. Then alone can 'I' claim liberation, even as 'I' am witnessing all vyavahaaraa - all knowledge transactions as well as karma transactions. "Let all transactions continue".

Emotional upheavals also are only part of jnaana-karma-vyavahaaraa and belong to anaathmaa. I am not to judge myself based on the emotional ups and downs ; but, should learn to just 'watch' the emotional upheavals and even at that time, practice to claim that 'I' am only the witness of even these events, which events belong to the thriputi anaathmaa only. But, of course, I have to use the mind to say that "I am not the mind". Thus, mind is an instrument of pramaathaa also ; mind is an instrument of the saakshi also; therefore, 'I', the saakshi, use the mind to claim that 'I' am neither the mind nor the emotional upheavals which are taking place as part of the anaathmaa journey.

The transition from saamkyaa binary format to this Vedhaantaa binary format, in which format, I claim, "aham sathyam thriputi mithyaa", is the current topic that is being dealt with, by Sureswaraachaaryaa.

Therefore, he says (in verse 110):

- अविक्रियः - The changeless / absolute
- आत्मा - self-revealing, 'I' the Consciousness principle,
- न अपेक्षते - does not require / depend on
- सिद्धिम् - a proof for its existence / revelation
- अन्यस्मात् - from any extraneous factor (in the form of pramaathaa/ pramaanam/prameyam),

Worldly objects require thriputi operations to prove their existence; saakshi does not require thriputi operation to prove its existence. On the other hand, thriputi operation itself is proved only because of the Consciousness medium. The non-localized Consciousness medium alone reveals the thriputi vyavahaaraa.

"Avikriya: aathmaa anyasmaath pramaana vyavahaaraaath siddhim na apekshathe".

Then, how am 'I' proved? Ans: 'I' am self-evident.

When am 'I' proved? Ans: Once 'I' am said to be self-evident, 'I' stand proved 'all the time'.

As has been seen before, in jaagrath avasthaa, the thriputi rises in 'me' and 'I' illumine the thriputi and its vyavahaaraa ; in svapna avasthaa, another type of thriputi arises and 'I' illumine the svapna thriputi and svapna vyavahaara ; in sushupthi avasthaa , thriputi is resolved and there is no vyavahaara; but, 'I' continue to exist as the generalized saamaanya saakshi chaithanyam. But, in sushupthi, 'I' cannot claim "'I' am the saakshi", because, to make this claim, I need the arrival of thriputi. In other words: to exist, 'I' do not require thriputi ; but, to claim 'my' existence, I require thriputi.

'Mind' is counter-example (i.e. 'unlike', not 'similar to'), since the mind cannot reveal itself (the reason being that mind is jadam, in nature).

The Aachaaryaa, therefore, makes a general rule: "Any dependent entity will have to depend upon an entity, which itself has to be independent, since, if that is also dependent, it will again require yet another entity to depend on".

Between the mind and the saakshi, mind is dependent and saakshi is independent.

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- अन्ये सिद्ध्यन्ति – Everything else (apart from saakshi) proves its existence, 'Everything else' means: pramaathaa – the mind , pramaanam - the senses and prameyam- the world.
- निरपेक्षं (साक्षिणं) अपेक्ष्य - depending upon the independent saakshi.

'Nirapeksha:' means 'independent entity' and in this context, refers to saakshi. Nirgathaa apekshaa yasmaath sa: - Nirapeksha: | Tham – nirapeksham |

It should be clearly understood, that 'independent', in this context, means 'independent with regard to the revelation of its existence'. The saakshi does not depend upon anything else to prove its existence; it is self-evident.

- न तु स्वयं – But the Self itself does not (require any external factor, as it is self- evident).

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 111:

यतो ग्राहकादिष्व्वात्मभावोऽविध्यानिबन्धन एव तस्मादन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां विभज्यानात्मनः स्वयम् ।

The self-hood of the empirical knower etc., is grounded in nescience. Therefore, through reasoning, all such phenomena must be separated from the Self:

And, therefore, "raising our level" is "learning to distance 'myself' from the thriputi". The 'distancing' is not 'physical' distancing, since, 'I', the aathmaa cannot physically go away anywhere, obviously because 'I' am all-pervading.

The 'distancing' has to be done in a unique manner, similar to 'space' which 'distances' itself from the transactions of the world. Space remains 'asangha:', whatever event happens in it. The word 'distancing' stands for 'asangathvam', in this context, i.e. the word is used here, to mean 'not getting affected by / influenced by any thriputi event'.

"Learn to see yourself as the space-like Consciousness, which Consciousness accommodates thriputi, but, is not influenced by the thriputi events".

When the word thriputi (pramaathru-pramaana-prameyaani) is used, though the term itself may appear insignificant and simple, it should be understood to include the entire akhilaanda koti brahmaanda. Even the farthest galaxy is one of the prameya vasthus and falls within the thriputi only. The only difference is that the pramaathaa component of the thriputi happens to be 'closer' (as it were) and the prameyam component of the thriputi is 'farther' (as it were) but, closer or farther, the whole thriputi is anaathmaa and 'one of the bubbles' existing in me. The use of the word 'one', (in 'one of the bubbles'), is significant because svapna prapancha is 'another' thriputi, in which also there is another 'time, space and cosmos'.

According to saasthraas, there are fourteen lokaas and each one is a relative universe, having its own distinct thriputi; but, all the lokaas of the akhilaanda koti brahmaandaa are like bubbles existing in 'me', the chaithanyam. I should make the claim that "I am the chaithanyam, in which these 'bubbles' appear and disappear".

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa declares in his treatise Aathma Bodhaa – "Upaadhaane akhilaadhaare jaganthi paramesware sargasthithilayaan yaanthi budhbudhaaneeva vaarini" (Verse 8) – "Like bubbles in water, the worlds arise from, exist in and dissolve into the supreme Lord (Brahman or aathmaa), who is the material cause and supporter of everything".

A Vedhaanthic seeker should internalize this view, that, "all the fourteen lokaas are like bubbles, existing in the medium of chaithanyam, which chaithanyam 'I' am". Therefore, the seeker should practice the nidhidhyaasanam "mayyeva sakalam jaatham mayi sarvam prathistitham mayi sarvam layam yaathi thadh brahmaadvayamasmyaham" (kaivalya upaniashad- verse 19) – "Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything resolves into me alone. I am that non-dual Brahman)" |

An important result of such an approach/ attitude is, that, what appear as major problems in worldly life, would "disappear into thin air".

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says:

- आत्मभावः - Identification
- ग्राहकादिषु - in the thriputi,

As explained earlier, 'grahakaad' means 'pramaathaad' and 'grahakaadh' means 'pramaathraadh' or 'thriputi'.

'Grahakaadhishu aathma bhaava.' means 'notion that 'I' am one of the thriputi'.

The moment 'identification' with thriputi comes, the triangular format, viz., "I am the victimized; the world is the victimizer and God is the savior" results.

- अविध्या निबन्धनएव : - is because of self- ignorance;
- यतः - therefore,
- अन्वयव्यतिरेखाभ्यां - by repeatedly employing the anvaya vyathirekha method,

Using the anvaya vyathirekha method, the seeker sees the thriputi, as one 'arriving and departing' and the 'Self' as one 'non-arriving and non-departing' and further that "whatever is 'arriving and departing' is not 'me'. It is only incidental adhyasaa upon 'me'".

"Understanding this adhyasthaa nature of the thriputi" is achieved by the anvaya vyathirekha method.

- अनात्मनः स्वयम् विभज्य - (the seeker) should learn to stand aloof from the thriputi (the seeker) should separate the thriputi from the Self.

This 'standing aloof' or 'separation' cannot be practiced when there are serious problems, because, during such situations, the mind will be under the control of the pramaathaa i.e. the ahamkaaraa. The individuality and the problems will take hold of the mind, which, therefore, will not be available for the saakshi's use, since, ahamkaaraa and saakshi cannot use the mind simultaneously. Therefore, if one has to entertain the thought 'I do not have problems' even during problems, one has to repeatedly practice the thought when there are no problems or relatively less problems. During such periods, the mind will not be dominated by ahamkaaraa and will be available for saakshi's use; this available mind should be used to convince oneself that one can never have problems, which repeated 'thought' or 'claim' will enter one's subconscious mind and help during times of crisis, with the conviction "I have no problems; the crisis belongs to the anaathma; 'I' am only the witness of the crisis; and witness of the crisis is free from the crisis". This is called nidhidhyaasanam process – practicing the binary format meditation.

What is the 'nidhidhyaasanam'? It follows in the verse.

Chapter II : Verse 111 –

उत्पत्तिस्थितिनाशेषु योऽवगत्यैव वर्तते ।

जगतोऽविकारयावेहि तमस्मीति न नश्वरम् ॥ १११ ॥

He who remains through the origin, continuance and cessation of the world, in the form of unchanging awareness must be understood as the Self, as 'I am he'. Do not think of yourself as any of these transient factors.

What is talked about is the 'internalization' of the binary format.

- यः - "He (indicates saakshi in this context), who
- अवगत्या एव वर्तते – always remains in the form of chaithanya roopam,

Avagathi – chaithanyam ; avagathyaa - chaithanya roopena / saakshi roopena ; varthathe - remains all the time.

- अविकार्यो – changelessly (adjective to avagathyaa),

Chaithanyam remains as the changeless medium, like the soorya prakaasaa, the medium of light, in which different events happen illumined by the light, but the soorya prakaasaa itself does not undergo any change.

Consciousness is a medium similar to space or light, in 'asangathvam' and 'avikaaryathvam'.

Saakshi does not remain chaithanya roopena only, but, saththaaropena and aananda roopena also. Those two aspects are set aside for the present and the concentration, in the text, at the moment, is on the chith aspect alone, though the seeker is expected to ever remember the Thaithreeya Upanishad Brahmaananda Valli declaration – "aananda aathmaa".

Whenever anyone, at any given moment, complains about the absence of aanandaa, the complaint can be and is about the absence of only the 'reflected aanandaa in the mind'. It is an unfortunate and inevitable fact of creation, that, the mind cannot and does not have the 'reflected aanandaa' all the time. Availability of 'experiential aanandaa' fluctuates widely and is heavily dependent on praarabhdtaa also. Vedhaantha never promises this prathibhimbhaa aanandaa ; the Vedhaanthic seeker is not expected to work for prathibhimbhaa aanandaa; but should realize and claim " 'I' am the bhimbha aanandaa itself, which is not an object of 'experience', but, 'myself' ".

The saakshi remains avagathi roopena and aananda roopena. When? Sarvadhaa – all the time.

- उत्पत्ति स्थिति नाशेषु – during the times of srishti, sthithi and pralayam – creation, existence and dissolution,
- जगतः - of the entire cosmos including all the akhilaanda lokaas,

This means: "I should look upon the very creation as a temporary event in 'me' and, as a consequence, should not be averse to allow the event to continue".

This is the real mokshaa, and not what is more commonly believed to be mokshaa, viz. "escape from this birth, never to be born again".

The prayer to Ishvara, "Oh! Lord! This must be my last birth and after this life, I should never be born again" is very immature, from a Vedhaanthic viewpoint, though pardonable and acceptable at the adhyaaropa stage - the period of self-ignorance and triangular format. But, an advanced and informed Vedhaanthic seeker should eschew this prayer, with the realization "worlds appear and disappear only 'in' 'me'", as declared by the Kaivalya Upanishad (quoted already): "Mayyeva sakalam jaatham, mayi sarvam prathishtitham, mayi sarvam layam yaath'" (verse 19) – "Everything is born in me alone; everything is based on me alone; everything resolves into me alone. I am that non-dual Brahman".

'During all the three periods of uthpatthi, sthithi and naasam of the entire world', which expression means 'all the time', saakshi remains changelessly in the form of chaithanyam.

But, the Achaaryaa is worried that, when this statement viz., 'saakshi remains all the time, changelessly in the form of chaithanyam' is made, the student may react "saakshi may be free; but, I am miserable". And, therefore, hastens to point out:

- तं साक्षिणं (अहं (अस्मि " - that saakshi, I am")
- इति त्वं अवेहि - thus, may you repeatedly meditate upon and internalize;

This – the binary format - should be the mindset of the Vedhaanthic seeker. Lord Krishna calls it saamkhyaa bhaavanaa, in the Bhagavadh Githa, in contrast to the karma yoga bhaavanaa or triangular format.

- न नश्वरम् - never claim the temporarily available pramaathaa mind as yourself.

'Nasvaram' means 'temporary' or 'transitory' and indicates the mind, in this context, since, the mind is available only in jaagrath avasthaa and not in sushupthi avasthaa, and is therefore 'temporary' or 'transitory'.

When the Vedhaanthic teacher says "mokshaa is saanthi:", the student understands this as 'peace of mind' and works for mokshaa in the form of manas saanthi: | In the initial stages of the teaching, the teacher does not discourage this thought pattern, since he is aware that a beginner of Vedhaanthic studies takes himself to be the 'mind'. In the early stages of teaching, termed adhyaaropaa kaalam, the teacher allows the student to consider mokshaa as manas saanthi: |

But, when the teaching advances to what is termed apavaadhaa stage, mokshaa can no longer be considered as manas: saanthi: | The teacher, at this stage, points out to the student : "The mind may be peaceful or not ; the conditions of the mind are determined by many factors, because the mind is one of the anaathmaa. Therefore, do not focus on the mind or on manas: saanthi:, which saanthi may be achieved or not. Your aim should be to claim aathma saanthi: - aathmaa meaning saaksh'".

And, when is there saanthi in aathmaa?

If the seeker works for permanent manas: saanthi:, the attempt will be fruitless; manas:saanthi: cannot be permanent, because mind is subject to changes. Even biochemical changes will cause disturbance to mental equilibrium; modern medical science says, that, during old age, hormonal biochemical changes take place in the body, which affect the mind also, causing depression and other emotional patterns .

Mokshaa cannot be manas:saanthi:, mokshaa is aathma saanthi:, which saanthi: always is , irrespective of the presence or absence of manas:saanthi: |

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa warns "nasvaram na avehi" – "do not claim the fleeting mind or the fleeting manas: saanthi: as yourself".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 112:

स्वतस्सिद्धात्मचैतन्यप्रतिबिम्बिताविचारितसिद्धिकात्मानवबोधोत्थेतरस्वभावापेक्ष
सिद्धित्वात्स्वतश्चासिद्धेरनात्मनो द्वैतेन्द्रजालस्य ।

As this magic show of duality forming the non-Self shines by the light of the self-established consciousness of the Self, as it presents itself owing to the absence of inquiry, as it springs out of the non-apprehension of the Self, as it involves reciprocal dependence and also as it does not establish itself, by itself, it follows:

A student may argue : "I am interested in aathma saanthi:, which I am willing to claim; but, I am interested in manas: saanthi: also". The Vedhaanthic answer for this is: " the seeker can always work for manas: saanthi: also, just as he/she works for maintaining the physical body healthy. The body is an useful instrument and therefore, must be kept fit. But, when this attempt to have a control over the anaathmaa - mind or body - is made, what should be remembered are the facts :

that, anaathmaa is not totally controllable; one can only contribute to the conditions of the anaathmaa, since one has enough free-will to make the contribution, but, one certainly does not have the power for total control. The mind can be used to control itself; it can be used to control the body – thus, control the infrastructure one is endowed with. But, it should be realized and remembered that, all these can be and are only contributions towards control; not total control, since anaathmaa is not controllable by any individual factor, but, is subject to infinite number of factors, including praarabhdhaa.

that, the mind is of the lower order of reality; with which conviction alone, the seeker will know that 'whatever happens to the conditions of the mind, the real 'I' am not affected'. And, as a further consequence of this knowledge, will not be obsessed with controlling the anaathmaa. Control of the anaathmaa, as a hobby, is welcome. But 'obsession' with 'control of the anaathmaad is samsaaraa.

Because anaathmaa is, thus, uncontrollable and is mithyaa, the seeker should not be obsessed with its control. That is why Lord Krishna says in the Bhagavadh Githa (a popular verse – verse 22, Chapter XIV) "prakaasam cha pravrutthim cha mohameva cha pandava na dveshti sampravrutthaani na nivrutthaani kaamkshathi" – "He (the jnaani) does not hate brightness, activity and delusion as they arise, nor does he desire for them, as they withdraw".

Even a jnaani's mind, though generally saathvic, will alternate between saathvic (prakaasam) , raajasic (pravrutthi) and thaamasic (moham) conditions. In other words, emotional fluctuations can never be stopped even by a jnaani. In fact, Even Bhagavaan's mind, which is nothing but maayaa, is subject to fluctuations. Nobody can stop the fluctuations of anaathmaa mind. Mokshaa does not mean 'the mind remaining, all the time, in only one type of thought pattern'; it will be too idealistic a condition to expect.

Therefore, the seeker has to be very, very clear that he cannot afford to be obsessed with controlling of the mind, since it is uncontrollable; it is mithyaa also, because, on enquiry, the very existence of the mind becomes doubtful.

Being uncontrollable and being mithyaa, the effort for control of the mind can only be a hobby; never an obsession and also never a goal of life.

From what has been said, it can be understood, that, if 'control of the mind' is mistaken for mokshaa and the goal of life, the seeker will find that attainment of mokshaa will be eternally postponed. Even great saints (mahasvaamis and rishis) have been angry at times; therefore, if 'control of the mind' is considered as mokshaa, the great mahasvaamis and rishis also cannot be considered as muktha purushaas.

Going a step further, Bhagavaan Paramasiva is known as aasutoshi – the One who is easily pleased; if 'conditions of mind' are to be deciding factors of mokshaa, even the Lord will, therefore, be ruled out.

Therefore, the Achaaryaa says: "The mind is mithyaa ; do not be obsessed by it. Use the mind without getting obsessed with it".

- अनात्मनः इन्द्रजालस्य – Of this entire anaathma prapanchaa consisting of dvaitham (meaning pramathru-prameyau) or thriputi (meaning pramaathru-pramaana-prameyaani), which is mithyaa,

'Indrajaalam' here means 'mithyaa'. The more one probes into it, the more it will become 'nothing'.

The Achaaryaa describes the anaathmaa by the compound word "svathassiddha aathmachaitanyaprathibimbithaavichaarithasiddhikaathmaanavabodhothethaetharasvabhavaapekshasiddhathva", the various components of which explain the nature of anaathmaa.

- स्वतस्सिद्ध आत्मचैतन्य प्रतिबिम्बित - 'appear'ing in the light of the self-established consciousness of the Self,

'Prathibimbitha' means 'appearing'; it (the anaathmaa) is only an 'appearance'; but, when one attempts to study it, one will never be able to pinpoint what it actually is. The modern science also says "even the tangibility of the world is a myth. World is only non-tangible energy in motion, appearing tangible".

'Appearance' where?

'Aathma chaithanya' means 'in the light of the Consciousness of the Self'.

In 'me', the observer, the world 'appears' tangible.

What is the nearest example? The svapna prapanchaa, which appears very tangible in dream, but, which disappears on 'waking'.

- स्वतस्सिद्ध ' is adjective to aathma chaithanyam, meaning self-effulgent.

In essence, the first description of anaathmaa is: "Matter is a simple 'appearance' in 'me', the self-effulgent Consciousness".

The second description:

- अविचारित सिद्धिक – whose 'reality' will continue as long as one does not enquire into it,

Anaathmaa has got its 'existence', as long as it is not analyzed. Avicharitha siddham is another popular idiom used in Vedhaanthaa, which means "appearing real, as long as it is not enquired into".

Third description:

- आत्म अनवबोध उत्त – which is born out of ignorance,

Just as dream is born out of sleep, in the same manner, world is born out of 'being asleep to one's svaroopam'. 'Sleeping to advaitam' produces the dream of the universe.

107. Chapter II, Verse 111 to 113 (23-08-2008)

By doing aathma anaathma viveka, Sureswaraachaaryaa has established, that, 'I' am of the nature of saakshi chaithanyam, which is called the aathmaa and everything else, which is an object of experience, is anaathmaa .

Anaathmaa includes the entire universe, the physical body as well as the mind. To present in a technical language, anaathmaa includes pramaatha, the mind, pramaanam, the sense organs and prameyam, the external universe. And the entire anaathma prapanchaa is material in nature.

Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa is focusing on the nature of anaathma prapanchaa, to establish its mithyaathvam, which is a very, very important conclusion that every Vedhaanthic student has to arrive it. Binary format will be efficacious only when anaathmaa is understood as mithyaa, because, only when one knows that anaathmaa is mithyaa, one can boldly say, "'I' the sathyam, will be never affected by any event in anaathmaa." In other words, "that 'I' am asangha:" will be clear, only when anaathma mithyaathvam is established.

Therefore, in these slokas, Sureswaraachaaryaa is focusing on anaathma mithyaathvam.

The aachaaryaa wants to say that anaathmaa is a mysterious entity, which will never be available for logical explanation or definition. And since, it is logically inexplicable, one cannot even say 'anaathmaa exists', because to say 'anaathmaa exists', one should know what one means by the word anaathmaa. And, as one tries to analyze the anaathmaa, it is not even available for any explanation; the only explanation one will have, is, 'I do not know'.

Even if you explain the anaathmaa at one level, it will lead to another question at a different level, again, making us say 'I do not know'. Since 'I do not know' is the consistent answer, Sureswaraachaaryaa says, that, anaathmaa, the matter, is an embodiment of crystallized form of avidhyaa. Since 'I do not know' will be the answer, when you try to explain what the mind is or what the body is or what the world is, anaathmaa is 'avidhyaa crystallized'. Whatever is 'avidhya crystallized', is negatable by knowledge, by which it means, it is as good as non-existent.

To sum up : 'anaathmaa' is 'mysterious'; 'mysterious' means 'crystallized form of ignorance' ; 'crystallized form of ignorance' means 'negatable by knowledge'; 'negatable by knowledge' means 'as good as non-existent' or 'mithyaa'. And, therefore, it (any event in anaathmaa) cannot disturb 'me', the asangha aathmaa.

When it is said 'it cannot disturb 'me'', the word 'me' does not mean the mind, because the mind itself is an anaathmaa entity subject to disturbances, like the body, another anaathmaa entity. We can only manipulate the intensity of the disturbances; but, the nature of the mind is, that, it is an integral part of anaathmaa, which certainly is subject to disturbances . ('Subject to disturbances' means 'subject to influence by anaathmaa events').

What Vedhaantha says is: "I, the aathma, (not the mind), am not subject to any disturbance whatsoever ; we have to learn to claim this asangha svaroopaa aathmaa. Otherwise, no freedom is ever possible. Either you claim 'mind' as your 'self' and be ever bound or claim aathmaa as your 'self' and be ever free. The choice is yours".

Mokshaa is defined as 'asangha aathma svaroopena avasthaanam' (ever dwelling in / identifying with the non-attached aathmaa); and is possible only when anaathma mithyaathvam is very well intellectually grasped by us. And, therefore, these verses are focusing on anaathma mithyaathvam.

The Aachaaryaa uses the term 'indrajaalam'. 'Indrajaalam' means a 'magical show', which, on closer scrutiny, disappears.

A magic show can be used only for one purpose – entertainment.

Recollecting (what Swamiji calls) the 5th Capsule of Vedhaantha: "For a person who remembers his real nature – viz., as eternal and all-pervading Consciousness - life is an entertainment (or a magic show; which show should never be probed into, but, watched only as an entertainment). The moment the person forgets his real nature, life instantaneously becomes a struggle".

"Whether one wants to live one's life as an entertainment or as a struggle is again one's choice" the Aachaaryaa implies, by the use of the term 'dvaita indrajalasya'.

Sureswaraachaaryaa gives different descriptions to this anaathmaa ; each description reveals its mysterious nature .

The first description is 'Svathasissiddha aathmachaitanya prathibhimbhitha'. In this description, the word prathibhimbhitha is used to indicate the mysterious nature of anaathmaa. 'Prathibhimbhitha' or 'reflection' is a mysterious entity. When there are a person and a mirror in front of the person, there is a reflection very clearly experienced by the person. If it is analyzed 'what is the nature of the reflection?' , it will be realized that the 'reflection' does not have an individuality of its own ; it has got some of the features of the reflected person and it has got some of the features of the reflecting mirror and by mixing up these two, a mysterious third entity, called reflection is formed. But, the reflection cannot be counted as an 'independent' entity, because, the moment, the mirror and the person are separated, one does not know where the reflection is. The Aachaaryaa compares the world to a prathibhimbhaa.

But, it should be carefully noted, that, this example should not be overextended; in the case of the reflection, the reflection is a 'third' entity, because of the presence of two earlier entities - the reflected person and the reflecting mirror. One should not extend that aspect in the case of the prathibhimbhitha anaathmaa, concluding that, along with aathmaa, there must be a 'second' entity for the prathibhimbhitha anaathmaa to 'appear' as a 'third' entity. The example is given only to show that just as a reflection is an inexplicable mystery and merely an 'appearance' without an independent existence of its own, the world is also a mysterious 'appearance' without having an existence of its own.

Sri Dakshinamoorthy Sthothram of Sankara Bhagavdh Paadhaa commences with the comment "viswam dharpana dhruyamaana nagaree thulyam" – "the universe (is) like a city seen in a mirror".

And, what is that dharpanam – mirror? As the Aachaaryaa's text indicates in this portion, svathasiddha aathma chaithanyam – the 'self-evident' Consciousness - is the dharpanam, and the entire world is a mysterious 'appearance'.

An incidental lesson resulting from this statement is that "therefore, too much of probing into the world is futile and should be avoided".

The next description of the anaathmaa, is 'avicharitha siddhika', which term means 'having a 'seeming' existence as long as no enquiry is made'. This is exactly like the existence of the reflection cited in the example, where, on enquiry, the reflected face does not have an 'is'ness of its own.

If a reflection has got an existence of its own, the reflection must continue to exist, even when the mirror is removed or the person is removed. But, it does not. It follows, therefore, that, the reflection does not have its own independent existence; but, as long as one does not enquire or apply one's mind to it, one may assume the reflection to have an independent existence; from this perspective, therefore, this understanding 'there is a reflection' is a misconception; in the same manner, the conception, 'there is a world' is also a misconception and in fact, the biggest misconception.

First, one 'gives' existence to the world; this 'existence of the world' is itself a misconception; thereafter, one empowers the world to cause disturbances, complaining "the world is disturbing me"; and thereafter goes to Baghavaan with the prayer "Lord, somehow, I want to go away from the world, once and for all, never to come back again". This is one of the biggest ironies in life: "giving' existence to something which does not have existence; thereafter, 'empowering' it; thereafter 'struggling'; and thereafter 'wanting to escape' ".

In fact, efforts need not be directed towards 'escaping' from the world; but, should be directed only towards 'escaping' from these misconceptions, by a thorough and informed enquiry. Successful 'escape' from misconceptions, is mokshaa.

Therefore, the Achaaryaa describes anaathmaa as 'avicharitha siddhika' – 'one whose existence is born out of non-enquiry'.

"Non-enquiry' is the food / nutrition which gives an existence to and nurtures your problems/ your worries also", implies the Achaaryaa, (since, the very 'existence' of anaathmaa is only a result of non-enquiry- 'Avicharithaa siddhika')

The next description of anaathmaa, (given by the Aachaaryaa) is 'Aathma anavabodha uttha', which means "crystallized version of 'I do not know' ".

The Swamiji gives the example of a sweet edible dish from the state of Andhra, which, at first sight, looks like a paper folded many times over; a person, who is new to the dish, does not realize that the 'dish' itself is what appears as paper and therefore, keeps on removing layer after layer of the 'paper', expecting to find the 'dish' inside the 'wrappings' and ultimately realizes the fact, that, what appeared like the 'wrappings' is, itself, the edible dish and actually there is nothing inside the 'wrappings'.

So also is the 'onion', from which peel after peel can be removed, without getting at anything tangible inside.

In a similar manner, one can go on 'unfold'ing the world; but ultimately find 'nothing' at all on enquiry. Therefore, what is it? It is 'ignorance crystallized' – 'I do not know'.

Swami Vidhyaanayaa describes this aspect aptly in his treatise Panchadasi. He describes the universe as 'prasna roopam', which means that, the world gives rise to a spate of continuous questioning as to 'what it is', but, with the questioner never being able to arrive at a convincing answer.

This 'ignorance' is called ajnaanam or anavabodham. Therefore, the Achaaryaa describes the anaathmaa as 'anavabodha uttha' - 'born out of ignorance' or 'ignorance crystallized'.

When it is said that, the world is 'born out of ignorance', what 'ignorance' is referred to?; i.e. ignorance of 'what' ? It cannot be said that the world is born out of 'ignorance of the world'. World cannot be born out of the 'ignorance of the world', because, obviously, 'ignorance' of any object is not possible even before conception or 'birth' of the object. It is simple logic.

Therefore, there can be the only answer that the world is born out of something which is 'non-world'. And, what is that non- world? Sureswaraachaaryaa says "there is only one thing which is outside the world and which is non-world; and that non-world is 'you' the Observer, which is not the world nor a part of the world".

That's why in the deep sleep stage, even when the whole world is resolved, desa (place) is resolved and kaala (time) is resolved, there is one unresolved 'Observer' of the resolved condition.

Even after the resolution of the world, 'I' am there; it would mean that, 'I' am 'outside' the world. And, when it is said that "'I' am outside the world", it should not give rise to a question 'where'. This is another wrong question, because, when this question 'where' is raised, the questioner is looking for a location in 'space' for 'I'. But, when 'I' am outside the world, am 'I' not outside space also, since space is also included in the world? And, what is outside space, cannot be located in 'space'; therefore, aathmaa is not available for an answer to the question 'where is it (aathmaa) located?'. The conclusion : "'I' (aathmaa) am ever present, without a specific location, available to locate all that can be located".

'I' cannot be located anywhere. But, thus, while "'I' am nowhere" is the right answer to the question "where is (am) 'I' located?", this answer may lead to the wrong conclusion that "'I' am non-existent". Therefore, a compromise is made and it is said "'I' am everywhere". "'I' am everywhere" is a compromised expression for saying "'I' am nowhere".

Whether you say "'I' am nowhere" or "'I' am everywhere", in that 'me', all these (pramaathru - pramaana - prameya thriputi) are dancing inexplicably; and, if a purpose for this 'dancing' is sought, it may be said, from one perspective, that, this magic show is made available to avoid boredom; that, a magic show with pramaathru- pramaana - prameya - thriputi is given for 'entertainment'. "Understand it as magic show – an entertainment - and have fun" (is the implied Vedhaanthic teaching).

Reverting to the text, the description 'aathma anavabodha uttha' means 'born out of ignorance of 'myself'.

The next description given by the Achaaryaa is:

- इतर इतर स्वभाव अपेक्ष सि → - capable of proving its existence only by mutual / reciprocal dependence,

To explain: The pramaathaa, the pramaanam and the prameyaa are the thriputi. The anaathma material universe consists of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyaa. Pramaatha means the mind 'matter', pramaanam means the sense organs 'matter' and prameyam means the universe 'matter'. An unique fact is, that, any one of the three depends upon any one or both of the other two to prove its 'existence'. All these are, therefore, what is termed, anyonya aasrayaa , reciprocally / mutually dependent.

That a prameyam can never be proved without a pramaanam is a well known fact; for example, without the eyes, forms and colours can never be proved; but, an interesting fact, which is generally lost sight of, is, that, the converse is also true; the eyes also cannot be proved, if forms and colours are not there. If there are no forms and colours at all in the world, one can never define the eye and one can never prove the existence of the eye.

Another example : If one gets up in the early morning and if there is a block in the ears, one gets a doubt whether the ear has just got a block or whether the hearing has been impaired permanently. In such a situation, there is no way of proving to oneself, the functioning of the ears, except by creating a deliberate sound. So also, to find out whether a new-born infant has got all sense organs (pramaanam) functioning, deliberate noises (prameyam) are made, shocking the infant to react. All these show, that, pramaanam is proved by prameyam, just as prameyam is proved by pramaanam.

And, both of them are proved by pramaathaa. An example: (as Swamiji remarks on the fact, in a humorous vein) "As you are attending the class, you are 'here'. But, you do not 'hear', if your mind is not 'here' (i.e. if your mind – the pramaathaa – is preoccupied with some other thought)". This shows that pramaathaa is required to prove the other two.

The other two - pramaanam and prameyam - also are required to prove the pramaathaa, as shown by the sushupthi (deep sleep), in which state, when the objective world and the sense organs are resolved, the mind is also resolved.

Sureswaraacharyaa bases his declaration on these facts, when he declares, that, each one of the thriputi depends on one or both of the other two to prove its existence - 'ithara ithara svabhaava apeksha siddha'.

Since, none of them is, thus, independently existing, all the three should depend on something outside the three for existence. It cannot be said "why cannot each one 'borrow' existence from the other?" Such a suggestion will be similar to two beggars proposing "let us not beg any more; each one of us will borrow from the other, and live comfortably". It is obviously not possible; the 'lender' should be a 'non-beggar'. All the three, the pramaatha, pramaanam and prameyam, who have only 'borrowed' existence, may be considered to be similar to the beggars in the example, in the matter of 'existence'. If they have to 'borrow' existence, the 'lender' of the existence, should be outside the dependent thriputi / the mithyaa thriputi. That 'lender' outside matter (the non-material entity) is the aathmaa.

"Ithara ithara svabhava apeksha siddha" means "each one of the thriputi proves its existence depending on the other two".

Therefore, all the three are mithyaa.

And, it could be understood, that, the word mithyaa does not mean non-existence. Both visishtaadvaitam and dvaitam have misunderstood the word mithyaa as 'non-existent'. Vedhaantheta never says mithyaa is 'non-existent'; Vedhaantheta says: "mithyaa 'appears', borrowing existence from 'me', just as my reflection appears, borrowing existence from me." The quotations "Mattho naanyath" (from Srimadh Bhagavadh Githa) or "mayyeva sakalam jaatham" (from Kaivalya Upanishad) are relevant, in this context. Mithyaa is not non-existent; it is very much existent with 'borrowed' existence.

- इतर इतर स्वभाव अपेक्ष सिद्धत्वात् - because of dependence on an external entity for proof of existence,
- स्वतःच असिद्धेः - (and thus) not being capable of establishing itself by itself,

Therefore only, the world does not have an existence of its own, similar to the reflection and is called anaathmaa.

Anaathmaa is the topic being discussed and all the adjectives (given to Anaathmaa, in this introduction) are in shashti vibhakthi, to go with 'anaathmana.'| The introduction is an incomplete sentence grammatically. Its completion is in the verse that follows.

- anaathmana: - for this anaathma,
- dvaita indrajalasya – consisting of dvaitam, which is a magic show:

Swamiji, in an aside, advises: "Such being the case, why do you curse it (the anaathmaa and events in the anaathmaa)? Just enjoy the show. Take it as sports – ordinary or adventure sports. As you get older, it becomes more and more adventure sports. In youth, we enjoy ordinary sports. As we grow older, be prepared for more and more adventure sports. But, it is not going to affect you ; the word 'you', in this context, does not mean the mind ; mind's disturbance is also part of adventure sports. The word 'you' means, 'I', the saakshi, who am watching the adventure sports, at the level of my own body-mind complex."

What does the Achaaryaa intend to say about the 'dvaitha indrajaalasya anaathmana: ?' That is said in the sloka.

Chapter II: Verse 112 -

न स्वयं स्वस्य नानात्वं नावगत्यात्मना यत :।

नोभाभ्यामप्यतस्सिद्धमद्वैतं द्वैतबाधया ॥ ११२ ॥

Plurality is not self-cognized. Nor is it cognized by the pure awareness as one with itself, for they cannot be one. Nor is it cognized both intrinsically and by the awareness, for they cannot enter into such a relation. Therefore, it is clear that non-dualism results from the nullification of all duality.

- नानात्वं - A separate and independent existence
- स्वस्य – of this magic show called thriputi universe
- न स्वयं (सिद्धं) – is not proved by itself.

The independent or separate existence of matter is never proved by itself.

Why cannot matter prove its own existence by itself? One can give umpteen arguments. The simple and straight argument is that "matter can never prove its own separate existence by itself, because it is matter – jadam".

We showed earlier that pramaathaa cannot prove its existence without the other two – pramaanaa and prameyaa and that, the same is true about the other two also. Not one of them can prove itself without at least one of the other two; and therefore none of them has an existence separate from aathmaa.

- Svayam – By itself,
- svasya - anaathmana:
- naanaathvam - prathik satthaa
- na (siddham) - (siddham is supplied) is not provable.

In effect, what is the first point (made by the Achaaryaa in this verse)?: "anaathmaa does not exist separate from aathmaa".

Granting this, the next question is: "If anaathmaa does not exist separate from aathmaa, then can anaathmaa (matter) exist as identical with aathmaa / as 'one' with aathmaa?"

Sureswaraachaaryaa answers:

अवगत्यात्मना (अपि न सिद्धं) – Nor can Matter exist as identical with Consciousness.

'Avagathi' means 'Consciousness'; 'aathmaand' (in this context) means 'as identical with' or 'in the form of ittham bhaave'.

Why is matter not identical with Consciousness? Ans: because their natures / characteristics are totally different. Matter is inert; Consciousness is not inert. Matter changes; Consciousness does not change. Matter has division; Consciousness does not have division. Such being the case, how can they be identical? They cannot be and are not identical.

Then, are they separate? It was already said, that, separately also matter does not exist.

So, matter does not exist separate from Consciousness; and, matter does not exist as identical with Consciousness. Therefore, to the question 'is matter different from Consciousness or identical with Consciousness?' / 'is it bhinnam or abhinnam?', the answer is 'it is neither bhinnam nor abhinnam'.

Then, can you say that it is both? Since, it is not separate or identical, can there be not a compromise? Why cannot you say "it is bhinnam also; it is abhinnam also?"

This is called bedhaabhedha vaadhaa – identity in difference.

Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa declares in his treatise, Viveka Chhoodamani "Sannapyasanaapyubhayaathmikaa no bhinnapyabhinnaapyubhayaathmikaa no" – "neither existent nor non-existent nor both; neither same nor different nor both" (verse 109).

Sureswaraachaaryaa also says that it is not possible:

- न उपाभ्यां अपि सिद्धं – One cannot also say that anaathmaa is both identical and different from aathmaa.

This is because of the obvious logical reason, that opposite adjectives cannot co-exist in one and the same locus. One cannot say that it is 'both identical and different simultaneously', because to say 'identical', is to exclude 'difference' and to say 'different' is to exclude 'identity'. 'Identity' and 'difference' are mutually exclusive attributes and since mutually exclusive attributes cannot co-exist in one locus, 'upaahbhyaam api na siddham'.

Where does this line of reasoning lead to?: (1) Matter is mysterious and is inexplicable. (2) Since, it does not have an independent existence of its own, it is not countable as a second entity, similar to one's reflection being not countable as a second person. (3) What has borrowed existence / what is mithyaa, is 'experientable', but not 'countable'. (4) Therefore, (the conclusion is) : other than 'me', there is nothing worthy of counting or worrying about.

But, there is, of course, something which is 'experientable', which 'experience' an advaitin never negates. If an advaitic aacharya negates the experience of the world, he cannot even undertake to teach Vedhaanthee. The very Vedhaanthic class, 'imparting' knowledge is possible, because the aacharya is experiencing his own body, mind, knowledge and also those of his sishtyaas.

It should be clearly understood, that, Advaitins are not negating 'experience' of anaathmaa; they are only negating its 'countability'. Since, there is no second countable thing, the Advaitins say "advaitam eva sathyam".

- अतः - Therefore,
- द्वैतबाधया – since dvaitam has been negated, as not worth counting / since dvaitam has been nullified,

But, though 'dvaitam' is not worth 'counting', it is worth 'experiencing' as an 'entertainment'. The more one studies the creation, the more does one realize how wonderful it is; so many vibhootis are there; visvaroopaa isvara / the aparaa prakruthi is available for one's 'experience'. No advaitin would like to escape from this wonderful visvaroopaa Isvara. The Advaitin does not hate the world; he does not curse the world ; on the other hand, he admires and appreciates the visvaroopaa Isvara / the dvaita prapanchaa.

At the same time, the advaitin does not worry also, since, he is very much aware, that, it (the dvaita prapanchaa and events in the dvaita prapanchaa) cannot touch his real 'me', the asangha aathmaa.

And, what is 'my' nature? "I' am of the nature of permanent peace, security and aanandaad".

"It is 'my' aanandaa, which I 'throw' into the mind now and then, as a 'reflection'. The reflection comes and goes. Experiential pleasures come and go. As I grow old, the quantum of experiential pleasures may even come down. But, whether they increase or decrease, I know that 'I' am bhimbha aananda svaroopaa: | In which case, where is samsaaraa? Why should I even work for mokshaa? I was, I am and I ever will be free. Why cannot you claim this wonderful glory of yours?" asks the Aachaaryaa.

'Bhaadhaa' means 'negating / not attributing reality/ not considering as a second reality'. Because of thus negating dvaitham - 'dvaitha bhadhayaad':

- अद्वैतं सिद्धं - advaitam (non-duality) is clearly established.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 113:

यथोक्तार्थप्रतिपत्तिद्रढिम्ने श्रुत्युदाहरणोपन्यासः ।

To strengthen this conviction, the words of the sruthi are brought forward:

Sureswaraachaarya negated the duality or the anaathma prapanchaa, by using reasoning. The reasoning he used is: "matter cannot prove its existence by itself. Therefore, it does not have its own 'independent' existence. It has got only 'borrowed' existence. Therefore, it is as good as 'non-existent'".

This is 'yukthyaa mithyaathva siddhi:', i.e., 'logically establishing the mithyaathvam (of the universe)'.

But, tradition holds that logic is not the ultimate proof. Kathopanishad declares "naishaa tharkena mathiraapaneyaa" – "This knowledge cannot be attained by reasoning" (I . 2 . ix) and also "aneeyaan hyatharkyam anupramaanaath" – "being smaller than the size of an atom, (aathmaa is) beyond reasoning" (I.2. viii).

Logic cannot be final proof. Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says: "I have logically established something, which is also happily confirmed by the sruthi pramaanam. Everything that I say, is backed by the primary pramaanaa, that is called sruthi pramaanaa - pramaana moordhanyaa api siddham."

Not only can the world be negated logically, sruthi also negates the world; not casually, in one place; but, consistently, in every Upanishad, in one form or the other, sruthi negates anaathmaa.

In Kathopanishad is the most famous statement "Neha naanaasthi kinchana" – "There is no plurality at all here" (II.1. xi). The 'experienced' plurality does not exist factually, though it is 'experienced'.

In Kaivalya Upanishad, the 'negation' is more specific - "na bhoomiraapo na cha vahnirasthi na cha anilo mesthi na chaambharam cha" – "bhoomi: is not there (for me); water is not there (for me); fire is not there (for me); air is not there (for me) ; space is also not there (for me)" (Verse 22). All these are not there 'factually'; but, they are available 'experientially' mysteriously.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa wants to say that there is sruthi pramaanam also, for the absence of duality.

This gives rise to a purely academic doubt in the mind of the Vedhaanthic student: "How do dvaithins and visishtaadvaitins interpret such Upanishadic statements, in their commentaries?" The answer: The visishtaadvaitins and the dvaithins consider such statements as conveying the message that "there is no second thing like Bhagavaan". According to them: "It is only the advaitin who has misunderstood these statements ; these and similar statements do not mean there is no second thing apart from Brahman; there is the jeeva ; there is the jagath; they are 'real' also ; what these Upanishadic statements convey, is, just that, the 'real' jeeva and the 'real' jagath are not as beautiful or as glorious as Baghavaan Mahavishnu." In other words, the visishtaadvaitins and the dvaithins look upon Narayana (but, not even Siva) as the Supreme Reality, and interpret the Upanishadic statements on 'negation', as conveying the message that all others, though 'real', are "not as 'real' as Narayana".

The Advaitin, on the other hand, does not view such Sruthi vaakyaaanai / Upanishad vakyaaanai as making any comparison between the 'Reality' of Bhagavaan and the 'reality' of others; but, as firmly declaring "Na iha naanaa asthi kinchana", and, therefore, their conclusion is that, everything other than aathmaa, is mithyya.

(Swamiji, in an aside, points out that a comparative study of the three philosophies, advaitam, visishtaadvaitam and dvaitham is a totally different 'ball-game'; but, though interesting, such a comparative study is not the object of his classes.)

Therefore, Sureswaraachaaryaa says:

- यथोक्तार्थप्रतिपत्तिद्रढिम्ने – For the reconfirmation of the knowledge of the idea mentioned / conveyed in the previous sloka,

Dhradimaa – confirmation / reinforcement ; the word 'dhrudam' mean 'firm' and its abstract noun is dhradimaa; i.e., Dhrudam is adjective and dhradimaa is the noun, meaning 'firm' and 'firmness', respectively.

Dhradimne – For the sake of reaffirmation,

Reaffirmation of what?

- Prathipatthi – (of) the knowledge / jnaanam,
- Jnaanam of what?
- Yathoktha artha – the idea mentioned in the previous sloka,

What is mentioned in the previous sloka? 'Dvaitam naasthi' has been said. How was it said? Through yukthi pramaanam, it was said. Sureswaraachaarya says sruthi pramaanam also says 'dvaitam naasthi'.

- श्रुति उदाहरण उपन्यासः - presentation of quotations from sruthi (is done).

'Upanyaasa:' means 'presentation'.

Of what?

Udaaharanam – quotations / citations

Of what?

Sruthi – of sruthi vaakyam.

The presentation of quotations of sruthi, to prove that "'dvaita nishedad' is not only tharka maathra siddham but sruthi pramaana siddham also", is being done, in the verse that follows:

Chapter II: Verse 113 –

नित्यावगतिरूपत्वात्कारकादिर्न चात्मनः ।

अस्थूलं नेतिनेतीति न जायत इति श्रुतिः ॥ ११३ ॥

Since the Self is of the nature of eternal awareness, factors of action etc., do not belong to the Self. Sruthi says that the Self is 'Not gross' (B.U.II. viii.8), 'Not this, Not this' (B.U.II.iii.6) and 'Not born' (K.U. I.ii.18).

The Aachaaryaa refers to relevant, well known Upanishadic manthraas, mentioning only one or two words from each manthraa.

The 8th manthraa of the 8th Brahmanam (Akshara Brahmanam) of Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (III. viii. 8) declares that 'It (the aksharaa or Self) is devoid of all attributes', the actual manthraa running "thadaksharam asthoolam ananu ahrasvam adheergam alohitham asneham acchaayam athamo avaayu anaakaasam asangham arasam agandham achakshushkam asrothram avaak amana athejaskam apraanam amukham amaathram anantharam abhaahyam na thadasnaath kinchana, na thadasnaathi kaschana" – " That aksharam (Self) is neither gross, nor minute, neither short nor long, neither red colour, nor oiliness, neither shadow nor darkness, neither air, nor ether, unattached, neither savour nor odour, without eyes or ears, without the vocal organ or mind, non-luminous, without the vital force or mouth, not a measure and without interior or exterior. It does not eat anything; nor is It eaten by anybody". Sankara Bhagavadh Paadhaa, in his Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad Bashyam, concludes his translation of this manthraa, with the comment "In other words, It (aksharaa) is devoid of all attributes, for 'It (aksharaa) is one only without a second'; so what is there, that can be specified and through what?".

"neti, nethi" is another Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad quotation (II.iii. 6)

"Na jayathe" is another quotation, but, from Kato Upanishad (I. ii. 18)

108. Chapter II, Verse 113 and 114 (30-08-2008)

Sureswaraacharya is focusing on the topic of anaathma mithyaathvam. First he established this by logic or reasoning, pointing out that the constituents of anaathmaa, viz., pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam do not have an independent existence / an existence of their own; but only mutually dependent existence; in other words, they have only a 'borrowed' existence, which, in fact, is the definition of mithyaathvam .

Mithyaathvam does not mean 'non-existence'; it means 'borrowed' existence; which alone, in another terminology, Advaitha refers to, as 'having a lower order of reality'; and gives the examples of dream, reflection etc.

Having established this logically, Sureswaraacharya claims, in this sloka, "this reasoning is based upon sruthi teaching only". Veda alone is the primary source of knowledge; yukthi is used, only to assimilate the teachings of Veda.

To establish his claim, the Aacharya gives various references from sruthi, in this sloka (113- Chapter III – 2nd line).

- इति श्रुतिः - Sruthi says,

The first quotation is:

- 'अस्थूलं' - 'Not gross',

Sureswaraacharya gives only a part of the relevant Sruthi manthraa. This word 'asthoolam' appears in Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad - Akshara Braahmanam (Chapter III - Braahmanam viii) – manthraa 8. The manthraa is a long one, giving 23 negations (asthoolam, anannu etc. etc.) and indicates that aathmaa is free from all dimensions and therefore all modifications. Aathmaa is both nirgunam and nirvikaaram.

The second reference is:

- नेतिनेति - 'not this, not this',

This is also again from Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad (II.iii.6: 2nd Chapter - 3rd Braahmanam, known as) - Moortha amoortha Braahmanam - 6th manthraa. Not only in this particular manthraa, but, later also, in several places, these words `nethi nethi' are repeated in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad.

The term `nethi' or `na ithi' reveals the negation of the world. The topic has been discussed earlier also and it must be remembered in this context, that, "what is negated, cannot come under 'existent' category; it cannot come under the 'non-existent' category also; because, what is existent cannot be negated, obviously because it is existent and what is non-existent need not be negated, because it is already non-existent. To repeat: the 'existent' cannot be negated and the 'non-existent' need not be negated. Therefore, whatever is negated (by sruthi) will have to belong to a third category, which is different from either of these two".

That third category, is, what is called `sadhasath vilakshanam', which is the definition of mithyaa. All reflections will come under `sadhasath vilakshanam'. All false projections will come under `sadhasath vilakshanam'. Svapna will come under `sadhasath vilakshanam'. Using these as examples, it should be understood that the entire anaathmaa also comes under `sadhasath vilakshanam', because, sruthi says `na ithi , na ithi'.

Why is `na ithi' repeated twice? The very name of the Braahmanam (section) in the Brahadhaaranyaka Upanishad, Moortha amoortha Braahmanam suggests the reason. Moorthaa means the tangible anaathmaa; amoorthaa means the non-tangible anaathmaa. Sookshma sareeram and kaarana sareeram will come under amoortha anaathmaa; sthoola sareeram and sthoola prapanchaa will come under moortha anaathmaa. But, both moorthaa and amoorthaa come under sadhasath vilakshanam.

Thus, mithyaathvam has been clearly revealed by the sruthi pramaanam.

Therefore, what is aathmaa? Aathmaa is different from this mithyaa anaathmaa.

The next quotation is:

- न जायते ' - 'does not originate'

The relevant manthraa occurs in Katopanishad – Chapter I – 2nd Valli - 18th manthraa: "na jayathe mriyathe vaa vipaschith naayam kuthaschith na bhaboova kaschith ajo nithya: saasvathoyam puraana: na hanyathe hanyamaane sareere" - "This omniscient one does not originate or die. It did not originate from anything. It did not (become) anything. It is devoid of birth, growth, decay and death. It is not afflicted when the body is afflicted".

In this manthraa also, it is revealed, that, aathmaa is free from modification. That means aathmaa is not subject to the control of 'time' and 'space'. Time and space are operational only in the field of anaathmaa.

Swamiji points out : "Imagine the relief and enjoyment we will get, if we assimilate this fact, that, "I' am the timeless and spaceless aathmaa, who am not located anywhere; I do experience the world of changes, but, it is made available to me merely as a 'drama' or entertainment; 'I' am 'my'self not affected by any of the changes". This is the vision, to which Sureswaraachaaryaa is attempting to raise us".

So, if, thus, 'I' am not subject to any change, 'I' am free of any attribute, 'I' am merely watching the anaathmaa, which anaathmaa is without any reality and, 'I' am different from all of them (anaathmaa), what is 'my' nature?

The answer is given in the first line of the verse.

- नित्य अवगति रूपत्वात् - Because of the nature of eternal awareness,

'I' am the non-material, not-located Consciousness. Whenever we think of ourselves, the 'located' thinking must go away from our minds.

- आत्मनः - of 'I', the non-material Consciousness (different from the anaathmaa),

The very same anaathmaa is presented in another language.

कारकादिः - the karma-vyavahaara thriputi , consisting of kaarakaa, kriyaa and palam

Even though anaathmaa is only one, Vedhaanthic teachers present the anaathmaa, in different manners, in different contexts, so that the seekers will get different perspectives of aathmaa also. As even as the definition of anaathmaa changes, the definition of aathmaa also will change, because aathmaa is anaathma vilakshana: | Therefore, when anaathmaa is defined differently, aathmaa also gets defined differently.

And, there is a specific purpose behind this practice of giving different definitions to the anaathmaa. In each definition, a different problem centered on oneself gets highlighted, and gets release i.e. the different definitions release the seeker from different forms of problem; different types of worries and anxieties will be rid of , when the seeker looks at himself from different angles.

One definition that is popular, is : "pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi is anaathmaa" (pramaathaa meaning 'knower', pramaanam meaning 'instrument' and prameyam meaning 'object'); it follows, therefore, that (since aathmaa is anaathma vilakshana:), aathmaa is thriputi vilakshana: |

Once the seeker is convinced about this aspect, that, aathmaa is thriputi-vilakshana:, the greatest advantage is, that, he will stop working for the experience of aathmaa. The reasoning being: any attempt for "experience' of aathmaa" will make aathmaa fall within the fold of thriputi. And, therefore, the moment the seeker gets convinced that aathmaa is thriputi vilakshana:, he will drop his attempt to 'experience' the aathmaa.

This is a great relief for a Vedhaanthic seeker, because one of the commonest yearnings and complaints of Vedhaanthic seekers (before realization of this thriputivilakshanathvam of aathmaa) is "I have not yet got aathma anubhavaa", which yearning leads the seeker to specially 'pray' for the misconceived 'aathma anubhavaa'.

The definition, viz., "pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi is anaathmaa; aathmaa is thriputi- vilakshana:", thus, helps the seeker to get over an unnecessary and impossible struggle. This (thriputi vilakshanathvam of aathmaa) is one approach.

The second approach is through the definition "kaaraka – kriyaa - pala roopa: is anaathmaa". Anaathmaa consists of another type of thriputi. The previous thriputi, viz, 'pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi' belongs to jnaana vyavahaaraa - the 'operations at knowledge level'.

Another thriputi is presented here - 'kaaraka-kriyaa-palam'. It is well known that 'kriyaa' means action - either physical action or mental action called upaasanaa. 'Palam' means any result, which is a future event. 'Kriyaa' means 'action'; 'palam' means the 'result of action'. 'Kaaraka' means 'all the accessories for action', accessories meaning 'subject, object, instrument, time-location, space-location, beneficiary etc.'

Vedhaantha says the entire anaathmaa can be accommodated in kaaraka-kriyaa-palam-thriputi, kaaraka producing kriyaa and kriyaa producing palam.

Once you define anaathmaa as kaaraka-kriyaa-palan, all the karma vyavahaaraas - 'operations at action level'- get included within anaathmaa. What, then, is aathmaa? Aathmaa being anaathma vilakshanam, aathmaa is kaaraka-kriyaa-pala-vilakshanam, which means that aathmaa is beyond karma vyavahaaraa.

Earlier, it was said "aathmaa is beyond jnaana vyavahaara; so do not work for 'experience' of aathmaa". The advice now, is: "aathmaa is beyond karma vyavahaaraa; therefore, do not work for an 'event' called mokshaa". These two exhortations viz., 'do not work for 'experience' of aathmaa' and 'do not work for an 'event' called mokshaa' become necessary, because, these are the two events, aathma anubhavaa and moksha praapthi; which, every Vedhaanthic seeker, in the initial stages, is normally exercised about and works for. But, both these struggles are born out of ignorance. What ignorance or misconception? "That, I belong to or I am one of the thriputis of anaathmaa". The seeker places himself within the pramaathru-pramaana-prameya thriputi or within the kaaraka-kriyaa-palam thriputi. As long as one places oneself in one of these thriputis, one will be struggling for either aathma anubhavaa or moksha praapthi. | In fact, dropping these two struggles is itself mokshaa, claiming that "'I' am jnaana vyavahaara, karma vyavahaara atheetha: |"

"Aham Pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi vilakshanathvaath jnaana vyavahaara atheetha: | Kaaraka-kriyaa-pala-thriputi vilakshanathvaath karma vyavahaara atheetha: | Thasmaath aham vividha vyavahaara atheetha:" | And, this message is presented by the use of the single word 'avyavahaaryam'.

"Aham sarva vyavahaara atheetha: ; therefore, I do not have to work for aathma anubhava and, I do not have to work for moksha praapthi:"|

Then, what is a Vedhaanthic student expected to do? Ans: To claim, "'I' was free'; 'I' am free; and 'I' ever will be free. The non-material, non-located medium of Consciousness 'I' am; and, in 'me', the non-material Consciousness medium, all vyavahaaraas go on ; but, 'I' am myself not involved in any vyavahaaraa."

"This being the case, allow the vyavahaaraas to continue. Why are you bothered?" is the consequent advice given by sruthi itself.

Reverting to the text, 1st line of the verse, 'aathmana: nithya avagathi roopathvaath, kaarakaadhi:' – 'since aathmaa is of the nature of eternal awareness, the thriputi of kaaraka-kriyaa-palam,

- न आत्मा भवति(– cannot be the aathmaa.

'I', the aathmaa, do not come under jnaanana vyavahaara thriputi; nor under karma vyavahaara thriputi also; therefore, 'I' am untouched by any vyavahaaraa.

The Achaaryaa concludes the verse with 'Ithi sruthi: (vadhathi)', implying 'whatever I am teaching is based on sruthi pramaanam'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 114:

सर्वस्यास्य ग्राहकादेर्द्वैतप्रपञ्चस्यात्मानवबोधमत्रोपादानस्य स्वयं सेहुमसक्यत्वात्तत्सिद्देश्चानुपादेयत्वात् ।

All this knower etc., constituting the world of duality and solely the outcome of the ignorance of the Self, cannot be established by itself. Nor can it be established by the Self. Therefore:

Almost the same idea is presented in the form of the other thriputi. In the previous sloka, the karma-vyavahaara-thriputi was talked about. In this verse, the Aachaaryaa is presenting the jnaana-vyavahaara-thriputi.

- द्वैतप्रपञ्चस्य - (Of) the entire dvaita prapanchaa (which is otherwise called anaathma prapanchaa , which is otherwise called 'matter'),
- ग्राहकादेः - which is in the form of graahaka, grahanam and grahyam (which is another set of terms for pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam), which is otherwise called jnaana vyavharra thripui ,
- सर्वस्य - (of) all of them,

Sureswaraachaaryaa boldly declares that, all the three are born out of 'ignorance' and therefore, they are 'mithyaa', equivalent to any 'projection'.

- आत्म अनवबोधमात्र उपादानस्य – for all of which self-ignorance only is the cause / all born only out of self-ignorance,

Upaadhanam – kaaranam; aathma anavabodhaa – self ignorance; maathra – only.

This entire thriputi prapanchaa is born out of aathma ajnaanam, which is otherwise called moola avidhyaa. And, when Sureswaraachaarya uses the word 'ignorance', it should be very carefully understood, that we are not talking about an ignorance 'located' in the mind; but, we are talking about an ignorance, which is the cause of the mind itself, which existed even before the rise of the mind and therefore, which is not located in the mind.

Then, where is it located? Ans: Located in the aathmaa itself. Sureswaraachaaryaa will deal with this topic in the next chapter. The Introduction of the next chapter is a highly technical portion, on the analysis of moolaa avidhyaa, including the 'location' of moola avidhyaa.

And, out of this moola avidhyaa, the entire thriputi world has come. Therefore, it (the jaagrath prapanchaa) is not very much different from svapna prapanchaa.

Svapna thriputi is born out of ignorance of the 'waker'. Jaagrath thriputi is born out of ignorance of the aathma svaroopam. It is jadam and also mithyaa.

- स्वयं सेदुं अशक्यत्वात् - because they do not have the capacity to exist by themselves / they do not have an intrinsic existence of their own,

The Advaithin does not say "they (the thriputi) are non-existent". He only says "they are dependently existent, the 'existence' in them belonging to aathmaa. When you say 'bangle is', the 'is'ness does not belong to the bangle but to the gold. In the same manner, when you say 'thriputi is', the 'is'ness does not belong to any one of the three, but belongs to the aathmaa only".

Seddhum - to exist; 'seddhum' is derived from the root 'sidh'; svayam – independently. Svayam seddhum – to exist independently; asakyathvam – incapacity.

- आत्मसिद्धेः च अनुपादेयत्वात् – and also because it cannot be established by the Self.

'Aathma siddhi:' is a compound word, to be split as 'aathmaana siddhi:' |

This is just 'answering' a technical point. When an Advaithin cites the example of the bangle, there may be a question. When it is said "the bangle does not have an existence of its own", it means "bangle does not have an existence as bangle". The question may be: "All right; bangle does not have an existence as bangle; but, bangle has an existence as gold – i.e. it has an existence in the form of gold. Therefore, why can you not accept bangle's existence as gold, even though it does not have an existence as bangle? Similarly, world does not have an existence as world. But, world has an existence as Isvara / as Brahman. Therefore, do not say that the world does not exist; but, do accept, that the world is having existence as Brahman or Isvara – exactly like the bangle having existence as gold. Kaarana roopena kaarya sattha asthi."

If any such objection is raised, the Advaithin will answer "that, certainly, we do not mind. That is why, we say, Brahman alone is. When you say world exists as Brahman, what does it mean? It only means that the world does not have an existence as world. That, in effect, means that the world does not have an existence. That alone is called mithyaathvam".

Therefore, the Aacharyaa says 'Aathma siddhe: anupaadheyathvaath' | Thriputi's existence in the form of aathmaa / the anaathmaa's existence in the form of aathmaa, cannot be taken into account here, because anaathmaa's existence in the form of aathmaa means anaathmaa's non-existence in the form of anaathmaa.

Anaathmaa's existence in the form of aathmaa is there, when you say anaathmaa is non-existent in the form of anaathmaa. 'Anaathmaa exists only in the form of aathmaa' means 'anaathmaa does not exist in the form of anaathmaa'. To go back to the sample, 'bangle exists only in the form of gold' means, 'bangle is non-existent in the form of bangle'. 'World exists in the form of Isvara' means 'world is non-existent as world'. That alone is called jagan-mithyaathvam "Therefore", the Achaaryaa implies "may you understand there is no thriputi as thriputi; there is no dvaitham as dvaitham; therefore dvaitham is mithyaa".

Chapter II: Verse 114 –

आत्मनश्चेन्निवार्यन्ते बुद्धिदेहघटादयः।

षष्ठगोचरकल्पास्ते विज्ञेयाः परमार्थतः ॥ ११४ ॥

If the mind, body and objects like a jar, are denied of the Self, they ought to be understood as unreal, almost non-existent.

So, what is the conclusion?

If anaathmaa can exist only in the form of aathmaa i.e., if anaathmaa can exist only by 'borrowing' existence from aathmaa, the conclusion is "separated from aathmaa, anaathmaa loses existence. This would mean that it is mithyaa". That is what the Advaitin wants to stress.

- बुद्धिदेहघटादयः आत्मनः निवार्यन्ते चेत् – If anaathmaa is separated / segregated from aathmaa,

The term 'Buddhidehaghataadhaya:' indicates 'anaathmaa'.

When I say 'bangle is mithyaa', what I mean, is 'once you remove the gold, which only is the sathyam, bangle is as good as non-existent'; you have the experience of the bangle; but, bangle comes under non-existent category, which alone is the definition of mithyaa.

- Nivaaryanthey - separated / segregated

The 'separation' need not be physically done; it can be done purely intellectually. The Swamiji cites as an example, a clip on his table and says: "I take this clip and I say 'clip is'. This is my 'experience'. But, I ask a question. Does the clip enjoy an 'is'ness of its own? I understand that the essence of the clip is the plastic; plastic alone has lent existence to the clip and therefore, intellectually, I take away the 'is'ness from the clip and hand it over to the plastic. The moment I do that job intellectually, the clip has become vaachaarambhanam vikhaaro namadeyam – it is nothing but a 'name and form'. There is no subject called clip. This exercise, you should extend to the entire cosmos; doing this, at the clip level is easy. Vedhaantha says 'extend this same approach to the entire thriputi, which should include your property, your family members, your own mind and your own body'".

The whole creation is nothing but dancing 'name and form', not having any substantiality of its own. That is called mithyaa.

Then what is the only substance? 'I' am the substance, who is making the world 'as though' so tangible and real.

"Aathmana: nivaaryanthe cheth'" means "if I withdraw 'my' 'blessing'"; which blessing I give to the entire cosmos; in other words, by my 'grace', the world is existing.

Swamiji points out and exhorts: "This realization, that, 'I' give existence to the world' is the binary format. Forgetting this binary format, I become jeeva and go around, with the begging bowl, asking for grace. Stop asking for blessing from anything outside, because, anything outside 'me' is anaathmaa. Even Bhagavaan, if He is an object of my experience, becomes anaathmaa. Anything other than 'me' is anaathmaa. Why should 'I' ask grace from anaathmaa? When the truth is that, it is 'I', who am lending 'grace' to the entire anaathma prapanchaa, why should I go in search of grace? And, when I withhold 'my' 'grace', which I do regularly, during deep sleep stage (sushupthi), the entire anaathma prapanchaa – pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam – disappears. I am in nirvikalpaka aathma svaroopam. It is, therefore, obvious, that, I am 'lending' existence to this thriputi. This realization is itself called mokshaa'".

Therefore, 'Aathmana: nivaaryanthe cheth' (when anaathmaa is separated from Self),

- ते - that thriputi (both karama vyavahaarya thriputi, consisting of kaarakam, kaaryam and palam and jnaana vyavahaara thriputi, consisting of pramaathaa, pramaanam and prameyam)
- षष्ठ गोचर कल्पा: - become non-existent.

Sureswaraachaarya gives his message, euphemistically, in a nice language, using the term 'shashta (pramaana) gocharaa.' | 'Shashta pramaana' means 'the sixth pramaana'. 'Gochara' means 'object'. The term 'shashta pramaana gocharaa', therefore, means the 'object of the 6th pramaana'. What is that pramaanaa and what is that object?

The 6th and last of the six pramaanaas in Vedhaantha is called 'anupalabdhi pramaanaa', the other five pramaanaas being prathyaksha, anumaana, upamaana, arthaapatthi and sabda.

Why do we count these five pramaanaas before anupalabdhi, counting anupalabdhi as the sixth one? There is a reason. These five pramaanaas reveal positive / existing entities. They are bhaava pramaanaas i.e. bhaava vishaya bodhakapramaanaas. The term 'Bhaava vishaya bodhakam' means 'revealing things which are existing / which are positive'. Whereas, the 6th pramaanam, anupalabdhi reveals non-existence of things. An example: "When you say 'there is no elephant here', how do you know that fact? Because, you do not see an elephant. The non-existence of the elephant is known through non-perception. 'Non-perception' is the pramaanam, by which you know the non-existence of the elephant. This 'non-perception' or 'non-cognizance' pramaanam is termed anupalabdhi and is a means by which you know the absence of things". Anupalabdhi, being, thus, unique among the pramaanaas, revealing 'non-existence', as against the 'revealing of existent things' by the other pramaanaas, is ranked as the sixth pramaanam.

What is the object of anupalabdhi pramaanam? Abhaava: | Thus, the object of the five pramaanams, prathyakshaa, anumaanaa, upamaana, arthaapatthi and sabdaa, is bhaavaa and the object of the shashta pramaanam is abhaavaa.

The term used by the Aachaaryaa, in this verse, 'shashta gochaaraa' means 'the object of anupalabdhi pramaanam', and, therefore, means 'abhaavaa' or 'not there'.

The whole cosmos is 'not there'; problems and worries are 'not there'; all these vyavahaaraas and thriputis are not there, when I withhold my 'grace' i.e., when I do not 'lend' existence to them.

Swamiji goes on to point out: "And, when they are thus non-existent when I do not 'lend' them existence and come alive only when I 'lend' them existence, why should I be afraid of them at all? I am not afraid of a dream-world, because, I know that, the very 'is'ness of the dream world is given by me only. This cosmos is only another version of dream – perhaps, a higher version, to which also, it is 'I' who 'lend' existence. It is ironic that I get frightened of the anaathma jaagrath prapanchaa, to which 'I' have lent existence and as a consequence, indulge in prayers to 'escape' from this world".

'Shashta gochara kalpaa.' mean 'they are as good as non-existent'.

- (इति) विज्ञेयाः - May you understand (this),

(To stress that it is aathmaa which gives existence to the entire anaathmaa, Swamiji, in a lighter vein, says: "Enjoy' even all your worries, because you choose to lend 'existence' to them. If you enjoy worrying – because, some people, if they do not have worries, worry that they have nothing to worry about – and if you want to have a gala time worrying, lend 'existence' to the 'worries' and enjoy worrying. If you want to enjoy fear, lend 'existence' and 'enjoy' fear. 'Enjoy' sathva, rajas or thamas, by lending 'existence'. If you withhold 'existence' from them, they are as good as non-existent. This wisdom is called mokshaa. With this wisdom, continue your worries also; you will be mukthaa, 'enjoy'ing the role of 'worrier'. 'Enjoy' that also, but, with this awareness. Bhagavaan also does 'worrying' about the humanity, worrying that they are worried; and only because of Bhagavaan's worry about humanity, He has given the saasthraa for its guidance. But, though, Bhagavan also worries about His devotees, He enjoys His worries, because He knows 'I am lending existence to my worries'. The difference between Bhagavaan and us, is that Bhagavaan naturally knows this fact - that He lends 'existence' to His worries ; but, we have to learn this fact by Vedhaantic study".)

'(Ithi) vijnyeyaa.' means 'this is to be known'.

- परमार्थतः - from the dhrushti of Paramaarthaa / in absolute reality.

Here, the Aacharyya presents the thriputi in another language. He had already presented two versions. One version was kaaraka-kriyaa-palam-thriputi, from the context of karma vyavahaaraa and another version was pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi, relating to jnaana vyavahaaraa. Now, Sureswaraachaaryaa presents a third version, which may be termed 'family-vyavahaaraa'. Even after any amount of Vedhaanthic study, worry about the family – the near and dear - is one part of anaathmaa, which stubbornly continues to retain its reality. An advanced student of Vedhaanthaa may be able to dismiss all the other components of the anaathma prapanchaa - even the galaxies - as 'unreal' , but, finds it extremely difficult – almost impossible - to view the family and the related worries as mithyaa. Only when the seeker is able to do that, he becomes a sanyaasin.

Without that particular dhushti, viz., viewing the mithyaathvam in the family also , aanthara sanyaasa does not take place ; CLASP ('CL' stands for 'CLaim of ownership and controllership', 'A' stands for 'Anxiety' and 'SP' stands for 'SPecial prayers') reduction does not take place; and 'mokshaa claiming' never takes place.

Therefore, anaathmaa has to be presented in another form of thriputi – buddhi deha ghataadhaya: /

Buddhi means the mind or intellect / the antha:karanam. All of us have the tendency to identify with the mind, worry about the conditions of the mind and want to claim mokshaa, only based on the conditions of our mind; but, this is one of the biggest blunders; because, that means continuing in triangular format. As long as one judges oneself based on the conditions of the mind, one continues to give 'reality' to the mind; one continues to 'bless' the mind, which is anaathmaa, not only with 'existence' but with 'reality also; one common blunder is 'defining manas:saanthi as moksha:'; this is the biggest mistake, because, mind itself is 'not there'.

'Manas:saanthi' is not 'mokshaa'. Then, what is mokshaa? Mokshaa is claiming that, "'I' am the mindless aathmaa, with saanthi as intrinsic svaroopam". Claiming this, is the real Vedhaanthaa. Towards this end, one should first learn to 'see' the non-existence of the mind; this is called mano-naasa: | The term 'mano-naasa:' does not mean 'destroying the mind'; but, means, 'learning to see the mind as mithyya, not having an existence its own'. In other words, mind should be looked upon as anaathmaa no. 1.

Then, the next worry is about the physical body. Old age catches up with every one, though, in youth, one tends to think that one is 'outside' jaraa, while it will affect everybody else. Later, as one gets old, one realizes, as Bharthruhari eloquently points out, in his Vairaaghya Sathakam (verse 38) "vyaagreeva thishtathi jaraa paritharjayantee" – "old age looms (ahead) frightening man like a tigress". Bharthruhari implies "youth is like a horse; old age is like a tigress. The tigress is waiting patiently to pounce on the horse at the appointed time; but, pounce it will". Sankara Bhaghavadh Paadaa also warns in his Bhaja Govindam (verse 11) "maa kuru ghanajana youvana garvam"- "Do not be proud of your wealth, people and youth". The body-anaathmaa is always under the grip of the 'tigress' called jaraa. Therefore, one should learn to look upon one's body as anaathmaa no. 2.

The next one is ghataadhaya: | The term includes all the objects and also all the people in the family. 'Ghataa' stands for not only 'possessions', but all mamakaara vishayaa:, not only property, but even the closest and dearest relations.

Buddhi deha ghataadhaya: is the third thriputi, which is subject to ahamkaara and mamakaaraa. This thriputi also must be seen as anaathmaa and ahamkaara- mamakaara rejection must be done with regard to this thriputi also. Otherwise, the seeker will never be able to claim jeevan mukthi; but will only focus on videha mukthi. If the seeker is keen to focus on jeevan mukthi, he has to get out of this thriputi and realize that all these (mind, body, family, property etc.) are also non-existent in reality; they are mithyaa, but 'I' have given them temporary existence only for my enjoyment.

109. Chapter II, Verse 115 to 119 (06-09-2008)

In these verses, Sureswaraacharya is highlighting anaathma mithyathvam, because, only when anaathma mithyaathvam is clearly grasped, aathma's mukthi or freedom can be claimed by an individual.

With this intention, Sureswaraacharya is establishing anaathma mithyaathvam by presenting anaathmaa in different languages. Anaathmaa was first presented as pramaathru-pramaana-prameya-thriputi, from jnaana vyavahaaraa angle. Then, it was presented as kaaraka-kriyaa-pala-thriputi, from karma vyavahaaraa angle. Again it was presented as buddhi, deha and ghata:, from the standpoint of samsaara vyavahaaraa angle.

The three vyavahaaraas belong to three forms of thriputi, while aathmaa is avyavahaaryam; it is beyond all these three vyavahaaraas ; therefore, it is ever free ; and that ever-free aathmaa , 'I' am. Conveying this message is the goal of Sureswaraacharya.

The Acharya said in verse 114 (covered in the previous class) : "Minus the aathmaa, anaathmaa is as good as non-existent. Being mithyaa, it does not have an existence of its own".

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 115:

कुतो न्यायबलादेवं निश्चितं प्रतीयते । यस्मात् ।

On the strength of what principle is this arrived at? It is this way:

- कुतः - Why do you say so?

Sureswaraacharya is himself raising the question: Why do you assert that the entire anaathma prapancha is dependent on you, the aathmaa?

And, gives the answer:

- न्यायबलात् एवं निश्चितं प्रतीयते –By the strength of reasoning, this is clear.
Nyaaya balaath – By the strength of reasoning; evam pratheeyathe – this idea is grasped.

How is this idea grasped?

- निश्चितं - firmly / convincingly / doubtlessly (this idea is gathered, by the strength of reasoning),

What idea is meant by 'evam' ('this idea')? Ans: The idea, that "the entire world is dependent on me". The Aachaaryaa is 'turning the tables'. Instead of saying 'I am dependent on the world and my family' (which is the common perception), Sureswaraachaaryaa says 'the whole world is dependent on 'me''.

- यस्मात् – because of the following reason.

The Aachaaryaa gives the 'reasoning' in the sloka (115).

Chapter II: Verse 115 –

नित्यां संविदमश्रित्य स्वतसिद्धमविक्रियाम् ।

सिद्धान्ते धियो बोधास्तांच आश्रित्य घटादयः ॥ ११५ ॥

On the support of the self-established, unchanging and eternal consciousness, arise the acts of knowledge in the mind. It is through such acts of the mind, that the external objects like a jar reveal themselves.

What is the reason? "The whole world can be reduced to thoughts and objects".

Of course, this is an idea already mentioned before, which the Aachaaryaa reminds us of, here: "The whole world is nothing but the internal thoughts and the corresponding external objects".

'Object' cannot be proved without 'thought' and 'thought' cannot exist without a relevant 'object'. For instance, 'ghataa' the object and 'ghataa', the vritthi, co-exist; and both of them resolve simultaneously. During sushupthi, thoughts and objects are resolved; during jaagrath and svapnaa, both of them rise together. Therefore, the world can be defined as 'thought plus object'. Also, both of them are inert by themselves, and both of them are proved to exist only because of 'I', the saakshi, which saakshi reveals the thought also, and through the thought, reveals the object also.

Therefore, the Aachaaryaa says:

- धियः बोधाः सिद्धान्ते – The thoughts of the mind prove their existence,
- नित्यां संविदं आश्रित्य - depending on the eternal Consciousness.

`Bodhaa:' means 'thoughts' or 'idham vrutthi:' |

Thoughts belonging to what?

'Dhiya: '-of the antha: karanam'. So, 'dhiya: bodhaa:' mean 'antha:karana vrutthaya:'|

- घटादयः तां आश्रित्य (सिद्धायन्ते) – The external objects like a jar etc. prove their existence, depending on the thoughts.

'Ghataadhaya:' means 'the objects relevant to those various thoughts, like pots etc.:'; and, 'thaam' refers to thoughts.

'Pot', for its existence, depends on the 'thought'; i.e. the existence of the pot is proved by 'pot-thought' only. And, 'thought's existence' is proved by Consciousness only. Thus, 'world' depends on 'thoughts'; 'thoughts' depend on 'Consciousness'. Therefore, everything ultimately depends upon the chaitanyam only.

Verses 18 and 19 of the Upadesa Saaraah of Ramana Maharshi, are relevant, in this context. The verses run:

"vrutthayasthu aham vrutthim aasrithaa: |
vrutthayo mano vidhyaham mana: || 18 ||
ahamayam kutho bhavathi chinvatha: |
ayi pathathyaham nijavicharanam || 19 ||"

"Mind is thought-forms and the thought-forms are but dependent upon the I-thought. So, know the mind to be the ego. (So enquiry into the mind is the same as enquiry into the I-thought) (verse 18). Oh, Seeker! For the one who enquires thus "where from does this 'I' arise?", the I-notion drops. This is self-enquiry (verse 19)"

Ramana Maharishi concludes the entire Vedhaantha vichaaraa, in two steps: 'World depends on thoughts; thoughts depend on 'me'; 'I' depend on nothing and therefore, 'I' am the only ultimate reality".

That same idea is given here.

All of them ('thoughts' and 'objects') 'Nithyaam samvidham aasrithya siddhaayanthe' - 'prove their existence depending on the eternal Consciousness'.

The word `siddhaayanthe', means `prove their existence'. `Siddhayanthe' is a denominative verb, formed from the noun `siddha:' | `siddham bhavanthi' is here presented as `siddhaayanthe' |

A denominative verb is a verb formed from a noun, similar to `penning' (as in `penning a letter'); `pen' is a noun, out of which the verb `penning' is formed. Another example is `tabling' (as in `tabling a motion').

Similarly, `siddham bhavanthi' is `siddhayanthe'|

And, all these depend on what?

- Nithyaam samvidham aasrithya – depending on the eternal Consciousness,
- Samvidh - Consciousness; nithyaa - eternal (adjective to samvidh); aasrithya –depending on.
- अविक्रियां – which Consciousness is changeless;

Thoughts are changing; objects are changing; their interactions are changing; all these changes are proved by the non-changing Consciousness principle.

And, by what is this Consciousness proved?

- स्वतसिद्धां – and whose existence is self -proved.

If Consciousness has to be `proved' by an external factor, then it will require another Consciousness to `prove' it; and that Consciousness will require yet another Consciousness etc. In that case, an `infinite regress' problem will arise.

Therefore, Chaithanyam is the ultimate Reality; and `that Chaithanyam aham asmi.'

And, therefore, `aham sathyam, jagan mithyaa'.

Sambhandha gadhyam to Verse 116 :

यस्मान्न कयाचिदपि युक्त्यात्मनः कारकत्वं क्रियात्वं पलत्वं चोपपद्यते
 तस्मादात्मवस्तुयाथात्म्यानवबोधमात्रोपादानत्वान्नभसीव रजोधूमतुषारनीहारनीलत्वाध्यासः
 यथोक्तात्मनि सर्वोऽयं क्रियाकारकपलात्मकसंसारोऽहंमत्वयत्नेच्छादिमिथ्याध्यास एवेति सिद्धमिममर्थमाह ।

On no logical consideration can it be proved that the Self is one with the factors of action, action itself and the results of action. Therefore, all this relative world of action, factors of action and the results thereof, the ego, the sense of `mine', will, desire etc., resting, as it does on the ignorance of the real nature of the Self, is merely a false superimposition on the said Self, like the dust, smoke, mist, fog and blueness superimposed on the sky. This is explained:

A big introduction to verse 116. Of course, all these verses are 'winding up' of the second chapter / concluding of anaathma mithyaathvam topic.

- कदाचिदपि युक्त्या – By employing any type of argument ,
- न उपपद्यते - it cannot be proved,
- आत्मनः कारकत्वं क्रियात्वं फलत्वं च – that, the Self is one with the factors of action, action itself and the results of action.

'Kayaachidhapi yukthya' - 'by any type of reasoning you use'; 'Upapaadhanam' – 'proving / establishing'; 'upapadyathe' – 'proved'; 'aathmana:' - 'for aathma'.

By employing any type of argument, one cannot prove aathmaa is one of the thriputis. Aathmaa can never be one of the thriputi; thriputi belongs to the mithyaa anaathmaa range only, whereas aathmaa is thriputi vilakshana: | Therefore, by any amount of logic, you cannot associate thriputi with aathmaa. Therefore, aathmaa does not have kaarakathvam or kriyaathvam or palathvam. The same can be said about pramaathaa-pramaana-prameya-thriputi and buddhi-deha-ghataadhi-thriputi also. They can also never be associated with aathmaa .

What would this mean? "I am never a karthaa; therefore never a bokthaa; therefore, 'I' do not have sanchitha karmaa and 'I' do not have aagami karmaa. Can you say that 'I' have only praarabhdha karma? When 'I' am not a karthaa, where is the question of praarabhdhaa also? Praarabhdhaa also belongs to mithyaa thriputi only. Therefore, 'I' am punya-paapa atheetha: and thrividha karma atheetha:" |

Therefore, to the question "when will 'I' get liberation?", the answer will be " 'I' am nithya muktha svarooपा:" |

Logically, karthruthvam, kriyaa and sanchithaadhi karma palan – none of these can be established in aathmaa. And, when such is the case, if one still claims "I have only some praarabhdha remaining; and I am waiting for videha mukthi at the end of praarabhdhaa, so that I will not be born again", such a claim is clearly a misconception. What is this misconception due to? Ans: What is impossible is made possible only by one factor and that factor is 'ignorance'.

- यस्मात् तस्मात् - Therefore,
- आत्मवस्तुयाथात्म्य अनवबोधमात्र उपादानत्वात् - only because of ignorance of the real nature of Self,

All these things (kaarakathvam, kriyaathvam and palathvam etc.) have come upon the aathmaa, only because of ignorance.
